This award is intended to help cover tuition, fees, room and board, and miscellaneous expenses up to 20,000 or its equivalent. In addition, round-trip airfare is provided.

QUALIFICATIONS:

Applicants whose native tongue is other than that of the proposed institution must submit evidence of ability to read, write and speak the host language and should fulfill the following eligibility requirements.

	Graduate Scholarship	Undergraduate University Work	Vocational Scholarship	Teacher of the Handicapped	Journalism Scholarship
Educational Requirements	Bachelors Degree or equivalent	Two Years University Work	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent
Work Experience	None Required	None Required	At least two years	At least two years of teaching the Handicapped	At least two years as a Professional Journalist
Marital Status	May be married	May not be married	May be married	May be married	May be married
Age	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older

HOW TO APPLY: Applications must be made through a Rotary Club in the area of the applicant's legal or permanent residence or place of employment. Applications must be received by the sponsoring club no later than February 28, 1994.

FOR APPLICATIONS AND ADDITIONAL INFORMATION CONTACT:

Kingston Rotary Club	Ernie Sparks	549-6560
Kingston Frontenac Rotary Club	Fred Richmond	531-6310
Cabraki Kingston Rotary Club	Rolfe Colpitts	384-1866

Lost & found

BY JOURNAL SPORTS DEPT.

Here we are again with yet another volley of questions designed to test your knowledge of absolutely useless information. This column won't make you a better person, but if you are presently in class, on the can, or generally lacking any direction in your life, it will at least make the next few minutes a little easier.

Today's selection is particularly eclectic and obscure. If you miss a few, don't worry about it. If you don't miss any, get a life. Stop watching darts at 3 a.m. on TSN and take up a more active hobby. Like smoking. Or bowling. Speaking of bowling:

Q. What three events comprise the famous Triple Crown of Bowling, and how many bowlers have won it?

A. The U.S. Open, the PBA National Championship and the Firestone Tournament of Champions are the three jewels of Champions won all three in the same year.

Q. Does the record "longest cow chip toss" exceed the record "longest discuss throw"?

A. It is hard to believe, but yes it does by 23 ft. The record is 266 ft, held by Steve Urner of the U.S. That was back in '81 and if you're old enough you might have seen him on a Miller Lite ad. (Then again, maybe not.)

Q. In snooker, who is the only player to achieve a maximum break (147 points) in world championship play?

A. Canada's own Cliff Thorburn accomplished this April 23, 1983. Cliff did not get his own Miller Lite ad.

Q. What Blue Jay third-baseman hung up his cleats to pursue a career in the NBA?

A. No, not Roy Howell. It was Danny Ainge, who found success in Boston playing guard for the Celtics. He is now playing for the Phoenix Suns.

Q. When was the first recorded three-dart maximum score of 180 recorded?

A. In 1902, John Reader achieved this dubious feat at the Highbury Tavern, Sussex, England. This is according to Guinness Book of Records and was most likely sponsored by Guinness Dark Ale.

Bewic Sports Days are almost here!

BY THE ATHLETIC CENTRE

All BEWIC Sports Days fans are reminded that the big weekend is coming up this Friday and Saturday, Jan. 21 and 22. The weekend is shaping up to be an AMAZING time, so be prepared to come out and show your team spirit.

Play gets underway Friday at 1 p.m., and will continue until 5 p.m. Saturday evening. The weekend consists of four events: volleyball, innertube waterpolo, hroomball, and the ever popular rugby-basketball. Teams will be competing for awards in both the competitive and sportsmanlike aspects of the games.

Winners in both these areas will receive BEWIC Sports Days mugs for each member of their team. An overall champion will also be crowned, and this year's winners will be the first-time recipients of the all-new BEWIC Sports Days jacket crests. All awards will be presented on Saturday night at the banquet which immediately follows the events of the weekend.

All managers of BEWIC Sports Days teams are reminded of the meeting tonight at 5:30 p.m. in PEC Room 205. It is MANDATORY that all captains attend this meeting. Please don't miss it! Anyone officiating games during the weekend is also reminded that there is a clinic tonight following the managers' meeting at 7 p.m. in PEC Room 206.

Be sure to come out to the Phys-Ed Centre this weekend and show your support for all of our BEWIC Sports Days participants. You'll be treated to lots of high-calibre sports action and abundant doses of spirit and enthusiasm. It promises to be the best weekend of the Intramural Year! DON'T MISS IT!

Why? To orient and assist new students and their parents with the "academics" of the Faculty of Arts and Science as well as welcome them into the Queen's Community

When: 11 July - 22 August 1993

We are looking for eight highly motivated, outgoing and enthusiastic Arts and Science students to work as Peer Advisers for our Summer Orientation to Academic and Registration (S.O.A.R.) Program.

Are you:

- entering third or fourth year of an Arts and Science program in September 1994?
- in good academic standing?
- outgoing, enthusiastic, patient and creative?
- committed to helping new students and mature in your judgement?

Application forms, job description, and employment details can be picked up from one of the following locations:

- The Faculty of Arts and Science, F200, Macintosh-Cory Hall.
- The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Office (ASUS), 183 University Avenue.
- The Alma Mater Society, John Deutsch University Centre.

Application forms with supporting documents are to be submitted by 4:30 p.m. on January 31, 1994 to Judy Wheeler, Faculty of Arts and Science Office, F200, Macintosh-Cory Hall.

Tricolour Yearbook Clubs Picture Shoot Schedule

Monday, Jan 24	Tuesday, Jan 25	Wednesday, Jan 26
5:30 J.H.R.C.		Camera Club
5:40 COMSOC	Performing Arts Club	Animal Rights Assoc.
5:50 MBA Society	NDP Assoc.	Chinese Students' Assoc.
6:00 PHESA	Musical Theatre	Christian Fellowship
6:10 Graduate Students Society	N.S.S.	Debating Union
6:20 Queen's Players	Rehab Therapy Soc.	Engineering/Science Env. Cl.
6:30 Law Students Society	GSS	QES
6:40 MRHC	CESA	African Students Assoc.
6:50 Mature Students Assoc.	Theological Study	AISEC
7:00 Campus Crusade for Christ	ASUS	Croquet Club
7:10 Queen's Model U.N.	Red Cross	Canadians Space Institute
7:20 Medieval Club	SALSA	Concern for Middle East
7:30 QMA	Birth Control Centre	International Socialists
7:40 Lacrosse Club	Korea Society	Chinese Christian Fellowship
7:50 Indian Students Assoc.	Social Issues in 'Bus.	Ismaili Students' Assoc.
8:00 Games Club	Atlantic Community	Lutheran Student Movement
8:10 Astronomy Club	Ukrainian Students' Club	Macedonian Students' Soc.
8:20 Star Trek Club	South East Asia Club	Hillel
8:30 Student Volunteer Bureau	I.C. Assoc.	German Club
8:40 Liberal Assoc.	Philhellenic Assoc.	International Affairs Assoc.
8:50 Reform Party Assoc.	Project on Int. Development	Juggling Club
9:00 Muslim Students Assoc.	Mechanical Engineering Soc.	Vietnamese Club
9:10 Rhino Club	Operations Management	Assoc. for Bahai Studies
9:20 Queen's Navigators	S. Africa Solidarity Group	Taekwondo Club
9:30 African & Caribbean Assoc.	Student Advancement Port.	Camp Outlook
9:40 Outing Club	Curling Club	Student Services Group
9:50 Competitive Cheerleading Club

Department of Alumni Affairs SPECIAL PROJECT FUNDING

The Alumni Association has set aside a small fund to help groups from Queen's introduce innovative programs. Awards from the fund normally range in the low hundreds of dollars. Application forms can be picked up at the Department of Alumni Affairs in the west wing of Summerhill. Applications are reviewed twice each year. To be considered for the next review, applications must be completed and returned to the Department of Alumni Affairs by Tuesday, January 25, 1994.

THE ROAD TO THE 1993-94 OWIAA Basketball Championship FUN EXCITEMENT ACTION PRIZES*

*You can't win if you're not there.
Be part of the action...follow the Gaels in their quest to be a part of the Championship hosted by Queen's March 4-6.

NEXT HOME GAME vs Ottawa
6pm Tuesday, Jan 18

SUBWAY Tricolour Night
Cheer for FREE SUBS
Come dressed in Queen's Tricolour PRIZES FOR
...most colourful/original
...most spirited/FANatical

 Courtesy of SUBWAY, 187 Princess St., Downtown
Look in the Journal Tuesday, Jan 25 for info re: next home game activities...chance for intramuralists to win big $$$...free pizza... & more!

ASUS JACKETS

Two Nights Only!

October Order Distribution

Tonight Jan. 18

&

Tomorrow Jan. 19

6-9 pm

'The Core'

183 University Ave.

Bring your receipt and final payment in CASH, CERTIFIED CHEQUE or MONEY ORDER

For more info call 545-6278

January Jacket Order
COMING SOON!

ASUS JACKETS

ASUS & AMS SPEAKERS PRESENT

TONIGHT

(Tuesday Jan. 18)

7:00 PM

ELLIS AUDITORIUM

GIL WHITE

Author of

EUROPE & THE WORLD ON 84¢
A DAY

A HOUSE OF SOUNDS

WELCOMES

WILD T AND THE SPIRIT

APPEARING LIVE TONIGHT AT STAGES

SPECIAL CD FEATURE PRICE

$ 14.95

SALE PRICE IN EFFECT UNTIL FRIDAY 6 PM

277 PRINCESS STREET

TWO BEDROOM
APARTMENTSAn Clachan Apartment Complex
(near West Campus)

Rent: $602 per month

utilities included
stove and fridge provided

FREE PARKING available

September leases

short term lease
to August 30, 1994

NO RENT INCREASE Sept. '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

ENTERTAINMENT

The East side beat warms up K-TownTHE TOASTERS
AJ'S HANGER
BY RYAN P. CHEN

Although Kingston may have been blasted by the arctic cold last Friday night, hundreds of brave bar-goers at AJ's Hanger sweated to the balmy sounds of The Toasters and their version of the Jamaican ska.

Hailing from New York City, The Toasters have patiently worked the ska scenes both in North America and Europe. Formed back in 1985, The Toasters are perhaps single-handedly responsible for the ska revival that graced the late Eighties and which spawned such outfits as King Apparatus and Skaface.

I'm always somewhat astonished when ska bands play Kingston, since ska music is generally unknown or under-appreciated in these parts. True, we do have an establishment called The Caribbean, and Dr. Teeth and Friends of Stu proport to be ska bands, but they seem to be ignored by the majority of Kingstonians, students or otherwise. The ironic part of this phenomena is that less talented groups (One and The Hopping Penguins come to mind) who play reggae — which is the direct descendant of ska — are always a popular attraction.

I suppose this fact explains why the marquee of AJ's erroneously billed The Toasters as a "hot NYC reggae" band. Not to worry though, for vocalist, Coolie, ensured that the crowd realized that The Toasters are a ska outfit.

"Let get things straight," he exclaimed. "We ain't no mother-fuckin' reggae band! We're a ska band! ... Don't get me wrong. I'm not dissing reggae, 'cause them my roots. But ska is what I love and is what we play."

With the name of their music clarified, The Toasters promptly demonstrated what ska is. As tunes like "Matt Davis," "New York Fever," "Weekend in L.A.," and "Thrill Me Up" indicate, ska means dance. Backed by a strong rhythm section and fronted by tremendous horn arrangements, The Toasters had the crowd moving in no time. The usual criticism of ska music is that it is too repetitive, and hence, boring. But The Toasters proved that ska music can be as diverse as any other form—their set list ranged from the punkish "East Side Beat" to the wind-and-grind pace of "Run Rudy Run," from the calypso influenced "Paralyzed by Love" to the pure pop of "Shebeen." Although many of the intoxicated bar-hoppers may have been confused as to what exactly the music was, they at least recognized that the sound was irresistibly danceable.

As a rule of thumb, I usually judge the success of a show by the amount of audience participation which the band elicits. Judging from the number of women (at least six) who climbed the stage to do some energetic dirty dancing with Coolie, and by the dozen or so enthusiastic crowd surfers, I was would posit that The Toasters, despite being virtually unknown in Kingston, succeeded in winning the crowd's affection. Indeed, due to the audience's demand, The Toasters performed not one, but two encores—a rare feat in a town with a penchant for the musically insipid.

Prior to the show, I, along with Chris Tharp from CFRC and RS from The Carla Ronci Scooterzine, had the opportunity to talk with The Toaster's vocalist and guitarist, Bucket, about everything from scooter parts to broken greenhouses. Here are some excerpts:

The Queen's Journal: I understand that you're originally from England. Why did you decide to cross the Atlantic and emigrate to New York?

Bucket: I actually got sent over to work. I was suppose to come for only six months, but I ended up staying in New York City.

Now I've been here for thirteen years. It's been to my advantage though, since Margaret Thatcher was in England, there wasn't too many opportunities.

Carla Ronci Scooterzine: I guess that was reason enough to stay in the U.S.

Bucket: Yeah. But mind you, over here they had Ronald. But at least in America you can have some money. It's not so bad having lousy politicians when you've got money in your pocket. But having lousy politicians and being on the dole is pretty boring.

QJ: What made you decide to start up a band, and why did you choose to play ska?

Bucket: When I came over, ska music was becoming popular again in England. Before I left, I was in a reggae band with one of the members of Bad Manners, the percussionist, Jimmy Scot. When I arrived, I was surprised that there was no ska here at all.

QJ: When was this, around 1981 or so?

Bucket: Nineteen-eighty. So I started playing ska, and I guess the rest is a matter of record.

CFRC: What's with the name, "The Toasters." Does that reflect a love for appliances?

Bucket: [Laughs.] No. Actually, back in the Fifties and Sixties when Jamaican DJs used to spin mento and ska tracks in the dancehalls, they used to chat over the P.A., and that was called "roasting." That's the basic meaning behind our name. Another connotation is drinking somebody's toast. Kitchen appliances don't come into play at all, although that's the meaning which people like to latch on to. I guess because it's cute.

CFRC: I know you've extensively toured in Europe. Are you well received over there? Do the Europeans like the American sound of ska?

Bucket: In the beginning it was a hard sell. But since George Marshall from The Skinhead Times said that he prefers American ska music, everyone else is liking it. So, I think American ska bands are being received better now. The only thing, however, is that in some places the scene seems to be on the wane a little. It's up in France and Italy, but down in Germany.

CFRC: Do you think the racial problems in Germany are partly to blame for the decreased interest in ska?

Bucket: Well, the last time we were in Germany, there was a big anti-racist skinhead rally. There were about a thousand or so Trojan skins in the streets, so the scene is not dead yet.

CFRC: How did Moon Records come about?

Bucket: Moon Records basically got started to put out Toasters albums. In 1985, we issued our first release—the Reckonnations E.P.—and it was pretty much a vanity label. Now we distribute about twelve or fifteen ska bands.

CFRC: How well is the label doing?

Bucket: Nowadays, people don't have a lot of money to spend. So, it's a question of convincing them that their material is worth buying. But, Moon Records now has good reputation, so the perception seems to be that if a band is on our label, then people will tend to buy their releases on "spec."

QJ: What's your opinion on the 2-Tone acts reforming?

Bucket: For the most part, I think it's good. But it is also sad that the thing which is going to re-spark the interest in ska is to have 2-Tone bands do tours. At the same time, however, you can't take the material away—the music is still top-notch. I would love to see Madness do some shows over here. I was a little disappointed with The Special Beat when we toured with them. You won't get too many kind words about them from us. For me, their attitude was wrong. They also said that they were finished after Skavoove [their last tour]. The word is that [Rankin'] Roger is reforming General Public with a very fat Dave Wakling.

QJ: Why do you think "pure" ska has never made it into the mainstream music industry? If ska is ever played on corporate radio, then it is usually in a blend with some other type of music, such as dance (like Rebel M.C. or Longsy D) or metal (like The Mighty Mighty Bosstones). Why?

Bucket: I think the reasons are two-fold. In the eyes of the media, ska seems to be a failed experiment. The opinion is that 2-Tone didn't really do anything, so why should they [the record companies] spend money on it?

Secondly, the big business mentality is that everybody waits until someone makes money off of something, then they jump on the bandwagon. Nobody is willing to take a gamble and introduce a new type of music. Ska music doesn't really fit into the convenient pigeon-holes that already exist, unless it is marketed with hard-core or reggae. Tonight's show is a perfect example. We have to be billed as a reggae outfit in order to attract people.

QJ: Moon Records is pretty successful. Have you been approached by any of the corporate record companies?

Bucket: As a matter of fact, we got a call from CBS last week. But we have to wait and see about that. After putting out our own material for ten years, we're not really hungry nor impressed by people waving big names in front of us. In contracts with major labels, the bands are always the last to get paid. They get the smallest slice of the pie.

QJ: Do you think that having your own label is one of the reasons why The Toasters have endured for so long?

Bucket: It's really helped. It's given us the money to pay people decent wages and to go out on the road. But the main reason is that we have a really large and loyal fan base. They've been willing to support us through the years and that's what keep us going.

Judging from the warm reception they received from a largely ignorant and inebriated crowd last Friday night, I can guarantee that The Toasters will keep on going for some time.

RED HOUSE PAINTERS
RED HOUSE PAINTERS
4AD
BY SIAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS

I won't pretend to know anything about Red House Painters, because I don't. Their CD cover slip, which typically might contain interesting notes, lyrics, band members' names and credits, is remarkably bare. Instead of trying to impress their fans with the now run-of-the-mill cool distorted art or cryptic messages, Red House Painters only include a few grey, subdued photos of a swampy marshlands.

Red House Painters are intriguing, to say the least. Their sound is so original that any attempt to compare the Painters to other bands flatly fails to describe them. Actually, this is quite a feat, and far from a bad thing. Although it may cause me to fumble my way through this review, there's something to be said about a band with an unfamiliar sound.

This is to be emphasized: Red House Painters are not a passionately energetic, guitar saturating, "make me wanna dance" band. All eight tracks on their self-titled album are amazingly lethargic, with the hollow, somewhat drooping voice of the male vocalist showcased by a sparse background of minimal guitars and drums. Ultimately, it all comes down to your musical preference: if you're looking for another poppy uplifting band, then Red House Painters will most surely be your worst nightmare.

However, by no means is this to say they are to be immediately discarded. Yes, they are extremely mellow, if not incredibly depressing, but when has this prevented a band from still being good? Red House Painters solidly occupy their own niche. Whether or not you like them is essentially up to you, and although such a statement is painfully obvious, I'd like to remind everyone that the world is full of diversity, and sometimes Soul Asylum doesn't cut it. Red House Painters just might be the band for you, although I offer no guarantees.

This ain't no House party

Since all of the songs are generally slow, their lyrics stand out. In "Evil," the vocalist sings: like solar energy / and when in the night / your brother turned to me and said / God do you look evil in the dark / and that made me feel good. "Evil" is one of the stranger songs of the album, not only for its somewhat screwed up lyrics, but also for its even stranger sound effects. Towards the end of the song, the singer departs from his tune and starts making noises which sound like mutilated baby talk. A better description was made by a friend of mine, who commented (in disgust) that the guy sounded like "cats on drugs in heat."

For these reasons, "Evil" is not the strongest song on the album—which is too bad, considering its strategic importance as the album's first song. However, Red House Painters prove to be better than "Evil" would have them appear. Simon and Garfunkel's "I Am A Rock," one of the two covers on the album, is one of the best songs. The Painters' rendition rejuvenates the hackneyed song, altering it with a slightly slower tempo and melodic wanderings which stray from the original. "I Am A Rock" is a great choice of a cover for Red House Painters, for it's highly compatible with the band's cold and empty sound. After all, with classic lyrics like: don't talk of love / well I heard this word before / it's sleeping in my memory / I won't disturb the slumber of feelings that have died / if I never loved, I never would have cried— the song's kiss of death would be marked by any remote sounds of warmth. In this way, it's hard to imagine how any other band could possibly do a better, more depressing cover of "I Am A Rock" than the Red House Painters.

"New Jersey" is my favourite song from the album. Musically, it's has a fuller sound, with a slightly faster tempo punctuated by syncopated guitars and drum beats. However, don't expect anything upbeat: you're an American girl red-headed, eyes black / living in the freckle on the face of the world /...you're not as good as your mom / but you're as good as dead / you're as good as dead, New Jersey and the whole world.

Its lyrics and sound somehow captures the essence of New Jersey, which (if you've been lucky enough to visit this most beautiful state) has little to offer.

If you haven't already figured it out, Red House Painters don't sing about anything happy. A large chunk of their songs are about love and the loss of it, which probably explains why they sound so frightfully depressing. In "Helicopter," against the monotony of strumming guitars, the vocalist howls about taking a suicidal helicopter ride with his love: to die in a storm, holding you in my last hour / our burning flesh will blow over some nightmare sea / daylight won't find a trace ... Help!

The romanticized idea of dying with the love of your life at your side is also contemplated in the great Smith's classic "There Is A Light That Never Goes Out." Although both bands are hardly "feel good" groups, Red House Painters are far more depressing (believe or not, there are actually levels below The Smiths). Whereas The Smiths compensate for their gloom and doom themes with sometimes poppy and ultimately satirical music, there's nothing to redeem Red House Painters from their pit of despondency. Without a flurry of guitars or crazy drum solos, Red House Painters are simply morose and they seem to take their depression very seriously. I should clarify myself here: it's not necessarily a bad thing. In fact, it's a relief. I should clarify myself here: it's not necessarily a bad thing. In fact, it's a relief. I should clarify myself here: it's not necessarily a bad thing. In fact, it's a relief.

RED HOUSE CONTINUED ON PAGE 24

Not Another Love Story

PHILADELPHIA
DIRECTED BY JONATHAN DEMME
CATARAQUI CINEMA
BY DAVID ULLMANN

"City of brotherly love, don't turn your back on me..."

To some degree, what with the red ribbon campaigns and the way that AIDS has effected the Hollywood community, you would have thought this movie would have been made sooner. But at least in waiting, Hollywood, with Philadelphia, has produced something that is of a calibre worthy of its subject.

Philadelphia centres on the life of Andrew Beckett (played exceptionally by Tom Hanks), a talented young lawyer. Suddenly, without real cause, Beckett is fired from his job. But Beckett suspects he knows the reason. He has AIDS, and his employers are afraid of him. In response, he decides to sue his employers for discriminating against him. He hires Joe Miller (Denzel Washington) a personal injury lawyer—the type that advertises on TV—to defend him.

But this film isn't consumed by the excellent court case and legal manoeuvring that follows. It pays equal attention to two years of Andrew Beckett's life as he suffers with the progressive illness without displaying it. Instead, director Jonathan Demme takes us through all the various stages of the disease, with a realism that might make you flinch, or even turn away for a moment. We see Beckett receiving blood transfusions, discussing his platelet count with his mother on the phone, losing control of his body functions, losing thirty pounds over the course of the film and watch as he is eventually overridden with the quarter-sized dark purple lesions which surface all over his body.

However, more important to the film is the exploration of what one court case calls, "the social death which precedes the physical." In Philadelphia we watch as people back away from Beckett's affliction, horrified by it. Charles Wheeler, the senior partner of the firm, seethes with fear of him: "He brought AIDS into our offices, into our lunch room, into our men's room, and he never told us he was infected." In a public library the librarian tries to herd Beckett into a private room, and in the press that follows the trial, Beckett is denigrated by bar crowds and on street corners.

We see how gay people with AIDS are discriminated against, whereas other sufferers of HIV, such as a mother who contracted the disease through a blood transfusion, are somehow specially worthy of our compassion.

We watch how even in the medical profession there is discrimination. When Beckett suffers his first AIDS related episode in the film he is rushed to hospital. There he is met by his life partner Miguel, only to find that Miguel is not allowed into the emergency room because he is not a spouse or direct family.

But Demme shows the irrationality of these fears and prejudices through two devices. First is the character of Joe Miller, who is so afraid of Beckett that at first he refuses to take the case. As he says to his wife: "Would you take on a client if all the time you were thinking, 'I don't want this guy near me, I don't want this guy touching me?'" However, in the course of the defence Miller's attitudes are forced to change, not only on the issue of AIDS, but also about his prejudices towards the gay community.

The other, and most effective device used by Demme is Beckett's family who stand by him throughout the ordeal. But more important than their attitudes are their actions. His family and friends aren't afraid to touch him. They treat him with care and compassion, not with contempt or pity. To Beckett it makes all the difference.

And it is this difference that Demme is ultimately talking about. The court case itself is just a device, the message is to show the importance of confronting this disease socially, as we would any disease, regardless of what various groups of people might currently be afflicted with it.

The film ends with the audience watching some home movies, ostensibly about Andrew Beckett as a child, playing with his childhood friends. But the genius of this last two minute segment is that, as it progresses, it becomes just another child, loved by his family. In this way Demme extends his film from the particular story of Andrew Beckett to a universally powerful story that effects almost everybody.

Tom having trouble with the stubble.

Storewide Book Sale

Monday Jan. 24 - Friday Jan. 28

SUPER SAVINGS WEEK

20% off
(excluding textbooks)

Super savings from the Campus Bookstore. For this one week only, every trade and general reference title is on sale. This sale extends to all non-textbook publications on the main floor of the Campus Bookstore. Choose from our extensive selection of titles in our leisure reading sections and from the numerous general reference books and dictionaries. Please note that this sale does not include textbooks, magazines, sportswear, medical references, stationery or special orders.

check out the Annual Inventory Clearout

Special Savings!

Our annual inventory sale of selected titles also begins on January 24. Browse through the sale tables for savings up to 75%. These savings extend only to marked merchandise. Please note no refunds or returns on sale merchandise.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

trade & reference

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

Sunday 23 January Grant Hall 2:30 pm
$ 15 / $ 8 (child) plus GST

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

Hot sizzling big band jazz to warm you up!!!

the McGill Jazz Ensemble

Gordon Foote
Director

Music by Ellington, Parker, Porter, Berlin, Nestico, Noble, Rogers & Hart, and McFarland.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE!

Positions are available for 1994/95 in the Queen's Residences

as

FLOOR SENIORS and HOUSE REPRESENTATIVES

We are looking for leaders...

are we looking for you?

Applications are now available in the Office of the Director of Residences, Victoria Hall and at all Residence Front Desks

THE PILOT HOUSE

BY GINSBERG & WONG

A quaint meeting place found at the corner of Johnson and King streets, The Pilot House offers patrons a cozy English pub style environment, aptly complemented by the musical selections of Gordon Lightfoot, Rush, and The Cult.

Upon entering the establishment, we were put at ease by the neighbourhood atmosphere and the greetings from the regulars huddled around the beer taps. The exuberant staff were quick to smile—it is apparent why The Pilot House attracts so many repeat customers.

The Pilot House fare includes the classics such as steak & kidney pie, however its claim to fame is the fish & chips. These staples are supplemented by a variety of fries, salads and home-made daily soups and specials. All menu items are reasonably priced, none exceeding $8.30. PST and GST are conveniently displayed for the mathematically illiterate, which coincidentally makes tip calculation foolproof (Hint: Add columns 2 and 3).

At $6.50, the rose fish and cod were both excellent, and a good value. If you're trying to impress a date, we suggest choosing the $8.30 selections. The Halibut is tender and superb, while the

—MOO—
Check out the Real Thing at Jj's!

6 oz Deluxe Burger
Served with a Mountain of fries!
Only $ 4.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's*
409 Johnson Street at University Tele # 547-3771 We inspire eating!

Official-Languages Monitor Program

Under a program funded by the Government of Canada, the Ministry of Education and Training in conjunction with the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada, invites students to apply for the position of second-language monitors (French or English) for the 1994-95 academic year.

Part-Time Monitors

Official-languages monitors must be full-time postsecondary students usually studying in a province other than their own. They will work between six and eight hours per week under the supervision of a second-language teacher. Some francophone monitors will be assigned to French schools outside Quebec. For eight months' participation in the program, they will receive at least $3,500 and one return trip between their home and the host province.

To be eligible for the part-time program, students must have completed at least one year of postsecondary studies or will have completed such studies by the end of the 1993-94 academic year.

Full-Time Monitors

Full-time monitors must have completed at least one year of postsecondary studies. Duties consist of assisting French second-language teachers in rural or semi-urban areas usually in a province other than their own, for 25 hours per week. Some francophone monitors will be assigned to French schools outside Quebec. Monitors will receive up to $11,400 for 10 months of participation. They will also receive two return trips per year between their home province and the host province. They may also receive a moving allowance of a minimum of $300 and a maximum of $1,110 for commuting expenses within the host province.

Application forms and program brochures may be obtained from placement offices in postsecondary institutions, or from the address below:

Provincial Co-ordinator, Monitor Program
Ministry of Education and Training
French Language Education, Policy and Programs
16th Floor, Mowat Block, Queen's Park
Toronto, Ontario
M7A 1L2

Duly completed application forms must arrive at the address indicated in the information package, postmarked no later than February 18, 1994. Qualified candidates will be required to attend an interview.

What's cooking on King Street

LE CAVEAU

BY LEE PETRIE

smoked Cod provides a unique alternative for those with adventurous taste buds.

Our only complaint about the heaps of home-made fries accompanying the fish, is the unmanageably small plate, housing Homer Simpson-like portions. Fear not, for those of you with less voracious appetites and cholesterophobias, half portions are available at a reduced price.

If you are tired of the usual beer selections, a vast array of liquid sustenance is available including, Dragon's Breath Ale, Toby Dark, and Guinness Stout is available, with pint prices ranging from $4.50 to $5.50.

The Pilot House delivers excellent food at a reasonable price. A $1 student discount off any entree over $6 is available every Sunday. This, coupled with free refills on coffee and pop (offered daily) make The Pilot House an ideal dining location to fit any student budget.

If you are looking for good food and drink or just a quiet place to spend an evening with friends, we highly recommend that you take a trip down to the lake and visit The Pilot House and we promise that it won't be your last.

The Pilot House is located at King and Johnson.

wave-safe and this suspicion becomes more nagging when the sound of a microwave timer rings out over the Frank Sinatra music. The hors d'oeuvres sampler is a good choice for the indecisive. Arranged on a bed of lettuce were profiteroles stuffed with seafood and vegetables, spanakopita, and the unusual combination of water chestnuts flavoured with soy sauce and wrapped in pieces of crisp bacon. The caesar salad, one of several salads on the menu, is generous and would be ideal for lunch accompanied by bread or soup. However, the server assured my dining companion that diners before him had chosen it as an appetizer.

Unfortunately, the caesar salad proved to be a poor choice as a starter. No sooner than his empty plate was whisked away, garden salads appeared for each of us. That will teach him to pay more attention to the menu - all entrees are accompanied by a salad. (But he maintains to this day that the server should have warned him!) The garden salad combined curly endive green leaf lettuce, and diced carrots and was topped with a house dressing that had enough garlic in it to give a party of four bad breath for a week. (I'm a big fan of garlic, but here's a word of advice: if you're here on a date, the problem with the dips is the presentation: they are served in dishes that look suspiciously micro-

King cooks continued on page 24

ATTENTION: Arts and Science Students interested in

CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

Chemical Engineers develop processes to make industry safer and more efficient, and to reduce environmental impact.

In past years, our department has allowed Arts and Science students with good marks, especially in life sciences and physical sciences, to transfer into Chemical Engineering. This year we have several unfilled spaces, and we are actively seeking potential transfer students.

We will give credit for appropriate courses already taken in mathematics, chemistry, physics, biology, geology, humanities and social sciences. Depending on your background, you may be able to transfer directly into the second year of our four year program.

For more information, contact Dr. Kim McAuley at 545-2768 or Dr. John Downie at 545-2770. Act soon, so that you can take any missing prerequisites starting in January 1994.

Grumpy old review

GRUMPY OLD MEN
DIRECTED BY DONALD PETRIE
CAPITOL THEATRE
BY CHRISTOPHER ZABEL

I've been asking around and it's surprising how many people have deep-set irrational hatred for Walter Matthau. It always seems like he thinks that he's a lot funnier than he actually is. Jack Lemmon, on the other hand, although unquestionably also in the someone-my-parents-like category, generally seems to escape direct detestation. This tolerance probably has to do with his interesting, if a little creepy, job in Glengarry Glen Ross and with people who maintain that Some Like it Hot is a really good movie. But is he really that much funnier than Matthau? I don't think so.

It just sort of comes to you unconsciously that both of these guys have made dozens of movies although you couldn't name five. It's the sort of knowledge that you're born with and anyone with the TV problem has probably dazed through a half hour or most of them on one or another lost Sunday afternoon. (The inadvertent bow to tradition of the slacker generation.) A quick scan

I think it's colder in Kingston.

Faculty of Arts & Science

Thursday, January 20, 1994

Is the last date to drop a

Winter Term Course and

Obtain a full refund

of one's Video Movie Guide reveals that Lemmon and Matthau have been working together a great deal. Apparently The Odd Couple wasn't just a syndicated nightmare from the '70's, but started out as a movie. The fundamental difficulty here isn't that these two are malevolently irritating, it's just that their humour is antiquated. Old people that I know tell me that it used to be funny to make a slightly risqué remark or to see someone have a lot of snow fall on their head. Perhaps the movie rating system should be expanded to include an O for old which would restrict young people from the tortures of slapsstick, a type of humour that I think they wouldn't understand or appreciate.

Grumpy Old Men is about the two old guys I've been bad-mouthing thus far and they are predictably both very old and grumpy. Gruff Max Goldman (Matthau) and sensitive John Gustafson (Lemmon) have hated each other since the thirties (a woman was involved) and for reasons non-existent, live next door to each other. Both being old and lonely, their days consist of TV, ice fishing, TV dinners, beer, constant bickering and practical jokes. For instance, Max makes fun of John for not catching many fish, so John throws a smelly fish in Max's truck. The competition and animosity then climbs to a new plateau when Ariel (the ever Shakespearean Ann Margret), a nubile and eccentric vixen, moves onto the block. Neither old guy has had sex within memory, so they splash on the Old Spice and do their damndest. John comes out on top, but because he is being chased by the IRS things get complicated.

Although the plot is wafery thin, its lack of substance is not my major objection. For some reason, people think that old people are funny and that watching them is even more funny. It's the same thing with little kids. If you got a cute enough kid you've got a movie (or you think you do - ie. Dutch). When your sitcom starts to get a little tired, you just have someone get pregnant and before you know it, instant laughs. When you don't have anything particularly interesting to do, go for the age extremes.

None of which is to say that this is a bad movie. These guys are professionals and they do their thing very well. I couldn't get laughs declaring I'd rather "kiss a dead moose's butt," but Walter Matthau can. (Of course asking someone if they rode the skinny boat to tuna town will get laughs no matter who your friends are.) This movie belongs to that sub-genre of movies which few twentysomethings could ever understand. For reasons that escape bored sarcasm, this movie tends to really work and comes complete with life affirming clichés that seem poignant at the time. Stuff that should reasonably be horribly corny simply isn't, and the gaggle of grade nine girls that were kicking my seat through the entire picture seemed to have a lovely time.

So what is it with this movie? I can't recommend this movie to anyone that is caught in the dreaded thirteenth generation. Let's face it, Jack Lemmon doing the Tom Cruise underwear dance is a little gratuitous, and any slacker would probably really rather stay home to watch Melrose Place.

Have we got an opportunity for you ...

The Journal now has positions available for people interested in advertising design and layout.

And

You don't need any experience

Just call 545-2800 or drop by the house at 272 Earl Street

ROOTS

SALE

SELECTED ITEMS
20-50% OFF

34 PRINCESS ST. 546-7668

If a Journal Photog has snapped a pic of you, then drop by the Journal and grab a copy of it. The cost is close to nothing, and the nostalgia is huge!

QUEEN'S TELETHON

Looking for spirited Queen's students to work at night
Deadline for applications is Wednesday January 19, 1994 at 5:00 pm

Canada's only student owned travel agency, Travel CUTS now makes it easier for ALL students to take advantage of our special products and super budget prices:

CALL 1-800-667-CUTS

STUDENT FLIGHTS • INTERNATIONAL STUDENT IDENTITY CARD • RAILPASSES TOURS • STUDENT WORK ABOARD PROGRAMME • LANGUAGE COURSES

TRAVEL CUTS
 37 OFFICES ACROSS CANADA

Serving Canada's students for over 20 years

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
 394 Princess St. 546-FILM
 Tuesday
 Orlando 7:00
 A Bronx Tale 9:00
 Wednesday
 Orlando 7:00

King cooks

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22

make sure that you both eat the salad - there's nothing worse than only one person with garlic breath.)

After a suitable interlude, the entrees arrived. Shockingly, two of them came with - wait for it - more salad. I'll take julienned vegetables, even mashed potatoes and canned peas, just no more salad! Then we ordered water. We waited for water. And waited. Were they digging a new well? Making it from scratch? ("How many parts hydrogen in this recipe?") But setting aside the salad and water incidents, the entrees were enjoyable. The lamb in a demi-glace served in a phyllo basket was piping hot, pleasantly spiced and hearty - perfect winter fare. The chicken satay could be improved by cooking the chicken less and increasing the fire in the peanut sauce. The menu states that this dish includes cucumber raita. It was partly true: there was plenty of cucumber and red onion, but no yogurt - an essential ingredient of raita. The tumeric rice on the side was cooked perfectly and its subtle flavour complemented the spicy satay. Salmon is served with a rich, creamy ginger sauce and is accompanied by a tasty wild rice pilaf and fresh vegetables. A large piece of leek and cheese quiche (one of two quiches of the day) is delicately flavoured, but like the lamb in phyllo, should have been served with vegetables instead of salad.

The dessert list is too good to resist. We sampled the decadent four chocolate cheesecake, served with a raspberry coulis. Heaven! The frangelico creme anglaise is creamy and the liqueur does not dominate. It is a perfect choice for those who want something a bit lighter than cheesecake.

The wine list is extensive and varied and wine can be ordered by the bottle, 6 oz., or 4 oz. glass, which makes sampling several different wines affordable. Those especially keen on wine-tasting can try four 2 oz. servings of wine for $10.

Le Caveau wins high points for atmosphere and its prices are unbeatable - entrees range from $6.95 to $10.95. The menu is filled with intriguing choices and it changes each day. This makes more work for the kitchen staff, but it is a bonus for the customer - you need never have the same meal twice. Vegetarians take note: there are usually three or four meatless meals offered each day. Call ahead and the staff will provide a detailed description of the day's selections. Le Caveau's staff is eager to please and its menu is ambitious, drawing from Asian, French, and Mediterranean sources. More careful planning will ensure that customers keep coming back for more.

Le Caveau is located at 354 King Street, between Brock and Princess Streets.

QMT celebrates 25 years with Kismet

This year's production of the Tony-award winning and culturally-loaded musical, Kismet, marks the Queen's Musical Theatre's 25th anniversary. As last week's Feature and this issue's editorial indicate, Kismet has been the subject of much debate. Set in 11th century Baghdad, the musical raises the thorny issues of cultural appropriation, orientalism, and artistic representation. Whether it be for its magical story and its richly designed sets and costumes, or for its politically explosive interpretations, Kismet will definitely create a night which will not soon be forgotten.

Kismet opens this Thursday, January 20, and runs on January 21-2, and 26-9. Tickets are $8.00 for students and seniors, $10.00 for adults, save opening night, when there is a $2.00 discount. Tickets are available at The Grand Theatre and the Performing Arts Office.

Red House

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20

essarily a bad thing to be "hollow, empty, cold, depressing, despondent and morose" (as I have emotionally intense to listen to.) I find it really hard to imagine these guys with a sense of humour, but I'm sure they all laugh from time to time. In fact, even as I reread this review, it makes me laugh to think that anyone would actually pointedly go out of their way to buy this album, having read this. This is not to say that this album is that bad, it's just really, really mellow and potentially dangerously depressing. If you're in the right mood, or continually in the same mood, Red House Painters might be your soulmates. Then again, should you happen to pop in Red House Painters instead of, say, Extend-a-Mix '93, well, kiss your contentedness goodbye.

Ultimately, I'm not going to criticize Red House Painters. Since I got the album for free and I like a wide range of mood music, I don't find them too much to handle; sometimes they actually hit the spot. However, if you're considering buying them, I'd encourage you to seek out a store which allows you to preview music before you buy it (and remember to listen to more than the first song).

Arts Salon Invitation

The Kingston regional art council requires volunteers for its 1994 members' open arts salon, to be held this May in the Wilson Room of the Kingston Public Library. Anyone interested is asked to contact Cheryl Pelow at 542-4673 or KRAC Office at 546-ARTS.

Street Life Listings

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	KINGSTON CLUBS	GALLERIES
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442 Philadelphia 7:00 9:50 Beethoven's 2nd 2:15 Shadowlands 6:50 9:35 Remains of the Day 6:45 9:45 Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40 Mrs. Doubtfire 7:10 9:50	A Bronx Tale 9:00 Thursday Tedonic Plates 7:00 Orlando 9:10	13-29 Jan., 8pm. THE GRAND THEATRE Kismet, a play by Queen's Music Theatre 20-22 & 26-29 Jan., 8 pm.
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395 Iron Will 7:10 9:25 Grumpy Old Men 6:55 9:10 Sister Act 2 7:00 9:15 Tombsone 6:45 9:30 Wayne's World 2 7:00 9:35 Air Up There 7:00 9:15 Pelican Brief 6:45 9:25 The Piano 6:50 9:20	TUESDAY Allie's: Inbreds CD release party w/ Yellowbelly The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers CD release party Stoges: Wild T and the Spirit	AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE (545-2190) CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS... through Jan. 23 Dove Gordon: My Mont Sainte-Victoire through Jan. 30 8FA Faculty Show through Feb. 6 Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection through Mar. 13 Mary Ann Kokosko: Drawing in Succession through Mar. 30 Mother and Child: Selections from the Long Collection of African Art through Apr. 3 The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-FILM Tuesday Orlando 7:00 A Bronx Tale 9:00 Wednesday Orlando 7:00	WEDNESDAY Allie's: The Doughboys w/The Asexuals	THURSDAY The Toucan: Days of You The Grand Club: Bravoyard Whips The Wellington: Haskell and the Cleavers Duke's: Uncle Remus
	THURSDAY Duke's: Uncle Remus
	THEATRE
	DOMINO THEATRE Gwendoline - a comedy by James W. Nichol

CLASSIFIEDS

Announcements

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

ADOPTION, loving young couple desires a baby through adoption. We offer a secure stable home, ideal for raising children. For further information on this private adoption call our agency at 542-0275.

BACK TO SCHOOL necessities from the SoapBerry Shop. Eyebright eye gel soothes eyes puffy and red from studying. Stress masks to relieve tension headaches (and hangovers). Herbal cosmetics and hair products to keep you looking your best. The SoapBerry Shop at their new location 225 Princess St, 545-1028.

LOOKING AT EATING DISORDERS: an 8 week art therapy group for Queen's students starts January 26th. Cost $8.00 per session or $6.00 per week. Materials supplied. To register call Beth at 531-0619.

LASH TINTING with a vegetable dye for dark natural looking lashes at Signatures in the JDUC. Call 544-9022 for an appointment.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring slots are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

HAVE SPARE TIME between classes? Drop by The Grey House, 51 Queen's Crescent. Relax... eat lunch, read the paper, make some coffee or tea. All welcome. Please stop by!!

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN LAW? Queen's Law advocacy group is looking for 6 jurors for its mock trial. Call Sonia at 548-4005 for more info or to sign up.

CREATIVE WRITERS Discuss your own writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

EATING DISORDERS Know someone with a problem? Want to help? FRIENDS FOR HEALTH is an information/support group for friends. Next meeting Tuesday, January 18th 7 - 8 p.m., 32 Queen's Crescent. For information call 545-6712.

THE NEXT MEETING of the Lesbian and Gay Parents group is on Wednesday January 19th. 7 - 9 p.m. room 226, Beechgrove Children's Centre, 798 King St. West. New members are welcome.

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICE will be holding two focus group sessions with students, February 2nd and 6th to help us assess our programs, services and activities. If you are interested in participating please call the Health Educator, Diane Nolting at 545-6712.

FEELING THE JANUARY blahs. Brighten your mood and your hair colour at Signatures in the JDUC. Call for your free consultation 544-9022.

PROMOTE YOUR BAND PROPERLY! Get the edge over the others. FUNHOUSE studios produces professional, top quality demos and albums. Experience with all music types. Live DAT or multitrack. $25 per hour. Call 548-7143.

THE THREE LITTLE PIGS didn't get stressed about housing-why should you? Make your task easier get your housing questions answered. Call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

CHESS AT QUEEN'S! First meeting is tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Memorial Room of JDUC. All are welcome. Challenge a candidate master in Mac-Corry from 11 - 4. He will play ten games simultaneously.

ANYONE INTERESTED IN A FLING? Come join the Queen's Highland Dance Club! Absolutely no experience required - just show up at the Dance Studio (in the Phys Ed Centre) at 10 p.m. on Tuesday January 18th for a general meeting, or call Cari at 549-1655 or Meghan at 542-6557 for more details. Hope to see you there!

START YOUR VACATION early with our European super tanner. Pre book your appointments today before reading week at Signatures in the JDUC. For more information call 544-9022.

DO YOU WANNA BE A GAEL?? Be at the general meeting, Monday January 24th at 6 p.m. in Grant Hall. You MUST be there to get an application.

Gael General Meeting - apply to be a part of the best Orientation ever!! Monday January 24th at 6 p.m. in Grant Hall. You MUST be there to get an application.

ARTSCI '95 SMOKER!! Party for no reason and roadtrip to Peel Pub, Montreal, January 29. Tickets on sale Mac-Corry, 10:30-2:00, Jan. 24-28.

Help Wanted

NEED EXTRA BUCKS?! We need tutors in the math and sciences areas. Tutors are paid $9.00 per hour. Call 545-6278 for more info.

SUNNYSIDE CHILDCARE CENTRE is looking for volunteers to work with children's play therapy - if interested call Heather at 545-6278 or drop by the CORE at 183 University.

SUMMER JOBS Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruise ships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers offered coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing inground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

BEFORE YOU CALL McDONALD'S... Come to our open forum on food services and get your input on the "total dining experience" at Queen's. Friday, January 21, 11:30 am, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC.

Wanted

NEED MONEY? In search of a biochemistry 310/315 student willing to sell a used Lehninger, Nelson, Cox Principles of Biochemistry 2nd ed.(1993). Please call 542-2907.

For Sale / For Rent

FOR SALE: Elementary Linear Algebra, Applications Version 6th ed, Anton and Rorres new - $69.88: student solutions - new $27.73: $100 with taxes! $60 takes both! Mathematics for calculus Stewart Ridlun Watson 1989 $65 new $35 - yours! Call 549-5578 and leave a message.

SELLING an Arts '96 Queen's jacket, size 38, in excellent condition. Please call 548-8759.

4BR, $280 per month. All inclusive. $6600 down and own your own student rental - clean, charming, parking... Let's talk! Call Kim Donaldson, Sales Rep. Re/Max Loyalist Realty Ltd., Realtor direct 530-0269.

ROOMS FOR RENT in large house near campus. Kitchen equipped with dishwasher and 2 fridges. $150 - $175 per month plus utilities. Call Dave at 530-4953. No lease.

Lost and Found

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

Personals

MARK did you lose my number or just decide to break off contact? Either way, I'd like to hear from you. Please phone me at 1 741-5146, Ottawa, Michel.

TO THE BOY from St. Catharines, Al: Reading your words was like watching the Jays win the World Series. Smiles, Heather.

EILONWY of the Red-Gold hair, well, maybe red-brown, but that's OK. Have I mentioned recently just exactly what these two years+ have been like? Maybe I can bring my tuba over later and play something romantic. Ah, Mozart. Much adoration, Taran.

WHAT'S UP?

Pickup What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm. Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone: 545-2132 for more information

January

This Week

Tuesday, Jan. 18th

AMS and ASUS Speakers Committees Present: Gil White "Europe and the World on 84 cents a Day" How To Plan and Save 5 spoken at over 400 colleges and universities.

International Socialists Public Meeting -- Fighting the Backlash: Women's Struggles Today -- Speaker Pam Fraiche, Toronto I.S. 8 pm. 3rd floor Common Room, JDUC.

Inbreds CD release party with special guests Yellowbelly at Alfies. Also broadcasted live on CFRC-FM 101.9 Queen's Radio.

Wednesday, Jan. 19th

Queen's Chess! First meeting is tomorrow at 7 pm in Memorial Room of JDUC. All Welcome. Also -- Challenge a Candidate Master tomorrow in Mac-Corry between 11 am and 4 pm. He will play 10 games simultaneously!

A beginner's class in Yang style of the internal martial art Tai Chi Ch'uan will be held at 7:30 pm in the Louise D. Acton Gym, George St. Information on this class or daily morning class can be made available from Michael at 544-7533.

QEA presents: the Doughboys with special guests, the Asexuals in Alfies. $3 at the door.

Thursday, Jan. 20th

The Day the Universe Changed, so did Art, a free public lecture, will be held at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at 7:30 pm. John Hatch of the Department of Art will talk about the impact of scientific thought on modern art. The Art Centre is located on University Avenue across from Grant Hall; telephone 545-2190.

Friday, Jan. 21st

The Queen's International Students' Society (QISS) will be holding its next General Meeting/Assembly at the International Centre starting with a pot luck dinner at 5:00 pm and concluding with a dance at the Caribbean Restaurant, 259 Ontario Street. We urge all academic departments, associations and clubs to send at least one delegate to the General Assembly.

Before you call MacDonald's.... come to an open forum on food services and get your input on the following food matters: price, quality, and variety of foods; exclusivity of food service companies; the desirability of "branded products"; and the desirability of licensed facilities. Contribute to the "total dining experience" at Queen's.... 11:30 am, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC.

Monday, Jan. 24th

The Queen's Camera Club will be holding its first meeting of the new year at 7:30 pm in Room D214 of Mac Corry. New and old members alike are encouraged to come out and sign up for the new year's activities. Free donuts at the door (...and if buy now...)

Feature

You have a date with destiny — Kismet. Performances are at the Grant Theatre, 218 Princess St., at 8 p.m. January 20-22, 26-29. Tickets are $8.00 for students and seniors, $10.00 for adults. (Opening Night Special $6.00 students/seniors, $8.00 adults) For information contact the Grand Box Office at 530-2050 or Camilla Holland, Publicity at 547-2709.

The 30 hr Famine will be held on Friday and Saturday Jan. 21st-22nd starting at 3 p.m. Concluding with a mini-concert in the last four hours at 5 pm Saturday. Our theme this year is to bring the awareness for the World Hunger. We're still looking for volunteers and performers. Drop by the Info Bank or call Gilbert Wong 530-0828 for sponsorship booklets and more info.

BFA graduate Mary-Ann Kokoska of Toronto will be artist-in-residence at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre in January. During the month, she will be producing a site-specific installation drawing. Mary-Ann Kokoska will be glad to talk with visitor about her work-in-progress at three designated times: from 2 to 4 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 16 and from noon to 3 p.m. on Tuesdays, Jan. 18 and 25. When completed, the exhibition, Drawing in Succession, will remain on view to March 13. For further information, please call 545-2190.

Upcoming

Summer Job Fair, Jan. 25 10:30 am - 3:00 pm in Grant Hall. Queen's South East Asian Club is presenting a Culture Night on Jan. 29. Featuring performances from Canadian Chinese Assoc., Chinese Students' Assoc., Vietnamese Assoc. and so on. Tickets will be sold in Mac Corry and the JDUC from Jan 24 to 28. All proceeds to support Health Cafe 2000. For more info., please call Hang Nhan 530-2429 or Minh Mai 547-6877.

Queen's Legal Aid will be holding a "Lease Reading Session" on Wednesday, January 26. The session will take place from 7-9 pm in Room 229 of Macdonald Hall (Faculty of Law Building). Caseworkers will be on hand to answer general questions you may have about your lease. The session is free to all Queen's students.

Rubin "Hurricane" Carter to speak at Grant Hall on Tuesday February 1 at 7:30 pm. --Civil rights case celebre of the 1970's, Carter was convicted of a triple murder that he did not commit, for apparently racial reasons. After almost 20 years in prison, Carter's conviction was overturned. He will be speaking on his experience, civil & human right issues that relate to his story, as well as the importance of universal literacy. Presented by Queen's Student's for Literacy.

BACK PAGE

Schlock the Vote

Part one of a look at the most amusing, appalling and ignorant AMS election campaigns in recent memory

MARIKA GLICKMAN

January has come, bringing with it many evils: record low temperatures, Californian earthquakes, Canadian Wal-Mart stores and the annual AMS elections. The Gentle Reader will be pleased to note that your 'umble Back Page writers have researched the Journal library in order to bring you a review of the lowest points in recent election history. If you don't benefit from the historical lessons provided herein, you'll at least have something to do during one of your Tuesday lectures.

Conventional wisdom dictates that one's campaign should have plenty of stock phrases, such as "Accessible student government", "Sensitivity to issues of ethnicity, sexual orientation and gender", and "Bowling only with the ball." In the post-feminist, post-Rodney King, post-Stonewall (look it up) age, candidates should at least fake this kind of sincerity. The practice of AMS campaign promises dripping with sugar-coated tree-hugging WASP apologetics is relatively new. In the previous decade, campaigns were geared to the booze-fueled party atmosphere for which Queen's was notorious.

WE WON'T GET FOOLED AGAIN
In an archetypal clash of rock and politics, members of the local band The Stricken threw their hat in the ring in 1984. From the campaign headquarters, tellingly located in the Royal Tavern Tap Room, they issued statements condemning AMS bureaucracy, Alfie's line-ups (in the days before AJ's and Doc Girdy's, the line-up used to start at six) and musical conservatism at Queen's. The Stricken promised to change the "inefficient, ineffectual and far too expensive" student government by dissolving it, retaining power only until their mandate had been fulfilled.

The validity of Stricken candidate Jeff Willis was challenged because he had already graduated from Applied Science, but Willis explained that he had returned for a B.A. "to be in the band." They linked Queen's musical conservatism to the more weighty matters with this inspired pre-political correctness line: "Despite all the talk about divestment and social responsibility, Michael Jackson did not get a single vote in the 'best album' write-up in the Journal [ed. note: that album was Thriller, the best selling album in history]."

They were also the only party in AMS history to write a campaign song or to say that the only experience that any of their team had was lunch-room monitor work in grade school. What the Stricken should be remembered for is their cunning plan to reduce line-ups at Alfie's: "making the chairs smaller so more people could fit in."

THEY SHOOT, BUT FAIL TO SCORE

Toronto Maple Leafs fans must have peed in their Cooperalls with glee when the Lewis, Warwick and MacMillan team (1986) announced their bud-centric plans. During their publicity skate-a-thon, they unveiled their plans for the construction of the QueenDome, a domed sports facility designed to house the Toronto Maple Leafs. They planned to enlist the help of Montreal mayor and Olympic Stadium guy Jean Drapeau to iron out all the logistical wrinkles and hold bottle drives and bingo tournaments to raise funds. The other major campaign promise was to rename both Alfie's and the Quiet Pub; the former would become Sitzer's and the latter would become the Hot Stove Lounge. As for the remaining campus pub, "We'll keep the name Clark Hall in honour of the great Maple Leafs' rookie Wendel Clark." Other gems from this team include:

"We intend to appoint only our closest friends to top AMS positions."
"If elected, we pledge to respect the wishes of the majority of the students — so long as they agree with us."
"Frosh Week has served its purpose well, weeding out those lacking the ability to score. Drinking is also an essential aspect of Orientation; we've got to get the frosh in shape for the inevitable Stanley Cup Roadtrip."
The "Home Team", as these candidates for mandatory sterilization were often called, captured 12 per cent of the vote in an election with a 38 per cent voter turnout.

They were also the only party in AMS history to write a campaign song or to say that the only experience that any of their team had was lunch-room monitor work in grade school. What the Stricken should be remembered for is their cunning plan to reduce line-ups at Alfie's: "making the chairs smaller so more people could fit in."

They were also the only party in AMS history to write a campaign song or to say that the only experience that any of their team had was lunch-room monitor work in grade school. What the Stricken should be remembered for is their cunning plan to reduce line-ups at Alfie's: "making the chairs smaller so more people could fit in."

They were also the only party in AMS history to write a campaign song or to say that the only experience that any of their team had was lunch-room monitor work in grade school. What the Stricken should be remembered for is their cunning plan to reduce line-ups at Alfie's: "making the chairs smaller so more people could fit in."

JUST AN ASIDE...

To get a clearer picture of the state of campus politics in the eighties, the Gentle Reader is advised to look at 1986. That year, the talk of the campaign was focused around divestment from South Africa. Divestment rallies abounded as the Queen's Board of Directors waffled over whether or not to rid itself of its lucrative investments in South African companies. Anti-racism activism hit a peak in February when Wesley Johanneson, Second Secretary of the South African Assembly spoke in front of the Model UN Assembly. A large protest was held outside Grant Hall as Johanneson spoke. Another display of WASP apologetics was made when many UN delegates vacated the assembly floor in protest when the U.S. delegation handed its speaking time to South Africa.

It is unfortunate that this interracial bonhomie was ruined when the Libyan representative responded to accusations of terrorist tendencies by kidnapping the UN Secretary-General and holding the assembly hostage. Mock Libyan Jeff Stewart (Arts '86), brandishing a plastic firearm and wearing what The Journal called a "Khadafi-style headress," threatened that Libyan suicide squads would act unless his demands were met. Multiracial society, indeed.

SHARP AS A BAG OF WET KITTENS

If you had to list the ten dumbest people involved in student politics in 1990, you'd have to list opposing candidates Roberta Bouchard (VP University Affairs candidate with Emily Moore and Brent Patry) and Geoff Green (Presidential candidate with Scott Seybold and Kelly Wells) three times each. Between these two benighted candidates' gaffes and slip-ups, the entire campaign was an embarrassment to the Queen's student body and primates in general.

The Green team's major campaign plank was the "elimination of sexism, racism and homophobia." The arc of the Moore team's campaign was "to deal with racism, sexism and homophobia." The observant reader will note an emerging pattern. Watch for the return of these three magic words — they're like a mantra — in the upcoming election. For those of you planning to run for office, please note that the proper order is "racism/sexism/homophobia;" this combination rolls off the tongue most easily.

Oh, the quotes from this election! Roberta Bouchard took a firm-but-not-that-firm stance on university underfunding with "Education is a right to a certain extent." Scott Seybold proved he was a racially-sensitive Caucasian by saying that he was all for increasing the ranks of people of colour, "even if we have to lower standards to let more of them in." Geoff Green, not to outdone by Seybold, graced us with these gems:

"We need to teach people in order to make them understand." Well, Geoff, it beats the hell out of teaching people in order to confuse them completely.

On hiring more women: "You're just looking at gender -- when you do that, you really risk quality."

His biggest campaign promise: "We'll fill a tent with sand and have some fun." — On his plan to host a Homecoming inter-university volleyball tournament. Another plan involved holding an NCAA basketball invitational.

Green's team never even made it to their first debate, due to accusations of sexual assault levelled against Green. The age of frivolous campaigning had ended.

Next week: 1991 — The most hellzapoppin' mudfest in AMS election history

Joey deVillia is running for election this year; this will be his last contribution to The Journal until the end of the campaign.

Derek Walker thought this kind of stuff only happened in Louisiana.

vocabulary

• MAW (noun, twentysomething slang): acronym for Model/Actor/Waitstaff or Model/Actor/Whatever. Denotes someone "just getting by" playing minor Shakespearean characters in small neo-Marxist performance spaces, modelling corduroy pants in the K-Mart catalog and hustling double espressos in small, bookish cafés. Example: "I'm a drama student, and I have this recurring nightmare in which I end up graduating and becoming a MAW."

• Meet Ed (verb, hip-hop slang): To be ripped off, screwed over or fucked up. Example: "First Dave's car phone was stolen. The his car got towed away, after which he had to pay a large fine. He really met ed that day."

— SOURCES: JOEY, VIBE

* Buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger at the regular price and receive a second Bacon Double Cheeseburger FREE.	* Buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger at the regular price and receive a second Bacon Double Cheeseburger FREE.
Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Jan. 27/94	Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Jan. 27/94

QMA Upcoming Events

THE QUEEN'S MARKETING ASSOCIATION

QMA NATIONAL CONFERENCE 1994 TOWARDS 2000... MARKETING FOR THE 90'S CONSUMER

The Queen's Marketing Association is proud to host the 1994 National Conference, coming up on Thursday, January 27th and Friday, January 28th, 1994.

Prestigious speakers from the business community have been invited to share their insights on the conference theme: "Towards 2000... Marketing for the 90's Consumer." Attending the conference will be student delegates from across Canada, as well as University Professors and Business Delegates.

The QMA Conference Division is honoured to welcome speakers from the following companies for the conference weekend:

Procter and Gamble Inc.	Unitel Communication Inc.
Molson Breweries Canada Limited	Cheesborough-Ponds Ltd.
Marci Lipman, Inc.	General Motors of Canada Ltd
Just Wood Furniture

Also speaking at the Conference will be special guest speaker Michael Budman, President and Co-founder of Roots Canada. An interactive advertising workshop with Leo Burnett representatives is also on the agenda for conference participants.

This is a superb opportunity to meet fellow marketing enthusiasts and dynamic business professionals, so make sure to come out! Look for our sign-up booths in Mac-Corry and Dunning. We'll be there until the 27th!

Sponsor Profile: Procter & Gamble Inc.

Procter & Gamble was founded over 150 years ago with Canadian production beginning in 1915. International expansion over the years has continued to contribute to P & G's overall success and position among the top Fortune 500 companies. Procter & Gamble is primarily known for its leading position in the consumer packaged goods field. Familiar brands such as TIDE, CREST, PAMPERS, ALWAYS, IVORY, COVER GIRL, and HEAD & SHOULDERS are among our many products.

Procter & Gamble employs approximately 3,800 employees across Canada with 959 of them working out of our corporate headquarters in Toronto. In addition to our base in Toronto, we have manufacturing facilities in Mississauga, Weston, Hamilton, Belleville and Brockville, as well as in Pointe Claire, Quebec.

Procter & Gamble offers summer internship opportunities in numerous areas: Marketing, Finance, Product Supply, and Sales. Each are will involve you in a fast-paced, challenging environment in which you will be encouraged to follow your own thinking, drawing and building upon your own skills and ideas.

Please see summer internship postings at the Career Planning and Placement office for more details and application submission dates.

QMA Marketing Crash Course TODAY ONLY!

The QMA is offering a Marketing Crash Course tonight — Tuesday, January 18th — starting at 5:30, in the McLaughlin Room (JDUC).

The main speakers will be Professor Ken Wong, the Queen's MBA chair, and Beatrice Massini of Hewlett Packard. The course is an excellent opportunity to gain a practical skill which will help you with both future academic and professional endeavours.

The course is free and refreshments will be provided. All students are welcome and encouraged to join us! For more information please call: Rob 531-3564 or Sanjiv 546-4590

For those interested in gaining invaluable experience as well as a shot at a 300$ cash prize, the 1994 QMA Advertising Competition is for you!

The QMA advertising competition offers participants an unparalleled opportunity to apply their creative abilities in an alternative forum, as well as to present their ideas to people from the "real world" of marketing.

The competition consists of developing a creative strategy for a case in groups of one or two people. First prize is a 300$ cash award! Non-cash prizes will also be awarded for second and third places.

We encourage everyone to get involved! If you are interested in learning more, come to our information session, tonight, January 18th at 5:30 in Dunning 10.

If you have any questions please feel free to call Kim at 531-8652.

Holiday Inn
KINGSTON

nt northern talacum
Goldfarb Consultants

Unilever

KRAFT GENERAL FOODS
WARNER LAMBERT Procter & Gamble

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
195 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group
549-3553 549-3561

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

FRIDAY, JANUARY 21, 1994 • ISSUE 25 • VOLUME 121

Capture 93-94
with a bound Journal
Watch for more info

inside

YUK YUK'S: NO BUCKS

Yuk Yuk's comedian Wayne Fleming will not be getting paid by the AMS. In a "Welcome Back Week" show, he made jokes considered homophobic by AMS officials, thereby violating the AMS Mission Statement. But Yuk Yuk's Ed Smeal, head of talent, maintains that the material was not discriminatory, and accused the university of political correctness.

—See page 3 for details.

MIXED EMOTIONS

The ups and downs of studying abroad: a look at two Queen's students' experiences in Europe.

—Features, on page 12.

KISMET'S O.K.

Fear not, PC types! Kismet steers clear of Orientalism, and proves to be a magical night of entertainment.

—For review, see page 21.

"Australia is like a rounder and warmer Canada, where people surf instead of ski. It's a great country." —Keven Rex, from the Queen's Debating Union who just competed in the World University's Debating Championship. For story, see page 6.

Conviction in gay-bashing attack on Queen's student

Kingston man gets three-month sentence

BY JEFF GRAY

For Peter Troyer, the worst part about being assaulted in front of Stages nightclub last April wasn't his physical injuries—it was knowing that the only reason he was hurt was his sexual orientation.

On Wednesday, 20-year-old St. Lawrence college student Mark Scissons was sentenced to a three-month prison term at Quinte Detention Centre, as well as a year of probation, for an assault on then-Queen's Arts and Science student Troyer last April. The attack left Troyer with cracked ribs, a bleeding nose, and various cuts and bruises.

Troyer said Scissons approached him inside Stages, and told him he had heard that Troyer was gay, and that he was going to "beat the shit out of [him]." Later, on the street in front of the Princess Court Cinemas, Scissons assaulted Troyer.

After announcing a guilty verdict, Judge Paul Megginson characterized the incident as "a vicious and senseless attack, motivated by hatred of homosexuals."

The court heard from five witnesses, who testified that during the attack, Scissons called Troyer a "faggot," and a "cock-sucker."

A second man was also charged, but not convicted in the incident.

"The worst part," Troyer said of the attack, "was that the only reason he was doing this was because I was gay."

Often, when this sort of attack occurs, Troyer said, victims are very reluctant to press charges, wary of a possibly unsympathetic police force and judicial system. But Troyer said he felt he had to press charges.

"I felt it was my obligation as a citizen to press charges, to help make sure that this type of thing doesn't happen again," he said. And, he said, he was very surprised at how well he was treated by both the cops and the courts.

"They treated the case very seriously," he said. "The police were amazing."

Kingston Police Staff-Sergeant Bill Doxtator said, "I certainly hope it's an isolated case."

Regarding gay-bashing attacks, Doxtator said, like sexual assaults, "I'm sure there are a number... which go unreported. I urge anyone to report [such incidents] to us. If there is proper evidence, we will press charges."

Troyer said he was pleased with the sentencing. "Three

The Hair Up There! Doughboys rock Alfie's.

TRICIA BAUMAN

months, when you think about it, is a long time in prison," he said. On Wednesday, Troyer told The Journal that "I can't help thinking about it... [Scissons] is younger than me and he's spending his first night in jail tonight. He must be scared out of his mind." With files from Barry Dennison.

Students look ahead to tuition increases

BY DEBBIE BOCCONGELLE

It may be just a matter of weeks until Ontario's provincial government announces increases in tuition fees for college and university students.

And this has some Queen's officials insisting that the hikes must be matched by government efforts, and some students worrying about their academic futures.

Although the exact increase is still unknown, many fear large increases because of a proposal made by the Council of Ontario Universities in August. The COU, an association of university administrators, proposed increases in tuition by as much as 30 to 50 per cent by 1995-96.

However, the actual decision on tuition levels is made by the provincial Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

Ontario undergraduate students—who now pay a minimum of $2,026 a year—would, under this proposal, pay as much as $3,030 annually. Graduate students would pay a maximum $4,545 and aspiring professional doctors, dentists and other professionals would be asked to pay a maximum tuition of $6,061 per year.

Queen's Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser told The Journal, Surface editor Junipero Lagtapon said Queen's students can expect to see another issue of the controversial newspaper this February.

Lagtapon stated that "the next issue will be very intense and critical of many things of the Queen's community."

According to Lagtapon, the survival of Surface now wholly depends on contributions from outside sources. Private organizations and groups within Queen's and the community have expressed an interest in supporting Surface.

However, Lagtapon would not disclose the names of its financial supporters as they "have not made a full commitment yet."

If the contributions do not

Surface to publish again

Editor promises "very intense" issue in February

BY LAURIE NORTH

Surface newspaper will publish again soon, despite last October's Arts and Science Undergraduate Society referendum decision to completely eliminate its funding.

In an interview with The Journal, Surface editor Junipero Lagtapon said Queen's students can expect to see another issue of the controversial newspaper this February.

Lagtapon stated that "the next issue will be very intense and critical of many things of the Queen's community."

According to Lagtapon, the survival of Surface now wholly depends on contributions from outside sources. Private organizations and groups within Queen's and the community have expressed an interest in supporting Surface.

However, Lagtapon would not disclose the names of its financial supporters as they "have not made a full commitment yet."

If the contributions do not meet the publishing cost of $600 per issue, Lagtapon sees no alternative but to reduce the size of the paper. A shortage of funds will also affect the frequency of the newspaper.

In response to considerable dissatisfaction with the October referendum, he said, the February issue will "investigate what went wrong during the campaign."

Lagtapon said he is disappointed with the outcome of the referendum. "I don't understand or agree with their [ASUS students'] reasons," Lagtapon said, adding that ASUS, in representing only the majority of students, ensures that minorities on campus "won't be heard in an equal way."

Lagtapon said he believes that students of a minority had an unfair disadvantage in the referendum, as they are "numerically less" on campus.

Removed from the ASUS house, the Surface staff now uses a basement apartment as headquarters. Lagtapon said one of the only remaining advantages is that staff and contributors still have access to ASUS computer facilities, as do other students.

Although financially independent from ASUS, Lagtapon noted that formalities remain the same—"we still have to pass a budget and attend the ASUS Assembly."

Surface remains editorially autonomous, Lagtapon said, and continues to give minority groups a voice for political, economic and social issues on and off campus.

Currently, the writers and editors are preparing for the next newspaper.

When asked about the future of Surface, Lagtapon responded that he does not foresee a reconciliation with ASUS and cannot promise that Surface will publish next year.

At last week's Alma Mater Society Assembly, ASUS President Jenn Steeves said the possibility of an opt-outable fee for Surface would be discussed at the Jan. 20 ASUS Assembly.

TUITION CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

SLIP, HOLIDAY INN Michael George WITH PAULA

WEDNESDAY TO SATURDAY
JAN. 26TH TO 29TH

NEXT WEEK:

ROGER JAMES

DRAUGHT & DOZEN
60 OZ. PITCHER OF DRAUGHT & 12 WINGS - $14.50

1 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 549-8400 EXT. 657

Uncle Buck's

Kingston's Newest Watering Hole

Wednesday
Lite Nite / No Cover

Thursday
Buck Buck Bucking
Mad Thursdays

Friday & Saturday
Lite Nite All Night Long

Come Check Us Out!
178A Ontario St.

An Official
Tricolour
Photographer
Photographs
541 • 1098
Great Portraits!
Great Prices!
Student Specials
On Passport and
I.D. Photos
149 Brock St., Kingston
(above Coffeway at the bus stop)

Your Graduation
Your Achievement
Your Memories

A time of Personal Achievement and one to be recognized and shared by family, friends and future colleagues.
Let us help you make Your Own Statement with a distinguished graduation portrait created with our expertise, that truly reflects your personality.

gruenberg
PHOTOGRAPHY

AN OFFICIAL TRICOLOUR PHOTOGRAPHER
65 CLARENCE ST. (DOWNTOWN AT KING) 348-5541

Not all photographs are created equal...
A visit to our studio can be very enlightening.

Preston Schiedel
Photography
574 Princess Street Suite 224
Phone 542-7424
Official Tricolour Photographer

Quality • Affordable • Service • Location

A Fine Portrait
isn't expensive...
...it's Priceless

Sparks STUDIOS
PROFESSIONAL PHOTOGRAPHER

330 Princess Street
549-6560

AN OFFICIAL TRICOLOUR PHOTOGRAPHER

AMS cancels payment to comedian following homophobic stand-up act

Yuk Yuk's head of talent calls political correctness 'out of hand'

BY MEGAN EASTON

A Yuk Yuk's comedian who broke a contract with the Alma Mater Society by making homophobic jokes during Welcome Back Week will not receive payment for his performance.

Comedian Wayne Fleming, of Yuk Yuk's on Four Incorporated, appeared on Jan. 10 in Leonard cafeteria as part of a comedy night sponsored by the AMS Campus Activities Commission.

Yuk Yuk's provided a contract allowing Welcome Back Week co-chairs Craig Laurie and Nancy Hyndman to clarify their expectations about the comedy show. The co-chairs added a clause that ensured the comedians would not violate the AMS Mission Statement, which says that the AMS "shall strive to be a non-racist, non-sexist, non-homophobic and otherwise inclusive organization."

"Any programs or events that we run have to abide by those standards," said Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell.

Fleming violated these standards when he made a series of jokes about homosexuals.

"It certainly wasn't just one small mention," Mitchell said. "He did a number of stereotypical impressions of gay males."

Among other things, she said, "he discussed his homophobic uncle's response when he took him to a restaurant where all of the waiters were 'gay.' The response was obviously very homophobic but this was meant to be humorous."

"He's done those jokes at AIDS benefits and people have laughed."
—Yuk Yuk's head of talent, Ed Smeal

Ed Smeal, Yuk Yuk's head of talent, said he is familiar with this part of Fleming's act, and feels "it's not a joke picking on homosexuals at all. It comes down to censorship and freedom of the speech ... he's not up there making statements about sexual preferences."

"He's done those jokes at AIDS benefits and people have laughed," Smeal said. He charged that the politically correct movement has "gotten out of hand" at a lot of universities.

While they were not central features of his act, Fleming also made some sexist and racist comments, according to Mitchell.

Although Fleming was "really offensive," Mitchell said, "the other two comedians didn't seem to have any problem abiding by the contract."

Mitchell told the AMS Assembly last Thursday that the most positive thing to come out of the incident was that Fleming did not receive a positive response from the audience. "Most of his comments were just greeted with silence," she said.

"People were really not happy, and he [Fleming] even admitted to this on stage," Mitchell said.

Smeal said Fleming admitted to him that "he did a lousy show that night."

Fleming made a comment to the audience suggesting that he knew he had been insulting, but was not worried since he had already received his payment, Mitchell said.

After Fleming's performance, the Campus Activities Commission phoned Yuk Yuk's to tell them a stop-payment order had been placed on the cheque because a breach in the contract occurred.

The co-chairs of the Welcome Back Week Committee reached an agreement with Smeal to pay only two-thirds of the fee.

Smeal told The Journal, "the reason we decided to back the university and not Wayne Fleming was that he was very blatant about a very obvious thing that can't be defended: Wayne lit up a cigarette ... and it was a non-smoking room."

"I can defend whether [he] is homophobic, racist, and that's because you're talking about opinions," Smeal said.

Responding to the allegation that one audience member found Fleming's humour racist, Smeal said, "people are entitled to their opinions ... I've known Wayne for six years, this woman knows him for one hour. As a person he's not that way."

The Welcome Back Week co-chairs have written a letter, printed in this issue of The Journal, regarding the incident. In addition, Smeal said Fleming is willing to send a letter of apology to any student offended by his act.

"He did a number of stereotypical impressions of gay males."
—AMS Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

KOREAN SPEAKER

As part of the Donald Mathers Memorial Lectures, Professor Hyun-Kyung Chung will give two lectures at Queen's in early February. A Korean feminist theologian, Dr. Chung has taught Christian Theology at Ewha Women's University in Seoul, South Korea, since 1989. The first lecture, entitled "Wisdom of Mothers Knows no Boundary," will be held on Friday, Feb. 4 at 8 p.m. The second, called "Sexuality and Spirituality from an Asian Woman's Perspective," will take place the next day, at 2 p.m. Both lectures take place in Convocation Hall, Theological Hall.

WINTER GAMES

The fourth annual Winter Adapted Games will be played on Jan. 29 between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. at the Louise D. Acton Building. Children and young adults, ages 5 to 25, who are physically or mentally challenged or learning disabled, are welcome to come and get matched with a Queen's buddy for snowshoeing, broomball, indoor games, etc. Family, teachers and friends are all welcome. For more info or to pre-register, please contact, Julie Laprade, 547-2442, Wendy Smith, 545-6850 or Perri Chapman, 547-1370. This event is sponsored by Queen's Rehabilitation Therapy and Phys-Ed faculties.

Queen's rally supports Zapatista rebels, slams Mexican government

BY JOSETTE BYRNE

The blizzard conditions on Monday did not hinder the International Socialists from holding a rally in support of the uprising of Mexican revolutionaries in early January.

About twenty people attended the event, held in the John Deutsch University Centre, which was intended as a symbolic gesture to raise awareness of the crisis in Mexico.

On New Year's Day, dozens of people were killed in bloody fighting between the Mexican army and peasant guerrillas in Mexico's southern state of Chiapas.

The Mexican peasants, direct descendants of the area's native population, were actively protesting the North American Free Trade Agreement and the impoverished conditions in which they live. The insurgents are known as the Zapatista National Liberation Army, named after the leader of Mexico's revolution in 1910.

The rally was supported by a number of Kingston and Queen's organizations, including the Queen's Kenyan Student Society, Surface newspaper (formerly funded by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society), and the Ontario Coalition Against Poverty.

Slogans at the rally revealed hostility toward Mexico and its trade partners, evident in statements such as "Solidarity against NAFTA in Canada, the U.S. and

Ignacio Melgar, a Latin American student attending the rally, said he was not surprised by the uprising. "This is a big problem in all of Latin America, not just Mexico," Melgar said. The Zapatista revolt was late coming, he said, but it was "better now than never."

Mexico," and "From Oka to Mexico—Justice for Natives Now."

Ignacio Melgar, a Latin American student attending the rally, said he was not surprised by the uprising. "This is a big problem in all of Latin America, not just Mexico," Melgar said. The Zapatista revolt was late coming, he said, but it was "better now than never."

Similar rallies have been held in Mexico and in New York City, each bringing out thousands of supporters of the Zapatista revolt.

Harry Pilford of the International Socialists spoke at the Kingston rally about the fact that the "Mexican peasants have no social safety net."

"The Mexican government is one of the most corrupt in the Western world," Pilford charged. He talked about the persistence of fraud in Mexico's political arena, and called the government "more of a dictatorship than a democracy."

The media coverage of the Zapatista uprising was limited, according to Pilford. "Reporters were banned from the area, therefore a lot of the stories have yet to be released," he said.

Floyd Rudmin of the Council of Canadians, an organization which opposes NAFTA, spoke out at the rally about plans to organize larger demonstrations in the future.

Rudmin condemned the American press for intentionally neglecting to mention NAFTA as one of the key reasons for the uprising. He said the Council of Canadians would develop a trust fund to help natives in Mexico.

In addition, Rudmin suggested that "ordinary people make up their own aid package" and leave it with their Member of Parliament, to raise awareness about the situation in Mexico.

Students rally in support of Zapatista rebels.

YODI ROCHE JOHNSON

CAMERA KINGSTON
ONE HOUR PHOTO VIDEO ELECTRONICS

FREE

2nd set of prints

Applies to 110, 126, 135 full frame C-41 process. Not valid with any other offer. Coupon must accompany film at time of development. Expires Feb. 28, 1994.

114 Princess St. Bath & Gardiners Rds.
549-3747 384-3747

READING WEEK TRAVEL

STUDENT CLASS FARES WORLDWIDE
SUN DESTINATIONS 5% OFF
CHARTER CLASS FARES CANADA & EUROPE
THE EXPERTS IN UNIVERSITY TRAVEL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

THE WAG
OUTFITTING COMPANY
MADE IN CANADA SINCE 1988
ORIGINAL BRAND

For Orders and Information
Tel: 547-0864
Caps • T-shirts • Sweats • Jackets • Vests

Have passport, will travel

Speaker offers advice to would-be travellers

BY LORI THORLAKSON

Imagination and a sense of humour are two things that Gill White recommends bringing if you are planning a trip.

White was at Queen's Tuesday night to tell students how they can travel the world on 84 cents a day. Although he admitted that the 84 cent figure was only meant to "fire the imagination," White has accomplished some impressive feats of budget travel. On a 12 day trip through the United States he spent $75 (including $40 on souvenir t-shirts). One trip to South America cost him only $300, and he spent just $1,000 on a four-month tour of Europe—including return airfare.

Still, White reminded students that while fun is not proportional to the amount of money spent on a trip, there is also a difference between being budget-conscious and cheap. White's experiences introduced students to economical travelling alternatives that require more imagination than money.

In exchange for a few hours of dish-washing, he once secured room and board in a Scottish country inn. He has found lodging in a farmer's hay loft (by permission) and slept on the hard cot of a prison cell in Pretoria (by choice).

You do not need to sleep behind bars to get by economically, however, and White recommended students carry an International Student Identification Card and hostel card in order to take advantage of youth hostels and travel discounts around the world.

Hostels are especially good for single or first-time travellers, White said, because you can meet other travellers. For White, however, the advantage to travelling solo is that you meet the people in the countries you visit. White recounted his experience of spending three hours communicating with a Yugoslavian family through hand signals and facial expressions, and played a tape recorded conversation with a man in Istanbul who called himself "Casanova."

White said that meeting locals may provide lodging as well as conversation. "If you are travelling at night, knock on a farmer's door," White said. "I've knocked on farmers' doors all over the world."

However, White warned against abusing hospitality and told students they should try to repay people for assistance they give, whether through yard work, painting, cooking a Canadian-style meal or offering language or look like a tourist."

Koutroumbas's advice for travellers is "know where you're going, read up on it and budget

Gill White's 84-cent plan. Well, almost.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

lessons.

White is a self-proclaimed specialist in transportation. In fact, he has 28 methods of securing rides, gathered from years of hitchhiking experience. He shared several of his favourites, including his "you're on the air" method, in which he called a local radio station while hitchhiking in Europe to advertise his desperation for transportation.

He ended up with a ride, but not the song he requested. Hitchhiking does not have to be limited to roads, he said. White recommended "yacht-hiking" in coastal regions, especially for women. Checking billboards in hotels might even yield a temporary deck-hand position on a Riviera yacht, he said.

However, Odyssey Travel agent Pain Koutroumbas does not recommend hitchhiking for any traveller, especially for women. "Don't do what you wouldn't do at home," she advises. "I would never recommend it to women. I think it is extremely dangerous."

Koutroumbas advises women who are travelling alone to arrange to meet up with friends, at least for a portion of the trip. Short of that, researching your destination is the best preparation, she said. "The worst thing is to look lost, sensibly." Budgeting 84 cents a day works out to spending $25 a month, she said, and "that depends on people begging to get by... I think a lot of Canadians would have a hard time doing that."

A reasonable amount to budget for Europe is $30 a day, Koutroumbas said. "You'll see everything and have a good time." To plan a budget trip, she recommends budget travel guides such as Fodor's and the Let's Go series for Europe, and the Lonely Planet series for other destinations.

A common oversight of travellers is the value of the Canadian dollar and the cost of living in foreign countries, Koutroumbas said. She pointed out that the Canadian dollar is not trading strongly against many foreign currencies right now.

"Because of this, more than ever, the key is to pre-pay as much as you can," she said. Although setting out with a one-way ticket may have been a feasible travel option in the past, Koutroumbas does not recommend this today.

As a final piece of advice, Koutroumbas said travellers should be very aware. "If you go out there thinking the world is a crazy place, you'll probably be O.K."

Kitchen Sink forecasts deficit
AMS says entrepreneurial centre is on-target

BY AFFAAN QADIR

The Kitchen Sink, an Alma Mater Society-run outlet for student entrepreneurs, may be heading for a deficit in its first year of operation. But that's not a problem, according to AMS Administrative Services Director Stephanie Taylor.

The Kitchen Sink's budget forecasts a deficit of about $5,000 this fiscal year. Taylor believes the centre is roughly on target for this figure.

Asked whether the predicted deficit would influence the decision to continue the Kitchen Sink next year, Taylor replied, "I don't see the entrepreneurial centre's existence in terms of profit and loss—it shouldn't be a criterion. I see the benefits to the students, by generating an entrepreneurial spirit on campus."

The term "deficit" doesn't intimidate Kitchen Sink Manager Luke O'Regan, either. "We were budgeted not to break even because the service was brand new," he explained.

O'Regan said low costs in running the centre have kept the deficit on target. "Besides salaries and rent there are no expenses," he said.

Despite a slow recovery after the holidays—which led to the closure of the Kitchen Sink for a few days—business over the year has been steady. "We did really well during Christmas when the store was always packed," O'Regan said.

When asked whether the fact that revenues of student entrepreneurs exceeded those of the Kitchen Sink was a cause of discomfort, O'Regan replied, "we're not a big-money service. Our goal is to encourage students to take advantage of the space and do their own thing."

Similar sentiments were expressed by Assistant Manager Debbie Boccongelte. "We're not looking for profit, we are for the students and we want students to profit," Boccongelte explained.

According to Boccongelte, cash-strapped students are more conservative with their money given the tough economic times. "I see a lot of students looking and not buying. But the Kitchen Sink is an opportunity in a recession for students to buy and sell unique merchandise," she said.

Despite the precarious financial situation of some AMS services, Boccongelte remains optimistic that this service will be renewed in September. "If we break even [on a deficit budget] we'll be back, but I can't think of any other service that could occupy such a place," she said.

However, she cited several obstacles limiting the operations of the Kitchen Sink. "We're restricted by what other merchants sell—including Queen's paraphernalia—because we can't sell them in our store. The AMS has to see the problems we're facing," he said.

The restrictions are part of an agreement in the John Deutsch University Centre's policy, intended to circumvent cut-throat tactics among merchants in the JDUC.

According to Taylor, a decision on the future of the Kitchen Sink will be made in April by the present AMS executive.

O'Regan said the decision should not be difficult. "Like any new service you have to stick with it, and can't expect it to take off in the first year. You must give students a chance to do something," he said.

AMS to establish Crisis Response Team

Pilot program planned for summer

BY DANIELLE NICHOLAS

A New York Times survey revealed that one in three students will be the victim of some sort of campus crime, and statistics show that women are four times as likely to be assaulted during their college years than at any other time in their lives.

And while extraordinary efforts are made toward compiling crime statistics and tracking down assailants, a new campus group looks to focus on a group whose needs can be forgotten during a crisis—the victims.

According to Alma Mater Society Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson, the Campus Security Advisory Committee has recently organized a Crisis Assault Response Team.

"The need for the Response Team was recognized early in the fall when the committee was reviewing the problems with present systems of dealing with assaults," Minerson said.

According to Minerson, the committee recognized that in the chaos and confusion surrounding the response to a call, and the attempt to find the perpetrator of the assault, the needs of the victim are often forgotten.

The overriding concern of the Crisis Assault Response Team will be "to meet the immediate needs of the victim of the assault, whether psychological, medical or personal," said Minerson.

The members of the Response Team will be volunteers, primarily staff and faculty, who will undergo an extensive training program developed in consultation with the Queen's Faculty of Medicine, the Queen's Counselling Service, and the Dean of Women.

Minerson told The Journal that "all sectors of the university—staff, union, students, faculty, the AMS—also have input in all stages of the development of the project."

A member of the team will be on call 24 hours a day, and when an assault has been reported to campus security, the Response Team will be paged and directed to the location of the assault. The team members will be located in a close enough proximity to campus to be able to respond to all calls within half an hour.

Minerson stated that once the Response Team member has arrived, "the only concern will be to meet the needs of the victim, whether that means getting everybody else out of the room, or contracting a friend of the victim, whatever."

He also said that "the victim will always be notified that a person from the response team is on the way, and will, of course, be given the chance to decline the service."

The Campus Security Advisory Committee hopes to implement and evaluate a pilot program this summer. Minerson said that "if the program works well this summer, and if all the wrinkles can be ironed out, we hope to have a full program running by next fall."

Minerson noted that "the Crisis Assault Response Team is still a reactive measure, that is, it happens after the fact. Although the university would like to see some more proactive [and preventative] measures taken [to try to reduce the incidence of campus assaults], the Response Team is a desperately-needed and positive step" in the battle against campus crime.

"Like any new service, you have to stick with it."

—Luke O'Regan, manager

Performing Arts Office presents

Hot sizzling big band jazz to warm you up!!!

the McGill Jazz Ensemble

Gordon Foote director

Music by Ellington, Parker, Porter, Berlin, Nestico, Noble, Rogers & Hart, and McFarland.

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

Sunday 23 January Grant Hall 2:30 pm
$15 / $8 (child) plus GST

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

Additional TUTORS ARE NEEDED IN THE MATH AND SCIENCE SUBJECT AREAS.

ASUS MINDFIND

If INTERESTED IN TUTORING OTHER STUDENTS IN THIS AREA CALL ASUS Mindfind AT 545-6278 FOR MORE INFORMATION. TUTORS ARE PAID $9.00/HR WORKING HOURS CONVENIENT FOR YOU!

Queen's debates down under

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

During the freezing first week of January 1994, four members of the Queen's Debating Union (QDU) were competing in the tropical climes of Australia, in the World University's Debating Championship.

The competition was held at the University of Melbourne, and it involved four days of debating and public speaking debates against university students from around the world.

Dean Campbell (Arts '94), Ron Cunnane (Arts '95), Joel Harding (Arts '95) and Kevin Rex (Arts '95) were chosen to represent the QDU on the basis of club participation, past tournament results, and in-house debating results.

Queen's competed against prestigious international schools such as Oxford, the Sorbonne, Harvard, the London School of Economics, and local rivals McGill. Although in the past the championship has been dominated by Australia, the U.S., Scotland and Canada, this year's event saw increased numbers of schools from Asia and Africa.

Issues debated at the competition included the North American Free Trade Agreement, feminism, multiculturalism, world peace, human rights, "political correctness as the new McCarthyism," space exploration, and the sport of cricket.

The debating was structured under the Scottish style, which differs distinctly from the Canadian Parliamentary style that the QDU debaters are accustomed to.

Asked how the team fared, Rex replied, "we performed well considering our unfamiliarity with this style of debating. A lot of our competitors were law students, and in some cases they were even Rhodes Scholars," Rex said.

Both QDU pairs were very close to placing in the top 32 teams, out of a total of 225 schools. Campbell and Harding placed fifth among Canadian schools, while Cunnane and Rex placed sixth.

After his visit down under, Rex told The Journal, "Australia is like a rounder and warmer Canada, where people surf instead of ski.

It's a great country."

The Queen's participants spent most of their three week stay in Melbourne, but ventured out for some surfing to Bell's Beach—the famous beach featured in the final scenes of the movie Point Break.

"The Australians are excellent hosts and they sure know how to take care of their guests. I think it was one of the best-run World Championships ever," said Rex. He noted that one of the sponsors this year was Foster's Lager.

In retrospect, Rex said, "it was an honour to represent Queen's, but I wish the weather was 37 degrees Celsius here, too."

Try moving that horse piece there! Jack Toughton (left) advises Dariusz Sokolowski against Candidate Master Frank Dixon. The Queen's Chess Club now meets Wednesdays at 7pm in the JUDC's Memorial Room.

Parliament debates legalizing marijuana

BY CARINA BLOFIELD

Last weekend, about 160 politics keeners and a number of guest politicians from different parties gathered at Grant Hall for the annual Queen's Model Parliament.

Despite the lack of heating in Grant Hall, students representing Natural Law, the Progressive Conservatives, Liberals, New Democrats, and Reform managed to pass bills, engage in debates, and take a stand on relevant issues such as defense and finance.

Notable politicians attending the event were Liberal MP Susan Whelan, local Liberal MP Peter Milliken, and former PC Cabinet Minister Pauline Browes.

In an address to participants, former Toronto PC MP David Turnbull emphasized that "we've got to have a little less government."

"The average Canadian receives more in services than they pay in taxes," he added. Addressing a common concern of today's young people, he bluntly told the audience that "you're left with the bill that my generation left, and it's not a happy scene."

On a lighter note, the Liberal and Natural Law students proposed unconventional bills. The Liberals advocated the legalization of marijuana, stating in their proposal that "it is in the economic and physical interest of Canada to make available the use of marijuana."

Their justifications included the suggestion that "25 per cent of all federal profits on the sale of marijuana and related products will be allocated to rehabilitation and drug education programs."

According to Jonathan Leigh, a student representing the Conservatives, the bill also led to a split among the Tories, with a number of students forming a more responsive breakaway party: "Pete's Pot-Smoking Fiends."

The Natural Law's proposal alerted students about a "heinous conspiracy of nefarious no-goodniks and baddy-badkins" that included "extra-terrestrial agents of evil," the party members explained that the Canadian government should divert its funds to the "training of an elite vanguard of Jedi Knights."

Besides such serious legislation, a traditional joke bill was also put forward on the issue of voting. Leigh summarized the joke bill as a declaration that "people who spent more than two hours at Tim Horton's, or drove a station-wagon with fake wood trim, could not vote in national elections."

All in all, Leigh considered the weekend "very laid-back, very fun and informal."

Tonight & Sat Road Apples

Best of the Hip!
Cheap-a-go-go 7:30-9:30

Watch for!!!!

ONE!
Superbowl Bash III
Yuk Yuks!
The Mahones!
The Sidemen!
13 Engines!

Best Bands! Lowest Cover!

Sunday Jan 23rd

3rd Anniversary party for Kingston's longest running house band!

Wild Blues Yonder

Hot Blues! No Cover!

Every Tues. N.T.N. Trivia Challenge! Come early to get a playmaker. Starts at 8:30!

Every Mon. 20¢ wings mild, medium, hot or nosebleed.

THURSDAYS!
Dipsomania.
The party.

Hewlett Packard Day

ROUND 2

Monday, January 24th

Due to the overwhelming success of last year's HP Day, the representative from Hewlett Packard has returned to continue bringing you the newest of calculator technology. The new line of HP calculators give you power enough for your education... and your career! For this one day only, you receive a 10% discount on all calculators. There are also discounts on Sparcom® memory cards for your 485X or 486X. Choose from a selection of formulas and equations for electrical engineering, calculus, statistics, physics, general chemistry and an equation library that includes Tetris. Free giveaways and a chance in a draw for a HP accessory with every purchase for this one day only.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

Tuition

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

If tuition fees increase, Fraser said, Queen's would also use the extra revenue to "enhance the learning environment for students." He added that revenue would help preserve the number and quality of teaching staff at Queen's, in addition to providing needed resources for the new Stauffer Library.

Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips sides with the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance's reaction to the proposed tuition increases.

OUSA, of which Queen's is a founding member, maintains that any increases in tuition must be accompanied by fundamental reform to the Ontario Student Assistance Program. It recommends that any increases in student fees be matched, dollar-for-dollar, by increased government contributions, and advocates support from the private sector.

"There must be improvements in student aid before increases in tuition, so students know that they can get the money," Philips said.

Responding to the criticism lodged against OUSA that it supports tuition hikes, Philips said, "we have been taken out of context... OUSA is not asking for tuition increases."

She explained that OUSA "would only [support] further hikes if it means an improvement in the quality of education"—and that requires positive steps from the government.

"If students put more money in, the government should too... leading to an overall enhancement of education."

She added that if the Ontario government is increasing tuition and subsequently decreasing financial support, the ultimate burden would be put on the student. And in that case, she said, "they are not increasing the quality of education at all."

The imminent tuition hikes pose a particular threat to students who are already feeling the effects of a chilly economic climate. "Right now students are not getting jobs to help support these tuition increases," Philips noted.

Students coming from high school must not only have an "A" average to get into many Ontario universities, they face increasing pressure to find a part-time job in a scarce job market.

Grade 13 Bayridge High School student Ian Main works part-time at Marriott Food Services to help save up for university in the upcoming year.

"I knew I had to work this summer," he said, "but with the increases, it may not be enough now."

"I would have to work during school, and that's still relying on government help," he added.

Holly Binder, a Con-Ed '95 student, said that if the proposed tuition hikes were put in place, she would be adversely affected.

"I'm here until 1996, and I don't like the direction tuition is taking," Binder commented. "The COU proposal of 30 per cent is a very big jump."

She also said while we need more talented and educated people in Canada, "tuition increases foster inequalities in educational access for many of those people."

Arts '96 student Jennifer Bascom, who works part-time at the campus salon "Signatures" to meet her university expenses, is sceptical about whether tuition hikes will effect an increase in the quality of education. She said previous tuition hikes have led to little change.

"I think a lot more people would be willing to accept a 30 per cent increase to improve the standard of education if they thought they were getting a high quality of education as it is," she said.

"The university should start being accountable now. I don't think students are getting their money's worth... classes are too big and there is a lack of T.A.'s," she said.

Social justice or prejudice?

Last Saturday evening, former Black Panther party member Jamil Al-Amin spoke at Dunning Auditorium to a crowd of 200 people. He told his audience that "man-made concepts have begun to produce on mass the worst in mankind, all the ills and the dredges of society are being produced in mass... serial killers... rapists... drug abusers... child molesters... homosexuals..."

Should we be surprised by this homophobic comment? Should we be surprised that the Queen's Black History Collective and the Human Rights Office co-sponsored someone with this message?

The answer to both of these questions may be surprising, for the answer to both is no.

In fact, homophobic statements are not surprising coming from spokespersons for most organized religions. But, if a white spokesperson had come from the deep south of the United States selling a homophobic message, would we be sympathetic? Would we proffer up a defense such as "he's just speaking from the Bible?"

Chances are we would not. Chances are we would mercilessly condemn this hypothetical speaker and whoever hypothetically sponsored this speaker. But in the case of an Islamic speaker we do not.

Because of its politico-religious nature, Islam endures much Western criticism. In North America and the United States in particular, the intermeshing of religion and politics is ignored because of the belief that the church and the state have been successfully separated. We all know, however, that when it comes to spreading values complete separation is not possible. There are political implications to what is said in the religious context.

A religious view in North America does not mean state approval, but with Islam it is assumed that there is state approval. Al-Amin said himself that the church and the state cannot be separated.

Our homogeneous view of Islam is dictated by television which portrays religious fanaticism. We cannot assume that one person speaking for Islam speaks for all Muslims. The same applies to Judaism and Christianity, but, in these cases, distinctions are more easily made as we are more familiar with the tenets of Judaism and Christianity.

We do not afford the same freedom for diversity with Islam however. We perceive it to be all the same idea, ignoring the possibility of a variety of sects and viewpoints.

Our ignorance is not the only reason behind our more sympathetic attitude toward the statements made by Al-Amin or other minority speakers. Our homophobic fundamentalist preacher from the South has not suffered due to the racism or sexism or homophobia of the rest of society, Al-Amin has.

He cannot, however, hide behind the words or the Koran. He must accept responsibility for the message he sends.

In his speech, Al-Amin said that homosexuals will be "punished" in the afterlife. He seems to have overlooked the fact that lesbians and gays are unjustly "punished" for their sexuality all the time.

In his discussion of social justice Al-Amin reminded us of the fact that homophobia is not just a Judeo-Christian problem, but one that cuts across all races and religions. He taught us that minority does not mean prejudice-free.

From the Simpsons to Homolka, the ethics of modern technology

Recently, the media has been focusing its attention on a world-wide computer network called Internet.

Like most computer technologies, the Internet was originally a U.S. Department of Defense project to provide a means of computer-based communication between universities performing defense research. These universities were linked together by "leased lines," which are similar to telephone lines, but accessible only by computers. Messages were exchanged between parties in a manner similar to the children's game of "broken telephone."

It was soon discovered that the Internet could also serve as a large-scale "bulletin board." The so-called Internet "graffiti" takes the form of news, mail, computer programs, and gossip. More recently, developments have allowed for digital audio recordings and visual images to be sent through the "net."

Other universities and institutions saw the potential in such a network and installed their own leased lines, connecting themselves with the nearest institution already on the Internet. Before long, Internet went from a loose affiliation of interconnected computers to an international community.

The Internet functions as an open storehouse of information that people want to be made public; private records are not stored on it and hackers can't use it to steal money from bank accounts. Instead, you can find or request all sorts of information, some useful (published newspapers, eyewitness accounts, discussions of today's hot topics) and some trivial (plot synopses of every Simpson's episode and reasons why Captain Picard is better than Captain Kirk).

During the news blackouts of the Tiananmen Square crisis, the only source of information was Internet reports coming from students at Peking University. When a large American computer firm's practice of firing employees for being gay was exposed on the "net," an Internet writing campaign halted the firm's practice.

Even the gory details of the Teale/Homolka/Bernardo trials can be found on the "net," creating problems for those trying to enforce the publication ban. This brings up all manner of interesting legal questions, especially since the Internet has no central authority or governing body.

Perhaps this is why the media finds the Internet so fascinating and frightening. This fear was expressed in a recent magazine article which underscored the fact that a lot of pornography is available on the "net." It is notable that the magazine didn't mention the amount of pornography that is available on magazine stands. There was also no mention of how Internet, being non-commercial, was immune to pressure from advertisers and parent corporations.

Many products we use—cars, appliances, buildings—have seen marked improvement over the years. Mass media is the one product where there does not seem to be a conscious effort to improve quality—at least not with result. The many "tabloid news" shows emphasize style rather than substance. Even "legitimate" news shows have fallen into the style trap; news departments choose their anchors based on the persona they project rather than their ability to deliver the news.

The Internet concept represents a change in media. The current form of broadcast media has someone else in control. You can choose what channel to watch and what paper to read, but beyond that you become passive.

The other choice is to follow the Internet model. On the "net," you have direct control over what, where and when you receive information. Instead of a news editor or a programming director, you push the buttons, you decide. It may require a little effort on your part to sift through what's available and sort the gems from the junk, but it's an active process. It requires critical thinking which may lead to activism. This in turn could lead to enhancement of the democratic process.

The major pitfall of the Internet concept is that it may end up recasting the class war as a battle of the information-rich versus the information-poor. Even though the cost of information technology is dropping rapidly, the skills—and even the desire—required to use this technology to its potential rests in the hands of relatively few people. Unless measures are taken to make the "Digital Superhighway" easy to use, we may simply start the haves/have-nots struggle all over again.

The most telling example of this is a scene from the L.A. riots where looters broke into a Radio Shack and stole personal stereos while leaving a neighbouring computer store full of notebook computers untouched. As a technological democracy, we must ensure that the services of whatever information network we use in the future are accessible—both financially and intellectually—to all.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Friday, January 21, 1994 • Issue 24 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The best price direct, editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Fax: 613-545-6728
Internet: journals@qucinc.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue 26 will be published on Tuesday, January 25, 1994.

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Sarah MacWhirter
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER: David Pavao
NEWS EDITOR: Jeff Gray
PRODUCTION MANAGER: Colin Ho
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR: Douglas MacGregor
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR: Rob Furse
FEATURES EDITOR: Alison Masemann

OPINIONS EDITOR: Karen Hall
SPORTS EDITOR: Brock Martland
ADVERTISING MANAGER: Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER: Alex Hamer
SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER: David Pavao

ASSISTANT NEWS: Brock Martland
BRAD EIDER
LOTT THORNTON
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION: Adrienne Down
ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT: Ryan P. Chen
SIÂN BODDICE-STEPHENS
ASSISTANT SPORTS: Justin McKellar
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY: Derek Yarnell
ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSIS: Tim Mitchell

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR: Marika Glickman
MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR: Joey deVilla
LITERARY LAPSIS EDITOR: Megan Nichols

BUSINESS STAFF
EDITOR: Chris Ritchie
ADVERTISING MANAGER: Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER: Alex Hamer
SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER: David Pavao

CONTRIBUTORS
Tricia Bauman, Jason Bennett, Carina Blofield, Debbie Boccogelto, Joseste Byrne, Steve Cain, Rob Camp, Prentis Clairmont, Brent Davis, Christian deBruijn, Frank Dixon, Megan Easton, Wendy Eley, Jane Hamilton, Jo Hinde, Elizabeth Ireland, Yodit Roche Johnson, Dandy Jokelos, Bryan Lambert, David Leach, Mike Moss, Brian Murray, Danielle Nicholas, Laurie North, Kerry Pilgrim, Afisan Qadir, Denny Silverthorne, Rob Thompson, Will Todd, Christopher Zabel.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

KISMET

O.K., how I'm really confused. When I first noticed posters for Kismet dotting the walls I naively assumed that they reflected someone's un-selfconscious, unthinking taste for racist and sexist musical entertainment. Oh groan, I thought, another one. But after reading The Journal's feature article written about the musical by its director, I have to conclude that this can't be the case. Ken Jacobson has apparently put a great deal of serious thought into meaning of this happily racist and sexist work.

Jacobson not only reports but shows us his careful consideration of the difficulties inherent in attempts to make a musical less sexist and racist. Undaunted by such difficulties he and his colleagues have valiantly tried to fix it up anyway. Unfortunately, he does not share with us his final evaluation of these efforts. That is, does he think they have successfully fixed it up or not?

This is something that would be important to know, in order to make sense of his final paragraph—full of rhetorical questions. If, in his opinion, the play is still fundamentally racist and sexist then the "why not?" he offers as a counter to the question "why stage an orientalist work like Kismet?" is hopelessly inadequate.

If, on the other hand, he thinks that with the modifications made by Queen's Musical Theatre it is no longer racist or sexist then his closing comments are nothing more than disingenuous defensiveness, daring anyone not to like it, under threat of being labelled a politically correct enemy of art and freedom.

What really puzzles me about Ken Jacobson's defence of the choice to produce Kismet is that he does not offer a single reason in his favour and offers lots of reasons for producers of musical theatre to toss it on the reject pile.

He suggests that he isn't convinced by the negative arguments, however, because fairness and other moral and political issues are not his primary concern. Rather, his "first priority is to mount an entertaining theatrical product." But, entertainment for whom?

A great deal of musical theatre is thoroughly and unredemptably sexist and racist, and, I must admit that it as a genre I generally give it a miss. Do I do this as an ardent expression of my politically correct consciousness? Nope. I generally don't see the stuff because it's not entertaining enough for me to waste time or money on.

Perhaps Ken Jacobson has misunderstood the relationship between entertaining people and offending them. If you succeed in offending someone you usually won't succeed in entertaining them. People don't force themselves not to enjoy something that offends them in order to be politically correct; it doesn't take that much effort to not enjoy being offended.

So who does Jacobson think that he is mounting his entertaining theatrical product for? Not, I suppose, for Muslim men and women, or for other men and women who fail to be entertained by racism and sexism. He doesn't seem to expect them to like it. In that case he ought to be a little more up front in his response to potential criticism of his production: so long as this community has enough paying customers with sensibilities sufficiently numb that "a little" sexism and racism doesn't get in the way of their fun, "why not" produce Kismet? (or Showboat or Miss Saigon or...) Why not, indeed! Where shall we start?

Jacobson tells us that it is one thing to think about the difficulties of staging material which is potentially inflammatory or offensive and quite another thing to weave the theory into practice. Too true, and given these difficulties he would do well to consider whether the possible reasons in favour of staging such a work are very compelling at all.

JACKIE DAVIES
PH.D. PHILOSOPHY

TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK EDITOR RESPONDS

I am disappointed with The Journal's coverage of the yearbook and how I am depicted in the paper's coverage (Friday Jan. 14). Whether the articles were meant to be unbiased or not, I cannot understand how I can be accused of the allegations which the paper has printed.

It is very convenient for both Karen [Kilkullen, current Tricolour editor] and Eric [Jabal, Alma Mater Society Media Services Director] to point their fingers at someone who no longer is involved with the Tricolour. The '93 Tricolour has been finished since last April and I really cannot see what their problem is when I've been liaising with the company (one of my duties as editor). Although there were some problems with separations, copyrights and photos, these problems were taken care of in the summer and both Eric and Karen passed or commissioned the work.

The problem is not the fact that Karen says she has been "dumped with the '93 Tricolour," but the fact that Karen has to deal with the book as part of her job description and the fact that she has no real experience with the production/administrative side of the service. As '93 photo editor, she was aware that the book had to be completed before she was paid her honourarium last April; moreover, I did not "give the AMS and the publishers the runaround" as she stated in last week's paper. There are phone logs which indicate that Karen and I spoke at least once a week during the summer; furthermore, I have kept in contact with the publishing company since last November when Karen and Eric stopped all of my editorial powers.

The job description for editor-in-chief clearly states that the editor is responsible for the distribution of the book, yet when I initially called the publishing company in October, Karen had not contacted them. She has since said that I was irresponsible for not informing her of her responsibilities. According to AMS procedures and policy, transition between managers occurs in late March and early April; however, Karen was "busy" and had delegated much of her work to volunteers. I cannot see why I can be fired when I have tried to give Karen support over the summer (especially since Eric has stated that I was never really hired). I really cannot understand that they are basing my dismissal on talking

What are you doing to get over your cabin fever?

"Making lots of long distance phonecalls." —JENN CARR ARTS '93	"Suing my landlord." —VANSOON SOO ARTS '94
"Hibernating." —KENNY CHIU ARTS '95	"I don't got it - I play hockey." —KENNY HEINTZ ARTS '94

the fact that I did not spoon-feed Karen everything I have learned over the last nine years.

Eric and Karen, as far as I am aware of, have no jurisdiction with approving material which has already been approved by the AMS. The "disturbing discrepancies" which are in the proofs have been submitted by educational-related groups (the women's centre, environmental groups, lesbian/bisexual/gay groups, etc) and the three campus papers. These were approved during editorial meetings (which I guess Karen doesn't recall); furthermore, Eric is mistaken by his statement that the grad section has historically been only for record-keeping. The '92 Tricolour has similar quotes and the three prior editors did not add quotes in their section because of the time and work involved.

I am disappointed with the way the AMS treats its employees and the fact that I am being accused of being incompetent, among other things. Speaking of incompetence, I only discovered that the books were still not in when I read the paper last week. Over the last ten months, I've seen a lot of mistakes on their part and all I can say is that this is a real job and they should do their research instead of trying to pass blame.

ROBERT YEE
ENG 94/ARTS 96

Real Live Slacker

BY JOEY DEVILLA

OPENFORUM

READ THIS: THE WHYS BEHIND PROFS' RAE DAYS

THE EDITOR.

While your reporter has assigned the principal responsibility where it belongs in writing "Bob Rae may have cancelled some of your classes" (The Journal, Jan. 14), the 5.5 unpaid holidays for faculty, equivalent to a 2.1 per cent reduction in salary, are required not by the Rae government's Social Contract Act but by the local agreement signed under that Act by Queen's University and the Queen's University Faculty Association (QUFA), acting as bargaining agent for faculty. While the agreement was signed because of the government's threat of draconian sanctions against both faculty and the university, the parties were free to reach any agreement that would meet the university's savings target under the Act. Had the administration seen fit to find the $2.8 million necessary to cover the 2.1 per cent of all salaries elsewhere in its budget, as we and the representatives of the support staff urged it to do, no unpaid holidays would have been required.

The timing of the unpaid holidays is governed by article III (3) of our local agreement: "The Employer will make a sincere effort to grant the unpaid days off referred to above at times requested by the employees. Decisions will be made consistent with the operational requirements of the Department. If the required amount of unpaid days off is not taken by the end of each fiscal year, the Employer shall designate the time period wherein they shall be taken, within three months of April 30." This wording was originally proposed by the university, and QUFA accepted it, since we had discovered by means of a survey that this was the solution most acceptable to faculty members. This agreement was signed by Principal David Smith and myself, as President of QUFA, and (both) the university and QUFA (in addition to Bob Rae) must take responsibility for it. Therefore, it is inaccurate for you to criticize individual professors who take one or more of their "Rae days" on teaching days for "using us as a pawn in wage negotiations" (editorial, Queen's Journal, Jan. 14); they are simply exercising their rights under the social contract agreement which is the result of salary negotiations between QUFA and the university. And while you may be right that the government hoped, through the social contract, not only to cut our salaries but also to "force public sector workers to work more efficiently," what would "increased efficiency" mean, in the context of university teaching, except delivering the same amount of instruction with fewer person-hours of labour (i.e. cancelling classes) or delivering it to more students with the same number of person-hours of labour (i.e. larger classes)? Is this really what you want?

QUFA and all Queen's faculty are strongly committed to preserving and enhancing the quality of the education we provide to you, the students. It is precisely for this reason that we cannot stand idly by while the government continues to slash university funding; it is our professional responsibility to resist as best we know how. While we see the unpaid holidays primarily as a (wholly inadequate) form of quid pro quo for the 2.1 per cent pay cut, the so far largely symbolic cancellations of classes do also remind the government of the potentially disastrous effects of its policies.

However, there are other and more effective means of opposing the social contract and underfunding. It is in the common interest of students, faculty, and staff to unite against cutbacks, and to agree upon joint strategy and tactics that take into account the goals and interests of all. Sadly, this has not been possible at Queen's because of the position of the Alma Mater Society and the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA), to which it belongs. Last April OUSA wrote the government's chief social contract negotiator, urging him to impose a 5 per cent salary cut on faculty and support staff (fortunately, even the Rae government did not go that far!). Not only did this action divide the university community into supporters (OUSA) and opponents (the rest of the community) of the government's policy of unfairly singling out public sector workers for cuts in income, and assist only our common adversaries; it also reflects an extremely shortsighted view of students' interests. Students cannot get the high-quality education they deserve at a university that underpays its faculty: low pay scales will drive both those current faculty who can get out and young scholars contemplating an academic career into other occupations. As independent consultants have documented, our pay scales were already significantly lower than those of comparable occupations in both the private and the public sectors, before the imposition of the "Rae days."

Students and faculty have a common interest in preserving and enhancing the quality of university education, increasing its accessibility, and ensuring decent salaries for all university employees. We realize that these goals are inseparable: we hope that both students and their organizations will come to this realization too, and join us in opposing the social contract, which undermines them all.

GRANT AMYOT
PAST PRESIDENT (1992-93), QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY FACULTY ASSOCIATION

RICKARD'S: NOT QUITE AN ELIXIR FROM THE GODS

THE EDITOR.

Rickard's Red is the bane of my existence. Perhaps because my existence generally consists of the purveying and consuming of fine beer, it was with much bemusement that I read about the recent success of Alie's in enjoying with the introduction of Rickard's Red ("Alie's profits with pints", The Journal, Jan. 14).

It is beyond my comprehension how this beer has become so popular in so little time. Indeed, the arrival of Rickard's Red at Alie's was triumphed like the coming of the malt-messiah on the front page of The Journal. People embrace this concoction as if it were an elixir from the gods. And I just don't get it.

It is not as if taste has anything to do with it. Rickard's Red is a one-dimensional beer with no distinctive aroma, is absent of head retention, and has a body with the complexity of a straw doll. And it is not as if RR drinkers have been brain-washed by an extensive, multimillion dollar advertising campaign ("Ice" beer, anyone?). Molson does not even lay claim to the fact that they are the brewers of this nebulous libation.

[Writer Lori] Thorlakson seems to have stumbled on something when she describes the allure of the colour of Rickard's Red [in the article]. But I still don't get it. The Grad Club has been serving darker beers for over a decade and no one ever lines up to get in there. And if the addition of a little Brown No. 9 to the hop kettle is the secret, why doesn't Molson add some colour to Canadian to grab even more market-share (. . . or do they?).

What confounds me most, however, is that Rickard's Red is only available on tap. Surely the students who throng to Alie's for their beloved Red must dream of the day when Molson rewards them with Rickard's Genuine Draft in bottles that they can enjoy at home. Soon to follow: Rickard's Light for those like their beer dark, but light. And then, at a beer store near you, Rickard's Genuinely Maximum Dry Ice. . .

Yes, I may be somewhat of a beer "snob." I admit that I am aware that the taste of beer is not the result of its colour. I confess that I am wary of drinking beers whose brewers refuse to divulge the ingredients used in making them. However, to each their own. Perhaps Rickard's Red serves its purpose as fuel for dipsomaniacs. Perhaps Molson deserves kudos for creating an enigmatic brew that acts as a liquid zeitgeist. But if Molson can ask you to "Dare to be Great," I must ask you to dare to be greater and try one of the many enjoyable beers brewed at Ontario micro-breweries. If I am not mistaken, they make ale that is "dark" as well.

OPENFORUM

SCOTT HENDERSON
ARTS '94

APOLOGY FOR YUK-YUK'S

THE EDITOR.

On behalf of the Welcome Back Week committee we would like to extend our apologies to all those who attended our Yuk-Yuk's Comedy Event held Monday, Jan. 10 in Leonard Cafeteria. We were personally offended, as were many people present, with the behaviour and statements made by the headline comedian, Wayne Fleming. While it was expressly stated in the contract that his material was not to be racist, sexist, or homophobic, Mr. Fleming ignored these conditions and violated the contract. After contacting Ed Smeal at Yuk-Yuk's we agreed Mr. Fleming would not receive any payment and both Yuk-Yuk's and Mr. Fleming would write letters of apology.

CRAIG LAURIE AND NANCY HYNDMAN
CO-CHAIRS, WELCOME BACK WEEK '94

Straight Men Lacking Something

It seems to me that straight men in Western society are missing out on a lot of important aspects of life. I'm not saying that every heterosexual man should all of a sudden change his sexual orientation and have sex with another man once in a while (though it probably wouldn't hurt them as much as they think it would), but I do think that if they don't change some of their attitudes they're going to go the way of many a straight man before them. It has occurred to me, though, that many straight men don't really know what they are missing by being the people that they are.

Lesbians, bi men and women, gay men and even most straight women have something that the vast majority of straight men here don't have—affection for other human beings of either sex. In Western culture, especially North America, it is deemed unacceptable for a man to be close to or affectionate with another man. There are some exceptions to the rule: amongst athletes, military personnel and family members. When was the last time you (straight men reading this) hugged another man—besides on the football field? When was the last time you hugged a woman without thinking about her in a sexual manner? There is much to be gained from being able to get close to another human. Most straight women that I know are more than willing to be close to another woman. In many cases, however, straight women will shy away from being close to a woman who is suspected of bisexuality or lesbianism, due to the stereotype that queer women and men simply want to recruit others into their "lifestyle." Most queers that I know are more than able to be affectionate with members of either sex. This is because those of us who are out have been able to overcome much of the ostracism placed upon us by society for being close to members of our own sex. There are lesbians and bi women who don't like men and don't want to go anywhere near them, as well as gay and bi men who are misogynists, but they are the minority within our communities. Within the straight male community, however, there is such a large degree of queer bashing that they have been socialized to believe that it is unacceptable to be close to other men.

I know that straight men are capable of tenderness, because many of my straight male friends are willing to get a hug or kiss on the cheek from me. There are even a rare few het men who have little fear of kissing me on the lips. In many of these cases, though, it took quite a time and effort on my part and many other people's part to convince them that they can be comfortable with these types of affections and still be heterosexual. Some men who I have known for years, on the other hand are completely incapable of even shaking my hand. They refuse to accept the fact that being affectionate with another man can be just as acceptable as being affectionate with a woman, without jeopardizing their "heterosexual manhood."

In the past year, some studies have attempted to show that there is a link between sexual orientation in some men and a gene that they all share. This would lead one to believe that many straight men lack this gene and thus are missing something. This might explain many things. This fear of affection could very easily be a biologically determined trait.

You have heard that it was said,
"You shall not commit adultery."
But I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust has already committed adultery with her in his heart.

St. Matt. 5: 27-28

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00), and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

The AMS Speakers Committee is now administering the Moveable Speakers Fund. This money is available to provide some contributing funds for speakers who are brought in by groups affiliated with the AMS.

Donations are for no more than $300 to $500.

Applications must show that they meet all of the following criteria:

1. The speaker must appeal to the general membership of the Alma Mater Society.
2. The speaker must be sponsored by an AMS affiliated group.
3. The speaker must not have had a public engagement at Queen's within the two years previous.
4. A strong effort to seek funding from other sources must be evident.
5. The subject of the speaking engagement must adhere to the mission statement of the Alma Mater Society.
6. The speaking engagement must be open to all students and thus must be held in a location that is accessible.

The Deadline for submissions that must include a detailed budget, details of the speaker, other funding sources, sponsoring group and their affiliation with the AMS, date, time, and location of the speak, and contact name and number of the applicant are due by 12 noon January 28th, 1994 in the AMS office, Lower JDUC, Kingston.

For more information call 545-2725, ext. 4816.

Applications for ORIENTATION ROUNDTABLE
COORDINATOR POSITIONS

Being accepted, due
24 January - On Education, Financial,
Internal Affairs, and Logistics Committees.
Applications can be picked up at the AMS
Office, JDUC.

HELP ORGANIZE
AND COORDINATE
ORIENTATION WEEK 1994

Ring Days

ring days

ROUND 2

January 27 to January 28

In response to the demand of last term's Ring Days, the representative from Jostens® Canada Ltd. will be returning to the Campus Bookstore for these two days to take your order of a Queen's University ring. For over 20 years, Jostens® has been providing Queen's grads with lasting symbols of their time spent at one of the best known institutions in the country. Jostens®, with over 90 years of experience, can provide to you with personalized service and respected warranties. Why choose Jostens? Here is a list:

- Full lifetime warranty
- Free resizing for the lifetime of the ring
- High quality production
- Widest selection of styles including 8 different metal choices
- No jewellery store mark-ups
- Faculty crest customization available
- Delivery to any location
- Extended Service Agreement: an extra 3 years coverage should you ever lose your ring

JOSTENS®
CANADA LTD.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clark Hall
Wednesdays 9 to 5
Saturdays 10 to 4

A Year in Provence

When my friends and I decided to spend a year in the south of France, we thought it would be idyllic. Just imagine walking to school through the flower markets, passing the cafes along the Cours Mirabeau on your way to a 14th century manor which has been transformed into the "Institut d'Etudes Françaises pour Etudiants Etrangers." Last year, three of us decided to spend our third year in the beautiful city of Aix-en-Provence, located in the south of France, as part of the third year abroad program with the Queen's French department. I must admit, however, that it wasn't for the academics that we chose this city, but for its choice location near the Mediterranean. After spending eight months in this city, we discovered both its rich history and beauty.

Aix-en-Provence was discovered by the Romans in the year 23 B.C. under the name Aquae Sextiae. In its glory, it was the ancient capital of Provence. One can feel the history while strolling through the narrow cobblestone streets, past the ancient manors, the glorious cathedrals and the abundant hot-spring fountains. Aix can be described as Europe at its best.

But as we experienced it, Aix was not just history, but also a bustling city of activity. Fresh fruit and vegetables were available every day at the farmers' markets in the town squares, as were fresh flowers. The smell of the bakeries was too tempting to pass, so our daily ritual would be to indulge ourselves with a treat, either a freshly baked baguette or a delicious pastry. The city shut down at lunch-time while everyone headed to the cafes to eat. Beer was a favorite, but the french preferred their regional wines. Both beer and wine were sold at the local grocery stores for next-to-nothing, and one couldn't help but indulge. Wine sold for as little as $2 a bottle!

These were the daily sights during our time in Provence. But before we were able to relax and enjoy them, we had to go through quite a bit of preparation and red tape. The first step for any student interested in spending their third year abroad is to inquire with the languages department in which they are majoring about what programs are available for them. The department will provide the addresses to write away to for information on the various universities and institutes.

We studied at an institute for foreigners, so everybody was in the same boat as us: none of us was a native French-speaker.

We studied at an institute for foreigners, so everybody was in the same boat: none of us was a native French-speaker. This made the transition to a completely new environment easier, since the school setting wasn't as linguistically competitive as a French university would have been. If students want to immerse themselves in an all-French setting, however, French university is an option. They are required to have marks over 75 per cent in all their courses at Queen's, and must also take an exam before being admitted.

The most important preparation students should make before they embark on their year abroad is to make sure of their accommodation and to be prepared for the cost of living in the city or town where they're headed. We were told prior to our trip that finding accommodation would be simple, but we discovered otherwise upon our arrival. The housing office in the Institute was devoid of any system for assigning accommodation, and we faced three to four hour line-ups for any form of assistance. When we finally spoke to the people at the housing office, the only available option was a room in a family's house. This would cost $750 a month, and only included ten meals a week.

I ended up going to many real estate agents trying to find a place of my own. It cost us $800 just to hire an agent to find a place, and we were paying close to $400 a month in rent. In addition to the relatively high rent, the cost of living was also high. Students who are considering going abroad should look into this before making a final decision on their exact destination.

My primary motivation for going to study in France was to learn about the French culture: you really have to live it to know it. I also had hopes that my grammar would improve over the course of my stay. But to be honest, I didn't really want to go away. I knew it would be the right thing to do, but I was enjoying Queen's and didn't want to leave.

Now that I look back on it my marks are a lot better this year after having been there. Learning more about French language and culture has indirectly helped me in my French literature courses, because I feel like I have the background I need to understand the texts. In that sense I would recommend the experience, but the academics were fairly daunting at first. I took 11 courses for a total of approximately 30 hours a week. In contrast to Queen's, though, I spent a lot less time working outside of class. We rarely wrote essays, and studying consisted primarily of memorization and regurgitation. The style was very regimented, but very effective, especially in improving my grammar. The French program at Queen's has very few grammar classes available -- this serves to produce graduates who are still prone to making grammatical errors.

Evaluation while we were in France consisted primarily of tests throughout the year, and a final set of exams at the end of the year which would give us our final diploma. Passing these exams was presented to us as being the be-all and end-all of our academic lives. According to what we were told, if we didn't pass, we would not receive our three Queen's French credits. But our efforts were constantly thwarted by professors who ensured us that we were bound to fail these incredibly difficult exams. These warnings made us unnecessarily anxious about studying and evaluation. In the end, all but one of us passed the finals, and in any event, we were told later that passing was not as essential as we had been told. But if this article gives the impression that our entire year consisted of school, don't be fooled. The city was so beautiful, we'd spend hours just walking around or shopping at the outdoor markets. We also took advantage of our Eurailpasses and travelled around Europe extensively. Student social life wasn't so different from here, except that after a while we stopped going to bars because of all the harassment we experienced. We'd get grabbed all the time, and we eventually got so sick of it that it just wasn't worth it anymore.

A well-dressed man in an expensive car drove by a friend of mine and said, "If you were a whore I would buy you."

Southern women don't stand up for their rights. In Kingston, if women walk down the streets and get cat-calls, we can yell right back. But we were told by our professors to avoid even making eye contact with men in case we 'provoked' a lewd comment, even during the day. It's very hard not to say something when you walk past men in broad daylight and they "meow" at you, but you never know if they'll just turn around and hit you if you say something.

A well-dressed man in an expensive car drove by a friend of mine and said, "If you were a whore I would buy you." And she was completely minding her own business. Our professor told us of a case where two foreign students, women, were camping on the beach a few years ago and they were raped. The case went to court and the perpetrators were acquitted because the judge decided that by camping on the beach the women were "inviting" the assault. So these are the kinds of values under which Southern French society operates, and it was a bit of an adjustment.

In spite of the adjustments which I have described, the year was definitely worth it. The most important caveat would be to prepare very well beforehand. Not only should you make yourself aware of practical concerns such as housing, finances and transportation, but also prepare yourself mentally for the cultural changes and academic challenges you will undoubtedly face.

Kerry Pilgrim is a fourth year French major.

The Institute for foreigners in Aix-en-Provence.

Are you interesting?

If you are, or have heard of anyone who is, write a FEATURE about it! Call Alison at The Journal 545-2800 or drop by any time. We're at 272 Earl street and we like you already!

¡Hola! ¿Que Pasa?

Will Todd is a Queen's student who is spending the year studying in Oviedo, Spain. The following letter is the first in what we at The Journal hope will be a number of letters describing his experiences at University there.

Much to my surprise, I discovered that culture and life in general in Oviedo do not revolve around the University, as they seem to in Kingston.

Dear Queen's,

At first, it took me a while to settle in here. After the first month, I changed residences. The change from living with a constantly absent family to sharing a flat with students and recent graduates was enormous. I felt much more at home, so I started asking more questions. Much to my surprise, I discovered that culture and life in general in Oviedo do not revolve around the University, as they seem to in Kingston. Now that I am settled, I can talk a little about the society that I have been integrated into.

Firstly, as a homosexual, I was prepared for an uphill battle against ingrained prejudices in what I supposed to be an inherently "macho" society. At first I found what I expected. But after my initial bitterness, I then decided that it was futile and ridiculous to make assumptions and generalizations while standing outside of both the gay 'subculture' and Spanish society. So I jumped feet first into both. Assimilation was easy, and it seemed that I had a custom-made niche just waiting for me.

From within gay life, with the help of my friends, I realized that the border between the 'subculture' and society at large is almost non-apparent. Sure, there is a little bit of friction, but not so much as to make things uncomfortable. Someone once told me, in an intimate discussion, that Spaniards talk a good homophobia, but that homosexuality is now a phenomenon that is generally accepted. Gay-bashing went out about 10 years ago, according to one bartender. I was certainly relieved to hear it.

The feminist movement is also making inroads: into the language as well as into society. Women are being recognized as a force to contend with and to accept in the workplace, much to the chagrin of some Spanish men. One of our flatmates only lives here on the occasional long weekend. She teaches Spanish in the Basque Country in France. When she is here, though, one hears many an animated conversation on women's issues in the kitchen! She will discuss the ideological differences between French society and Spanish society, arguing mostly in favour of the more developed feminist movement in France. The poor woman has a hell of a time making any intelligent reference to this basic difference without one of the guys in the house making fun of her, and of her insistence that the feminist movement in Spain is making headway. Luis, the most vocal of our two Spanish male housemates, points to the fact that women, when they go to meetings, do not allow the presence of men. He argues that in this way the women involved will ghettoize themselves, never gaining a foothold in mainstream society in order to increase their status. To this I respond that these meetings provide a safe place for ideas to be born without the interference or interjections of any men present. In my support of the underdog I am really not winning the favour of my two male housemates. Oh well.

In terms of language, Spaniards are starting to recognise words such as abogada (instead of the masculine abogado) for a female lawyer. Instead of Violeta Chamorro being 'la Presidenta' of Nicaragua, she is referred to as 'la Presidenta.' The Spanish press, above all, is doing a wonderful job of using the new feminized words to refer to the many women in positions of power who manage to make it into the news.

Unfortunately, racial prejudices still run deep. Some Spaniards continue to have very strong preconceptions about everything that is non-Spanish. For example, I have heard it expressed that the work one Spaniard does would take twenty Chinese. Another stereotype that prevails is that Turkish people are immigrating en masse, living off social assistance and bringing their relatives in one-by-one. Boiled down, each one of these comments is nothing but a lot of hot air, but it is disturbing enough just to hear them being expressed.

The Spaniards are quick to defend themselves. They don't like the term racism, or at least the Spaniards I have talked to don't. They prefer to look at the problem through the rose-coloured glasses of simple 'economic' racism. They contend that an Afro-American with money who is living and working in Madrid is something completely different from a poor Moroccan who has come to Spain in search of a better life. The Afro-American would not be expected to have any problems, whereas the Moroccan would likely face deportation. I certainly don't envy the position of any immigrant here: prejudice ranges from the looks that the African workers get to the comments about the tastelessness of the facade of a Chinese Restaurant. Here's a little tidbit. Last night I went out for Chinese food. The service was excellent and the place was spotless, but my friend and I witnessed a man ceaselessly polish his glass while the Chinese waitress looked on. I was embarrassed for her, to have to witness this obvious gesture of distrust. I thought to myself, "Gee, buddy, if you don't trust the automatic dishwasher in a Chinese restaurant, why do you bother coming here?" The Spaniards may be quick to defend their ideologies and their racist attitudes, but as long as I'm here I'll be even quicker to doubt the rationale behind them.

As easy as it is to make these observations, it is still possible to find a little charm here in Oviedo. The market is amazing. As I wander around, I seem to tower above the housewives as they go about their daily shopping. I lean over a stall of apples only to hear an old woman beside me whisper, "Oh, I wouldn't buy those apples, dear, they're half rotten...look, these ones here are much better!" At that moment I remember that I haven't smiled all day, so I crack a big one and say, "Gee, thanks!"

Talk to you soon,
Will

CAREER PLANNING & PLACEMENT

SUMMER JOB FAIR

GRANT HALL
JANUARY 25TH
10:30 - 3:00

JOIN US THERE!!!

Participants include:

- ONTARIO PLACE
- EASTER SEALS
- OLD FORT HENRY
- DICKEE DEE
- PROCTER & GAMBLE
- WHITE SHARK WINDOW CLEANING
- MANPOWER SERVICES
- CAMP OUTLOOK
- K'TOWN ECONOMIC COMMISSION
- ACTION WINDOW CLEANING
- A&M ENTERPRISES
- NEW FOREST/OUTLAND
- CAMP AROWHON
- BROLAND ENTERPRISES
- TRILLIUM SUPPORT CENTRE
- STUDENT SPRINKLER SERVICE

Men's hoops smarting

BY ROB THOMPSON

So close, and yet so far.... Such is the story for the men's basketball Gaels as they dropped their fifteenth straight, second of the regular season -- once again in heartbreaking fashion.

This time it was the Ottawa Gee-Gees who bested the Gaels 83-81 in front of a crowd of approximately 400 in the Bartlett Gym.

Queen's got out to a slow start in this affair. The Ottawa shooters were hooping at will from the outside -- frequently breaking the Queen's zone to penetrate for easy scores. Slowly but surely, Ottawa opened a sizeable lead, and it appeared that the Gaels were going to be on the receiving end of a rout.

With a little over six minutes to play in the opening stanza and the home team trailing 40-22, coach Smith put on a full court press. The Gee-Gees collapsed like a Los Angeles freeway and allowed the Gaels to twine the next 15 points in a span of two minutes to pull back into the game. Ottawa was unable to get out of their own half of the court, let alone attempt a shot.

As the seconds ticked away on the first half, the Gaels pulled even, and the teams went to the locker room knotted at 49. Dave Smart was nonpareil in the first half, notching 22 points, on his way to 35 for the game. At times he would score at will, be it from the line or from the floor. It seems all ill-effects from his rib-injury are history.

Smart continued to make his presence felt after the break, dropping a three point bomb ten seconds into the second half. From that point the Gaels began to open up a lead, continuing their dominance that was displayed in the end of the first half. With thirteen minutes to play the Gaels opened up an eight point lead, their largest of the night.

Then, in what is becoming oh-so-painfully familiar to Queen's basketball fans, their lead decayed away. Again, a brief lapse by the Gaels cagers proved costly and by the 10 minute mark, Ottawa reclaimed the lead that they would not relinquish.

The Gaels were not about to give up without a fight, never allowing the visitors more than a four point comfort zone. As the clock wound down, Queen's had many opportunities to equalize.

None better than the one granted by the brain champ of Ottawa, guard Chris Kurlicki.

The score was 83-81 in Ottawa's favour and it was their ball with one tick remaining on the clock. As fans flowed towards the exits, Kurlicki fouled Dave Smart while breaking for the inbound pass, sending him to the line. Smart, however, proved he was human and missed the first free throw, essentially sealing the deal for the Gee-Gees.

Despite the outcome, the game was not without it's bright spots for the Golden Oons. Wyeth Clarkson was again a vital cog for the home team, scoring 12. Mike Ruscitti added ten in a solid outing, and Les Harold added some quality minutes.

The Gaels must be beginning to feel like encyclopedia salesmen -- each time they appear ready to break through the door and end this losing skid, they are sent away empty handed. The road doesn't get any easier for the Gaels, who now stand 0-2. This weekend they travel to Laurentian (3-0) and next week they host the #6 ranked U of T Blues.

Gaels suffer a heartbreaking last second 83-81 defeat against Ottawa. DEREK YARNELL

Men's volleyball now 8 and 1

BY DANDY JOKELOS

Burr, 66 degrees below! A far cry from balmy California, minus the earthquake, that is.

The Golden Gaels men's volleyball team offered up some cold reality to the Laurentian Voyagers this past weekend in their first OUA competition of the second term.

Match one, last Friday night, the Gaels owned the top end of a 3-0 (15-5, 15-6, 15-10) romp over the hometown Vees, who just never put two things together.

The Gaels attack was led by team captain Ron O'Hare, with 12 kills and one stuff block. David Kantor, Mike Spence and John Jickling all offered up high numbers for the Gaels as well.

After the seven hour journey it was good to see the Gaels get right down to business. According to Coach Willis, the Gaels put together a very solid effort with as many as 10 of the 12 team members contributing to the win.

Saturday, in the second half of the "double header" the Gaels again came out in authoritative fashion, taking the first two sets 15-3 and 15-9. The Gaels passing broke down a little in the third game and the Vees seemed to use the opportunity to gain some confidence and some momentum.

Again offering up the opportunity for as many as 11 guys to see time, Coach Willis remained confident, even when the hometown boys evened things up 2-2 (6-15, 16-17). "We have so much depth this season and this was an opportunity to allow younger players to gain some experience. I felt we should have been able to win in four regardless of who was on the floor, but Laurentian played very well in the last half of the match. It was good to see the team respond well to the challenge of rally point and finish in decisive fashion", she said.

So the Gaels sit atop of the East Division with an 8 and 1 record. They are at Dalhousie this weekend and then finish up their regular division schedule with a 3 match weekend in Toronto next week.

The Gaels will host the first round of the playoffs on Saturday Feb 12. Watch next week's Journal for more details.

Women's hoops fall to Ottawa 77-61

BY FRANK DIXON

A strong performance by the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees left the Queen's women's basketball Gaels gasping for breath in Bartlett Gym on Tuesday night. Aided by 50 per cent shooting from the field and a 39-27 rebounding edge, Ottawa (1-1 in league games) defeated Queen's (1-1) 77-61 to avenge an earlier loss in exhibition play.

Four players scored in double figures for the Gee-Gees against the injury-depleted Gaels. Guard Fabienne Perrin led Ottawa scoring with 21 points and added seven rebounds, while guard Melanie Oehling hit for 17 points, grabbed eight boards and dished out five assists. Bench forward Shannon Chinn hooped 11 points.

Ottawa's best player was post Stella Ighorewo, who scored a double-double with 14 points and 13 rebounds, and also added seven assists. But for all Ighorewo's numbers, it was her defense on Gaels' All-Star post Vicki Wilson which really made the difference in the game. Time and again Ighorewo leaped high to intercept low-post lob passes intended for Wilson to finish back-door plays. Wilson had an unusual off-night, struggling to finish good chances in the paint which she would normally bury, but it was Ighorewo's athleticism which forced Wilson to rush her shots. Wilson finished with a double-double of ten-16 points, 11 boards—but shot an uncharacteristic 4-for-19 from the field, 1-for-11 before the break.

The game stayed tight until late in the first half, when Ottawa pulled away to lead 39-29 at half-time. Although the Gaels drew to within 54-50 entering the fourth quarter, that was as close as they would get. At that point, a couple of bad referee's calls on balls going out of bounds hurt the Gaels. The Gee-Gees led by 11 with three minutes left, forced Queen's to foul, and then made most of their free throws to salt away the win. Although the Gaels had four players in double figures, the team shot only 35 per cent, including 0-for-8 from beyond the three-point arc. The Gaels' inability to develop their outside shooting threat was caused by close Ottawa defense on Queen's three-point shooter Tanya McIntyre.

Point guard Jaylene Morrison played superbly for Queen's with 12 points and seven assists, scoring most of her points on darting, dribble drives knifing through the paint. Forward Jenny Loughton netted 14 points, forward Stephanie Jamieson scored 11 points and pulled down 5 rebounds, and McIntyre hit eight points, grabbed six rebounds, handed out four assists and blocked three shots. The Gaels did not get any scoring from their bench during the game, and this hurt them, since the team is already missing two of their six most experienced players.

It doesn't get any easier for Queen's, for they travel to Sudbury to face perennial powers in the final end. The 7-4 victory capped off a very successful weekend for the women.

The CFL's sinking ship

BY JASON D BENNETT

Welcome to Shreveport, Louisiana, home of the CFL's newest football experiment, the Shreveport Shrews! Fans in this southern American city of 205,000 could be hearing these words as early as next season should CFL commissioner Larry Smith have his way. Meanwhile the Toronto Argonauts, supposedly the flagship team of the CFL, has failed to pay several key players and is in jeopardy of being kicked out of Skydome for withholding rent. Pathetically, the CFL has become an overburdened sinking ship which is foolishly taking on even more cargo before repairing its existing holes.

Expansion into the American football market is espoused to be the Canadian league's last saving grace. Cities like Shreveport, Orlando, Baltimore, and Las Vegas are in the hunt to follow the Sacramento Goldminers as American strongholds of the Canadian game; should these new organizations follow the Goldminer's lead, they will experience reasonable success.

Unfortunately, and at the peril of the CFL, these cities are primarily interested in winning franchises in the more superior, and therefore more profitable, NFL. Despite objections to this charge, American CFL organizations are indeed using the northern league as a tool to achieve a greater end.

Perhaps this should come as no surprise: the NFL is the world's preeminent football league, with faster, fitter, stronger and more skilled players, superior organizational resources, mastermind coaches, and popular support that is rarely surpassed in any sport. Although a Saskatchewan-Ottawa match-up can be entertaining, most fans of the game would rather see Dallas and San Francisco play two superior teams which have even gone so far as to have different names.

Consumers demand the highest quality whether at the supermarket or at the stadium. The CFL remains a secondary league both because it cannot financially attract the top athletes/administrators and because it artificially keeps itself inferior through aggressive marketing or American expansion can correct these fundamental flaws.

And yet the protean CFL presses onward in its transient state. How has the CFL kept afloat despite its western Canadian and in a sort of fervent quasi-patriotism from Nationalists and an older generation of fans who were around when the CFL was a top-quality league.

The first reason has much to do with television and exposure to American broadcasting of NFL games. Regina and Calgary are not geographically positioned in such a way as to be exposed to major NFL markets in the way that Windsor, Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston and Montreal are. As such, the CFL is the king of the west.

The second reason is typified by my uncle who calls me "anti-Canadian" and unpatriotic for preferring the NFL to the CFL. This sort of criticism is ridiculous because Americans and Canadians play in both leagues, not to mention that football is a game, not a contest between nations.

The NFL is simply better football—a personal judgement that has nothing to do with my citizenship. The fate of the CFL is at best uncertain. The league will continue in its frantic search for supporters, especially American ones, to the detriment of the integrity and longevity of the Canadian version. In the end only the best game will succeed, and it will not be the Canadian one.

Curling Gaels win end to end

BY BRIAN DOYLE MURRAY

This past weekend the Queen's Golden Gaels curling season got off to a rocking start with the East Sectionals being played on their doorstep at the Royal Kingston Curling Club. Fine efforts were put in by both teams.

The women's team, consisting of Cathy Brewer, Sally Karam, Loti Hetherington, Bethany Barlow and Michelle Pellegrin, were the cream of the crop as they compiled a perfect 4-0 record in the five team round robin. The team has already had an excellent start to the season by winning the local Cataract Invitational Bouspiel and doing well in the Ontario Women's Playdowns.

The ladies started the weekend off with a fairly easy game against Trent University. The final score, in a game that failed to go the distance, was 12-3. From there, the team moved on to play McMaster. The Marauders proved to be a tougher opponent than Trent and took the game right down to the last stone before the Gaels pulled out a narrow 7-6 victory.

Sunday morning brought forth a new team from Nipissing in a very early 8:00 a.m. game. At the end of a game that went back and forth, the Nipissing skip was left with a difficult shot to tie the game with the last stone of the tenth end. She was unable to make the shot and Queen's left the ice with a 10-7 victory.

The final game of the weekend was against the University of Toronto. A win would give the Gaels an undefeated weekend. After eight ends, Queen's held a narrow one-point lead. A steal of a single point in the ninth end gave the team the lead they needed to finish the Varsity Blues off in the final end. The 7-4 victory capped off a very successful weekend for the women.

Steve Small skipped the men's team of Dave Allan, Jeff Whelan, Jason Curtis and Jason Adams to a record of 3-1 and a tie for top spot with cross-town rivals RMC. The men have not had as much time as the women to play as a unit due to outside commitments.

Nevertheless, the men performed well on the weekend and look poised to repeat as Ontario Champions.

Trent University once again provided the first victims for the Gaels. In another game that failed to go the distance, Queen's defeated Trent by a score of 8-0. From there it was on to a game against the Marauders of McMaster. Queen's fell behind early in this game.

As the match progressed, the guys started the uphill climb to get back in the game and managed to get it within one point after eight ends. In the ninth end, the team had to start taking some chances and the gamble did not pay off.

They got burned for a big six points which signalled the end of the game.

Sunday provided the Gaels a chance to improve on their 1-1 record from the previous day. Against RMC the guys got off to a quick start and looked to have everything in control with a 6-1 lead. Unfortunately they were unable to close the door on RMC and the game was forced into an extra end. The Gaels kept it simple

The rats are the first to leave

BY JUSTIN MCKELLAR

Everybody loves to slag the CFL these days. Why? It's an easy target, and everybody has to slag something. Mulroney's gone, the Leafs are good again, Ralph Benjamin got canned, so in the absence of the old goats the mudslingers need new fodder.

The CFL has become some kind of psychological automatic-response topic. When I say "black" you say "white", when I say "fat" you say "limbaugh", when I say "CFL" you say "sucks". My point is that the CFL is the victim of thoughtless, knee-jerk criticism. Granted, the CFL doesn't have the same talent pool as the NFL. It doesn't have any Montanas or Elways. It has a few Smiths, but none called Bruce or Emmitt. The calibre of the players is not as high in the CFL, but this alone isn't much of a reason to bury the league in the trash-heap beneath back issues of INQ. The calibre of talent and play in NCAA football falls short of that in the NFL. Sure, there's always a handful of guys that make the transition from college to the NFL, some too will go on to the CFL, but they are the exception to the rule. For most of these guys, college ball is the pinnacle of their athletic careers. Yet the college game is just as big as the NFL. The same goes for NCAA basketball. Talentwise, it's inferior to the NBA, but it thrives nonetheless. Writing off the CFL just because of thinner talent doesn't wash.

But if it's not the talent, it's the rules. Yes, if you haven't been saying it, you've heard it: something to the effect that the rules "suck", it's not "real" football, you can't do anything with three downs, the Canadian game "sucks"... Yeah, the game is different, so what? Most of the people come across who slag the rules of the Canadian game just don't give it a chance. The truth of it is, it's still football, and they don't punt every third down. Because the field is bigger, the game favours quickness and speed. There is always the chance of a big play because there's always some open ground somewhere. Compare this to the NFL, where the top teams are those with a running back who can consistently run it up the middle three yards per carry. The players might be bigger and faster, but they just don't get the same opportunity to show off their talents. A hard core Dallas fan I know claims that if you're a real fan you can appreciate the relentless short runs because there's a good block for every one of them. Hey, I don't mind a good block once in a while, but I'd much rather see someone break into the open field and go fifteen yards. The NFL is suffering for this, especially when the play comes inside the twenty where there simply is not enough room for the offence to operate. So what do you get? All those exciting field goals. And some great blocks, too.

Another excitement-killer is the NFL's fair catch rule. The fair catch is about as exciting as watching your dad shag fly balls. This basically turns an important part of the game into a non-play. In the CFL you've got to return the ball.

So why does the CFL get such a bum rap? It's not just the talent or the rules. In the late '70s, the CFL was a healthy league. The games sold out, support was strong, and the future of the league looked rosy. Some NFL players considered jumping ship to head north. Gradually the appeal wore off. What other explanation can you give but that we've succumbed to the forces from south of the border, that we bought every line they fed us. It's a sad take on the Canadian identity. The home team advantage amounts to jack in the CFL because nobody wants it anymore.

Sports notables

Hockey: Queen's men's hockey is tied for last place in the mid east division with RMC. If Queen's can manage to tie one game or win one in the remainder of the season, they will make the playoffs — RMC has no chance.

Volleyball: Queen's men's v-ball is atop the east division with 16 points and is currently ranked tenth in the nation. David "killer" Kantor is second in scoring leaders in the east division with 5.0 ppg. Ron O'Hare and Mike Spence are sixth and seventh.

The women's team is in fourth place with four points in the east division.

Queen's tears up the track at York University Classic

Team still wins amid turmoil

BY BRYAN LAMBERT

Amidst a flourish of popular press the Queen's University Track & Field Team returned from the York University Track and Field Classic this past weekend with five more athletes qualified for the Canadian Championships in Edmonton (March 10 and 11).

Defending CIAU Champion Lesley Morrison won gold in the woman's high jump with a leap of 1.70m, easily topping the 1.67m standard required for a return trip to the C.I.'s. The women's 4x200m relay team of Emily Agard, Amanda Pardy, Leslie Bruce and Mary Pullen crushed the competition to win by over 3 seconds and bring the baton across the finish line fast enough to qualify for C.I.'s.

Just missing CIAU standard was veteran Derek Hackshaw in the men's 600m with a time of 1:21.8. An amazing final 200m surge by Derek guaranteed him the victory in a race where only 4/10ths of a second separated the first and fourth place finishers.

Second year athlete Brian Derby is still in search of that elusive long jump standard of 6.85m. Last year Derby missed out on qualifying for CIAU's by 2cm, twice. This year he claimed gold in the long jump with a jump of 6.82m and missed the standard by only 3 cm. With 7.00m jumps this past summer it will only be a matter of time before Brian finds himself on that plane to Edmonton.

Bronze medals were earned by the men's 4x200m relay team of Keith Joiner, Brian Derby, Dan Coderre and Remko Noteboom. The team is still in search of CIAU standard this season. Rookie phenom Pete Reppe and Veteran Mary Pullen were both third in the 300m, and the men's 4x400m relay team of Coderre, Jeff Kalb-

TRACK CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

Queen's curlers aren't simply throwing rocks

BOHDAN YAKINECZKO

A.M.S. Authors Series.
PRESENTS:
 Kingston Author Joan
 Finnigan Mackenzie

Reading from her work
Wed. Jan. 26, 7:30 p.m.

Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room
 Ban Righ Hall

Wannabee a GAEL?!!

MANDATORY Gael Meeting
 Monday, January 24th
 6:00pm
 Grant Hall

Applications will ONLY be given at this time.

ELECTROLYSIS
 Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
 Experienced Electrologists
 Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
 Kingston Since 1959
 Free Consultation Call
 542-5595

HORSE DRAWN SLEIGH, HAY AND CARRIAGE RIDES
Bonfire
 Stop at General Wolfe
 Cabin on request
 385-2923

Write or
 For The ARTS Fest anthology. Deadline for Submissions is Friday Feb 21 at the Core.

SPORTS

Women gymnasts off to flying start
Floor event won by Riddell with a 9.0 score

BY JANE HAMILTON

Last Saturday saw the beginning of another promising season for the Queen's Gymnastics Team. The first provincial qualifying competition was held at McMaster University, and, despite a reduction in numbers, this year's five-woman squad bounced, swung, and tumbled to an extremely close second-overall team placing. Queen's had three gymnasts place in the top six, showing that they will be a force to be reckoned with this season.

The girls got off to a very positive start on the uneven bars. Natalie Mamen, successfully executing two free-hip handstands, took third in the event. Clara Auyeung performed two handstand giants on the high bar and tied Queen's teammate Deb Singer for fifth place on the apparatus. The girls felt that the "proper technique for chalking the bars" helped them get a good grip completely captivated the whole gymnasium with a routine that was truly beautiful. She scored an 8.65 and looks to improve on that by adding some serious tumbling lines at future competitions.

The final event was the vault, where Riddell placed second with a handspring full and Mamen placed fourth with her half-turn handspring full. All the girls had great vaults, sticking their landings and impressing their coaches.

Coaches Pete Lausch and Neera Garga were very pleased with the results of the meet. "It's been a while since we've had such presence," said Garga with a smile, "and it's good to see we're back on track." Coming off a successful bronze medal win at last year's nationals, this year's team looks poised to take on all other Canadian teams for top spots. Watch for them to come through with some great results! The next qualifying meet is here at Queen's on January 29th.

Women's hockey team scores big in tourney

BY WENDY ELEY

This weekend the Women's Ice Hockey team led the Canadian side against the Americans in the second annual Cross Border Tournament hosted by Queen's University. After a slow start in the first half of the season, Queen's posted a perfect 3-0 record in the weekend action.

The Gaels brought the fans to their feet in Friday night's game against the University of Windsor. The team managed to maintain intensity despite the slow pace and prevailed 5-1. Game MVP Stacey Harvey led the team's offense with a hat-trick and assist. Sarah Hurst and rookie Katie Clapp added singles, with assists recorded by Tanya Casey, Shannon Hewert and Julie Walker. Catherine Drimmel was solid in net, allowing only one goal through the pipes on 17 shots.

The Gaels returned Saturday to the fast-paced competition they thrive on and defeated the Rochester Institute of Technology 4-1. RIT fought hard, but could only place one of 28 shots behind veteran goalie Jammy Eger. After a scoreless first period, Sarah Hurst and her new 'Chimo' popped one past Rochester goaltender Lisa Sturm at 14:44 of the second. Linemates Casey and Hewert were in on the action. Five minutes later, Lisa Scott made the move of the game to slip past the RIT defence and stun their goalie a second time. Queen's defence decided to get in on the scoring action late in the third with goals coming from Harvey and Simone Wilson. Assists came from Jill Herbert, Harvey, Hurst, Casey (2) and Hewert (2). Lisa Scott was named game MVP for her quick moves and game-winning goal.

Lawrence University battled end to end for three solid periods. Scott helped open the scoring, setting up Tanya Casey who blasted the puck by the glove of goaltender Lisa Cook. Casey, known for creating scoring opportunities, said it was time she put one in the net.

St. Lawrence evened the score at one mid-way through the second period, but it didn't take long for Simone Wilson to put the Gaels ahead once again. Casey and Hurst set up the go-ahead goal at 9:30 of the second. St. Lawrence later tied it at two apiece, but only fired up the Queen's side even more. Wendy Eley fired a backhand from the blue line to Katie Clapp in front of the net. Clapp managed to fight off the defenders and unwind a shot that bulged the twine behind the St. Lawrence netminder and put the Gaels in front for good. Final score: Queen's 3, St. Lawrence 2. Clapp was awarded game MVP for her game-winning goal.

Athletes of the week

This week, both athletes are from the track team. Despite all the recent difficulties involved with the coaching staff, the team continues to perform meet after meet.

The female athlete is Lesley Morrison. She won the high jump at York and qualified to defend her CIAU Championship title. She narrowly missed her personal best of 1.75m in the high jump but attained personal bests in women's shot put and on the 4x200m relay.

The male athlete is Brian Derby. His accomplishments thus far are undefeated status at UWQ and Dartmouth meets, most recently won the York meet with a 6.82m jump (1cm off personal best and 3cm off CIAU standard). Brian also ran on the 4x200m bronze medal relay team. Finally, he ran the 300m in 37.9 secs., a fraction off his personal best time of 37.8 secs.

Lesley Morrison

Brian Derby

SPORTS

Down, but not out

BY PRENTIS CLAIRMONT

After winning their first two on the road, the hockey Gaels haven't triumphed since. Their losing streak reached an imposing 14 games this weekend, as Queen's fell to Waterloo by a score of 5-2 and dropped another close one to Laurier by a 3-2 margin.

In fact, the second match was so close that the outcome was decided by a questionable call by the referee with 9 seconds remaining. Although they couldn't snap the streak, the Gaels played tough, physical hockey against two very talented opponents.

Saturday's game against Waterloo was a story of missed opportunities. Queen's missed two break-away chances early on. Shots on goal were even throughout the game, but Queen's snipers couldn't beat the Warriors' goaltender. Some weak goals allowed Waterloo to pull ahead, and the Gaels couldn't catch up.

Speedy winger Brian Mueggler netted a power play goal in response for Queen's. Defenceman Shannon Storr also scored in a losing cause.

The next day, Queen's outplayed and outhit Laurier, but lost 3-2 on a goal disallowed by the referee. Forward Bill Budgell taught the Goldenhawks how to hit, as his aggressive style created several scoring chances. Queen's special teams played extremely well this weekend. Derek Morin scored on a power-play while Queen's killed off a five minute major against sixth-ranked Laurier. In fact, defenceman Mike Longo netted a short-handed goal which brought the Gaels within one. With about a minute to play Queen's pulled its goalie and rushed the Laurier net. They scored the tying goal at 19:51 but the referee felt that the net had been off its moorings.

Head Coach John Phelan was impressed by his team's performance this weekend. "Laurier has only lost once all year, and we played well enough to win," he said. "We played our style: tough, disciplined hockey."

Phelan believes that victories will start once the team raises its intensity level and drives to the net more often.

The Golden Gaels need to raise their intensity level a couple of notches this weekend. The Mustangs are coming to town. Queen's hosts Western this Saturday evening at 7:30. Join the red rivalry.

Sunday at 2:00 it's Queen's vs Windsor in Part II of a double-header. Both games are at Jock Harty and are FREE with Student ID.

Great hockey, great prizes. It's warm, it's cheap, and it's fun. Be there!

Water polo Gaels rusty

BY WALLY POLOUGH

The women's water polo team travelled to Hamilton this past weekend for their first tournament in over a month. The layoff proved costly as the Gaels dropped three of the four games in good ol' Steel Town.

Game one saw Queens face the substantial U of T Blues. The early part of the game was close, but four major penalties late in the first and early in the second quarters gave the Blues four goals on their four power plays. Jo Hindle and Machine McCrea replied for the good guys, but it wasn't enough. Mental errors, a missed penalty shot, and the inability of Queen's to score on all three of their man-up advantages allowed U of T to sail on to a 6-2 win.

The second game pitted the Gaels, wearing their unfamiliar and none too favoured white caps, against the quickly improving Carleton Ravens. Sally Reid, Leanne can't do no Wong, and McCrea traded goals with the Ravens to keep the score tied at 3-3 when half-time arrived. The game see-sawed back and forth in the second half with Reid slaming in two more goals, but the Gaels fell behind and dropped the game 7-5 to Carleton. Once again, missed man-advantages were key, with Queens failing to convert three more power plays.

After an evening of fine cuisine, lively chatter, and lots of crayolas, the Gaels arose early Sunday to play their long time rival McMaster. Though the score does not reflect it, this was probably Queen's best game of the tournament. The wild and wonderful Jen McCrea scored two early on to keep the Gaels in the game. Then, with the score 3-2 for Mac, Julia Wood converted a nice cross pool pass on an extra man to tie the score. However, that would be it for Queen's as McMaster added three more goals and the Gaels squandered three more advantages to end up on the wrong end of a 6-3 score.

The final game of the weekend placed Queen's opposite the Brock Badgers in the pool. After completely blowing a huge amount of scoring opportunities, the Gaels found themselves behind 1-0. Shelsler Reed and Sheena Maja Hooski, with just one second left on the clock, scored to pull Queen's ahead at the end of the first quarter. This finally got the team in gear and the Gaels never looked back. The unleashed Majewski with four, Reid with a huge six, Wood with three, and scoring her first ever goals as a gael, Leggo Oaks tallied three more. Add this all up and it equals a 16-2 win for Queens to finish off the weekend.

Despite dropping three games, the weekend was an overall success and the coaching staff was pleased with the team's performance. As rookie coach Jim Tar noted, "We've only been together for a week. Don't count us out yet!" The Gaels have only two weeks left to iron out those wrinkles and become a force at finals, but if Zsa Zsa can do it so can the team! Head Coach Eric Duffey believes that once everyone answers their wake up call then Queen's will be a contender... Right Kick Out?

Finals will be held in St. Catharines at the Badgers' lair from Jan 28th to the 30th. If you're going to be around OR if its about time for a road trip to Niagara Falls, we'll see you there!

Study the NHL and NFL at THE SPORTS THE SPORTS BAR

"KINGSTON'S ORIGINAL SPORTS BAR"
 125 BROCK STREET - 546-0429

SAT. JAN 22	NHL ALL STAR GAME
SUN. JAN 23	12:30 AFC Championship 4:00 NFC Championship
MON. JAN 24	7:30 Canadiens vs. Panthers 7:30 Bruins vs. Whalers 10:30 Blues vs. Ducks
TUES. JAN 25	7:30 Hawks vs. Wings 10:30 Jets vs. Kings
WED. JAN 26	7:30 Canadiens vs. Whalers 7:30 Islanders vs. Leafs 10:30 Jets vs. Ducks
THURS. JAN 27	7:30 Nordiques vs. Penguins 8:30 Wings vs. Hawks 10:30 Rangers vs. Kings
SAT. JAN 29	1:00 Sabres vs. Canadiens 8:00 Penguins vs. Leafs 10:30 Ducks vs. Kings
SUNDAY JAN 30	SUPERBOWL XXVIII Live From Atlanta

Official SuperBowl Prizes SE HERE!

SPRING BREAK
 PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA

Beach Bonfire Parties
 The Beach Bar/Nobleyhall
 Salsabars, Jetsets & Gasasalls
 Karaoke Beach Party
 Area Themed Groups

RESERVATIONS
 1-800-488-8828

FROM $104 PER WEEK
 PER PERSON
 4 PERSON OCCUPANCY

Pinochios
Chicken & Ribs

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entrée and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price
 to all students.
 Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
 Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street
 (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
 11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

Hey Queen's!

CAN OVER 3 000 STUDENTS BE WRONG?

- 4 MONTH SPECIAL -
 JANUARY - MAY $129.00

SUPERIOR NAUTILUS

80 Princess Street • 544-6222
 AEROBICS • NAUTILUS • FREEWEIGHTS • CARDIO

The Phys. Ed. Centre: where all the intramural action takes place

BY ROB CAMP

Well the wind was whistlin' and the snow was blowin' and the snowploughs are burying my car. Yep, it's the middle of yet another mild Kingston winter so the best thing to do to avoid the seasonal blahs is trek through the bitter cold and participate in INTRAMURAL SPORTS!

The season is now comfortably underway with a wide variety of sports already happening and best of all they are all indoors. Starting today is the ever popular BEWIC SPORTS DAY and continuing to run through the weekend.

On Monday a variety of sports will continue to occur on the ice and in the gyms. Just come check the schedules on the way to the changerooms to find out when you play. Coming up next weekend is the BEWS Volleyball Tour-namment on Saturday January 29th. Also coming up is the BEWS Interfac Hockey Tournament which has a manager's meeting on Wednesday January 26th at 6pm in room 206 of PEC. Please bring a $40 bond.

Finally I would like to address a comment I made from last term about the Meds unit. The broken leg quote was made in jest as part of the humour aspect of the article. I would not actually slag a unit that was doing poorly (hence all that avoidance of Arts'94). In fact Meds is having a highly competitive season and I'm sorry for any inconvenience this might have caused. For future reference there are aspects of sarcasm, irony and (hopefully) humour somewhere in these articles and they are meant to be taken lightly.

[Eds. note: Good work Rob, give them a taste of their own medicine]

The ARROGANT WORMS

Time: 7:30
 Ticket Price: $12
 Location: Grand Theatre
 Date: Feb. 16, 1994
 Tickets Available: Performing Arts Office; Grand Theatre. For info 546-5997

Chicken Breast, Cow Ribs, Mool

Check out the REAL thing at JJ's
 5 oz Grilled Chicken Breast or
 6 oz Rib - Steak, served with a MOUNTAIN of fries.

Only... $4.95

* Catch the Leafs at JJ's *

409 Johnson Street at University Tele # 547-3771

JJ'S
 Bistro Bar
 We inspire eating!

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

FRI 21 DAYS OF YOU

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

SAT 22 HHEAD

THURS 27 FREEWAY BAND

Toucan

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICKS) TEL: 544-1966

Sports trivia

BY TOBER MORAY

Q. 1. Which team holds the all-time Grey Cup records for winning margin and points scored?
 A: Queen's University in 1923 defeated Regina 54-0 in the Grey Cup, claiming both records.

Q. 2. Which college football bowl game has the largest payout?
 A: The Rose Bowl pays each team $6.5 million (U.S.).

Q. 3. Which are the only three NCAA Div. I-A football teams to post 13-0 records in a season?
 A: Nebraska in 1971, Brigham Young in 1984, and Alabama in 1992.

Q. 4. Who has the highest career scoring average in NCAA basketball?
 A: Pete Maravich of LSU with 44.2 ppg from 1967-70.

Q. 5. Which NFL team has never won a playoff game?
 A: New Orleans Saints.

Q. 6. Which NHL team has the highest all-time playoff winning percentage?
 A: Edmonton Oilers with .667 (120 wins, 60 losses). They probably won't get a chance to improve it this year.

Q. 7. Which two hockey teams played the longest overtime game, who scored, and how long did the game go?
 A: On March 24, 1936, Mud Bruneteau scored for Detroit Red Wings to beat Montreal Maroons 1-0 after 116:30 of OT (nearly six full overtime periods).

Q. 8. Which is the only nation to qualify for all 15 soccer World Cups?
 A: Brazil.

Track team stars combine for 40 personal bests

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

fleisch, Steve Dewan and Bryan Lambert also earned bronze.

Notable performances were turned in by Steve Dewan with an impressive 1:25.5 personal best in the men's 600m, Laura Hodgson's 200m (27.60) and 400m (60.78) relay split times, and Emily Agard who ran a solid 200m leg (28.38) to help the women's 4x200m relay team achieve CIAU standard.

Kevin Robertson earned male rookie of the meet honours with a solid 25.25 200m relay split and an equally impressive 9.59 60m hurdle time which ranks him number eight on the Queen's All Time Top 10 List. Amanda Parady won female rookie of the meet for solid 60m (8.27), 4x200m (26.13) and 300m (44.2) times. Veterans Lesley Morrison and Brian Derby captured athlete of the meet honours for their impressive high and long jumping efforts.

The team had an impressive meet producing five CIAU qualifiers, four golds and four bronze medals and showed that even more standards will fall as the team begins to prepare for the upcoming OUA/AOWIAA Championships at Windsor.

Twenty-four athletes combined for 40 personal bests at York making the meet a successful one for both veterans and rookies who attended. The question now is not if Queen's will make it's presence felt at C.I.'s but how strongly and how much hardware we will bring home. The team travels to the Windsor Can-Am Classic this weekend to compete with some of the best athletes that Canadian and American schools have to offer.

Hockey Pool Results

1	Chetowen	176	16	Peat Moss	126
2	Patieuse	161	17	Boz's Boys	124
3	Fogie	160	18	Fargie	123
4	Farrar	159	19	Ju-Lea	123
5	Grizzly	159	20	Rat Girl	123
6	190Barry	158	21	Yoshiki	123
7	Jeffer	155	22	Go Nads!	119
8	W.A.F.C.	152	23	Raplor	117
9	Habchick	149	24	Mr. Blonde	116
10	Number 1	147	25	Dynom	112
11	Yo Yo Ma	137	26	Chicker	111
12	Aliens	136	27	Spiff II	102
13	Good Luck	134	28	No Jane	96.0
14	Leallels	131	29	Huss	93.0
15	Senile	131	30	Scout B	89.0

1995-1996 ROTARY Foundation Scholarships

PURPOSE:
 The Rotary Foundation invites you to apply for a scholarship for one year of study abroad, the purpose of which is the furthering of international understanding and friendly relations among people of different countries.

THE FIVE SCHOLARSHIPS ARE:
 Graduate, Undergraduate, Vocational, Teacher of the Handicapped and Journalism.

THE AMOUNT OF SCHOLARSHIPS:
 This award is intended to help cover tuition, fees, room and board, and miscellaneous expenses up to 20,000 or its equivalent. In addition, round-trip airfare is provided.

QUALIFICATIONS:
 Applicants whose native tongue is other than that of the proposed institution must submit evidence of ability to read, write and speak the host language and should fulfill the following eligibility requirements.

	Graduate Scholarship	Undergraduate Scholarship	Vocational Scholarship	Teacher of the Handicapped Scholarship	Journalism Scholarship
Educational Requirements	Bachelors Degree or equivalent	Two Years University Work	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent	Secondary School Graduate or equivalent
Work Experience	None Required	None Required	At least two years	At least two years as a Professional Handicapped	At least two years as a Professional Journalist
Marital Status	May be married	May not be married	May be married	May be married	May be married
Age	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older	18 or older

HOW TO APPLY: Applications must be made through a Rotary Club in the area of the applicant's legal or permanent residence or place of employment. Applications must be received by the sponsoring club no later than February 28, 1994.

FOR APPLICATIONS AND ADDITIONAL INFORMATION CONTACT:

Kingston Rotary Club	Ernie Sparks	549-6560
Kingston Frontenac Rotary Club	Fred Richmond	531-6310
Cataract/Kingston Rotary Club	Rolfe Colpitts	384-1866

1994 A.M.S. Executive Elections Timetable

Nomination Period for A.M.S. Executive Teams
 January 10 to January 21
 Six hundred students must nominate each team of candidates ... please support the democratic process by nominating someone.

Campaign Period for A.M.S. Executive Teams
 January 25 to February 7
 Read the campaign coverage, listen to the speeches, participate in the all candidates meetings ... and then make an informed choice.

Polling Dates
 February 8 and February 9
 Support student self government with your vote ... remember that the people you elect will be representing your interests to the administration, as well as managing a multi-million dollar corporation for you, the shareholders... help choose the best people for the job.

For more information please contact the Internal Affairs Commission of the A.M.S. at 545-2725, ext. 4815 (545-6000 ext. 4815 outside of office hours) ... or visit us in room 040 of the JDUC.

ATTENTION ARTSCI '94S

Remember the FORMAL?

"Elegance by Twilight" is our theme!!

STAY TUNED ALL OVER CAMPUS FOR:

- ★ Construction Hours
- ★ Bake Sales, Raffles, etc

Any questions? You can reach the committee at the CORE.

Tuesday
 Mask Theatre Rock
 (Ten Different Impersonators)

Wednesday
 Bucking Mad Wednesdays

Thursday
 Jug-o-Rama Night!

Friday / Saturday
 Lite Nite 'til 10 /
 Dance 'til 3:00 am

The COCAMO

178 Ontario Street 544-6885

ASUS JACKETS

January Jacket Orders are Here!

Sizing and Orders will take place on:
 Tuesday Jan. 25
 &
 Wednesday Jan. 26
 6-9 pm
 Upper Ceilidh of the JDUC

Please Bring:
 - a sweater or sweatshirt
 - a deposit of $160 in CASH, CERTIFIED CHEQUE or MONEY ORDER

This is the LAST CHANCE to order THIS YEAR!
 If you still have not picked up your jacket from a previous order, or you want more info, please call ASUS at 545-6278.

ASUS JACKETS

ENTERTAINMENT

The Doughboys lack yeast

DOUGHBOYS
ALFIE'S
BY STEVE CAIN

Not much to say about the concert. Overloaded on the review of the album earlier this year.

Drip. Drip. Drip. Drip-drip. Hair.

The Doughboys' concert last Wednesday was a veritable who's who of the Queen's and Kingston music and cultural scene. Harry Hollywood and Shawn Seamonster were on site peddling their latest tape Great Looking Hair and advertising their upcoming gig at The Foucan.

Also present were members of the Gaudi Birds, Yellowbelly and the Roman Gods. Of the aforementioned groups only Skid of the Gaudi Birds felt it necessary to pawn off his wares at the show. Paul O'Brien, back from a European excursion, showed significant interest in the idea that he might rejoin the Roman Gods this spring and "didn't rule out the possibility of a tour."

F and K of Yellowbelly were reportedly pleased with the turnout and sound quality of their concert simulcast through CFRC, although the openers, The Inbreds, were not at the concert and therefore unavailable for comment.

As usual V—— flashed her new shock of recently peroxidized hair while K—— in her characteristic manner danced by herself and with her semi-dreadlocked hair. That weird guy from residence was also there giving patrons the creeps while Joey "Goosey" deVillia wore that goofy sock-thing on his head. And I can't forget that tall lanky guy, who walked around wearing a Sonic Youth t-shirt.

Jane Mundell was observed busy about, making sure that everything ran smoothly while another AMS toady, Eric Jabal complained about having to wait in line to get into the show.

Three Queen's Journal Entertainment Editors slunked into Alfie's that night as well. D.T.U. sported his usual U.C.C. baseball cap while S.C. sat by himself, thinking he was above it all. Present editor R.F. was seen in heated discussion with his restaurant critic, while the said critic's brother—a confessed Doughboy fan—was conspicuously absent from the show.

D.J. Rave made his scheduled appearance, but left early. Interestingly enough, a certain bearded member of the Alfie's waitstaff served a poseur that hangs out at a downtown cafe. We doesn't want to mention any names, but the cafe that allows this kind of patron in has the initials "C.L."

The Asexuals came on at 10:00 to dazzle the audience in a highly energetic set consisting of material mainly derived from Exile From Flootown. "Jonestown" was the highlight of their performance.

MUTED. To the left left MUTED. Annoying purple light. MUTED MUTED MUTED. To the left of me an annoying purple light that flashed MUTED. MUTE...

"I thought the Doughboys and Asexuals hated each other."

"Hey if you were where the Asexuals were now, and the Doughboys called you up to tour with them you'd forget you're petty scabbles with them as well."

Doughboy's Set List: "Shine," "Everybit of Nothing," "Deep End," "Tearin' Away," "Countdown," "Neighbourhood Villain," "Treehouse," "Fallin'

A: It's sort of a heavy, bumbling sort of fellow. You should look it up in the dictionary.

B: I've never heard it before. How do you spell it?
A: L-O-U-T.
B: Oh.

Commentary: I took all four of the Doughboys' albums and put them on my CD player and pressed "Shuffle."

How much can you say about a guitar solo?

I wanna die just like jfk i wanna die just like all apologies for one hundred per cent of your love and you're far out and gone with mud in every ear so wish them all dead.

No complaints. Sound was your first album?

John: That is correct.
Michelle: It seems that in recent years you've distanced yourself from him, is that because he's a freak?
John: He's my freaky friend. See you.

Michelle: No, answer my question—is he as much of a freak as the media portrays him to be?
John: He's my freaky-friendy sort a zabadeedoe kinda guy. Bye.

On the pro: They played "Shine" first to get rid of the wankers.

On the con: They wave-rode and pretended to be interested in meeting with the fans after the show.

"I'm not like you—easily amused..."

Dull, dark... is how I feel... to shine would be unreal... but it's really no big deal.

The Interview

Perhaps the most anticipated show since the Wonderstaff, Christian deBriijn and Rob Furse of The Journal had a chance to talk with John Kastner, lead singer, guitarist and songwriter of The Doughboys before the show. Rumours have it that Kastner can be a difficult interview, but he proved to be personable and relatively forthcoming.

Queen's Journal: How would you respond to critics that claim you sold out by signing a major label deal?

John Kastner: I don't think anyone has really said that to us, all the best sounding bands in the world are all on major labels. There's good major labels and there's bad ones, and there's good independent labels and there are bad ones. I don't think it's the size of your label in the '90's, it's how well your label does for you. If people are judging you by the size of your label they should pack it in now.

QJ: Was it important to get access to both the U.S. and Canadian markets with the five album co-venture deal with AM?

JK: The thing is we didn't want to sign a Canadian deal, I mean what's the point? The main thing with us is that we signed a deal to get our records all over the world. I mean, we tour all over the world; we may spend a month in Canada, then three months in Europe and three months in the States. It's really important our records are everywhere, it's just as important to have our records in Germany, England or America as it is in Canada.

QJ: What's your feeling on Canadian bands trying to crack the U.S. market?

JK: I think that most Canadian bands are just big wimps. I don't want to start naming names.

QJ: How about Rush?

JK: I think Rush are awesome, I'm just talking more about the bands that tour constantly and draw good crowds here, but couldn't draw flies on shit if they were anywhere in the States. It's only because they won't try, and when they do try they get so discouraged. Why play to thirty people down there when they can play in Canada to two or three hundred. They don't understand that every time you go back it will get better and better until you'll be on par everywhere.

QJ: Just the bands that have been clubbing for a long time?

JK: I'm talking more about the new radio bands that I really can't stand, I don't even want to talk about it.

QJ: There's not even one that you hate so much that you'd even want to...

JK: The Tea Party.

QJ: What don't you like about the Tea Party?

JK: They're just bogus. I mean retro is crap. I mean, whatever works for them and sells records more power to them. And I'm sure they don't do it on purpose, that's just the way it sounds. And you know what? They're probably saying "those alternative Doughboys are punk rock pieces of shit." That's cool, I couldn't give a shit what they say about us, and they shouldn't care what we say about them. I'm not in the business of slagging bands.

QJ: We're in the business.

JK: [laughs]

QJ: How did you get to know Whiz from MegaCity Four?

JK: How I first got to know Whiz was that he wrote our band because he loved the Doughboys and then when we toured Europe he started coming to our shows. And then we did a European tour with MegaCity Four and then we just became best friends. I hung out at his house for a few weeks and then he came over and hung out at my house, so you know we're just really good friends.

QJ: If you were stranded on a desert island which three albums would you bring with you?

JK: I'd bring In Colour, the second Cheap Trick record. I'd bring

INTERVIEW CONTINUED ON PAGE 21

Someone poke this guy in the belly

TRICIA BAUMAN

Down," two boring songs from Crush, "Happy Home," "Fix Me," "I Won't Write You a Letter," "Don't Know You," "I Think We're Alone Now," ???

Airhead: Hey I was here first. Baseball cap: Hey fuck you, you were not.

A: Fuck you too. (They obviously know each other.)

B: No fuck you. A: So, how's it going?

B: Notbadnotbad. You?

A: Pretty good accepting that my sister's boyfriend is a lout.

A: Lout.

B: What's that?

fine. Stage energy was impressive. Song were well-executed and with passion. But without heart. The only moments of real excitement—and times that songs diverged from album patterns—were "Won't Write You a Letter" and their cover of Tommy James' "I Think We're Alone Now."

"Here's an old one." They proceed to play a song from their last album while virtually ignoring their first two albums.

Michelle: So, Stephen Egerton of ALL produced

Leave your political baggage at the door...

The Queen's Musical Theatre provides a delightful night of escapism.

KISMET
DIRECTED BY KEN JACOBSEN PRESENTED BY QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE
GRAND THEATRE
BY DAVID LEACH

Open Sesame!
While it's more the result of four months of hard work than a simple magic formula, Queen's Musical Theatre's production of Kismet still delivers on its promise of drawing its audience into a "musical Arabian Night." And unlike the tale-telling Scheherazade of the Thousand and One Nights, the only death that this light-hearted story of romance and intrigue might hold at bay is the dead of a bitter Kingston winter and all the January blahs that accompany it.

"Director Ken Jacobsen has taken care to follow the Hippocratic Oath of musical theatre in our sensitive age..."

To be sure, Kismet is clearly a theatrical product of the untroubled America of the 1950s. (It was first performed in 1953.) Set in medieval Baghdad, the musical trades upon a number of stereotypical (the ruthless Eastern tyrant, the chained-up slave-girls) that open it up to the charge of "Orientalism"—the misrepresentation of an "unchanging East" in Western art and history. Still, to pan it outright for these reasons would be to miss the point, especially in the well-balanced production on stage now at the Grand Theatre.

This will be no Showboat, no lightning rod for disputes over race and ethnicity. Director Ken Jacobsen has taken care to follow the Hippocratic Oath of musical theatre in our sensitive age: First, do no harm. He dresses many of the female extras in attire more modest than the typically skimpy harem get-ups, so that an Islamic atmosphere penetrates the "Arabian" setting. (Photos from the original Broadway production show more bared midriffs than an episode of Baywatch.) However, the Baghdad of Jacobsen's Kismet is not the historical Baghdad—one that can be smart-bombed back into the Middle Ages if it doesn't toe the line with the New World Order—but rather a universal city of the imagination, a world of comic and romantic inversions that requires you to check your disbelief at the door.

For this is the fact that may get lost in a discussion of the politics of representation: Kismet is a musical and is escapism in the best sense of the word. Just as the libretto of an opera sounds embarrassingly sentimental until sung at ear-bleeding volumes by well-fed Italians, so too will a musical comedy be found wanting if one goes looking for historical truths or Big Ideas rather than entertainment pure and simple.

The plot of Kismet is so conventional that it might have been cribbed from Shakespeare. A down-on-his-luck but quick-witted poet (Shane Carty) jerks up and down by the capricious hand of Fate (the "kismet" of the title), rising from beggar to Emir, while constantly facing threats to his life. Meanwhile, the Caliph of Baghdad (Patrick Belmonte) means to marry and falls in love with the poet's daughter, Marsinah (Kelly Callon). Wazir (Peter Harris), the Caliph's thuggish underling, has other plans for his master, however, as he stands to profit by the Caliph marrying the three princesses of Abahu.

Will romance prevail against these machinations? Will true love overcome? Well, of course it will—the love plot is delightfully predictable and predictably delightful and all ends well. What makes the play click is not this flimsy plot, but rather the music, the hilarious lyrics and especially the performance of the cast. Carty, as Hajj the Poet, perhaps doesn't steal the show, but he does stick it down his shirt and get pretty far. His strong voice and Robert Goulet-like singing presence (that's a compliment—honestly!) set the tone for the rest of the musical numbers, while his scenes with Wazir's wife, Lalume (Denise Oucharek), are infused with what can only be described as "erotic humour." His rendition of "Gesticu-

The Kismet wardrobe: political correctness or fashion faux pas?

MICHAEL WIERCINSKI

late" during his trial couldn't possibly be topped.
Callon and Belmonte as the main love interests make beautiful music together—their voices complement each other almost perfectly—but it's Harris's gleefully malevolent Wazir who is sure to be the big crowd pleaser. Anyone who can sing lines like "I confiscated his mother / And then did something or other / Involving her dissolving / In a vat of lime" while still maintaining his sneer throughout deserves some sort of accolade.
Certainly there were rough spots in the dress rehearsal I watched and quibbles to be made. The orchestra needed a few songs to work up to the proper tempo, the choreography of the dance numbers seemed a little off the mark, while the set design didn't quite do justice to the vivid costumes. Still, these are minor bugs in a production that is peaking at just the right moment. Kismet passes the all important whistlestop test for Broadway musicals—it's definitely a winner. Kismet continues at the Grand Theatre, January 21-22, 26-29. Tickets are available at the Grand Theatre Box Office or the Queen's Performing Arts Box Office.

Taste the True Texas Tradition

Come On Down & Party Like A Texan

Howdy pardner! The gang at the Lone Star Cafe want y'all to come and visit us real soon. Come in for a taste of authentic Tex-Mex cookin' and southern hospitality. Sizzlin' Fajitas, Smoked Barbecue Ribs, Mesquite Grilled Steaks and a variety of Mexican dishes, all served up in heapin' portions! Named after the Lone Star State of Texas, these cowboys don't mind if y'all horse around a bit, dress like a Texan or forget your table manners once in a while.

251 Ontario Street, Kingston 548-8888

10.00 value

- CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS APPLY:
- ONE COUPON PER TABLE
 - EXCLUDING ALCOHOL & TAXES
 - MAXIMUM 50% DISCOUNT ON TOTAL FOOD ORDER
 - NOT VALID WITH OTHER DISCOUNTS
 - NO CASH VALUE
 - GRATUITIES NOT INCLUDED
 - VALID UNTIL APRIL 30, 1994

Valid in Kingston Only.

BFA Faculty shows its scars

Fine Art professors take their work to Agnes

BFA FACULTY SHOW
AGNES ETHERINGTON
ART CENTRE
BY MIKE MOSS

On my way to grab a few words with David Pickering, one of ten contributors in this year's BFA showcase at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, I ruined a woman's day. Seduced by a strange looking print on the far wall of an Ontario Hall basement studio, I shuffled over to take a closer look, until, in mid step the sticky sound of my shoes made me stop in surprise. No sooner did I swing around and see that the section of the floor, perhaps part of a presentation, was freshly painted and that my footprints stood out like a frisco seal. That's when the painter of said floor cried, "My floor!" She then rushed out of the room upset (to put it mildly). I felt lousy. But then, I remembered the words of Otis Tamasaukas, another BFA artist, who said to me, "All an artist does is leave marks in time." "Leave marks in time" sounds a little eerie, and if marks are left then in the BFA exhibit they range from gentle scratches to huge gashes on the face of time. Exceptional in this case are the sculptural offerings and the selections from the print-making department. Jan Whiton's radiant raw colours overcame my initial coolness towards Queen's tendency towards monochromatic painting. But here, forget trivialities. . . look Queen's community! Your art is on display! These artists are wormed away right here deep in the recesses of Ontario Hall, that vault of art. There's no reason to be intimidated by the variety of medium, if you're expecting something too weird to digest then have no fear, scandal and Queen's do not go hand in hand.

So enjoy the professionalism of David Pickering's Place of Being and Alan Dickson's Kanchi, both artistic expressions of seasoned veterans and well-travelled men.

Place of Being, inspired by Pickering's wanderings in Egypt, explores the mysteries of Islamic mosque culture. The copper well, a monument of spiritual cleansing, the wooden architecture with its vital ladder, and the multitude of hearts (one short of a hundred) representing a praying session are all a part of the whole which Pickering calls "a symbol of self." Dickson said his work deals with dualities and the conventions of Hindu imagery, such as male/female body references and the sensual/spiritual polarities.

The domestic side of sculpture does not fare as well. Jan Allen's waxen sink and plug contraptions appear clunky next to the piety of Pickering and Dickson's efforts. However to their credit, they smell good.

Tamasaukas and Carl Heywood are the apostles of print-making, an art form considered by the former to be the post-modern equivalent of the "real thing." Tamasaukas received a Taylor Richardson grant which took him to North Adams, Massachusetts, where he worked on a highly sophisticated press. One such print is showing at the BFA exhibit. The fish is Tamasaukas's white elephant, an environmental symbol that in his other piece, Artemesia Series: Fish and Oak Leaf.

Heywood's symbol is the carrot (carrot juice being his beverage of choice). His Dick Tracy and pulp comic inspired silk screens are home to the exhibit's most violent energy. The swirling images and distorted hanging of Spoon Not and Bees defy certainty, and enforce suspense.

However, "suspenseful" isn't a word I'd use to describe this exhibit, perhaps "professional" or "resourceful," but I prefer "punctual," for its about time that Queen's see it's own face, despite the scars.

A titanic release

KIRSTY MACCOLL TITANIC DAYS
I.R.S. RECORDS
BY RYAN P. CHEN

That Kirsty MacColl seems better known for her back-up vocal work with The Pogues and The Smiths, rather than for her own solo material, remains one of the eccentricities of pop music. Ironically, if she is recognized as a separate artist, then it is usually for her splendid cover versions of Billy Bragg's "A New England" or of The Smiths' "You Just Haven't Earned It Yet, Baby."

Of course, pop critics may cite the aforementioned facts as evidence of MacColl's poor musicianship—obviously, she can't dazzle on her own. Such an assessment, however, is both flawed and unjustified. To an extent, MacColl's work with The Pogues, The Smiths and Billy Bragg has been an eloquent and witty lyricist, and her poetic output for this collection won't disappoint the faithful (and it ought to win a few devotees). Noteworthy lines include the feminist angst of "Bad" ("I've been a token woman all my life. The token daughter and the token wife. Now I collected tokens one by one. 'Til I've saved enough to buy a gun"), the dream-like atmosphere of "Titanic Days" ("A violent frenzy in a none too cheap hotel. He says it's hazy. But I remember it so well. His arms, his face. The way my words got twisted out of place), and the stream-of-consciousness of "Just Woke Up" ("Open the door. Take a walk outside. And feel the sun fall on my skin. It's time to get up. But not time to give in").

MacColl's knack for catchy tunes and stunning lyrics coalesce in such undisputed gems as the socially conscious "Soho Square," the Johnny Marr-penned "Can't Stop Killing You," and the love-lorn "Don't Go Home." And while all of Titanic Days is alluring, any of its tracks will surely convince the listener that Kirsty MacColl ought to be recognized as more than an exceptional guest vocalist. She has earned it, baby.

Coll is inevitably measured he comes clear.

Titanic Days marks MacColl's third release, and like her previous full-lengths, Kite and Electric Landlady, Titanic Days proves that MacColl is quite capable of outshining her musical patriarchs. From the cheerful guitar work of "You Know It's You" to the doleful sighs of "Tomorrow Never Comes," the radiance of MacColl's latest offering spans both the musical and the emotional spectrums. And although the album may move from the carefree dance beats of "Angel" to the bitter rockabilly pop of "Big Boy On A Saturday Night," Titanic Days is not an ugly smorgasbord, but it rather has a rainbow-like quality about it, with each track gracefully flowing into next.

The lyrics of Titanic Days is just as diverse and finely crafted as its music. MacColl has always been an eloquent and witty lyricist, and her poetic output for this collection won't disappoint the faithful (and it ought to win a few devotees). Noteworthy lines include the feminist angst of "Bad" ("I've been a token woman all my life. The token daughter and the token wife. Now I collected tokens one by one. 'Til I've saved enough to buy a gun"), the dream-like atmosphere of "Titanic Days" ("A violent frenzy in a none too cheap hotel. He says it's hazy. But I remember it so well. His arms, his face. The way my words got twisted out of place), and the stream-of-consciousness of "Just Woke Up" ("Open the door. Take a walk outside. And feel the sun fall on my skin. It's time to get up. But not time to give in").

ha!

Waiting for the man

TOM WAITS
THE BLACK RIDER
ISLAND RECORDS
BY CHRISTIAN DEBRUIJN

Yep, Tom Waits certainly is on a roll these days. It took him almost four years to put out Bone Machine, which remains one of 1992's better releases. However, a question remains: What was Waits doing between Big Time and Bone Machine? Answer: The Black Rider.

The album was originally a musical score for a play written and directed by Robert Wilson. The production, which is still running, originally made its appearance in Hamburg in 1989. For the score, Waits collaborated with composer Greg Cohen, whom he's worked with in the past, and writer-counter culture icon, William S. Burroughs. All the original Black Rider sessions were reworked earlier this year in Los Angeles, thus the same group met again.

Some critics object that an album based on a play loses the listener without the visual or written text, but I don't agree. It stands out very nicely on its own. Waits' entire career can be summed up in one word: eccentric. This album is just something that you would expect him to do.

On the title track, Waits, to the backdrop of German beer drinking music, uses an accent and sings like he's in a drunken house.

In "Just the Right Bullets," Waits maintains this persona, mixed in with just the right amount of surf banjo.

Old Tom shows us his romantic side on "I'll Shoot The Moon," which he croons over soft sexy jazz in a way that would put a Bono-less Frank Sinatra to shame. On the Burroughs' penned "Flash Pan Hunter," Waits grunts in a way that either sends chills up your spine, or make you grind your teeth. Personally, I love Waits' voice—it has that great whiskey chugging, two-pack-a-day feel to it that few come close to matching.

Surprisingly, it's the instrumental tracks which make this record. "Russian Dance" is self-explanatory, with traditional Russian music added to the sound of dancing Cossacks. "Black Box Theme" should satisfy any new-age jazz/classical fans with its fantastic warped mesh of the two styles.

I don't throw around my judgment of brilliance around lightly, but that's the best way to describe Tom Waits' career, and The Black Rider is no exception. The album just flows from one track to the next, and not once will you want to lift the needle, press the fast forward or skip button. Besides, how can you dislike any ex-smoker who still admits that he misses that nicotine filled with pleasure stick every time he has a cup of coffee?

SNOW BOWL

IV

When: January 30th, 1994 (Super Bowl Sunday)
Where: Cricket Field (in front of Court House)
Time: 11:00 a.m. (Returns to Don Chan's for Food and Beverage following the game)
Super Bowl 1994 will be on both large screens for you to enjoy.
Cost: $75.00 per team (12 people max per team)

Prizes for First and Second place and Special Performances

Five guys and three girls per team on field at one time

- Games will be played across width of field
- Log Football: no blocking allowed, 100 yard steps only, 5 steam coats, referee's decision is final, touchdowns only, no field goals, punts allowed on 4th down
- Dress for the weather
- No "reets" allowed
- All games 20 minutes (two 10 min. periods)
- All teams are to arrive by 10:45 for start of events
- Call Don Chan's 544-7951 for details. Ask for Mike Lister or Randy Lambert

Radio Daze

CFRC-FM 101.9 / 90.9 is YOUR campus-community alternative in Kingston!
The NEW Winter/Spring 1994 Schedule has begun. Program guides are available of the Infobank.

Special events this week include:

- Live varsity hockey: Golden Gaels vs Western Mustangs (men) tomorrow at 7:30 pm
- Exclusive interview with The Doughboys, Sunday at 12 midnight on Coolidge
- Spotlight on Canadian sko on The Big Picture, Sunday at 7:00 pm

- Cool Runnings prize packs to giveaway on Crucial Riddims, Monday at 6:30 pm
- CFRC CALL-IN 545-2121: Call us and have your say! Monday to Wednesday 10:00 pm
- Mon: Star Trek Trivia Show
- Tue: Canada's Role as Global Peacekeeper
- Wed: Compus Media Round Table

Street Life Listings

These listings were correct as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs.

MOVIES	CLUBS	DOMINO THEATRE
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 North West Dr. 389-7442 Philadelphia 7:00 9:50 Shadownords 6:50 9:35 Remains of the Day 6:45 9:45 Mrs. Doubfire 7:00 9:40 Mrs. Doubfire 7:10 9:50	FRIDAY A.J.'s Hangar: Road Apples The Toucan: Days of You The Duke: Boog and the Brovey and Whips The Wellington: Gerry O'Kane The Quiet Pub: Steve Bond SATURDAY The Toucan: hHead A.J.'s Hangar: Road Apples The Duke: Madcats The Wellington: Gerry O'Kane SUNDAY A.J.'s Hangar: Wild Blues Yonder The Wellington: Rob Offen 2-5pm and Kingston Folk Club evening MONDAY The Wellington: Blue Monday The Caribbean: Industrial/Alternative Mondays	370 King Street West 548-0357 Gwendalyn a comedy by James W. Nichol January 13-29 at 8:00 pm.
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395 Grumpy Old Men 6:55 9:10 Sister Act 2 7:00 9:15 Tombsone 6:45 9:30 Wayne's World 2 7:00 9:35 The Air Up There 7:00 9:15 Pelican Brief 6:45 9:25 The Piano 6:50 9:20 Iron Will 7:10 9:25	THEATRE THE GRAND THEATRE 218 Princess Street 530-2050 The Queen's Musical Theatre presents Kismet January 21, 22, 26-9 at 8:00 pm. Tickets $10 (adult) and $6 (students/seniors)	GALLERIES AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE 545-2190 Artist at Work: Mary-Ann Kokosko, Drawing in Succession January 21, 25 from 12 noon to 3:00 pm. CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS... through Jan. 23 Dave Gordon: My Mont Sainte-Victoire through Jan. 30 BFA Faculty Show through Feb. 6 Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection through Mar. 30 Mother and Child: Selections From the Long Collection of African Art through Apr. 3 The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

ATHLETE'S FOOT

If you have itching, burning, scaling, and peeling between your toes, you may be eligible to participate in the evaluation of a new treatment for athlete's foot.

You must be between 18 and 65, in otherwise good health, and able to attend 5 visits to a downtown medical office over a two month period. The blood tests and medication (pills) will be provided at no charge.

Candidates will receive $100.00 to cover out of pocket expenses upon completion of the study.

If you are interested, please telephone 549-6660, Monday to Friday, from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

This study has been approved by an Institutional Ethics Review Board

549-5420
349 King St. East
(King & Princess)

549-5425
401 Princess St.
(Princess & Division
under Princess Tower)

BUBBA'S PIZZERIA

Home made from Start - to - Finish

PIZZA TOPPINGS
Pepperoni • Mushrooms • Green Peppers • Bacon • Onions
Ham • Olives • Sliced Tomatoes • Pineapple • Hot Peppers

	Small 10"	Medium 12"	Large 14"	X-Large 16"
No. 1 One Item	7.45	8.55	10.95	12.65
No. 2 Two Items	7.95	10.15	11.75	13.75
No. 3 Three Items	8.35	10.65	12.65	14.85
No. 4 Four Items	8.75	11.45	13.35	15.65
No. 5 Bubba's Special Pizza "DELICIOUS" Tomato Sauce, Cheese, Peppercorn, Mushrooms, Bacon, Ham, Green Peppers	9.25	11.65	14.50	16.95
No. 6 Vegetarian Pizza Tomato Sauce, Cheese, Mushrooms, Onions, Green Peppers, Sliced Tomatoes, and Pineapple	8.75	11.45	13.75	16.25
No. 7 Hawaiian Pizza Tomato Sauce, Ham, and Pineapple	7.95	10.15	11.75	13.75
Any Extra Item	.99	1.10	1.50	1.50
Double Cheese	1.25	1.75	2.25	2.75

FREE Delivery on all Pizzas
& Food Orders over $12.00
within city limits

DELIVERY HOURS
Monday to Saturday 6:00pm - 1:30 am
Sunday 6:00pm - 9:00pm

P.S.T. & G.S.T. ARE NOT INCLUDED

QUEBEC SPECIALS

1/2 PRICE OFF
The Regular Menu
• PIZZA
• Submarine
Pick-up Only
12:00 Noon - 8:00 PM
Present Coupon Before 1
Ordering
Expires March 31, 1994

BUBBA'S SPECIAL DELIVERY
$3.00 OFF
Order Over $12.00
(Within City Limits)
Present Coupon on Delivery
Expires March 31, 1994

HOMEMADE HAMBURGERS

1/4 lb. Hamburger	2.65
1/4 lb. Cheeseburger	2.85
1/4 lb. Baconburger	3.45
Double Hamburger	3.65
Double Cheeseburger	3.85
Double Baconburger	4.45

QUEBEC STYLE POUTINE

Small	3.95
Large	4.45
Served with French Fries, Cauld Cheese and covered with Gravy
French Fries	1.65
French Fries & Gravy	2.50
Onion Rings	2.50
Toasted Salad	3.25

SUBMARINE SANDWICHES

Turkey	4.95	Pizza Sub	4.95
Roast Beef	4.95	Cheese	3.95
Hamburger	4.95	Club Sub	4.95
Assorted Cold Cuts	4.45	Ham	3.95
BUBBA'S SPECIAL	5.95	Salami	3.95

SANDWICHES

Turkey	4.95	Ham	4.95
Beef	4.95	Salami	4.95
Served on a Kaiser with Lettuce, Tomato and Mayonnaise

CHICKEN

Chicken Fingers (6 pc)	6.95
------------------------	------

PANZEROTTI

Deep Fried	5.95
------------	------

ENGLISH STYLE FISH & CHIPS

FISH DINNER 2 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad	5.75
FESTA FISH DINNER 3 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad	6.95
BUBBA'S PORTION 6 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad	14.95

LAKEFIELD COLLEGE SCHOOL

Kingston Information Reception

Thursday, January 27th, 7:30pm

• 100% of our 1993 graduates were accepted into university, 20% earning scholarships

• Lakefield students currently attend Queen's in the faculties of Medicine, Business, Arts, Science and Engineering.

There is no investment more important than your son's or daughter's education. At Lakefield, our program includes:

- An enriched academic curriculum with high standards of achievement
- Small classes (17 average) with personal attention from a dedicated faculty
- A global perspective to education among peers from across Canada and 20 other countries
- Outstanding music, visual art, drama, and debating programs
- Unique athletic and outdoor experiences
- Scholarships and financial assistance available

At this Information Reception, we will outline the School's educational philosophy and programs for families interested in enrolment at Lakefield.

For further information, please call (705) 652-3324
Lakefield College School, Lakefield, Ontario K0L 2H0

OVERWHELMED by HOUSING PANIC?

What to look for?

Where to live?

What questions to ask?

ARGH!

For househunting tips and help call or visit us:

TOWN-GOWN LIAISON
545-6745
Room 124, JDUC

EQUALITY IN SPORTS?

An Open Panel Discussion

Brenda Wille, Men's Volleyball Coach
Geoff Smith, Professor, Queen's University
Sandra Levy, National Field Hockey Team
Claude Scilley, Sports Reporter, Whig Standard

Jan. 27 8:00 Dupuis Aud.

Sponsored by the AMS Women's Issues Committee

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS

An Clachan Apartment Complex
(near West Campus)

Rent: $602 per month

utilities included
stove and fridge provided

FREE PARKING available

September leases

short term lease
to August 30, 1994

NO RENT INCREASE Sept. '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

HOUSING OPTIONS? Housemate agreements? Lease? Location? Landlords? Too many questions. Too few answers? Get answers! Call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

LOOKING AT EATING DISORDERS: an 8 week art therapy group for Queen's students starts January 26th. Cost $8.00 per session or $6.00 per week. Materials supplied. To register call Beth at 531-0619.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring slots are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Gey House, 51 Queen's Crescent. Monday 11 a.m. - 2 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change!

CREATIVE WRITERS Discuss your own writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

ART CLASSES: Taught by local artists at Liv-Art Studio's. We are taking registration for their courses in life model drawing, acrylic painting, watercolour, and drawing technique. Limited enrolment - call 546-6842.

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICE will be holding two focus group sessions with students, February 2nd and 6th to help us assess our programs, services and activities. If you are interested in participating please call the Health Educator, Diane Nolting at 545-6712.

PROMOTE YOUR BAND PROPERLY! Get the edge over the others. FUNHOUSE studios produces professional, top quality demos and albums. Experience with all music types. Live DAT or multi-track. $25 per hour. Call 548-7143.

DO YOU WANNA BE A GAEL?? Be at the general meeting, Monday January

24th at 6 p.m. in Grant Hall. You MUST be there to get an application.

BACK TO SCHOOL necessities from the Soapberry Shop. Eyebright eye gel, soothes eyes puffy and red from studying. Stress masks; to relieve tension headaches (and hangovers). Herbal cosmetics and hair products to keep you looking your best. The Soapberry Shop 225 Princess St, 545-1028.

GAEL GENERAL MEETING - apply to be a part of the best Orientation ever!! Monday January 24th at 6 p.m. in Grant Hall. You MUST be there to get an application.

QUEEN'S ASTRONOMY CLUB proudly presents speaker Dr. D.A. Hanes, who will give a slide show/talk entitled: "Great Observatories of the World", Sunday, January 30th, 8:30 p.m., Sutling Hall, Theatre A. All are welcome.

DANCE: Classical ballet R.A.D., modern jazz, tap, aerobics. Winter registration: January 26, 27 & 28, 5 - 8 p.m., January 29 1 - 3 p.m. 5,6,7,8, Dance Studio, 259 Queen St., (close to campus). For information call 547-5678.

QUICK ACCURATE word processing of theses, papers, resumes, correspondence etc. Most often 24 hour service. Call after 6 p.m.: Audrey at 548-7378.

LSAT PREPARATION COURSE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money back guarantee. Next course starts February 5th. MED-LAW SEMINARS 531-9016.

NOMINATIONS OPEN January 19 - 25 for GSS elections to be held February 8 - 9. Positions open: Speaker, Graduate Senator, President, and the Vice-presidents internal, external, operations, finance and services.

THE ELECTIONS of the Queen's bands will be held on February 11th. For details call 542-7818.

MCNEILL HOUSE '90-'91 REUNION: Come see how people are doing, what they are actually studying now, and say farewell. At the Quiet Pub, Tuesday January 25th, 6 - 8 p.m. Yout don Chris.

NOMINATIONS OPEN January 19 - 25 for GSS elections to be held February 8 - 9. Positions open: Speaker, Graduate Senator, President, and the Vice-presidents internal, external, operations, finance and services.

CLASSIFIED

HELP WANTED

NEED EXTRA BUCKS?!! We need tutors in the math and sciences areas. Tutors are paid $9.00 per hour. Call 545-6278 for more info.

SUNNYSIDE CHILDCARE CENTRE is looking for volunteers to work with children's play therapy - if interested call Heather at 545-6278 or drop by the CORE at 183 University.

SUMMER JOBS Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruise ships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing inground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

BEFORE YOU CALL McDONALD'S ... Come to our open forum on food services and get your input on the "total dining experience" at Queen's. Friday, January 21, 11:30 am, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC.

UNCLE BUCK'S Kingston's newest watering hole. Bartenders/wait staff/door staff required. Apply Saturday January 22nd between 3 - 5 p.m. 178 A Ontario St.

THE COCAMO: Bartenders/wait staff/door staff required. Apply Saturday January 22nd between 3 - 5 p.m. 178 Ontario Street.

CHIEF PONACKA CALLS! Come see Don and Ann on Monday January 24 at 396 Brock St. All Ponackians welcome! Please RSVP at 549-6936 or 531-8131. Ayunkay, noonway.

ARTSCI '95 SMOKER!! Party for no reason and roadtrip to Peel Pub, Montreal, January 29. Tickets on sale Mac-Corty, 10:30-2:00, Jan 24-28.

WANTED

HOUSEMATE WANTED: Non-smoker, male or female upper year student to share a house with three other upper years. Clean and comfortable; very close to campus, rent under $240.00. Call 545-3460.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

SPRING BREAK '94!! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

4BR, $280 per month. All inclusive. $6600 down and own your own student rental - clean, charming, parking... Let's talk! Call Kim Donaldson, Sales Rep. Re/Max Loyalist Realty Ltd., Realtor direct 530-0269.

ROOMS FOR RENT in large house near campus. Kitchen equipped with dishwasher and 2 fridges. $150 - $175 per month plus utilities. Call Dave at 530-4953. No lease.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

Personals

MY DEAREST NATASHA: Second year can be such a drag. Let me whisk you away for a night of dinner and dancing at the Ambassador... say, February 4th? - Boris KARA-BEAR: A personal for you!!! Be smart, hold hands, keep your jacket done up, and look both ways - you never know what may catch your eye...

Beeeeeeee: Let's do something tomanitic, say... Jurassic Park?!? Dance with Penguins! - fat guy

ADVICE FOR TOMMY: Have fun, eat right, go to bed early and hike hard. Good Luck!!! Love AD.

Faculty of Arts and Science

NOTICE Friday, January 28, 1994

IS THE FINAL DATE TO ADD WINTER TERM HALF COURSES (WITH PERMISSION OF INSTRUCTORS)

AND

TO DROP FULL FALL/WINTER COURSES WITHOUT ACADEMIC FAILURE

KIM DONALDSON
Sales Rep.
530-0269
B.Comm.'88

NEED A HOME
for next year?

Why not buy one? Interest rates are sooo low!
House prices are sooo cheap!
I have many houses close to campus! Just let me know what kind of rent you can pay, find a few friends to live with, & I'll find you a good, clean home! I'll arrange the financing, too! It's easy! Let's talk! Call NOW!

RE/MAX

MISC.

Here I sit broken-hearted, paid my dime and...

Reading ROOM

We looked at washroom graffiti and held our noses, for various reasons...

You're sitting on one of Queen's campus's toilets anxious not to be late for a class when you notice a scrawl etched in black ink on the wall beside you. You squint and lean closer to the message until you can make out the words. You have now entered the mysterious underworld of washroom graffiti.

Once so rampant in campus cans that armies of janitors were needed to clean the tattooed stalls, graffiti is now limited to the few bathrooms that Queen's seems to have forgotten about. But what did this nearly-lost art bring to the community? Or did it serve no other purpose than to annoy Sanitation Services(?).

The answer, of course, lies somewhere in-between. Nevertheless, graffiti can be viewed as something more than just senseless vandalism. It can be used as a means of thoughtful communication between people who would not communicate in any other way.

The views expressed represent a wide variety of political, social and economic contexts. The result is an open forum for self-expression and the discussion of ideas. This, of course, represents only a portion of the graffiti that graces the walls of the bathrooms of this hallowed institution — but how many pulp novels are there for each quality piece of literature?

We sent out our crack team of lavatorial researchers to scour the washrooms of Queen's and record the results. Interestingly, we found campus almost entirely devoid of the stuff — save for one building which shall remain nameless (and it's not MacCorry or the JDUC), which contained a plethora of scribbles.

In our survey, we discovered that most of the creators and consumers of graffiti are female. Perhaps this is because they spend more time in the washroom, perhaps it is because they are more thoughtful bowel movers than men. We may never know.

The nature of their graffiti also seems to differ. Men seem to make bold statements which don't propose a conversation:

"Bill sucks!"

is commonly found in stead of:

"What do you think of Bill?"

Women's graffiti has significantly more of the latter kind of conversational remarks. Women seem to figure that they'll probably see that stall again soon, so they start conversations. Men appear to be more nomadic with their washroom use.

There are a number of areas that are covered in washroom graffiti and thousands of topics. During the Gordon House fiasco, both male and female washrooms were abuzz with discussions of statements on the subject. In these 'quieter' days, graffiti is still used for political commentary:

"Your sister's not your enemy"

"Sometimes she is. Deal with it."

"You're right, I hope I'm sorry for one more example of racism in feminism."

Grffiti can also serve as a sort of public service announcement board:

"Women name you pain and your assaulter."

"I was date raped Saturday night. I thought I could trust him. Be aware."

In some instances, women have actually recorded the names of their assailants in

VOCABULARY

- Stray (noun or adjective, an amalgam of straight and gay): A straight person with so-called "gay" sensibilities. Example: "Bill, you enjoy dancing to Erasure, Bette Davis movies and don't give a damn about the Stanley Cup. You're a stray."
- Graight (noun or adjective, an amalgam of gay and straight): A gay person with so-called "straight" sensibilities. Example: "Dave, you host Superbowl parties, you take your lover to car shows and you have too many damned power tools. You're a graight."
- BAMN (acronym, rhymes with "damn"): Acronym for "By Any Means Necessary." Example: "We shall overcome racism, bamn!"
- Dohl (Interjection, from The Simpsons): An expression used to convey annoyance, pain or frustration. (We included this word to make sure everyone knows how the word is spelled - this is the spelling used on Simpsons scripts.)

— SOURCES: JOEY, THE SIMPSONS

So, what do you think about on the John?

MARISA GLOVIN

washroom stalls to warn others.

Grffiti can be thought of as a poorly displayed art form. When a message is scrawled on a stall door and is not a response to another message, it is often put there without regard to its surroundings. As graffiti accumulates, an intertextual narrative is created. Messages which were once distinct now become linked together. The wall becomes a collage that can be read in many different ways.

But as anyone who has ever used a public bathroom knows, for every interesting thought which is written on a bathroom wall, there are two or three stupid or otherwise offensive remarks. Becoming detached from the responsibility of owning up to their comments, people express themselves freely, no matter what their views. In many ways, bathroom graffiti is one of the few forums for free speech in our controlled society.

And of course, as soon as people feel a lack of responsibility, they say whatever they want, no matter how hurtful or cruel it may be.

We are left with a mixed impression of washroom graffiti. It is both informative and ignorant, consoling and offensive. It is like all other forms of human communication, a mixed bag of commentary, whose nature is largely dependent on the individual.

But the most important question is perhaps not what people write on washroom walls here at Queen's, but why they feel the need to do it. A curious trend has crept its way onto campus over the past year. Whereas many campus washroom stalls were covered in comments a year ago, they now lie devoid of statements. Perhaps that army of janitors is working overtime. Perhaps not as many people feel the need. Only time will tell.

Whatever the reasons people feel the irresistible urge to write on bathroom walls, washroom graffiti remains predominantly an undocumented region of discourse. It is begging for academic and artistic study. Maybe Queen's should spend more time studying its washroom graffiti instead of scrubbing it off. Maybe they should put up replaceable message boards so that fewer people would be inclined to scribble on the walls and the boards could be kept and catalogued for study.

To conclude, we present from parting remarks from the walls:

"...And on a final note why on earth did you need to feel the need to obliterate that? Covering something up will not change it; closing your eyes will not make problems go away."

"What happened to the message board? Too bad its gone, it helped me put things in perspective."

Derek Walker, before entering Queen's Engineering, was a Sanitation Engineer for a long time.

Where will you be on Superbowl Sunday?

inside

THESE HEADS SING
Picking natives, hHead, rolled into Kingston last Friday with a whole lot of alter-native attitude.
—For review, see page 20.

BATTLE OF THE BEWIC
900 participants battled it out in the annual four-sport intramural competition over the weekend. The Moose team cleaned house in BEWIC Sports Day.
—Details on page 18.

WOLF LOVES MEN
Naomi Wolf unveils her brand of inclusive power feminism in her new bestseller, Fire With Fire.
—See page 14.

"The chunks are flavour crystals."
—Derek Rice, second-time winner of the Brodie Bowl in the Golden Words Beer-brewing contest explains how he brews a really bad beer.

Phase II tentatively shelved Housing by-laws on hold

BY MICHAEL MOSS

The Phase II housing by-law proposal, decided by Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin as discriminating against student tenants, has been dropped for the present by the Kingston Planning Committee.

Phase II, which was first released by the Kingston Planning Committee in Sept. 1992, is a report that calls for a wide variety of zoning changes in the Kingston area.

It was dropped at the committee's Dec. 1 meeting, largely because of a clause that would allow dwellings to be zoned as student-housing only, restricting where students could live in the city of Kingston.

In its place, a newly formed working group of students, administrators and community groups has until May to come up with feasible alternatives to the plan.

Nevin was at the Dec. 1 meeting, and adamantly opposes Phase II. "The policy isn't going to meet today's needs. The needs have changed. What we need is a stronger property standards campaign. More than anything else, students want to live close to campus. They'll live in anything. It's an unwritten rule: shitty

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873
TUESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1994 • ISSUE 26 • VOLUME 121

AJ HANGAR
RESTAURANT & BAR
Wed 26 • Yuk Yuk's
Thurs 27 • Dipso
Fri • Sat • ONE

AMS election campaign underway Record five teams to vie for student government executive

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

The race is on for the top positions in student government at Queen's. Nominations closed Friday for the positions of President, Vice-President (Operations), and Vice-President (University Affairs) of the Alma Mater Society.

Campaigning officially begins today, and in the running are a record five teams. The last time there were more than three teams running was in 1990-91, when Quarry, Beeston and Dwightman triumphed in a field of four.

AMS Chief Returning Officer Darren Littlejohn said he hoped that the elections would have "a big profile this year." Littlejohn said the AMS's objective is to have 40 per cent voter turnout when students go to the polls Feb. 8 and 9.

According to Kate Phillips, current president of the AMS, the jump in the number of teams—there were just two last year—should help to put the election in the spotlight.

"I think it will really heighten the awareness of AMS issues," she said.

Open forums with the candidates are scheduled for 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Jan. 25 (at West Campus), Wednesday, Jan. 26 (in Victoria Hall), and Tuesday, Feb. 1 (in the John Deutsch University Centre.)

And the candidates are...

TEAM	PRESIDENT	VP OPERATIONS	VP UNIV. AFFAIRS
1	Blair Bertrand	Ace Smith	Silvia Lulka
2	Jonathan Arnold	Jessica Scadron	Caroline Gallardi
3	Taz Pirmohamed	Kevin Rex	Jane Shantz
4	Mike Asselstine	Wayne Liepmann	Linda Shin
5	Drake Carlyle	Karen Ward	Andrea Whiting

Principal Skinner and Bart Simpson ponder over pints at the Beer-Brewing Contest. For story, please see page 4.

CHRIS PRICE

Coalition demands say in food contract

BY RUSSELL VANCE

The stage is set for a confrontation over food services at Queen's, as Marriott's current food contract, which grants them a monopoly on campus, is set to expire at the end of June.

A new coalition of campus groups, calling itself "Gut Feeling," is clamouring for a say in what is reputed to be a $12 million contract.

Several members of "Gut Feeling" claim that the re-letting of the campus food contract is proceeding too quickly, without proper consultation, and without serious consideration of environmental and labour practices.

Bruce Dodds, a union representative of part-time workers at Marriott, said the final decision on the Marriott contract will be made "by a coterie of exalted ivory tower bureaucrats who don't have to eat the food, and their private-sector partners."

Tom Morrow, assistant to Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Dr. Tom Williams, responded to the charges, saying, "one of our objectives is to make the selection process open as possible."

Morrow explained that consultative committees have been established to review cash and residence food services on campus. In addition, he said the university will be holding a number of open forums to seek students' opinions on food services.

The opinions expressed by the consultative committees and at the food forums are not binding on the decision-making committee, but will be taken seriously, said Morrow.

Dodds responded by pointing not only to the students' lack of power, but their lack of information. "Consumers of the campus food system are being offered a taste test, not serious information about the re-letting of a $12 million contract," said Dodds.

Steve Morelli, president of the West Campus Residence Council and a member of a consultative committee, expressed strong dissatisfaction with the process, noting that he has never seen the basic financial information he requires to provide informed input.

"The whole process has been really hush-hush," said Morelli. "There is no reason they can't be more accountable. Guelph MARRIOTT CONTINUED ON PAGE 5"

 Buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger at the regular price and receive a second Bacon Double Cheeseburger FREE.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Jan. 27/94

 Buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger at the regular price and receive a second Bacon Double Cheeseburger FREE.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Jan. 27/94

Queen's Hillel

Welcomes you to Israel Day

On January 27th, 1994.
10:00 am - 4:00 pm
Lower Ceilidh

You'll "Fatafel" if you miss Israel Day

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

The AMS Speakers Committee is now administering the Moveable Speakers Fund. This money is available "to provide some contributing funds for speakers who are brought in by groups affiliated with the AMS."

Donations are for no more than $300 to $500.

Applications must show that they meet all of the following criteria:

1. The speaker must appeal to the general membership of the Alma Mater Society.
2. The speaker must be sponsored by an AMS affiliated group.
3. The speaker must not have had a public engagement at Queen's within the two years previous.
4. A strong effort to seek funding from other sources must be evident.
5. The subject of the speaking engagement must adhere to the mission statement of the Alma Mater Society.
6. The speaking engagement must be open to all students and thus must be held in a location that is accessible.

The Deadline for submissions that must include a detailed budget, details of the speaker, other funding sources, sponsoring group and their affiliation with the AMS, date, time, and location of the speak, and contact name and number of the applicant are due by 12 noon January 28th, 1994 in the AMS office, Lower JDUC, Kingston.

For more information call 545-2725, ext. 4816.

LESBIANS AND GAYS IN THE COURTS?

Questioning Legal Strategies.

Sponsored By:

HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE

Guest Speaker

DIANA MAJURY

Ms Majury is a professor in the department of Law, Carlton University specializing in human rights and feminist theory.

WEDNESDAY,
FEBRUARY 2, 1994
7:00 pm
MACINTOSH-CORRY
HALL, B201

For More Information
Call 545-6886

TRICOLOUR
TRICOLOUR EXPRESS
THE CHEAPEST RIDE AROUND!

	TORONTO	OTTAWA	MONTREAL
DEPARTURES: FRIDAY	$20	$16	$25
West Campus	1:55	5:35	2:50
Victoria Hall	2:05	5:45	3:00
JDUC	2:10	5:55	3:10
DROP-OFF POINTS:	Oshawa*, Union Station & Scarborough Town Centre	Katonia E. C., Finchcrest*, Carling and Kirkwood* & Bus Terminal	Kirkland Shopping Plaza & Bus Terminal
RETURNS: SUNDAY	8:00	8:00	5:45
PICK-UP POINTS:	Union Station	Bus Terminal	Bus Terminal

Tickets are available at the Queen's Box Office
For more info call 545-2558
NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

Queen's Musical Theatre celebrates 25 years

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

For 25 years the Queen's Music Theatre has been producing Broadway musicals for the Kingston community.

In honour of their silver anniversary and many accomplishments, the QMT celebrated with an alumni reunion in the Grand Theatre after Saturday's performance of Kismet.

Jessica Goldberg, president of the QMT's Board of Directors, described how the QMT's proud history dates back to 1883, when the Queen's Glee Club was established. It was not until 1969, with the help and direction of Queen's music professor Duane Bates, that the Queen's Glee Club made some important changes to its mandate, and formed the QMT.

The first production by the QMT was The Boyfriend, and in 1973 the QMT started performing in the Grand Theatre with the production of Wonderful Town.

By 1976, the QMT was entirely student-run, and in 1980 it produced an original musical, Maybe Next Time, which was written and directed entirely by Queen's students.

"It's been a huge part of my four years at Queen's," Goldberg reflected. "I'm always pretty amazed at the number of people who come out [for the productions] because it's a huge time commitment to students. It feels really 'together' and it's very exciting. When everything comes together it's a great feeling."

Renee Gopaul, who plays a princess of Ababu in QMT's Kismet, parties it up Saturday night with her folks. YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

Goldberg said she was looking forward to the QMT's alumni reunion and celebration, because "it's an opportunity for people in the [QMT's] past to get to know the students in the QMT now."

The QMT's alumni celebration left Professor Bates pleased. "This is a wonderful group of people. There is so much spirit, it's infectious. It's a real joy to look back and see former students," Bates said.

"Every year is special, and I thought the show was great. The talent has never been better," Bates said. "There are lots of new people, wonderful people who are going to go on to do wonderful things."

As QMT alumnus Alex Heath stated, "you can really see the influence of the QMT. They have really done a lot."

In fact, Jason Knight, a QMT alumnus himself, will be in a production of Les Miserables at the Neptune Theatre in Halifax this year. "The QMT is a great tradition," Knight remarked. "It's great that it continues to do so well." Alumnus Paul Seguin was involved in many of QMT's productions, including Bye Bye Birdie and Wonderful Town. Of his involvement with the QMT, Seguin commented, "you learn a lot. It involves a lot of people and I'm a great supporter of it. It's nice that the town supports it so well."

Jennifer Russel, treasurer for the QMT's Board of Directors, said, "the QMT is incredible. A musical ties a group of people together like nothing else."

BY ADAM EMERY

The house-hunting season has begun and Nancy Tatham of Queen's Town-Gown Liaison has some tips for first-time renters.

First, Tatham believes that there is no great rush for students to run out and sign a lease. "People should be out there shopping, not necessarily renting," she said.

"The urgency of finding a place largely depends on the size. There aren't very many six or seven person places out there—if you want one,

According to Tatham, it has become more popular for students to obtain eight-month rental agreements with their landlords. However, Tatham warns that "there seems to be a huge misconception that they can get an eight-month lease just because it starts Sept. 1. This just isn't true. The lease must specify that it is an eight-month lease."

Tatham also stressed the crucial importance of location. She said students should realize that if they're living on a block of 80 to 90 per cent student housing, then these blocks will be empty on holidays and open to crime.

"It is better to have a 60-40 student to non-student ratio, at least. It can be a nicer mix for a lot of people. Non-student houses will probably have that screwdriver you need to borrow while a student house would not," she like a human has been down there, then it hasn't been serviced," she said.

Heads Up house-hunters!

Many students make the mistake of assuming that these houses are built like the ones they live in at home. "Outlets are important. Many older places just do not have enough outlets. This can become a big problem for students with computers, stereos, etc.," she said.

Tatham also stressed that closet space is often problematic. "Some of the older places don't have closets. It was more common to have wardrobes when some houses were built," she said.

"Also, a lot of places don't have main lights. You will need to know if your place does, in case you need to bring extra lamps."

Tatham also believes that perhaps the most important part of the initial process of looking at the house is talking to the students currently living there.

"Ask the students if they have had any problems with the landlord making repairs. Find out how big their PUC bill is in the winter," she said.

The next important step is the actual signing of the lease. "Once you sign, you are bound by the lease," said Tatham. "The names that are on the lease are responsible. Everyone should sign it, even if the landlord says to just have one signer."

"Ask questions. If something doesn't sound right, don't be bullied or pressured by the landlord," said Tatham. "You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

Tatham also stressed that "a lease shouldn't be vague about what appliances are included. If something is unclear, have it written in the lease."

"If a place is an absolute sty, the landlord should be the first to say that the place will be cleaned. Otherwise, that's how you will get it. The closer the place is to looking reasonably sound, the better off you are," said Tatham.

Tatham offered one last piece of advice. "When you move in, a good idea is to go through the house and note down any problems. Make a copy and send it to the landlord so that both parties are aware of the conditions. Then, there will be no confusion when moving out with the landlord expecting you to pay for damage that was already there," she said.

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

...You are also shopping for a landlord. You are expecting someone to be interested in maintaining the property."

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

EQUALITY IN SPORTS?

"Equality in Sports" will be the topic of an open panel discussion in Dupuis Auditorium on Thursday, Jan. 27, at 8 p.m. The talk is sponsored by the AMS Women's Issues Committee. On the panel will be Men's Volleyball Coach Brenda Willis, Professor Geoff Smith, Sandra Levy from the Canadian National Field Hockey Team, and Claude Scilley, a Whig-Standard sports reporter.

QMA SPEAKER

Entrepreneur Marci Lipman will speak to the Queen's Marketing Association's annual National Marketing Conference Thurs. Jan. 27 at 3:45 pm at the Ambassador Hotel.

Lipman is the founder of Marci Lipman Inc, a Toronto-based company that designs art-to-wear fashions.

This year's conference, "Towards 2000...Marketing towards the '90s Consumer," features marketing experts from the retail and service sectors.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Tracing Canada's role in the "global village?" The Kingston Chapter of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs is hosting a conference, "Trends in Canadian Foreign Policy—The Increasing Integration of Aid, Trade and Security," on Jan. 29 in the Donald Gordon Conference Centre on Queen's campus.

Themes for discussion will include Aid, Trade and Security in a Changing Asian Order, Canada's Role in the Emerging Americas, Africa's Challenges to Canadian Foreign Policy, and European Security in the Face of Ethnic Conflict.

The registration fee for undergraduates is $25, and $35 for regular CIAA participants. To register, contact Xavier Furtao at 531-3855.

ENGINEERING COMPETITION

The Queen's Engineering Competition will be held this Wednesday and Thursday in Grant Hall. Students are invited to come and view engineering design projects all day, and Queen's Engineering Debating in the evening. At a technology showcase offered in Ellis Hall this Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m., seminars will be given by Microsoft Canada.

FOGGY ADVICE

Did you know???? Many spec-sporting students find themselves tired of walking out of frigid climes and into a warm house, thus causing their glasses fog up to oblivion. The advice to such people is to try this: walk into the house backwards for at least 15 steps. It works! You can thank Features Editor Alison Masemann for the tip.

WINTER REGISTRATION '94 10% Discount for Queen's Students

KIDS TO ADULTS
Beginners to Advanced
- Classical Ballet R.A.D.
- Modern Jazz, Tap
- Creative Movement (ages 3 to 7)
- Ballroom
- AEROBICS
- Pro Instructors

Come Dance with us...
See the difference!
Registration:
Wed., Jan. 26 to Fri.,
Jan. 28 - 5-8pm, &
Sat., Jan 29 1-3pm.

259 QUEEN STREET
DOWNTOWN 547-5678

KIM DONALDSON
Sales Rep.
530-0269
B.Comm.'88

NEED A HOME
for next year?
Why not buy one? Interest rates are sooo low!
House prices are sooo cheap!
I have many houses close to campus! Just let me know what kind of rent you can pay, find a few friends to live with, & I'll find you a good, clean home! I'll arrange the financing, too! It's easy!
Let's talk! Call NOW!

EURAIL PASS SALE

PRICES have increased for 1994!

BUT... we have a limited supply of 1993 stock.

Don't delay!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

JOIN US !!! TODAY ➔

SUMMER JOB FAIR '94

GRANT HALL

10:30 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

➔ JOIN US !!! TODAY

BROUGHT TO YOU BY CAREER PLANNING & PLACEMENT

Beer-brewing bout at Clark Hall

Silver anniversary for Golden Words contest

BY LAURIE NORTH

Twenty thirsty judges gathered in Clark Hall Saturday night for the 25th annual Golden Words Beer-Brewing contest.

The honorary Best Beer prize of a 50 litre keg of Brew Ha-Ha beer was given to Rene Masse for his Weizen (wheat) beer. "Phoenix Heavy," Rob Phoenix's dark, heavy beer, won a second-place prize: an $80 Brew Ha-Ha gift certificate. Third place and a $50 gift certificate from Brew Ha-Ha went to Mike Evans for his "M & M's Basement Brew."

All of the best brewers received a sweatshirt and a Master of Brewing Excellence certificate from Wee Mac's Brewing Supplies.

Queen's alumnus Ken Brodie presented the traditional award for the worst brew.

A new, improved "Brodie Bowl"—a white, ceramic bedpan mounted on a wooden trophy base—was filled with an unsavoury potion of the three worst beers. Detek Rice and Wade Coulter, the brewers of "Beaver Dry," the contest's worst beer, had the honour of sipping the mixture.

While drinking from the Brodie Bowl, second-time worst-beer brewers Rice and Coulter looked more like they were drinking poison. As most of the brew reached the floor, the crowd chanted, "lick the floor!"

This year, Rice revealed the secret to brewing an awful beer. "The chunks are flavour crystals," Rice said, referring to the unidentified floating particles on the surface of the opaque liquid.

David Prescott, special events coordinator for Golden Words, was very pleased with the quality of this year's entries. "The home brew dark and stout beers were almost on par with the brewer-own establishments' ales and lagers," he said.

This year's selection ranged in quality from pale ales, lagers and ambers similar to that of the microbreweries, to Guinness look-alikes that some judges compared to a thick, salty molasses. Swirling and sniffing, the judges were required to taste three or four of the entries and rate the overall appearance, flavour, bouquet and gastrointestinal effects of the beers.

However, some of the more cautious judges refrained from tasting certain aesthetically-unpleasing liquids. Tim Hughes, owner of Brew-Ha-Ha, refused to drink the "beer with dandruff." Lara Beaton, another beer connoisseur, observed that one of the dark stouts could "substitute for WD-40 motor oil," while a more challenging beverage "has to be strained with your teeth to get to your mouth."

Lori Thorlakson, assistant news editor for The Journal, said of the judging experience, "it gave me a better appreciation for real beer."

However, Thorlakson noted that the aroma produced by some of the beers did elicit a pang of nostalgia, reminding her of childhood trips to the marsupial room at the Calgary Zoo.

Surviving the winter freeze-up

BY GEOFF LANGDON

If the cold of recent weeks has your heating bills skyrocketing while you huddle under blankets, refusing to turn up the heat, you're not alone.

The Kingston chapter of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group has announced plans to educate the community on energy efficiency and repair some of the area's older, draftier houses. Many Kingston residents live in homes with leaky doors and windows. Coupled with older, inefficient furnaces, these houses waste money and energy.

Michael Crumme, the coordinator of the local OPIRG chapter, said his organization plans to perform free energy audits for low-income housing in the Kingston community.

Crumme said around 25 volunteers are needed to check the foundations, doors, windows and other usual trouble spots.

If needed, small repairs—such as caulking—would be done. OPIRG also plans to provide people with energy-saving tips, like using water-saver shower heads and fluorescent light bulbs.

OPIRG, an organization run and funded by students, conducts research on various social and environmental issues and educates the student population.

Training for energy audits is being provided through Queen Elizabeth Collegiate and Vocational Institute, in partnership with the Kingston Public Utilities Commission, Crumme said. The training will take place at the end of February, after Reading Week, with the work being done over several Saturdays in March.

"It's a little late to be starting it this year," explained Crumme. "We hope to start earlier next year. When it's this cold, some of the repairs like caulking are difficult to do."

As a new project in the area, he said, there will be "an opportunity to work some of the bugs out for next September," when they hope to continue the project.

If you are interested in helping out, contact Michael Crumme at 549-0066, or stop by OPIRG's office at the Grey House, at 51 Queen's Crescent.

Energy Saving Tips From OPIRG

- 1 Install an energy and water efficient showerhead. A showerhead costs $7-$15 and will save $10-$25 per person per year.
 - 2 Use plastic shrinkwrap around windows.
 - 3 Saves $8-$10 per window.
 - 4 Turn down your heat. For every one degree celsius lower, you save five per cent.
 - 5 Wrap your hot water pipes, especially the first six feet from the hot water tank. If you have a gas furnace, check special fire regulations.
 - 6 Use compact fluorescent bulbs. They last 10 times longer and are 60 per cent more efficient than regular incandescent bulbs.
 - 7 Caulk or weatherstrip around drafty windows and doors. Use special seasonal caulking for doors or windows you want to open in the spring.
 - 8 Fix leaky faucets. A faucet dripping at a rate of one drip per second over the course of one month wastes enough water to fill 16 bathtubs.
 - 9 Install a set of toilet dams. These hold back water in the tank, saving 10,000 litres of water per year per person.
- Use motion-sensors or timers for outside lights, especially when you will be away from the house.

Talking hats... hot-heads conquer cold

BY SARAH COOPER

1994 is off to a viciously cold start, and Queen's students, caught in the grip of a Siberian cold front, are finding their daily lives dictated by hostile Kingston weather.

In recognition of the influence of the weather on the Canadian psyche, The Journal offers a serious look at winter's effects on Queen's students, specifically focussing on their hats—who's wearing what and why.

Most students interviewed,

Dong Xiao Ping, Industrial Relations '93

Tim Strauch, Arts '97

PHOTOS BY TRICIA BAUMAN

to protect his frostbitten ears.

Ear muffs were not as plentiful as headbands though, which were worn predominantly by women. Renee Fergault (Arts '94/Eng '96) said the reason for this was, "headbands don't give you hat-head. If I didn't have to take it off, I'd wear a toque all day."

Fergault said that hat-wearing is a function of fashion as well as necessity. Kate McCartney (Arts '93) agreed. She said she was "a hat-person basically. I alternate my hats from the 'go to school hat' to the 'wool workout hat' if it's really cold. If it went to minus 50 though, I wouldn't go to school at all."

Tim Strauch (Arts '97) also mixes fashion with function, sporting a 3 foot long "soak hat." Strauch said, "this hat is supposed to be for skiers but I don't ski."

However, calling this the coldest year yet, Strauch said his "half scarf, half hat" has proven very useful.

Oliver Mansfeldt (Arts '92), wearing a flannel reversible, said the weather was "fiercely freezing," but added he was wearing his hat solely as a fashion statement.

Unlike Mansfeldt, function was Alex Fitzpatrick's (Arts '95) main priority. Donning a well-worn woolen toque, Fitzpatrick said, "my sister likes to make fun of me. That's why she gave me this hat. But it turned out to be a decent gift because it really serves its purpose."

In addition to the

Oliver Mansfeldt, Arts '92

woolen ski toques, headbands and fleecy jester's caps, there were many foreign styles on campus as well. They ranged from a Russian fur cap which was "good till it's 80 below" to a Chinese red bowler which Dong Xiao Ping (Industrial Relations '93) said kept her warm in both China and Canada.

As Leanne Warren (Arts '97) said, "this is a record year for toque wearing. Mine totally doesn't go with anything I wear, but I am prepared." Thus fashion and function—with a stress on the latter—are the reasons for hats on campus in 1994.

Alex Fitzpatrick, Arts '95

Marriott's campus monopoly questioned by "Gut Feeling" doesn't hide its finances, and they provide one of the best food operations in the country," he said.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

The University of Guelph does not contract out to large catering companies such as Marriott, but rather runs a "self-operated" food service.

Union Local 229 President John Platt also complained that the decision process is not open. He charged that "the university is doing everything to look as if they're accountable. In fact, they're rushing this thing through."

Merrell also expressed concern about the speed of the process. "It seems like they're trying to rush it. It looks like [university administrators] know what they want already. It looks like we're heading for the status quo."

Without free access to information, members of "Gut Feeling" insist, the system cannot be accountable. However, university and Marriott officials are not required to release information pertaining to their financial arrangement.

Motrow told The Journal that he hopes to put a request for proposals for the food contract out by early February, and select a contractor by early May.

"Gut Feeling" consists of rep-representatives from the Graduate Students' Society, West and Main Campus Residence Councils, Queen's Staff and Faculty Associations, the Canadian Unified Student Environment Network, and CUPE union locals 229 and 254. The group met for the first time on Thursday.

A representative from the Alma Mater Society was invited, but did not attend the meeting.

THE WAG
OUTFITTING COMPANY
MADE IN CANADA SINCE 1968
ORIGINAL BRAND

VISIBLE

FOR PRICES AND INFO CALL: 547-0864

Study on the French Riviera Oui!

Please send more information!

Earn up to one full year transferable Canadian university credits on a Canadian campus near Nice.

The Université canadienne en France offers courses in English or French. No French language skills necessary. Three semesters: Fall (September to December); Winter (January to April) Spring (May to June, six weeks.) Federal and Provincial student aid available. In Ontario phone 1-800-461-4030 Outside Ontario collect (705) 673-6513

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Province _____

Postal Code _____

Telephone _____

For more information contact the Université canadienne en France, Laurentian University Sudbury, Ontario P3E 2C6

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

WEDNESDAY JANUARY 26th MONDAY JANUARY 31st

SCOTT B. SYMPATHY
AND
THE LOWEST
OF THE LOW

AUDIO VIDEO
HIP-A-THON

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

clark hall pub • unfknblvbl.!

Wednesday Doctor Teeth LIVE If you're not skankin' you're just spankin'!	Thursday Science Formal Smoker with DJ Joey Simpsons & Seinfeld	Friday Ritual with DJ Archie Doors open at noon tubar friday night with DJ Ryan	Saturday Psycho Psaturday with DJ Lisa Open Mon-Sat 8pm - 1am Fri Ritual noon - 6pm
---	---	---	--

Super Bowl Sunday
at the Quiet Pub!
6 PM
WIN A GIANT "BUD" BANNER!

THE BANDS ARE BACK IN TOWN!

FRI. AFTERNOON LIVE!
TODD McRAE & RICHARD GOGUEN
4 PM

BOOK YOUR PRIVATE PARTY TODAY !!!
UPSTAIRS JDUC • 545-2740

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

THE PUB PAGE

CROSS CAMPUS BRIEFS

Controversy at U of Manitoba over assault

THE UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA
The Manitoban

According to The Manitoban, a woman who reported that she had been sexually assaulted by two males was subsequently rebuffed by Winnipeg police, who determined that the assault had never occurred. The police said that a hospital examination did not substantiate her claims, and an interview with the woman led to their belief that the assault never took place.

University of Manitoba Women's Centre member Jen Davis asked, "What the hell does this say about police?"

THE UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO
The Gazette

The new basketball film The Air Up There, starring Kevin Bacon, has a Western connection.

Members of the Western Mustangs Cheerleading squad appear as St. Joseph's University cheerleaders in the movie.

More than a dozen cheerleaders participated, spending a day last January filming at Hamilton's Copps Coliseum, doing their usual routines. They were paid between $80 and $120 per person for their performances.

CONCORDIA UNIVERSITY
The Concordian

Michelle Soso, who was fired from her student government position as Vice-President (Services) for "unsatisfactory" performance at Concordia University, apparently doesn't have many friends at the campus newspaper. The Concordian ran a picture of Soso beside the story of her firing, and included the following compassionate cutline below the photo: "Dear Michelle: Merry Christmas. You're fired."

LAURENTIAN UNIVERSITY
The Lambda

Brian Beauchamp, a student at Laurentian University, received a letter in January from the Laurentian Dean of Humanities, asking him to withdraw from the women's studies course he was enrolled in. Beauchamp was asked to withdraw immediately from WOMN 1005EC for "conduct which threatens harm to the proper functioning of the University Programs or activities." Apparently, Beauchamp has been boisterously contesting what he considers a bias against men in the course material.

Beauchamp called the course a "neo-Nazi training ground for the feminist movement." He plans on staying in the course, despite the letter.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
The Varsity

U of T has a new Women's Issues officer for the Students' Administrative Council, and she's the David Ruddell said, "it's fairly obvious that I'm a man. I freely admit that, but it doesn't prevent me from doing the job."

But Uma Sarkar, president of the Arts and Science Students' Union, said that the role of the position has been undermined, and sees Ruddell's election as underscoring the SAC executive's deliberate exclusion of women from politics.

"I don't know," said Ruddell. "You know how they say it sometimes takes two women to do the job of a man? Well, I wonder just how many men it takes to do the job of one woman?" Seems Ruddell's term as Women's Issues officer will be an interesting one.

THE UNIVERSITY OF GUELPH
The Ontario

Last year, the Central Student Association at the University of Guelph overtook a restructuring program to ensure equality among its elected members, and one of the steps taken was the elimination of the president portfolio. Recently, however, the commissioners realized that CSA's status as a corporation meant that they had to have a president—by law. Newly appointed corporate president David Cagle called the move a "complete serendipity."

Brrrrrrrrs-eye view of snowy Kingston.

FILE PHOTO

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS

An Clachan Apartment Complex (near West Campus)

Rent: $602 per month

utilities included
stove and fridge provided

FREE PARKING available

September leases

short term lease
to August 30, 1994

NO RENT INCREASE Sept. '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

EXECUTIVE ELECTIONS

Open Forums

Tuesday, January 25

7:00pm, Jean Royce Hall, West Campus

Wednesday, January 26

7:00pm, Main TV Room, Victoria Hall

Tuesday, February 1

2:00pm, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC

COME OUT &
MEET THE CANDIDATES

OPINIONS

A night of Yuk Yuk's: It's just a joke...?

Something about what happened with Yuk Yuk's just isn't funny. And it might be more than just their jokes.

Before Yuk Yuk's comedian Wayne Fleming appeared on Jan. 10 in Leonard Hall as part of the Welcome Back Week festivities organized by the Alma Mater Society Campus Activities Commission, Welcome Back Week co-chairs Craig Laurie and Nancy Hyndman added a clause to the contract provided by Yuk Yuk's.

The contract allowed the co-chairs to clarify their expectations about the show. The clause, added by the co-chairs, was designed to ensure the comedian would not violate the AMS Mission Statement which says that the AMS "shall strive to be a non-racist, non-sexist, non-homophobic and otherwise inclusive organization."

With that in mind, comedian Wayne Fleming proceeded to present a series of jokes centring around his homophobic uncle's reaction to gay male waitstaff. Or did the jokes centre around the stereotypical renditions of gay men?

The audience that night seemed to think the jokes centred around the gay male waitstaff. And the audience that night seemed to think the jokes were not funny. According to the comedian, the same jokes succeeded at an AIDS benefit. Also, according to the comedian, he was having a bad night.

Wayne Fleming did not get paid that night. He did not get paid because he broke contract with the AMS when he told what were perceived to be homophobic jokes.

Was the humour supposed to be seen in the depiction of the homophobic uncle? Was the audience supposed to see the ridiculousness of the uncle's behaviour with comedy as the medium lighting the way?

Or was the audience supposed to laugh at the depiction of the gay male waitstaff?

Was the humour simply lost in the delivery? Or was the audience so uncomfortable with the material that they couldn't see the humour in it?

When other people come to speak at Queen's, they usually rely simply on knowing their audience. Jamil Al-Amin (H. Rap Brown) or Naomi Wolf would not present the AMS Speakers Committee with a contract for the clarification of expectations, and the AMS would not ask them to refrain from deviating from the realms of the AMS mission statement.

Jamil Al-Amin made what are considered by some to be homophobic statements. Should the same standards apply?

Most definitely we would not want to censor speakers in any way. Speakers offer their opinions and beliefs as simply their own, although some attribute them to a higher force.

Usually, after a speech, the speaker is given a chance to interact with the audience. And usually, during that time, audience members are critical of what they heard.

With a comedy act, however, that chance is not afforded. The audience is not a receptor of information, (to be mulled over, pondered and then possibly responded to), but rather the audience becomes part of the act.

Comedy takes away grounds for retort and closes the door on discussion. Anyone can hide behind the excuse, "it's just a joke."

But that's not the case anymore. We recognize that comedy is a shared experience, reflecting shared values and beliefs.

Does that make it right for the AMS to break contract with Wayne Fleming? Yuk Yuk's agreed to break contract on the grounds that Fleming lit a cigarette in a non-smoking room. Had he not lit up, would their answer have been different?

We cannot answer this question definitively because we do not know his exact material—and even then there might not be a definite answer.

While we applaud the AMS for reacting swiftly and with determination, there is something inherently dangerous in having a government decide for us how we should be entertained. While no one should have to pay for homophobic or any kind of offensive humour, a fine line is walked in the name of political correctness.

Before we praise the people who didn't laugh for their principles and virtuosity, we should remember that they may have been governed by the correctness of the day.

If one thing is for certain, it is that Queen's, they usually misjudged his audience. He thought that jokes that were funny at an AIDS benefit would be funny for a university audience as well. But, just perhaps, his progressive university audience wasn't that progressive yet. Then again, maybe he just wasn't funny.

Gay-bashing bashed

The recent sentencing of Mark Scissons, convicted of a vicious assault motivated by homophobia, proffers hope that the justice system can work for survivors of gay-bashing attacks. But while the courts have given us cause for optimism, the root cause of the attack, a hatred or fear of gays and lesbians, is still far from extinct at Queen's.

Scissons was given three months imprisonment and a year of probation for his attack on former Queen's student Peter Troyer. This sentence is arguably severe for an assault case, and as such it sends a message: gay-bashing is unacceptable in our society, and therefore, will be treated as a serious crime.

This message is encouraging because the justice system often is perceived as unsympathetic. People who survive crimes such as gay-bashing or sexual assault are reluctant to approach the police, skeptical that "the system" will prove unhelpful, leading only to drawn-out suffering and ultimately disappointment.

There is a widespread (and often accurate) notion that the police and courts are, as instruments of authority, inherently conservative. It is alleged that they will not react quickly to the concerns of gays and lesbians, women, and minorities, all of whom they consider unreasonably demanding.

The decision in this case suggests otherwise. But it must be seen in context. The Troyer case was very clear-cut. Five people witnessed the attack, which was entirely unprovoked. The assailant's hatred of gays was obvious, since he shouted insults while he lashed at Troyer. Essentially, a homophobic man attacked an innocent gay man, without provocation.

But how would the courts have handled a case with cloudier details? What if this episode had taken place without witnesses—would there have been sufficient evidence to establish guilt? What if the nature of the assault had been less obvious? Very often, discrimination and abuse do not take place in public, and do not manifest themselves in such an obvious form. The justice system, of course, is far from perfect. While acknowledging that the system is unable to redress all forms of discrimination, praise must be given to the courts for sending an emphatic message in the case of Peter Troyer.

Although it is difficult to quantify such perceptions, it seems that in recent years, the justice system has become more intolerant of homophobia.

Universities also have to work at becoming more intolerant of homophobia. Some assume that universities are less susceptible to prejudice than wider society. There is truth to the notion that universities are more progressive, but they lead society by creating debate and awareness about issues typically ignored in mass society.

Many first-year students arrive at Queen's unsure of what terms like "racism," "sexism," and "homophobia" really mean. Thanks to lively discourse and debate on campus, their awareness and understanding are increased.

Nonetheless, homophobia continues to dictate the thinking and behaviour of many people. And Queen's is no utopia of enlightened progressivism. Many of the attitudes which students are quick to characterize "blue-collar" persist at all levels of society and, not surprisingly, at university. The assailant in Troyer's attack could very easily have been a Queen's student.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

COVERAGE OF AL-AMIN LECTURE SLANTED

THE EDITOR.

The article covering the recent lecture by Imam Jamil Al-Amin entitled "Social Justice in the Americas" which appeared in the Jan. 18 issue of The Journal completely missed the focus of the lecture. Unfortunately the article gives a misleading depiction of the Imam and his speech beginning with the title chosen for the piece: "Former Black Panther makes controversial statements in speech." This, in combination with specific quotes and misquotes included in the article, gives one the image of a lecture which was delivered in a confrontational manner against homosexuals and other religions. In contrast, the Kingston Whig-Standard on Monday, Jan. 17. In addition, for those interested in listening to what was said, a videotape of the lecture is available.

For those who are interested in a brief, more accurate overview of Al-Amin's lecture on "Social Justice in the Americas," I would suggest that they read the coverage by the Kingston Whig-Standard on Monday, Jan. 17. In addition, for those interested in listening to what was said, a videotape of the lecture is available.

—MONA RAHMAN
CHAIRPERSON, QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY MUSLIM STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

president of the Muslim Students Association, said "you have people with different views and that's acceptable...there are basic things in Islam, but there is room for different views." This statement was taken out of context. It was actually in response to the author's statement that some of the questions in the discussion period seemed to challenge the speaker's views of society. None of the statements made by Al-Amin during the lecture were out of line with Islam (may Allah forgive me if I am mistaken for indeed Allah is all-knowing).

For those who are interested in a brief, more accurate overview of Al-Amin's lecture on "Social Justice in the Americas," I would suggest that they read the coverage by the Kingston Whig-Standard on Monday, Jan. 17. In addition, for those interested in listening to what was said, a videotape of the lecture is available.

—MONA RAHMAN
CHAIRPERSON, QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY MUSLIM STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

BITING CRITICISM OF ENTERTAINMENT SECTION

THE EDITOR.

Once again self-indulgence is running wild in The Journal Entertainment section. I refer to the recent review of "Grumpy Old Men" [Friday, Jan. 18]. I do not want to engage in an argument on the merits of this film because it was impossible to ascertain your opinion in the midst of your inane banter and your really pertinent statements like "this movie really tends to work." I bring this point up because I want to protect the standards that Queen's students have worked so hard to establish. Hopefully, we can learn from your ignorance and move towards intelligent critiques which attempt to arrive at a point.

There were a few misquotes in the article which are misleading. In one case, Al-Amin is quoted as saying, "men are born with the inclination to do what is natural. But their errors make them Christians, Jews, and other things." The speaker was quoting a hadith (saying of the Prophet Mohammed (peace be upon him)) and actually stated, "but their parents make them Christians, Jews." What was meant as "to do what is natural" in this quote is to go back to the Creator, as [Al-Amin] explained prior to this statement.

The article also states that "When asked whether Al-Amin's statements were out of line with the Muslim faith, Mona Rahman, president of the Muslim Students Association, said 'you have people with different views and that's acceptable...there are basic things in Islam, but there is room for different views.'" This statement was taken out of context. It was actually in response to the author's statement that some of the questions in the discussion period seemed to challenge the speaker's views of society. None of the statements made by Al-Amin during the lecture were out of line with Islam (may Allah forgive me if I am mistaken for indeed Allah is all-knowing).

—MONA RAHMAN
CHAIRPERSON, QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY MUSLIM STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION

ions without regard for expertise or insight. Reviews are based on opinions; however, educated opinions or ones backed by some knowledge of the medium should be expected. I would not critique a Clarinet recital.

There are certain expectations a reader has with a film review. Basically, we would expect that the writer would know something about films. So, here we arrive at the main problem. I do not want to be blunt and tell you that you know almost nothing about films, however, you know almost nothing about films. If you needed to consult a Video Movie Guide to discover that Lemmon and Matthau have worked together before, then you should not even be allowed to go into a movie theatre—let alone write reviews.

How can anyone take your review seriously when you make the ridiculous statement that "The Odd Couple wasn't just a syndicated nightmare from the 70s, but started out as a movie." When I read this aloud in the drama department, I heard blood vessels bursting everywhere. I equate this with a music critic asking if Paul McCartney was in a band before "Wings." There is this play with the same title and the same premise by this guy named Neil Simon.

So we have established that you know very little about films. I do not want to make more of this than it is, but it is important that we have some standards. If the editor is trying to choose between either typed idiocy or a blank page, I say "go blank." It leads to a much larger question of discrimination on the basis of ability. Should we be allowed to discriminate against stupid people? Is it their fault that they're stupid? They are only at fault if they start inundating an unsuspecting public with their uninformed ideas. If they keep quiet, then they are free to remain happily ignorant.

Just a few quick points to further attack your work:
1. I have a problem with your generalizations that place me and all twentysomethings sitting on a couch watching "Melrose Place."
2. Is it our fault that Jack Lemmon is in your "someone-my-parents-like" category? We are lucky to have had the privilege to watch this man work. You must have parents with taste. Adopted?
3. What is meant by "deep-set irrational hatred?" Am I to assume that across the western world "We Hate Walt" cults are springing up with the intention of finally ridding the world of this pest?

4. I guess for someone who would still find humour in a line about "driving to tuna town," comedy is not an area of expertise. On the topic of that generalization: funny enough, this does not get a laugh "no matter who your friends are." It may seem shocking, but my friends and I have moved past these types of jokes.

The major issue here is the credibility of the reviews. Just because stupid people are writing dumb articles, does not mean they have to be printed. The Entertainment editor is, therefore, truly at fault. The section should be called "What The Entertainment Editor and His Friends Like." Then, at

What do you think about the tuition increases?

"Mmm. More Kraft Dinner."
—TREVOR SHAW
ARTSCI '95

"We're not getting anything in return for it."
—JEN GILLINGS ARTSCI '95
DAVIS HILL ARTSCI '95

"If you want to stay, you've got to pay."
—MELANIE GRAHAM
ARTSCI '95

"We accept the increase as long as there's accompanied improvement in the Student Aid package."
—KAREN LOCKHEAD
JE SS DUTTON ARTSCI '94

least, readers would know to stay clear. At present, we are assuming that these reviews should be taken seriously as honest attempts to open a dialogue about a piece of music or a film. If this is not the case, be honest with us and we can leap past to the personals.

—BRAD SIMPSON
ARTSCI '95
OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

Due to a production error, Basil Girgrah did not receive credit for his Third Text Opinions piece published in the Jan. 22 Journal, titled "Straight Men Missing Something." The Journal apologizes for the omission. Sorry!

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey deVilla
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Marko Glickman
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey deVilla
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Roberto Furze	LITERARY LAPSUS EDITOR Megan Nichols
FEATURES EDITOR Alison Masemann	ASSISTANT NEWS Brook Mardland Brad Elder Lori Thorlaxson

BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie	ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Harrier	SALES REPRESENTATIVE Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE Stuart Kedwell	HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao

CONTRIBUTORS
Tricia Bauman, Rob Camp, Lisa Chen-Wing, Sarah Cooper, Brent Davis, Martin Davison, Frank Dixon, Adam Emery, Sarah English, Nicholas Garrison, Yodit Roche Johnson, Kristen Kunas, Owlin Lambeck, Geoff Langdon, Francis Martinetto, Melissa Nazar, Andrew McAllister, Philip A. McBride, Rob McRae, Michael Moss, Laurie North, Andre Nowakowski, Chris Price, Kate Schumaker, Katie Triggs, Andrew Turner, Russell Vance

Real Live Slacker

BY JOEY DEVILLA

MORRISON'S RESTAURANT

Open
5:30 a.m. to 7:45 p.m.
MONDAY TO SATURDAY

SUNDAY 8:00a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
(Breakfast Only)

318 KING STREET EAST

Queen's University School of Music

Visiting Scholar

NATHALIYA KHOMA, cellist

Recital

Friday, January 28, 1994 - 8 p.m.
(with Allison Gagnon, piano)

Masterclass

Saturday, January 29, 1994 - 2 to 5 p.m.

Adm. to either event:
$5 (general) $3 (Student/Seniors) at door

Both events: Dunning Hall Auditorium

ROOTS WINTER WIPEOUT SALE

SHOES AND BOOTS FROM $59.99

34 PRINCESS STREET
546-7668

OPEN FORUM

RACIST INCIDENTS DO HAPPEN AT QUEEN'S

THE EDITOR,

The Alma Mater Society Committee against Racism and Ethnic Discrimination, or RED, is a group of students from all ethnic backgrounds dedicated, as outlined in its mandate, "to provide both education and advocacy on issues pertaining to the experiences of racial and ethnic minorities at Queen's." We provide a vehicle for people to voice their grievances on any issue which falls into this realm. RED will be vocal in taking stands against racism on campus, while at the same time seeking to outline what constitutes offensive behaviour for ethnic minorities.

People must realize that incidents offensive to minorities happen everyday on campus. Whether it be blatant or subtle, anything from a physical assault or a statement made innocently may be injurious. "The overt, systemic and historic racism so entrenched in our institutions and socialization must be acknowledged by all of us-and changed." This quote from [the RED] mandate is not meant to be a statement of provocation, but a provocative statement. It is meant [to induce] all [members] of Queen's diverse community to contemplate issues of racism and ethnic discrimination and to realize it is just as real to minorities now as it was 50 years ago.

In addressing issues of curriculum, orientation traditions and others, we wish for people to understand that "our objective is not to 'divide and conquer,' but to empower ourselves, educate our community and advocate change." This, and only this, is what RED is all about.

—GREG FRANKSON
CON-ED '97

STOP THE TUITION HIKES!

THE EDITOR,

Prior to being elected in 1990, the NDP at least paid lip service to its policy of eliminating tuition fees (user fees) for post-secondary education. That policy reflected the fact that tuition represents the most visible obstacle to post-secondary education for women, people of colour, aboriginal students and working people in general. Shortly after being elected into office, the NDP actually implemented deeper funding cuts to post-secondary education than the previous Liberal government would have dared. Since being elected the NDP has axed student grants, eliminated OHIP provisions for visa students, and rammed through the so called "social contract."

Now they are attempting to get away with outrageous tuition hikes which will make university even less accessible for less privileged people. The tactics of the NDP are worse than cynical. By floating the concept of a 50 per cent tuition hike, the NDP thinks it can get away with hikes of anywhere between 10 and 25 per cent. A 10 per cent tuition hike represents an increase five times the rate of inflation. Average earnings (in constant dollars) for working people have been rolled back to levels not seen since the mid-1970s. Since the mid 1970s tuition has INCREASED by over 200 per cent. Meanwhile, the percentage of federal income tax which is paid by corporations has dropped from 50 per cent in 1950 to less than 10 per cent today. The decision to thus penalize students has nothing to do with lack of finances and everything to do with the distribution of power in society, i.e. the corporations have it and we don't.

NDP apologists are willing to claim a tuition hike of anything less than 50 per cent a "victory" for students. Yet, students know the truth—any tuition hike will necessarily increase the amount of money students must borrow to attend university and decrease the number of women, international students, people of colour, single parents and working people who can afford to go to school.

The NDP revealed how low it was willing to sink to extract concessions from working people when it implemented the "social contract." Now the NDP wants campus administrations to use the same model for implementing budget cuts. The NDP states that the pro-tuition hike stand of Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA), supported by our own Queen's Alma Mater Society, is realistic, in an effort to undercut the position taken by the Canadian Federation of Students which calls for abolition of tuition fees. Likewise, local administrations are bringing in student union executives and asking them to determine what should be cut. Administrations will be looking for students to legitimize funding cuts to women's programmes, lesbian and gay studies, black history courses, arts programmes, libraries, teaching assistants, staff cuts and roll-backs in addition to those of the "social contract," day care provisions and more.

Students cannot fall victim to the divide and conquer tactics of the NDP and university administrations. Nor can we allow students to be pitted against staff and faculty. Students, staff and faculty all have an interest in fighting the cuts and establishing a truly accessible education system.

We cannot rely on the NDP any more than we could rely on the Liberals or the Tories. Nor can we rely on "student" organizations like OUSA who are attempting to extend the corporate agenda to education.

The Canadian Federation of Students has called for a national day of action January 26 against the fee hikes. Students can: organize petitions and sign up lists of students who want to get involved; get in contact with other groups who want to organize against tuition hikes and the cuts; involve other campus groups and unions who are facing attacks, such as university staff, teaching assistants and faculty; and pressure the AMS to support anti-tuition hike initiatives and drop their legitimization of budget cuts.

We must make our voices heard!
—SEAN SCOTT
INTERNATIONAL SOCIALISTS

QMT RESPONDS: KISMET HANDLED WITH SENSITIVITY

THE EDITOR,

I am pleased to be in a position to respond to the following question posed in the editorial which appeared in the Tuesday [Jan. 18] Journal, "Why did Queen's Musical Theatre choose to stage a play which could potentially generate such controversy and criticism?"

Each spring the Board of Directors of QMT considers about ten musicals as possibilities for the next year's show. Shows are assessed on the basis of the quality of the script and musical score, the number of male and female roles and the type of dancing involved. Most of the musicals available to us were written in the USA in the and 1950s and 60s, when western culture found stories which blatantly depict racist and sexist views amusing and acceptable. Needless to say, our annual decision is usually quite difficult. A few years ago we chose not to consider Showboat, because racial inequality is rarely entertaining. Likewise, Hair was shelved last year since it demands both gender and racial equity in the casting (consequently it was not reasonable to attempt in the whitewash of Queen's).

This year we chose to produce Kismet. The strong story line provided a breath and depth of characterization often lacking in musicals. The music, based on the works of the composer Borodin, was both challenging and stirring. The exotic setting gave our designers, for example of the costumes and set, something substantial to work with. We trusted Ken Jacobsen and the rest of the production staff with the task of successfully portraying a foreign culture in an historical context within the confines of an often inaccurate script.

I hope that QMT's production of Kismet, and any controversy that arises, will rouse people out of their passive acceptance of entertainment. The issue is not whether slave girls actually existed in medieval Baghdad, because the idea of women as objects-property-of-men is present in societies world-wide, throughout history. Modern western civilization is equally guilty of perpetrating abhorrent views of women, albeit in a somewhat less overt fashion. Perhaps Kismet audiences will reflect on their own ideas about equality and justice, in addition to enjoying a highly entertaining production.

I am confident that the problems inherent in a group of Canadian university students performing a play set in medieval Baghdad but written in the US in the 1960s have been handled by the production staff of Kismet with sensitivity and respect. I encourage you to refrain from any further pronouncements regarding the artistic interpretation or historical integrity of QMT's production of Kismet until you see it for yourself. It opened Thursday, Jan. 21 at the Grand Theatre and runs until Saturday, Jan. 29.

—JESSICA GOLDBERG
PRESIDENT, BOARD OF DIRECTORS,
QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE

IS AFFIRMATIVE ACTION RACIST?

One of the more controversial issues of contemporary social philosophy is the policy found in most North American university admissions, admission offices and hiring programs: affirmative action. A common argument against affirmative action is that it is merely reverse discrimination: while the victim has changed, the immorality of racial discrimination has not. This argument, however, is too simple. It does not understand the complex nature of the premises behind the numerous arguments and definitions of affirmative action; it portrays the argument as a childish reaction to the serious problem of a history of inequality. It is important, then, to examine one argument in order to see what truly lies beneath it. In short, does reverse discrimination really form the base of affirmative action, or is there more at work here?

One thinker who presents a version of affirmative action in a comprehensive social theory is the liberal John Rawls. He calls affirmative action 'the difference principle.' Rawls argues that in a just society wealth must be redistributed from the rich to the poor. His reasoning is that it would be unjust to permit some people to prosper from social and economic advantages while others do not; this is unjust because specific social and economic advantages would be a favoured skin colour, natural talents or inherited family wealth. These type of advantages, Rawls argues, are not earned but given by chance, and accordingly, they must be redistributed to those who were not as fortunate. If I awoke one morning to the popping of flashbulbs, for example, and discovered that I was a close relative of the Queen of England it would be very difficult to argue that this relation was rightfully and wholeheartedly mine. Obviously, this relation happened by pure fortune, so if I profit by it, it is not unjust to redistribute some of my good fortune to those who were not as lucky: relatives of the King of France, for example. The point of the difference principle is that to some extent our success is not determined or earned by us, but gained by chance; at the same time, to some extent our lack of prosperity occurs out of pure and haphazard misfortune. To level the difference between the two, Rawls concludes, by redistributing gains made from fortunate qualities is just.

There are three important ideas that lie beneath Rawls' version of affirmative action. The first is a notion of the rationality of people. Rawls' argument hinges on the assertion that everyone has the ability to rationally conceive of what is just and unjust without reference to personal values. In easier terms, we have access to an intuitive notion of justice which is not influenced by notions of Christianity, Islam or any other doctrine. We easily see that to prosper from good fortune while others do not is unjust. The key to this value-free access is rationality: people are rational.

The second assumption is that, evidently, advantages are bestowed on those who have certain talents, skin colour or inherited wealth. And that these characteristics are somehow separated from the actual person; these are only contingent qualities that are not an important part of the person. Accordingly, the redistribution of wealth gained by fortune is not the same as redistributing wealth that was earned through hard work. The final assumption is the most important because it is the sum of the first two. Essentially, Rawls' argument asserts that society is worth changing. Not only is it evident to our rationality that the uneven distribution of wealth by contingent qualities is unjust, but we also see that it is a worthwhile cause to try to change it. The world is a mutable and mouldable place. More importantly, programs like the difference principle or affirmative action are not designed to correct for past injustices; instead they are designed to ensure present and future equality for everyone. Even though I, personally, am not eligible for the redistribution of wealth now, if in the future my natural charm and talents fail me, if I prove to be lacking in some way, then I am eligible. The point is not to level a playing field slanted from past injustices, but to create a stable equilibrium of equality for the present and the future.

There are many possible objections to Rawls' presentation of affirmative action. What is important to remember, however, is that many of the theories of contemporary social philosophy are concerned with the future, and rely on popular notions (like rationality). It is important, then, to see what lies at the base of some of these arguments because, in the end, they may be less concerned with discrimination and inflicting damage on the majority, and more concerned with equality than they first suggest.

—MANNING DOHERTY, ARTS '95

PARENT RESOURCE CENTRE

Parents Please Come in with your Children
Watch for Planned Events for Children

New Winter Hours

Monday to Friday
5:30 - 9:30 PM

Beginning Monday, January 24.

Volunteers Needed:
Please sign up at the Parent Resource Centre in Lower Ceilidh of JDUC whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just,

whatsoever things are pure,
whatsoever things are lovely,
whatsoever things are of good report;
if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise,
think on these things.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians 4:8

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00), and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS
HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

Faculty of Arts and Science

NOTICE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 28, 1994

IS THE FINAL DATE TO ADD WINTER TERM HALF COURSES (WITH PERMISSION OF INSTRUCTORS)

AND

TO DROP FULL FALL/WINTER COURSES WITHOUT ACADEMIC FAILURE

What is...

- a "self-serve" service bureau

computer technology at your fingertips

- a scanning resource

scan pictures, slides or negatives for use in essays, reports, resumes, flyers, logos or just about anything.

- colour output

computer file output on photographic quality prints, Canon colour laser (C LE 550), or poster-size OisplayMaker up to 36" x 130"; media: transparencies, glossy, t-shirt transfers, labels, translucent film, adhesive paper, colour Photocopies

- B & W laser printing

300, 600 x 1200 dpi to full-bleed 11 x 17

- hourly computer rental

pc or mac, starting at $5.00 per hour, all major software.

- computer courses

desktop publishing, word processing & graphic design software

209 Wellington st. 547-5700

OPEN FORUM

RUSSIA AND ECONOMICS AT QUEEN'S:
SERIOUS STUFF

THE EDITOR.

Last Monday I began an exceptional class. It is exceptional because of who teaches it, a Russian economist named Vladimir Popov, and because there are only four students. It is also a class that seriously worries me.

The course is on the Russian economy now, what's wrong with it and how to fix it. Russia is in a depression more serious than the Great Depression of the 1930s. Average monthly income is US$ 300. Unemployment is terrible, crime is worse, and the Russian people have been humiliated. Yesterday, they were a superpower with a successful space program, great Hockey teams and the world's respect. Now they're a basket case, begging for handouts.

This combination of economic hardship and national humiliation is the classic recipe for violent extremism, militant nationalism, and fascism. In Russia, the personification of these detestable 'isms' is found in Vladimir Zhiranovsky. Why did Russians vote for him? After all, most Russians are peace-loving people. According to Prof. Popov, Mr. Zhiranovsky was able to successfully use Western [election] campaign techniques and television to reach Russian voters. While other party leaders were uninteresting and condescending, Mr. Zhiranovsky spoke at "a thousand words per minute," explained his policies to the people and offered hope. He said he would improve the economy, fight crime and work for social justice. Finally, during the campaign, he did not mention the expansionist and fascist ideas outlined in his book. Most Russians were not even aware of his book and the press made little mention of it. With all this in mind, one can see how his party got so many votes. In reality, when Mr. Zhiranovsky starts to rant and rave about declaring war on Germany, he is only speaking for a small minority in Russia. Unfortunately, he now has a great deal of power and he is dangerous.

So, that's the situation in Russia: the poor economic climate is leading to political instability. How Yeltsin and his economic reformers are trying to solve it is also scary. Until a few days ago, the Russian economic reform was led by Yegor Gaidar, who is a monetarist. Monetarists believe in the teachings of Milton Freedman (makes economics sound like some kind of voodoo religion, hmmm?). Freedman believes that an economy can be managed by controlling the supply of money, or in other words the total amount of cash in circulation. The theory is that by keeping tight controls on the money supply, inflation can be kept down. The idea in Russia's case is that a low inflation means stability, which in turn encourages investment and growth. However, theories that look good on paper don't always work in the real world. Ronald Reagan, Brian Mulroney and Margaret Thatcher were all monetarists.

John Maynard Keynes (who is Zeus in the hierarchy of economic Gods) once said, "madmen in authority who hear voices in the air are distilling their frenzy from some academic scribbler of a few years back." Milton Freedman is a brilliant man, and monetarism has had several successes, however Keynes' warning does make me stop and think. Is Yeltsin taking the best approach? Yeltsin now appears to be abandoning the shock therapy of tight monetary policy, but what is he going to put in its place?

The economic situation in Russia is critical, and because of widespread hardship, radicals and nationalists are gaining the upper hand. If the economic situation is not solved soon, we could all suffer the consequences. Remember, Hitler, like Mr. Zhiranovsky, was voted into power during a depression.

This brings me to my final point and what concerns me the most. Many of my fellow 4th year economic students aren't thinking about practical economic issues. Only four students are taking the course on Russia. Queen's has one of the best economics programs in the country and I believe the administration showed great foresight in hiring a man born and raised in Russia to teach its MBA and economics students. What a great opportunity for us. What scares me is that many of my peers have chosen to take courses such as Game Theory, mainly because they believe it is an easier course.

Canada can not afford to give Russia substantial amounts of financial aid, but Canada can offer insight and expertise. Meanwhile, my peers are playing mental chess games in their ivory towers and refusing to use the tools they have been given for practical purposes. In places like Russia, economics is about things far more serious than games.
—ROD BOOTHBY
ARTS '93

The Opinions editor encourages all members of the Queen's community to express their viewpoints no any given subject. The Opinions section strives to present all sides of an issue fairly and equally. Letters that are deemed hateful or libelous (as defined by the Ontario Human Rights Code) towards any group or individual, will not be printed. Letters must not exceed 500 words and must be accompanied by the author's name, year, faculty, and telephone number. The deadline for all Opinions submissions is Sunday at 2:00 pm for Tuesday issues and Wednesday at 5:30 pm for Friday issues. The Journal reserves the right to edit and/or refuse any and all submissions. Confidentiality may be available on request.

The Opinions section is a forum for your ideas - don't miss the opportunity to express them.

LITERARY LAPSES

Carmina

Anais Nin

Are you the queen of sexual existentialism

or are you smiling

right now

in afternoon literary intercourse delight

...and do you

shave your arm pits

and are you special...

send a smile

to the bedside

dusk before you smirk

in reverie at such uneventful

and jaded

questions...you are frightening to my effeminate

Machismo.

Francis Martinette

Dark Blue

I stand upon the embankment,
Eyes towards nowhere
Gazing into the deep
Blue.

It feels like Poison reaching
For the inner areas
Of my retina.

Not turning to My comrades
I revel in
A new kind of Blindness.

Martin Davison

Mouthful of Imagination

Wishing never worked at all.
And never did a well-planned call
Open long closed gates.
But lessons lost are left to wish Alone amid this stream
I fish, catching clouds of indecision.

So reeling like a ship unsteady minds will lurch
Until they're ready to wet dry lips of bitter doubt.

And yet this stream goes quickly slipping
I, at its bank,
And gently sipping shallow time
in slow mouthfuls of imagination.

Philip A. McBride

Boy

I don't even know you!

Why then do I want to see you and listen to you and perhaps, even dare to touch you
so badly?

I'm obsessed,
like the fucking perfume,
sprawled across that couch,
naked,

like a child,
laying there so vulnerable,
waiting for something warped,
staring out,
helplessly-hoping.
Innocent ignorance has bound my neck
with a shiny, studded dog collar from which my emotions drag me, all too willingly.

It's high time we ladies yank off our studs' collars and let bitches be free.

Yet, an itch still scratches me,
knawing away at my skull.

There are the womyn held captive by the Kate Moss in them,
then there are those who want to forget that her roots are under their skin at all.

But if the bitches are like me,
and want to really, be,
free,

We must learn to take a stand,
to SHAKE her hand,
to face her and find space for her.

Katie Triggs

NEED MONEY? SPEAK OUT!

ENTER THE 53rd ANNUAL
ANDRINA McCULLOCH PUBLIC SPEAKING COMPETITION

8 - 10 March, 1994

PRIZES
1st	$600
2nd	$400
3rd	$300
4 Honourable Mentions	$150

Open to all Queen's students
Information and Registration at the PAO
Registration closes 28 February, 1994

Limited to first 50 entrants

A.M.S. Authors Series.
PRESENTS:
Kingston Author Joan
Finnigan Mackenzie

Reading from her work
Wed. Jan. 26, 7:30 p.m.

Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room
Ban Righ Hall

Check out the Real Thing at Jj's!

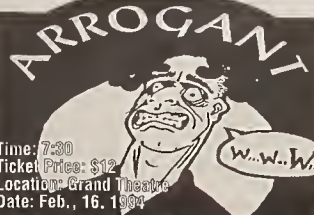

6 oz Deluxe Burger
Served with a Mountain of fries!
only $ 4.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's*

409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547-3771

Jj's
Bistro
Bar
We inspire eating!

The ARROGANT WORMS

Time: 7:30
Ticket Price: $12
Location: Grand Theatre
Date: Feb. 16, 1994

Tickets Available: Performing Arts
Office; Grand Theatre. For info 546-5997

WORMS

Igniting "Power Feminism"

Fire With Fire, following on the acclaimed and controversial bestseller The Beauty Myth, is Naomi Wolf's second book. After the publication of her first book, Wolf toured North America (she was in Kingston early last spring) talking to audiences of mainly women about feminism. What she discovered was that while most women support the ideals of the women's movement, many women are reluctant to call themselves feminists.

In Fire With Fire Wolf tries to explain why so many women have become separated from their movement. She boldly tells us that we are all feminists, or at least have the potential to be. If you are a woman who wants more choice for women, and who believes that women should exercise their power to act politically to "get what they determine that they need," then you are a feminist.

It doesn't stop there. If you are a father, brother, son, lover, husband or friend, and care about the women in your life, whether you know it or not, you are a male feminist. Feminism is not about pitting one sex against the other. "You can hate sexism without hating men," Wolf advises. According to Wolf, it is that simple.

Simplifying the term "feminist" so that it includes both sexes, all sexual orientations and socio-economic classes is a primary focus of Wolf's book. Wolf claims that many women feel alienated from feminism. It is a commonly held belief that to be a feminist, one must adhere to a package of attitudes. In Wolf's words, women feel there is a "no line-item veto" for feminism; feminists must be pro-choice, lesbian, middle-class, white, anti-pornography, makeup-rejecting, man-hating, and above all female. Wolf liberates feminism from this caricature and stresses that feminism derives its strength from women's individuality, and women should not feel that they must fit a stereotype to call themselves a feminist.

Wolf has been accused of being a "pop feminist" by many people who believe she has sold her

Fire With Fire
Naomi Wolf
Random House
373 pgs.

soul to the popular media. She would probably agree with this criticism in a sense because accessibility is part of her intention. If feminism is indeed a women's movement, then it should not be reserved for the academics, but should be made accessible to all women. Many feminist academics write in a language inaccessible to most women, or sneer at those who try to translate these ideas for mainstream journals, newspapers or television. According to Wolf, for an academic to publish in a woman's magazine such as Redbook or Glamour is "professional suicide." But in a world where more women trust and like Oprah Winfrey than Geraldine Ferraro, and where the huge audiences of Oprah, Sally Jesse Raphael, Cosmo and Glamour are far greater forces for political change than U.S. News and World Report and Ms. Magazine combined, it is through the popular media that the majority of women can be reached.

Wolf's book packs a powerful punch with its absolutely unapologetic optimism. Wolf pro-notes what she calls "power feminism" which sees women as powerful but "no better or worse than their male counterparts" not "victim feminism" which assumes that women are pure and powerless, and that men are evil. She portrays women not only as deserving of equality and power, but also as strong human beings, just as capable of aggression and selfishness as men.

She does not emphasize the ways in which women have been victimized, although she does not diminish their importance. If women define themselves as victims, Wolf asks, then how can they ever see themselves in positions of power? The reality is that women are not a special interest group to be referred to in phrases like "women and minorities." In the United States, they make up fifty-one percent of the population, thus giving them a two percent majority and a bonus of seven million votes over men. While women do not always vote as a bloc, they do have the power to make political waves, and to choose leaders who best represent their interests. In many ways, women already have power, they simply must recognize it and not be afraid to use it.

Although Fire With Fire is not without its flaws, it is certainly a compelling piece of work. However, of personal interest to the Queen's community is the press we receive in this work. In a section of her book in which she condemns the attitude "it's different when women do it to men" as an excuse for women promoting hatred towards men, Wolf has several small inaccuracies in her documentation, and also takes a particularly controversial incident out of context. Wolf asks: "[should] a left-wing campus paper, the Queen's Journal, of Queen's College, Canada fantasize the seduction, torture, and death of a 'white boy'?" To Wolf, the answer clearly is "no." Many people would agree with her, many would not.

We can forgive her referring to Queen's as "Queen's College." But even if Surface forgives her for attributing their article to The Journal and The Journal can live with the label of a left-wing campus newspaper (one only hopes the rest of her scholarship is more accurate) there is no recognition that the article to which she refers is not only about sex but also about race. There is little discussion in her whole work of the specific double oppression experienced by women of colour. While it probably would not change her opinion of the inherent wrongness of promoting hatred towards men, the omission of the relevant details concerning this issue points to a broad scale omission in her work: more attention should be given to the particular experiences of women of colour.

NAOMI WOLF CONTINUED ON PAGE 15

Sarah Sheard will be reading from her newest book The Swing Era today, Tuesday, January 25, 8 p.m., in Watson Hall 517. All are welcome to attend.

HORSE DRAWN SLEIGH, HAY AND CARRIAGE RIDES

Bonfire
Stop at General Wolfe Cabin on request

385-2923

Printed Passage Books Ltd

50% OFF

All 1994 Calendars and Datebooks
Great Selection Still Available!

and
Largely Literary T Shirts
Regularly $22.95
Now Only $11.48

Printed Passage Books Ltd.
50 Princess Street
at the corner Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650 FAX: (613) 546-5638

Acts of faith

Barry Dempster, poet, prose writer and editor of Poetry Canada, has created a novel that is truly a book for the 1990s. TV evangelism, broken families, and mass media are just a few of the modern elements of everyday life which permeate The Ascension of Jesse Rapture.

But above all, this is a novel about faith. Crises of faith, religious fanaticism, and miracles form the framework of the Rapture family — a family ridden with confusion, conflict and misunderstanding. Each member of the family is caught up in a personal confrontation with faith, and subsequently with each other. Young Jesse, for example, is suddenly able to levitate following the death of his doom-and-gloom preacher father. His mother, Sister Tilda, decorates her Church of Incredible Love in pink plush, as CITY-TV and the Toronto Sun put their flashbulbs during her services, while her other son Jacob is into denying God and preaching "self-involvement."

It seems that what Dempster is trying to get at, in portraying these myriad forms of faith (or lack of it), is the innate need in human beings to believe in something — from the potential of the individual, to God, to love, to the end of the world. In light of this idea, the conflicts that occur between the Raptures over whose faith is the "right" one become petty and futile after a while. The same arguments and situations happen over and over again, with only the settings changing. This does become a bit repetitive after a while, but Dempster's prose is good enough that it carries the novel through.

There is more to the book than this,

The Ascension of Jesse Rapture
Barry Dempster
Quarry Press
258 pgs.

however. Jesse and Jacob have a relationship that can be seen as paralleling Cain and Abel, to a certain extent. The ties which traditionally bind families together are frayed — and sometimes altogether severed — in the Rapture family, and new ones are forged, which in some cases are more enduring, but in others are not. Traditional notions of family, of religion, and of love are all challenged in Jesse Rapture, the same way in which they are being tested and often denied in real life.

The novel is set in Toronto, and for readers who harken from the big city, many settings and references will be familiar. 100 Huntley Street, the Sun, the Eaton's Center, streetcars and subways are just a few of the elements of Toronto life that speckle Jesse Rapture.

Dempster has chosen to give us insight into each of the characters' private thoughts, by starting each chapter with a different character narrating. By the end of the novel I had become accustomed to this device, but for the first half it often seemed disjointed and choppy. He does a fairly good job, however, at distinguishing the characters' very different personalities and voices. Jacob, on one of his anti-religious rants, thinks: If I ever get my picture in the paper, I'll be selling fat lips and balled fists. Real things to believe in. Maybe I'll have a finger up someone's ass, searching for a place where Christ or some other asshole might hide; whereas his grandmother's narration reflects her steadfast adherence to tradition: ...So that we can talk real Bible talk instead of all that love slush. When the late Reverend Nugent preached, the congregation was whipped into a lather, staying on their knees for hours afterwards. Even my dear son Edward could summon up the Holy Ghost until goose-bumps the size of chick-peas rose on the back of my neck.

Similarly, Dempster's prose flows quite flawlessly and often reveals his poetic side: I kick every leaf my toes come in contact with, a flurry of orange, red and yellow, a beautiful storm of death. His writing is a pleasure to read, despite the occasional awkwardness of the many disparate voices telling the story. Between the timeliness of Jesse Rapture and Dempster's impressive style, the few flaws in the novel are negligible — Jesse Rapture is touching, funny, and often remarkably familiar.

MEGAN NICHOLS DOESN'T KNOW WHAT TO BELIEVE ANYMORE

Naomi Wolf

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

to Queen's as "Queen's College." But even if Surface forgives her for attributing their article to The Journal and The Journal can live with the label of a left-wing campus newspaper (one only hopes the rest of her scholarship is more accurate) there is no recognition that the article to which she refers is not only about sex but also about race. There is little discussion in her whole work of the specific double oppression experienced by women of colour. While it probably would not change her opinion of the inherent wrongness of promoting hatred towards men, the omission of the relevant details concerning this issue points to a broad scale omission in her work: more attention should be given to the particular experiences of women of colour.

The greatest strength of Wolf's book is that she does not push her reader to agree with everything she believes. Every woman is entitled to her own feminism, therefore debate and disagreement are unavoidable, even healthy. Women need not strive towards a sisterhood where everyone adheres to the same belief. Women do not even have to like each other personally and work through their differences; they simply must be able to work with these differences in order to achieve the common goal of making this world a better place for women. "Dismissing with another's idea is a form of honour," says Wolf. Thus Wolf invites both women and men to read and disagree with her personal beliefs, without undermining what is at the core of feminism itself — more power and choice for women.

KATE SCHUMAKER GRADUATED IN 1993 FROM QUEEN'S COLLEGE, CANADA

The Formal Event of the Year

Proceeds in aid of Big Sisters

The Queen's Charity Ball
1994
New York, New York

TICKETS ON SALE NOW IN MAC-CORRY 11:30 - 4:30

EVERYONE WELCOME! Don't Miss Out!

Charity Dinner and Dance at the Ambassador Hotel Friday, February 4th, 1994

Women In Sports Week

Future Women's Gaels Home Games

Basketball: Fri Jan 28 vs Toronto 6pm
 Sat Feb 5 vs Ryerson 6pm
 Tues Feb 15 vs York 6pm
 Fri Feb 18 vs Laurenton 6pm
 Mar 4,5,6 OWIAA Championships

Figure Skating: Feb 12,13 OWIAA Championships

Gymnastics: Sat Jan 29 Queen's Ranking II

Hockey: Jan 28,29 vs Guelph 7³⁰ 11³⁰ pm

Swimming: Sat Jan 29 Queen's Invitational

Volleyball: Wed Feb 2 vs Carleton 7pm
 Fri Feb 11 vs York 7pm

CUSTOM CLOTHING OR IN STOCK ITEMS...

BOXERS

T-SHIRTS

SWEATS

HATS

MUGS

ANYTHING!

MAKE AN IMPRESSION !!!

e-OIL-S THIGH DESIGNS

195 University Avenue, 546-4328

EQUALITY IN SPORTS?

An Open Panel Discussion

Brenda Willis, Men's Volleyball Coach, Queen's University
 Geoff Smith, Professor at Queen's University
 Sandra Levy, Canadian National Field Hockey Team
 Claude Scilley, Sports Reporter, Whig Standard

January 27 8:00pm Dupuis Auditorium

Sponsored and Organized by AMS Women's Issues Committee

Queen's University Owned Housing Lottery 1994

BALLOTING will take place on:
 Monday January 31 and Tuesday February 1, 1994
 10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Lower Victoria Hall Common Room

- Bring your STUDENT CARD and a PEN
- ONE BALLOT PER STUDENT
- QUEEN'S HOUSING LOTTERY DRAW - FEB 2, 1994
6 P.M. - DUNNING AUDITORIUM

SPORTS

Weekend Hockey Split for Gaels

BY ANDREW TURNER AND
ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Over the weekend, the men's hockey Gaels emerged with a split of two games against the Western Mustangs and the Windsor Lancers. On Saturday, the Gaels lost a hard fought 3-2 decision to the Mustangs while on Sunday Queen's bounced back for a 4-3 victory over Windsor.

Saturday's match against Western could be described as the best overall effort produced by the Gaels this season. Fittingly, Jock Harry was near capacity to witness this game. The game was a chippy affair, with both teams throwing their weight around. It also marked a solid outing in goal by Landry, who was sporting new headgear, much to the relief of those concerned with aesthetics in hockey. The first period ended without any scoring although Clark and Longo, among others, had a couple of chances. Longo also endeared himself to the fans as he delivered a hit on a Mustang that proved to be a crowd pleaser.

Despite having the advantage in terms of play and momentum after the first frame, the Gaels found themselves trailing Western early in the second. At 2:38, just as Dinsmore stepped on the ice after serving a minor for elbowing, Mark Guy of Western (not to be confused with Yes Guy of Global) took advantage of a fallen Kantautas and beat Landry over the shoulder.

The period was fast paced, with various offensive chances for the Gaels and physical play that was marked by Dinsmore and de Verteuil embracing a Mustang with a malachi crunch. Finally at 14:35, Ronson fired the puck from the blueline at the Western net where Gosselin was all alone, and after a couple of whacks at the puck, he put it past the sprawling goalie. However, before the period was out, Western scored on a harmless looking shot from the right faceoff circle which beat Landry on the short side.

The Gaels came out strong in the third as Kantautas and Lobinowich both had early opportunities to even the score. Before five minutes had elapsed, Western increased their margin to two goals. Rucchin of the Mustangs was able to outskate Brown and scored on a low shot on the blocker side at 4:58.

As usual, the Gaels refused to quit. At 7:28 Dinsmore picked up a banked pass from Mueggler and fired a wicked shot from a less than spectacular angle which ended up in the top lefthand corner.

The pressure was heavy from the Gaels as they essentially manhandled the crew from Western, much to the delight of the vocal (drunk?) crowd. Despite the unrelenting attack, the Gaels were unable to get the equalizer and their solid play was unrewarded in the Win column. For his efforts, Longo was the Queen's MVP of the game.

Sunday afternoon saw the Gaels duel the Lancers in a matinee affair. Much to the humorous delight of both teams and the fans the arena personnel, try as they might, were unable to play the real national anthem before the game. Could this be a recipe for success?

Windsor drew first blood at 7:57 of the opening period on a seemingly harmless shot that somehow got by Landry. Then at 15:56, a poor clearing attempt saw a Lancer end up with the puck all alone in front where he put a weak backhand under the arm of Landry. Not to worry though, as these were the only two moments of weakness shown by Landry, who over the weekend, appeared to be back in the form that earned him respect and praise last season. The first period ended with Windsor up 2-0 as

HOCKEY CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

BEWIC Sports Days: No one missed it. Coverage on page 18.

DEREK YARNELL

Bitter track dispute splits athletes into two camps

BY FRANK DIXON

A jurisdictional dispute arising from differences over selection criteria, and exacerbated by many athletes' loyalty to two well-liked and successful track coaches who were not re-hired by the Queen's Department of Athletics and Recreation for the current 1994 indoor track season, has created a serious and unprecedented split among Queen's students and coaches who are interested in competitive track and field.

The situation has been smouldering for over a year. It erupted into open separation last November when more than 30 potential varsity track athletes elected not to compete for the Queen's Golden Gaels track and field team, one of 40 competitive interuniversity teams operated by the university. These athletes, comprised primarily of distance and middle-distance runners, several of whom have achieved significant high-level competitive results, instead chose to affiliate with a group using the acronym QUACK Athletics, a Kingston community-based competitive track and field club. Many of these QUACK (Queen's University Athletic Club Kingston) athletes are presently paying their own expenses to compete in track meets against Queen's varsity athletes.

A letter written by Tony Joyce — a Ph.D. student at Queen's — and published in the Tues., Jan. 18 issue of The Queen's Journal, first brought public attention to the schism. Joyce, the father of two Queen's student-athletes who have joined the breakaway QUACK Athletics group, stated in his letter that the Queen's track and field program was in chaos. He accused Queen's Athletics administration of "reactive decision-making," and stated that "administration is doing nothing."

In an interview with The Journal, Queen's Professor and Director of Athletics and Recreation Rolf Lund expressed strong disagreement with several of Joyce's statements. "Although it is true that many fine athletes are not currently competing for Queen's, the varsity team is continuing to represent the university," Lund said. "The Golden Gaels, are, in fact, doing very well. The men's team is ranked #5 in the coun-

BY JOEL SUTHERLAND

The NFL Superbowl is this weekend and is also an exact rematch of last year. There are equally satisfactory arguments for either side emerging victorious — the fact that Dallas has proved to be the most talented team over the past two years (note Troy Aikman's QB rating of 113 in post-season play) is compelling, but Buffalo's experience (fourth Superbowl appearance in four years) and the fact that the law of averages implies that they must eventually win are attractive as well.

Last Sunday's games saw Buffalo beat Kansas City 30-13 to capture the AFC title. Unfortunately, it seemed that nothing could go right for the Chiefs in their final game of the year. The defense that was so dominating over the Oilers in the previous round was nowhere to be found in frigid Buffalo. After Joe Montana got knocked out of the game early in the third quarter, while the women's team is ranked #8. That's hardly a picture of a team which is supposedly in chaos."

Lund, who has been centrally involved with track and field at Queen's for more than 30 years, in addition to representing Canada as an administrator at many high-level international track and field championships, also criticized Joyce's statement that Queen's Athletics administration is doing nothing to resolve the dispute.

"For more than a year, I've been spending dozens of hours meeting with coaches and athletes, reviewing evaluations, and trying to find a flexible plan to accommodate everyone," he said. "In spite of my efforts and those of others, it hasn't proven possible to do that. This split has still occurred, and it seems to be getting nastier by the day. As a result, I'm very concerned over the future direction of the Queen's track and field program."

When reached by The Journal, Joyce stood by the statements in his letter.

The positions of the two camps have hardened, and representatives from both sides were unanimous in asserting that there was virtually no hope of a reconciliation between QUACK and the Golden Gaels for the current indoor track season. However, many track and field personalities who have been interviewed by The Journal expressed cautious optimism that the many issues in dispute could still be resolved, perhaps by the future involvement of an impartial mediator.

The Journal is currently conducting an investigation of both sides of the numerous complex and intertwined aspects of this important story, and will publish one or more detailed reports dealing with it in future issues.

NFL Headline News

the Chiefs' hopes went from slim to none mainly because Dave Krieg couldn't connect with Marcus Allen.

For all the Buffalo fans, the game was best summed up in the final play of the game — K.C. was playing for pride and attempting to get into the end zone one final time. Allen was given the ball and subsequently stuffed by Darryl Talley on the one-yard line, concluding an impressive season for the Chiefs and simultaneously reaffirming Buffalo's stranglehold on the AFC.

Kansas City fans can rest assured that their team will make the playoffs next year — hopefully by winning their division. The Chiefs can point out that their team did not enjoy a rest in the post-season and lacked experience in the playoffs. However, these excuses will only go so far — perhaps Montana and the elbow are too old, only time will tell (no pun intended).

Other football action on this day saw Dallas rout the San Francisco 49ers 38-21. This particular game confirmed the potency of the Cowboys offence, with or without Aikman. The game itself was predicted to be closer — witness the fact that the spread opened up at 6 and was down to 3.5 (a result of the massive influx of California money into Las Vegas) on game day — and was unfortunately a blowout.

The question is who exactly should take the fall? Steve Young and Jerry Rice are both candidates. Rice nearly started a pregame rumble by refusing to exit the end zone to greet the Cowboys. Rice also seemed distracted the entire game and didn't make the clutch plays that he is world renowned for. On the other hand, Young is the leader of the offence and is also ultimately responsible for what, on this day, was a shortage of end zone entries.

San Francisco is simply not the team it was four years ago. It appears the 49ers are in the tail end of their dynasty years instead of resurrecting the team.

The Superbowl itself will be a lot closer this year, the game will not be a blowout. Buffalo needs the win to keep the sanity of the team and to prove that they are not chokers. Dallas should win because they are the best team in the NFL. Most Dallas fans have jumped on the Cowboy bandwagon because, love them or hate them, the team is charismatic and they play stellar football.

The question of the day is who will win and by how much. Only people who are clairvoyant can say for sure, but Dallas looks pretty good. So, without further ado, the Superbowl will be won by Dallas with the score of the game being 35-27.

Record straight up: 5/6.

BEWIC Weekend blowout a smashing success

BY ROB CAMP

Sometimes things change and sometimes they stay the same. That certainly was the case in this weekend's BEWIC extravaganza. The annual INTRAMURAL party that Queen's is famous for had yet another chapter written as the weekend came to a close. The two day, four sport, 32 team, and 900 participant event, the largest get together since Homecoming, was once again the place to be this weekend. As hundreds of people can attest this is quite possibly the most fun possible for $9 with 27 of your closest friends watching. While the amount of fun has remained constant over the years the names of the winners have changed considerably. Could the defending two-time overall champion Con-Ed repeat? Could a PHE team win the competitive championship or for that matter the sportsmanship one? Could perennial also-rans books, several other teams busy making strong bids for the title. More...Moosel, Death and the Highlanders were all considered at reasonable odds but the real surprise were the PHE Frosh team, Early Morning Risers. Coming in at a 250/1 longshot for the Sportsmanship title (an award often considered by PHE students as less desirable than athlete's foot) this young frosh team seemed to have the inside track coming into the final day of events. Unfortunately the lack of name recognition for this first year team cost them when compared to the older and more experienced BEWIC teams as Con-Ed managed to squeak by More...Moosel and Early Morning Risers to win an unprecedented fourth consecutive Sportsmanship title.

The Mighty Chunks of Clark Hall Pub celebrate broomball win.

DEREK YARNELL

The weekend began with a bang as the first games in all four sports started as early as 1 p.m. Friday afternoon. While there were many significant stories of heartbreak and triumph on the courts, the true surprise of the weekend occurred in the Sportsmanship category. While Con-Ed, spirit powerhouse that it is and three time defending champion of the Sportsmanship Championship, was heavily favoured by the Las Vegas bookies, several other teams busy making strong bids for the title. More...Moosel, Death and the Highlanders were all considered at reasonable odds but the real surprise were the PHE Frosh team, Early Morning Risers. Coming in at a 250/1 longshot for the Sportsmanship title (an award often considered by PHE students as less desirable than athlete's foot) this young frosh team seemed to have the inside track coming into the final day of events. Unfortunately the lack of name recognition for this first year team cost them when compared to the older and more experienced BEWIC teams as Con-Ed managed to squeak by More...Moosel and Early Morning Risers to win an unprecedented fourth consecutive Sportsmanship title.

In the Competitive division the heavy money was on either Mocko Jockos or Under the "N" to walk away with the championship. Therefore, there was a great deal of surprise when the top two Sportsmanship teams, Con-Ed and More...Moosel both finished in the top three. In the end More...Moosel squeaked out the barest of victories over Mocko Jockos in what has to be the closest Competitive finish ever in the history of this event.

The Overall category was just as close as the other two as the top five teams all finished within a heartbeat of each other. In the end though More...Moosel managed to prevail over Con-Ed and finally win a BEWIC event in what turned out to be an extremely fun and exciting BEWIC SPORTS DAYS '94.

A special thanks from Laura and myself to all the convenors, referees, committee members and Kathy Jackson, without whom this weekend would never have been possible.

See Friday's Journal for Sports Days finalized standings.

Hockey victory long overdue

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 17

the Gaels were unable to figure out the Windsor goaltender.

A flurry of penalties started the second with both teams unable to take advantage of the open ice. At 7:42 the Gaels finally solved the Windsor goaltending riddle. On a nice play, Girardi came out of the corner, cut in front of the net and slid the puck over the goal line to get the Gaels on the board.

Less than three minutes later the home team pulled even. After winning the draw in the Windsor zone, the Gaels controlled the play and got a couple of shots on net. At 10:02, Brown moved the puck across the point to Longo. He fired at the net where Mueggler tipped the puck past the Windsor goalie.

After a Windsor penalty, the Gaels took their first lead of the game on the power play when Lobinovich brought the puck up the ice into the Windsor zone. Lobinovich made a nifty feed to the darting Kantaus in front of the net who deflected the puck past the helpless goalie.

The Gaels increased their lead, again on the power play, to 4-2 when captain Dan Brown alertly found Clark all alone in front of the net. Clark made no mistake and the Gaels found themselves with a two goal advantage heading into the third period.

The Gaels came out rather flat in the third period and the Lancers could sense that the Gaels were running out of gas. The Gaels were holding on until the referee awarded the opposition a penalty shot when a Lancer was brought down from behind on a breakaway. Much to the delight of the crowd, Windsor fanned the penalty shot on a weak effort that Landry easily turned away.

However, two seconds after the faceoff, Windsor crept within a goal of the Gaels on a rebound. The last five minutes saw Windsor applying considerable pressure to tie the game. Gosselin, Brown and Landry played extremely well to block shots and keep the puck out of the net. On the offensive, Clark had a couple of opportunities to put the game out of reach with two great individual efforts as he twice broke in on the Windsor goalie fighting off a Lancer defender only to come up just short on the finish.

The Lancers pulled their goalie with a minute remaining to get the extra attacker. However, Landry was a wall between the pipes and the Gaels escaped with the victory. For his remarkable effort, Landry was named player of the game for the Gaels and Queen's is back on track. After several disappointing losses, Queen's is back in the win column on home ice. For more home wins, come see the Gaels take on McGill at Jock Harty next Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m.

Gaels cross Swords with Vees, drop doubleheader

BY FRANK DIXON

*De girls 'r' oft'a bingo
'N' de boys 'r' gettin' stinko
Dey pick 'em up as dey go
On a Sudbury Saturday night
Stompin' Tom Connors
'Sudbury Saturday Night'*

(SUDBURY) Spending Saturday night in Sudbury wouldn't rank highly on any sane person's Things To Do list. It became even less fun when the Queen's Golden Gaels dropped both halves of a basketball doubleheader to nationally-ranked men's and women's teams from Laurentian University.

Sudbury is perceived by many as a mining hick town deep in the heart of the Canadian Shield's frozen tundra. A loud group of ya-hoos parked themselves behind the Queen's bench, and, accompanied by pots and pans, screamingly accused Golden Gaels of performing various unlikely cross-species bestial acts. The noise drove the Gaels to huddle on the court during timeouts. Since Queen's lost twice, our only revenge is being secure in the knowledge the hecklers will work for us some day!

The visit provided a reunion for the Ottawa-based Swords family. Janet Swords is an assistant coach with the women's Gaels, brother Shawn is a star point guard with the Vees, and sister Carolyn is a star point guard with the Lady Vees. Strong Swordplay by Shawn and Carolyn proved critical to Laurentian's sweep.

For a complete review of the games, see the accompanying articles below.

Women fall to Vees' machine

#2 Laurentian snags an 83-58 win off the Gaels.

BY FRANK DIXON

In Dave Wilson's 12 years as head coach of the Gaels' women's team, he has never been able to defeat the Laurentian Lady Vees. But very few other teams have been able to, either. Laurentian, currently ranked #2 in the country, has been a perennial national championship contender for 20 years. Seven CIAU banners hang from the walls of their home gym.

The Gaels, depleted by injuries to stalwarts Trina Rasmussen and Cathy Amara, and with Tanya McIntyre playing with a sore shooting hand, put up valiant resistance but were simply overmatched by Laurentian's wide array of awesome talent. Although the Vees recently suffered defections of key players Tracey Hayman and Mattha Sandilands, reducing their roster to ten players, they didn't miss a beat, and were never seriously challenged.

McIntyre hit a buzzer-beating three-pointer to end the first half, and the Gaels hit the first basket of the second half to draw within 48-35. Queen's still had a chance if they could get Vees' post Dianne Norman (three fouls) out of the game. But Norman played very smartly, avoiding fouls while still continuing her aggressive play. She finished with 24 points, keying a 21-8 run for a 69-43 lead, before finally fouling out with the game's outcome long since decided. Norman was chosen Player-of-the-Game.

Laurentian very effectively used their size advantage of five inches per player to dominate the low post and glass at both ends. Not only do the Vees have impressive size and athleticism, they are also very smart. Whenever the Gaels tried to shut down a certain aspect, Laurentian adapted their game, hitting the 15-foot jumper when it was open, stopping Queen's fast break attempts, and infiltrating the paint with clever passing for easy layups.

Gaels' point guard Jaylene Morrison, a Sudbury native, summed it up best when she said, "They just have so many weapons, you can't stop everything."

Norman was one of many Vees' stars who had solid games. 6'3" rookie forward Joy McNicol double-doubled with 12 points and 12 boards. Forward Stacey Hann hit 13 points, while point guard Carolyn Swords netted 7 points and dished out 11 assists.

Queen's was led by OWIAA All-Star post Vicki Wilson, who scored 21 points and pulled down 7 rebounds. Wilson notably overcame close attention from the stronger Norman with several pretty spin moves in the low post. After three league games, Wilson is averaging 21.7 points and 9.3 rebounds per game. She led the CIAU in rebounding last season.

Forward Jenny Laughton played strongly with 14 points, while Morrison hit 10.

Queen's now has a 1-2 record in OWIAA play heading into their Friday night home date with the University of Toronto Lady Blues (6 p.m., Bartlett Gym). This game will be another challenge of the first order for the struggling Gaels, who haven't lost heart despite their tumbling fortunes. Then Queen's will travel to Toronto Saturday to meet the Ryerson Lady Rams.

CORRECTIONS AND APOLOGIES

1. From The Journal of Fri. Jan. 14: Mike Schab was NOT the only Gael to win the Metras Trophy. As Doug Hargreaves pointed out, Jim Muller and Dick Bakker also won it. Thanks, Doug!

2. From The Journal of Tue. Jan. 18: Mike Ruscitti is NOT a co-captain of the men's basketball Gaels. Co-captains are Les Harold, Roger Wheeler, Wyerth Clark and Sean Smith. The men's team had not lost 14 straight games. With their latest loss to Laurentian, the men have dropped 10 straight games since beating McGill, and 15 of 16 games since beating UNB.

Laurentian very effectively used their size advantage of five inches per player to dominate the low post and glass at both ends. Not only do the Vees have impressive size and athleticism, they are also very smart. Whenever the Gaels tried to shut down a certain aspect, Laurentian adapted their game, hitting the 15-foot jumper when it was open, stopping Queen's fast break attempts, and infiltrating the paint with clever passing for easy layups.

Lost & Found

BY SPORTS STAFF

In this week's episode, the Beaver (Jerry Mathers) ditches school to pursue his dream of writing for The Journal Sports department. He is rejected for his poor spelling and recurrent use of the phrase "kinda near". In his memory we give you the following questions, culled from the same vault of obscurity that is now home to Mathers' acting career.

Q. What was the last team to defeat the Buffalo Bills in a playoff game other than the Super Bowl?

A. Bernie Kosar led the Cleveland Browns to a 34-30 victory against the Bills in the '89 divisional playoffs.

Q. What basketball great played for the Harlem Globetrotters before his NBA career?

A. Wilt Chamberlain played briefly for the Globetrotters before joining the NBA in 1959 to play for the Philadelphia Warriors.

Q. Who played over 1,000 NBA games and never fouled out?

A. Wilt Chamberlain again. He played in 1,045 NBA games and never fouled out.

Q. In the world of sportfishing, what is the record for the largest goldfish ever caught?

A. The record is three lbs on the nose. It is held by Kenneth Kinsey, who landed the bear in Livingston, Texas on May 8, 1988.

Q. Who was the first runner to break the four-minute mile barrier?

A. Roger Bannister did it in 3:59.4 on May 6, 1954.

Q. What NBA star holds the record for the most three-pointers in a game?

A. Dale Ellis of the Seattle SuperSonics surprisingly sank nine against the L.A. Clippers on April 20, 1990.

Q. Leaf goalie Felix Potvin is a realistic contender for the Vezina Trophy, awarded to the leagues top netminder. Who was the last Leaf to win the award?

A. The goaltending tandem of Terry Sawchuk and Johnny Bower won it in 1965.

Q. What is the largest crowd to witness an NCAA Division I game?

A. It has been estimated that crowds of 120,000 were present for two Notre Dame games played at Soldier Field. However, the official count for a regular season game is 106,548 Wolverine fans at Michigan Football Stadium on Nov 6, 1993. Not even the Superbowl draws that many!

at every women's basketball game this season...

WIN
$5,000
CASH

Halftime Long Shot For
$$$
Contest

Buy a $1 ticket for a chance.

OWIAA

CHAMPIONSHIP
March 4-6, 1994
Queen's University
Bartlett Gym

FACULTY HOT SHOTS
Competition

Friday, January 28th @ 6 PM vs. Toronto
Tuesday, February 15th @ 6 PM vs. York

Challenge your rival faculties and have a chance at a great prize package.

- 1. Enter your name/faculty at the ticket table when you come to the game.
- 2. At half-time of the women's game, a male and a female from each of six faculties* (see below) will be randomly selected to shoot for their faculty as possible. (Missed shots will be recorded for tie-breaking purposes)
- 3. Working as a team, each pair will have 60 seconds to score as many points as possible.
- 4. The pair with the highest point total wins a "Treasure Chest" of prizes (Value $200+)

Faculties competing on Jan. 28th:

Phys. Ed - Engineering - Commerce - Con. Ed - Education - Meds

Faculties competing on Feb. 15th:

Arts & Science ('94/'95) - Arts & Science ('96/'97) - Rehab - Law Nursing - MBA/Grads

FACULTY CHALLENGE - The largest faculty group in attendance will be rewarded with free pizza. Eat free just for being there!

*Don't forget to buy a ticket for the $5,000 Long Shot. Another way to win with Gaels' Basketball!!!

QEC '94

Queen's Engineering Competition

Wednesday January 26thThursday January 27th

GRANT HALL

Come view engineering design projects all day, and Queen's Engineering Debating in the evening.

Technology Showcase

Seminars given by Microsoft Canada
Microsoft Office, Visual C++ & Windows NT

Ellis Hall
Thursday 27th 6-8 p.m.

ENTERTAINMENT

hHeadliners show no respect

HHEAD WITH LOS SEAMONSTERS THE TOUCAN BY SARAH ENGLISH

hHead models the alter-native look.

DEREK YARNELL

Aaaahhh, Saturday night at the Toucan. Good atmosphere, good company, good (?) bands.

Los Seamonsters had already claimed the stage when I arrived downtown this past Saturday night. This is a band which I have seen more times than I can count, yet they rarely seem stale. Those wacky guys put on an especially fun show which highlighted new material from their latest release.

The Los Seamonster sound seems to have progressed from grungy to more power-poppy. The new songs have a punchier, more melodic feel, and now showcase Shawn Seamonster's exciting back-up vocals. Or better yet, Shawn's attempts to stop bouncing and dive towards the mic fast enough to catch his cues.

Joining the ranks of bands with silly and unnecessary letters and symbols (Firehose, Therapy?) are hHead. They have come out of relative obscurity to win CFNY's modern music search in Toronto. This in turn landed them a deal with label Raw Energy, and enough money to buy equipment that most bands would salivate profusely over. It seems to me that recognition and good equipment would be great motivation to work hard and further develop the band's sound.

However, all that seems to have developed are the band's egos. We, the paltry fans, were hit by a wave of attitude the minute hHead took the stage. After whining about the background music for five minutes, then using the opportunity to take a cheap shot at the small size of the bar, they finally decided to play their "hit," "Fireman." Trying to keep an open and calm mind proved to be impossible.

hHead's tunes are bourgeois dirge rock. The singer was blessed with a heavenly voice (the same one Eddie Vedder and that guy from Stone Temple Pilots have). The three members can play their instruments, and do it very well. Experience has produced an extremely tight, polished sound. It is too bad that this sound is the sound that every good American indie-band has when you take away their uniqueness. Imagine Supetchunk without their trombone, or Dino Jr. without J Mascis. Dirge equals boredom. hHead managed to pick one progression of chords and use it in each song. Instead of writing meaningful or at least a full set of lyrics, they chose to write one or two lines, then repeat these incessantly. Recipe for hHead: line 1 (X2), line 2 (X2), line 1, say "aaah", line 2. Repeat.

This format was especially prevalent in "Jerk." The singer smilingly told us that in this song he was a girl who had just been dumped by her partner. Frustratingly inane lyrics followed about some pitiful girl who has nothing better to do than pine over her lost boyfriend. I'm sure that if I were to write from a male perspective, I wouldn't choose to write a ballad about the carbutator in my pick-up truck and its misfunctions.

Stereotypical seemed to be the theme for the night, hHead were alter-natives to the core. They had the toques, pigtailed, goatee, shoes, logo T-shirts... I couldn't get close enough, but you can bank on at least one tattoo and pierced body part (wow... cool, man).

Rising pity for these boys kept me awake through the set. Further attitude spewed from the stage ("Man, are we hot tonight!" and "You should really see us at Lee's Palace in Toronto!"). Especially disgusting was the point in the set when the bass player used a T-shirt to wipe the sweat off his body then proudly informed us that it was a T-shirt from the band that had opened up for them the night before. I made a mental note to convince the night's openers not to give up one of their "Los Seamonsters" T-shirts to these attention-mongers.

Having said all this, hHead do have a very strong following. Is this a result of the "I Know X Member" syndrome? In this case, the member in question seems to be Brendan. I overheard his name being dropped in a few loudly obvious conversations. But is familiarity with a band member reason to adore the band? Perhaps the next explanation is that we have become slaves to the media. If hHead are good enough to have been given such a large amount of cash, they must be amazing, right?

Speaking of cash, I left feeling... disheartened. Must recognition and money always end a band with terrible attitudes and no respect for their peers (witness hHead's petty disputes with Pickering hand, Trigger Happy). hHead give Adidas three-stripes a bad name.

hHead have been described proudly as "representative of the Toronto music scene." If this is the case, I'll take Kingston, thank you very much.

Just another ordinary day

DAYS OF YOU THE TOUCAN BY ANDREW MCALLISTER

Last Friday an enthusiastic crowd gathered at The Toucan to get a glimpse of Toronto's aspiring new rock band, Days of You. The fans kicked off their sandals to groove and shuffle to the group's distinctively eclectic sound. Old memories and the ethos of days lost are renewed in this group, which purports to be experimenting with a new fusion in music. While heavily influenced by a host of heroes from the Seventies, Days of You attempt to integrate elements of jazz and R&B into their music to create an original product.

Sustaining themselves solely through word of mouth promotion and radio play, Days of You are finding the independent music scene a source of frustration. Still in their formative stages (only having been together for the past year), they have already been labelled as Grateful Dead revivalists, solely for the consumption of Birkenstock and tie-dyed clad reemsters. Days of You are tired of the comparison and are eager to break out of it. Uninterested in indie labels, major label shopping has only produced a string of pleasant comments and distinct reluctance from record executives. Their second recording, We the Hours (1992), is still without any avenue of distribution and the band are currently working on their third release.

Days of You are excellent musicians. Their set required no counterpoint to Steve Himel's bass grooving, which springs off the solid rhythms of drummer, Chris Oleschuk. While Steve has an expressive voice, belting out the lyrics with a certain defensive edge, Thackway's voice is smooth and bitter, like Jerry Garcia's. In addition, keyboardist, Scott Goodman brings an interesting element to the group. The Hammond-like gospel sound that emanates from his corner of the stage adds another dimension to Days of You, much like Bobby Wiseman's organ "gurgles" made Blue Rodeo more substantial and original. Although in theory this is good, there were a few Doots flirtations.

Monopolizing the sound of the Seventies.

Days of You want to be sincere to their fans. Conscious of the dilemma regarding fine performance and maintaining their integrity, Days of You attempt to drop any musical facade and assume a tongue-in-cheek attitude towards their lyrics. They try to be accountable for what they write, feeling responsible for listeners' interpretations. They are critical of posers who don the "rockface" mask to feign sincerity. Unfortunately, in their showmanship they were guilty of their own criticism. Thackway and Himel's bizarre contorted faces make me question their sincerity. Thackway explains that they don't take themselves too seriously, as they believe it is potentially dangerous. The other side of the coin is that as a result, no one will take them seriously either. Especially record executives and potential fans.

Days of You are a tight bunch of musicians. Thackway and Himel's fret work is excellent and is obviously the result of years of practise and inspiration. On Friday night, Days of You put on an excellent performance and overwhelmed a crowd that only paid $2 a head to see them. They will have no trouble getting bar gigs and entertaining audiences.

As a group, Days of You are still developing. As for the claimed artistic mandate of the group—a synthesis of jazz and R&B with 70's heroes—I cannot find any evidence to merit them such a distinction. Days of You are grotesque in their emulation of an era in music which has been explored and abandoned in favour of newer forms. As they bitterly attempt to find salvation from the narrow audience they have adopted, ultimately, they have only themselves to blame for the closed doors.

Mark Thackway believes that one cannot ascertain success in any work until you are most of the way through it. At the show, behind the drum riser, he had put up a massive painting of a face which radiated like a shining sun. The expression on the face was one of shock. While Days of You technically shone, the facial expression of shock will be inscribed on the countenances of Days of You when they stop and realize that they need to break free of stale musical forms. They need to grow and diversify to be artistically and commercially successful. Luckily, there is still time for Days of You.

warm-up. They drove right into the first chords which brought the audience to their feet. Mark Thackway's guitar work was spotless and very musical, if highly reminiscent of Clapton, Zappa and Hendrix. Copious amounts of wah-wah and phaser "whoosh" reinforced the Seventies sound. Thackway did an excellent job as

Taking a Break with Studio 102

STUDIO 102 CHOKE/BLACK COFFEE MAN/TRUNK THEOLOGICAL HALL RM. 102 BY ROB FURSE

"C'est froid" has been an oft heard refrain in these parts lately, but the litany of winter cultural events happening around Kingston has helped warm our chilled spirits. On top of Kismet, last Friday night brought three separate productions of Studio 102, (presented by the Queen's Drama Department) that provided the appropriate escapism option for those of us who have the incessantly repeating Club Med jingle—"hands up, baby hands up"—echoing through our skulls as we trudge through Kingston's winter wonderland.

Written and directed and by Darryl Whetter, Choke was the first play of the night and was an examination into the limitations of language, labelled in the play as, "culture's hidden choke chain."

The play alternates between the didactic monologues of a professor standing behind a lectern discussing the inherent assumptions and limitations of language and short stylized vignettes that construct scenarios which illustrate the contentions of the professor.

The play's focus on sex and love is evident early on as the phrase "I love you" is examined and attacked for its status as a cliché in language, "the most intimate gift, in the most tattered package." This raises the issue of how to convey real love. Whether seems to suggest that perhaps only actions can suffice for true communication. In one scene, a character rejects another's apology saying it's too late, "it's gone beyond words."

Although slightly diverted by the large range of semantic dead ends such a topic offers, the play largely steers clear of this pitfall. Instead, the main short-coming of the play is its over-reliance on the standard metaphors of sex and love. For instance, in one vignette, a male and female actor are passionately kissing when suddenly a third actor comes in to act as a narrator. Two actors engaged in an embrace then stop and cover their genitals and breast respectively. The narrator ends the scene by repeating the single word mantra "sex" for about half a minute. Does this teach us anything we don't really know? That sex is a favourite storehouse for many of our insecurities and that we are all a little messed up about some of our deepest desires? This is merely a restatement of what we have learned in Genesis from Adam and Eve's use of fig leaves. It is a cliché, just as surely as the phrase "I love you" is, and something the play should dissect and disempower, rather than perpetuate.

Contrasting with Choke, the second effort of the night was the Seinfeldian Black Coffee Man, written by Iain Deans and Chris Turner and performed by the one-man comedy machine of Iain himself. This monologue revolves around the amazing life Black Coffee Man leads due to the copious, indeed astronomical amounts of coffee he drinks.

The skit has a tenuous narrative, but is essentially just a vehicle for Deans to deliver his caustic one liners and humorous observations. This said, I have to admit I didn't know we had a narrator. Two actors engaged in an embrace then stop and cover their genitals and breast respectively. The narrator ends the scene by repeating the single word mantra "sex" for about half a minute. Does this teach us anything we don't really know? That sex is a favourite storehouse for many of our insecurities and that we are all a little messed up about some of our deepest desires? This is merely a restatement of what we have learned in Genesis from Adam and Eve's use of fig leaves. It is a cliché, just as surely as the phrase "I love you" is, and something the play should dissect and disempower, rather than perpetuate.

A criticism of this routine is that it has no climax and conclusion because of its nebulous narrative structure. Instead, Deans simply amplifies his acting style, loudly berating tea drinkers for impose some kind of logical progression and sense of closing. While still funny, Deans could have benefited from the freeze frame and cut to commercial technique that Seinfeld employs to end his shows.

The final play of the night was an ensemble effort entitled Trunk. With no real dialogue (the actors using a guttural half-speak), the play was problematic and difficult to comprehend. The play essentially revolves around three clowns (the "good guys") and three hooligans (the "bad guys") who dim-wittedly provoke and try to outsmart each other.

The clowns, two of which emerge from a trunk, seem to only want to have a good time, while the "bad guys" seem to have more nefarious designs, illustrated by the blackboard they bring on stage with the words "Da Master Plan" written on it.

Because it is so archetypal, the play can easily be interpreted on a variety of different levels. One could view it as the depiction of the average person's struggle against the forces of evil, or alternatively, as the damage that is done in this world because of ignorance and stupidity. This latter viewpoint is supported by the fact that the bad guys inflict violent deaths on everyone except one lucky clown.

Despite the difficulty in determining a concrete agenda for the play, ultimately, it was an entertaining effort. Excellent performances were delivered by all six actors, who at times interacted extemporaneously with the audience and managed to deal with such mishaps as a thrown hat that was obviously supposed to land, but instead performed a one in a million trick of balancing on a single water pipe near the ceiling.

Overall, the evening was typical of Studio 102 productions in that it offered nothing typical. And, these days, where can you find such originality for only two dollars?

So long, farewell

FAREWELL MY CONCUBINE DIRECTED BY CHEN KAIGE THE PRINCESS COURT CINEMA BY OWIN LAMBECK

If you are looking to escape the winter blahs with a trip to the local movie theatre, a subtitled Chinese epic/tragedy might not be an option which immediately springs to mind. But although Farewell My Concubine is somewhat demanding, it is well worth a look, especially to anyone interested in Chinese history or beautifully composed images. The film, directed by Chen Kaige, covers a lot of ground; it spans complex relationships over half a century against the backdrop of the world of opera in revolutionary China.

Although the subject matter of the film is undeniably serious, the story comes across as a sort of epic soap opera. It begins in 1977, when two aging actors appear in full make-up on a barren stage in a pathetic recreation of the roles which made them famous when they were younger—that of a doomed king and his concubine.

We then flashback to the warlord era of 1924, when a prostitute deposits her son at a school that trains boys in the art of Peking opera. The boy is initially rejected, due to the fact that he has a sixth finger on one hand, but as his mother is pleading with the schoolmaster, the call, "Bring out your knives to be sharpened" conveniently echoes through the street. What happens next is completely predictable, and the film is full of such overdone moments.

The boy, Douzi (Leslie Cheung), is taken under the wing of an older boy, Shitou (Zhang Fengyi), whom he comes to admire. At the brutal disciplinary school, Douzi is forced into playing female roles, due to his effeminate appearance. The female role is repetitively beaten into him, leading him to become almost female in everyday life and to fall in love with Shitou. Scenes of the abuse of the children are quite disturbing, but less so than the notion that Douzi was "normal" until he was forced to play a girl's part, which "tragically" turns him into a homosexual.

Gong Li(center) and Zhang Fengyi(right) in Farewell My Concubine

This sort of portrayal is quite offensive and is my strongest criticism of the film. It promotes an easy dismissal of the movie, for done and clichéd style. The now adult Shitou rescues a fair maiden from the local whorehouse, creating a jealous triangle between himself, Douzi and the woman, Juxian (Gong Li). Such an incredible story would fit perfectly into Guiding Light or Geraldo. The three main characters go on to clash with both the government and each other, filling the film's 156 minutes with lust, anger, jealousy and death.

Chen makes use of distinct techniques to give the film its visual style. Often, a scene is framed like a picture by walls or trees as the scene plays out for a static camera. The use of colour is also very striking, and the surroundings and costumes often seem to be the most important aspects of the film. The story, which is somewhat sparse in its focus on only three characters, is often less involving than the film's many spectacular and historically important scenes of huge masses of frustrated people trying to adjust to Mao's new society.

For someone who is less than perfectly versed in the ins and outs of Chinese history, the real story seems to lie with the change that the opera world and the society itself went through. From this point of view, the film could be a little more generous, and waste less time on the temper tantrums thrown by the main characters. Still, there is a lot of insight into Chinese society to be found here, and the portrayal is vivid enough that it is easy to forget that this is a filmmaker's interpretation of history, and not absolute historical truth.

Farewell My Concubine is not the film for a casual night of entertainment, but then again, expanding your movie-going horizons is what the Princess Court Cinema is all about. Although flawed, many aspects of the film are very moving, beautiful, and well worth the price of admission.

25 Years
Queen's Musical Theatre
1969-1994

KISMET

A MUSICAL ARABIAN NIGHT

BOOK BY CHARLES LEDERER & LUTHER DAVIS
MUSIC AND LYRICS BY ROBERT WRIGHT & GEORGE FORREST

(FOUNDED ON A PLAY BY EDWARD KNOBLOCK) (FROM THEMES OF A. BORODIN)

GRAND THEATRE

218 PRINCESS ST.
JANUARY 26-29

DIRECTED BY KENNETH R. JACOBSEN

TICKETS ON SALE AT THE GRAND BOX OFFICE (530-2050) AND THE QUEEN'S BOX OFFICE (UDUC)

18 STUDENTS & SENIORS $10. ADULTS $15

Hey Graduating ArtsSci 94's

WANNA GO TO THE FORMAL?

YOU HAFTA DO CONSTRUCTION HOURS!!

Sign up for construction hours are:
Thursday, January 27th
&
Friday, January 28th
10:00am - 4:00pm Upper Ceilidh, JDUC

Sign-Ups are on a first-come-first-serve basis so don't wait too long!!

Raising Cain

Last week's review of the Doughboys concert was pretentious, self-indulgent, art school, I-heard-of-them-before-you-did tripe. To paraphrase someone dead, it was not an article to be taken lightly, but to be thrown away with great force. This writer believes that as long as trees are dying so that others may read our words, we should ensure said words are worth reading. This essay has two purposes: to give the guilty party the deep-frying he deserves and to save the souls of future rock critics. I must assure the Doughboys reviewer that I am a good Christian soul who loves the sinner and hates the sin. These five commandments are dedicated to him, bless his pointy little head.

Thou shalt keep the reporter the reporter and the story the story.

A large portion of the Doughboys article is devoted to telling the reader not about the performance, but about how well-connected the author is. In a string of seven paragraphs, Steve diligently avoids writing anything of substance by providing a laundry list of Doc Marten sceneries. He compounds this crass act by including himself: "S.C. was by himself, thinking he was above it all." S.C.? Only three-year olds and comic book villains refer to themselves in the third person. One can almost see how he's visualizing the scene: Steve Cain, jaded hipster languishing over a grande creme cafe in yet another small club in Munich, forced to review the band of the moment for MTV Europa. At least it pays the bills...

Thou shalt not review what thou dost not want to review.

I'll admit that country music is not my cup of noise. That's why you won't find me reviewing it, because I'm the wrong guy to do so. You don't ask vegans to do a review of burger joints, you don't ask Rush Limbaugh to review feminist books and you don't review bands you don't want to see.

Thou shalt maintain thy objectivity.

When Lee Harvey Oswald was arrested for perforating John F. Kennedy's pate, his mother was quoted as saying "But my Lee is such a good boy!" Should you decide to get romantically involved with your professor (ewwww), said professor may no longer mark your work. In the review of the 1992 Battle of the Bands finals, Steve gave the winning band a short, faintly complimentary review, while carpet-bombing his housemate's band with praise and affection. He called that band the "only band with originality and integrity in one package." If the band has some surplus integrity, could they please send it Steve's way?

Thou shalt not bandy about thine "cool" influences to prove thou art cool.

"I read Rolling Stone, SPIN and Creem, cover-to-cover...I have musical training, have played in bands..." (Ramble On, April 2, 1992)

This little gem appeared in the final Journal of the '91-'92 year, during which Steve served as Entertainment Editor. In the paragraph where this sentence appeared, Steve was explaining how he resented it when his credentials were called into question.

Musical skill and experience are helpful to a music critic, but they are not necessary. You don't have to be a Gordon Bleu chef to tell good food from bad - it's exactly the same with music. A listener can make intelligent comments without needing to name-drop musical terms. At best, this is pretentious; at worst, it says "I am a failed musician, and that's why I'm a music critic." Those who can, do, those who can't...

Even more telling are the magazines he reads. Creem has nifty layout and is devoted completely to music, but was apparently written by lower primates. For every good article SPIN features, there are ten pieces polluting the 'zine. And Rolling Stone? A tag by aging hippies for aging hippies. By citing these magazines as his critical influences, he merely points out the sewer from which he's been taking a good long draw. He might as well have said, "Hey, man—I read Penthouse, Playboy and Jugs—I understand women!"

Thou shalt be consistent.

This comes from the review of the Doughboys concert at Alfie's in February 15, 1991 Journal:

"Stage diving at Alfie's? Slam dancing at Alfie's? Whoa...pause. Rewind."

This is from the review for last week's show:

"On the con: They (members of the Doughboys) wave-rode..."

One supposes moshing is no longer cool now that the word is part of everyday parlance. I must credit Steve for being consistent when he made a cryptic reference to the big screen TV at Alfie's being left on ("MUTED...MUTED...MUTED..."). In two Doughboys concert reviews, he has mentioned almost all the functions of a VCR. Perhaps he will cover "Play", "Fast Forward" and "Record" the next time the Doughboys are back in town.

Thou shalt shut thy cake-hole when thou hast nothing to say.

"Not much to say about the concert." (Doughboys review, January 21, 1994)

All writers, even great ones, have bad days. Shakespeare did. Faulkner did. Even undiscovered genius Journal editors emeritus from Oshawa with their hair worn for shock value are prone to writer's block. The writer has two choices: write a "boiler-plate" article with standard writer's crutches, or hand it to a writer who has the time, the ability and the will to finish the article. There will be other stories to covet, and the world will not spin off its axis without continuous exposure to your chef d'oeuvres. The moral: if you must shoot off your mouth, use live ammunition and not blanks.

Thou shalt not confuse popularity with banality.

In order to stay hip, many rock critics believe that they should love a band only when it is obscure and struggling and hate it once it has released its first successful video. These people then turn around and chastise the rest of us for not liking their music simply because it gets little or no airplay. In the 1991 Doughboys concert review, Steve called them "rock gods in waiting" and ended the article by saying that he was grateful that they came to Alfie's before their "henediction." Now that they've achieved their sainthood, Steve's gone off and converted. Don't forget, chocolate rose from obscurity to worldwide dessert superstardom, and it's still in question.

I'd like to close with the line from last week's review that clearly sums up all the worst rock critic sins: [The Doughboys] played "Shine" first [the big single, kids] to get rid of the wankers."

Apparently one of them stayed to write the review.

JOEY DEVILLA IS THE LOWEST FORM OF LIFE BECAUSE HE IS A CRITIC OF CRITICS.

Whipping the blues into shape

BOAG AND THE BRAVEYARD WHIPS
THE DUKE OF KINGSTON
BY NICHOLAS GARRISON

It is much easier to say nasty things about bad bands than good ones. The corollary of this statement is also true—it is easier to review bad bands than good ones because you have the advantage of being insufferably condescending and ironic. But a certain thinker (a shibboleth for philosophy majors) once wrote that words cannot explain music, they can only describe it. Although what he had in mind was something very different from Boag and the Braveyard Whips, I will put them into this category anyway.

I do not want to make it sound as though Boag and company are visionaries. They are anything but original and are not superlative players. They're good alright, quite good, but that is not the point. They make good music. And what is even more rare is that they play music that is greater than the sum of its parts. It was refreshing to see players who are good enough musicians that they don't have to parade their talent.

Not that Boag and the Braveyard Whips were a particularly subtle band. Dynamic variation was not the selling point; in fact, lack of it was one of their detractions. From the very first number, they were off with all the charm of the sound of a dozen Harleys-

-which is charming enough, but an audience cannot endure such a pace for an entire evening. While I'm being picky, I should add that one of the guitars was far too loud, especially with that plunky pared-down sound that the band was going for.

There seems to be an ongoing debate as to whether we need more blues cover bands. But it is a testament to the blues that a bunch of guys in Ontario can get people to pay money to hear music that was written in the Mississippi delta in the Thirties. Can the same be said about the music of the Nineties? Will anyone be doing Nirvana covers in sixty years? Some of the credit for a good show has to go to Robert Johnson, Mississippi Fred McDowell, Muddy Waters, and Wilson Pickett (okay, they're not all sixty years old, but you get the point).

But to the credit Boag and the Braveyard Whips, they managed to give it all their own sound—a sort of Chicago blues meets R&B combo with an electric piano that sounded a bit like the lounge-jazzy Tom Waits and Boag's lawnmower-like voice. They even managed to make Van Morrison and The Beatles (two of my least favourite bands) sound good. And I am not at all that familiar with Johnny Cash, but I don't think he sounded nearly as good as Boag and the Braveyard Whips did with their cover.

And as for the bass player, an-one who knows The Sidemen will know how good the blues sound when they groove. Yes, for those of you who thought groove disappeared along with all sense of humour in music will be pleased to learn not only that this band grooves without drum machines and samplers, but they also tell some off-colour jokes.

And they did another thing that bands that take themselves too seriously seldom do—they featured various guest musicians. A harmonica player did his thing for a couple of the more traditionally bluesy numbers, and a real live tenor sax player sat in for "Mustang Sally" (this choice of Wilson Pickett tunes may give you some idea as to a famous analogue).

Did I love them? Love is a strong word, especially for a cover band. Did I think it was a good show? Without reservation, yes. But then, you wouldn't need a reservation for this show. There was a disturbing lack of audience. There was the usual group of enthusiasts on the dance-floor, but the ambience would have benefitted from the mayhem that the band deserved. If my recommendation is worth anything, there should be more mayhem at the next show.

Just what is a Boag anyway?

BRENT DAVIS

VISA SEMINARS INTERNATIONAL
Div. of VIS - A - VIS Immigration Inc.
CANADA

Presents ...

FREE IMMIGRATION SEMINAR FOR FOREIGN STUDENTS

Queen's University
Friday, January 28, 1994
6:30 - 9:30 p.m.
International Centre

Members of Canada's largest Immigration law firm
HOPPE JACKMAN
will provide information and answer all questions on areas of Immigration to Canada.

Sponsored by the Chinese Student and Scholars Association of Queen's (CSSA)

196 Adelaide Street West, Suite 200, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, M5H 1W7
TOLL FREE 1-800-263-VISA Tel. (416) 599-0707 ext. 242 Fax (416) 599-2861

QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

PRESENT

THE LOWEST OF THE LOW

with scott b. sympathy

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 26

AT ALFIE'S

$3 ADMISSION, DOORS OPEN AT EIGHT!

A night with Burns

BY JUSTIN MCKELLAR

Those of you who woke up this morning thinking this was just another day to be endured need not despair--there is reason to celebrate. Today is Robbie Burns day. Many of you unfamiliar with the name may have thought Rod Stewart was Scotland's master of lyric, that the Scottish who's who begins and ends with Sean Connery. In fact, Scotland's national poet is Robert Burns. He was born January 25, 1759, and the Scots celebrate his birthday every year with the Burns Supper.

This may all strike you as irrelevant, but Queen's owes much of its tradition to its Scottish heritage. (That explains the bagpipes.) As you read this, thousands upon thousands all over Scotland are regaling in song, food and drink. Especially whiskey. Burns himself was not a stranger to the marvels of this spirit. "O thou, my Muse!" he wrote, "guid auld Scotch drink!" What better way to honour our allegiance than to join the festivities? If nothing else, it's an excuse to enjoy a drink or two.

If you haven't heard of Robbie Burns or read his verse, you'll unwittingly know a few lines. It was Burns who wrote,

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men/ Gang aft a-gley." He's also responsible for such Valentine's standards as O, my love is like a red, red rose, / That's newly sprung in June and Ae fond kiss, and then we sever; Ae farewell and then forever. And that song sung every New Year's, "Auld Lang Syne," is also credited to Burns.

But if you have some trouble understanding the dialect, don't worry. The important thing is to share in the spirit of the occasion. The Burns Supper is best celebrated in groups, and there's no better place to do this than at one of Kingston's many pubs. Raise a cup of good cheer, leave the cold outside, and if you're prepared to steep yourself in tradition you'll try some haggis. Haggis gets a bad rap these days, (after all it is sheep guts) but it's actually very tasty, and if you eat hot-dogs, you can handle haggis.

So why not treat yourself to a night of mirth and merriment. After all, it's still three days from the weekend. In the thick of the festivity you may well understand fellow tippler Tam o' Shanter: Kings may be blest, but Tam was glorious, / O'er a' the ills o' life victorious.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	CLUBS	GALLERIES
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442) Philadelphia 7:00 9:50 Shadowlands 6:45 9:45 Remains of the Day 6:45 9:45 Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40 Mrs. Doubtfire 7:10 9:45 Schindler's List 8:30 CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. (546-5395) Grumpy Old Men 6:55 9:10 Tombstone 6:45 9:30 Intersection 7:00 9:35 The Air Up There 7:00 9:15 Pelican Brief 6:45 9:25 The Piano 6:50 9:20 Iron Will 7:10 9:25 PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (546-FILM) TUESDAY Baroka 7:00 The Wedding Banquet 9:00 WEDNESDAY Baroka 7:00 Howards End 9:00 THURSDAY Howards End 6:30 Farewell My Concubine 9:15	TUESDAY The Wellington: Robbie Burns Day/ Gerry O'Kane Stages: Hysteria (Guest of Def Lppard) The Duke: Roger Jones WEDNESDAY Affie's: The Lowest of the Low with Scott B Sympathy Megalos: Leisure Suit Larry THURSDAY A.J.'s Hangar: Wild Blues Yonder The Toucan: Freeway Band The Wellington: Bob Heams Trio w/ Murry Wilson Ben's Pub: The Undesirables Grad Club: Doug Reansbury THEATRE THE GRAND THEATRE 218 Princess Street (530-2050) The Queen's Musical Theatre presents Kissmet January 26-9 at 8:00 pm. Tickets $10 (adult) and $6 (students/ seniors) DOMINO THEATRE 370 King Street West (548-0357) Gwendolyn: a comedy by James W. Nichol until January 29 at 8:00 pm.	AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Avenue at Queen's Cres- cent (545-2190) Artist at Work: Mary-Ann Kokoska, Drawing in Succession January 25 from 12 noon to 3:00 pm. Thursday Afternoon Salon January 27 from 2:00 to 4:00 pm. CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS... through Jan. 30 BFA Faculty Show through Feb. 6 Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection through Mar. 30 Mother and Child: Selections from the Lang Collection of African Art Kismet through Apr. 3 The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism MODERN FUEL GALLERY 21 A Queen Street (548-4883) Louise Noguchi, installation until January 28

S.O.A.R. WITH US THIS SUMMER

Why: To orient and assist new students and their parents with the "academics" of the faculty of Arts and Science as well as welcome them into the Queen's Community.

When: 11 July - 22 August 1994

We are looking for eight highly motivated, outgoing and enthusiastic Arts and Science students to work as Peer Advisors for our Summer Orientation to Academic and Registration (S.O.A.R.) Program.

Are You:

- entering third or fourth year of an Arts and Science program in September 1994?
- in good academic standing?
- outgoing, enthusiastic, patient and creative?
- committed to helping new students and mature in your judgement?

Application form, job description, and employment details can be picked up from one of the following locations:

The Faculty of Arts and Science
F200, Mackintosh-Corry Hall.

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Office (ASUS)
183 University Avenue.

The Alma Mater Society
John Deutsch University Centre.

Application forms with supporting documents are to be submitted by 4:30 p.m. on January 31, 1994 to Judy Wheeler, Faculty of Arts and Science Office, F200, Mackintosh-Corry Hall.

ASUS Elections

ASUS Executive Team: ASUS President ASUS Vice-President

95, 96, 97 Year Executive	94 Permanent Year Exec.
President Vice-President Publicity Reps (2) Social Convenors (2) Secretary Bews (2) Wic (2)	President Vice-President Secretary Treasurer Members at Large (2)
ASUS Senator	ASUS Rep to the AMS
2 yr. Senator - 1 position 1 yr. Senator - 2 positions	1 yr. Rep - 7 positions
Nominations open January 19, 1994 and close January 27, 1994. Campaigning begins January 31, 1994 and closes February 7, 1994.
Election Dates: February 8th & 9th
For more information, please call The CORE at 545-6278 or drop in and ask for Steph or Jason.

WHAT'S UP?

Pickup What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

January

This Week

Tuesday

Kinston International Socialists Meeting- "Setting the Record Straight. The Israeli State Palestinian Resistance and the 'Peace Accord'" 8pm at the 3rd floor common room, JDUC. For info & childcare, call 531-8954.

The Students for Action Committee will be holding a General Meeting at 6pm in the International Centre, JDUC. Everyone welcome. Help join the fight against racism and move towards a more equal society for all!!

Wednesday

QEA Presents: The Lowest of the Low, with special guests Scott B. Sympathy. Alfie's $3.00 at the door.

There will be a Queen's Model United Nations meeting at 5:30 pm in Sterling D.

The Queen's University Muslim Students' Association is holding a potluck dinner in the International Centre, JDUC starting at 6:00pm

Thursday

All participants of the 30 hour famine should drop off their sponsorship booklets in Mac Corry.

All members of the Queen's Community are invited to an open information Session on the School of Business proposal for a full-free MBA program — Dunning Hall Conference Room (2nd floor), 10am-11:30am.

Monday

Ms. Mary Collins member of Parliament from 1984-1993 and Cabinet Member, who was from 1990-1993 Minister Responsible for the Status of Women, will present the fourth Fireside Chat in a series on "Women as Leaders: The Challenges, Rewards and Costs" in the Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room, Ban Righ from 12:00-1:30 pm. This series is sponsored by the Dean of Women's Office. Lunch will be served.

Feature

Parents bring your children to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Study while your children are occupied by volunteers. Revised hours for the winter: Monday to Friday 5:30-9:30 pm. Look for upcoming events. Volunteers needed. Please sign up at Parent Resource Centre.

Watch for Fearless Friday, the Weight Craze, Professional Resource People and interesting informational displays -- all part of National Eating Disorders awareness week, Feb. 1-7. Call D. Nolting at Student Health for more information.

Hey Undergraduate Students! The Undergraduate Review is taking all essays, articles, stories, poems, art, photographs, etc. submissions for this year's Review. Submissions will be taken at ASUS office (The CORE, 183 University Ave.) no later than Feb. 16.

Life Drawing classes begin Wed. Jan. 26 in Ontario Hall Rm. 210. Cost is $18 for one night and $36 for two nights. Classes run every Monday and Wednesday from 7-9 pm. There is no instruction and you must provide your own materials. Classes will run for approx. 6-8 weeks. For more info, contact Melissa at 549-6889.

Submit short stories, plays, poetry, songs, and drawings for the Artfest Anthology, to be sold during Artfest week -- Feb. 28 to March 5 in the JDUC. Deadline for submissions is Friday Feb. 21 at the CORE, 183 University. For more info, contact Melissa at 549-6889.

Upcoming

Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic Wed., Feb. 2 from 1 pm to 5 pm, Thurs. Feb. 3 from 2 pm to 8 pm at Lower Victoria Hall Residence Common Room Give the gift of Life.

Queen's Invitational Karate -- Taekwondo Tournament Saturday, February 5 th. 10:30 am to 7:00 pm at the Ross Gym. Competition in Forms and Sparring. Demonstration by Black Belts of the American Kang Duk Won Karate Association. Admission $3.50 Students & under 19, $5 Adults.

Queen's Undergrad Games is coming soon! Watch for info. around campus in the upcoming weeks.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOFF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

LOOKING AT EATING DISORDERS: an 8 week art therapy group for Queen's students starts January 26th. Cost $8.00 per session or $6.00 per week. Materials supplied. To register call Beth at 531-0619.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring slots are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your group meeting, potluck, or other event. TV/VCR, microwave, dishwasher facilities available for use by Queen's and Kingston groups. Call the Grey House at 545-2958.

CREATIVE WRITERS Discuss your own writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

HAVE SPARE TIME BETWEEN CLASSES? Drop by the Grey House, 51 Queen's Crescent. Relax... eat lunch, read the paper, make some coffee or tea. All are welcome. Please stop by!

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICE will be holding two focus group sessions with students, February 2nd and 6th to help us assess our programs, services and activities. If you are interested in participating please call the Health Educator, Diane Nolting at 545-6712.

PROMOTE YOUR BAND PROPERLY! Get the edge over the others. FUNHOUSE studios produces professional, top quality demos and albums. Experience with all music types. Live DAT or multitrack. $25 per hour. Call 548-7143.

PSYCHIC FAIR! Tarot card reading, numerology, palm readings by professions. When? JDUC, Wednesday 9 a.m. - 8 p.m. Sign up in Mac-Corry today! Value of $25.00, but only $10.00 for Queen's students.

BACK TO SCHOOL necessities from the Soapberry Shop. Eyebright eye gel, soothes eyes puffy and red from studying. Stress masks; to relieve tension headaches (and hangovers). Herbal cosmetics and hair products to keep you looking your best. The Soapberry Shop 225 Princess St, 545-1028.

RUBIN HURRICANE CARTER will be speaking at Grant Hall, on Tuesday, February 1st at 7:30 p.m. Come out and hear his story.

EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK FEB. 1 - 7, Warch for campus events sponsored by Student Health Service and Peer Health Outreach. BE AWARE!

ASK A PROFESSIONAL DIETITIAN why dieting is a dangerous activity. Julie Simpson RDt. will be at the Eating Disorders Awareness Week display in Mac-Corry on Tuesday, February 1st 12:00 - 1:00 p.m.

ASK A PROFESSIONAL RESEARCHER about eating disorders and restrictive eating. Dr. Fred Boland will be at the Eating Disorders Display in Mac-Corry on Wednesday February 2nd from 12:00 - 1:00 p.m.

ASK A PROFESSIONAL PSYCHIATRIST about eating disorders, treatment and resources. Dr. Steven McNevin will be at the Eating Disorders Awareness Week Display in Mac-Corry on Friday February 4th from 12 - 1 p.m.

FEARLESS FRIDAY: A day to be brave, break free from you diet and have a cookie on Marriott. Friday February 4th is national Non-Dieting Day.

DO YOU THINK about the weight craze that permeates our society? Join us February 1, 2, or 3rd for a video from TV Ontario's WEIGHT CRAZE SERIES and a facilitated discussion. Call 545-6712 for times and places.

PARENTS! Problems studying when your children are around? Come out to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Bring your children. Our volunteers will occupy your children while you study. Watch for upcoming events for children. Our new hours beginning January 24th are Monday to Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m.

QUEEN'S ASTRONOMY CLUB proudly presents speaker Dr. D.A. Hanes, who will give a slide show/talk entitled: "Great Observatories of the World", Sunday, January 30th, 8:30 p.m., Stirling Hall, Theatre A. All are welcome.

DANCE: Classical ballet R.A.D., modern jazz, tap, aerobics. Winter registration: January 26, 27 & 28, 5 - 8 p.m., January 29 1 - 3 p.m. 5, 6, 7, 8 Dance Studio, 259 Queen Street, (close to campus). For information call 547-5678.

QUICK ACCURATE word processing of thesis, papers, resumes, correspondence etc. Most often 24 hour service. Call after 6 p.m.: Audrey at 548-7378.

LSAT PREPARATION COURSE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money back guarantee. Next course starts February 5th. MEDLAW SEMINARS 531-9016.

DANCE: Classical ballet R.A.D., modern jazz, tap, aerobics. Winter registration January 26, 27, & 28 5 - 8 p.m. January 29 1 - 3 p.m. 5, 6, 7, 8 Dance Studio, 259 Queen Street (close to campus) Information call 547-5678.

MCNEILL HOUSE '90-'91 REUNION: Come see how people are doing, what they are actually studying now, and say farewell. At the Quiet Pub, Tuesday February 1st, 6 - 8 p.m. Your don Chris

HELP A CHILD TO READ: Drop off a new or used children's book to Queen's students for Literacy at the Lower JDUC this week, 11:00-3:00 - 1:00 p.m.

HELPWANTED

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED! Do you like children? Looking for some volunteer work? The Parent Resource Centre needs volunteers to staff the centre Monday - Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m. Please sign up at the centre in the lower ceiling of the JDUC.

SUMMER JOBS Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruise ships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing inground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

WANTED

HOUSEMATE WANTED: Non-smoker, male or female upper year student to share a house with three other upper years. Clean and comfortable; very close to campus, rent under $240.00. Call 545-3460.

BASSIST looking for experienced guitarist, keyboardist and drummer to form band or jam. Own space a plus. Wide interest, but mostly want to play originals. Call Ari at 549-1242.

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

PERSONALS

SORRY BORIS - I'm busy on the 4th. The girls and I are warming up at AJ's before we hit the 96 semi. See ya! - Natasha

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

READING WEEK GETAWAY to Panama City Beach Florida and South Padre Island Texas; $249 and $349 Quad Occ. Call Steve at 542-1344.

COMICS FOR SALE - Marvel, D.C., Valiant Half Guide prices or less. Phone Jon at 545-2690 (days) 549-2042 (evenings).

SPEAKERS FOR SALE - 200 watts. My stereo got stolen over Christmas so I don't really need them. They are going cheap. Call 531-4223 and ask for Geoff.

SPRING BREAK '94!! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

FOR RENT: Fantastic 2 bedroom, 2 storey apartment. Huge! New fridge and stove. University at Johnson (close!). $365 per month (each) including heat/parking. The catch? Sublet to current tenants for $150 per month (each) for summer of '94 and its yours. Interested? Call 545-3892.

4BR, $280 per month. All inclusive. $6600 down and own your own student rental - clean, charming, parking... Let's talk! Call Kim Donaldson, Sales Rep. Re/Max Loyalist Realty Ltd., Realtor direct 530-0269.

ROOMS FOR RENT in large house near campus. Kitchen equipped with dishwasher and 2 fridges. $150 - $175 per month plus utilities. Call Dave at 530-4953. No lease.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

PERSONALS

SORRY BORIS - I'm busy on the 4th. The girls and I are warming up at AJ's before we hit the 96 semi. See ya! - Natasha

BACK PAGE

Schlock the Vote

Part two of a look at the most amusing, appalling and ignorant AMS election campaigns in recent memory

The 1991 AMS Elections were, in a word, hellzapoppin'. With the Gulf War into its first month, the first "politically correct" AMS executive in power and Steve Cain doing positive, non-pretentious Doughboys reviews (The Journal, February 15, 1991), the stage was set for political drama that hadn't been seen since the Borgias.

Within a week of the start of the campaign, the parties' images in the media had been solidified. The party of Maureen Armstrong, Mark Daprato and Suzanne Kim were viewed as the left-wing party. Cast oppositely were the three "Surfer Dudes" (as Journal news staff called them), Brendan Quarry, Adrian Beeston and Peter Wightman. The team of Scott Kelly, Mike Letros and Tracy Beaulne were soon to be seen as the Machiavellian party, taking a practical, if not always seemingly approach. The middle-of-the-road party was the team of Ali Velshi, Paul Finch and Hearher Armstrong.

The Armstrong/Daprato/Kim team had an ace in the hole: Mark Daprato was dating the Journal Editor and was a good friend of the Assistant News Editor. It was obvious in the February 8, 1991 Journal, where the editorial pulled its punches where the Armstrong team was concerned.

Weighing them down was Suzanne Kim's reputation as the "Formal Killer". Earlier that year, she and three other women calling themselves the Southeast Asian Womyn's Committee had protested the names of the Chinese Laundry Cafe and the Arts Formal theme, "Empire of the Dragon", claiming it was racist (the word "Orientalist" was not yet in vogue).

The Quarry/Beeston/Wightman team were three tree-planting buddies who were tired of "being the silent majority." Fiercely politically incorrect, the Beestie Boys, as Surface would later call them, made their mark in two ways. The first was their campaign photo: three dudes in Patagonia jackets posing under a sign with the words "policing though" written under "stop." The second was their complete ineptitude in all matters political. Beeston underscored this fact during a public debate in JDUC with the infamous line "Queen's students are not apathetic, they just don't care."

The Kelly/Letros/Beaulne team, not being seen as on either end of the political spectrum, became the dirty tricks squad of the race. They were fined for printing misleading information in their campaign pamphlets and in their speeches, namely that Let-ros coordinated the leasing and renovations of the ASUS house and did so under budget (he wasn't the coordinator and it went $12,000 over budget) and that Beaulne had initiated the ASUS ruring service when in fact she had merely taken over as coordinator. Beaulne admitted to "misuse" of the "dictionary definition" of initiate, but said "By none means did we lie." Letros' excuse was that campaign information "lacked clarity". They used another tactic, which will be explained later.

The Holy Trinity of rock chords! "E-G-A, E-G-G-A, E-G-A, G-A!" (He's playing the A right now)

DEREK YARNELL

The Velshi, Finch and Armstrong team ran a low-key common-sense campaign, promising specific policy statements to a minimum, they attempted to appeal to everyone and ended up appealing to almost no one. Their campaign was made even more difficult by ABAC, the "Anyone But Ali Coalition," a half-jokingly formed group of AMS and Journal staff.

The campaign was characterized by mud slinging, and this became quite evident when The Journal ran an article entitled Campaign characterized by mud slinging. In a four-way election between parties of roughly equal standing and resources, the only way to stand out was by pulling out the heavy artillery. The Beestie Boys drew most of the fire, having gained the attention of a politically brow-beaten electorate with their apolitical stance. As the "none of the above" party, they were referred to either as the joke team, dangerous right-wing reactionaries or as the "Surfer Dudes". The fighting was brought to new heights when one of the Letros team reading "You're splitting the vote" and demanding that they withdraw from the race. Copies of Golden Words were stolen from their distribution points after a front-page article made fun of Suzanne Kim, calling her the head of the "Gang of Four" (the Southeast Asian Womyn's Collective) and comparing the cheering section she brought to public debates with the sheep from Orwell's Animal Farm. As eloquently put by Adrian Beeston, the campaign quickly became "a crock of shir."

The furor resulted in the largest voter turn-out in years: 45 per cent of the student body (remember, most universities have turn-outs in the 10 per cent range). The Beestie Boys won, capturing 29 per cent of the vote, followed closely by Armstrong, Daprato and Kim with 26 per cent. The other two teams garnered about 20 per cent each. Supporters of the Armstrong/Daprato/Kim team asked for a recount of the vote and began looking into the academic status of the Beestie Boys - anything to get them out of power. It was the bloody end of a dirty campaign, but the beginning of a hilarious and ludicrous year in politics.

Not voting for Joey deVillo is like spoiling your ballot. Do the right thing!

celebrity RECIPES

It's been really damn cold in Kingston these past few weeks. So to warm you up, we would like to entice you with this recipe for hot cocoa. You should really try this, it's a lot better than that instant stuff.

HOT COCOA

- 4 tbs cocoa
- 4 tbs sugar
- 1/2 cup water
- a bit of salt
- 3 1/2 cup milk

- i) Pour the milk into a mid-sized pot and heat on medium.
- ii) Mix the dry ingredients into a bowl and add the water, stirring until smooth.
- iii) add the chocolate paste to the milk and stir until it heats. It is ready when the mixture steams. DON'T BOIL IT!
- iv) Enjoy!

BURGER KING

Buy a Double Whopper with cheese at the regular price and receive a Double Whopper with Cheese FREE.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by heater. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 1/94

BURGER KING

Buy a Double Whopper with cheese at the regular price and receive a Double Whopper with Cheese FREE.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by heater. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 1/94

THE STUDENT AWARDS OFFICE

VICTORIA SCHOOL
OFFICE HOURS
11:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

DO YOU KNOW ---

Government Aid:

- You should maintain contact with the bank in which you negotiated your loans. Please ensure they have your current address.
- If you do not receive an OSAP loan next year and you return to school, you must inform your bank in order to maintain interest-free status. They will require you to submit a form confirming your enrolment at Queen's.
- If you graduate in April, 1994, or if you do not return to school in September, 1994, interest on your 1993/1994 Canada Student Loan will be calculated from 1 May 1994 (no longer is there the six month interest free period). However, you still have six months to make your first payment.
- If you applied for OSAP this year, a pre-printed application form will be sent to your permanent address in February or March. When you complete the form, bring it to the Student Awards Office. We will check it over and forward it to the Ministry for you.

Deadlines:

- 31 January 1994 - for OSAP funding for 93/94
- 28 February 1994 - for appeals

Bursaries:

If you find you need money to help you over an emergency situation or have expenses that you did not anticipate, bursary assistance may be available.

Food money is available for those in need.

Work Bursary:

Some positions on campus may be available for qualified students. Pick up and application at the awards office.

Scholarships:

Check the scholarship section of your calendar for awards that require an application. Some scholarships with deadline dates in the next few weeks are:

February 1:

- St. Andrews Exchange Scholarship
- Procter & Gamble International Exchange Bursaries

March 1:

- Ted Reeve Memorial Award

March 15:

- Gordan A. Snider Prize in the History of Technology

March 31:

- W.H. MacInnes Scholarship
- Rector Norman MacLeod Rogers Scholarship
- McLquham Foundation Prize in English
- James A. Stitt Prize in Poetry
- Walter Thumm Memorial Scholarship in Physics

Loans:

Queen's University can help you with cash flow problems and/or educational expenses. There are no monthly payments required while you are a student, although monthly payment of the interest charges will save you money in the long run!

Budget Counselling:

We can advise you about available options so that you can stretch your remaining funds to 30 April!!! Make an appointment to see an advisor.

We MAKE HATS
and We MAKE them WELL!
WAG
ORIGINAL BRAND
Tel: 547-0864

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

FRIDAY, JANUARY 28, 1994 • ISSUE 27 • VOLUME 121

ODYSSEY
TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group
549-3553 549-3561

inside

The Journal

LOW, LOW, LOW...

Popular Toronto rockers Lowest of the Low come to Albie's and prove to be just as popular here.
—Reviewed on page 19.

GIMME SHELTER

Househunting? This week Features provides advice and information for prospective tenants: how to deal with a recalcitrant landlord, your rights as a tenant and what to look for in a house.
—See page 14.

AMS ELECTIONS

The Journal talks to the five teams running for AMS executive. Each team reveals their promises and platforms for the student body to chew on.
—Interviews begin on page 4.

"One in six are illiterate ... appreciate the fact that you are able to read. In university you tend to forget." —Alex Cole Hamilton, organizer of the Queen's Students for Literacy awareness campaign. See page 3 for story.

AMS contenders square off

BY SHELLEE
FITZGERALD

Old Fort Henry recruits students from the Summer Jobs Fair on Tuesday.

BRENT DAVIS

Candidates for the upcoming Alma Mater Society election kicked off their campaigns in full force this week by participating in a series of open forums.

Competition is unusually stiff this year with a record five teams competing for the executive positions of president, vice-president (operations), and vice-president (university affairs).

The open forums, held Tuesday night at Jean Royce Hall and Wednesday night at Victoria Hall, allowed the teams an opportunity to introduce themselves and establish their positions on key issues.

In their opening remarks, candidates expressed a general dissatisfaction with the shape the AMS has taken in recent years, specifically, that it has become too removed from the students it is intended to serve.

"The AMS should be run for, and in accordance with, the faculties instead of dictating to them," said presidential candidate Drake Carlyle. In a sentiment echoed by other teams, Carlyle and running mates Karen Ward and Andrea Whiting pledged, "we are committed to working with you and not just for you."

The Pirmohamed, Rex, and Shantz team are campaigning under the banner of 'Bringing It Back' with an emphasis on giving student government back to the students.

The Arnold, Scadron, and Gallardi team targeted the hiring/firing policy of the AMS, and emphasized the need for a crackdown in this area to ensure the best candidates are being recruited for AMS jobs. Arnold suggested implementing a blind-hiring policy, whereby student numbers would replace names on AMS job applications in order to eliminate unfair hiring practices.

At Wednesday night's meeting, Arts and Science student Kevin McArthur asked candidates to detail how they planned to protect students in the face of impending tuition hikes.

The Arnold team responded by saying measures would have to be taken to ensure that university education would remain accessible to all, and that OUSA—the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance—should play a more active role.

The Pirmohamed team felt there would be a need to lobby for an expansion of student aid and a united student voice would be needed to achieve this.

The issue of daycare surfaced repeatedly during the meeting at West Campus. Candidates acknowledged that daycare facilities are severely lacking on campus and that the problem must be addressed.

The team of Asselstine, Liepmann, and Shin considered the issue imperative.

"There is an increasing diversification of the student population," said Shin. "To make university more accessible, everybody should be working together to bring flexible daycare to Queen's."

Silvia Lukka, from the Bertrand, Smith, and Lukka team, said that while flexible childcare should be the long term goal, in the short term a bursary could be set up so students requiring the service can apply for financial relief.

Most of the teams showed a commitment to expansion of services, and the Pirmohamed team stressed that daycare should be more than just an AMS issue and that other groups on campus must pitch in.

Campus safety was another major issue. Mary Claire Brooks of the Women's Centre voiced concerns about the safety of women on and off campus and asked candidates how they intended to make improvements.

All teams recognized a need for improved lighting on and off campus and the Pirmohamed, Asselstine, and Bertrand teams mentioned plans to pressure the City of Kingston by actively lobbying for better lighting in the student core.

AMS CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

Walkhome frozen up

Cold weather disables service for a night

BY BROCK MARTLAND

Cold weather led to the one-night closing of the Queen's Walkhome Service on Wednesday. Wind-chill temperatures reaching a numbing minus 50 degrees Celsius proved too cold for Walkhome staff.

Alma Mater Society Administrative Services Director Stephanie Taylor called the shut-down unprecedented. "It's never happened before," she said.

Walkhome staff would have been outside for two to four hours in the frigid temperatures, Taylor said, "and we're not going to put our employees at risk like that."

Walkhome coordinator Colleen Stuckey realized the danger after a housemate suffered frostbite in the afternoon. Concerned about the risk for Walkhome staff, she contacted Environment Canada, and learned that colder weather was expected, and that it was considered safe to be outside for only two to three minutes.

Stuckey said that staff faced "far too much of a hazard in this kind of weather."

Walkhome contacted Vice-Principal (University Relations) Tom Williams, and decided to shut down the service. Taylor explained that a staff member answered phone calls all night. Additionally, she said, anyone who was desperate for a way to get home was told to call a cab, and submit the receipt to the AMS for possible reimbursement.

Women's Centre shuffle

New coordinators seek harmony in Grey House, and contact with Queen's students

BY BRAD ELDER

There's been a changing of the guard at the Queen's Women's Centre, and its new leaders hope that a revised philosophy will usher in a new era of inclusiveness.

Meanwhile, two mainstays of the Women's Centre, Mary Syrett and Bobbi Spark, have left to pursue other interests. Syrett, the former treasurer of the Women's Centre, sparked controversy last term within the centre's parent group, the Queen's Student and Community Services Group, when she criticized the QSCSG as a "pronounced hostile power hierarchy."

At that time, Syrett also accused QSCSG coordinator Julia Lipinska of verbal harassment, a complaint stemming from a comment made by Lipinska at a September board meeting. Lipinska is now on formal probation for her actions.

However, according to Laura McKay, the newly-appointed spokesperson and a coordinator for the Women's Centre, the centre has now issued Lipinska a formal apology.

"The way the [incident] was approached was inappropriate," she said, adding that "it reflected badly on the Women's Centre."

McKay said the new Women's Centre coordinators are working to restore relations with both Lipinska and with the QSCSG.

However, she assured The Journal that Syrett and Spark had parted company with the centre on "very amiable" terms.

"They've just left to pursue other interests," she said.

McKay said the centre has suffered in the past from a negative image, and has been blamed for upholding "interests that didn't directly affect the Queen's community."

As a result, McKay said, a 12-woman body is formulating a new direction for the Women's Centre. That body will steer the mandate of the Women's Centre "more towards the campus specifically."

MCKAY CONTINUED ON PAGE 5

DONE A GOOD DEED LATELY?

RED CROSS BLOOD DONOR CLINIC

Give the gift of life...
FEB. 2, 1pm - 5pm FEB. 3, 2pm - 8pm

Lower Vic. Hall Residence

Please Bring 2 pieces of I.D.. Refreshments will be provided, and transportation if necessary.
Sponsored by NursingSoc and EngSoc.

$1 = One Can of Root Beer (Gone in 3 Chugs)
or
1/8 of a Movie in the Theatres (Some People really like just seeing the Previews)
or
Enough Dryer Time to make your Clothes go from WET to just DAMP
or...

ONE WHOLE MOVIE FROM VIDS IN THE HALL!!!

All Movies for a Buck Every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in January Open 3-11 PM in JDUC

ASUS OPEN FORUMS:

February 2nd 6:30 to 8:00pm in Upper Victoria Hall and
February 4th 11:30 to 1:00pm in Lower Ceilidh, JDUC
Candidates for election include:

ASUS Executive
94 (Permanent), 95, 96 & 97 Year Executives
ASUS Reps to the AMS
Senators

This is an opportunity for you to find out who is running, listen to panel discussions and to ask candidates any questions you might have!!

INFORM YOURSELF AND VOTE!

4 LARGE PIZZAS ANY 1 ITEM $19.99 + TAX DELIVERY AVAILABLE

Little Caesars Pizza
When you make pizza this good, one just isn't enough.
544-1309

Food services defend recycling practices

BY JANE MUNDELL

With the Queen's campus food services contract being the focus of recent debate, more students have been asking what exactly is recycled by campus food services.

According to Residence and Food Operations Manager Bruce Griffiths, the food services now recycle anything recycled under the current Queen's system.

These items include glass, corrugated cardboard and fine and general paper, he said.

However, some Marriott employees expressed concern that little is being done. One worker in Leonard Cafeteria said that the only items being recycled there are corrugated cardboard and french fry oil.

Griffiths said, however, that the food services have already incorporated many recommendations put forth by the Queen's Environmental Action Group.

He mentioned initiatives already undertaken such as the move away from individual creamers and moving the paper bags away from the service area.

A list of these recommendations which are "currently in place" or "to be implemented in the short term" is posted in food service areas.

In the cash operations—such as in Mac-Corry and the John Deutsch University Centre—the aim is to reduce more than to recycle, Griffiths said.

He encouraged people "to both buy and continue using the environmental mugs." Customers

The amount of waste generated by the food services on campus has been the subject of recent debate.
TRICIA BAUMAN

receive a nickel discount each time these mugs are used instead of styrofoam cups.

While many mugs are purchased, few come back and are actually used, he said.

Rebecca Spalding, the University's waste management coordinator, said that "like everywhere else on campus, more could be done," but that, for her, it is "a matter of exploring what is feasible."

She said that gradually the technology and services in Kingston are becoming more available and that the barriers to recycling are dropping.

Spalding expects to "put together [a recycling proposal] that makes sense from a space point of view and a labour point of view."

The idea of composting is being explored, said Griffiths, although he mentioned that it requires provincial approval.

He explained that a licence is needed to transport food from one location to another, but that there is not enough compostable material to warrant it.

Some food services workers allege that recycling efforts are sub-par.

One worker explained that only in certain areas is there access to the Laidlaw bins which are used for recycling. "Students pile up juice containers, but most just get dumped in the garbage," the worker said.

In the bar services, one worker charged that only beer bottles—for which refunds are given when returned—are being recycled. Wine and liquor bottles "go directly into the bin at West Campus."

The workers also expressed concern with the move to completely disposable dishes around Christmas.

Spalding said she keeps files on the different methods of recycling certain items, and expects to put forward a proposal soon.

"It's a slow process involving a combination of a lot of factors," she said.

QSL group tackles illiteracy

BY ANDREA HUNCAR

For Alex Cole Hamilton, literacy is not only about teaching someone how to read, it's about teaching someone to love to read. Hamilton is the chairperson of Frontier College: Queen's Students For Literacy.

QSL is an organization in its first year, and is part of the larger Frontier College, a national group which combats illiteracy.

On Wednesday, 40 volunteers from QSL staged a read-a-thon for two hours in the John Deutsch University Centre. Hamilton said the event was meant to "raise awareness of the fact that one in six are illiterate and [to] appreciate the fact that you are able to read... In university you tend to forget."

The volunteers were very enthusiastic. "All of us want to make a difference and by doing this we are," said Donna Zuzart.

Monique Jilesen, co-chairperson, said she is "very happy [and] excited with the results" of the Queen's Students For Literacy Awareness Week.

Kathy Golder, in charge of communications for QSL, said the group's recruiting drive was successful. "We had an amazing response. It was great," she said.

With 87 volunteers this year, the organization is focusing on two main programs: the Prison Literacy Initiative and Reading Circles.

57 trained volunteers in the Prison program provide inmates with one-on-one tutoring. 70 per cent of these inmates are functionally illiterate.

The Reading Circle program pairs Queen's students with a buddy from local elementary schools. Last Monday, students from Robert Meek and Central elementary schools visited Queen's to participate in the Awareness Week.

The Reading Circles were developed by Frontier College's national Read Canada program. The local circles use 30 volunteers three times a week to promote lifelong reading among children through "reading relationships."

Usually one-on-one, a child and volunteer first read together for half an hour. The second half of the Reading Circle is a group reading session in which the children are encouraged to participate.

Nupi Gokhale, a QSL organizer, said the Reading Circles are designed "to take reading out of a school atmosphere and teach children that reading can be a lot of fun."

Gokhale and Vanessa Young organized the event to "demonstrate what we're doing with these kids on a weekly basis," said Gokhale.

Under a tent set up in the JDUC, the children read with their volunteers and then listened to storyteller Mike Saunders.

Saunders told an entertaining story about how the sea became salty. "I don't tell [my stories] alone. I will need some wonderful, brave, daring souls to volunteer"—eager young hands shot up—"but, not yet," Saunders teased.

Kai Ivimey, a seven-year-old who was picked to be a volunteer, played a dragon during Saunders' tale. Afterwards he said he wasn't nervous. "I've done it a lot. I was the bad guy," he said.

Kai greatly enjoys his Reading Circle. "I read books to [my QSL partner] to get stickers and every time you read 10 books you get a book to keep forever," Kai said.

After ensuring his name had been spelt correctly, Kai asked if The Journal would be paying him for his interview.

Kai's mother was present throughout the presentation. Parents are encouraged to take part.

Kai's reading partner, Bobbi Rothenburger, explained that the volunteers read with the same child regularly. She said it's beneficial because "you know what level they're at, what they like. [Kai and I] tease each other all the time. We have become friends."

Another participant of the Reading Circle, eight-year-old Mikyla Yarwood said, "I think everybody should learn how to read. There is no better spot to learn than at 99 York"—one of the venues for the Reading Circles.

On Feb. 1, guest speaker Rubin Carter will contribute to the awareness campaign. Carter spent 19 years in prison for murders he did not commit. He entered illiterate, learned to read and now promotes education, human rights and justice.

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

ORGANIZED LABOUR

The Ontario Public Interest Research Group of Kingston is holding a seminar on the future of organized labour in Canada. The seminar will take place in the McLaughlin Room of the John Deutsch University Centre on Jan. 31, 1994. For more info: contact Mike Crummey at 549-0066.

STUDENTS FOR LITERACY

Frontier College: Queen's Students for Literacy is welcoming former professional boxer, Rubin "Hurricane" Carter to Grant Hall at 7:30pm on Feb. 1, 1994. The Frontier College sponsored event is in support of literacy programs at Queen's and in Kingston. Admission is free.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The Canadian Institute of International Affairs (Kingston) presents a conference on Trends in Canadian Foreign Policy at the Donald Gordon Conference Centre Jan. 29, 1994. The full day event will discuss aid, trade and security in Asia, Canada's role in the emerging Americas, Africa's challenges to Canadian foreign policy, and European security in the face of ethnic conflict. For more information: contact Xavier Furtado at 531-3855.

Students search for summer jobs

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

With the summer fast approaching, many students have started looking in earnest for a summer job. It's a search that leaves many students daunted.

Shannon Fitzgerald (Arts '95) said she's definitely discouraged. "I can't see myself finding a summer job that would be adequate for paying next year's tuition," she said.

Fitzgerald, like many Queen's students, expressed concern about the proposed tuition increases for next year. "It's very depressing. Raising tuitions will cut into a lot of other things students need. The government bleeds students dry."

Although Kyla Munro (Arts '95) is worried about tuition hikes for next year, she said she feels relieved to have a summer job, even though she would like more hours.

"Most of my friends don't have summer jobs," Munro remarked.

"They become easily discouraged. But if students look long enough, they should be able to find something to support themselves on, but not necessarily something to save money for school."

Barb Mundell, coordinator for Employment Programs at Queen's Career Planning and Placement, advised students to come down to CP&P to look at job boards, sign out books in their library, go to interview and resume workshops, or just talk to counsellors.

Mundell said she was pleased with the turnout of approximately 2,300 students at the Summer Jobs Fair in Grant Hall on Tuesday.

"I think the Summer Jobs Fair has a wide variety of employers now. It's definitely a draw to students," she said.

But Mundell warned students that they have to put effort into getting a summer job, remarking that "if students don't try they're not going to get anywhere."

"Everyone would like to work in their future career. But employment that gives you other skills is important too—skills that you can use in your other jobs in the future," she said.

Ultimately, Mundell urges students to have a positive outlook. "Don't let it get you down," she said. "Something will turn up. It may not be the ideal summer job, but something will turn up."

READING WEEK TRAVEL

STUDENT CLASS FARES WORLDWIDE

SUN DESTINATIONS 5% off

CHARTER CLASS FARES CANADA & EUROPE

THE EXPERTS IN UNIVERSITY TRAVEL!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

THE FLAVOUR OF INDIA IN DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

Featuring Tandoori, Curry, & Vegetarian Dishes

20% off regular menu items with this coupon

LUNCH BUFFET REG. $7.95 FOR STUDENTS $5.95

Open Daily for Lunch & Dinner
161 Princess Street. 531-7988

Licensed by the L.L.B.O. Expires May 30, 1994

Downtown

Copper Penny

COPPER PENNY is a very popular downtown restaurant for the whole family.

Large portions of food are served in a relaxing, clean and casual setting by our friendly staff.

Meals range from $4.50 to $8.25.

Enjoy Fettucinni Primavera, Sizzlin' Chicken and Ribs on a Skillet, Steaks, large Homemade Burgers and Sandwiches, or Homemade Cheesecakes, just to name a few.

Come watch the Super Bowl on our Big Screen TV's throughout the restaurant.

549-4257
240 Princess Street

The Candidates...

Interviews with the 1994 AMS executive hopefuls

ASSELSTINE, LIEPMANN AND SHIN

BY MEGAN EASTON

With the slogan "Students First" headlining their campaign, the team of Mike Assestine, Linda Shin and Wayne Liepmann have a platform that emphasizes activism and accessibility. The team said their priorities will be to improve the AMS's internal and external communication links, provide daycare for students, increase attendance at campus pubs, review student interest fees, and adopt a more aggressive stance in relations with the city of Kingston.

"It's not the students' responsibility to seek out their executive... the executive should be out in constant contact with students," said Assestine, a third-year biology major vying for AMS president.

Assestine said he would like to see more student involvement in the AMS decision-making process. With better advertising, he said, "it's so easy to get members-at-large from the student population for committees."

The Assestine team underscored the need to improve AMS services for students. Liepmann was concerned about falling attendance at campus bars. Although the administration presently monitors alcohol prices at Alfie's and the Quiet Pub, he said there has to be more price flexibility to allow fair competition with off-campus bars.

The trio has plans to rejuvenate the John Deutsch University Centre. Although Liepmann said The Kitchen Sink has some problems characteristic of any new business, he remarked that "it has tremendous educational value," and so should continue.

The team would like to move the Publishing and Copy Centre into the space currently occupied by the Parent Resource Centre.

Although Shin does not believe the JDUC is the right location for a childcare centre, the team said they are committed to making Queen's accessible to a diverse student population.

However, the team agreed that providing daycare is not something the AMS could, or should, do alone. Other groups with an interest in daycare, she said, include the Graduate Students Society, the administration, part-time students and the provincial government.

"I think that the proper role of the AMS is to make sure that [daycare] becomes an issue with these other groups, especially the administration."

Shin said innovative education is the key to preventing intolerance on campus. "It's really important to target first-years on education issues... there are a lot of good programs like the Queen's 101, but there's a lot more that can be done by the AMS," she said.

To make campus safer for students, Shin suggested more comprehensive training for Queen's security personnel, improved lighting and emergency lights, and an expanded walk-home service.

On the financial side, Liepmann said the team believes in budgeting for zero, but he wanted to clarify that the AMS is a non-profit organization. He said, "there's no reason why there should be an unallocated surplus."

Assestine said his team would undertake a review of student interest fees. "The AMS can't keep tacking on fees to a student population that is slowly giving out under the pressure of increasing tuition," he said.

To inform students on where their money goes, Shin proposed having information days for campus organizations to explain their fees to students.

The team also plans to simplify the opt-out process by using summer mail-outs and information packages in registration kits to inform students about opt-outs.

The trio also sees a need for improvement in town-gown relations. "I don't think students' rights have been taken seriously by the city," Shin said.

Assestine is active on the current AMS task force on housing issues. The team places housing issues, especially enforcement of property standards, at the forefront of their plan. The AMS must explain zoning regulations to students so that they can make a united stand against potentially discriminatory bylaws, Shin said.

The team supports Queen's current membership in the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA).

On the matter of current proposals for restructuring the AMS, Assestine said, "we want to ensure the continuity of the recommendations from year to year... they really are effective."

The team said the AMS executive's accountability depends on the campus media. For this reason, Assestine said he "fully endorses" the autonomy of the Queen's Journal.

Each of the team members has gained experience in a variety of clubs and associations at Queen's. Last year Assestine was the Arts and Science '95 president, and presently the ASUS representative to the AMS assembly. Besides her work in the Academic Affairs commission, Shin is a member of the Politics Departmental Student Council. Liepmann was on the ASUS '95 council and along with Assestine and Shin, he was also an ASUS Orientation Week coordinator.

PIRMOHAMED, REX AND SHANTZ

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

Taking inspiration from the Liberal Party's federal election strategy, Taz Pirmohamed, Kevin Rex and Jane Shantz have decided to put their campaign promises down in writing. Instead of a "little red book," they call it a "Tricolour Plan."

The plan focuses on issues of governance, innovation, spirit, and quality, and is the centrepiece in the team's bid to steer the Alma Mater Society in '94-'95.

Addressing the issue of governance, Pirmohamed raised concerns that tuition would be increasing in the next academic year, without an increase in quality of education. She suggested that students be able to compel a professor to use the Instructional Development Centre, which has already been the target of $750,000 in funding, should the students feel that the quality of instruction is not up to par.

In the area of innovation, vice-president (operations) candidate Kevin Rex, this year's campus activities deputy commissioner, suggested a second-hand store in the JDUC, carrying everything from used compact discs to furniture. Pirmohamed referred to it as her team's "new brand of environmentalism."

Rex also suggested that the AMS look at providing house insurance to the off-campus student community. "By offering it to such a large group of people we could probably get a discounted rate," he said.

In the realm of spirit, the team spoke of the increasing power of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board, which Rex referred to as the "Big Brother" of orientation week.

Vice-president (university affairs) candidate Jane Shantz, who is currently director of the Student Team on Alumni Relations, said, "the concentration is on 'how do we get around SOARB,' and events are falling short."

Quality of life in the student housing area is another concern of the team, which plans a major lobbying effort targeting the municipal government. "It's our responsibility to get student interests on their platform," Shantz said, referring to the November municipal elections.

Rex and Pirmohamed said their collective experience made their team different from the others. "We've got solid ideas and we're ready to implement them. We're making promises we know we can keep."

McKay speaks

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

"We'll branch out, in the sense of taking advantage of our resources," she said, noting that the Women's Centre has an extensive library, archives and educational material.

The new Women's Centre coordinators took a step forward at Tuesday night's meeting of the QSFCG, announcing their intention to scrap their former mandate, which is called "the Basis Of Unity."

According to McKay, the Basis of Unity, which was conceived in 1986, is outdated. "Feminism's been through many phases since then," she said.

SUPER BOWL BASH

"SUPER" DOGS
"SUPER"-SCREEN
"SUPER"-DOOR PRIZES
"SUPER"-BUCK OFF!
COME EARLY...
GET A "SUPER" SEAT!

Growth of Dining 541-Real

The Winter Sale

50% to 70% OFF

On Most Of Our Winter Clothing

WE PAY THE TAX

sir gawain

CLOTHING FOR THE CONTEMPORARY MIND.

Corner of Princess & Ontario St. 542-0107

SEPP'S JANUARY CLEARANCE SALE

INSULATED SKI WEAR - SunIce, Couloir, D.Troni, Nordico Sportsystem, Columbio 20 to 50% OFF

KIDS SKIWEAR - Sun Ice, Couloir Obermeyer, Columbio 30% OFF

PATAGONIA & NORTH FACE - Remaining Winter Stock 25% OFF

SKIS - EVERY SKI ON SALE!
HEAD FIERO • MSRP $300 SALE $119
SALOMON 8000 EQUIPE • MSRP $595 SALE $399

BOOTS - EVERY BOOT ON SALE!
ROSSI R67 • MSRP $225 SALE $99
SALOMON INTEGRAL 9.0E • MSRP $675 SALE $399

PLUS MANY SPECIAL PACKAGE DEALS!

SEPP'S SKI SHOP IS THE AREAS ONLY SKI SPECIALIST!
WE OFFER RENTALS, DEMOS, KIDS TRADE INS,
1 HR. MOUNTING & NEXT DAY TUNING

MON, TUES, WED & SAT - 9:30 TO 5:30
THURS & FRI 9:30 TO 9:00
13 MONTREAL ST. DOWNTOWN
542-4558

HOUSEHUNTING

got you

STRESSED?

LOWER THAT STRESS QUOTIENT

For househunting tips and help
call or visit us:

TOWN-GOWN LIAISON
545-6745
Room 124, JDUC

BERTRAND, SMITH AND LUKKA

BY GEOFF LANGDON

Alma Mater Society presidential candidate Blair Bertrand expressed his belief that he's got something valuable to offer to the Queen's community.

"My philosophy is I'm elected to serve people," Bertrand said. "I believe I have a contribution to make." Bertrand is currently the vice-president (operations) for the Main Campus Residents' Council.

Ace Smith, a third-year Commerce student, is running for vice-president (operations). Smith, currently deputy communications commissioner with the AMS, said his best asset is his experience in finance and commerce.

Vice-president (university affairs) candidate Silvia Lukka believes her third-year sociology and psychology education lends well to the position. Lukka was this past year's AMS Orientation Committee chair.

Bertrand said the opt-out procedures, as well as AMS hiring practices, are priorities for this year.

"We plan to introduce a universal opt-out system with the individual fees coming up for referendum every three years," said Bertrand.

More onus will be placed on groups to advertise for their fees, and groups will be charged for the collection costs, he said.

Bertrand was critical of current AMS hiring practices.

"This year's team hasn't functioned as a unit," said Bertrand. He plans to introduce interactive sessions as well as a standard interview to determine suitability for the job.

"We want diversity, while focusing on unity," said Bertrand. Resume-padders "need not apply," he said.

Smith said AMS services need to be addressed from a "base fundamental business stand-point." Criticizing campus pubs for haphazard marketing, Smith said he plans to develop a long-term marketing strategy for AMS services to maintain a consistent advertising theme. An advertising coordinator will be hired to oversee advertising for all AMS services.

Complete autonomy for the Queen's Journal is a possibility, Smith said. They plan to gradually phase out the current non-opt-outable student fee covering part of Journal operations.

Smith said he would continue the current AMS policy of budgeting the AMS Walkhome and Student Constables services for zero profits, but he believes that other services such as Alfie's and the Copy Centre should be budgeted to make a small profit. "When you set a goal for profit, it's a rating of the efficiency of the service," said Smith.

Bertrand explained further that profits are needed in some services to offset losses in others. Even then, Bertrand said, "profits will be as close to zero as possible... we don't want to compromise cheap services."

Lukka's first priority as vice-president (university affairs) would be the resolution of the Parent Resource Centre problem. "It's not feasible for the AMS to provide childcare," explained Lukka. "We just can't do it."

In the short term, Lukka said, the AMS will provide bursaries for students with children to purchase childcare. Eventually, she plans to coordinate with the existing Queen's Day Care Centre to provide services. "There's no sense re-inventing the wheel," said Lukka.

Also, Lukka wants increased student representation on University boards and committees. She cited the recent addition of four students to the Student Health Board as a good start.

The team objected to the recent Phase II Housing Bylaw proposals. "We completely object to regulating land use by occupants. You cannot regulate where people live because of their occupation," said Lukka. "With the upcoming municipal election, the 15,000 students at Queen's have a lot of voting power," said Lukka.

When it comes to the Ontario University Student Alliance, the team of Bertrand, Smith and Lukka stand behind Queen's membership in the group.

"We agree completely with OUSA when it comes to accountability," said Bertrand. As well, he supports OUSA's stand on funding.

Bertrand is prepared to act on social problems at Queen's, but in a non-confrontational way stressing education and awareness. He would act against anyone who is accused of inappropriate comments "as long as it's through due process... not a witch hunt," said Bertrand.

Lukka said she will implement awareness training for Assembly members and commissioners and increase education programs for the public in a cost-effective way.

Bertrand has changes in mind for AMS Assembly, including better training for new members about the workings of Assembly, and making organizations more comfortable bringing concerns before Assembly.

"We don't want Assembly to be a rubber-stamp" for AMS proposals, Bertrand said.

AMS debates

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

In addition, the Arnold team proposed instituting a Security Liaison Committee within the AMS.

Carlyle suggested an expansion of the Walkhome service. His team also emphasized a need for better training of campus staff in dealing with instances of abuse in bars—specifically the harassment of women and other minority groups.

On the financial side, candidates focused on areas they feel are in need of immediate review and reorganization, including the future financial independence of The Journal, the Vids in the Hall deficit problem, and Alfie's Pub.

Four out of the five teams tackled the Alfie's issue, with Bertrand, Asselstine, and Rex emphasizing the need to make Alfie's more competitive with downtown bars to draw students back to campus pubs.

All teams expressed the need to reorganize student interest fees and opt-outs. One student voiced concern over the impact that proposed revisions would have on groups whose projects are dependent on assured annual funding.

Candidates responded by saying their aim was not so much to slash fees but to ensure they are used more effectively and to make groups accountable. The candidates agreed it was their responsibility to show students where their money is going.

CARLYLE, WARD AND WHITING

BY SHARON WILSON

According to Drake Carlyle, Andrea Whiting and Karen Ward, enthusiasm, previous government experience and novel ideas are what sets their team apart from other candidates running for the Alma Mater Society executive.

In an interview Wednesday, Carlyle, Whiting and Ward said their priority is students. Drake Carlyle, a third-year history major, is running for the position of AMS president. He stressed that the "AMS should not be run for the AMS but... for and with the faculty societies and their respective students."

All three candidates have been involved in the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, Carlyle as a commissioner, Ward as business manager of the ASUS clothing company, Levanna Designs, and Whiting as Head Gael this past year.

Whiting is a third-year sociology major and is running for vice-president (university affairs). She said the team hopes to make communication between the AMS and the student body easier. Among her proposals is a plan to hold Assembly meetings in Victoria Hall or the Lower Ceilidh of the John Deutsch University Centre, "so [students] feel like they have a voice."

As well, Whiting said a report of decisions that the executive have made each month could be distributed to the students on campus by the executive, making the executive more accountable.

On the topic of daycare, Whiting promised "no more band-aid solutions." The team proposes an expansion to the university's current daycare centre located at the corner of Union and Albert Street. Whiting said the AMS has a $1 million surplus, half of which is unallocated. Whiting said some of this money could be put toward expanding the daycare centre, coupled with fundraising and corporate sponsorship.

Whiting said her team would be "willing to do anything to get students with children to come to Queen's."

The team was cautious to fully endorse the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance. Vice-president (operations) candidate Ward said they agree with what OUSA represents, but are "not jumping on the bandwagon yet."

Carlyle said OUSA's much praised income-contingent loan repayment scheme isn't necessarily the best answer to post-secondary education's financial woes, citing criticism of the plan from student groups in Australia where income-contingent student loans have been in place since 1988.

Carlyle also wants the AMS to play a bigger role at Kingston City Hall in issues such as housing. He said that if elected, the AMS may create a new commissioner position to lobby the city full time.

Carlyle feels the AMS has "a duty to inform students on housing issues" so they can find solutions to their housing problems.

Meanwhile, Ward said some action is needed to make AMS services more viable and more competitive. Ward said Alfie's "marketing strategies need to be re-examined."

In order to compete with downtown bars, the team proposes a facelift for Alfie's, and negotiations to lower drink prices with Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams, who holds the liquor license for campus pubs.

Ward said the team will fight to keep the Quiet Pub, which has been threatened by noise problems. She said moving the QP would be an option.

In addition, the team has plans to expand the Tricolour Express bus service to include more destinations on peak weekends (such as London and Kitchener-Waterloo).

The team also propose the creation of an AMS-issued ID for international students to use at campus bars, instead of their passports. The problem, Whiting explained, is that passports "are their lives," and cannot be lost.

On the issue of free speech and campus publications, Ward said that they "disagree with strong-arming The Journal." Carlyle added, "it is important that The Journal is not an AMS mouth-piece."

When asked how their AMS council would avoid rifts between the corporate and society sides, Ward said there is "no reason why the social side and the corporate side cannot compliment each other."

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45
&
Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch
and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service
available.

(613) 644-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

Teacher's College

Post-Graduate Studies

in Australia and Great Britain

COMPLETE YOUR EDUCATION AND TRAVEL DREAMS

Ontario Ministry of Education approved programmes for one year teacher-training. Other post-graduate courses also available (M.B.A., M.A., M.Ed.)

Intake dates: Australia - March and June; Britain - September. Three- and Four-year university graduates may apply. Approximate fees $8 00 to $10 00 Canadian. Accommodation packages available. Information session early January. For details contact:

K.O.M. CONSULTANTS
P.O. Box 60524
Mountain Plaza Postal Outlet
Hamilton, Ontario
L9C 7N7
Telephone: 416 318 8200

WINTER REGISTRATION '94 10% Discount for Queen's Students

KIDS TO ADULTS
Beginners to Advanced
- Classical Ballet R.A.D.
- Modern Jazz, Tap
- Creative Movement (ages 3 to 7)
- Ballroom
- AEROBICS
- Pro Instructors

Come Dance with us ...
See the difference!
Registration:
Wed., Jan. 26 to Fri.,
Jan. 28 - 5-8pm, &
Sat., Jan 29 1-3pm.

259 QUEEN STREET
DOWNTOWN 547-5678

Quality Comfort Care
EYEWEAR
Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD.
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE
& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE

Pinocchio's
Chicken & Ribs
"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entrée and
receive the 2nd for 1/2 price
to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994
531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed
14 Garrett Street
(formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

Queen's University School of Music
Visiting Scholar
NATHALIYA KHOMA, cellist
Recital
Friday, January 28, 1994 - 8 p.m.
(with Allison Gagnon, piano)
Masterclass
Saturday, January 29, 1994 - 2 to 5 p.m.
Adm. to either event:
$5 (general) $3 (Student/Seniors) at door
Both events: Dunning Hall Auditorium

HORSE DRAWN SLEIGH, HAY AND CARRIAGE RIDES

Bonfire
Stop at General Wolfe Cabin on request

385-2923

AMEY'S TAXI
546-1111

The ARROGANT WORMS

Time: 7:30
Ticket Price: $12
Location: Grand Theatre
Date: Feb. 16, 1994
Tickets Available: Performing Arts Office; Grand Theatre. For info 546-5997

WORMS

Doing it Right
RIGHT NOW
$89

Whether you need your tuxedo rental next week, next month or next year, reserve by February 27, 1994 and lock in this special offer for your entire group.

FREEMAN
FORMALWEAR
DOING RIGHT SINCE 1914

Dover's Men's Wear

Corner of Princess and Bagot
544-6884
Supplier to the Arts '94 and Commerce '94 Formals

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists

Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

NEWS

ARNOLD, SCADRON AND GALLARDI

BY TARA ROY

In this year's Alma Mater Society executive elections, the team of Jonathan Arnold, Jessica Scadron and Caroline Gallardi believes it's time for some new kids on the block.

"I think real life experience is much more important in this campaign," said Arnold, the presidential candidate.

"We haven't been brainwashed, so to speak, by the rhetoric and the incestuous ralking in the AMS," said Arnold.

Gallardi, who is running for vice-president (university affairs), said her team represents "a new fresh voice."

"We want to have the communication gate a lot more open," she said.

The team's ideas include weekly reports from commissioners which would be filed and hopefully published weekly in The Journal, and a policy of a general referendum when a capital expenditure by the AMS exceeds $50,000.

Among the AMS executive and committees, Arnold, Gallardi and Scadron would like their staff to be able to talk to them.

They propose weekly meetings with commissioners in the Quiet Pub to talk about current issues and to air opinions.

To make student voices heard at Kingston City Hall, Arnold proposed creating a liaison committee between the three post-secondary institutions in Kingston, as well as petitioning for student speaking rights at council meetings.

He suggested solving the housing issue at Queen's by merging the existing three wards in the 'student ghetto' into one ward with a student voting majority.

The team also plans to negotiate a longer Orientation Week by sitting down with the Main Campus Residence Council and working towards, as Arnold put it, "more control" over the event.

The team plans to enlarge the AMS Publishing and Copy Centre, perhaps appropriating a room in the new library. They also propose weekly inventory reports at campus pubs in order to catalogue everything that goes in and out of the establishments.

If elected, the team plans to examine "every service bit-by-bit and see which ones should stay," said Scadron.

The team had no concrete plan concerning the childcare debate. "I agree that there is childcare needed... but there's no easy answer," said Scadron. She added that she would make it a priority.

Arnold said that the Ontario Undergraduate Students Alliance (OUSA) "is just another in a long line of attempts to put together a viable student voice—OUSA just doesn't get us anywhere; it's not a major issue," he said.

Regarding tuition increases, Arnold said that they will not amount to the expected 50 per cent, but will be closer to 15 per cent. There is nothing students can do about higher tuition, he said. "We're just going to have to bear down and take it... we're going to take it hard and that's just the way it is," he said.

Arnold does not support current AMS restructuring. "I propose to leave it as is," he said, adding that he would even consider increasing the number of deputy commissioners the AMS hires.

The team would like to combat social intolerance on campus through greater education. Surface, said Arnold, is an excellent medium for educating people, and if elected, the team would consider funding Surface for that purpose, but would impose restrictions on content.

They would also like to give more space to women's groups at Queen's to allow these groups to offer more resources to the community.

As far as a detailed plan to combat intolerance is concerned, Gallardi said, "I hadn't really thought about that."

Gallardi said that her job as desk clerk in residence has allowed her to integrate with first year students. She described herself as "a peoples' person" and said, "I enjoy integrating and getting out there."

Jessica Scadron, the candidate for vice-president (operations), is a third-year economics major. She currently fills the toles of vice-president (finance) of the Queen's International Affairs Association as well as delegate director and finance director of the Queen's Model United Nations.

Come Early!
Cheap-o-rama
7:30-9:30!

Tonight & Sat. night

It's Reggae/Ska time, mon!
Don't miss

"ONE"

guests
Fri. September's Child
Sat. Gypsy Soul

Fri.
Arts '97
Smoker!

No cover - great party!
This Sunday!

A.J.s presents

SuperBowl Party III!

- * 2 10' screens!
- * 50 yd line sense-a-round sound!
- * a bunch of little screens!
- * Free Pizza at half time!
- * N.T.N. QB1, for your playing enjoyment
- * "Wild Blues Yonder" after the game!

Why be an armchair Quarterback when you could be a Bar Stool Quarterback!
Just do it!

Sat.
Arts '96
Smoker!

THIS AIN'T NO STAR SEARCH!

BATTLE OF THE BANDS 1994

COMING IN MARCH TO ALFIE'S
NOW ACCEPTING ENTRIES
APPLICATIONS ARE ON THE QEA DOOR IN JDUC
DEADLINE FOR ALL SUBMISSIONS IS FEBRUARY 18TH-NO EXCEPTIONS QUESTIONS CALL ROB@545-2731 3:30-4:30 OR AMSQEA@QUCDN.QUEENSU.CA

QEA
QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

WIN YOUR 15 MINUTES OF FAME AND A WHOLE LOT MORE!

Chemical Engineering Orientation Night

Wednesday, February 2
Dupuis Hall Auditorum 7:30 p.m.

- why chemical Engineering is not "just more chemistry"
- the diversity of Chemical Engineering from producing artificial blood to environmental engineering to plastics
- beyond Queen's - career prospects and current employment opportunities
- the Chemical Engineering program
- the teaching and learning environment in Chem Eng
- lab and computer facilities
- social activities and fieldtrips

Do you have any questions about the Chemical Engineering profession and program at Queen's?

Come to the orientation night or call:

Prof. Jim McLellan
545-6343

Prof. Kim McAuley
545-2768

O P I N I O N

AMS elections: Some good ideas, but little depth.

In only 10 days Queen's students will be asked to choose their student leaders for the 1994-1995 academic year.

And while a record five teams are running, and a few good ideas have been proposed, so far the bounty of teams has not translated into a bounty of understanding as to the issues at hand.

Some of the promises put forward fall into the classic trap of infeasibility. Extending frosh week might be fun, but... is it really a good idea? Is it possible to reverse the dissolution of the Alma Mater Society Orientation Committee or do they plan on creating a new committee? Is the role of the administration being taken into account here?

If the Quiet Pub were to be moved, what effect would this have on capacity? Where would they move it to—or maybe we should ask, given zoning laws, where would they be allowed to move it to? What would be the costs of outfitting a new pub?

These are only two of the infeasible ideas put forward, two that stand out a little further than the others.

Some of the classic campaign words—accessibility and accountability, for example—are being underplayed this year. Candidates seem to be steering clear of traditional issues and instead are targeting day-care, student housing and the relationship between faculties and Assembly.

Although the traditional issues remain unresolved, the candidates deserve to be commended for targeting a number of problems that, if addressed competently, can only improve the quality of life for students on campus. Problems such as student housing and daycare may not be trendy or glamorous, but nonetheless they matter to many students on a day-to-day basis.

Surprisingly, one of the biggest issues facing students—tuition increases—seems to

Only Jonathan Arnold took a novel approach, adopting a form of disinterested fatalism: "we're going to take it hard and that's just the way it is."

Not surprisingly, while most of the teams are promising to assess services, they have not clearly articulated whether they view the AMS as a service or a business. Traditional claims about budgeting for zero and letting some services make a profit it were made, but no comprehensive policy statements have been issued.

Stock promises to combat racism, sexism and homophobia are in the air, but here too few real policy statements have been presented. In fact, over the past few years the popularity of and activism on social issues seems to have declined. Without Surface on campus, these issues will be easier and easier for future governments to ignore.

House insurance for students and competitive pricing at campus pubs will definitely be attractive to most students. But, instead of looking only for the "great idea," in this campaign we should be looking for competence and commitment.

Faced with infeasible plans, stock answers and ambiguous visions, the Queen's electorate is now faced with a choice. Do we endorse these deficient platforms by attending all-candidate open-forums sporadically, listening to candidates passively, and voting blindly?

Or do we make a point of demanding more from our future AMS executives by asking tough, informed questions when we see them on campus or when they come into our classes?

Only the latter will ensure that we elect a competent and clear-minded AMS executive. The candidates have thrown the ball into our court. Let's throw it back into theirs.

Speaking of elections...

Nominations for the position of Queen's Journal Editor-in-Chief are being accepted at the Queen's Journal house at 272 Earl St. as of today. Your nomination must be signed by either a member of editorial board or a contributor. The nomination period is open until 4:30p.m. Friday, Feb. 4.

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey DeVilla
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Marika Glickman
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC. BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey DeVilla
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Furse	LITERARY LAPSES EDITOR Megan Nichols
FEATURES EDITOR Allison Masemann	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder Brock Martland Lori Thorslison
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Adrienne Down
ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT Ryan P. Chen
ASSISTANT SPORTS Justin McKellar
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yamell
ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSES Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie	ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Hanter	SALES REPRESENTATIVE Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE Stuart Kedwell	HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao

CONTRIBUTORS
Julia Bars, Tricia Bauman, Jason Bennett, Rob Camp, Lisa Chen-Wing, Steve Cobham, Phil Daniels, Brent Davis, Christian deBruijn, Megan Easton, Shelley Fitzgerald, Andra Gilchrist, Larry Hezan, Andrew Huncar, Bill Hunt, Ben Jones, Kristen Kunnas, Bryan Lambert, Geoff Lange, Andrew McAllister, Philip McBride, Owen Miano, Michael Mota, Jane Mundell, Shannon Niemi, Dera Nevin, Brendan Powell, Tara Roy, Greg Speirs, Sharon Wilson

Hunger pains...

The Marriott food services contract is up for grabs, and all students, not just those in residence, should be concerned. Marriott's residence and cash operations on this campus combine for a contract reputedly worth $12 million, and it is time students said something about where their money goes, and what they get in return.

Queen's food on campus is... often embarrassing. And what's worse, it enjoys a monopoly, excepting the Lick's truck and the hot dog vendor in front of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Not only is Marriott not faced with price or quality competition, but there are questions surrounding its environmental and labour standards.

Accountability is also an issue. Students have been complaining for years about the food, and their grievances continually fall on deaf ears. Of course, students haven't exactly lobbied effectively, as most become disinterested as their first year draws to a close and plans are made to leave residence. The last thing on their minds is improving food for next year's residence dwellers.

Now that the contract is up, and residence students have won at least a partial victory in having a role in the decision, we have an opportunity to make a change. Let's hope that we don't blow it.

It would be a shame to see student apathy give Marriott's monopoly of mediocrity a new lease on life. Believe it or not, other universities have food that the students actually like, so why can't we?

The University of Guelph has been praised for its system. Instead of contracting out their food service operations to a private company, Guelph self-administers its cafeterias.

A more significant difference between food services at Guelph and Queen's, other than food quality, is the use of a point system. At Guelph, the cost of each meal is removed from a debit card which is valid at a variety of cafeterias, with a variety of prices. Guelph even has a sports bar with a waitstaff and sports bar-style menu—maybe not everyone's ultimate dining experience but nevertheless a far cry from "steak-night" at Leonard cafeteria.

There are cafeterias at Guelph in the more traditional format, but the point is, students have more choices.

As well, the Guelph system isn't set up to make a profit—it's set up to serve the students.

Marriott, on the other hand, is set up to make money. The non-optional quadruple digit fee for a meal plan on Main Campus may be a bargain for those with large appetites and strong digestive systems, but for many students, it's simply not worth it.

Marriott's all-you-can-eat system contributes to an enormous amount of food waste, which is not being composted.

A point system, similar to Guelph's, would not allow students to taste test everything and "throw" out what they can't stomach.

The fact that some student groups, staff associations and Marriott unions have formed a coalition called "Gut-Feeling" to air their grievances is a sign that people are getting fed up.

The University should be listening to students as it decides what to do with food services on campus. And students should be sure to raise their voices.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, January 28, 1994 • Issue 27 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Copyright © 1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The cost of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.

Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2. Telephone: 613-545-2800. Facsimile: 613-545-6728. Internet: journal@qucdn.queensu.ca

Circulation 10,000. Issue 28 will be published on Tuesday, February 1, 1994.

OPINIONS

CLARIFICATION AND CONDEMNATION OF YEE'S LETTER

THE EDITOR,
As Editor-in-Chief of the 1993-1994 Tricolour Yearbook, I wish to issue a statement condemning the series of libelous allegations made in the letter to the Editor by Robert Yee in the Friday, Jan. 21 issue of The Journal.

First of all, Yee claimed in his letter that the 1992-1993 Tricolour Yearbook was completed as of last April. At that time, technically only 33 of the 306 pages in total had been received by the publisher.

The deadline for the book was May 4, 1993 and at this time a total of only 85 pages were completed and sent to the publisher. On May 1, as editor-in-chief I assumed my responsibilities for the 1993-1994 yearbook, but, as the two are entirely separate entities, Yee remained responsible for the completion of the 1992-1993 yearbook.

It should be noted at this time that a complete record exists of Robert Yee's submissions to the publisher, and these indicate that the final submission of pages was not made until Nov. 4, 1993 making the book more than five months late. This is an indisputable fact and any statements by Yee to the contrary are simply false.

Yee stated in his letter that he was liaising with the company. However, records provided by the publisher indicate that this was not the case. In fact, on numerous occasions the publisher attempted to contact Yee to inquire as to when he would be submitting the remaining pages.

In a letter dated Oct. 14, the publisher addressed his concerns to Media Services Director Eric Jabal.

In this letter, the publisher, Jack Clements from Herff Jones Canada, said, "I have talked to Rob Yee on numerous occasions, but I haven't been able to get any tangible information from him."

In his letter to the editor, Yee claimed that as the 1993-1994 Tricolour Yearbook editor I am responsible for the production of the uncompleted 1992-1993 yearbook. This is not true. It is not within my job description to complete unfinished work.

According to my job description, my only contact with the previous year's Tricolour yearbook is distribution upon its arrival at the office, and opt-out data entry. This is an indisputable fact.

Yee charged that I have no "real" experience with the production/administrative side of the service. In fact, I have extensive experience in both areas having worked for the Tricolour since 1991 as photography editor, which entails considerable administrative duty. I also worked in yearbook production for three years during secondary school.

Obviously I would not have been hired for the position of editor-in-chief if I did not have sufficient experience in these areas, and I resent any allegations that suggest otherwise.

Furthermore, I resent having to make my resume public in order to defend myself against what are clearly unfounded and ridiculous lies.

Yee suggested in his letter that I did not complete my job as 1992-1993 photography editor. As the rest of my photography staff knows, this is another lie.

Contrary to his insulting and ridiculous claim, Rob's dismissal had absolutely nothing to do with me and everything to do with his own incompetence. If he wishes to pursue this matter further I suggest he take it up with Eric Jabal or Tim Wilson—the people who made the decision to fire him.

The obscene quotations that Yee wishes to include under the photos of graduates in the 1992-1993 yearbook were never in fact approved at any editorial meetings. Perhaps if editorial meetings were actually held this problem would never have arisen.

If Yee discovered the books were not in when he read the paper last week, he has no one to blame but himself.

The simple fact of the matter remains that as editor-in-chief of the 1993-1994 Tricolour Yearbook, I am not officially associated with the 1992-1993 book in any way. Any claims made by Yee to the contrary are simply not true.

At this point I would like to remind Yee that spreading defamatory untruths about another person is the basis for legal action.

This never was an issue open to debate, and I refuse to be placed in a position where I am forced to needlessly defend myself against lies from a person who is desperately searching to blame anyone but himself.

KAREN KILCULLEN COMM '95

Apology

It has come to The Journal's attention that many of the statements made in the letter to the editor by Robert Yee and published in the Jan. 21 issue were untrue. The Journal apologizes to Karen Kilcullen for any personal or professional injury she may have suffered due to our publication of Mr. Yee's statements. The Journal also apologizes for any inconveniences this situation may have incurred.

AMS RESPONDS TO YEE LETTER

THE EDITOR,
Due to the defamatory allegations made by Robert Yee in his letter to the Editor, "Tricolour Yearbook Editor Responds" [The Queen's Journal, Jan. 21] we feel it our professional obligation to reply to his accusations. Mr. Yee has, over the course of the 1993-94 academic year, continued to malign both the character and performance of the current Media Services Director, Eric Jabal, and the 1993-94 Tricolour Yearbook Editor, Karen Kilcullen, in an attempt to mitigate mistakes made during the production of the 1992-93 yearbook.

To begin with, Ms. Kilcullen has been extremely successful in administering the current affairs of, and changes to, the 1993-94 yearbook. Likewise, the performance of Mr. Jabal during his term in office has been unquestionably reliable and effective. Neither Eric nor Karen are deserving of the remarks that Mr. Yee has expressed.

In brief, Mr. Jabal and Ms. Kilcullen have both performed in exemplary fashion in the manage-

Talking Heads

If you could be anywhere in the world right now, where would you be?

"I'd even go to Carleton if it was hot there."
ELLEN SEALEY
ARTS '95

"Someplace warm where you don't have to walk 20 minutes in the freezing cold to make an 8:30 math class."
LAURA MARR ARTS '96

"Anywhere where we don't have to wear these!"
CHRISTINA MORGAN
ARTS '95

"Anywhere in the tropics...because it's -48 C outside!"
VIC SOMMERKAMP
ARTSCI '94

OPEN FORUM

ment of their respective responsibilities. Should Mr. Yee have any further concerns, we suggest that he follow proper procedures rather than defame capable AMS employees in the campus media.

TIM WILSON
AMS VICE-PRESIDENT (OPERATIONS)
KATHERINE PHILLIPS
AMS PRESIDENT
GRANT HUGHES
CHAIR, AMS BOARD OF DIRECTORS

team is currently performing well above expectations. This is due in part to the excellent coaching leadership provided by our head coach Melody Torcolacci, her coaching staff and of course the talent and commitment of many interuniversity athletes. The track and field program given whatever comparison you wish to make is far from chaotic.

QUEEN'S TRACK IS NOT IN CHAOS

THE EDITOR,
With respect to the recent letter to The Journal regarding track and field (Jan. 18), I would like to respond to several of the comments. First the reference to chaos with respect to Queen's track and field is somewhat misleading in that the indoor track and field

In fact, the first indoor meet of the season saw six athletes achieve CIAU qualifying standards in their respective events and an amazing total of 69 individual personal best performances registered.

The university program focus for indoor track and field is, however, different from what Mr. Joyce would like to see at Queen's. Our concern relates to the needs, requirements and interests of all of the event groups (not just distance), as these must

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Real Live Slacker

"ACTUAL PHONE CONVERSATION"

HELLO, M^CDELIVERY?

I'D LIKE A BIG MAC, X-LARGE FRIES...

SIX McNUGGETS, HONEY MUSTARD AND BBQ SAUCE, HOT FUDGE SUNDAE...

... AND A DIET COKE!

IRONK! IRONK! YUP! YUP! YUP! YUP!

Do not judge, so that you may not be judged. For with the judgement you make you will be judged, and the measure you give will be the measure you get. Why do you see the speck in your neighbor's eye, but do not see the log in your own eye? Or how can you say to your neighbor, "Let me take the speck out of your eye," while the log is in your own eye? You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your neighbor's eye.

St. Matt. 7:1-5

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00), and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

Applications for ORIENTATION ROUNDTABLE COORDINATOR POSITIONS

Being accepted, due
January 31st by noon-
On Education,
Financial, Internal Affairs, and Logistics
Committees.
Applications can be picked up at the AMS

HELP ORGANIZE
AND COORDINATE
ORIENTATION WEEK 1994

OPEN FORUM

also be recognized and addressed by the coaches and the university administration. Contrary to Mr. Joyce's allegation, the administration, which I represent, had in this instance been far from indifferent. From the very beginning we have been involved with the coaches and many of the athletes, and I am confident that we have pursued every possible option in an attempt to reach a reasonable and meaningful solution to a rather complex problem. In the end, our goal was to maintain the integrity of the interuniversity program and the coaches involved, and be fair to the athletes in all event groups.

It seems the diversity of opinion that existed among the Scott Thomas and Brisson distance group was not addressed to their satisfaction by the mutual resolution agreed upon last fall. It was our feeling that to go beyond the solution proposed would have had serious implications for the existing university track and field team focus and philosophy. The outcome was that some athletes felt their individual athletic goals and aspirations could best be achieved outside the Queen's interuniversity program, and as a result chose to compete for the community track and field club identified as QUACK. It must be made clear that the opportunity to join the Queen's team was given to all of the concerned athletes under rather liberal coaching and training guidelines that would have allowed their club coaches to continue coaching the athletes in question. This is not unlike the team policy in the past, when specific athletes have had strong, close and continuing relationships with outside clubs and personal coaches. No one was or has been forced or coerced to compete for Queen's track and field. Track and field athletes at Queen's make their choice freely and it is through team training and competition that we attempt to field our strongest men's and women's teams at the conference championship.

There is, however, a very clear and fundamental difference between a commitment to the Queen's track and field team and that of participating and representing the QUACK athletic club. Some of the distance athletes have chosen to make their competitive commitment to this club, this indoor season, thereby foregoing their status as potential OU and OW athletes. Queen's track and field team is built upon a team concept and those same distance athletes have chosen the club option which has as its primary focus the individual athlete.

The track and field and cross-country program at Queen's University has a long history of team success and athletic achievement. The vast majority of the athletes support the team concept. It must be remembered that there are 29 indoor events of which four are considered to be distance events. Contrary to the comments made by Mr. Joyce in his letter, the indoor track team is in fine form and Queen's reputation will be enhanced by individual and team performances this season.

It is unfortunate that a number of our student athletes decided not to join the Queen's team this year. Some of them are outstanding competitors who have made significant contributions to our program. However, a decision not to compete for Queen's has been made and we accept and respect their position. I would hope that they offer the same respect to the current Queen's track and field team and the coaching staff. The team is not in confusion, its goals and objectives are clear, and the administration has been involved.

ROLF LUND
DIRECTOR, ATHLETICS AND RECREATION

FUNDING, TUITION, YOU AND THE U

THE EDITOR,

As government cutbacks to universities increase and students are asked to pay more and more, we must see some sign of commitment to the needs of students. If we have to pay more to improve our university system then maybe, with the right student aid, we can do so willingly. The problem we face today is that we are paying more for an education of diminishing quality. Between 1989-90 and 1993-94, tuition for a full-time Arts and Science student at Queen's has risen 33 per cent. In addition, undergraduate students have been subjected to a student assistance levy of $100; donated over $4 million to the Queen's Challenge; and been active supporters of the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, which is willing to recognize the shared responsibility of students with respect to funding. Despite these obvious contributions by students, the capital projects which top the University's agenda are: a Bio-Sciences complex composed predominantly of faculty research facilities; an international study centre without additional financial assistance for students; and an art gallery. This commitment, requiring over $30 million, does not address the core needs of undergraduates such as lab equipment and improved standards for classrooms and lecture halls. More and more equipment in the labs bears the plaque stating "donated by the Better Equipment Fund" which is funded and administered entirely by students.

As student leaders, we believe that universities are institutions for learning. It has become increasingly clear however that many people at this university have conflicting visions. Concrete plans need to be set in place to show that the university is working at improving the environment for students. These plans need not require a huge commitment of funds. For example, the university could review appointment, promotion and tenure merit assessments at Queen's. Professor Logan, Head of the English Department, stated in an interview with The Journal [Jan. 14] that "salary increases are largely based on research. Therefore, why injure myself by slowing my research?" This statement validates the perception that the policies and practices of this institution undervalue teaching. The recent commitment to improve the teaching evaluation system is a good first step towards improving undergraduate learning. Will this information lead Department Heads, Deans, and the Principal to increase the profile of teaching in faculty merit assessments, thereby signalling to faculty and students the university's commitment to undergraduate education?

As tuition rises, the University has an increasing responsibility to be accountable to students. For example, students should be given representation on key decision-making committees and more than one vote at the Board of Trustees. Similar structural changes are advocated by the recent provincial Task Force on Accountability. The university administration can and should set a course for Queen's in acknowledging that the University is consumer driven and students are the consumers. The bottom line is that if Queen's is turning to students to pick up the financial slack, then the students need to see some tangible results. This plea is not unreasonable. No other stakeholder group would tolerate otherwise. We encourage students to bring forward any ideas with regards to how their quality of education can be improved.

KATHERINE PHILIPS,
AMS PRESIDENT
DAVID BARR, RECTOR

FRIDAY, JANUARY 28, 1994

OPEN FORUM IN DEFENSE OF ENTERTAINMENT

THE EDITOR,

I am writing in response to several criticisms made of the Entertainment section of The Queen's Journal by one Brad Simpson. Although I am familiar with Mr. Simpson, I am sorry to say that his letter demonstrates a distinct lack of familiarity with what the Queen's Journal Entertainment section is about.

Mr. Simpson criticizes the calibre of the writers at The Journal, who he suspects "need to consult a video guide to know that Lennon and Mathau have worked together before." But consider as an example of that calibre the person he chose to assault: Christopher Zabel is one of the better new writers that the Entertainment section has produced this year.

In his reviews, Mr. Zabel has shown both insight into film ideas and an able use of wit and satire. He has also proven his ability to do so over several articles on several different kinds of films. He is an excellent, prolific writer. Alight his review of Grumpy Old Men was a self-indulgent puff piece, but it was funny and the movie was poor. I had more fun reading the review than seeing the film. The right style for the right time.

Unwilling to quit while he's behind, beyond criticising Mr. Zabel, Mr. Simpson goes on to indict the whole Entertainment section with his assault on the question of who should be allowed to write reviews.

Here is what Mr. Simpson felt should be a prerequisite, "educated opinions or ones backed by some knowledge of the medium should be expected. I would not write a review of a Clarinet recital."

Why not? I believe the only prerequisite for writing an entertainment review at the Queen's Journal is the same as the only prerequisite for writing any article at the Journal, namely an interest in the subject. Mr. Simpson may think that three years at NYU film school necessary to review Wayne's World 2 but I think that's a bit much.

More importantly, the Queen's Journal is a student newspaper, run by students and most importantly for students. One of its responsibilities is to provide people with the opportunity to experience what it is like to have their name in print and hear their opinions read and discussed by other people. It has been my experience that the Queen's Journal does this very well.

Mr. Simpson says, "just because...people are writing dumb articles, does not mean they have to be printed." He's wrong. The articles should be printed, it is the reader who must be discriminating.

So finally we come to Mr. Simpson's criticism of the Entertainment editor for allowing the untested to cast their swine at his pearls. However, it is precisely the job of the editor of the section to provide guidance and schooling for novices in the field. This can only be done by letting them test themselves out. Readers beware!

In my years at The Journal I watched several talents develop in this way, of which Christopher Zabel is only the latest. But he would not have been allowed to write at all had The Journal stuck to Mr. Simpson's ill-considered standards which misunderstand one of the basic reasons for which the paper exists.

DAVE ULLMAN
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR (1992-93)

HYPOCRITICAL OAFS?

THE EDITOR,

Hippocratic oath, or hypocritical oafs? We read your review of Queen's Musical Theatre's production of Kismet [Jan. 21] and were shocked and appalled to find that such a sensitive issue was being handled in such a clandestine fashion.

As a public service to your readers, we feel it incumbent upon us to bring to your attention the fact that the reviewer of the piece failed to reveal a potential conflict of interest that may have compromised his objectivity, if indeed we allow that such a position may exist in contemporary critical discourse. However, even if you subscribe to the assumption that we are all historically constituted and cannot transcend our own positionality to perceive that positionality, you should at least gesture towards an acknowledgement of problems arising from that historically constituted subject position. A cursory glance at the names on the office doors in the basement of Watson Hall reveals that the Journal reviewer of the aforementioned production of the politically dubious Kismet and the director of said play are in fact both graduate students and teaching assistants in the same department of this university, the Department of English. Not only do they share a departmental affiliation, but the offices they occupy for the fulfillment of their pedagogical duties are adjacent. In short, they not only share a blindness to the political incorrectness of such a production in the waning years of the Twentieth century, they also share a wall. And that is not the well-known fourth wall separating performer and audience, obviously. Kismet? We think not. Shame? We leave it to your readers to decide.

DANNY DEFOE
JACK DRYDEN
AL POPE
PH.D ENGLISH

INTENSE ANALYSIS

THE EDITOR,
I would like to thank Surface editor Junipero Lagapon for his trenchant observation that minority students were disadvantaged in last term's referendum since they are "numerically less" on campus (Surface to publish again, Jan. 21). If this is the sort of "very intense" analysis Lagapon and company will be publishing in the future, then please let the enlightenment begin with all speed!

IAN PETRIE
ARTS '94

KINGSTON'S KITCHENS

GRECOS

GRILL & WINE BAR
167 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario
Reservations — 542-2229

garlic bread and a crunchy flat bread covered with sesame seeds (Baked on the premises). A tasty salmon spread is served with the bread.

For appetizers we tried the marinated octopus, (also prepared in the kitchen and very delicious) and the Saganaki. Saganaki is a square of tangy cheese that the waiter will flambé at your table. For those who have sworn off salt, it is a salty cheese, but tasty. The flambé causes the cheese to be crusty on the outside and creamy on the inside.

Having eaten at Greco's a number of times, I find it very difficult to pass up the Gourmet Chicken. It is fantastic, but this evening they are preparing for me the Chicken in Puff Pastry, a similar dish and equally delicious. (It's not on the menu, but it is offered occasionally as a special). After a little arm twisting, we got the recipe for you to try at home.

Marco and Roy both ordered the grilled lamb chops. I don't think they could resist them. Mari- anne ordered the garlic shrimp platter served on a bed of rice. They looked wonderful. All this food went down nicely with a bottle of Mondavi Cabernet Sauvignon. After the meal, we were so full that we did not want to hear the word "dessert," so instead we enjoyed a coffee, accompanied by a warmed brandy.

Don't be afraid of breaking the bank at Greco's. Prices are very reasonable, especially for the quality of the cuisine. On the dinner menu, appetizers such as Tiropita, Carpaccio and Brushetta are priced from $2.95 through $9.95. Entrées are priced from $8.50 to $17.95, including items like the Chicken Parmesan, Filet Mignon and Rack of Lamb. For fish and seafood lovers, Rainbow Trout, Filet of Salmon and the Poseidon's Platter, are priced from $9.95 to $14.95. The menu also features a selection of pasta dishes and a variety of gourmet pizzas. Wine lovers won't be disappointed either, a wide selection of wines are available from California, Greece, Italy, Chile, Australia and Ontario. ♥

LIFE THYMES Magazine — Aileen E. Calligaris

What is...

digital playground ?

- a "self-serve" service bureau
- computer technology at your fingertips!
- a scanning resource
- scan pictures, slides or negatives for use in essays, reports, resumes, flyers, logos or just about anything.
- colour output
- computer file output on photographic quality prints, Canon colour laser (€14.55), or poster-size DisplayMaker up to 36" x 120".
- media: transparencies, glossy, t-shirt transfer, labels, translucent film, adhesive paper. Colour Photocopies
- B & W laser printing
- 300, 600 & 1200 dpi to full-bleed 11 x 17
- hourly computer rental
- pc or mac, starting at $5.00 per hour, all major software.
- computer courses
- desktop publishing, word processing & graphic design software

209 Wellington st. 547-5700

FEATURES

Do you want to live in a dump next year?

Queen's students have low housing standards. Not that we enjoy living in hovels and sharing them with rats, but we have for the most part come to accept the dilapidated state of our homes as normal. We have begun to apply the old adage "When in Rome, do as the Romans..." to housing in Kingston. Just as one might expect smog in Mexico and traffic in Toronto, we have come to expect holes in the floor, dysfunctional plumbing, and intrusive or absentee landlords when in Kingston. In short, Queen's students tolerate what would otherwise be considered utterly unacceptable housing conditions in cities such as Halifax,

Montreal, Hamilton or Vancouver. We at the Housing Issues Committee hope to "rock the boat," so to speak, with respect to student housing. As much as we students complain amongst ourselves about the state of our homes, one must ask how many of us have actually taken direct action against our negligent landlords. There exist numerous avenues through which students can pressure their landlords for reasonable housing. One of the first steps to achieving better conditions is to do something instead of grumbling to the rats under your floor. Here we suggest some of the possible actions you may take:

First, complain directly to your landlord or house manager. When you request that an item be repaired insist that they tell you by what date it will be done. If unacceptable conditions persist... Contact Town-Gown Liaison Nancy Tatham at 545-6745. She will be able to advise you on the best course of action. Call Queen's Legal Aid at 545-2102. This is a free service for Queen's students. Student lawyers can help you with landlord-tenant problems. Call Rent Control, Ministry of Housing at 548-6770. They can provide information on landlord/tenant laws, and ensure that your landlord follows the laws on building repairs and rent increases. Get a copy of the Application to Reduce Rent from the Ministry of Housing, or you can borrow the Housing Issues Committee's copy. This is a great intimidation tactic: just wave it in front of your landlord's face and watch (you hope) the pathetic grovelling that ensues. You can apply to reduce rent if you can prove that your place "is not adequately maintained or repaired; or the landlord has reduced or discontinued any services or facilities." Consider the law of physics that we learned back in high school, "for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction," when evaluating your landlord/tenant relationship. Kind gestures by landlords should be met with praise, while unreasonable actions or inactions should be met with complaint. The Housing Issues Committee of the Alma Mater Society is also available to provide relevant information on these issues. For further information or consultation please contact Greg, Henry or Sandy at the AMS Communications Office at 545-2732. N.B. Tous les renseignements sur le logement public par le gouvernement d'Ontario sont également disponibles en français. Greg Speirs is Co-chair of the AMS Housing Issues Committee.

Signing a lease

Before you sign a lease, you should be familiar with its contents, your obligations as a tenant, and your landlord's obligation to you. Ask the landlord to provide a copy ahead of time - Queen's Legal Aid can provide you with a Lease Reading Guide for a small fee.

Don't commit to anything until you have gone through the house with your landlord and noted down any and all repairs which need to be made. Make a list and photocopy it, keeping a list for yourself. This will mean you won't be liable for these damages since you can prove they were made before you moved in.

It is also smart to clarify what the 'division of labour' will be throughout the year between you and your landlord. Who is going

- to take care of:
 - snow removal?
 - lawn maintenance?
 - garbage removal?
 - cable, PUC, and heat/oil tank filling?
 - interior and exterior painting?
 - parking facilities?

Remember: If you haven't signed a lease, it doesn't mean you don't have any legal obligations. A verbal agreement is equally as valid as a written one, so be sure that whatever you and your landlord agree to is clear and mutually understood.

Rent

As a tenant, of course, one of your primary obligations is to pay your rent on time. For the protection of the tenant there are also a number of laws contained within the Landlord and Tenant Act and the Rent Control Act which control the amount of your rent and how it can be increased.

Rent control laws dictate that your rent can only be raised once every 12 months, and that you have to receive a written notice at least 90 days before the increase in order for it to be legally binding.

Even so, the amount of this increase is regulated by the Ministry of Housing, and the percentage allowed changes annually. In 1993 the allowable increase was 4.9 per cent (however under some circumstances, your landlord can apply to exceed this amount by up to three per cent).

"Maximum rent" is the maximum amount you can lawfully be charged by your landlord. The amount is arrived at by tallying all the rent increases your landlord could have legally made since August 1, 1985. However, your landlord may "catch up" to the maximum rent when he or she next increases your rent.

Avoiding Abhorrent Abodes

Your responsibilities

When you sign a lease, you enter into a legal contract which gives you certain responsibilities. If you do not fulfil these responsibilities, legal action from your landlord could ensue.

First, you must pay your rent monthly. Do not withhold rent simply because you are having problems with your landlord.

You may also be responsible for paying heat, electricity, phone, and cable charges. In all likelihood you will also have to arrange and pay for hook-ups and/or installation.

If the quality of your house deteriorates over the course of your lease due to neglect or misuse on your part, you will be financially responsible for the damages incurred. If you anticipate problems with your housemates incurring these damages (or for that matter, even if you don't) you may want to enter into a "housemates agreement." Samples can be obtained from Queen's Legal Aid at a minimal charge.

For your safety, and also to prevent liability, be sure to keep your smoke alarms (which your landlord is obliged to provide by law) clean and in working order. This means buying new batteries once in a while! In addition, the doors and windows to your fire escape should open properly (but only from the inside, not from the outside).

Subletting

If you are going to be away for the summer months and have a May to September lease, you can sublet your apartment or house. But be sure that you obtain permission from your landlord first.

Remember that when you take on a sublettor, you become, in effect, their landlord, and you accept the accompanying responsibilities. At the same time, you are still responsible to your own landlord as his or her tenant.

It is worth requesting that your sublettor sign a Subtenancy Agreement (available at Legal Aid for $2) so that both you and your sublettor have some written guarantees of responsibilities and obligations.

To avoid conflicts and unpaid bills, think about disconnecting the PUC, cable and phone over the summer. The price of a reconnection is probably worth it when weighed against the cost of tracking down your long-lost sublettor for months, or the cost of a bad credit rating.

Deposits

When you sign your lease, your landlord will probably ask you to pay a deposit along with it. You are only obliged to pay a deposit equal to one month's rent (usually in place of your last month's rent). This deposit can only be used to pay your last month's rent, and at the end of your lease, your landlord is obliged to pay you six per cent interest on it.

Under the Rent Control Act, this deposit cannot be used as a 'key deposit' or a 'damage deposit.' Your security deposit can also not be used for checking references and credit rating, or refrigerator deposits (a popular one).

If you do pay any of these deposits, be sure to obtain a receipt from your landlord. Since these deposits are not legal, you can apply through the Office of Rent Control Programs (548-6770) to get your money back. This is made much easier if you have proof that you paid the deposit in the first place.

In reference to deposits, be aware that when you try to connect your PUC, and if you haven't had a PUC account in your name before, you will have to pay a deposit. This could run up to $250, so you should budget for this as a start-up cost. Your deposit can sometimes be waived if you can get a guarantor (such as one of your parents) to sign in your name.

Eviction

If your landlord tries to just kick you out, don't stand for it! Your lease is legally binding. Still, keep the following in mind:

1. If you sign an agreement with your landlord agreeing to terminate your tenancy before the date indicated on your lease.
2. Your lease still allows you to sublet your home.
3. Your landlord can terminate the tenancy early if/s/he has cause. Legally valid reasons to evict include: non-payment of rent, undue damage caused by the tenants, an illegal act carried out on the premises by the tenant, seriously impairing the safety or legal rights of another tenant, or if the number of people in the premises exceeds health or safety standards.

Even if your landlord does have cause to evict you, there are some procedures which need to be followed. Once you are notified by your landlord of the intention to evict, you have seven days to correct the problem (unless the cause for eviction is the commission of an illegal act on the premises, in which case your tenancy can be terminated immediately). If the cause is non-payment of rent, you usually have 14 days to correct the problem. If you are consistently late with your rent, this is also cause for eviction.

Your landlord must give you 24 hours notice before entering your house

Privacy and Access

As a tenant you have a right to privacy in your own home, but be sure you and your landlord are clear about the rules governing entry into your rented premises. Unless otherwise agreed to, your landlord must give you 24 hours notice before entering your house, and the time of entry must be specified when you are given the notice. In addition, your landlord is only supposed to enter during the daylight hours.

Exceptions to these rules apply in the case that there is an emergency (fire, etc.), and if you have agreed to allow the landlord to show the house to prospective tenants (but only if you have given notification of termination beforehand).

If your landlord does not adhere to these guidelines he or she is violating the Landlord and Tenants Act.

You can inform your landlord of this fact and request that the guidelines be followed in the future. Again, as with all disputes, if a polite request does not work, follow it up with a written request (remember to keep a copy).

On a final note, it is illegal for your landlord to change the locks on your doors without mutual consent.

Repairs and renovations

Although you are responsible for deliberate damages, your landlord is responsible for maintaining your house in a decent state of repair, and for complying with health, safety and housing standards.

If your landlord is foot-dragging on the repairs, you do have some power to change the situation. First try being polite but firm with your landlord, informing he or she of the problem, and requesting that something be done about it. Find out when it will be fixed - get a firm commitment!

If talking doesn't work, a written request is often effective. Date and sign your letter, and keep a copy of it for yourself.

If you still haven't had any luck, you can request that an Inspector from the Property Standards Office (19 Queen Street, 546-4291) visit your house and evaluate what needs to be done. If you show them the letter you sent, they may decide to issue a Notice of Non-Compliance to your landlord.

As a last resort, you can go to the Office of Rent Control programs at 265 Ontario Street and request a reduction in your rent on the grounds of inadequate maintenance. Be warned: this process could take months!

Just as your landlord is obliged to do these repairs, you too are required by law to maintain certain property standards. Keep your front steps, walkway and sidewalk clear of snow, observe garbage and recycling day, and keep your lawn clear of old fridges, stoves, couches, etc.

For your safety, and to prevent liability, be sure to keep your smoke alarms (which your landlord is obliged to provide by law) clean and in working order. This means buying new batteries once in a while! In addition, the doors and windows to your fire escape should open properly (but only from the inside, not the outside).

BUDGET CAR & TRUCK RENTAL

Reading Week Rate Packages

Call Us Now. WE HAVE GREAT DEALS ON VANS, JEEPS, AND CARS with SPECIAL RATES for QUEEN'S READING WEEK.

THE FIRST 10 PEOPLE TO RESERVE EITHER A MINIVAN OR JEEP WILL RECEIVE AN ADDITIONAL 1,000 FREE KMs. SO MAKE THAT RESERVATION TODAY!!

Call Budget RENT A CAR AT 546-3231 This is a Limited Time Offer!

The Formal Event of the Year
 Proceeds in aid of Big Sisters

The Queen's Charity Ball
 1994 New York, New York

TICKETS ON SALE NOW IN MAC-CORRY 11:30 - 4:30
 EVERYONE WELCOME! Don't Miss Out!
 Charity Dinner and Dance at the Ambassador Hotel Friday, February 4th, 1994

The Features section would like to thank AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin for providing this invaluable information.

SPORTS

Track team gets preview of OU/OW championships

BY BRYAN LAMBERT

The Queen's track & field team had its first genuine preview of the upcoming OUAA/OWIAA Championships at the Can-Am Classic in Windsor this past weekend. The team entered the meet with the men ranked #5 in the country and the women ranked #8 and earned 2 silver and 2 bronze medals. Further, 27 personal bests were recorded by the strong rookie and veteran contingent that attended.

Coming off her recent Queen's female athlete of the week selection, Lesley Morrison, defending CI gold medalist, struck silver in the women's high jump with a personal best of 1.73m, only 1 cm off the long standing Queen's women's high jump record of 1.74m. Lesley now moves into the number 3 spot in the CIAU rankings.

Last week's Queen's male athlete of the week, Brian Derby, continued his OUAA jumping dominance by grabbing a bronze medal in the men's long jump. Derby was edged by two American jumpers and has not been beaten by a Canadian athlete this season. Brian barely missed standing on two attempts and his solid 6.80m effort indicates that he is looking strong as the team heads into the OUAA/OWIAA Championships in 5 weeks.

Throwers Steve Fruitman and Sarah Leonard continue to improve in the shot put. Fruitman went into this meet ranked #1 in the country. He threw a solid 14.23m to claim the silver medal and reaffirm his ranking because it was an American athlete that outthrew him on this day. Don't worry Steve, Canada has not yet been annexed by the U.S., so you won't see this guy at CI's. Leonard, last year's CIAU bronze medal winner, has been steadily regaining her form of last year as she threw 12.50m to claim third place.

Track rookies had a strong meet as Avi Goldfarb and Damien McCotter both recorded impressive personal bests in the men's 1500m. Peter Reppe, Neil McCourt, Sarah McClelland, Stephanie Sloan and Kerry Walsh all ran their fastest times yet over 200m in Queen's uniforms. Ali Bryan-Jones, Mike Kelly and Drew Slack ran their best races of the year in the men's 600m and Erika Devos jumped a personal best 1.59m in the women's high jump.

Track veterans also had an impressive meet with 4th year PHE student Geoff Stewart jumping to new heights with an impressive 1.89m leap in the men's high jump. Derek Hackshaw ran a strong 1:22.33 in the 600m, and Todd Jones burned up the track in the men's 3000m to record an impressive 8:37.83 personal best, a mere 3.5 seconds off CIAU standard, for a fourth place finish.

The men's 4x400m relay team of Remko Noteboom, Steve Dewan, Dan Coderre and Derek Hackshaw ran a quick 3:28.52 to finish 4th, just 3 seconds off standard.

Rookie of the Meet honours went to high jumper Erika Devos, Drew Slack (600m and 4x400m) and Kevin Robertson for his impressive 60m Hurdle time of 9.53 which now ranks him number 7 all time at Queen's. Veteran of the Meet were Lesley Morrison in High and Long Jump and Todd Jones for steadily improving his 3000m time.

The team has next weekend off to allow for some quality training before the upcoming Provincial Championships. The team will journey to the University of Toronto twice and to Cornell University before returning to Windsor on March 4 and 5 to compete at the OUAA/OWIAA Championships and then the CIAU's in Edmonton on March 11 and 12.

Swimming in the Florida sun

The Queen's swim team weathers the harsh Florida winter.

COURTESY OF THE SWIM TEAM

BY NATATION

The Queen's varsity swim team is continuing to train hard for their finals in mid-February. They have been training morning and night since September and it is this dedication that has proved to be particularly beneficial for one team member.

Way back in November, fourth year Phys-Ed student Cynthia Jill Housken struck the U of T pool and competitors with a burst of power that provided other team mates with the motivation to follow suit. Cindy raced to a 1:06.3 first place finish and CIAU qualifying time in the 100m butterfly at the U of T Invitational. She is the first to qualify for the Queen's team, but says, "I have no fear that I will be joined by some of the other power houses of the team, namely the breaststroke trio and some others". Cindy has often brought her positive attitude and tips from psychology of coaching into the pool, providing the team with the mind frame to achieve similar success.

However, despite the hours of training and lack of sleep, Cindy manages to maintain excellent academic standing and an exciting social life. These are further displays of the determination and commitment that allow her to achieve anything she sets her mind on. Congratulations, Cindy. In our minds, you are Athlete of the Year.

In other news, the Queen's team felt it necessary to maintain their vigorous training schedule over the winter break in sunny Florida! Eighteen swimmers travelled south this year and challenged themselves for ten days of hard training. Aaron Hoag and Joan Shaw displayed exceptional stamina throughout the camp and have profited greatly. Although the dazzling sunshine made it difficult to see, PeeWee and the Elvis tunes kept the spirits afloat. B.A.'s always jive to Elvis!

On the third last day, the team was challenged by four American schools to a competition. Sandy Thompson and Kathy "Bile Birthday" Palmer led the team in cheers and great swimming in the 50 free and relay events. (Thanks for being good sports, ladies!) The four breaststrokes -- Colin "Pace Car" Thornley, Siobhan "Froggie" Roberts, Carolyn "Dogger" Burke and Kim "Snogger" Grootveld -- once again demonstrated their power with a clean sweep in all three breaststroke events. Although Ian "Stamina" Gardiner had a few difficulties with his goggles, it was quickly taken care of and Ian remained VICTORIOUS (no postcard) in all distance events. Toby Benyon and Digs White had good races in the freestyle events and proved to be assets for the relay teams. (Maybe next year you'll get your own glasses without looking conspicuous.)

Coach Leswick said, "The Queen's team looked in top form, regardless of the hours of exhilarating training. The women fought tough and maintained their technique throughout the competition. The men managed to hold their own despite the fact that they were smaller than the American competitors."

Finally, it is important to acknowledge the Musketeers: Todd "I won't do that" Baron, Mike SnuggledFlux and Eric "California Colour" Vanderguten. The trio taught the team to be on deck on time and to complete the warm-up fully. You sure made it interesting, boys!

The team sends a warm welcome back to Sarah Lamont, who has spent the last two months altitude training at Mount KGH with the Unionville Olympic Team. Queen's swimmers will continue to train, snuggle and motivate each other for the remaining month and a half. They will be competing at Queen's Jan 29 against teams from McMaster, Ottawa, Ryerson and R.M.C. Until then, Res Firma, Mitescere, Nescl!

A 10 point spread?

BY JASON D BENNETT

Despite the hype and hoopla surrounding Atlanta's Georgia Dome this week, Sunday's Super Bowl match-up should prove to be yet another sleeper in a string of championship let-downs. Minutes after Dallas' punishing defeat of San Francisco odds-makers in Las Vegas pegged the Cowboys at 10.5 point favourites over the Buffalo Bills, winless in three consecutive Super Bowl appearances.

Dallas and Buffalo enter the game with identical records, both are coming off convincing wins at home and are riding winning streaks that stretch seven and six games respectively. Can you see the difference? Clue: it has something to do with asphyxiation. That's right, it's the infamous 'Buffalo choke'.

Should the Bills lose on Sunday they will go into the record books with the dubious distinction of having tied the Vikings for the most Super Bowl appearances without a win. 'Pathetic' would be too generous a word to use, 'humiliating' is more appropriate.

How is it that an organization with such success and so much talent fails to crown its accomplishments by grasping football's brass ring on Super Bowl Sunday? Look no further than the Buffalo choke; good teams make the playoffs, but only great teams win them and until the Bills do so they will remain a second-rate organization.

If Buffalo miraculously pulls out a victory, their history of near-misses and the moniker of 'almost-winners' will fade into oblivion with the likes of Right Said Fred (remember that guy?). If they succumb once again to Jimmy Johnson's ctew, the Buffalo wings will lose their zest, the falls will stop in Niagara, and in the chaos and despair more North

YOUR ATTENTION PLEASE

After a brief sabbatical, Frank & Earnest will be back on Tuesday. Due to the amount of information and the complexity of the story, The Journal will update you on the track situation in next Friday's paper. A complete review of the entire situation is forthcoming, look for details on Friday.

The updated hockey pool results will be in Tuesday's edition as well. The Sports dept. apologizes for any inconvenience placed upon our readers.

Tonawanda homes will burn to the ground than usual.

Dallas appears to be an unstoppable force once again this year in the NFL, a force that Buffalo was able to stop back in Week 2 only because running back Emmitt Smith failed to play due to a contract dispute with Cowboy's owner Jerry Jones. With Smith back in the line-up Dallas went on to win 14 of 16 games, with one of those losses coming off a Leon Lett-ish miscue late in a snow-hampered meeting with Miami on Nov 25. In the playoffs Dallas handled the Green Bay Packers 27-17, then beat up on San Francisco 38-21 in a game whose final score betrays the dominance of the Cowboy attack.

If the Bills have any chance it must come by way of the running game which decimated the Kansas City defence last weekend. The combination of 'Thermal' Thomas and Kenneth 'I could start on any other team in the league' Davis are unstoppable when integrated with a successful passing game.

Leading receiver Pete Metzlar continues to be plagued by a broken finger while speedsters Don Beebe, Bill Brooks and Andre Reed continue to struggle -- particularly in the chilly confines of Rich Stadium. And then there is Jim Kelly who -- regardless of weather conditions, number of minutes played, or sophisticated follicle regeneration procedures -- will unavoidably have a bad hair day.

If not for the players themselves, I feel particularly sympathetic for the residents of Buffalo who, consequently, are once again 'talking proud'. Four consecutive years of Buffalo Super Bowls, four consecutive boring games, and four consecutive chokes(?), take Dallas in a second-half romp.

Hot cross-country buns

BY LARRY HEGAN

Fact: the highest point in southern Ontario is graced by ski trails that do not have a ski lift to the top. Is this craziness? It definitely is when one of its recreation facets demands racing first from the bottom, then to the top. Hence the nordic ski team (yes that crazy team that likes that other painful kind of skiing) travelled to Duntunton, on the outskirts of Collingwood, and submitted an impressive performance this weekend at the southern Ontario inter-divisionals.

Coach Harry Lake is anticipating another stellar season, "The guys won OU's last season and I am confident that we have the ability to two-peat."

In other words, the men and women both seem to have strong enough teams to contend for their respective bannets. Thus, the nordic ski team is one of the few groups of people around campus that are happy with such an incredible amount of snowfall so far this year.

The meet consisted of four races: a 5km (women) and 10km (men) skating style race on Saturday, and a gruelling, yet many claim pleasurable, 10km (women) and 30km (men) classic style mass start race on Sunday.

Highlights on Saturday were: Ian Micheal's 3rd place finish after re-realizing how to perform the skating style -- after going backwards up the first hill seemed slow at first -- Paul Green's 5th place finish, and in the women's race, Joanne Thomson's 4th place and Lee Anne Laverty's 5th place. Sunday's race had to be considered a success, because nobody had their equipment destroyed in the full contact mass start for each category, and not one of the guys requested any air ambulance support after racing for over an hour and a half!

Highlights included Larry Hegan's sprint to win second place, he was left to wonder how the Carleton University skier, and two time Olympian (who won the race by 6 minutes) could come down with some

Only the great ones deliver in intramurals. See page 18 KATHY JACKSON

Unbelievable fencing domination

BY STEVE COBHAM

The Queen's fencing team commenced the trail to the OUAA/OWIAA championships with a successful weekend in Ottawa. Carleton hosted Queen's, RMC and Ottawa University for the first qualifying round (part I) for the eastern division representative. The eastern is considered the strongest division in the OUAA/OWIAA with the above four schools evenly matched.

Field hockey team rallies for victory

BY JULIA BARSS

This weekend the Queen's field hockey team travelled to York for the first indoor tournament of the winter season. For those who do not know, indoor hockey is a very different game compared to the field sport. With just five per side plus a goalie in a more confined field of play, the indoor game is much faster and more intense. The weekend proved to be a successful one and bodes well for the Gaels.

The Queen's squad started in a pool of six and finished the weekend undefeated in four games. Strong out of the gates, the Gaels won their first game with ease over a Toronto club team called "The Jacamors" in an 8-1 killing.

Queen's faced some stiffer competition in their second game, played against York University's second team, but managed to come out on top with a 4-2 win.

Sunday morning, the Gaels faced "Kanata", a club team from

In OUAA individual competition, Queen's established a strong start. Twelve men competed in a round robin format to determine the finalists (the top four move on). So far, Steve Cobham is currently #1 in sabre, Andreas Wild and Dave Arthurs are respectively #1 and #2 in epee. Finally, Scott Wright and Alan Chung are highly ranked in men's foil.

In men's sabre, the Queen's team of Cobham, Henk Pardoel, James Wilson and Steve Symons defeated all other contenders to lock up first place.

The men's epee squad, Arthurs, Wild, Kevin Armstrong and Dave Williamson, also defeated each and every other competing school to finish in top spot.

Unfortunately, the men's foil team defeated Carleton and RMC, but lost by a narrow margin to Ottawa.

These top positions are only half the picture, in two weeks the cumulative totals from part I will be combined with the totals from part II to finalize the top 4 individuals and the top 2 teams.

On Sunday, the Queen's OWIAA teams continued and surpassed the victory streak established by the men. The format for the women's individual event was to determine the top twelve women from a field of sixteen.

In women's foil, Sue Myong is currently seeded #2 after the first round. In the epee, Meshian Noseworthy, Amy Olson and Sarah Hinchcliffe are currently in the top three positions in that order.

The foil team, Myong, Silvia Pascual, Melissa Santala and Allison Bain, disbursed of Ottawa, Carleton and RMC. The epee team, Olson, Noseworthy, Hinchcliffe and Heather White, dispatched all three of their rivals with equal efficiency.

In two weeks, part II will be held at RMC, the cumulative totals of the team competition of part I and part II will determine the top two teams while fast and furious fencing will determine the top four individuals in each weapon category.

In light of the success of the team at this competition, Queen's looks well placed to qualify for the finals at Carleton on Feb 19 and 20.

EF LEARN A LANGUAGE BY LIVING IT!!

France, Spain, Italy & Germany

All-inclusive immersion courses
Academic year and short-term courses
Beginners to advanced welcome
Wide variety of social activities
Host family or residence accommodation
International student body

Call for a free brochure:
1-800-387-1463
EF International Language Schools

2 FOR 1 WINGS
Buy One Pound Get One FREE!!
2 Large Screen TVs - 18 Other TVs

Door Prizes Sponsored by Budweiser

The Place To Be!!

303 Bagot Street, LaSalle Mews, 544-7951

Buffet
Uncle Tong
DOWNTOWN

LUNCH $4.99 (only, Reg. $5.99)
SUPER DINNER
Until Feb. 27

Enjoy our delicacies...
ALL YOU CAN EAT
Seafood Buffet
Lobster-Salmon Steak
Over 60 Items, including...

- Crab Leg Cluster
- Spiced Squid Cattlefish
- Buttered Salmon Steak
- Black Pepper Steak
- Breaded Scallops
- Prime Rib
- Breaded Fish
- Garlic Baked Mussels

DINNER $9.99 (only, Reg. $11.99)

THE ITEMS ARE SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE. THIS SPECIAL OFFER NOT VALID IN CONJUNCTION WITH OTHER OFFERS.

368 King Street East, at Princess
547-2222

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

Fri, Jan 28
CD Release for Friends of Stu & Dr. Teeth

Sat, 29
The Pariahs with Norge Union

Thurs, Feb 3
Furnace Face with Lost Sea Monsters

• PUB GRUB
• IRISH PINTS
• SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEKT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) TEL: 544-1966

"SNOW BOWL" IV

When: January 30th, 1994 (Super Bowl Sunday)

Where: Cricket Field (in front of Court House)

Time: 11:00 a.m. (return to Don Cherry's for Food and Beverage following the game)

Super Bowl 1994 will be on both large screens for you to enjoy.

Cost: $75.00 per team (10 people max. per team)

Tickets for first and second place and special performances

Five guys and three girls per team on field at one time

Games will be played across width of field

1. Tey Football
 - no blocking allowed
 - touch down pay
 - 5 point goals
 - referee's decision is final
 - touchdowns only, no field goals
 - punts allowed on 4th down
2. Dress for the weather
3. No seats allowed
4. All games 90 minutes (two 10 min. periods)
5. All teams are to arrive by 10:45 for start of events
6. Call Don Cherry's 544-7951 for details. Ask for Mike Lester or Randy Lamont

FOR QUEEN'S ONLY THE BEST TUXEDO DEAL IS $69 NO EXTRA CHARGES

Choose from our entire selection. Everything is $69 plus taxes.

NO EXTRA CHARGES! FREE FASHION PANTS FREE VESTS FREE SHOES

All you need is a $20 deposit

WE BEAT EVERY COMPETITORS PRICES

Available only at TUXEDO TOWN KINGSTON One block up from the Capital Theatre with CAREER GIRL

Who's Number One? Intramurals

BY ROB CAMP

The BEWIC Sports Day results just keep on pouring in. In the specific events that took place over the weekend there are, of course, specific winners. With 32 teams splashing around in the pool it can be difficult to determine who will succeed in Inner-tube Waterpolo. After many grueling games only the few survived. Winning the "C" division were those crafty Ellis Strikers. The Strikers used their experience and skill to outlast Gphy 911. In the "B" division the rookies Early Morning Risers put up a valiant effort before succumbing to the highly talented hosers of Strange Brew. The "A" division finals had two old nemesis meeting once again. While some would say there was bad blood between these teams, the game was nothing more than spirited competition with a common result. Yet again Tag Team, also known as Scilo, was victorious in its battle with More...Moose!

Also on the water, albeit frozen, was the broomball competition, where half the battle is just being able to remain standing. After the dust from the first series of collisions had occurred the Rock Hounds From Hell squeezed by The Convivial's to claim the "C" division championship. In the "B" pool, Wildcat!

led by stellar goaltending, managed to prevail over the Dream Team in a close fought contest. The "A" division was truly a clash of the titans. It would feature the high powered scoring of Mocko Jockos versus the stonewall defense of More...Moose! This turned into a shootout which completely destroyed the Moose's attempt of allowing no goals for the tournament. In the end Mocko Jockos offense was too powerful and they walked off on the high end of a 5-3 score.

On the basketball court the teams faced off for thrilling Rugby-Basketball action. Many were the swishes, slams, and blocks on the weekend as the teams whittled themselves down to the remaining few. In the "C" division the Yogie Flyers managed to leapfrog the Comm'96 Misers and collect the title. In the "B" division final the SuperJocks ran into their own personal version of kryptonite in the form of the Barracudas, who waltzed off with the title over the emaciated team of steel. The "A" pool final saw those aforementioned (see broomball) Mocko Jockos facing off against cheering wonderkinds Con-Ed. While Con-Ed attempted to cheer their way to victory, the Mocko Jockos decided to slam dunk the ball down the hoop several times. In the end the amount of baskets mediate similar pairs, earned this rookie duo second place.

Figure skaters nab 4th

The team of Keyworth, Harada, Ashley Eide, and Yvette Hayes-O'Sullivan finished fourth in both the original set pattern and the fours events. The team also captured fourth place in the precision event.

With two weeks remaining until the OWIAA Championships, the team is eagerly awaiting the advantage of home ice and is busy polishing off and running through their various programs. A very special thank you goes to coaches Connie Dwyer and Carolyn Dennis for their great support and encouragement.

Despite being plagued by illness and injury, the Queen's varsity figure skating team finished fourth out of eleven teams attending last Friday's invitational tournament at Guelph.

This is a solid spot for the team to be in as they head into the OWIAA Championships at Queen's (Feb 12 and 13) where a top three placing is attainable.

An early skate for Lisa Keyworth brought forth a well deserved third place in the senior A singles event. In open solo dance, Deanne Harada easily captured first place with her flowering edges and style.

Dorothy Lai, with creative artistry, won gold in the senior B singles event.

Ashley Eide and Jenn Watr danced their way into a bronze in the intermediate similar dance category.

A good performance C.J. Davison and Jana McLean in inter-

Badminton Gaels #1

BY SHANNON NIEMI

The Queen's badminton team travelled to the University of Western Ontario this past weekend to complete the regular season at the final cross-over tournament of the year. This tournament was a great success, and the Gaels emerged with 22 wins to just 2 losses.

The women's team, comprised of Sara Gibbings, Tracy Dunn, Shannon Niemi, Lara Davidson, Veronika Pahic, Lisa Low-Ring, Lisa Currier, and Michele Reszernik, ended the regular season with an incredible record of 92 wins and only 4 losses under the guidance of coaches Cindy Beach and Seva Golosky.

Special mentions go to Sara Gibbings and Lara Davidson who did not lose a match the entire season. Gibbings' success in singles (16 for 16) earned her the OWIAA Individual Women's Singles Championship. The doubles team of Sara Gibbings and Shannon Niemi proved to be a strong badminton force. They were also undefeated in 16 and claimed the OWIAA Individual Women's Doubles title.

Congratulations go to the entire team for an extraordinary season. Good luck going for gold (is there such a thing as silver, Tracy?) at the OWIAA Team Championships to be held Feb 5, at McMaster University!

Number 1 P.E.I. Potatoes + Quebec Cheddar Cheese Curd = A Platter of JJ's Famous Quebec City Style Poutine

Only $3.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's *

409 Johnson Street at University Tel #: 547-3771

JJ's Bistro Bar

We inspire eating!

ENTERTAINMENT

Get down and worship The Low

THE LOWEST OF THE LOW WITH SCOTT B. SYMPATHY
ALFIE'S
BY BRENDAN POWELL

If the crowd at Alfie's on Wednesday night had anything to say about it, they let it be known that The Lowest of the Low is just a name.

In fact, the general response to the question "so what do you think of the band?" seemed to be something between "like, oh my God, they're just the best," and an open-mouthed glassy-eyed stare that conveyed an utter disbelief that you hadn't yet joined the cult of Low worship. Add a dab of spittle in the corner of the mouth and the look was complete.

Despite the seemingly blind adoration of many of the fans (or perhaps because of it), the Low managed to at least partially live up to the expectations of this reviewer, delivering a tight, professional sound occasionally punctuated with nuggets (yes, nuggets) of true inspiration.

Opening for them was Scott B. Sympathy, one of those bands one sees and instantly wonders "why are people this old still opening in a campus pub?" (Apologies to Alfie's groupies, but to any band used to Toronto clubs, Alfie's bites the big cheese wagon as a concert venue.) Overlooking the lead singer's striking resemblance to Woody Allen, I wanted to find out. The band started off with some solid tunes as the lead guitarist demonstrated 101 things to do with a smoke while playing: hold smoke in hand while playing 10 min solo, stick smoke in headstock, stick smoke in the strings; I was waiting for him to stick one up his nose. After four or five good songs complete with deep grooves and good guitar work it became quite clear—that's all they had. Once they had slowed down there was no going back, and the crowd quickly lost interest as Sympathy seemed to have spent what energy they had in their first ten minutes.

How low can you go? TRICIA BAUMAN

But never fear, Low is here! Or are they? Until well after eleven o'clock they were like Elvis: not in the building (they were "having dinner"). The late start had many an anxious heart beating and more than a few mouths grumbling by the time the band finally set foot on stage.

Half the set consisted of the older tunes from their first album Shakespeare My Butt, while the other half contained material from their upcoming album, Hallucigenia (which is due for release at the end of February). Unfortunately, as so often happens when a band is plugging a new album, some of their really good older material ("So Long Bernie" and "Rosy and Grey" among others) had to be jettisoned in favour of the plug. Happily, there are more than a few new gems to be found, such as the harder-edged "Pistol" and downright catchy "City full of Cowards."

From the opening standard, "For the Hand of Magdalena" to "Henry Needs a New Pair of Shoes"—arguably their best tune—Low sets a musical tone that rarely wavers. Sitting somewhere between The Grapes of Wrath with their amps cranked and The Northern Pikes, (with maybe a touch of POH for punch) their passable progressions and generally unexceptional instrumental work (with notable exceptions in "Pistol" and "Cowards") are not what makes this band great. The catchy, sometimes topical, and often hilarious lyrics churned out by band leader Ron Hawkins have the effect making me want to stuff a sock in the mouth of most of the other chowderheads passing off as writers today. As Hawkins writes in "So Long Bernie": She didn't even know your name / But you put a six inch blade inside her all the same / She couldn't possibly know why / When you became Dr. Jekyll, you knew you had to hide.

Although Low breaks no musical barriers, a formula of unpredictable, danceable tunes coupled with Hawkins' great lyric writing has ensured their continued success. The mob in front of the Alfie's stage was a testament to this; I even had to wrestle with drunken groupies just to get at the set list. Besides, they're the only band I know who are able to pull off a song which uses the words "shit sandwich." Low has been able to find a niche they can continue to exploit with Hallucigenia. What now remains to be seen is what they will do with it—continue their formulaic approach until its necessary saturation point, or learn to grow beyond it.

The Final Line

MARY-ANN KOKOSKA: DRAWING IN SUCCESSION
AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
BY MICHAEL MOSS

There's something about thought in her work, like the rush, the whirl, the song of a sparkling Whitman line barreling out of the mind or exploding in a starry vision then a plodding method, an old skeleton of an idea that's been chewed on and reargued and squeezed dry. Toronto artist Mary-Ann Kokoska's Drawing in Succession at the Agnes is by its very nature fleeting. Her vast mural size drawings are uncontained wavy sprays of line which, in this case, jump from each huge scrap of paper pasted precariously across the four walls of the Old Gallery.

The gimmick of the exhibit, in the words of Associate Curator, Jan Allen, is, that Mary-Ann Kokoska's will "produce a site-specific installation drawing during the months of January." This means the actual creation of art takes place within the boundaries of the gallery instead of the studio, so that the process of the said act of making art is open to public viewing throughout its manifold stages. Now this technique of rightening the connection between the inclusive elements of art (for example, work, artist, audience) might seem slightly hackneyed at first, but in fact it has some saving graces.

There's no escaping suspicion at the publicity of peeling back the atomic layers of artistic inspiration for the enlightenment of the average stiff. It's forbidden. It's like spying on a primitive dance or watching a rare species of animal mate. It's a secret. You don't prostitute the urge to create. Dali, though he indulged himself, looked like a fumbling old man when he painted on the Tonight Show.

Mary-Ann Kokoska's Event. PHOTO COURTESY OF AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE

The inherent femininity of Kokoska's work rescues it from the circus of the ridiculous. The whole point of this Agnes episode hinges on the concept of opening up, and Kokoska's art embraces that idea. As an idealist of sorts, release, perforation, and that which unfolds are qualities that, to me anyhow, seem to lend themselves more to the female sexual persona.

What I can't imagine is Kokoska's art being the product of male initiative. The curl of a scrap of paper, the curvature of her lines, the way the art sort of wraps around you, the shifting forms that recollect organic things are undeniably feminine (whales have been suggested many times to the artist, but psychoanalytically speaking, I have no idea what that means). When you walk inside the Old Gallery you feel like you're entering something, something that is more than just a collection of walls.

However no concrete ideology permeates Kokoska's art. "I don't have a direct feminist agenda," she says. Though for her there is some novelty in a woman working within the bounds of "a traditional male genre (drawing)—one thinks of the Old Masters." Originally Kokoska's chosen medium was painting, but, she remarks, "I left painting to have a break." That was seven or eight years ago. Now she considers drawing "a medium in its own right, more popular, more respected. I want to draw as if I were painting."

Eventually, she tired of the rectangular dimensions of conventional paper sheets and went on to explore the possibility of drawing on scraps of an assorted variety of paper, grafting them into the confines of the exhibition room. "The three different types of paper I use are almost like different sides of a personality." In this respect, she forms a sculptural collage. "I do a lot of realistic sketching," she said, "but these are definitely abstractions. It's expressive. They're unique forms that somehow refer to the natural world. They conjure up many images." In fact, Kokoska draws from the inside out in a cumulative, growing sense.

Kokoska admits that her art "isn't very marketable. I don't make money from my art, it's a form of research. But I'd love to sell it."

Looking at Kokoska's art evokes the wildness of William Blake, a truthful observation for indeed the essence of her art is vision.

VARIOUS ARTISTS
BORN TO CHOOSE
RYKODISC

Born To Choose calls itself a "reproductive rights compilation" and features some top-of-the-line, left-of-centre musical acts. Unlike No Alternative, which mostly features "mainstream" power-pop/punkish guitar driven artists, Born To Choose's only real "seller" is R.E.M. (with ex-10,000 Maniac's Natalie Merchant). Born To Choose, on the other hand, offers much more diverse music, featuring John Trudell's R&B meets Lou Reed's rant 'n roll, Lucinda Williams' bluesy "Pancakes" and NRBQ's great cow-punk "Don't Talk About My Music."

Master of melody Matthew Sweet does a faithful cover of The Beatles' "She Said, She Said." Sugar throttles into overdrive on "Running Out of Time," with Bob Mould playing like his life depended on it. Post-punk heroes, Pavement, turn it down on "Greenlander" and Tom Waits is up to his usual tricks on "Filipino Box Spring Hog," which is one of the best songs I've ever heard.

VARIOUS ARTISTS
STONE FREE
REPRISE

Traditional and unconventional. Rock purism and radical trend-setting. How fitting that twenty-four years after Jimi Hendrix's death, a tribute album should emerge as diverse and unique as the master guitar-slinger himself. With something for almost every musical palette, the album is a rare collection for classic rock covers and modern interpretations. For blues/rock lovers, the gem of the entire album is Eric Clapton's fiery rendition of the title song, "Stone Free." Blues disciples will also relish Buddy Guy's treatment of Jimi's classic, "Red House." A few of the songs are so well covered that they could pass for Hendrix himself—namely Body Count (Ice T's rock outfit) trying out "Hey Joe," and Seal's bout with "Manic Depression." Seal pairs with Yardbirds-alumnus Jeff Beck for the song, forming one of the album's most unique combinations. The album also features Slash, jamming alongside Jimi's own Band Of Gypsies, with Paul Rodgers taking the vocals on "I Don't Live Today."

The most original interpretations on the album are found in The Cure's "Purple Haze" and P.M. Dawn's "You Got Me Floatin'," both of which transform classic rock tunes into unique alternative and rap compositions. Possibly the most surprising and addictive song on the tribute album is classical violinist, Nigel Kennedy's reworking of Hendrix's scorching guitar on "Fire." On the down side, nothing but yawns comes from The Pretenders' tired drones on "Bold as Love" and I frowned on The Spin Doctors' butchery of "Spanish Castle Magic."

Nevertheless, Stone Free is a worthwhile purchase for those with broad, diverse musical tastes and open minds: much like Hendrix himself. No stranger to impromptu jamming and the destruction of convention, (witness the Woodstock "Star Spangled Banner") one can easily only think that Jimi would have approved.

PHILIP A. McBRIDE
Rating: B

No strangers to political/social commentary, The Mekons title track is truly representative of Born To Choose's content: it states the importance of reproductive freedom and makes the listener aware of the fundamental right of a woman to have control over her own body. With sarcastic wit, the band tackles the issue of control when they pose an interesting question: "If I can't own my own body, how can I sell my liver?" However, they may be taking things to an extreme with their hints of a Right-Wing conspiracy theory when they sing: Mr. Pro Life, beat up your wife's support for the war, death to the poor.

The most striking thing about Born To Choose are the genders of the artists included on it. Although some feminists may disagree with me, I think it's encouraging to see male artists supporting a woman's right to choose.

Overall, Born To Choose is a first-rate collection of songs, although there are surprisingly poor contributions from The Cowboy

CHRISTIAN deBRUIJN

Rating: B

Junkies, Soundgarden and Helmet. In answer to the common complaint, perhaps contemporary rock music should be apolitical... but wouldn't it be a bit boring to constantly hear love songs?

KRS-ONE
RETURN OF THE BOOM BAP
JIVE

KRS-One is widely considered to be among hip hop's preeminent militant intellectuals. His early albums infused biting social commentary and acerbic wit with an eloquence and lucidity rarely matched by the "gangster pop star pimps" of rap music.

By the early 1990's however, critics charged that KRS-One had abandoned his black nationalist roots and defected to the more financially lucrative hard core scene. At a time when hip hop was in need of intelligent and charismatic spokespeople due to the increasing scrutiny of a hostile media, his actions seemingly confirmed criticisms that the musical genre was about little more than senseless violence, blind rage, and immorality. Sex and Violence, KRS-One's sixth album, was dismissed as a regressive, individualistic artifact.

Return of the Boom Bap marks KRS-One's return to the pinnacle of "conscious" rap. As on previous albums with cohorts Boogie Down Productions, the range of themes is diverse. The album is permeated with insightful commentary on, among other things, police brutality and the spiritual destructiveness of materialism and greed. Also of relevance is the powerful indictment of gangster rappers for their continued degradation of women, and a hip hop historiography documented on the opening tracks of the album. Further complimenting the top-notch lyrics is the superb musical production of Gangstar's DJ Premier, and the sporadic yet well-placed backup vocals of New York's Kid Capri. As a complete package, this is one of the best albums I've heard; it's also the most "hard core" release in recent memory—quite remarkable considering the absence of excessive profanity, senseless violence, and sexist lyrics. In short, the album is as intelligent as it is a pleasure to hear, there-in reaffirming KRS-One's position as one of hip hop's leading artists and critics on social justice.

BEN JONES

Rating: A+

THE POGUES WAITING FOR HERB
WARNER MUSIC UK

The breakup of a really good band is almost as depressing as the inexplicable continued existence of a group after the departure of key personnel. Think of The Band. Think of Genesis. So, it was with some uneasiness that I picked up The Pogues' latest release, Waiting For Herb.

The absence of Shane MacGowan, the Irish octet's primary lyricist and vocalist, is greatly felt on Waiting For Herb. While MacGowan's renowned consumption of whisky added much to the Pogues' lyrical matter and his singing style, the decision to quit drinking a couple of years ago required his departure from the band. Unfortunately, other than a gruff, grisly version of "What A Wonderful World" with Nick Cave in 1992, I haven't heard of any solo projects—or, for that matter, a reunion of The Pogues. Sadly enough, this is to be regretted, because Herb lacks the anger, frustration and sentimentality that MacGowan brought to the band's first seven albums. Spider Stacy, the group's whistle-blower and sometimes singer ("The Wake of the Medusa" on 1990's Hell's Ditch), takes over responsibility for lead vocals, and while it's a good go, his voice doesn't have the endearing charm of MacGowan's.

ANDREW McALLISTER

Rating: B

CONTINUED FROM PREVIOUS PAGE

However, there are a few good songs on this album. The lead-off track, "Tuesday Morning" is a bittersweet love requiem, while "Haunting" tells the tale of an encounter with ghosts during a bicycle ride in a rainstorm. Stay away from "Big City" and "Once Upon A Time," both of which sound like The Clash might on their 25th anniversary tour. I advise fans to stick with the old stuff, and like the ending of that ol' cowboy movie, the call goes out: "Come back Shane."

BILL HUNT

Rating: C+

UNREST PERFECT TEETH
4AD/TEEN BEAT

Ripping their guitars through Sixties Sears Silvertone amplifiers at breakneck speed, Unrest is undeniably power pop. While a name like Unrest sounds only appropriate for a hardcore punk outfit, this threesome is enigmatic, quirky and beautiful. Their lyrics centre around relationships: 'insane' love, crushes on celebrities and intense affection. This eleven track release is their first substantial offering on 4AD. Remember, if it's on 4AD, it can't be that bad.

Production by Simon le Bon of Duran Duran is extremely minimal with rhythm guitar up front on all tracks and few added effects or studio wizardry. Nonetheless, their sound is phenomenally enticing. The vocal intimacy of Bridget Cross and Mark Robinson is confessional and innocent on tracks like "Angel I'll Walk You Home." Such intimacy puts me in mind of Nico and the Velvet Underground. Their Sears guitar amps (which they are immensely proud of), make some fascinating noises. Guit sounds range from soothing chimes to thunderous midrange howls, while melodic bass lines flesh out Unrest's unconventional chords. The music itself is simple, but wonderful in a Big Star kinda way.

The fifth track entitled "Food & Drink Synthesizer" is two minutes of breathy howling while the band giggles in the background. On the front cover is a photo of Cath Carroll by Robert Mapplethorpe which serves as the focus for the second track off Perfect Teeth, a wonderful child-like fantasy. Unrest furiously pound their instruments into submission, driving at 200 beats per minute while chanting go-lucky lyrics like: Cath Carroll, she's gonna take me for a ride.

"Soon It Is Going To Rain Again" uses sexual images like dripping ice cream, but Unrest seems to smirk and blush at it. They are unstoppable in their aggressive sentimentality. "Make Out Club" celebrates the joys of an eager first nervous sexual fumbling. While Unrest can be very sexual, they seem innocent about their desires. Unrest are charming, irresistible and most importantly, sincere.

ANDREW McALLISTER

Rating: A-

Radio Daze

CFRC- 101.9 FM / 90.9 CABLE is YOUR camps-community alternative in Kingston!
The NEW Winter/Spring schedule has begun. Program guides are available at the Infobank in the JDUC.

*Special events this week include:
-Live varsity hockey: Golden Gaels vs Guelph Gryphons (women) tonight at 7:30 pm & tomorrow at 1:30 pm.
-September Child live in the studio, plus an interview with The Odds on Heated Edge today at 3 pm.
-Cool Runnings music giveaway on CFRC Notebook, Wednesday edition at 5pm.
CFRC CALL-IN 545-2121: Call us and have your say! Mon-Wed 10 pm.

Mon.: Monty Python Trivia Show
Tue.: The Holmoko Trial Ban
Wed.: AMS Elections—all candidates debate

CFRC TOP TEN CHART

FOR THE WEEK OF JAN. 17-23, 1994.

TC	LC	Artist	Record	Label
1	2	The Inbreds	Hitario	CD-PF
2	1	Cub	Betti-Cola	CD-Mint
3	8	The Lemonheads	The Great Big NO	CD-Atlantic
4	4	Shonen Knife	Brown Mushrooms And Other...	CD-Virgin
5	24	Aenone	Saints & Razors	CD-KokoPop
6	3	The Ramones	Acid Eaters	CD-Radioactive
7	-	Tori Amos	God	CD-Atlantic
8	9	Various Artists	Scoop This	CD-EMI
9	-	Various Artists	An April March/ Curtain Society	45-Cartwheel
10	5	The Doughboys	Blanche	CD-A&M

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS

An Clachan Apartment Complex
(near West Campus)

Rent: $602 per month
utilities included
stove and fridge provided

FREE PARKING available

September leases

short term lease
to August 30, 1994

NO RENT INCREASE Sept. '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

FROSH WEEK T-SHIRT BID

All bids for the 1994 Frosh Week T-Shirt Order are due by:

1:00pm on Monday Feb. 7th 1994

Please submit bids to the AMS office in the JDUC. The order you will be bidding on is as follows:

1600 T-SHIRTS
8.5 oz 100% preshrunk cotton double stitched

Your price must include all artwork, tax, shipping and handling, flashing, printing, set-up and all other possible costs. Please indicate your final deadline for numbers and potential changes.

Train to be a TEACHER
in Great Britain

Ministry approved courses in U.K.
Universities

For more information, contact:
TEACH
Phone 1-905-388-7158
Fax 1-905-383-7770

MISC

What most folks call "deviance", we call "breakfast."

The number of requests I get a day for help on using Queen's e-mail is becoming so phenomenal that it leads me to suspect that many of you out there in the Journal-reader world would like to use it but don't know how. So here's the scoop.

You can use Queen's e-mail not only to send messages to other users at Queen's but also to anyone, anywhere in the world who has an e-mail account on an Internet-connected computer (such as the VM system at Queen's).

The first thing you must have is a VM account. This can be obtained by taking your PIN number to most any of the campus computer sites, sitting down in front of a terminal and typing "QCSACCT(3)". This will give you your initial password with which you can log into the mainframe. This is accomplished on most campus machines by typing VM and entering your user id and password.

To send mail to someone you have to have their e-mail address. If you are sending mail to someone at Queen's, all you have to type is "mail", a space, and then their user-id, which is a several letter long identifier like: 4RWE2 or WOOLFV.

To send mail to someone outside of Queen's, you have to type their full address which should look something like "OLDFRIEND@U1VAX.UManitoba.ca".

Your address is something like "@@ plus the identifier for Queen's — "QUCDN" (the name of the Mainframe) QueensU" (our university) ".Ca" (Canada) So your user id should look something like: "3USER2@QUCDN.QueensU.Ca"

Using mainframe software is like navigating a minefield for the uninitiated, so be prepared to put up with a little frustration with your first couple of attempts.

After typing the person's e-mail address, the computer will prompt you for the recipient's name, your name and the subject of your letter. It will then present you with the letter editing screen where you can enter in your letter (see diagram). Position the cursor using the arrow keys and type away. When you reach the end of a line, you must remember to use the "end" and not the "ENTER" key to move the cursor to the beginning of the next line. The VM mail editor works more like a typewriter than a word processor. The enter key, which is used by almost every PC in existence to denote the end of a line of text, actually tells the mainframe to process commands (hey, the bigger and older the machine, the quicker).

Once you have finished your letter, hit the function key F5 to send your message. To find out if you have any mail in your mailbox, type mail after you've logged on. This will bring up your mailbox. Use the arrow keys to move to the line of the desired message and press F2. Use F3 to exit the message after you've read it. An easy way of staying in touch with someone is to use the F5 (reply) after reading someone's note (but while it is still on the screen). This way you only have to actually type in the person's address once as the new reply message is automatically sent back to the sender of the original.

Remember, if at any time you want to quit what you're doing on the mainframe, hit either the F3 or the F12 key until you are at the original login screen (one or the other is almost always the quit key). Also look to the bottom of the screen where a list of commands and their corresponding function keys is usually available.

If you want to try your newfound e-mail skills out you can e-mail me at 3DCW3 and drop me a note. I will reply to you so you can get a feel for how the system works.

Derek Walker, a particularly dumb engineer, has recently discovered that George Sand beats the hell out of integrals.

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

Winter Warmers

Well, it looks like the temperature is going to stay well down in the realm of pain — the mercury in my thermometer has retreated into its little red ball, and probably intends to cover there until spring. After staggering home from classes in cold that would do Antarctica credit, we all need a little restorative, and at such a time, a Winter Warmer is just the thing. Brandy and whisky do the job tolerably, but as they offer alcohol, but not much substance, they warm, but do not satisfy. They are wonderful as a digestif, but if supper is away, you want something with a bit more body to it. The perfect Winter Warmer, clearly, is a good, rich, strong beer. Fortunately these are thick on the ground at this time of year, and the Downtown Liquor Store abounds with them.

One of the best styles to choose if you want a Winter Warmer is a Belgian ale. Such ales are strong, malty, and almost always bottle-conditioned: that is, some yeast is added to the beer in the bottle. This results in on-going fermentation in the bottle. The flavour and alcohol content of such beers will continue to develop with age. This month the LCBO has imported two specialties from Brasserie d'Achouffe in the Ardennes: La Chouffe and McChouffe. La Chouffe is an amber-orange, faintly yeasty, malty, fruity ale, with blackcurrant and sweet-apple notes, and a faint coriander spiciness in the finish. This is hardly surprising, since, in an age-old Belgian tradition, coriander seeds are actually added to the kettle in the brewing. With 8 per cent alcohol and a big, satisfying character it is a fine Winter Warmer. McChouffe (not tasted) is 8.5 per cent, and is primed with heather honey in the bottling, which is then re-fermented by the living yeast. This adds to the flavour, as well as the alcohol content. It is a dark amber-red, and broadly in the style of a Scottish ale. It is heavier and a bit maltier than its sister beer.

Chimay Red is another fine beer; it too, is bottle conditioned, with a dark orange-red colour, and 7 per cent alcohol. It is fruity and spicy like La Chouffe, but the spiciness here is the result of the yeast, rather than any extraneous spice. It has a good, strong, almost nutty maltiness and a richly satisfying body. Double Enghien is another Belgian, from the Brasserie de Silly. It is bottle-conditioned, and, unusually, comes in a 1.5 l bottle, rather than the normal 75 cl corked Bordeaux-style bottle. Because all the Belgian bottle-conditioned ales continue to evolve in their bottle, they take age well, without any danger of spoilage. The d'Achouffe beers could easily be set aside to age until next winter, so too could the Chimay and the Enghien. As a general rule, any beer that has been bottle-conditioned may be aged for six months to a year or more after purchase, to the improvement of the flavour. In some very exceptional cases, the aging can go on as long as a decade.

Christmas beers are generally excellent Winter Warmers, and there are many still available in January. These are seasonal brews, usually heavier, richer, stronger and maltier than the breweries' workaday product. One of the finest of these, as well as being the strongest and rarest beer in the world, is Sauvichlaus. It is brewed on December 6, bottled eleven months later, and released the next December 6. It is massively potent at 14 per cent, and has a rich, smooth, creamy, blackcurrant maltiness, with warming notes of brandy-like alcohol in the finish. This is not a beer to be taken lightly — a moderately sized wineglass should be enough. The LCBO has the 1992 bottling — that is, the beer that was started in 1991. The LCBO also has bottles of Mane de Hoignie Speciale Noel Beer (not tasted). This is Belgian and bottle-conditioned, at 9 per cent alcohol (another beer, Holsten Festbock is also available). Unlike the Belgians it comes in a 50 cl can, and has a rich mahogany colour, and 7 per cent alcohol. Brewed according to the Reinheitsgebot (Bavarian Purity Act), it has a malty, faintly alcoholic nose, and a smooth, sweet, fruity maltiness of flavour. It is labelled "Hearty - Vigorous," and indeed it is, though a little uncomplex. As a bottom-fermenting beer it can be drunk slightly colder than the ales, (which should be a few degrees below room temperature.)

Those who are partial to a stout might try Royal Extra Stout, which has a massive, nourishing, coffee-chocolate-roasty-malty flavour, of 6.6 per cent. But let the uninitiated be warned: the flavour can be overwhelming, and this might not be the stout for you. Try Pub Draught Guinness or Upper Canada Colonial Stout if you are unsure; they are not overly warming, but make a good introduction to the style.

The Canadian patriot might want to try the Eisbock from Niagara Falls Brewing. This beer is subjected to the centuries-old ruse of freezing the liquid, removing some of the ice, and leaving the rest in the barrel (with a higher concentration of alcohol). The beer ends up at 8 per cent. (All this gives the lie to Labat's claim to have "invented ice-brewing" by the way.) The freezing also has the effect of concentrating and smoothing the flavour, which is said to be smooth, delicate, and peachlike. This is a beer to stand alongside Ontario's Eisweins.

All these beers are available at the LCBO. The Beer Store has a limited selection, its best selection being Upper Canada True Bock. This is a seasonal special, with a dark copper colour, and 6.5 per cent alcohol. It has a good malty flavour that grows more pronounced, and then just a bit hoppy, in the finish, and there are notes of blackcurrant fruitiness all the way through. True Bock has a big, nourishing flavour, and enough alcohol to warm. Other than that, there isn't much to choose from at the Beer Store. Upper Canada Colonial Stout is nourishing, but not warming, and Molson Signature Amber Lager is faintly warming and mildly sustaining without doing a superlative job at either (though both are rather good beers).

The beauty of beer is that it is a drink for all seasons — in the heat of summer we can enjoy delicate, refreshing pilsners, pale ales, and wheat beers, and in the freezing blast of winter there are the darker, richer brews to be had, which satisfy the body and warm the soul. And until next time, remember the First Cervisophile Commandment: Experiment! If you have the choice between a habitual standby, and a beer you know nothing about, go for the unfamiliar! You'll be stretching your beer horizons, and who knows? It might be the best thing you've ever tasted. Cheers!

You can find Ash Baker guzzling Labbatt 50 at any of Kingston's cheesier watering holes.

FREE Bacon Double Cheeseburger

When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb 9/94

2 CAN DINE $4.99

2 Whopper and 2 Regular Fries

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb 9/94

AMS candidate Arnold plagued by first-year incident

"Degrading" pictures posted in residence

By JEFF GRAY

Allegations have surfaced that Alma Mater Society presidential candidate Jonathan Arnold posted a computer printout picture of women in degrading positions on a floormate's door while living in residence in first year.

Janet Chisholm and Allison Ruch said Arnold posted a collage of images depicting women that "some would find degrading" on a floormate's door two years ago when they lived with him on Victoria Hall's French floor.

They took the poster down and brought to the attention of Floor Senior Dave Verbrugge. Verbrugge, along with the floor's don and floor president, confronted Arnold about the poster, and told him not to put it up again.

When first contacted by The Journal, Arnold denied any wrongdoing. "I would never do anything degrading like that," he said. Arnold did say that there was an incident in first year where a floor senior, the don and the floor president spoke to him about a poster which some on the floor found offensive.

And Arnold said he couldn't recall what was on the poster. "I remember that it was not anything [like] women in degrading positions," he said.

"It wasn't a big issue at the time," Arnold said. "It's not something that I keep on file."

He added that he did "remember that there were some people upset."

Later, he contacted The Journal saying that he did remember the poster's contents which he said included, "various pictures... one had breasts exposed."

Arnold said he apologized publicly at a floor meeting for hanging the poster.

Speaking to The Journal, he said, "yes, I made a mistake. I regret what I did. But I have changed since then. I lacked education—that's why our campaign stresses education on these issues."

Arnold said he takes full responsibility for his actions. He said that now, two years after the incident, he is "more aware of women's issues."

after the incident, Arnold posted signs on his residence door protesting that he had been "censored" on his own floor.

"He was vehement about it. He seemed to really feel that his personal freedom had been infringed upon," Ruch said. "He didn't seem to care about offending us," she said. "He didn't seem to be able to see the other side."

Arnold said that these signs "were a joke as well," and were misinterpreted.

He also said he "didn't get along well" with people on his floor.

"Unfortunately... this university is very politically correct to the extreme, and it's all a matter of perception," Arnold said.

Arnold also accused The Journal of mudslinging.

"I'll go on the record by saying that if you guys print this that's tabloid printing and that's pretty irresponsible on the face of The Journal," he said.

Chisholm said she wanted to make sure her coming forward was taken in the right context.

"We don't know him now. We're in no position to pass judgement on him. But this could affect his presidency and people should know about it," she said.

Queen's band Los Amigos di Stuart. Reviewed on page 19. BRENT DAVIS

inside The Journal

GENDER IN SPORTS

Sports experts debate and discuss gender equality in sports, and link inequality to the capitalist ethic.

—For story, see page 15

SPIELBERG SUCCEEDS

Schindler's List is Spielberg's masterpiece, a daring, affecting film with compelling performances. The film is painful to watch but not depressing; one is filled with not only horror, but also joy and hope.

—For review, see page 20

BREAK FREE AND EAT!

Today marks the start of Eating Disorders Awareness Week, which will encourage people to "be brave, break free" and indulge themselves. Organizers hope to convince people that dieting can be a hazard to health.

—Story on page 3

"If that country wants your business you can use it as a lever to alter their human rights record." —RMC politics prof Joel Sokolsky on trade and human rights. Story on page 3.

Yearbook reprinting to cost $8,000

By BRAD ELDER

The final chapter of the 1992-93 Tricolour yearbook fiasco appears to have been written, but not without a cost.

Last Wednesday, the Alma Mater Society Board of Directors decided that the quotations found at the bottom of the graduate section of the proofs would be completely removed from the pages of the 1992-93 yearbook.

And according to a press release issued by the AMS, "additional reprinting charges of approximately $8,000 will be incurred as a result of changes to the book."

AMS Media Services Director Eric Jabal said that this additional cost would be absorbed by the AMS for now, adding that the AMS would likely go to referendum in the spring to adjust the (opt-outable) student interest fee on yearbooks, in hopes of restoring the yearbook reserve which has been depleted over the last two years.

The original decision to include the quotations (which are statements expressed by various groups and publications on campus) was made by the editor-in-chief of the 1992-93 yearbook, Robert Yee, who has been the topic of controversy since he was fired from his post as the business manager of the 93-94 yearbook.

Jabal and 1993-94 Yearbook editor-in-chief Karen Kilcullen were not aware of the addition to the yearbook, as Yee sent the pages directly to Herff-Jones Canada Inc., the publisher.

Jabal said he did not know about the quotations until he received the proofs from the publishers. He subsequently told The Journal that he was "extremely upset with some of the material and decisions [Yee] made."

After Kilcullen granted the AMS Board of Directors editorial jurisdiction in the matter, the following decision was announced by the Chair of the AMS Board of Directors, Grant Hughes:

"As representatives of the [AMS] corporation and 'official' publishers of the YEARBOOK CONTINUED ON PAGE 4

Liberal leader addresses OUSA conference

By JEFF GRAY

The Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance held its inaugural assembly in Waterloo on the weekend, discussing the hiring of a professional lobbyist at Queen's Park, and hearing a luncheon address from Ontario Liberal Leader Lyn McLeod.

Also addressing the assembly were Council of Ontario Universities President Peter George, provincial Liberal education critic Dalton McGuinty, Conservative MPP Elizabeth Whitmer, and Jamie Mackay, a civil servant who works for the Ontario Student Assistance Program.

"They all were saying how refreshing it was to have an interest group talking not just about their rights, but also their responsibilities," said Alma Mater Society President Katherine Phillips.

Phillips attended the conference along with AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson, acting Academic Affairs Commissioner Andrew Ferlejoski, and OUSA co-ordinator Miles Clark.

OUSA was formed in 1991 and its current membership includes the student governments of Queen's, Western, Waterloo, book, it is our responsibility to act in the best interests of the AMS, its constituents, and the office of the Tricolour Yearbook. After consultation with several members of the university community and much Brock, Laurier, and part-time students at the University of Toronto.

Phillips said McLeod "didn't really have that many plans" to impart to OUSA in her lunch-hour address on Saturday.

However, Phillips called the assembly as a whole "very productive." The weekend saw OUSA officially ratify constitutional changes made last term by the group's steering committee.

Phillips said the OUSA assembly tried to "dispel the myth that students should pay more" for their education in its sessions with the speakers.

She said the COU's Peter George expressed an interest in sitting down with OUSA and working out some common positions to lobby together in the upcoming election year.

Phillips said there was more chance of the COU sitting down with OUSA than with the Canadian Federation of Students, as the two groups share more common ground. However, she made it clear that OUSA still opposes the COU's recent proposal calling for tuition hikes of 50 per cent.

OUSA was formed in 1991 and its current membership includes the student governments of Queen's, Western, Waterloo,

Tired of the House-hunting Runaround?

Take a break - Catch the Express!

★ For those who returned from Toronto on the Tricolour Express January 9th, your list of names has been submitted to the box office. Pick up your complimentary ticket for your next trip to Toronto with our sincerest apologies.

	TORONTO	OTTAWA	MONTREAL
DEPARTURES: FRIDAY	$20	$16	$25
West Campus	1:55	5:35	2:50
Victoria Hall	2:05	5:45	3:00
JDUC	2:10	5:55	3:10
DROP-OFF POINTS:	Oshawa Union Station & Scarborough Town Centre	Kanata, C. J. "Provincial" Centre and Kirkwood & Bus Terminal	Kirkland Shopping Plaza & Bus Terminal
RETURNS: SUNDAY	8:00	8:00	5:45
PICK-UP POINTS:	One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza	Bus Terminal	Bus Terminal

Tickets are available at the Queen's Box Office
For more info call 545-2558
NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

Nominations for the

Tricolour Award

the highest non-academic, non-athletic award that can be received by an individual Queen's student, are now open.

Nomination forms are available at the AMS Office and should be returned there by the deadline 5:00pm

February 11th, 1994

Nominations will not be accepted after this date.

For more information contact
Pete Stuart
at the AMS Office (545-2725)
or at home (547-5358)

ASUS

OPEN FORUMS:

February 2nd 6:30 to 8:00pm in Upper Victoria Hall

and

February 4th 11:30 to 1:00pm in Lower Ceilidh, JDUC

Candidates for election include:

ASUS Executive
94 (Permanent), 95, 96 & 97 Year Executives
ASUS Reps to the AMS
Senators

This is an opportunity for you to find out who is running, listen to panel discussions and to ask candidates any questions you might have!

INFORM YOURSELF AND VOTE!

NEED CASH? MIND FIND NEEDS TUTORS

PAYS $9.00/HR!!!!

Subsidized Tutoring brought to you by your Faculty and the AMS. To pick up forms, go to the Infobank or your Society Office or call:

545-6000 Ext 5300

Remember: All payroll sheets must be handed to the AMS

Conference highlights foreign policy trends

BY AFFAAN QADIR

This past weekend, Queen's played host to a conference on "Canadian Foreign Policy Trends" held by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs (CIIA).

In light of the fact that Canada is facing a foreign policy review, the timing was no coincidence.

The conference, which attracted numerous Canadian diplomats, international affairs experts, as well as Queen's students, highlighted the difficult task of creating a global foreign policy given the government's problems regarding the availability of funding.

Addressing the conference, Charles Bassett, former Canadian high commissioner to Zimbabwe, said that Canadian developmental assistance and trade to third-world countries have produced modest gains, and that future Canadian policy should establish realistic goals.

"Canadian involvement must be more targeted, unlike our policy in the past which was to be all things to all people in all places at the same time," Bassett explained.

Keynote speaker Gary Smith, the director-general of the Asia-Pacific branch of the Ministry of External Affairs in Ottawa, further suggested an integration of domestic and foreign policy which would target the enormous economic potential for Canadian businesses in the Asia-Pacific region.

"There has been a realignment in global economic weight to the Asia-Pacific region. Canada must be aware of this realignment in order to share a piece of the economic pie," Smith said.

While the Asia-Pacific region may hold greater trade opportunity, the conference also directed its attention to major economic and political changes in Latin America and the Caribbean.

"New democracies and economic growth have created enormous possibilities for Canada in this region," suggested Archibald Ritter, professor of economics at Carleton University.

Ritter said the North American Free Trade Agreement—linking Canada with the U.S. and Mexico—has "redirected our attention towards South America in terms of trade."

When asked about the peasant uprising in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas, and the fact that beneficiaries of trade in developing nations are often a small segment of society, Ritter insisted that there is no direct link between trade and human rights.

"The plight of [Mexican] Indians is deep-rooted in history since 1492. I wouldn't renegotiate NAFTA. What we could do is point out our concerns over internal conflicts, but it is ultimately Mexico's problem," Ritter said.

Joel Sokolsky, professor of political science at Royal Military College, said he doesn't buy the ethical dilemma in such issues. Sokolsky insisted that it is only through a process of inclusion that Canadian policy may address the internal conflicts of its trading partners.

"If that country wants your business you can use it as a lever to alter their human rights record," Sokolsky explained.

The conference also addressed the challenge Africa presents to Canadian foreign policy. Former Canadian Ambassador to South Africa Christopher Westdal reflected on Canada's active promotion of "democratization" in South Africa and future Canadian involvement in the region.

"It's sad that at a time when aid is being cut, the potential of that aid is improving. If we continue cutting foreign aid budgets we should keep something aside for nourishing democratic culture [in South Africa]," Westdal said.

Nonetheless, Westdal sees Canada's role in Africa being magnified with the steps South Africa has taken towards democracy.

"The new South Africa has produced a new player on the scene. We would want to cooperate with that new player. More importantly, a change in South Africa changes the region drastically," Westdal explained.

The changing definition of "security" was also highlighted during the conference. Sokolsky suggested that because security today is being defined as incorporating financial security and economic growth, Canadian foreign policy should not over-commit itself to foreign conflicts.

"How does an internal conflict such as the Balkans affect Canadian and European security? Isn't our defining of security too broad? Such broad definitions of security which link it to every issue in the global context run the risk of over-committing yourself," Sokolsky said.

However, John Halstead, former Canadian ambassador to NATO (the North Atlantic Treaty Organization), insisted that Canadian security should not be defined narrowly. Halstead said security must be viewed in the context of a post-cold-war world, in which collective security should be the goal.

"Military force is being used to change international borders and that is what I think is a dangerous course. If the precedent is allowed, then we are on a slippery slope," Halstead explained, in reference to the security threat posed by the Balkan crisis.

Xavier Furtado, chairperson of the conference and a second-year politics student at Queen's, summarized the major trends in Canadian foreign policy in terms of integrating domestic and foreign policy. According to Furtado, such an integration would facilitate economic security and harmonious relations between nations.

"By increasing international trade you increase interdependence among nations, and the outcome is avoiding armed conflicts," Furtado explained. "Furthermore, as Canadian foreign policy becomes increasingly economics-driven, it will be necessary to incorporate issues such as ethics, human rights and democratization."

When asked about the outcome of the conference, Furtado said he was pleased with the number of students who attended, and hoped future conferences would generate such interest in Canadian foreign policy.

"Foreign policy serves Canadian interests; Canadians should be interested," he said. "The Canadian Institute for International Affairs serves that role of educating the public through a non-partisan forum."

Experts Don Macnamara (left) and Gerry Robinson stare down the future of Canadian foreign policy. LORI THORLAKSON

Eating Disorders Awareness Week begins

BY DAVE COLEMAN

Today marks the beginning of Eating Disorders Awareness Week, a national campaign with a focus on a "Celebration of Our Natural Sizes."

The Queen's organizers will be presenting educational programs with particular emphasis on the relationship between dieting and eating disorders.

On Jan. 27, the Anorexia and Bulimia Society of Kingston (ANAB) and the Peer Health Educators, an outreach group from Queen's Student Health, conducted an informal survey.

Involving 164 women and 99 men, the survey found that 61 per cent of women have dieted, as opposed to 16 per cent of men. In addition, 23 per cent of the women were 13 years or younger when they went on their first diet.

The survey also found that 82 per cent of women felt their weight fell into a "healthy range." And yet the report noted that "what is considered as acceptable weight by health standards is clearly not viewed by women to be acceptable by aesthetic standards."

The report also found that 28 per cent of women between the ages of 20 and 24 have potential health problems because they're underweight.

"These statistics show how dieting can lead to serious eating disorders," said Kathy Sida, a member of ANAB and a co-organizer of Kingston's Eating Disorders Awareness Week.

Sida said the "triggers leading to an eating disorder are often different: sexual abuse, stress, or an A-student trying to please everyone in their life."

A Peer Health Educator who chose to remain anonymous said her eating disorder emerged as a

"control thing" in high school. "Everything else was going out of control. Eating was the one thing I could control. I felt self-righteous," she said.

Health Educator Christa McMillan said the role of the awareness week is "to educate people that this is going on in campus" and to provide resources for people who believe they have an eating disorder. She also said it is important to educate people on how to recognize an eating disorder.

"A very common question we get is, 'I think my friend is anorexic. What can I do?'" To such inquiries, McMillan suggests a gentle, supportive approach.

Diane Nolting, a health educator at Queen's Student Health, said this week was designed to answer similar questions.

All week, experts will be on hand in Mac-Corry over the noon hour. On Tuesday, Julie Simpson, a dietician from the Eating Dis-

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

WOMEN AT QUEEN'S

You're invited to attend an "Open Space" event, entitled Women at Queen's: Transforming our Community. The event will be an opportunity for all those interested in the concerns of women at Queen's to come together. Participants will identify women's issues relevant to the community, and will set the agenda themselves. The Open Space will take place Friday, Feb. 11, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the Lower Common Room of Victoria Hall. For further information, please contact the Office of the Dean of Women at 545-2533.

NDP FORUM

The New Democratic Party will present The Forum on Renewal: The Future of Social Democracy on Tuesday, Feb. 8 at 8 p.m. in the Wilson Room of the Kingston Public Library. Featured will be renowned Canadian historian Desmond Morton, broadcaster and social policy analyst Jamie Swift, and former NDP president and MP Marion Dewar.

QUEEN'S TRIVIA

According to The Queen's Encyclopedia, the original lyrics at the end of the Oil Thigh chorus were: "boys go in and win." These words were not changed to "gals go in and win" until 1985.

RUBIN "HURRICANE" CARTER TO SPEAK

Frontier College: Queen's Students for Literacy welcomes former professional boxer Rubin "Hurricane" Carter to Grant Hall to speak tonight at 7:30 p.m. In 1966, Carter was sentenced to 19 years in prison for murders he didn't commit, and has since become an outspoken voice for social justice. Admission is free.

mission is free.

SCIENCE '44 CO-OP
397 BROCK STREET KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1T3 613-544-4506

Starting To Plan Housing For Next Year?

Science '44 has:

- 8 month contract
- prompt maintenance
- fully furnished
- meal plan available
- open to all students
- available for groups or individuals
- cheaper than residence or a ghetto house

397 Brock Street
544-4506

MORRISON'S RESTAURANT

Open
5:30 a.m. to 7:45 p.m.
MONDAY TO SATURDAY

SUNDAY 8:00a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
(Breakfast Only)

318 KING STREET EAST

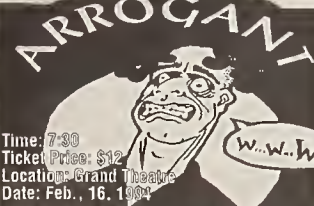

Quality Comfort Core
EYEWEAR

Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD.
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE

& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE

THE ARROGANT WORMS

Time: 7-30
Ticket Price: $12
Location: Grand Theatre
Date: Feb., 16, 1994

Tickets Available: Performing Arts Office, Grand Theatre. For info 546-5997

WORMS

AMS Fact Check

With elections approaching quickly, The Journal offers some background on a few of the Alma Mater Society issues facing candidates.

BY LORI THORLAKSON

AMS SERVICES AND BUDGETING FOR ZERO

While the AMS as a whole is a "not-for-profit" organization, individual services can budget for profit. However, surplus dividends are not payed out. Rather, extra funds are directed to the AMS surplus, or to the cross-subsidization of other services.

For instance, according to Jess Dutton, AMS services director, this year Alfie's Pub and the Quiet Pub will not make a profit, but the Tricolour Express bus will. The AMS operates a total of 15 services, some of which are evidently not run for profit, such as the Student Constables and Hoods and Gowns.

The bylaws governing this aspect of the AMS were changed this academic year. It used to be that the corporate budget for an individual service could be designed only to break even. If a service wanted to budget around a profit, a special revenue plan had to be approved. With the new bylaws, however, services can realize a profit and show this on their balance sheet. AMS officials have suggested that this new approach has eliminated creative budgeting (where a service shuffles numbers to disguise a profit) and has recognized that some services will profit and some will lose.

If a service run by the AMS loses money three years in a row, it is reevaluated by the AMS Board of Directors. In addition to economic considerations, the Board considers "qualitative considerations."

Thus cross-subsidization of services decreases the importance of financial self-sufficiency, and therefore increases the relative weight of the value of the service to students at Queen's when the decision is made as to maintaining the service.

Yearbook

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

deliberation, we came to the conclusion that the quotations in question did not belong on the pages of the 1992-93 Tricolour Yearbook."

Yee was not consulted in the decision-making process.

Reverend Brian Yealland, who sits on the AMS Board of Directors, told The Journal that some of the quotations were "graphic or explicit, mostly in sexual ways." However, he noted that this was not the case for all of the quotations.

One sexually explicit quote came from a Massachusetts politician describing an opponent's description of how AIDS is transmitted: "It's all about how people insert the penis in to the anus, and they insert a fist into the anus, etc., etc., that was all very interesting, but it seemed to me that the most interesting question was how the people of Orange County came to insert an anus into the House of Reps."

Yealland's concern also lay in the quotations' lack of context. He said that if the point of the quotations was to present a diversity of opinion, they required an introduction, a reference and an

OUSAs

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

OUSAs first policy paper, entitled Students for Change, said OUSAs would accept tuition hikes of up to 30 per cent, as long as they were matched dollar for dollar with increased government funding, and student aid reform in the shape of an income-contingent loan repayment plan.

Philips said OUSAs has received a commitment from all three parties in the provincial legislature to "examine and consider" the idea of income-contingent loan repayment.

Under such a scheme, student loans could be paid back as a percentage of a graduate's income, and graduates not making more than a certain amount would be exempt from payment.

Philips said Mackay detailed the NDP government's current pilot project for the plan. The government has offered 1,000 grants of $2,500 to students in their fourth year who have been turned away from OSAP, in order to determine if a larger scale income-contingent loan scheme is plausible.

Philips said she felt the pilot project was poorly publicized, and that most students are not aware of the plan.

She said OUSAs resolved to continue to pressure politicians to follow up on their commitment to look seriously at implementing an income-contingent loan repayment scheme in Ontario.

explanation. "What they were intended to represent was quite unclear to me," he added.

Yealland also said that he was concerned with whether or not the sources of the quotations had consented to having their statements printed in the yearbook.

The Board of Directors could also have opted to place the quotations elsewhere in the yearbook. Yealland said, but not without great costs and time lost.

Free Coupon digital playground Free Coupon

One FREE Scan $5.00 value on Nikon's "Coolscan" slide scanner or Agfa's "Arcus Plus" flatbed scanner.

Limit 1 per customer Offer expires Feb 28/94 Limit 1 coupon per invoice

Digital Playground's scanning resources

give you the ability to scan any image, drawing or picture into a format that you can use with your computer (Mac, PC or Amiga) for essays, reports, proposals or just about anything.

35mm slides, negatives of any size pictures up to 8.5 x 11 and text recognition (OCR)
full colour, grey-scale or black & white up to 2700 dpi photographic retouching, repair and restorations
all file formats

computer technology you can use
209 Wellington Street, Kingston, ON, K7K 2Y6 (613) 547-5700

Queen's hosts new rez alliance

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

Last Saturday delegates from eleven colleges and universities met at Queen's for the formation of the Eastern Canada College and University Residence Students Alliance (ECCURSA).

This new organization was founded to help residence leaders from across eastern Canada access information on how other schools' residences are being operated. The main way this exchange of information will be accomplished is through a central library.

"A big problem of ours is we don't know what's happening at other schools," said Warren Flannery, Queen's Main Campus Residents' Council president.

The ECCURSA ratified its new constitution and bylaws, while also setting out the structure and purposes of the organization. In addition, it selected its first directors and set membership fees.

"This is a major honour for the MCRC to be able to host this meeting, and give birth to an important new multi-province organization," said Flannery.

Some of the schools that attended the ECCURSA's first meeting were McMaster, Trent, Laurentian and McGill. Others such as Brock, Guelph, and Sheridan College were unable to send delegates, but hope to join the organization in the future.

The information made available through the ECCURSA will be helpful to Queen's residence coordinators in many ways, Flannery said. In terms of residence alcohol policies, for instance, it will be useful for the MCRC to see how other schools interpret the Ontario liquor laws. "In this way, we can avoid the expense of hiring a lawyer," said Flannery.

Student discipline in Queen's residences is uniquely handled by students and not officials. Other schools' discipline rules might give our residence leaders some ideas.

The ECCURSA might also offer different viewpoints on the current topic of residence food services. McMaster and Guelph ended their Marriott food contracts by not renewing them, and have moved towards self-operation, Flannery said. Queen's may communicate with these schools, seeking examples of alternative food plans in future contract negotiations here, he said.

Flannery, who was active in the creation of the ECCURSA, ended by saying, "the meeting went well and all the delegates were happy with the results. They were also very impressed by a tour of our residences."

Long lineups for formal hours

BY BROCK MANTLAND

Arts and Science '94 students found themselves stuck in frustratingly long lineups as they waited to sign up for work hours for their formal on Thursday and Friday.

But the formal's convener, Peggy-Jo Barkley, said the difficulties were unavoidable given the eagerness of '94's. She said the lineups were improved by a ticket system where students in line were assigned a number guaranteeing their spot.

After a "gruelling" first two hours on Thursday, Barkley said, the ticket system was put in place with the help of Student Constables, "because people were budding, which made people cranky." Once in place, "the lineup moved at least 80 per cent quicker and people were generally happier."

Though long lineups occurred

Friday as well, Barkley said that "we got as many through in half the time as on the first day. By three o'clock, there were just a few stray people."

Arts '94 student James Kroeger waited in line for about two and a half hours on Friday morning, and said, "it was as long as I waited to see the first screening of The Fugitive." He said the sign-up was "done pretty sloppily."

He suggested that rather than having three people taking names, sign-up sheets could have been posted for students to sign.

Barkley said that the convener or from last year is travelling abroad, and so could not be contacted for advice as to running the sign-up sessions. Some contact with last year's formal committee took place, she said, "but they could only remember so much." Last year, the sign-ups took place at the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society house, the Core, over five days. The first day, Barkley said, students were forced to wait outside in very cold weather, and so this year the Upper Ceilidh of the John Deutsch University Centre was used.

"If we had five days, I think the same number of people would have lined up [on the first day] as they did this year," she said.

Complications in the ASUS interviewing process led to the convener being chosen three weeks later than usual, Barkley said. As such, "everything's been a little more compact time-wise, and that is not our fault."

Though the formal committee looked into running computers to sign people up, Barkley said, "that costs thousands of dollars... We did it in the most cost-efficient and the best way we knew how."

DONE A GOOD DEED LATELY?

RED CROSS BLOOD DONOR CLINIC

Give the gift of Life

Please bring 2 pieces of I.D. Refreshments will be provided, and transportation if necessary. Sponsored by Nursing Soc and Eng Soc.

Lower Vic Hall Residence.
Feb. 2, 1pm-5pm
Feb. 3, 2pm-8pm

READING WEEK TRAVEL

THE EXPERTS IN UNIVERSITY TRAVEL!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

Beat the Elements

People experienced in the outdoors know the virtues of Gore-Tex™ and Polartec™.

Stay warm and dry with the latest in outerwear from Patagonia, Sierra Designs, The North Face, Lowe Alpine Systems, and Chlarchphyll.

And on February 3, 4 and 5 take advantage of our great WINTER SAVINGS EVENT!

NORTH RIDGE WILDERNESS quality outdoor gear and clothing
80 Queen Street, Downtown Kingston 546-4757

MY ASTONISHING SELF

For a Valentine to Remember...

"Astonish" her with exquisite lingerie from My Astonishing Self Boutique

♥ ♥ ♥
P.S. Our international collection of designer swimwear & cruise-wear has arrived!

My Astonishing Self
257-A Ontario Street at Princess • 546-6186

BY BRAD ELDER

Assembly Report

Last Thursday, the second Alma Mater Assembly of 1994 was held in the McLaughlin of the John Deutsch University Centre. Thus, The Journal proudly presents another instalment of the Assembly Report, brought to you indirectly through the grace of the AMS scribe, A'Amer. Thursday's Assembly featured extended discussions on significant issues such as student housing, Surface, and childcare.

THE HOUSING ISSUE

Two guest speakers from the city planning department gave a presentation to Assembly on the official planning review, and noted that student housing is considered a special policy group in the residential land-use category.

Rector David Baar pointed out the dangers of being classified as a special residential group, suggesting that at present classification "can either be used positively or negatively for students, and there's nothing in [the official plan] which guarantees to us that classifying us as a different landings category ... will not at some future date be used negatively."

Later in Assembly, Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin introduced a report to Assembly which offered a brief account of the housing situation at Queen's.

In it, Nevin observed that the disturbing element of the city's official plan is "that classifying land on the basis of occupant behaviour and / or occupation will lead to by-law enactment that is discriminatory."

Notifying Assembly that the AMS's case will likely be called before the Ontario Municipal Board within the next two to six months, Nevin tabled a motion that Assembly ratify a decision to officially go ahead with the OMB proceedings.

Asked how far the City of Kingston is prepared to push this dispute, Nevin responded, "my feeling is that they're preparing a case already and they're willing to take it to the OMB."

She added, "what we're doing [in pursuing action against the City] is stating that as policy we cannot be differentiated from other types of residential accommodation by virtue of the fact that we're students."

Nevin also told Assembly that she was "disappointed with the university's lack of attention to the issue of student housing."

"This is certainly something that as the AMS ... we should be lobbying the administration for support in issues we feel are important," she said.

At the end of the lengthy deliberation, Assembly members approved the following course of action: "That the AMS ... continue to prepare for the OMB hearing, nevertheless, engage with the Planning Department in a series of informal negotiations; pursue OMB case subject to an AMS Assembly approval of all legal fees in excess of $10,000..."

DICK AND LITTLEJOHN SURFACE AT ASSEMBLY

During Question Period, Surface referendum No-side supporter Andrew Dick asked AMS President Katherine Philips how she could justify spending $400 of AMS money to fund the upcoming issue of Surface, "considering Arts and Science students pay over two thirds of the AMS fees and ... they already voted on Oct. 13 that they don't want to fund Surface."

In response, Philips said that "the AMS looks after the interests of all students." She explained that the money was coming specifically from two AMS committees, the Racism and Ethnic Discrimination Committee, whose mandate is to educate students on racism, and LINK, whose mandate is to link AMS with generally under-represented groups.

Philips added that she felt that the decisions of those committees to give money to Surface was appropriate.

Dick, in response, argued that "the mandates are not important here, nor is the subjective position that Surface represents the views of minorities ... Arts and Science students made a decision, now they're being forced to pay over $250 toward a paper they voted against."

To this, Philips suggested that if Dick disagreed with the mandates of the committees, he was welcome to bring forth policy to change them. She added that "these committees have been funding many, many things on this campus ... that may go against half, or 80 per cent or almost all of the students at Queen's, but they do represent what some student at Queen's believe and maybe we've spent $250 of some people's money that think it's worthwhile to be spent of Surface."

Her response was met with applause from Assembly.

When Littlejohn reiterated the qualms of Dick, Philips said the AMS "has consistently been advocating policies that are not only for the majority of students of this university, but [that] look out for every student's needs and the minorities ..."

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society President Jenn Steeves followed up Philips's comment by noting that "the arts and science students voted to not fund the Surface newspaper through the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, that is all."

Said Philips, "the cheque will be signed."

Later, during discussion period, Law representative Mike Henry questioned the actions of the AMS. Expressing his desire not to impugn any motives, Henry said, "what worries me ... is that there is too close a relation between newspapers which are intended to provide ... a critical perspective of the student government and the student government."

Henry suggested that the AMS was unwittingly using its influence to affect the fate of a paper, a choice he called "a regrettable intervention into the dynamics of free press on campus."

ASUS Vice-President Heath Grant and Con-Ed's Pete Stuart defended the decision. "If [the committees] put some other publication out," said Stuart, "it would have about as much interest to Queen's students as INQ."

Stuart also noted that the AMS has always supported, and had a presence in, Surface. He said that this year's halting of the Surface presses has "greatly affected all of those committees [that deal with minority issues and speak through Surface] and their ability to communicate."

CHILDCARE QUESTION

Addressing the issue of childcare, Baar expressed his view that childcare "is the kind of issue that is best provided for by the university and I think it's the need of the student government to make it the priority of the university to provide the childcare it should be providing."

Stuart asked Assembly if perhaps a general student interest fee should pay for childcare, and recommended that the AMS take the possibility to referendum.

CENTRALIZED GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES

Discussion was held on Baar's recommendation that the grievance procedure at Queen's be centralized and enlist the help of peer advisors.

Baar explained that peer advisors would be there for "encouragement and informing [students] of what they can do to deal with their problem."

"The whole idea is to have a go-to-place to decrease the confusion" involved in the grievance procedure, Baar said.

The Formal Event of the Year

$35 per ticket

Proceeds in aid of Big Sisters

TICKETS ON SALE NOW IN MAC-CORRY

11:30 - 4:30

EVERYONE WELCOME! Don't Miss Out!
Charity Dinner and Dance at the Ambassador Hotel
Friday, February 4th, 1994

HOME SWEET HOME - WHATEVER

Do you think the rats in your house should be paying rent?
Are you keeping your front door open to heat the house?
Could a mouse confuse your walls with swiss cheese?

LET US KNOW ABOUT IT!

LANDLORD OF THE YEAR

A landlord that fixes things
A landlord that calls before they visit
Someone who genuinely cares whether you're warm over the winter

The AMS Housing Issues Committee will be holding a contest to find the best landlord in Kingston this year and recognize them with an award. To nominate your landlord, please let us know in a page or two, why you think they should win this award. Include specific examples, as well as your name, student number and address, and drop it off at the AMS Communications Commission office 12 noon, Feb. 11th.

Winners will be announced in several categories (some conditions apply)
So get in those submissions NOW!

The AMS Housing Issues Committee is holding a contest to find the most un-fit-to-be-lived-in houses in the ghetto. There will be prizes galore, and all you have to do is tell us in a page or two.

WHAT MAKES YOUR HOUSE THE BIGGEST HOLE IN THE GHETTO

Submissions will be accepted at the AMS Communications Commission office until 12 noon, February 11th.

The criteria that submissions will be judged by include:
Overcrowding, plumbing problems, structural problems (those pesky walls keep falling down?), heating problems and general all around lack of proper maintenance.

Editorial

Looking beyond the Surface

When Surface hits the streets sometime this month, the Queen's that let Surface down can expect to see anger and intensity in its pages.

Some people think that by publishing angry and intense pieces Surface would be committing political suicide. They would conclude that the editors failed to keep their promise to only publish articles written with a critical base. But Surface can be angry and intense and still retain its critical base—the two are not mutually exclusive.

But how do we define critical base? Do we assume that a piece has a critical base only if it refers back to this theorist or that well-known systemic structure? Is this a realistic expectation? Do those of us who support Surface, especially with the critical base requirement, limit the paper just as blamefully as those who have limited it on the basis of its political content?

Whether or not Junipero Lagraron (Surface editor-in-chief) and his staff decide to defend each article with a critical base should not determine how we judge what the future of Surface should be.

In the past, Surface has used visual techniques to make a point. In their infamous "Sex" issue (published last year by a different editorial board), Surface transposed photos of men at Queen's in power positions onto a collage of men's bodies. Where is the critical base in that?

The point is, the piece did not need a critical base. It was designed to test how we would react to these "powerful" men if we thought they were all gay. Although the piece offended and angered many men and women on campus, it was successful in accomplishing its intended effect.

The mandate, neither should we judge it according to how similar it is to or how far it deviates from last year's publications. Surface must remain true to its principles—but that does not mean emulating last year's paper. Surface is in a classic catch 22 situation. Some people will slam the next issue of Surface for being too alienating, others will think it's not radical enough.

Most importantly, Surface must maintain its credibility with the people for whom it is published. This means that it must remain a voice for minorities on campus. It must continue to be challenging and educational. If this is political suicide, then so be it.

If the public rejects Surface because of its anger and intensity, some people will smugly point out that Surface didn't learn its lesson.

But Surface isn't here to learn from the majority. People should ask themselves what they have learned from Surface.

Other people are only offended by the personal attacks that Surface is so well known for. In the past Surface has singled out student leaders on campus, illustrating what they have or have not done for the minority, lesbian/gay/bi or gender causes. Often this has been done without a critical base—and still with good effect.

While these personal attacks are often a basis for criticism, student leaders should be held accountable and where The Journal and Golden Words fail in this respect, Surface does not.

Because of the intensity of its focus, however, Surface is condemned, ignored, or, at best, barely supported by the student leaders it strives to keep accountable—these same student leaders who again and again, year after year, stress the need for more accountability.

Not only does Surface monitor student leaders for their stances on these issues, it pays the price for fulfilling that responsibility. Other campus media are not judged with the same eye. When other campus media point to similar faults or weaknesses in our student leaders, that information is afforded an air of legitimacy that Surface, because of its political stance, is denied.

It isn't surprising that Surface will publish again close to the Alma Mater Society election. With few distinguishing features to separate the candidates, taking a stand on Surface—expressing support or otherwise—may seem to some candidates to be another form of political suicide. However, respect for both the candidates and the election process would increase manifold if real platforms were actually put forward.

One team mentioned Surface—but they also mentioned restrictions on content. We suspect that Queen's might be more open-minded than this. Surface's referendum defeat was based on a funding question and a leaflet containing one of last year's most controversial articles.

The narrow defeat indicates that many more students see the need for Surface than Andrew Dick and Darren Littlejohn would have you believe.

Not only did the referendum fail to assess this need, a referendum is in itself an inappropriate method of determining the worth of something geared toward providing a minority voice.

When Surface hits the streets, Queen's can expect anger and intensity. And from Queen's, Surface should expect open-mindedness and a willingness to be challenged and educated. Let's hope Surface is not disappointed.

The Gloom and the Glory

The Gloom

- Once again, as was the case last year, Alma Mater Society election open forums are horrendously underattended. We cannot blame the students—they know that they will only hear minimal variety on minimal issues that interest them minimally. Once again candidates are offering empty promises that do little to spur debate and lie in realms the average student cannot question. If candidates provided well-thought platforms and policy statements outlining their views on wider issues or questions, then perhaps students would attend these forums and ask questions of their own. Then students could feel secure in electing a student government whose values and goals they actually understand.

- The City of Kingston has failed to show a commitment to accessibility by not clearing streets and sidewalks in many parts of the city. The snow build-up makes walking difficult for all, impossible for those who are physically challenged. The failure to remove snow also created an expensive flooding problem last week when the temperature rose above zero degrees Celsius. The water and ice forced street closings and numerous accidents. Despite financial concerns, the City of Kingston should be less money-conscious and more committed to accessibility.

The Glory

- The freedom to choose rental property in Kingston remains alive now that the Phase II housing-by-law has been temporarily set aside. The Kingston Planning Committee's by-law proposal calls for a series of zoning changes which will include zoning rental properties specifically for students. Seen by many as an attempt to restrict freedom, Phase II will be resurrected on May 1, 1994 if an acceptable alternative to the rental housing issue is not proposed. This is an excellent opportunity to ensure that students are able to choose where they want to live.

- The creation of a Crisis Assault Response Team illustrates that safety on campus remains a priority for the Alma Mater Society. The Campus Security Advisory Committee recognized the need for a response team last fall and AMS Vice-President (University Affairs), Todd Minerson hopes to have the program fully operational by next fall. The AMS and the Campus Security committee should be congratulated for the steps taken to ensure the safety of the victims of campus crime.

- Queen's continues to illustrate athletic excellence. The Queen's men's volleyball team under coach Brenda Willis is ranked tenth in the country. This is the first time the team has been in the top 10 in Canada. Individual honours go to many Golden Gaels athletes including Steve Fruitman, ranked number one in Canada for shotput, and Dave Smart who has been recognized as the fourth best basketball player in the country. Congratulations to them and all Queen's athletes who are unfortunately too numerous to mention.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

QSCSG CLARIFIED

THE EDITOR.
The Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG) is comprised of the Lesbian and Gay Association (LGA), the Queen's Women's Centre (QWC), the Birth Control Centre (BCC) and Telephone Aid Line Kingston (TALK). Each December an evaluation of the two QSCSG coordinators is conducted by representatives from each of the member groups and the Alma Mater Society Vice-President (University Affairs).

We are writing in order to clarify any misperceptions that may have arisen within the Queen's community regarding the evaluation of Julia Lipinska as QSCSG coordinator. It is unfortunate that the evaluation process, although carried out to the best of our abilities, was unusually lengthy. As a result, tension was created within the QSCSG Board and undue stress was placed on Ms. Lipinska. No charges of abuse or harassment have been or ever were brought against Ms. Lipinska by the QSCSG Board. We would like to express our full confidence in Ms. Lipinska's ability to successfully complete her term as QSCSG coordinator. We feel a new, positive sense of unity and commitment within the QSCSG Board and are looking forward to continuing to serve the Queen's community.

—NOEL ROADY (LGA), LAURA MCKAY (QWC), CANDICE RIDEOUT (TALK), HARTHA BERNARD & JESSICA GOLDBERG (BCC), TODD MINERSON (AMS)

RED RESPONDS

THE EDITOR.

On Friday, Jan. 21, an editorial appeared in The Journal titled "Social Justice Or Prejudice?" The editorial reported that former Black Panther party member Jamil Al-Amin made a homophobic comment [during his speech of Jan. 15]. The editorial asked, "Should we be surprised that the Queen's Black History Collective and the Human Rights Office co-sponsored someone with this message?" We are told that the answer to both these questions is "no."

I agree that homophobic statements are not surprising from spokespersons of organized religions and I also believe this hatred should be condemned. However, I disagree with the suggestion that the Queen's Black History Collective and the Human Rights Office consciously supported a homophobic message.

Both aforementioned parties did co-sponsor the speaker but could not have known he would make the comments he did. We apologize for any misunderstandings that have occurred.

Also, I have serious difficulties with the idea that "if a white spokesperson had come...selling a homophobic message...we would mercilessly condemn this...speaker...but in the case of an Islamic speaker we do not." What is behind this sort of claim? Although the editorial is right to point out that the white spokesperson has not suffered from the racism in society that Al-Amin has, the editorial's overall message seems to be that whites get condemned for racism, sexism, and homophobia, while minorities do not. Again, no support is offered for this claim.

There is a cartoon accompanying the editorial which portrays a Jew hitting an ethnic minority member who is hitting a feminist who is throwing a brick at a gay man who is punching a Muslim who is hitting the Jew (all in a circle). Indeed, the editorial argues that we should all learn that "minority does not mean prejudice-free." Well, minority does not mean prejudiced either (as your cartoon clearly suggests).

Instead of trying to claim that whites get blamed for discrimination and minorities don't, The Journal's Editorial board would do well to write a few editorials or articles on, for instance, systemic racism at Queen's. Some ideas: Why are our courses so Eurocentric? Why is our faculty so racially homogeneous? Why are our students so racially homogeneous? What can be done to encourage minorities to come to Queen's? In short, why is this institution so nonreflective of society?

—RAVI JAIN
ARTS '95
CO-ORDINATOR, AMS COMMITTEE AGAINST RACISM AND ETHNIC DISCRIMINATION

Eds Note: In no way did the Editorial board mean to suggest the Queen's Black History Collective or the Human Rights Office consciously supported a homo-

SLEEPING WITH THE ENEMY?

THE EDITOR.

As a no doubt emotionally stunted heterosexual male, I was deeply aggrieved by the "Third Text"'s shallow treatment of my kind ("Straight men lacking something," Jan. 21).

In unilaterally dismissing the majority of straight men as insensitive neanderthals unfortunately afflicted with a biologic "lack" of something, the author does much to discredit himself and his community. Such a strategy is analogous to my community characterizing all gay men as oversexed, HIV-positive, effeminate interior decorators or all lesbians as misanthropic, ball-busting dykes. Indeed, stereotypes exist because they have at least a loose basis in fact, but in reality human beings—straight, gay, or bisexual, comprise a far more diverse bunch than our political ideologies often permit us to admit.

With respect to the issue of biological determinism, I should inform the author that some conservative thinkers (of which I am not one) compelling argue that homosexuality is a psychosocial aberration that renders the "sufferer" unable to engage in an egosyntonic (psychologically pleasant) fashion in the "normal" courtship and mating behaviour with the opposite sex so necessary for the natural perpetuation of the species. In other words, I am certain that some heterosexuals may employ a similarly flawed, closed-minded logic to conclude that gays, lesbians, and bisexuals are "lacking something."

People such as the author genuinely wish for a new world order wherein gender, race, religious creed, sexual orientation, and socioeconomic status actually enhance the diversity of human experience rather than contribute to discrimination and injustice. However, in assaulting us with their views, such individuals often employ the same weapons of bigotry, propaganda, and reckless stereotyping used by their oppressors.

—LES WRIGHT, MD
INTERN, DEPT. OF PSYCHIATRY

GLASS HOUSES

THE EDITOR.
Re Joey de Villa's piece "Raising Cain" (Jan. 25), which was hyper-critical of Steve Cain's re-

talking

The AMS elections are as important to me as...

H E A D S

"A bicycle is to a fish."
—TERRY CHADWICK
ARTS '95

"Another Leon's one cent event."
—DENNIS KIM
ARTS '95

"Buffalo being in its fourth Superbowl."
—MALCOLM BERRY
ARTS '95

"The flood in our apartment."
—MARCIA OTAZO COMM '95, CECILIE MONNET COMM EXCH '95

PHOTOS BY TRICIA BAUMAN

Last week's Third Text piece was thus a major disappointment. It must be quite traumatic for revolutionaries to discover that one of their comrades is, at least in the expression of his views, is actually sleeping with the enemy.

—LES WRIGHT, MD
INTERN, DEPT. OF PSYCHIATRY

view of the Doughboys (Jan. 21). The decision to print a mean-spirited, biting and vengeful half-page tirade written by an editor criticizing the work of a contributor leaves you wondering how much The Journal values the efforts of its volunteers. So much for trying to be a little unorthodox, Steve. As for de Villa accusing Cain of being a wanker, well, Joey should know that people in glass houses should not throw stones.

—ROB NICOL ARTS '93
QUEEN'S JOURNAL EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, 1992-93

GLASS HOUSES

THE EDITOR.
Re Joey de Villa's piece "Raising Cain" (Jan. 25), which was hyper-critical of Steve Cain's re-

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Real Live Slacker

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall	ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Arlenne Down
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland	ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT Ryan P. Chen
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey deVilla	Slan Beddoe-Stephens
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Markka Glickman	ASSISTANT SPORTS Justin McKellar
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC./PACKAGE EDITOR Joey deVilla	ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yarnell
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Fursey	LITERARY LAPSUS EDITOR Hegan Nichols	ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSUS Tim Mitchell
FEATURES EDITOR Allan Masemann	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder
	Brock Marland
	Lori Thorlakson

BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie	BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Bewley
ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Hamer
SALES REPRESENTATIVE Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER Alex Bewley

CONTRIBUTORS

Tricia Bauman, Jason D. Bennett, Dave Coleman, Brent Davis, Maron Davison, Deloelco, Frank Dixon, Melanie Graham, Geoff Hamilton, Elizabeth Ireland, Tara Lynn Keats, Melissa Mazar, Mike S. McWilliams, Andre Nowakowski, Geoff Owen, Afzar Qadir, Tanis Robinson Ross, Thomson, Katie Triggs, Andrew Turner, David Ullmann, Michael Wiercinski

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, February 1, 1994 • Issue 28 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Esri Street, Kingston K7L 1X2 Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728 Internet: journal@uqcn.queensu.ca

Circulation 10,000
Issue 29 will be published on Friday, February 4, 1994.

OPEN FORUM

KISMET DIRECTOR RESPONDS

THE EDITOR,

I am writing in response to Jackie Davies' comments about Kismet published in the Journal on Jan. 21.

I would first of all like to thank Ms. Davies both for the searing questions which she poses and for the opportunity which her letter affords for meaningful response. She is quite right to observe that my features article [Jan. 14] does not defend Kismet with compelling arguments in its favour or evaluate the success of Queen's Musical Theatre's production. The fact is, however, that this was not the purpose of the article. My intention was simply to discuss the problematic of dramatic representation and to initiate debate.

My goal in divesting Kismet of inflammatory material was not merely to keep out of hot water politically, but to permit the positive qualities of the musical to shine through. In my opinion, the racist and sexist elements in Kismet are virtually all cosmetic—superficial blemishes rather than deep-seated cancers. The feedback I have received in the form of comments and reviews indicates that the production manages to be both broadly entertaining and appropriate for a university audience. Even Muslim students whom Ms. Davies is certain will be offended have expressed their enjoyment of the show.

Ms. Davies maintains that I "ought to be a little more up front in [my] response to potential criticism" of the production. Let me say that I have no problem accepting critical evaluation of Kismet; in fact, I welcome it. The point is that it is the production, not the project, which needs to be evaluated. It is evident from Ms. Davies' remarks that, at the time of writing, she had neither seen our show nor, given her slight regard for musicals, had any intention of doing so. Her negative evaluation appears to have been based on seeing the poster design. Surely this is an inadequate basis for criticism.

As to my alleged "disingenuous defensiveness," in ending my article with a series of rhetorical questions, all I can say is it was not my intention to stigmatize detractors of the show as Politically Correct anti-Art vigilantes. Again, my avowed purpose was to raise awareness, outline the issues, and generate vigorous dialogue and debate. It seems to me that this is precisely what has ensued in The Journal and elsewhere. Kismet has proved to be an appropriate choice for a university community whose mandate is to apply critical consciousness to all areas of life and experience.

While I was gratified by David Leach's laudatory review in the Journal, [Jan. 21] I cannot agree with his statement that Kismet is "entertainment pure and simple." Like Ms. Davies, I don't believe any such thing exists. Works of art must always be contextualized and held accountable for even their unconscious political implications. I hope those of you who saw the production did not "leave your political baggage [or your brains] at the door." If you did, you may have missed out on the most valuable aspect of the experience. —KEN JACOBSEN, PhD ENGLISH

The Opinions editor encourages all members of the Queen's community to express their viewpoints on any given subject. The Opinions section strives to present all sides of an issue fairly and equally. Letters that are deemed hateful or libelous (as defined by the Ontario Human Rights Code) towards any individual will not be printed. Letters MUST be under 500 words and MUST be accompanied by the author's name, faculty and year (if applicable), phone number, and signature. The deadline for letters is Sunday for Tuesday issues and Wednesday for Friday issues. The Journal reserves the right to refuse and/or edit all submissions. Confidentiality may be available upon request. The Opinions section is a forum for your ideas don't miss the opportunity to express them.

Therefore I tell you, do not worry about your life, what you will eat or what you will drink, or about your body, what you will wear. Is not life more than food, and the body more than clothing? Look at the birds of the air, they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not of more value than they? And can any of you by worrying add a single hour to your span of life? And why do you worry about clothing? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they neither toil nor spin, yet I tell you, even Solomon in all his glory was not clothed like one of these.

St. Matt. 6:25-29

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00), and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

the QEA presents the ODDS with RHYMES WITH ORANGE WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2ND AT ALFIE'S

THE ALBUM 'BEDBUGS' ON SALE THIS WEEK ONLY CD $14.95 TAPE $9.95 at HOUSE OF SOUNDS, 277 PRINCESS STREET LISTEN TO CFRC 101.9 FM WEDNESDAY 5 PM TO HEAR THE ODDS INTERVIEW

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

THURS. AFTERNOON 4PM LAST ACTION HERO

Can it really be THAT BAD?!

THE QUIET PUB

Wanna Talk? QP! Come Hear...

UPSTAIRS JDUC * 545-2740

FRIDAY AFTERNOON LIVE! CHRIS BORTH and KRISTEN PICKERSELL 4 to 8pm

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

THE PUB PAGE

This Saturday, we're giving away tickets to FOOL

MOSH in the MUSH!

Identify the 10 songs in our mystery song scramble and you can win one of 3 pairs of tickets to their Toronto Reading Week show! Bonus prizes too! UNFKNBVLVL!

WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 2nd FRIDAY FEBRUARY 4th

RHYMES WITH ORANGE AND THE ODDS

SHE STOLE MY BEER

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

LITERARY LAPSES

The Reading Room

At the base of a cliff
When the tide is out
Mysterious formations Mischievously await their next meal.

Potholes to fit a car
Bathbubs to fit a family
Ancient craters and Wanderers' surprise.

Their darting eyes
they exercise
while reading books that moralize and poems prized
and plots disguised in novel guise
it's no surprise
with girls and guys looks analyze and some despise
some sympathize
but in the end all compromise within the room they realize the purpose of their empty lives to theorize
with words of size
until the day that each one dies.

Ross Thomson

She went splashing in Caught unaware Laughter bellowed
Ringing still Across a thousand waves and miles of land.

Hearts of Lace

An imagination shared
Another born
A storybook opened a chapter begun

We will run filtered
Through ultraviolet
Lace hearts
Sheltering the rain
And waterfalls,
Dying as our once
Tortured ancestor
Did,
On the amber mountainside

As memories twirl
and pirouette dancing on at our girlhood
dancer's ledge.

Barefooted,
Laughter flows
Through like
Lost innocence.
Water, cold and
Wet and Green
Infiltrates
Pores in hot
Skin,
Seeking dynamic
Gentleness
In hearts of Lace.

Martin Davison

Love Dance Dizzy Bungs

The tummy dancer is whirling,
twirling in its TuTu,
to titter forth,
to splash back,
in the pit of me,
...like a conversation between the beats of my excited pulse,
Whenever I see you.

Like a love dance,
I feel my eyes spark when your twinklers hit me,
and then dart to
shuffling shoes.
Flying sparks hint just the glimmers, glimmers of my aching, yearning heart to know you
and for you to know me because your bright eyes and friendly smile
make me WEAK
with Tweaks of admiration
and
Streaks of heart-heat.
Your scruffy hair, your unshaven flair, your despair.
I'm tempted by your skeletons and wish to be your pleasure.

In the meantime, the tummy dancer whirls on,
holding the control for RAPTURE dynamic, prepared to explode at your signal and turn all my glimmers to one intense sunny glare.

Katie Triggs

Melissa Mozar

5 minutes before bed a look at what Queen's reads

ROB MACDOUGALL
CO-EDITOR OF GOLDEN WORDS

Currently reading

The Van
Roddy Doyle

"[It is] the third book in the same series as The Commitments... They're not deep or anything like that, but I can read one in about a week, and they're a hell of a lot of fun. It's all working class Dublin. He's great with dialogue, you can hear all the thick accents. They're funny books -- sad in parts too, but a lot of fun."

Lonesome Dove
Larry McMurtry

"I haven't totally gotten into Lonesome Dove yet. It's a Thick American Novel of the West -- one of those great fat books with eight hundred characters. People tell me it's good, and when I have a spare month, I'll probably get a lot out of it."

Some Favourites

Horror stories by H.P. Lovecraft, as well as novels and short stories by John Sayles. "[Sayles] directed The Brother From Another Planet and a bunch of weird movies like that. He's written a bunch of funny, strange books about America."

KATHERINE PHILLIPS
AMS PRESIDENT

Currently Reading

Rising Sun
Michael Crichton

"I like a little light reading. [With Rising Sun] you know there will be more twists and turns, but you don't know what those twists and turns will be."

A Favourite

Pillars of the Earth
Ken Follet

"The book takes place over a couple of centuries, around the eleventh century. It is about this monastery that's building a cathedral, but it is also about where a person stood in society -- where women stood in society. What I find amazing about this kind of book is seeing the evolution of human thought. How on earth could they build cathedrals in the eleventh century? You get to look into an architect's mind."

BUDGET CAR & TRUCK RENTAL

Reading Week Rate Packages

CALL US NOW. WE HAVE GREAT DEALS ON VANS, JEEPS, AND CARS WITH SPECIAL RATES FOR QUEEN'S READING WEEK.

THE FIRST 10 PEOPLE TO RESERVE EITHER A MINIVAN OR JEEP WILL RECEIVE AN ADDITIONAL 1,000 FREE KMS. SO MAKE THAT RESERVATION TODAY !!

Call Budget Rent A Car at 546-3231 Budget This is a Limited Time Offer!

Journal story contest coming soon!

Planning a trip?

Whether you're getting away for a week in the sun, or preparing for the backpacking adventure of your life, we have the books you need. Come in and browse through our extensive Travel Section before you go!

If you can't find the book you're looking for on our shelves, ask about our free Special Order Service.

Printed Passage Books Ltd.
50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

FOR QUEEN'S ONLY THE BEST TUXEDO DEAL IS

$69

NO EXTRA CHARGES

Choose from our entire selection. Everything is $69 plus taxes.

NO EXTRA CHARGES!
FREE FASHION PANTS
FREE VESTS
FREE SHOES

All you need is a $20 deposit
WE BEAT EVERY COMPETITORS PRICES
Available only at TUXEDO TOWN KINGSTON
One block up from the Capital Theatre with CAREER GIRL

15% OFF ALL DRYCLEANING*

SUITS 2PC	PANTS	DRESSES (PLAIN)	BLouses
Reg. $8.75 Now $7.45	Reg. $4.25 Sale $3.60	Reg. $8.50 Sale $7.20	Reg. $3.50 Sale $2.99

TRY OUR WASH, DRY & FOLD SERVICE - SAME DAY (IN BEFORE 10 AM)

Clip & present coupon at: Scrubbies At the Bistro
Licensed Under the L.L.B.O.

Laundromat, Billiards, Arcade, Bar
IF YOUR NOT SCRUBBIN' IT - YOUR NOT CLEANIN' IT

471 Princess Street (at University)
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1C3
Phone: (613) 548-4916
Fax: (613) 549-3069

* Drycleaning must be prepaid. Sale ends 15-02-94

Don't Miss Our 50% SALE!

Fabulous Fall & Winter Clothing, Selected Jewellery, Hosiery, Belts, Gloves

New Spring Comrags Has Already Arrived!

326 King St. E • 546-6200

FEBRUARY SALE

ALL ATHLETIC FOOTWEAR AND CLOTHING

10-50% OFF

Runners' Choice

260 Princess Street 542-2410

THE ROAD TO THE 1993-1994 OWIAA Basketball Championship

Be part of the action...follow the Gaels in their quest to be a part of the Championship hosted by Queen's March 4-6

Sat., Feb. 5 @ 6pm
Queen's vs Ryerson

Subway Noise-Maker Night*

How much noise can you make for prizes?

Plus... Our regular feature Halftime Long Shot for $5000

One lucky fan will be randomly drawn to shoot for the cash. Draw tickets are $1. Featured at all women's games this season.

* Courtesy of Subway, 187 Princess St., Downtown

SPORTS

Two in a row for hockey Gaels

Andrew Clark goes for the goal as the Redmen wallow in defeat.

DAVE DELCLOO

BY ANDREW TURNER AND ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Over the weekend, the men's hockey Gaels extended their home winning streak to a modest two games with a victory over the visiting McGill Redmen 3-2. The Gaels seem to be fine-tuning their play as they head into the playoff drive.

Once again, goalie Bill Landry played an exceptionally strong game keeping the Gaels in the game for the first 30 minutes. The Gaels came out rather slowly with few opportunities to get on the scoreboard. At the other end of the ice, Landry made some notable saves on the quick McGill forwards.

In fact, the only excitement offensively for the Gaels was a rocking open-ice hit by defencemen Mike Longo that sent the helpless Redman on his backside. This hit seemed to wake some of the drowsy crowd to attention. Nevertheless, after twenty minutes the score was 0-0.

The second period started off in similar fashion to the opening period with Landry stopping every shot the Redmen could deliver. In particular, he was extremely sharp on a McGill breakaway that saw Landry stack the pads to close the five-hole on the McGill attacker.

The fans were treated to some humour in the second period as the whistle called the play dead when the puck was lost. Apparently, the puck had found its way up the pants of a McGill player. After shaking his rump for a few

GAELS CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

FRANK & EARNEST

Women's hockey slowly gaining respect

BY FRANK DIXON

There was one tradition kept alive at the second annual Cross-Border hockey challenge held two weekends ago at Queen's. The event was held during the coldest weather of the winter. Here's a suggestion for Queen's administration: Take the money earmarked for that new library and use it for the world's first retractable domed biosphere university!

This unique event pitted three Canadian women's university teams in a round-robin format against three American schools. Last year, the Americans won all but one game, but this year the Canadians, helped significantly by the participation of the University of Toronto Lady Blues, exactly reversed the tables, winning all but one game. Toronto has been perennial OWIAA champions for the last decade.

Queen's Golden Gaels got some much-needed scoring and managed to win all three games, losing a shutout in the first game only in the last two minutes. That would have been netminder Catherine Drimmel's first varsity whitewash.

Perhaps the most impressive player for Queen's, if not for the entire tournament, was defender Stacey Harvey, who captains the Gaels. It is perhaps only a slight exaggeration to say that Harvey's play is reminiscent of another Harvey: Doug Harvey, the Hall-of-Fame defenceman with Montreal Canadiens. Stacey can do whatever the situation requires, be it a hard shot from the point, a rush up ice, a spinnerama move to avoid a forechecker, or a pinpoint pass to a teammate. The organizer and inventor of the Cross-Border challenge, Queen's OWIAA coordinator Janean Sargeant, is already planning next year's event. "The strong American schools set their schedules so far in advance, it's difficult to know when they'll be available for a tournament like this," she said. "We want to attract the best possible competition."

The OWIAA league will be expanding from four to six teams next season, according to Sargeant. "Windsor and Laurier will be joining," she explained. "With four teams, we were only one defection away from losing the league."

That was a real possibility last fall when U of T announced cancellation of several varsity teams. Blues' football, one of the sports which would go, got all the publicity when they saved their team with alumni money and won the Vanier Cup. But women's hockey was supposed to get the axe as well, even though the Lady Blues were one of the most successful teams anywhere. They too banded together and raised enough outside money to operate this season.

Toronto has been a powerhouse in the OWIAA for 20 years. The legitimate question arises: why isn't women's hockey a CIAU sport? It is our national game, after all.

One player on the Toronto roster is already well-known. Justine Blaney made national headlines as a 12-year-old in the early 1980's when she campaigned successfully to be allowed to play on a boys' team.

Sargeant's pivotal role in organizing the Cross-Border challenge continues a tradition of Queen's leadership in hockey stretching back over a century. The Queen's-RMC series dates from 1886, and, now renewed with the annual Carr-Harris Cup, is the world's oldest hockey rivalry. In 1899, nearly 20 years before the formation of the NHL, Queen's challenged the Montreal Shamrocks for the Stanley Cup. Three years later, the school gave the Queen's Cup for annual competition in the Ontario University league. During the 1920's, a Queen's woman player wore a goalie mask in a Montreal game, more than 30 years before Jacques Plante introduced it into the NHL.

According to Ed Deans, Queen's events supervisor, there will be three women playing in this weekend's Historic Hockey series between teams from Queen's, RMC and the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, scheduled for frozen Kingston harbour using antique equipment.

The best-known woman player is goalie Manon Rheume. She began the pre-season with the NHL's Tampa Bay Lightning, played with the Atlanta Knights of the International League for awhile, and is presently the third-string goalie for the Knoxville Cherokees of the East Coast Hockey League. Rheume smartly turned down $50,000 to pose for Playboy. She has already written her autobiography—Manon: Alone in Front of the Net—at age 21. Rheume has been making a lot of money in endorsements for companies like Reebok, and recently made the Canadian team bound for the women's world championship in April at Lake Placid, N.Y. Rheume shared netminding duties in 1992 when Canada romped through the world championship in Finland.

Women's hockey will be a medal sport in the 1998 Nagano Olympics. There, on a world stage, people will see that women can play hockey very well. Granted, there is less hitting than the men's game, and the speed is slower. But strategic play, athleticism, intensity and the will to win are every bit as much a part of the women's game.

Gender equality in sports?

BY JASON D. BENNETT

Manon Rheume may have made it in the big leagues, but as far as gender equality in sports is concerned her story remains the glaring exception. According to a panel of notable sports experts called together by the Queen's Women's Issues Committee last Thursday, gender inequality at both the amateur and professional levels persists. However, panelists urged that the gender gap in sports often exists for good reason.

Brenda Willis, head coach of the Queen's Men's Volleyball Team, began the discussion by defining equality as the opportunity to compete or coach according to merit and free from unnecessary obstacles predicated by gender.

As a female head coach and the only woman to coach at the inter-provincial level, Willis is a rarity in CIAU athletics and a model barrier-breaker in Canadian sport. Willis admits that given the obvious physiological differences between men and women, and the fact that sport is dominated by a market mechanism which favours the highest possible intensity and quality of play, female events play second fiddle to men's games. Such factors, however, should not be used to justify the exclusion of female athletes and administrators where competence and qualifications demand their inclusion.

Brenda Willis BRENT DAVIS

Dr. Geoff Smith, professor of history at Queen's, echoed these sentiments by insisting that the profitability of a sport determines the amount of media coverage and financial resources it will receive. Dr. Smith pointed to the capitalist ethic as the primary cause of inequality between men's and women's sport—particularly in the professional ranks where television ratings determine who will be covered and in what sports. Despite the fact that women's tennis, alpine skiing and golf attract large viewing audiences, male-dominated sports such as football, hockey, baseball and basketball predominate the airwaves because of their profitability.

Claude Scillely of the Whig Standard also supported the profit-motive explanation for gender inequality in sport, but found that at the amateur level where money is not such an issue a greater degree of equality can be found. At the high school, collegiate and olympic levels men's and women's athletics receive a relatively equal amount of resources, coverage, and spectators. Scillely, a Queen's Commerce graduate, esteems the amateur game for its purity and commitment to competition itself. Extending this approach, both Scillely and Willis viewed absolute gender equality as perhaps an undesirable threat to the integrity and purity of sports which are not motivated by profit.

The panel agreed that gender equality in sports in terms of financial resources and media coverage is perhaps unrealistic in today's marketplace, but this does not mean that women should be prevented from competing or coaching at a level for which they are suited. The panel made it clear that women are socialized from an early age not to enter male-dominated realms, and when they do they are often met with considerable opposition, particularly at the elite levels. Absolute, numerical gender equality may not be realistic, but the right to participate in the sporting world, according to merit and regardless of sex, is something which is not only realistic, but necessary.

BILLBOARD

THIS MONTH IN THE JDUC

- Tue, Feb 1, 2:00pm
AMS, Executive Elections Forum Lower Ceilidh
- Tue, Feb 1 - Fri, Feb 4
Campus Crusade for Christ, Display Lower/Upper Ceilidh
- Tue, Feb 1 - Fri, Feb 4
Queen's Development and Solidarity Network, Awareness Week Lower Ceilidh
- Wed, Feb 2 - Thu, Feb 3
Queen's University Muslim Student Association, Display Lower Ceilidh
- Fri, Feb 4
ASUS, Elections Open Forum Lower Ceilidh
- Mon, Feb 7 - Fri, Feb 11
Public Display of Architects' Models for Biosciences Building John Orr Room
- Mon, Feb 7 - Fri, Feb 11
Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations, ASEAN Week Wallace Hall
- Tue, Feb 8
Student Team on Alumni Relations, Senior Bingo Lower Ceilidh
- Tue, Feb 8 - Wed, Feb 9
AMS Committee on Development Issues, Development Week Upper Ceilidh

- Tue, Feb 8, 6:00 - 11:00pm
South Africa Solidarity Group, Panel Discussion Lower Ceilidh
- Wed, Feb 9 - Fri, Feb 11
ASUS, Poster Sale Lower Ceilidh
- Thu, Feb 10 - Fri, Feb 11
Queen's Black History Collective, Display Upper Ceilidh
- Mon, Feb 28
ASUS, Artfest begins! Ceilidh/McLaughlin Room/John Orr Room
- Mon, Feb 28
AMS United Way Committee, Sale Upper Ceilidh

REGULAR MEETINGS

- Mon - Thu, 12:45pm - 2:00pm
QUMSA, Prayer Third Floor Common Room
- Tue, 8:00pm
International Socialists Third Floor Common Room
- Wed, 7:00pm - 11:00pm (Feb 2 and 16 only)
AMS Coffeehouse Lower Ceilidh
- Fri, 12:45 - 2:00pm
JUMA Prayer McLaughlin Room

JDUC PROGRAM COMMITTEE

GREAT DEBATES

Debates on campus issues, organized in collaboration with the Queen's Debating Union.

This house believes that Surface should resurface.

Wed, Feb 16, 8:00pm Wallace Hall

BUSKING OUT

Buskers of Queen's... get in the act for our second annual spring festival, March 21 - 25.

Register now in JDUC general office.

Prizes for best performances. Performers will be asked to donate proceeds to a local charity.

Gaels win thriller over Blues

BY GEOFF OWEN

The men's basketball team emerged victorious on Friday evening in a back-and-forth affair that came down to the final seconds. The Gaels (1-3) defeated the U of T Blues 67-64 thanks to a Wyeth Clarkson three point shot with ten seconds left.

Early on, things looked grim for the Gaels as they fell behind 10-4, compliments of the Blues' own ability to sink the three. For the opening ten minutes the Blues possessed more toughness inside and greater touch from the perimeter. But the Gaels quickly increased their intensity at both ends of the court and pulled ahead 13-12 at the 8:33 mark of the first half. The two teams remained within four points of one another for much of the game's first three quarters, except for one fleeting moment when Queen's went up 39-34 shortly after half-time.

The Gaels were lead throughout the game by the country's fourth best player, guard Dave Smart. Smart hit his jumper all night long to keep the game close. And then when the Blues went up by nine in the last ten minutes, Smart hit many clutch free throws to narrow the margin — setting up Clarkson's game winner. Like many great athletes, Smart is talented, but more importantly to his team, he has a presence that elevates the team's level of play and earns respect from his opponents.

As time ticked away, the Gaels moved within two and then kicked the ball out to Clarkson who, in a very Paxson-esque manner, calmly sunk the shot — hitting only the bottom of the mesh. Some tough defense and two late free throws in the final seconds preserved the victory for Queen's. There was something special about this victory for Queen's as they often appeared over-matched by the Blues. An awful lot of heart and guts gave Queen's the opportunity for the win and, when it counted most, Clarkson delivered.

This victory, coming on the heels of a narrow defeat to first place Laurentian, is exactly what the Gaels need to challenge for first in the OUA's East Division.

Ice water veins: With one second on the clock, Wyeth Clarkson launches the first of two successful free throws, sealing the Gaels' 67-64 win over Toronto.

DAVE DELCLOO

Women's basketball split weekend games

BY FRANK DIXON

(TORONTO) The Queen's women's basketball Gaels (2-3) snapped a three-game losing streak on Saturday with a conquencing 88-67 victory over the Ryerson Lady Rams in Toronto. The win followed a hard-fought 65-58 loss to the Toronto Lady Blues in Bartlett Gym the previous evening.

KINGSTON CHAPTER HEBREW UNIVERSITY SCHOLARSHIP

The Kingston Chapter of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University offers a scholarship of $1000 for the academic year 1994-95 to a student who has been accepted for study at the Hebrew University. The scholarship will be awarded to an individual on the basis of academic excellence/financial need. Applicants should submit a complete curriculum vitae and transcripts of their school or university records. The scholarship is eligible to any student at Queen's University, or a student at any other Canadian university whose family reside in Kingston, or to any Kingston high school graduate planning to attend the Hebrew University.

Applications will be received by the:

Scholarship Committee
77 Kensington Avenue
Kingston, K7L 4B4

Up to May 31, 1994. Candidates will be informed by June 30, 1994

GAELS 88, RYERSON 67

This high-scoring, freewheeling game saw the Gaels' strongest basketball since November. Scoring had been a problem for Queen's in recent encounters, but not on this night, as they convincingly outplayed the Lady Rams from start to finish.

Veteran Gaels' forward Jenny Laughton came up with a career-best performance of 28 points and 7 rebounds, good for Player-of-the-Game honours. Laughton, playing with increased confidence, is currently contributing the best ball of her career, and this couldn't come at a better time for the injury-riddled Gaels. She caused havoc with baseline dribble drives, put-backs from offensive rebounds, and 15-footers finding nothing but net.

Star Queen's forward Vicki Wilson wound up leading her team in both scoring and rebounding, with 32 points (including 12 of 13 from the line) and 12 rebounds. Wilson was especially deadly early in the game, killing the Lady Rams with slick moves off clever inside feeds in the low post. She currently averages 21.4 points per game to lead the OWIAA, and surpassed the 700 mark in OW career points,

Gaels defeated 87-77

Ryerson Rams mount huge comeback

BY FRANK DIXON

(TORONTO) We've seen this movie before. Gaels play like Chicago Bulls for 10 or 15 minutes, build impressive lead or overcome deficit, then revert to Dallas Mavericks for the rest of the game. That was more or less the gist of Saturday's 87-77 setback in Hogtown at the hands of the Ryerson Rams. The game featured two of the country's top players: Dave Smart of Queen's and Alex Beason of Ryerson.

"Silence of the Rams" could have described Ryerson's play in the early part of this game, as the Gaels built a 42-26 lead with 2:30 left in the first half. The Rams have tremendous individual talent, but were playing like individuals rather than as a team. Queen's took full advantage, as Dave Smart, Wyeth Clarkson and Sean Smith each hit several open treys. The Gaels played inspired defense and battled fiercely for rebounds. Poor conversion off worst shot selection by the Rams also helped Queen's.

But the Rams, now 4-2, stiffened their defense and rediscovered their team concept before the half, beginning a 36-11 run which would see them take the lead for good. Ryerson forward Alex Beason, averaging a CIAU-leading 35 points per game, began to dominate the same way he has against rivals all year. He gave the Rams a 52-51 edge they would never lose with 11:23 left when he hit a 15' turnaround jumper. The problem with the 67 Beason is that he's too quick and acrobatic for the Gaels' big men, and too big for the Gaels' quick players. It seems nobody in the country can guard this Scottie Pippen-type force. Beason finished with 36 points and 10 rebounds on the night. A complete player who can score inside and outside, draw the foul and sink the free throw, control the glass, run the floor, and pass to the open man, Beason could wind up playing professionally somewhere, perhaps in Europe.

Rams' forward Ainsworth Stou-0-0-0-0-0-0-wly, Ryerson's male Athlete-of-the-Year in 1993, also made a solid contribution with 15 points.

Queen's refused to quit, but shot themselves in the foot by failing to convert several key free throws early in the second half. Smart found himself receiving close attention, but repeatedly cut towards the middle to cleverly draw fouls. Clarkson was having another good game, but was in foul trouble, and when he finally fouled out with 1:08 left, the Gaels' last chance was gone.

Smart, last year's CIAU scoring leader, hit 29 points and grabbed 4 rebounds to lead Queen's. He currently averages 27.4 points per game, good for second in the OUA, and has moved into fourth place on the all-time Gaels' scoring list with 759 points. Clarkson, averaging just under 20 points a game, continued his tremendous play, hitting 21 points on 9-for-16 shooting. The leaner and the suspension shot are Clarkson's favourites, and his outside shooting touch has helped the Gaels. Smith (9 points, 4 boards), Rich Cook (4 points, 5 boards), Mike Rus-citi (5 points, 4 boards), and Cor-win Cambray (4 points) each made key Gael contributions.

The Gaels, now 1-4, will get another crack at the Rams this Saturday night in Bartlett Gym (8 p.m.). This rematch is really a must-win if Queen's is to mount a playoff run.

with 17 points and 9 rebounds.

Gaels' head coach Dave Wilson was beaming after his team's tremendous game, and remarked, "We're getting close to where we were last year." Queen's finished 8-4 in league play in '92-'93 and won the OW Consolation title.

TORONTO 65, GAELS 58

Queen's has had several closely-contested games with the University of Toronto Lady Blues in recent seasons. This was another, and once again the Gaels came up just short.

No team has been affected more by the loss of a player than the Lady Blues, who for the first time in five seasons are having to get by without 6'4 National Team centre Denise Scott, currently playing professionally in Europe. Still, Toronto is ranked #3 in the country without her.

Toronto jumped out to an early 27-14 edge, and still led comfortably at the half, 40-29. Vicki Wilson was getting close attention down low from Blues' power forward Justine Ellison, and the Blues were converting Gaels' turnovers into scores.

But Queen's refused to quit and dominated the first five min-

WILSON CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

Cowboys prevail as Bills eat dirt

BY JOEL SUTHERLAND

My sympathies are for all the Buffalo Bills fans. In what was an incredible Super Bowl game for the first time in ten years, Dallas prevailed 30-13 over the Bills. The Cowboys are a team that is unequivocally the best in the NFL.

Their latest campaign started off pretty ugly as their regular season record after two games was 0-2. Holdout running back/wide receiver Emmitt Smith rejoined the team for the third game after settling a contract dispute, and the Cowboys won the next 12 of 14 games to win their division and get a first round playoff bye.

The road to the Bowl consisted of close (over Green Bay) and a rout (over San Fran) and a rematch in the final with Buffalo.

Dallas' victory was not as one-sided as last year and was an incredible game for a change. Buffalo, coming off an 0-3 Super Bowl record, was looking to avenge themselves, but came up short. Dallas, while not on as grand a scale, was looking to vindicate themselves of their early season Emmitt-less loss to Buffalo. Revenge is sweet, especially when it is exacted in the best of settings.

The majority of people were keen on taking the ten point Buffalo advantage, and it seemed like a good deal at kickoff. However, Dallas, from the start of the second half to the end of the game limited the Bills in their scoring, in fact, Buffalo did not score once after half-time.

The first half was a different story, Dallas was down at the half by a score of 13-6 — that spread looked pretty bleak to Dallas fans at halftime. Regardless, turnovers were again the key (there were as many (nine) as in S.B. XVII) as Dallas went on to score 24 points in the second half.

The Bills could have won had they eliminated Murray, Smith and the Cowboys defense. The turning point was undoubtedly the interception and T-D return by Washington early in the second half. Washington, incidentally, played an incredible game — not only taking out Andre Reed for a few plays in the first half, but also preventing the Bills from making many potential gains.

One has to admire the Bills for their courage, their stamina, blah, blah, blah.... The bottom line is that Dallas has repeated and Buffalo has four-peated. Dallas has accomplished what only four other teams (Green Bay, Miami, Pittsburgh (twice), and San Francisco) have done, won the Super Bowl in consecutive years.

Dallas has the opportunity to do what no other team has done — three-peat in the Super Bowl. The road is long and arduous, but Dallas has the tools to visit Disney World for the third time in three years.

[Eds. note: Gigi, tell Wolfe the Bills stink, and you can take that to the bank.]

Bills wrangled by Cowboys

BY JUSTIN MCKELLAR

The Buffalo Bills are four-time losers, which puts them beyond the reach of any other pro sports team who have successively gone to the Big Game without winning once. The baseball fans in Atlanta are wiping the sweat from their brows, the football fans in Denver are renewing their subscriptions to the John Elway Fanzone, and Mitch Williams is cleaning the sweat off the toilet seat.

Buffalo has yet again reinforced their claim to the Butt of the U.S.A. award with their 30-13 Superbowl defeat at the hands of the Dallas Cowboys.

What Happened? The Bills looked strong the first half. Kelly was hitting targets like Lee Harvey Oswald and Thurman Thomas made up for a mid-field fumble with a beautiful touchdown run inside the Dallas ten to send the Bills into 13-6 half-time lead. Then the wheels fell off. Dallas scored two quick touchdowns in the third, one off another Thomas fumble. The Cowboys never looked back.

This puts Jim Kelly in the rather unfortunate company of Fran Tarkenton, former football great and perennial Big Game loser who is now passing his golden years under the tutelage of Personal Power guru Anthony Robbins. The bottom line is simple: the Bills are all washed up.

The Bills may well go down in NFL history as the greatest team dynasty that never won a Superbowl, but is it really their fault? Sure, they lost four in a row, but the Broncos before them lost three, and Cincinnati, New England and Miami each lost one. In fact, the last AFC team to win a Superbowl was the Raiders in '84. Theoretically, AFC teams should have won half of those, but in this case theory takes a bow. Unless you are a strong believer in coincidence, the '94 Bills are just another victim of a stronger NFC team. Nobody can dispute that the Cowboys are a powerhouse. Not only have they won the Superbowl two years running, but they have one of the youngest teams in the league and will be around for a few years yet. All indications point towards a team as dominant as the 49'rs that reigned just a few years ago.

An interesting aspect of the Bills' loss was the conspicuous absence of Thutman Thomas during most of the second half.

Sure, it's a different game. It's not the NFL, and you think the AFC teams would figure it out.

DESKTOP PUBLISHING

Do you have an eye for graphic design?

Come and help out with production at The Journal, and gain experience using professional publishing software.

Sundays and Wednesdays
272 Earl Street 545-2800

Study on the French Riviera

Earn up to one full year transferable Canadian university credits on a Canadian campus near Nice.

The Université canadienne en France offers courses in English or French. No French language skills necessary. Three semesters: Fall (September to December); Winter (January to April) Spring (May to June, six weeks). Federal and Provincial student aid available. In Ontario phone 1-800-461-4030 Outside Ontario collect (705) 673-6513

Oui! Please send more information!

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
Province _____
Postal Code _____
Telephone _____

For more information contact the Université canadienne en France, Laurentian University Sudbury, Ontario P3E 2C6

火鍋已供 泰式潮式

Buffet
Uncle Tong
DOWNTOWN

only Reg. $5.99
LUNCH $4.99

SUPER DINNER
Until Feb. 27

Enjoy our delicacies...
ALL YOU CAN EAT
Seafood Buffet
Lobster-Salmon Steak
Over 60 Items, including...

- Crab Leg Cluster
- Breaded Scallops
- Spiced Squid or Cattlefish
- Prime Rib
- Buttered Salmon Steak
- Breaded Fish
- Black Pepper Steak
- Garlic Baked Mussels

only Reg. $11.99
DINNER $9.99

THE ITEMS ARE SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE. THIS SPECIAL OFFER NOT VALID IN CONJUNCTION WITH OTHER OFFERS.

368 King Street East, at Princess
547-2222

THE BIG
ONE

WINTER CLEARANCE SALE

All Descente Ski Wear
25-50% OFF
All Banff Insulated Jackets
30% OFF
Men's Thinsulate Gloves $14.99 M.S.L. $50.00
Complete Alpine Ski Packages
From $249.99
Complete Cross Country Ski Packages
From $149.99

Every ski, boat, binding and jacket is on sale!

Dave Jones
Sports
86 Princess Street 544-7544

Gaels dump the Redmen

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 15

seconds, the player was able to dislodge the puck from his equipment, as it fell on the ice to the delight of the crowd.

By the midway point of the period the level of play had picked up and there was good end-to-end action. Landry continued his outstanding play by foiling a McGill three-on-one as he slid across the goal and knocked away the centering pass. He then made a great glove side on a blast from just inside the blueline. In large measure, Landry was the reason the two teams were still scoreless after two frames.

Both teams came out in the final period looking for the win. McGill got on the board first at 2:06 in what was a play that took everybody by surprise; a Redmen stepped out from behind the Gaels net and put a backhand past Landry into the lower right corner. But, never say die. Just over a minute later, at 3:28, defenseman Derek Morrin drilled a shot from the top of the right faceoff circle that beat the goalie on the glove side.

As the furious pace continued, the Gaels were able to pull ahead of the boys from McGill. Once again it was Morin from the right side who was the catalyst for the go-ahead goal. From along the boards in the McGill zone he fired a perfect pass over to Robbins in front of the net, who deftly put it in the top lefthand corner.

Before the midway point of the period, the Gaels were leading 3-1 — the result of a great individual effort by Mike Lobinowich. After fighting off his check along the boards with one hand on his stick controlling the puck, Lobinowich made a pass to Robbins in front of the net. Robbins made no mistake as he fired a low shot between the goalie's legs. This was his second goal of the night and proved to be the winner.

The third period saw some vocal support for the Gaels marked by a "Kill McGill" chant.

One fan felt it was necessary to point out that while McGill "may have killed us in football, they suck in hockey". This did not deter the Redmen from pulling within one goal at the 17:31 mark of the period on a nice wristshot that beat Landry on the short side.

McGill continued to apply the pressure after pulling their goalie in the final minute. However, Landry stonewalled the Redmen and the Gaels won 3-2. The score might have been 4-2 but for a two-on-one with the net empty that went awry. Morin let a slapshot go that had the audacity to hit the defenseman's stick on the way to the twine. It did not matter as the Gaels hung on. For his effort, Landry was named the Gaels MVP for the second time in as many games.

The next home action for the Gaels will be on Friday against the University of Ottawa at 7:30 p.m. On Sunday the Gaels will take on the strong team from UQTR at 2 p.m. at Jock Hartly Arena.

Wilson nabs 42 points in weekend split with Toronto and Ryerson

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

utes after the break by scoring 9 of the first 10 points to pull within three at 41-38. This three-point spread stayed more or less constant well into the fourth quarter, and the Gaels had the advantage of shooting bonus free throws with 12 minutes left.

Blues' point guard Heather Marlborough killed Queen's hopes when she hit a key three-pointer with just over two minutes left to put her team ahead 63-56. The difference seemed to be that Toronto was able to shut the Gaels down when it really counted.

Elison led Toronto with 19 points and 8 rebounds, and rookie forward Liz Hart shone with 16 valuable points. Laurel Johnson hit 12 points and Sharon Butler added 9.

McIntyre played perhaps her best game of the year with 18 points and 7 rebounds. Jenny Laughton added a solid 15 points, while Jaylene Morrison ran the offense effectively and contributed 10 points. Vicki Wilson nailed 10 points and grabbed 6 rebounds, Stephanie Jamieson pulled down 7 boards, and reserve guard Kristin Smith hooped 4 points.

Halftime festivities included the first attempt at winning $5,000 by sinking a basket on the foul-line to the far basket, an excellent M.C. Hammer-type routine by the Competitive Cheerleaders, and many other prizes. Despite the abominable Friday weather, an enthusiastic crowd of 350 still turned out.

Whether you need your tuxedo rental next week, next month or next year, reserve by February 27, 1994 and lock in this special offer for your entire group.

Freeman
FORMALWEAR
DOING RIGHT SINCE 1918

Dover's Men's Wear
Corner of Princess and Bagot
544-6864
Supplier to the Arts '94 and Commerce '94 Formals

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA
STUDENTS
DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS?
THEN GET THE ANSWERS
GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist
221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

DAILEY TRAVEL AGENCY
307 ALFRED STREET, 544-5755

Call us for Reading Week Specials for Dominican Republic, Boca, Chica, Cancun, Puerta Vallarta, Ski Mont St. Anne, Mont Tremblant

CHEMICAL ENGINEERING ORIENTATION NIGHT
Wednesday, February 2
Dupuis Hall Auditorium
7:30 p.m.

- Come and learn about:
- why Chemical Engineering is not just more Chemistry
 - the diversity of Chemical Engineering, from producing artificial blood to environmental engineering to plastics
 - beyond Queen's - career prospects and current employment opportunities
 - the Chemical Engineering program
 - the teaching and learning environment in Chemical Engineering
 - lab and computer facilities
 - social activities and fieldtrips

Refreshments Will Be Served
Do you have questions about the Chemical Engineering profession and program at Queen's?
Are you interested in transferring into Chemical Engineering from Arts and Science?
Come to the orientation night or call:

Prof. Jim McLellan 545-6343
Prof. Kim McAuley 545-2768

ENTERTAINMENT

Is religion dead in a tub?

BLINK
DIRECTED BY MICHAEL APTEO
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY GEOFF HAMILTON

John something-or-other (Aidan Quinn) is a weathered and cynical cop with sex appeal who is not quite grown up but has an endearing sense of humour and gets by just fine as he is and doesn't even want to settle down because he's not like that. Emma something-or-other (Madeline Stowe) is one of those gorgeous dark-eyed, dark-haired blind violin players that you find so often in clubs, playing away oblivious to everything but the deep sultry rhythms within.

Blink, which is the title of the movie in which these two meet, is a tired old dog of a flick, freshly groomed and fitted with a shiny new collar, but fit only to limp about and let loose a strained and unferocious bark at passers-by whom it can no longer hope to bite. There is no real bite to back up the bark. Blink is really just two hours of an old, but freshly washed, dog.

Emma begins as a strong and independent blind woman. "She's been on her own since she was fifteen," one of the other women in the band tells us. She also seems pretty happy being blind and strong and independent and musical. But that won't do. She gets her sight back and pretty soon everything's changed. This is where John comes in, playing the virile authority figure she so obviously needs. He rescues her from all her former strength and independence and sets her straight. "You need to be strong!" he yells, pinning her to the ground, setting her straight. "Simmer down!" he cautions her later, reigning in all that destructive autonomy that she can't seem to dispense with. He is good to her and soon she loves him tonnes. She loves him tonnes and he likes her too but...

Emma Brody is stalked by a man who may be truly dangerous or just a hallucination.

A man's work forms a good portion of his identity and self-esteem, and if he fails in his work, if he lets something else get in the way, if he lets the sirens entice him to linger in the chambers of the sea, then he is really not much of a man at all. If a man sees something like that happening, if he senses, for instance, a woman infringing on his work, then dam-nit, he's just got to cut her off. Just like that, really clean. He was never cut out for that kind of stuff anyway. "Look at us!" he yells, holding her paralysed in front of a mirror. "What you want is some kind of life in the suburbs!" And none of that stuff is for him. He's a man, and his manliness is not about to get caught up in all that suburbia bullshit. So John pulls away. But it's okay because he comes back later, grown up apparently, and Emma even regains some of her strength and independence.

There is a bald eye surgeon in here too. He is a sincere, good-natured good guy who has an eye for the violin player as well, but he is too bald and too dull. At one point we think he might not be such a good-natured good guy, and that behind all his good-naturedness there might be some real evil, but that disappears quickly. He is really just a good-natured good guy. And he doesn't get the violin player.

There is also a psychopath in here. He's crazy, alright. He's crazy, and he's a murderous sex killer obsessing about some former girlfriend who died and had her organs donated all over the country. He's killing and raping everyone who got a piece of his old sweetheart, and it's a convenient plot device that they are all women. You don't see much of him in the movie, but he has an achingly familiar ring, like he's somehow, perhaps in some other movie, perhaps in a whole series of movies and has done all this before. He is a bad-natured bad guy who wants a piece of the violin player. But he doesn't get her either.

There are the obligatory sex scenes in there too, none of which are very explicit, or very interesting. There are also some scenes of gritty realism, most notably a prolonged shot of a naked dead woman in a tub. She's got a cross around her neck, and I think that is some kind of symbol. Does it mean that religion today is dead, dead in a tub? But the rest of the movie doesn't touch on this theme, so maybe I am wrong. But it is, nevertheless, the most powerful image in the movie.

There is a curious scene though, where our cop friend John approaches the house where a woman has been murdered, encounters the woman's son, says he is sorry about what has happened, and hears the kid reply "Why do people say 'sorry'? Why don't they just say it's tough shit your mother's dead?" Youth today. Nihilistic little punks. Blunted by countless images of violence on television and in the movies, unable to respond sensitively to their environments any more. Tired old dogs, freshly washed or not. Sigh...

But it all ends up alright, with only a few people dead and our two lovers happily together. The course of true love never did run smooth without a little blood in there to lubricate things up a bit. There is not such a great picture, but neither is Blink.

Just "Stu" It!

FRIENDS OF STU
WITH DR. TEETH
THE TOUCAN
BY MIKE S. MCWILLIAMS

Patrons of The Toucan got a break from the icy grasp of our Canadian winter this past Friday thanks to a Caribbean sounding Friends Of Stu. This local Kingston band, consisting entirely of Queen's students, celebrated their first CD release last Friday night.

Opening for them was Dr. Teeth, whose lead vocalist, Colin Frelsley, is also a singer for Friends of Stu. Lapsley, perhaps the most talented musician appearing that night, easily demonstrated his musical versatility with the trumpet, keyboard, and vocals. More admirable was his stamina. Being a member of both bands landed him on stage for the better part of four hours.

Dan Vernet, the bassist for Dr. Teeth, described their music as being influenced by jazz, ska, and rock and roll. "Ass Pressin' Against the Glass" and "Schizo" are the band's most notable songs. Although Dr. Teeth was the opening band, they didn't actually open. Friends of Stu were the first to take the stage, and when they did, their enthusiasm for their own music was not shared by the crowd. The audience seemed a little more interested in the Toucan food than they did in the band. Perhaps they were spent after a long day of waddling around icy Kingston streets. "Mrs. Potato Head" and "Beans For Me" went almost unnoticed by the crowd. However, the audience came to life for the third song of the set when Stu played "Penraquo," an upbeat calypso tune (I guess the crowd had finished their food).

As the band proceeded through a set of calypso and ska sounding songs, the crowd's interest grew. "Burlap Underwear" and "Do It Yourself" got a few more of the crowd on their feet. By the end of the set, everybody was into it, including people in the bathroom. I wandered into the men's room and couldn't help noticing a Stu fan at the neighbouring urinal slurring the words to "Drunk Ninja."

Todd Carnahan, who prefers to be known as Todd "Bongo-man," played percussion and provided much of the band's energy. Words like energetic and vivacious best describe his character. He was jumping around so much that the gentleman behind me was convinced that he had springs on the bottom of his shoes.

Stu member Matt Baird described their new CD as "a release containing more quality than quantity." The CD is being released on Evol Records, a local independent label that has also released efforts by Dr. Teeth, Zoot, and Boob Toobs. Friends of Stu's CD, Hemlich's Other Maneuver is available at local Kingston record stores, as well as any live Stu event (which became apparent after the band plugged their CD for the fiftieth time).

As Jerry Springer might say, "Here's my final thought." Friends of Stu and Dr. Teeth are two talented, humorous and entertaining bands. However, they are too similar to be on the same roster. They share a vocalist, their style and their sound. One identity is not enough for two bands. Good bands, but one at a time please!

A friend of Stu tooting his own horn.

BRENT DAVIS

No special effects, just reality

SCINDLER'S LIST
DIRECTED BY STEVEN SPIELBERG
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY TARA LYNN KEATS

At the height of Hitler's anti-Semitic campaign during the second World War, a time when it seemed that all human decency was lost in the fervour of nationalistic zeal and greed, comes the story of a man who resisted the lure of brutal power and the hate policies of his native Germany to offer a ray of hope for the future of humanity.

Schindler's List tells the true story of Oskar Schindler, a German industrialist who travelled to Nazi-controlled Poland to profit from the war. Schindler was a man who splurged his money on expensive suits, fine liquor, and beautiful women. He was a shrewd opportunist who showed high-ranking Nazi officials with gifts and initially hired Jews in his enamel-ware factory not for altruistic reasons, but because Jews were cheap labour. Over the course of the film, however, Schindler's compassion overcomes his lust for wealth, causing him to risk his life and spend his fortune to save over a thousand Jewish workers from being shipped off to concentration camps.

Shot almost entirely in black and white, with rapid handheld shots and captions labelling locations and events, Schindler's List often assumes the gritty, rough-edged qualities of a newsreel, making the action on screen seem like authentic history captured on film. The stark black and white photography lends a rawness to the deep focus shots, which rival those of Orson Welles or Stanley Kubrick. In the absence of colour, the images are stripped to their essentials, enhancing the subtle emotions in an actor's gaze, but also amplifying the horror of the atrocities committed against the Jewish workers.

Liam Neeson portrays Oskar Schindler, a man possessing more than just charm and elegance.

Liam Neeson is alluring in his portrayal of Oskar Schindler. He possesses the guile needed to illustrate Schindler's womanizing and courtship of Nazi officials.

Yet he maintains a level of elegance and wit which prevents Schindler from seeming like an ostentatious weasel. Ben Kingsley puts in yet another fine performance as Schindler's Jewish accountant, Itzhak Stern, who provides the real business savvy behind Schindler's factory and who, in turn, becomes Schindler's friend and conscience. Kingsley, as Stern, conveys an honest selflessness which puts the actor's reside in the smaller characters, the men and women who must re-enact the hardships of the Jewish families who were thrown out of their homes and jobs and who had to watch their friends and family die each day. Unlike the hours as the Nazi officer's gun jams repeatedly. The violence is shocking and much harder to watch than any slasher picture, because you can't separate yourself completely from the action on the screen and say, "it's just a movie!"

Schindler's List is painful to watch. It provides a window into a past that never seemed quite so vivid or gruesome in high school history texts. It deals with the subject of pure hate and violence with no apologies. Yet, the film is not depressing. One is filled with joy at the resilience of the human spirit, for the Jews bear their misfortunes with an eye on the bright side and struggle to survive. "The worst is over now" is a mantra of hope repeated by several characters throughout the film, attesting to the triumph of the human spirit over seemingly undefeatable odds.

This will sound like everything else you've read or heard about Schindler's List, but I honestly believe Steven Spielberg has created something special here. He may go down in the history books for E.T. and Jurassic Park, but Schindler's List is his real masterpiece. He's shown that there is more to his genius than expensive special effects. What more can I say, but go see this film. I dare you not to be moved. You won't even realize you've been sitting in an uncomfortable chair for over three hours.

Wait! There's more! For a commentary on the social relevance of this movie by David Ullmann, please see the following page.

Who is Steven Spielberg Anyway?

One might wonder who is Steven Spielberg to bring such a powerful and serious epic as Schindler's List so effectively to the silver screen. Is this not the same man who brought us fantasy blockbusters like E.T., Raiders of the Lost Ark and Jurassic Park?

Precisely. Just because Spielberg is renowned for his ability to make us stand in line to see his films does not mean that serious work is beyond his grasp. Those who went to see The Color Purple, a serious film that was quite a departure from his escapist history, know the answer to this question.

However, one cannot ignore Spielberg's passion for bringing us the unreal, the spectacular, the fantastic and the incredible. But where some might see this as a hindrance, I think in the making of Schindler's List it was a unique gift. In answer to the question of how we today should understand Auschwitz and the Holocaust in general, historian Eli Wiesel answered that we must view it as another world, something inconceivable. While one might take issue with this stance, it begins to become clear how this might appeal directly to Spielberg's talents.

As I sat for three plus hours in the theatre, I was carried away to the unreal world of the Holocaust. I experienced something of what they experienced and I felt something of what they felt. One need look no further than the stunned silence at the end of the film to see that I was not alone in this sensation. Once again, Spielberg had done the impossible. He

McMAHON'S House of Flowers

Mention this coupon for 20% off

Charity Ball Corsages

117 Princess Street St.
546-1133
(between Wellington and Bagot)

Check out the REAL thing at JJ's
5 oz Grilled Chicken Breast or
6 oz Rib Steak, served with a of fries.

Only... $4.95

* Catch the Blue Jays at Jj's *
409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547-3771

Street Life

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Blink 7:10 9:40
Philadelphia 7:00 9:50
Shadowlands 6:45 9:35
Mis. Doubtfire 7:05 9:45
Schindler's List 8:30

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Grumpy Old Men 6:55 9:10
Tombs 6:45 9:30
Intersection 7:00 9:35
The Air Up There 7:00 9:15
Police Brief 6:45 9:25
The Piano 6:50 9:20
Iron Will 7:10 9:25

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Tuesday
World's Best Commercials 7:00
Cycle in China Reception 8:30
Farewell My Concubine 9:00

Wednesday & Thursday
Gethysburg 7:00

CLUBS

TUESDAY
The Shot: Hoskell and the Clovers
Stages: Bottery (best of Metallica)

WEDNESDAY
Affie's: The Odds w/Rhymes With Orange
A's Hangar: Yuk Yuk's Comedy

THURSDAY
The Toucan: Furnaceface w/Los Seamonsters
The Duke of Kingston: The Brave-void Whips
The Grad Club: General Dirt Jones

THEATRE

ROTUNDA THEATRE, THEOLOGICAL HALL
Queen's German Theatre Group presents Goethe's Faust, Part One
February 2-5 at 8 p.m.
Tickets $5 (students/seniors), $7 (adults)

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess Street (530-2050)

Threshold Theatre presents Direct From Kingston Festival 94
This year's performances are: Snow, Serail, Auto Da Fe, This Property Is Condemned, The Onion Skin, Army Of Lovers, Boxed, and Refugees.
February 2-13
Tickets $6 (for one show), $10 (for two shows), Weekend matinees pay-what-you-can.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...
through Feb. 6

Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection

through March 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Long Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

EDWARD DAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)

Juried Exhibition 1994: Featuring two and three dimensional works by 17 artists from Kingston and the surrounding area until February 5

Make a pact with the devil

FAUST
WRITTEN BY JOHANN
WOLFGANG VON GOETHE
DIRECTED BY STEVEN KAMMERER AND RUEDIGER MUELLER
QUEEN'S GERMAN THEATRE GROUP
BY MELANIE GRAHAM

The Queen's German Theatre Group was founded in 1986 by Dr. Ulrich Schreck, a professor in the Queen's German Department, and the Group has since produced a German Drama each year. For 1994, the QGTG has chosen to present Goethe's Faust, an undertaking which although highly stressful for both crew and cast, is extremely successful.

Faust is a story of metamorphosis and of tragic love. Friedrich Bertulies plays the part of Faust, an extremely learned professor who has grown to see his life as unfulfilling and underdeveloped. Faust's life, however, takes a dramatic turn when he falls in love with Gretchen (Elena Pnevmonidou), a deeply religious girl who is a student at the university where Faust teaches. Mephisto (Stefan Rehm) who is disguised as a professor, is aware of Faust's dissatisfaction with his life and offers to help him change it. Out of this demonic friendship emerges a transformed Faust, and Bertulies does an excellent job of dramatizing the metamorphosis of a drab professor into a hip but immature playboy.

When Faust witnesses a fight between Gretchen and her boyfriend, Valentin (Tamer Higazi), he demands that Mephisto procure her for him. Mephisto proceeds, with great charm, to seduce Gretchen's friend Marthe (Natalia Fischer) and to set up the double date that brings Gretchen and Faust together. Gretchen's eventual pregnancy, Valentin's jealousy, and Mephisto's scheming are plot elements that lead to complications.

Mephisto's antics make the play. From his casual seduction of an innocent schoolgirl at the beginning of the play, to his rendition of an Elvis song, Mephisto is at the same time both evil and extremely entertaining. Gretchen neither likes nor trusts him, seeing him as a servant of Satan and an unwholesome influence over Faust.

Pnevmonidou is convincing in all of the aspects of her heart-breaking role. She plays the innocent with wide-eyed naivete, and the madwoman with a finesse that Ophelia would envy. Her anguish at the end of the play is the most emotional moment of the production.

As co-directors Steven Kammerer and Ruediger Mueller indicate, despite some changes the play is as close to the original as they could make it. Goethe originally wrote Faust in two parts; one when he was very young, and the other near the end of his life. This play is a sort of blend of the two parts, although it concentrates on the first. Kammerer and Mueller have changed the play to put it in a more modern context, excluding scenes that were blatantly eighteenth-century, splicing some scenes together, and creating some wholly new, definitely modern ones.

For example, much of the play revolves around the "Auerbachs Keller," the nightclub which is the centre of the student culture and a major source of the dark imagery in the play. The waitress is authentically bored, the students mosh enthusiastically, and an undercurrent of prostitution and drug use flavors one of the more unconventional scenes.

The QGTG has a record number of participants this year, with 35 cast members and nearly 30 crew members. The production is accompanied by both a rock band and the German Choir. The play's participants come from all different levels and areas of study. Two faculty members are involved with the play. Dr. Schreck is the keyboardist and flutist in the rock band, and Dr. Reeve conducts the choir. Most of the leading roles are played by graduate students, but undergraduate students hold many of the middle and lesser roles.

Although the production I witnessed was only the first dress rehearsal, both the cast and crew seem to be organized and well-prepared. There were some difficulties—the prostitutes seemed very shy, and there were rough spots in some of the songs (mostly due to voice loss and the cold season)—but the triumphs of the QGTG's Faust: A serving of diabolic rave culture.

DEREK YARNELL

play outweighed these minor failings.

I recommend this play to anyone. As Mueller and Kammerer were quick to point out, although the dialogue is in German, the performance can be enjoyed and understood by anyone who has grasped the basics of the plot. And as the plot is outlined in the program, you can be sure that you'll definitely enjoy this encounter with the devil.

Tickets are $5.00 for students and seniors and $7.00 for adults and are available from the German Department and from cast and crew members. Faust opens in the Rotunda Theatre located in the Rotunda Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 2 at 8:00 p.m., and continues to Saturday, Feb. 5.

Kingston Symphony

Edward Reifel
3rd year,
Music Performance

Masterworks VI
Conductor: Glen Fast
Percussion: Edward Reifel
Winner, 1993 Queen's
Concerto Competition
Sunday, February 6, 1994
2:30 p.m. Grand Theatre

GRAND THEATRE BOX OFFICE 530-2050
Tickets $16-$25. Student rush seats $8.
(available before concert with current student I.D.)

549-5420

349 King St. East
(King & Princess)

549-5425

401 Princess St.
(Princess & Division
under Princess Tower)

Homemade from Start - to - Finish

PIZZA TOPPINGS

Pepperoni • Mushrooms • Green Peppers • Bacon • Onions
Hart • Olives • Sliced Tomatoes • Pineapple • Hot Peppers

	Small	Medium	Large	Large
	10"	12"	14"	16"
No. 1 One Item	7.45	9.35	10.95	12.65
No. 2 Two Items	7.85	10.15	11.75	13.75
No. 3 Three Items	8.55	10.95	12.65	14.65
No. 4 Four Items	8.75	11.45	13.55	15.85
No. 5 Bubba's Special Pizza "DELICIOUS" Tomato Sauce, Cheese, Mushroom, Mushrooms, Bacon, Ham, Green Peppers	9.25	11.95	14.50	16.95
No. 6 Vegetarian Pizza Tomato Sauce, Cheese, Mushroom, Onions, Green Peppers, Sliced Tomato, and Pineapple	8.75	11.45	13.75	16.25
No. 7 Hawaiian Pizza Tomato Sauce, Ham, and Pineapple	7.95	10.15	11.75	13.75
Any Extra Item	.90	1.10	1.50	1.90
Double Cheese	1.15	1.35	2.15	2.75

FREE Delivery on all Pizzas
& Food Orders over $12.00
within city limits

DELIVERY HOURS
Monday to Saturday
8:00pm - 1:00 am
Sunday
12:00pm - 9:00pm

TAX & GST ARE NOT INCLUDED

BUBBA'S SPECIALS

1/2 PRICE OFF
The Regular Menu
+ Pizza
+ Submarine
+ Burgers
Pick-up Only
12:00 Noon - 8:00 PM
Present Coupon Before
Ordering
Expires March 31, 1994

HOMEMADE HAMBURGERS

1/4 lb. Hamburger 2.55
1/4 lb. Cheeseburger 2.65
1/4 lb. Baconburger 3.45
Double Hamburger 4.65
Double Cheeseburger 4.65
Double Baconburger 4.65

SUBMARINE SANDWICHES

Turkey 4.95
Roast Beef 4.95
Hamburger 4.95
Assorted Cold Cuts 4.95
BUBBA'S SPECIAL 5.95

SANDWICHES

Turkey 4.95
Beef 4.95
Salami 4.95

CHICKEN

Chicken Fingers (6 pcs) 6.95

PANZEROTTI

Deep Fried 5.95

ENGLISH STYLE FISH & CHIPS

FISH DINNER
3 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad 5.75
FIESTA FISH DINNER
3 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad 6.95
BUBBA'S PORTION
6 Pieces of Fish, Fries, and Salad 14.95

SNACKS
1 Piece of Fish and Fries 4.25

WHAT'S UP?

Pick up the slip forms at the AMS Office, Lower JSUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5 p.m.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

February

This Week

Wednesday, Feb. 2

Setting community priorities in Health Care: Can it be done? Speaker: Dr. Singer MD (Nephrology, Dept. of Medicine) 7-9 pm Richardson Amphitheatre. Presented by Medical Students for Social Responsibility.

Mosaic (Community Living) will be having a meeting for all volunteers in the Oak Room, JDUC. Anyone interested in volunteering with a child or an adult with a developmental disability is welcome to come and find out what Mosaic is all about.

Thursday, Feb. 3

The AMS Coffee House presents: Kubwana and Kayak Angst 8-11 pm at the Lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Come out and have a great time!

Sunday, Feb. 6

Free Public Reception (3-5 pm): The Ethics of Making: the forming rayons of John Heward: Meet the Montreal artist at the opening of his exhibition.

The Queen's Chinese Students' Association is having the 1994 Election today at Mac Corry D207. Come and get involved! Interview for candidates is on Thursday, Feb. 3, 5:30 pm in the International Centre. For more info., call Gilbert 530-0828.

Upcoming

The Queen's Chinese Student's Association is holding the Chinese New Year Banquet at the Buffet Uncle Tong on Feb. 10. Delicious chinese festival food served and Karaoke after. Tickets are $15 for members and $18 for non. For more info, please call Gilbert 530-0828.

You are invited to participate in an "Open Space" Event-Women's at Queen's: Transforming our community. This is an opportunity for all those interested in the concerns of women at Queen's -- to take stock of where we're come from, where we are and where we are going. Students, Faculty and staff Welcome. Feb. 11 from 8:30 am to 4:30 pm at Lower Common Rm, Victoria Hall. Bring a bag lunch to share and a non perishable food item for the Food Bank.

Feature

The Ethics of Making: the forming rayons of John Heward: Meet the Montreal artist at the opening of his exhibition from 3-5 pm.

Christian Awareness Week from January 31 to February 4. Come out for Free Bibles, Free Cookies and display from 9:30 - 3:30 in MacCorry and the JDUC.

Tri-colour Troubles -- This week Studio Q uncovers the problems at the yearbook. Watch this Thursday and Friday at 6 pm on Cabelnet 13.

Hey undergrads! the Undergraduate Review wants your submissions, stories, articles, poems, reports, reviews, artwork, photographs from all departments. Deadline Feb 16. Bring submissions to The CORE, 183 University Ave or call 545-6278. Don't Forget!

Call for submission to the Queen's Feminist Review deadline Feb. 15. Essays, poetry, short stories, art, photography, sheet music, cover. Max approx. 3000 words. Drop off a typed copy at the AMS Front desk. Questions? Call 545-2725 Ext. 4816.

This ain't no star search. QEA Presents: Battle of the Bands 1994. Applications on the QEA door. Deadline for all submissions -- Feb. 18. For more info., call Rob 545-2731.

ANNOUNCEMENT

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUE ROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

UNDERSTAND YOUR LEASE BEFORE YOU SIGN IT. Appliances included? Lawnmowing fees extra? Parking no charge? Get help getting answers -- call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

HEALTHY EATING CONCERNS? Call the Confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon - Thurs. 6 - 9 p.m., 545-6000 ext 4444. Leave a message anytime.

SOAPBERRY SHOP'S latest cosmetic innovation; eyeliner made with beeswax to make application easy and chamomile and lanolin soften the delicate skin around the eye. A must see! 225 Princess St., 545-1028.

ARE YOU HAVING SEX? Then you could be purchasing the cheapest contraceptives in town at the Birth Control Centre located at 51 Queen's Cres. (next to Vic Hall). Drop by and check out our selection of Rames and Sheik condoms - only $2.70 for 8.

THE UNDERGRAD REVIEW wants submissions! Field studies, book critiques, research papers, film analysis, social and political essays (less than 6000 words can be brought to the Core, 183 University Ave or call 545-6278 for more information.

WORD PROCESSING essays, resumes, or reports. Fast and accurate. Free pick up and delivery. Phone Nancy at 634-0706.

DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT SEX? The Birth Control Centre is staffed by volunteers trained to answer your questions about sex, STD's and pregnancy. Our services are completely confidential. Feel free to phone 545-2959 or drop by 51 Queen's Cres, Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 7 p.m., Saturday and Sunday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

RUBIN HURRICANE CARTER will be speaking at Grant Hall, on Tuesday, February 1st at 7:30 p.m. Come out and hear his story.

CREATIVE WRITERS. Discuss your won writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK FEB. 1 - 7. Watch for campus events sponsored by Student Health Service and Peer Health Outreach. BE AWARE!

ASK A PROFESSIONAL DIETITIAN why dieting is a dangerous activity. Julie Simpson RDt. will be at the Eating Disorders Awareness Week display in Mac-Corry on Tuesday, February 1st 12:00 - 1:00 p.m.

ASK A PROFESSIONAL RESEARCHER about eating disorders and restrictive eating. Dr. Fred Boland will be at the Eating Disorders Display in Mac-Corry on Wednesday February 2nd from 12:00 - 1:00 p.m.

ASK A PROFESSIONAL PSYCHIATRIST about eating disorders, treatment and resources. Dr. Steven McNeven will be at the Eating Disorders Awareness Week Display in Mac-Corry on Friday February 4th from 12 - 1 p.m.

FEARLESS FRIDAY: A day to be brave, break free from your diet and have a cookie on Marriot. Friday February 4th is national Non-Dieting Day.

DO YOU THINK about the weight craze that permeates our society? Join us February 12, or 3rd for a video from TV Ontario's WEIGHT CRAZE SERIES and a facilitated discussion. Call 545-6712 for times and places.

PARENTS! Problems studying when your children are around? Come out to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Bring your children. Our volunteers will occupy your children while you study. Watch for upcoming events for children. Our new hours beginning January 24th are Monday to Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring slots are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

TEACHING ASSISTANTS! Looking for practical ways to improve the quality of your interactions with students? Come to a seminar on Wednesday, February 2nd 7 - 9 p.m. in Room 306, Old Medical Building. An opportunity to share with others the problems - and pleasures - of TA work. Sponsored by the Graduate Student Society and the Instructions Development Centre. Further info at 545-6428.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your group meeting, potluck or other event. TV/VCR, microwave, dishwasher facilities available for use by Queen's groups. Call the Grey House at 545-2958.

QUICK ACCURATE word processing of thesis, papers, resumes, correspondence etc. Most often 24 hour service. Call after 6 p.m.: Audrey at 548-7378.

LSAT PREPARATION COURSE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exams; free repeat options; full money back guarantee. Next course starts February 5th. MEDLAW SEMINARS 531-9016.

MCNEIL HOUSE '90-'91 REUNION: Come see how people are doing, what they are actually studying now, and say farewell. At the Quiet Pub, Tuesday February 1st, 6 - 8 p.m. Your don Chris.

EURAIL PASSES. Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available. Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

HELP WANTED

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED! Do you like children? Looking for some volunteer work? The Parent Resource Centre needs volunteers to staff the centre Monday to Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m. Please sign up at the centre in the lower ceiling of the JDUC.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Friday, February 11th to: Gord McIlquham, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Maitland St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 2V3.

STAGES is looking for an individual (s) interested in coordinating our campus activities and promotions. Must be self motivated and enjoy working with people. A great opportunity in an exciting business for the right person(s). Ideal part or full time position during the school year and summer. Apply in person Thursday February 3rd at 4 p.m. at Stages.

CLASSIFIEDS

SUMMER JOBS Applications are now being accepted for summer jobs on cruise ships, airlines and resorts. No experience necessary. For more information send $2 and a self-addressed stamped envelope to: World Wide Travel Club, 5334 Yonge Street, Suite 1407, Toronto, Ontario, M2N 6M2.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing inground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

WANTED

FULL-TIME FIRST YEAR WOMEN OF ALL FACULTIES: Needed for study on adjustment to Queen's. Sign-up in "Frosh" binder - main lobby of Humphrey Hall or phone 545-9853.

RELEASING INDEPENDENT CD: need guitarist, bass, keyboards and drummer to play my songs and some covers. Kind of New Order, kind of Matthew Sweet, kind of not. Stewart 548-4005.

LOOKING FOR a talented imaginative songwriter/musician (piano or acoustic guitar) to collaborate with gifted and unique singer/songwriter. Please call Tracy at 541-7860

ACTOR NEEDED for student film. Need male, under 5'7". Also need some smaller roles filled. It is excellent experience. If you're interested, please call Ari at 549-1242. Don't be shy! No experience necessary.

WANTED: Artwork for the Open Faculty Art Show. The art show will be held in the McLaughlin room during Artsfest (Feb. 28 - Mar. 5). All work welcome. Submission date February 14th. For more info call 530-2455.

3 FEMALES looking for a roommate for next year; non-smoker, either sex. Clean, comfortable and very close to campus. Rent $236. Call 545-3460.

MALES 19 - 35 YEARS OLD needed to fill out questionnaire on sexual attitudes and behaviour. Paid $10 for 40 minutes. Call 545-6552, leave first name and phone number for "Mike's Study".

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

APPLIED SCIENCE JACKET FOR SALE '94 (or you can change crest). Size 48 (large). $120. Need furniture for next year? Bedroom and desk. Take it May 1st '94 cheap! Call Rob at 530-2582.

READING WEEK GETAWAYS to Panama City Beach Florida and South Padre Island Texas; $249 and $349 Quad Occ. Call Steve at 542-1344.

SPRING BREAK '94!! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $359 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ban Righ, Friday, January 21st. Its contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

PERSONALS

NATASHA - Hmm... free cocktails and hors d'oeuvres at AJ's sound pretty good. At least save me a dance after dinner at the Ambassador. Your '96 Semi Sweetheart, Boris JENNY - MOO: You're too sexy for that Stage! Good luck tonight - the 610 Shred-man fan club.

OH CHERUBIC STEPONYA: Your twinkly blue eyes light up my day I know that I can truly say your womanly dexterity trills me Every-way! Smooches, giggles and tickles, Lucy (cents please)

JOIN BORIS AND NATASHA at the '96 Semi-formal on Friday, February 4th, where your ricker gets you more than a gross night at some cheesy bar.

Books
$3.99 and up
Special Price - One Week Only

BACK PAGE

Nasty letters!

"If he sends one of your boys to the hospital, you send one of his to the morgue. That's..."

The CHICAGO Way

The Queen's Musical Theatre has been the subject of recent debate with their production of Kismet. While we do not wish to get involved with that bag of hot potatoes, we would like to share with you another of our letter wars. This time the subject was the QMT production of Chicago in January, 1985 and the battlefield was the opinions section of The Journal.

The game begins with a review written by one Michael Milde, in which he describes Chicago as:

"...a nice, light snack. It has music, song, dance, jokes, and an interesting stage set: a pretty reliable."

Despite this favourable introduction, Milde abandons his namesake by commenting:

"The plot is tired and thin. A woman shoots her lover, gets a sick lawyer, gets publicity/public sympathy/fame, and so on and so on to a predictable finale. There are a half dozen decent jokes, another dozen predictable ones, and a hefty measure of slapstick. Nothing startling. Milde concludes his review this way:

"Chicago is an entertainment show, and is best enjoyed for what it is, a light, somewhat fluffy musical that is intended to amuse."

Now normally, entertainment reviewers say a lot of nasty things and get away with it. That's what we expect of them. But occasionally the critic gets a little too zealous or steps on a few too many toes, and that's just what happened with Chicago and Milde.

The next issue of The Journal contained a letter by an irate Richard Wing who lambasted the even-tempered Milde by stating:

"The guy who wrote your review of Chicago doesn't know his ass from a hat rock. His faint praise and ludicrous criticisms makes one wonder what show he was at, or what drugs he was on."

... Chicago is as light as Luciano Pavarotti and as fluffy as a fast-food... This dude wouldn't know satire if it jazzed him up the gungo."

BURGER KING FREE

Bacon Double Cheeseburger

When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 9/94

BURGER KING FREE

2 CAN DINE $4.99

2 Whopper and 2 Regular Fries

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 9/94

ARITHMANIAC (Math and all that)

Six degrees of separation

In the film Six Degrees of Separation, one of the characters says there is a theory which states that no two people are separated by more than about six degrees of familiarity. For instance, if you know me, you are separated by four degrees from General Norman Schwarzkopf. I have a former classmate, least 500 people - your mileage may vary, depending on whether you jet-set about the world or if you're a Siberian hermit. If we performed the calculations using the Earth figures, the maximum number of people with whom a person can be connected is written as eight followed by 18 zeroes.

How many degrees separate you and hyper-ambitious skater Tonya Harding? Ugly rock star Mick Jagger? Coffee expert Juan Valdez?

Derek Pritchett (Eng Chem '91), who works with a guy named Roy at Alcan Brockville. Roy's cousin is Colin Powell, who starred with Stormin' Norman on that neat-o desert war miniseries on CNN in 1991.

Those of you who aren't mathematically inclined are probably saying that there must be much more than six degrees of separation between lots of people, say between Tim Wilson and an air conditioner sales clerk in Ougadougou, Burkina Faso (the place really exists). As the arithmaniac, it's my job to prove the "Six degrees" rule.

Suppose every person on the fictitious planet Nicol knows only 50 other people. By the word "knowing," I mean that you've either met or corresponded with this person at least once. Rob, a citizen of planet Nicol knows 50 people. Each of these 50 friends knows 49 other people. Each of those 49 knows 49 others. If we were to do the math and ignore any overlap (say person X and person Y both know person Z), the maximum number of people with whom Rob can be connected within six degrees is 50 times 49 times 49 times 49 times 49 times 49, which is about 700 billion people, over a hundred times as many people as there are on Earth.

This number becomes a fair bit smaller once you account for overlap, but this is dwarfed by the fact that most people on Earth are not as dweeby as people on Nicol. The average Earth person knows at least 500 people - your mileage may vary, depending on whether you jet-set about the world or if you're a Siberian hermit. If we performed the calculations using the Earth figures, the maximum number of people with whom a person can be connected is written as eight followed by 18 zeroes.

- McDonald's gets their burger meat from sawmill sawdust/a worm farm. (Nope, it comes from cows.)
- That kid Mikey from the Life cereal commercial died because he ate too many "Pop Rocks" and washed them down with a Pepsi. (He's alive and did a Life cereal commercial in 1987.)
- The New Kids on the Block used to have a sixth member, Herbert, who was killed and eaten by the other five after they got drunk one night.

Okay, I made the last one up. However, if I can get just a few of you to believe it, and if they each manage to convince a few of their friends...

Many of you know Joey DeVillo, who has met Muhammad Ali, who knew Malcolm X.

Coming up in MISC: We go clothes shopping!

oopsie! e-mail erratum

In last Friday's edition of MISC, we had a little typo in the section describing how to get a mainframe account. When you go to a public computing site (say, the Jeffery Hall basement - brrr) the command you should type in is:

QUCSACCT

and not QCSACCT, as last week's MISC says. You'll be asked for your PIN number, which was given to you during registration. You should have a little white card that has the Q-in-the-shield logo, says "Registrar's Office, Richardson Hall" and a string of characters and numbers (for example, 1A2B3C). That funny code is your PIN number. The computer will prompt you for it. Once you've given the computer the information it wants (your student number and your PIN), you'll be given two pieces of information:

- Your userID ("User ID" as one word), which tells the computer who you are.
- Your password, which tells the computer you really are who you say you are.

After that, you'll have to wait about 24 hours for the geeks - er, computer administrators - to make your computer account active.

Once you've got your mainframe computer account, e-mail us, your friendly MISC/Back Page writers! Joey's userID is 3JMD2 and Derek's is 3DCW3.

MCRC EXECUTIVE ELECTIONS
TUES. FEB. 8 & WED. FEB. 9 polling stations: meal lines and residence front desks.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1994 • ISSUE 29 • VOLUME 121

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess Street, Kingston
(corner of Montreal & Princess) 549-3553

inside The Journal

THE ODDS
The Odds were with you if you were at Alfie's Wednesday night.
—For review see page 24.

AMS ELECTIONS
The Features Section hopes to help you make sense of the upcoming Alma Mater Society elections with a comprehensive look at the key issues, and what the candidates are saying about them.
—Feature on page 16.

MEN'S V-BALL
The Men's Volleyball team shed and managed to snag a silver medal in Halifax last weekend at the Dalhousie classic.
—Story on page 19.

"If Canadians aren't extremely careful, our future will be what the United States is today: grotesque disparities in wealth, enormous and burgeoning underclasses, anti-crime hysteria and racism, and a lack of basic social services, not to mention a lack of compassion and a surplus of meanness of spirit."
—Rubin "Hurricane" Carter, speaking at Grant Hall Tuesday night.

Hurricane blows through Queen's campus

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

As part of Queen's Literacy's awareness campaign, Rubin "Hurricane" Carter spoke before a capacity crowd at Grant Hall on Tuesday evening.

Rubin Carter, immortalized in the Bob Dylan song, "Hurricane," was a leading contender for the American middleweight boxing championship in the sixties. However, his dream to be a boxing champion was halted in 1966, when he was convicted and imprisoned for 19 years in a New Jersey prison for a triple-murder that he did not commit.

Released in November of 1985, no compensation or apology was given to Carter by New Jersey authorities.

Literacy plays an important role in Carter's story. His autobiography, The Sixteenth Round, was the first book Lesra Martin, a young literacy learner, read. Lesra's interest in "Hurricane," combined with the aid of the Canadians who adopted him, eventually lead to Carter's exoneration.

Throughout the evening, Carter emphasized the value of literacy, human rights and justice, and the role Lesra's learning to read had on him.

Carter explained that speaking had not always been easy for him. For the first 18 years of his life, he stuttered badly. And when people laughed at him, he said his fists did the talking.

"The only sound they'd hear would be my fists whistling through the air. Now, that stopped the laughter... for a while. But it didn't solve the problem. I still Rubin "Hurricane" Carter gets a surprise visit from friend Rick Sauve, who is currently serving a prison term in Kingston.

HARRIKA GLICKMAN

White supremacist poster found on campus

BY RYAN P. CHEN

Yesterday afternoon, Alma Mater Society Education Commissioner Clare Fielding received a flyer published by the Heritage Front—a white supremacist group—which deplores the lack of white pride and boasts of the "great accomplishments of the [white] race."

The flyer was delivered to Fielding by a student who had torn it from the display pole between The Agnes Etherington Art Centre and Mac-Corry.

"I have no idea what to do," stated a stunned and upset Fielding. "This is the most blatant example of racism on campus. Of course, it is ironic that this has appeared on the same day that the Surface anti-racism issue was published."

Fielding said she believed the flyer was posted by a Queen's student because, "nobody who wasn't at Queen's would know about that pole."

Fielding, however, was not completely surprised by the appearance of the Heritage Front on campus. "Queen's is a bastion of systematic racism, and at a school where the curriculum emphasizes white history and literature, I'm not surprised that [the Heritage Front] would believe that they would find support here."

Queen's Senate avoids tuition discussion

Rector wants debate on the issue
BY DENNIS PAO

The Queen's Senate has decided not to address a controversial proposal by the Council of Ontario Universities to raise undergraduate tuition fees by 50 per cent, even though three other university senates have voted to reject it.

The senates of Algoma University College, McMaster, and Trent have all voted against the proposal. But Queen's will not be discussing the issue.

Rector David Baar expressed concern over this development. "I don't understand why the Senate won't be discussing these reforms when they could have an adverse effect on the academic environment. There's a difference between being an accountant and looking at the academic impact."

A written statement by sociology professor Robert Pike, Queen's COU representative, confirmed this. "At a separate caucus meeting of COU Academic Col-

Baar said that Principal David Smith, a member of the COU, was reluctant to dis-

AMS report examines service efficiency

Walkhome, Student Constables may face staff cuts
BY LORI THORLAKSON

The Alma Mater Society unveiled an efficiency audit of seven AMS services this week that reviews their financial performance and prescribes future directions.

Streamlined staff and replacement of antiquated capital equipment are among the recommendations to revamp AMS services, which have experienced declining revenues since the late 1980's.

The audit, overseen by AMS Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson, has been underway since the summer of 1993. The report's findings are based upon interviews with the managers of Alfie's, the Publishing and Copy Centre, the Queen's Entertainment Agency, Student Constables, the Tricolour Yearbook, the Quiet Pub and the Walkhome service, as well as analysis of their financial performance over an eight-year period.

Also, the report identified a decline in student demand at Alfie's. This is the result of increased competition from downtown bars and a higher proportion of first-year students, traditionally an Alfie's market, who are underage.

To make Alfie's profitable, the report

SENATE CONTINUED ON PAGE 3

SERVICE CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

at the SLIP, HOLIDAY INN

Roger James

A UNIQUE BLEND OF COMEDY and MUSIC

WEDNESDAY TO SATURDAY
FEB. 2 TO 5TH

NEXT WEEK:

DOUG REANSBURY

DRAUGHT & DOZEN
60 oz. PITCHER OF DRAUGHT & 12 WINGS - $14.50
1 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 549-8400 EXT. 657

The 1994 Chancellor Dunning Trust Lecture

Ursula Franklin

FRSC, Companion of the Order of Canada
Professor of Metallurgy, Emeritus, University of Toronto
Massey Lecturer 1989, Author of The Real World of Technology
Dawson Medalist of the Royal Society, 1991

Technology
and the
Tasks of Civilization
A Perspective
on the Twentieth Century

Tuesday, 15 February 1994
8 pm, Dunning Hall Auditorium
Queen's University at Kingston

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 4TH
SHE STOLE MY BEER
DOORS OPEN AT 6

Alfie's
PUB

MONDAY FEBRUARY 7th
ALTERNATIVE NIGHT

9 P.M. DJ JENN 9 P.M.

AMS teams face off in open forum

BY MEGAN EASTON

Rounding out the pre-election race for votes, the Alma Mater Society executive candidates got in their last words at a packed open forum on Tuesday in the lower John Deutsch University Centre.

Following brief recaps of their platforms, the five teams responded to questions posed by individual students and by representatives from various campus groups. The discussion focused on tuition hikes, social issues, campus pubs, housing, and internal organization in the AMS.

Before the forum got underway, presidential candidate Jonathan Arnold responded to allegations of displaying sexually explicit posters in his co-ed residence in first year. Calling it "a floor plank which got out of hand," Arnold attributed his behaviour to a lack of education on social issues, adding that his attitude towards women has since changed.

Several of the questions at the forum highlighted student con-devising policies to counterbalance the inevitable tuition increases. Presidential contestant Blair Bertrand said he "doesn't think it's realistic" to fight the government, but he suggested extending projects like the Hidden Hunger committee to combat student poverty.

Taz Pirmohamed, also running for president, said, "there is still hope" for maintaining accessibility in universities if the AMS revamps student aid programs.

Jess Dutton, AMS services director, asked the teams to outline their strategies to meet students' increasing employment needs. Jessica Scadron, running for vice-president (operations), said her team would investigate the possibility of Marriott food services hiring more Queen's students. Kevin Rex, another vice-president (operations) candidate, proposed that professors should employ more Queen's students.

Asked for their opinions on the future of Surface, the Asselstine and Bertrand teams said the suspension of Arts and Science Undergraduate Society funding for Surface was an issue that had to how the candidates would approach relations with the Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG) next year. Linda Shin, running for vice-president (university affairs), said the Students in the audience said they were concerned about Kingston bars' "lite nights" and overcapacity crowds drawing Queen's students away from campus. "We're playing by the rules,"

YODIT ROCHE-JOHNSON

QSCSG should have the autonomy to apportion their own student interest fee.

Todd Minerson, current AMS vice-president (university affairs), questioned the teams' views on gender parity. Caroline Gallardi, vice-president (university affairs) candidate, said, "we support that group, as far as I know." The four other teams fully endorsed gender parity on AMS Assembly, but only the Asselstine, Carlyle, and Pirmohamed teams agreed that parity should also be implemented on the AMS Board of Directors.

In response to a question from Meisha Hunter of the drug and alcohol awareness committee, all of the teams affirmed their commitment to improving educational programs, especially those aimed at first-year students. They said these programs should focus not just on drugs and alcohol, but on the related issues of date rape and unsafe sex.

To revitalize campus pubs, the Bertrand team said it would consider hiring a professional consultant to suggest marketing strategies. Wayne Liepmann, vice-presidential (operations) candidate, agreed with all of the teams on the issue of lobbying for the enforcement of bylaws in downtown bars.

Liepmann said, "so they've got to play by the rules."

To compete with low drink prices downtown, the Carlyle and Pirmohamed teams said it is not feasible to transfer the campus pubs' liquor license to bring it under AMS control. Instead, Rex argued that Alfie's must be changed since it "doesn't meet the needs of a new breed of Queen's students."

AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin asked some tough questions about the executive candidates' stance on housing issues. Arnold explained his proposal to consolidate the three student wards into one ward which could exert more influence in municipal politics. The Asselstine and Bertrand teams said the Kingston-Queen's Liaison committee should be instrumental in resolving housing concerns.

Two students posed questions relating to communication links between the AMS, the faculties and their student societies. Andrea Whiting, vice-president (university affairs) candidate, said her team hopes to have faculties set down their goals in "wish lists" which will be monitored over the year. The Pirmohamed team said they would establish an electronic-mail service to facilitate communication within the AMS.

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

TRICOLOUR AWARD

Nominations for the Tricolour Award are now open. The Tricolour is the highest non-academic, non-athletic award that can be received by an individual Queen's student. Check the AMS Office for forms, or contact Pete Stuart at the AMS. The nominations are due by 5 p.m. on Feb. 11.

DINNER FOR EL SALVADOR

You're invited to the Development Week Dinner, sponsored by the Ontario Public Interest Research Group and the Campus Action Network on International Development. This year's dinner will feature Salvadorean food and live entertainment by the group Mazorca. All proceeds will go to OPIRG's El Salvador election delegation, which will help monitor the first democratic elections in El Salvador. The dinner will take place Sunday at 5:30 at Queen Street United Church (Queen and Clergy streets); tickets are $10. For more information, contact Darrell Jose at 531-4770.

ABSTRACT ART EXHIBIT

Canada's Minister of State for Multiculturalism and the Status of Women, Sheila Finestone, will be at Queen's to open The Ethics of Making: the forming reasons of John Heuard at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. The exhibition will be opened at 3 p.m. on Sunday, and will run until May 8. For further information, please contact 345-2190.

BAHA'I FAITH SPEAKER

The Queen's Campus Association for Baha'i Studies invites everyone to attend a forum, entitled The Baha'i Faith: The Emergence of a New Global Religion, on Feb. 4, at 7:30pm in Dupuis Auditorium. The Guest speaker will be Dr. David Smith from Toronto.

Woman student assaulted

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

A woman was accosted in Mac-Corry parking lot Wednesday evening.

The woman was walking back to her residence, when a man grabbed her from behind and shook her.

The man yelled and swore at the woman, referring to the Alma Mater Society election tag she was wearing.

The incident was reported to Campus Security.

Can you imagine Winning prizes just for describing your house to us?

The AMS Housing Issues Committee is holding a contest to find the most un-fit-to-be-lived-in houses in the ghetto. There will be prizes galore, and all you have to do is tell us in a page or two:

WHAT MAKES YOUR HOUSE THE BIGGEST HOLE IN THE GHETTO
Submissions will be accepted at the AMS Communications Commission office until 12 noon, February 11th.

The criteria that submissions will be judged by include:
Overcrowding, plumbing problems, structural problems (those pesky walls keep falling down?), heating problems and general all around lack of proper maintenance, but not damage you have done or messes that you have made.

The AMS Housing Issues Committee is conducting a contest to find the best landlord in Kingston this year, and recognize them with an award.

To nominate your landlord, please let us know, in a page or two, why you think they should win this award.

Include specific examples, as well as your name, student number, and address, and drop it off at the AMS Communications Commission office before 12 noon, Feb. 11th.

OPIRG sends monitors to El Salvador

BY DANIELLE NICHOLAS

The first Salvadoran election since the signing of the 1992 Peace Accord is to take place March 20, 1994, and OPIRG-Kingston will be there.

The Kingston branch of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, is sending four individuals to El Salvador to monitor the electoral process, and to act as an international presence.

El Salvador has experienced half a century of uninterrupted military rule. The old-guard Salvadoran army has been directly in charge of the entire political system, and has been linked with the massive political violence of the last fifteen years, including the assassination of nearly all progressive individuals and organizations.

According to Michael Crumme, coordinator of OPIRG Kingston, "there hasn't been a free and fair election in El Salvador ... probably ever." This March 1994 election is meant to be the county's first.

Having an international presence in the country, according to Crumme, is one attempt to ensure the safety and protection of civilians and voters.

Crumme said the entire election process must be monitored. "No doubt international media will be there, and will cover the actual election," said Crumme.

However, he suggested that the weeks leading up to the election, as well as the period directly following it, "are just as important as the election day itself."

As such, the OPIRG group will be sent to El Salvador for the week of March 5-13, 1994—the week before the election. The group consists of four volunteers from OPIRG and from the Kingston Central America Solidarity Committee: Rutili Gill, Michael Crumme, Sister Shirley Morris from Providence Manor, and Ignacio Melgar.

Despite the signing of the peace accord two years ago, civilian organizations and political groups in El Salvador have continued to be targeted by death squads "which are linked to official government and military," said Crumme.

According to Crumme, at least 36 members of the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation have been assassinated during the last two years. Although both battling sides have agreed to put down arms for this election, such killings seem to persist.

"These killings are a way of derailing the election process, and if they continue, the election will probably fall through completely," said Crumme.

A number of non-government organizations, such as the Jesuit Centre, and the Central America Monitoring Group, are sending a series of independent groups to El Salvador, before and after the election, to act as an international presence and to monitor the entire election process.

In El Salvador, besides monitoring the election to ensure that it "is indeed, a free and fair election ... we're hoping to set up a

BUDGET CAR & TRUCK RENTAL

Reading Week Rate Packages

Call Us Now. We Have Great Deals on VANS, JEEPS, AND CARS with SPECIAL RATES for QUEEN'S Reading Week.

THE FIRST 10 PEOPLE TO RESERVE EITHER A MINIVAN OR JEEP WILL RECEIVE AN ADDITIONAL 1,000 FREE KMS. SO MAKE THAT RESERVATION TODAY !!

Call Budget Rent A Car at 546-3231. This is a Limited Time Offer!

JACKETS

The time is here again to buy your Queen's jacket, in case you missed it the first time.

Don't miss out!!!!

ALL FACs EXCEPT ARTS & SCIENCE, U.S.S.Q. AND ENGINEERING

WHERE: "The Commons", 195 University Ave.

WHEN: 6pm to 7pm, Monday, Feb 7, 1994

COST: Jackets are $285 in total - MINIMUM deposit of $185 is absolutely necessary at the time of sizing. PAYABLE BY CASH OR CERTIFIED CHEQUE

Any questions ??? Call the JacketComm office at 546-4328. Our office hours are from Monday to Wednesday, 6pm to 8pm otherwise please leave a message on the machine!

The long hot summer just got a lot cooler!

1994 AUDITIONS

Okay, what did you do last summer? Did you go where no man has gone before? Did you drive a stick car? Did you perform for thousands of people? NOT? Well, there's simply THIS Summer. You can do any of these things and get paid for it! It's just too cool!

Paramount Parks is holding auditions for the 1994 Summer Season at Paramount Canada's Wonderland. We need experienced technicians, singers, dancers, characters, actors, and variety performers of all types.

If you're over 16, call 855-822-7424, or write Paramount Canada's Wonderland, 8500 Jeno Street, P.O. Box 524, Vaughan, Ontario L6A 1S6. Paramount Parks would like to turn your summer break into your big break!

Vaughan, Ontario
 Saturday, February 12
 Sunday, February 13
 Paramount Canada's Wonderland
 The Paramount Theatre
 12-3:00, Technical Characters, Extras
 3-5:00, Variety Performers
 5-7:30, Singers, Actors
 7-9:30, Dancers

Kingston, Ontario
 Monday, February 14
 Queen's University, Great Hall
 12-2:00, Technical Characters, Extras
 2-4:00, Variety Performers
 4-6:00, Singers, Actors
 6-8:00, Dancers

Childcare debate continues

BY TUDOR CALDWELL

The Alma Mater Society's report on childcare at Queen's has recently been released, and it is being met with mixed reactions. While nobody is denying the need for the development of childcare facilities at Queen's, there is considerable dispute as to how this need should be met.

The report outlines three alternatives for funding childcare, only one of which—the possibility of holding an evening drop-in centre in the John Deutsch University Centre—would be financially feasible for the AMS.

But Todd Minerson, vice-president (university affairs), told The Journal that the responsibility for the development of childcare at Queen's should lie not with the AMS, but with administration.

Further, Minerson pointed out that the administration "has stated its intention to try to attract more graduate and international students" and that it is these students who "tend to be significant users of student childcare services."

He raised the question of whether it is not therefore the responsibility of the administration "to provide the services that are required to make this school accessible to all students in those categories."

While Minerson made it clear that he is happy with "the lead role the AMS seems to have taken in the provision of childcare at Queen's," he said he also believes strongly that the efforts of the AMS would be "better spent in lobbying the appropriate people to start doing something about it."

Jack Troughton, publicity secretary for the Queen's Mature Students Association, disagreed with Minerson's stance. Far from seeing the evening drop-in centre as the most valuable of three alternatives discussed in the AMS report, he feels that while it might be "useful to some people, it wouldn't serve a large number of people."

In his opinion, leaving children in evening childcare would "create hassles with waking up kids late at night" and he feels that "most baby-sitters would be cheaper."

In Troughton's opinion, the AMS could easily provide full-time daycare using their annual "half million dollar profit." He stated that the establishment of a childcare facility would simply require "decreasing AMS profitability by 10 per cent in order to provide a needed service."

In response, Minerson said, "he is mistaken when he says it's a profit every year... what it is is an unallocated surplus built up in a fund made up of losses and profits, realized over the last 25 years."

Troughton, however, feels that in light of AMS support of "money-losing enterprises such as Allie's and the QP," it "doesn't seem too ludicrous" for the AMS to support childcare for students.

He told The Journal that the AMS, in hoping that the university will bear the burden of childcare, is banking on something that won't happen.

Troughton commented that he is disappointed "that the AMS is trying to avoid the necessity of putting the cash on the barrelhead by proposing an impossibility." He says it is clear that "anyone who has any common sense will see that the administration is not going to do this."

Minerson disagreed. The university administration provides a myriad of services such as student health, academic counselling, student awards, and job placements, he said. "Everything that's needed for accessibility is provided by [the administration]," Minerson said. Therefore, the notion that administration should not be responsible for childcare is unfounded, he suggested.

The AMS report addresses two fundamental themes which must be addressed in the development of any childcare plan to be implemented at Queen's: the issues of responsibility and funding.

In addition to exploring three possible alternatives for childcare, it includes details of studies done which compare the various options in terms of projected costs and effectiveness in meeting the needs of Queen's students seeking childcare.

The first alternative explored involves the set up of an eight-month pilot program using space in the John Deutsch University Centre. This year, the JDUU did not rent the space currently used by the Parent-Child Resource Centre, and allowed the AMS to use it rent-free. Typical costs for renting this space would be about $30,000 a year.

Even if rent, utilities and maintenance were free, Minerson said the cost of necessary renovations and of providing a salary for the full-time professional supervisor that ministry guidelines require would exceed $50,000.

The second option also involves an eight-month pilot program, which would be operated out of a residential home. The costs for this program would be similar to those for the JDUU location, but with the addition of rent, the final bill would come to over $60,000.

Minerson's position is that the AMS simply cannot supply the funding necessary to implement either of the first two alternatives.

The final possibility is that of an evening drop-in centre using existing facilities at the Queen's Daycare Centre. Student parents could use the centre between 6:30 and 10:30 in the evening. Although there are no start-up costs associated with this last option, operating costs would amount to approximately $11,000.

Although an evening drop-in centre remains a possibility, it would be necessary to charge parents $4.25 per hour to leave their child. With studies recommending a rate of $3 per hour as one which most students could afford, the document points out that the AMS does "not have the funds to provide this service at the lowest possible cost to students."

Troughton said that he has not read the childcare report, but added that from what he understands, this most recent childcare document is nothing more than "a rehash of last year's childcare committee report." He dismisses it as "a way to be seen to be doing something without spending too much money."

Queen's student wins Rhodes

BY JOSETTE BYRNE

The prestigious Rhodes Scholarship is the dream of many hard-working students, and one of this year's recipients is recent Queen's graduate Brett House. The Rhodes will send House to Oxford University in the 1994-95 academic year.

House, chosen as one of only two students in Ontario to receive the award, obtained his Bachelor of Arts (Honours) in economics from Queen's. House plans to pursue a MA in economics at Oxford, and eventually a PhD.

Approximately $20,000 a year each is provided to Rhodes Scholars who traditionally reside in countries which are members of the British Commonwealth and whose native language is English. In Canada, 11 candidates are selected on a provincial basis.

House explained the intensive process which applying for the

Rhodes Scholar Brett House

JUDY STOTT

Rhodes entailed. Numerous letters of reference, essays and a resume which includes all awards/scholarships received make up the scholarship application.

Those who excel in these areas are selected to attend a one-hour interview in which the committee assesses the candidate's character and rapport.

Cecil Rhodes was a British colonial administrator in South Africa who was instrumental in establishing British control in Southern Africa. Rhodes became wealthy as a result of the extraction of diamonds from the African colonies, and upon his death he included in his will a scholarship fund for exceptional students to study at Oxford University in England.

Upon graduation from Oxford, Brett House plans to get involved in public policy as an economist. House is critical of current economic conditions and policy, and hopes to assist in the "humanizing of economics" that will "put the people at the forefront of economics" in the future.

COU releases brief

BY CARINA BLOFIELD

Last week, the Council of Ontario Universities presented a brief to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in protest of the provincial government's continued decrease in university funding.

The COU is an advocacy, research and communications organization comprised of the presidents and one faculty representative from each of the Ontario universities. Currently, David Smith, the principal of Queen's, acts as the organization's chair.

The COU brief stated that Ontario universities are the most poorly funded in the country. Underfunding, it emphasized, has affected quality and accessibility. Dr. Ron Ianni, president of the University of Windsor and chair of COU's Community and Government Relations Committee, summed up the consequences of the decrease:

"Qualified students are being turned away, programs are being cut, staff are being laid off, class sizes are increasing and buildings and equipment are deteriorating."

In addition, the COU brief stated that this decrease affects not only the universities, but also the province's economy. Peter George, president of the COU, explained that a funding decrease of just one per cent "reduces provincial economic activity by $45.2 million, costs 1,017 jobs and $16 million in combined tax revenues."

Rod Fraser, Vice-Principal (Resources) at Queen's, told The Journal that "for the 1994-95 year, we have been told that, at minimum, government grants to all universities will fall by $24 million, about 1.2 per cent."

But according to Fraser, Queen's stands to lose even more funding. He explained that the grants are comprised of two different sections: the base grant and envelope grants.

Envelope grants give special attention to northern, bilingual and smaller universities. Because Queen's does not fall into any of these categories, it receives funding from the envelope section only for resource infrastructure.

Therefore, Fraser pointed out, Queen's will suffer a minimum 1.5 per cent decrease in funding for next year.

The brief emphasized that the government funding of universities on a per student basis has fallen by 13 per cent since 1977.

When asked for a reason for the cutbacks, Fraser pointed to the recession. In the last few years, he said, federal revenue from tax dollars has fallen. Even during the Great Depression, Fraser remarked, tax revenue remained constant.

Statistics provided by the COU show that funding fell consistently throughout Conservative and Liberal provincial governments, but the cutbacks have been most drastic in the last few years of New Democrat rule.

To the question of tuition fee increases being used to offset the decrease, Fraser replied, "there has been a lot of rumour. We're expecting an announcement in the end of February."

"In order to offset the reduction, you would need to have an increase in tuition fees of 9 to 10 per cent," he commented.

Hurricane

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

couldn't talk," he said.

Because he was able to write The Sixteenth Round, and because Lesra was literate enough to read, Carter said he was literally set free. "Now that's the awesome power of the written word," he said.

Carter said that a life without literacy, an essential human right, is a life of slavery. Referring to the enslavement of blacks throughout the United States' history, he said, "it suited America's economic interest to keep Africans in the field instead of in the classroom. As one slave-master put it, 'learning would spoil and forever make [slaves] unfit for their duties.' Things haven't changed much. Slavery may not be legally sanctioned, but racism has been institutionalized."

Although critical of the U.S., Carter said he believes that similar situations exist in Canada. "Canada, to my chagrin, is becoming more and more like America. And that is likely to continue given the ruthless forces of economic globalization," he said.

"If Canadians aren't extremely careful, our future will be what the United States is today: grotesque disparities in wealth, enormous and burgeoning underclasses, anti-crime hysteria and racism, and a lack of basic social services, not to mention a lack of compassion and a surplus of meanness of spirit," he stressed. "And I would hate to see that export treated freely in this country, my adopted home."

Carter concluded his speech with a discussion of a very personal issue: the death penalty.

Commenting on his experience in 1966, when he had to face the electric chair for a crime he did not commit, Carter said, "the odds of me being alive today were not exactly in my favour."

He reflected that "it was a turbulent time... in a country where the colour of your skin often meant the difference between life and death. There were three murder victims. All of them were white. The jury was all white. The judge, the police, the prosecutors, the state witness were white... But I was lucky, if you can call a triple life sentence lucky, because if you are black or poor and you're stuck with the third-rate legal assistance that they give, the chances are that the [prosecution] will be successful. And that penalty of death is irrevocable and it is permanent."

Carter ended his speech by saying, "if anyone tells you that we need to restore the death penalty in Canada for any reason, I want you to think of me standing here before you this evening, alive, and free—because I almost wasn't."

Senate skips proposal

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

the COU proposals. Some colleagues supported the McMaster position."

Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser said that a tuition fee hike is inevitable but was reluctant to comment on whether the hike would be as drastic as the COU proposals.

"[The COU proposal] is just one of many recommendations sent to the Minister of Colleges and Universities," he said, adding that Queen's would wait for the Ministry to make its own recommendations for tuition raises and follow them. Fraser said that "funding for university

S H O T A R T

Go with a Down 547-7641

GO NAKED?

SALE! 1992 Syles HALF PRICE

SALE! 1993 Syles 20 - 30% OFF!

Nothing Held Back!

12 Styles Mens & Ladies

Wahkshum Parka™

Kingston, Ontario, Canada. The people are warm and friendly. The winters are not. With Columbia's Wahkshum II Parka™, winter will seem a little kinder. Without it, you might as well go naked.

Don't Go Naked. Go to the Source.

Columbia Sportswear Company
 DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
SOURCE FOR SPORTS
 121 PRINCESS ST. 542-2892

This is "THE" Deal.

On Saturday and Sunday, you get 50 cents off any movie if its title starts with the word "THE".

...And don't forget

MOVIES FOR A BUCK
every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday from Vids in the Hall!!

Open 1-11 every day in ADUC

ASUS JACKETS

Do you want to Buy Sell Trade a used ASUS Jacket?

Come to the special 'Odds and Ends' Sale Tuesday Feb. 15 6-9 pm.

GSS

Nominations are still open for the positions of

PRESIDENT, VP SERVICES, and VP FINANCE.

This nomination period will close on February 11th.

Labour experts debate

Unions and their future the topic for speakers at forum

BY JOSETTE BYRNE

On Monday night, the future of unions in Canada and worldwide was debated by local and national leaders of the labour movement. The evening, which was organized by the Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG) aimed to discuss how existing unions can be more inclusive in today's labour force.

The highlight of the debate was the speech by Jean Claude Parrot, president of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Parrot spoke of the international crisis for labourers. "All over the world businesses are fleeing to countries where labour is cheap," said Parrot. He argued that the problem of worker exploitation is severe abroad.

"A strong labour movement is needed as much today as in the past," Parrot said. In the future, "the labour movement will continue to grow."

Parrot sought to redefine the nature of the term "militancy," which is so often used to refer to labour unions in a negative manner. He defined it as "involved" and said, "I am proud of being militant. I think in Canada we have been more militant than in the United States."

Parrot argued that "the future of unions will be what we're going to make it."

"We have to look, as a movement, as to why we need to gain credibility," he said.

Parrot said credibility would not be easy to gain, with many forces opposing unions, including employers, the business community and the media.

He emphasized the importance of debate as a means to advance the cause of workers, and said the union movement must play a key role in creating this debate.

Emphasizing strength in numbers, Parrot said, "we have to recognize the need for larger organizations."

He further suggested the necessity of solidarity of Canadian workers with workers of other countries. "We have to help workers in Mexico and other countries," said Parrot.

Bruce Dodds from the Kingston District Labour Council, and

Jean Claude Parrot of the Canadian Labour Congress takes the mic. BRENT DAVIS

initiator of the current dispute on Queen's campus over Marriott part-time workers' rights, spoke also.

Dodds was critical of the ambivalence which Canadians generally possess in regard to labour unions. "Why are unions called upon more than others to justify their roles?" he asked.

Queen's Industrial Relations Professor Erico Poitras offered a contrast with the emotion-filled sentiments of Dodds.

Poitras focused on the facts in labour today, stating that presently unions represent between 35 and 40 per cent of employed workers. Unions are strongest in the public sector and weak in the retail and business service sector, Poitras said.

He suggested that globalization

today brings extensive mobility of capital, and this reality puts constraints on unions. "I think we are stagnating," said Poitras, referring to the present situation of unions in the public sector.

He raised a serious concern over the absence of unions which include women and part-time workers, since these groups are becoming increasingly significant members of the labour force.

"Part-time workers are difficult to organize because they have less labour force attachment," said Poitras. He added that these employees present the biggest challenge for unions in the future.

Poitras concluded his assessment of the labour movement today by saying, "I can see a pretty tough time for unions in the next few years."

Service streamlining proposed

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

recommends renovating the bar to make it as attractive as downtown venues, and obtaining control of its liquor license, currently held by Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams, to give Alfie's the price flexibility to be competitive.

In addition, the report states that AMS reserves "must consequently be restructured so that Alfie's has access to its surpluses from past years."

The report proposed opening Alfie's for the lunch crowd, in order to draw in a new clientele that includes underage students. This cannot occur, however, as long as Marriott maintains its monopoly on food service at the university.

The Quiet Pub is in similar financial difficulties. The QP has faced escalating operating costs since 1985-86, coupled with a steady 12 per cent annual decline in revenues since 1990-91. Last year this figure was 18 per cent.

The remedy for this, according to the report, is to decrease staff hours during quiet periods and to reduce entertainment costs.

The Publishing and Copy Centre had a healthier financial picture to present. Annual revenues have been steadily increasing since 1989, while operating costs have fallen since 1991. The report foresees even lower operating costs in the future when the AMS can place purchasing orders through the Canadian Campus Business Consortium, a newly formed purchasing group of various Canadian universities.

To capture more student business, the report recommends the P&CC bid on the highly visible College Book Merchant Space in the lower John Deutsch University Centre.

The report includes plans to streamline the management of Student Constables by eliminating the position of deputy chief and cutting wages for group leaders. In addition, Walkhome could, according to the report, "allow the committed individuals to work more, earn more money, and develop a stronger sense of contribution to the service's operations."

Levanna ... a successful outfit

BY CARLA GADULA

Levanna Designs, the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society-run clothing company, is proving itself a successful enterprise.

ASUS President Jenn Steeves and Levanna Director Craig Laurie created the company as a fundraiser to generate extra revenue without raising student fees. Currently, Karen Ward oversees the company's operations, which are run entirely by about five to 10 volunteers.

All profits go directly to ASUS. Organizer Mike Herzog said that "Levanna has almost no overhead. The students aren't losing any money."

Levanna Designs follows a simple motto. According to Herzog, it will make every effort to supply "whatever the students want. We'll try to get the best price and the best quality."

Anything, that is, from hats, shirts and jackets to condom key-chains.

The company's main strategy is to undercut the competition. "We have a number of suppliers who take the order and give us their best price. We take the lowest quotes and say they're being underbid by someone else." Prices have been reduced by up to 50 per cent in some cases, he added.

Orders have been steadily increasing and profits are growing. "Finances are going well. We had a target goal and we're near hitting it," said Herzog. "On all items we've had 100 per cent satisfaction. Nobody's been unhappy."

With such success in the market, the organizers said they are often asked why Levanna Designs doesn't mark up items to maximize profits. "That's not what we're trying to do. We want to offer things that are affordable to the students," Herzog said.

"Having a team or club shirt gives them a feeling of unity within Queen's," he added.

The following are statements provided by the teams running for the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Executive:

BOGGS AND COCHRANE

Boggs and Cochrane for ASUS Exec. The main drive of our campaign has been to raise student consciousness on the issue of strategic planning and to illustrate the potential within ASUS for academic advocacy. By now, each of the ASUS Exec teams have some stance on strategic planning and their intention to bolster the DSC.

However, the issue of increasing accessibility has not been addressed. We would like to reiterate our desire to have a more aggressive outreach programme, targeting first-years within the residence system, as well as upper-years within classes and MacCory. Approaching upper-year students within classes throughout the year accomplishes two things. First, students become aware of issues within ASUS that affect them, such as the formal, summer job opportunities through the society, and referenda. Secondly, it provides a forum for feedback and criticism. Upper-years have a great need to remain informed.

To extend out ideas on making the DSC more responsive to student needs, we will strike a grievance committee within the DSC system to deal with student academic problems as well as personality conflicts within the classroom. The role of the committee will be one of advisement and mediation. The departmental focus of this committee is necessary because it recognizes the individual and unique qualities of the many disciplines within Arts and Science.

We will address the fears of a diminishing voice of minority issues within Arts and Science by implementing a plan to create an information service, within the mandate of recently proposed ASUS Anti-Discrimination committee, in the form of an ASUS publication. The purpose of such a publication will be education, and input will be encouraged from every aspect of the University community.

The team of Boggs and Cochrane is committed to development of concrete solutions to problems within both ASUS and Arts and Science not just recognizing that these problems exist. On February 8 and 9, vote Boggs and Cochrane.

TAYLOR AND SPEER

Why aren't YOU in the CORE right now? Don't know anyone in it, where it is, or do you even care what goes on there? EOT SHAME! On February 8th and 9th it is time to STOP THE INSANITY!!!! The team of CAROLYN TAYLOR and JENNIFER SPEER is ready to make all facets of ASUS appealing enough to get YOU involved with YOUR society.

By combining experience within ASUS with other Queen's activities, TAYLOR and SPEER can represent a faculty as diverse as Arts and Science. TAYLOR, a third year Politics/Drama medial, sat on ASUS '95 year executive, is a member of the Queen's Player's musical/comedy troupe, and is involved in the Drama DSC executive.

SPEER, a third year Environmental Chemistry major, is an ASUS rep to AMS, Co-chair of the ASUS environmental committee, and plays on the Queen's Field Hockey team.

Priorities on the TAYLOR/SPEER agenda include an expansion of the DSC system. We would like to work with each DSC executive and department heads in compiling a publication of DSC evaluation summaries, helping students make more informed class choices.

TAYLOR/SPEER are committed to publishing the ASUS budget to increase student participation in solving budget restraints. It's one thing to ask for student interest and involvement, but it's another to give students the tools to work with.

ASUS has had a highly visible year with the Surface referendum. TAYLOR/SPEER feel that Surface plays an important role in the Queen's community, and that the only fair alternative to the status quo is an opt-outable fee. An opt-outable fee allows people who feel strongly one way or another to take action.

Do you want a fresh new perspective or just more of the same? On February 8th and 9th, VOTE TAYLOR/SPEER! Make it so!

READING WEEK TRAVEL

STUDENT CLASS FARES WORLDWIDE

SUN DESTINATIONS 5% off

CHARTER CLASS FARES CANADA & EUROPE

THE EXPERTS IN UNIVERSITY TRAVEL!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

AMEY'S TAXI

546-1111

Karen D. Cochrane

Custom-made Fashions

12 Cornell Ave.

Amherstview, Ont.

KCN 176

or 384-4882

Grasshopper Hill Fabrics 548-3889

Feb. (Mon & Wed) March (Mon & Thurs)

Wedding, Formal & Everyday Wear

Fabulous Formals

begin and end at

Grasshopper Hill Fabrics

224 Wellington Street
Wellington at Queen

548-3889

Vogue 268

Official suppliers of:

Queen's Sports Teams SUPERIOR Nautilus Queen's Book Merchant

DR. GIRDY'S

POOL PUB SHOP

MANUFACTURED CAPS 2-3 WEEKS

For Orders and Information Call: 547-0864

EUROPEAN AIRFARES

LONDON Return $
AMSTERDAM Return $
ROME Return $
PARIS Return $

WARNING: WE ARE UNABLE TO PRINT OUR EUROPEAN AIRFARES. THE SHOCK OF OUR LOW PRICES MAY BE HAZARDOUS TO YOUR HEALTH. IF YOU VALUE YOUR LIFE SAVINGS... CALL TRAVEL CUTS TODAY!

TRAVEL CUTS
1-800-667-2887
 (THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
 5:30 to 11:00am
 Sat-Sun 9:30 - 1:00pm
 7 days a week

Baby Pizza
 Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
 Daily $2.75
 11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch and Dinner Specials 7 days a week. Take-out service available.

(613) 544-0123
 424 Princess Street (at Division)
 Licensed under LLBO

Kingston Symphony

Edward Reifel
 3rd year,
 Music Performance

Masterworks VI
 Conductor: Glen Fast
Percussion: Edward Reifel
 Winner, 1993 Queen's
 Concerto Competition

Sunday, February 6, 1994
 2:30 p.m. Grand Theatre

GRAND THEATRE BOX OFFICE 530-2050
 Tickets $16-$25. Student rush seats $8.
 (available before concert with current student I.D.)

SPRING BREAK PANAMA CITY BEACH, FLORIDA

Shell Island Party Cruise
 650' Gulf Beach Frontage
 2 Outdoor Swimming Pools
 1 Indoor Heated Pool
 Restaurant, 2 & 3 Room Suites

Beach Bonfire Parties
 The Beach Bar/Volleyball
 Salubara, Jeteika & Pirocassa
 Karaoke Beach Party
 Area Discount Coupons

HANDYPER BEACON
 17403 Front Beach Road
 Panama City Beach, FL 32413
 904 236 2134

RESERVATIONS
 1-800-488-8828

FROM $104 PER WEEK
 PER PERSON
 4 PERSON OCCUPANCY

MCMILLAN AND CRANNY

The team of Hugh McMillan, a third year Biology student and Jan Cranny, a third year Politics student know long-standing problems can't be solved with last-minute ideas. Instead, we are going to make many existing half-implemented ideas work—giving Arts & Science Students the same resources and opportunities they deserve.

We are committed to providing Arts and Science students an identity through communication and mobilization of student resources; fiscal responsibility and restraint by reducing the overlap of activities and expenditures with the AMS and increased support for the people and activities already in ASUS.

1. Everybody's worried about the tuition increases. ASUS, with its immediate access to both students and administration should co-operate with the AMS in seeking solutions to the underfunding crisis. Students should be educated and mobilized to action—to have choices and power, voice and representation. Rising tuition has negative impacts on the quality of education, and the ASUS exec must intervene and advocate realizable funding alternatives that minimize the money drain on students.

2. Everybody wonders how effective the DSC evaluations are. Currently DSC evaluations are only as effective as the individual departments that administer them. We aim to provide a central, long-term structure. By encouraging some departments to reproduce evaluations for widespread distribution, we could start with what's already available to provide a framework for other departments to "join in" and print their evaluations in the future. This will put students in a better position to maximize their education, and to pressure the departments to "fill in the gaps" when information is "missing."

3. Nobody really knows what ASUS is, or what it can provide, so how can they care? Through work experience, extra-curricular and academic programmes, ASUS has a significant impact beyond the Queen's Community. We wish to link the ASUS Core to Career Planning and Placement to provide job listings at the Core. We aim to create a stronger link with our Alumni, seeing this in many other faculty societies. Students will only be involved if they know what's going on and what ASUS has to offer them. In addition to advertising as widely as possible, we recognize communication works two ways. Sometimes we need to be a listener and hear what students need from us—and sometimes we need to be a microphone to let students concerns be heard by the university and community at large. In both cases McMillan and Cranny are the right choice for a student voice.

The two teams running for the MCRC Executive next year have provided the following statements about their platforms:

MARSHALL, JONES AND CRUMMEY

We're the team of Marshall, Jones, Crummeay for MCRC Exec. We have a new vision for the third largest student government at Queen's. We're campaigning to create a greater Queen's Residence Society. Residents have common concerns that need a unified voice. A bunch of small, fractious councils serves nobody. We also want to be the first MCRC executive to ask for student volunteers. The system and its committees needs the breath of fresh air volunteers bring. We're campaigning around campus now and we encourage questions about our ideas. On Feb. 8th and 9th vote Marshall, Jones, Crummeay for MCRC.

FLANNERY, DEARIE AND MARUI

Hi! We're Warren Flannery, Erin Dearie, and Kenji Marui, and we're running for Executive of the Main Campus Residents' Council. Our team combines broad experience—from Floor Senior to House Vice-President to MCRC President—with freshness and enthusiasm. Specifically, we would maintain good communication with the Residence Life Office, thus ensuring that students concerns are addressed, and that an optimal level of student services is achieved. We are very committed to improved safety, and intend to work to improve the accessibility of walkhome services to residence students. We also realise that students have social lives, and we will work to ensure a more user friendly alcohol policy, while still maintaining safety. Internally, we would concentrate on revamping the first year representative position, and improving the inadequate transition system. Overall, we will bring a strong team approach to strengthen what is already a very effective residence system.

VOTE!

Feb. 8 and 9 at various campus locations. Don't forget your student card.

Free Coupon digital playground Free Coupon

One FREE Scan $5.00 value on Nikon's "Coolscan" slide scanner or Agfa's "Arcus Plus" flatbed scanner. Offer expires Feb 2004

Digital Playground's scanning resources

give you the ability to scan any image, drawing or picture into a format that you can use with your computer (Mac, PC or Amiga) for essays, reports, proposals or just about anything.

- 35mm slides, negatives of any size
- pictures up to 8.5 x 11 and text recognition (OCR)
- full colour, grey-scale or black & white up to 2700 dpi
- photographic retouching, repair and restorations
- all file formats

computer technology you can use
 209 Wellington Street, Kingston, ON, K7K 2Y6 (613) 547-5700

AMS Elections: The teams have their say

The five teams vying for AMS executive lay down their platforms.

ARNOLD, GALLARDI AND SCADRON

These recommendations are the products of more than four months of observing and learning about the AMS with a new point of view: that of the average student. We ate from three different areas of the student body; each of us has achieved recognition in our own areas, among our own activities, but we do not feel that this is as important as what we've put down here. In other words, it's not what we've done, it's what we're going to do.

That said, probably the worst problem we've seen about student government is that nobody cares about it. Everybody criticizes it and exposes it (witness The AMS is Hell!), but nobody from the average student body has been elected to change it. Basically, the AMS is run by the same incestuous group of people and their friends, in their own little world. One executive in the recent past filled four of the five commissioner spots with the President's housemates. We are going to change that: maybe it won't last forever, very little does, but it will last as long as we're holding office. This that's not bad for three average students.

One thing that you might notice when looking at our platform is that we aren't promising very much. There's a simple reason for that: we can't. We are promising what we can do, and we ask you to hold us to it. The world won't change just because you elected three people just like yourselves to the AMS. It just might get a little easier to live in.

We, as a team, can not tell you what to do. No one can. But we ask you to put a little thought into you choice this year. Think of it as considering whom to invest $400 of your money with, next year. We're in touch with the real world, the same one you live in. We've worked hard to get to where we are; so have you. So give it some thought; what will happen if we come through with our plans. We think they're pretty good. We hope you do too.

ASSELSTINE, LIEPMANN AND SHIN

Asselstine, Liepmann and Shin Fight for Your Right.

Many students feel that the AMS is not working for them. It's time for change. Students' concerns have been sidelined for too long. We want programs that will create changes which will affect every student in her/his daily life. An aggressive stance towards the administration, the city and the government is what is needed. We will fight for your right.

Student housing is an issue that demands attention. The AMS must assume an active role in promoting students' interests on the municipal level. We will continue to fight for better student representation at City Hall.

The customer is number one. This fact is often forgotten by student services. Improved quality and efficiency will ensure the long term success of AMS services. New services are not always the solution. Instead, we need to concentrate on the present services and build upon their strengths.

Queen's has no student centre. Revitalization of the JDUC is dependent upon student control and long range planning. Our first step would be to move the Publishing and Copy Centre to a more accessible location; for instance, the Parent Resource Centre.

Child care is essential. The Parent Resource Centre is only a band-aid solution. This problem cannot be tackled by the AMS alone. Partnerships with the administration, GSS, the provincial government and any other concerned organizations are necessary to finally bring an effective, flexible, child-care system to Queen's.

Tuition and student fees are on everyone's mind. As students' representatives we will fight the government against tuition fee increases. Some suggest that tuition increases are inevitable, but the form that they are currently taking cannot be accepted. Any rise in fees must be directly connected to a corresponding rise in the quality of our education.

For integrity, direction and leadership: Choose Asselstine, Liepmann and Shin to fight for your right.

BERTRAND, SMITH AND LULKA

"Image people, Image." Joey deVilva

We firmly believe that image counts for very little. Image cannot effectively run a corporation with a revenue of 3 million dollars. Image cannot ensure that students' voices and votes are felt at the Board of Trustees. As a team we will produce solutions because we have the experience and the commitment to do so. We won't produce elaborate plans or make big speeches. We are more than words. We are action.

Our combined business, operational experience and research has taught us that to open new services right now is foolish. Ensuring profitability for the money-losing services the AMS presently provides is our primary operations goal. We want to provide financially viable services in order to give students real-life business experience in conjunction with economical, convenient and safe products & services.

Feasibility is obviously a big concern for our team. We don't think it is feasible for the AMS to run its own flexible Daycare. The Feasibility Study for childcare on campus recommends that "time be spent investigating the services / programs already developed or existing in the community before proceeding further with an on-site childcare initiative" (p.46). In our discussions with the Queen's Day Care Centre, they have warmly received our suggestion of a mutually-funded expansion of space and services currently provided. This is a realistic move towards solving the daycare problem.

Finally, we place student involvement in the financial decisions of this University as our biggest presidential priority. Through a greater representation on the Board of Trustees, we can prioritize the spending according to students' priorities. We can ensure better Food Services. We can mitigate the effects of rising tuition.

On Feb. 8th & 9th, vote for a No nonsense, No glamour, No glitz team. Vote for experienced hard work. Vote Blair Bertrand, Ace Smith and Silvia Lulka for AMS executive.

CARLYLE, WARD AND WHITING

Why is this executive team running for the AMS?

It's simple. We think that Queen's University is a great place to be and we want the opportunity to make it even better. Over the past three years we have all devoted an extraordinary amount of time, energy and enthusiasm to promoting students' interests and helping students get the most out of their experience at Queen's. Drake and Andrea both committed an entire year to the planning and execution of this year's successful Arts and Science Orientation Week, as the Sociocultural Chair and Head Gael respectively. Drake is currently the Communications Commissioner for ASUS and spent a year and a half working with the Department of Development here at Queen's. In addition, Andrea was an ASUS representative to the AMS in her second year and this year she is an AMS Senator and a Student Constable.

Katen dedicated most of her energies this year to the new ASUS clothing company, Levanna Designs. As Business Manager, she was instrumental in developing the policies, procedures and budget for this successful company. Last year Katen worked with Studio Q as a reporter and is enjoying her second year as a Queen's Student Constable.

We are committed to working with the students of Queen's University. We have the experience and the integrity to make the AMS work. Hard work, new ideas and a dedication to responsibility set us apart. The AMS is not hell. It is a challenge, one all of us look forward to.

On February 8th and 9th Vote Carlyle, Ward and Whiting.

PIRMOHAMED, REX AND SHANTZ

Take Pirmohamed, Kevin Rex and Jani Shantz—Bringing IT back! It is important to student government of the students, by the students, and for the students, <greater student input will bring it back> 2: an approach that concentrates on enthusiasm, fun and school pride, <combining the old spirit with the new realities will bring it back> 3: new perspectives and not the tired old campaign promises of yesterday, <innovative ideas will bring it back>; 4: improvement of what has been the status quo, <setting new standards will bring it back>.

Governance: We will bring GOVERNANCE back to the student body. With tuition increasing, we believe that students should have more say in how their money is spent. Students should be able to recommend that a professor attend a teaching improvement seminar at the Instructional Development Centre. $750,000 centre built with student funds that should be used more effectively.

Spirit: Queen's has a tradition of SPIRIT and excellence. We believe SOARB should act cooperatively with faculties as a review board and students should be trusted with the full control of all aspects of the planning and execution of orientation week in cooperation with SOARB.

Innovation: We will bring back INNOVATION to student government. We are the only team offering brand new ideas like an exchange centre for everything from books to furniture in the JDUC, accessible home insurance for those not covered by their parents, street captains, an entrepreneurial program and realistic solutions to our pub's problems.

Quality: Finally we will bring back a high QUALITY living environment. In discussions with the mayor we have already expressed our interest in actively lobbying the municipal government for improved lighting and road conditions in the student core, and an end to any legislation that limits where we can live.

As students you will be giving one of these teams 1.2 million dollars of your money. Make an educated decision; vote for experience, leadership and proven dedication. Vote for the team that is BRINGING IT BACK!!

THURS. AFTERNOON 4PM
LAST ACTION HERO
 Can it really be THAT BAD?!

THE QUIET PUB
 Wanna Talk?
QP!
 Come Hear...
UPSTAIRS JDUC * 545-2740

FRIDAY AFTERNOON LIVE!
"THE HARDEN BOYS"
 Adam & Joel
 4 to 8pm
 OPID Presents
THE MISSION
 Sunday night @ 8

Editorial

Sport, gender and capitalism

Recently, the Queen's Women's Issues Committee gathered together a number of sports "experts" to look at gender inequality in both amateur and professional sport.

At their discussion, Brenda Willis, head coach of the Queen's Men's Volleyball Team, defined equality as the opportunity to compete or coach according to merit and free from unnecessary obstacles predicated by gender.

Many women in sport do not experience this equality. But the reason for this goes deeper than obvious physiological differences, market mechanisms and the capitalist ethic.

Many men quickly jump to the assumption that sports like football, hockey and basketball are "male" sports because only men have the physical gusto to play at the intensity level to which audiences are accustomed. To some extent this is true. But as an answer alone, this is insufficient. Is it only physiological differences that make men better at these intense sports?

We know that women can perform physical feats of strength and endurance. And we admire the women who do this. But how often do we stop to notice that these feats are (usually) only admired when they occur as part of a "woman's" sport?

Most famous female athletes are either skaters, gymnasts or runners. Maybe the odd synchronized swimmer, rower or skier as well. These sports all have something in common. On top of the physical requirements, they also require grace. They are the "prettier" of sports, and the fact that they are dominated by women is reflective of the way women in society are encouraged to express themselves.

Sure, some of us know that football requires grace. But that is the exception more than the rule. A great football player will show brute force and agility, and somehow pull it off gracefully. That is admirable, and rightly so.

But when a woman shows brute force she is often referred to as a "tough bitch." Not exactly complimentary when taken in a wider context.

In the same sense, men who excel at female dominated sports are often homophobically referred to as "fags" or "queers." Because they look like women. In a ghettoized sport. Sports like football or hockey encourage "male" characteristics or behaviour tendencies including aggression and brute force. (How many people realize domestic violence against women jumps dramatically on Superbowl Sunday?)

From an early age, most women are encouraged to be cooperative, patient and compassionate. While cooperation is essential in any sport, the other characteristics may make someone a better person but not necessarily a better competitive athlete.

In all, these generalizations are difficult (and perhaps, dangerous) to make. Sport has been changing, though not without tremendous effort. The problem remains, however, that only male dominated sports receive intense television coverage. (Unless of course a woman's sport can be sensationalized, like with the case of Tonya Harding.)

Over the past few years, and especially at the university level, more and more women's teams have come to the fore and are being recognized for their worth and competitive value. But the self-perpetuating cycle of televised male sports continues to revolve. Currently, society values one type of athleticism over another. Society is more entertained by "male" sports—in other words, "brute force" sports.

Having more women involved in men's professional sports is not the answer. (Look at Manon Rheame—the only National Hockey League player ever to be asked to pose for Playboy.) While it will raise awareness about women's ability to compete in "male" sports at the professional level, it is still important that women's teams be afforded the prestige they deserve. This won't happen if the best female athletes are playing in male leagues.

Historically, women have had less leisure time than men. And although women's involvement in sport has been increasing incrementally over time, many hurdles are still awaiting in the future.

We should all encourage our younger sisters to be involved in sport, and encourage our brothers and fathers to share the experiences. How many women remember being shoed away from a baseball game on television by a father who assumed a girl wouldn't be interested?

History professor Geoff Smith was only half right when he said the capitalist ethic is the primary cause of inequality between men and women's sport.

The primary cause of inequality between men and women's sport lies in the socialization of men and women into particular gender roles containing specific values. Capitalism thrives on the competitive spirit, and while it once may have made sense for capitalism to keep women submissive and in the home, today that is clearly not the case.

Gender equality in sport can only bode well for capitalism. If as many women were into sport as men are today, the market for sports telecasters would double and TSN would laugh all the way to the bank.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Sarah MacWhirter
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER
David Pavao
NEWS EDITOR
Jeff Gray
PRODUCTION MANAGER
Collin Ho
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Douglas MacGregor
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Rob Furze
FEATURES EDITOR
Alison Masemann

OPINIONS EDITOR
Karen Hall
SPORTS EDITOR
Joel Sutherland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Joey DeVilla
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
Markie Glickman
MISC/BACKPAGE EDITOR
Joey DeVilla
LITERARY LAPSSES EDITOR
Megan Nichols
ASSISTANT NEWS
Brad Elder
BRACK/WARDIAN
Lori Thorlakson

ASSISTANT PRODUCTION
Adrienne Down
ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT
Ryan P. Chen
Slan Beddoe-Stephens
ASSISTANT SPORTS
Justin McKellar
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY
Derek Yarnell
ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSSES
Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Ritchie
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER
Alex Hamer
SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Suzanne Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER
David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, February 4, • Issue 29 • Volume 121
The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents © 1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.
The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable-based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.
Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The cost of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728
Internet: journal@quecn.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue 30 will be published on Tuesday, February 8, 1994

CONTRIBUTORS

Tricia Bauman, Max Blanco, Carina Blofield, Josette Byrne, Tudor Caldwell, Lisa Chen-Wing, Brent Davis, Frank Dixon, Megan Easton, Wendy Eley, Carla Gedala, Geoff Hamilton, Todd Roche Johnson, Dandy Jokelos, Kristen Kunnas, Owen Minns, Danielle Nicholas, Dennis Pao, Denny Silverthorn, Greg Smith, Vanessa Stettler, David Ullmann, Adit Vohra, N. Wallis

Cross Campus Editorials

The Charllatan

CARLETON UNIVERSITY, JAN. 27
There is a long history of university professors being challenged on the grounds that their course material reflects sexist, racist or homophobic views. Professor Paul Lamy at the University of Ottawa was the latest...

"You call them bisexuals, I call them psychopaths," he allegedly expounded... There are few things in this world that we can all agree on. The world is round, it revolves around the sun, and bisexuality does not equal psychotic tendency.

Even if this last topic were to be debated in class, professors should act as moderators, facilitating discussion and injecting well-established theories and concepts. Professors who use their desks as soapboxes aren't doing their jobs and they are not doing anything to further the right of free speech.

The McGill Tribune

MCGILL UNIVERSITY, JAN. 14
On Monday, January 10th, CBC Prime Time featured a documentary entitled "War of Words" concerning freedom of expression in the university environment.

The documentary proposed that universities should provide and even encourage provocative or offensive speech, as long as it is accompanied by discussion and debate. Freedom of speech should be protected, but only to a certain point, the point at which it becomes hurtful. The debate lies with how to determine offensive speech and then how to control it.

Manitoban

UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA, JAN. 12, 1994
The ideas of freedom, liberty and equality have been prostituted to such a degree in western societies, such as ours, that they have completely lost any real meaning. A clear example of the blatant prostitution and manipulation of ideas is the way in which some individuals refer in almost fanatical terms to the "freedom to express" their views, no matter how bizarre they are...

It is clear that individuals and institutions have the responsibility to police themselves. We live in a society in which we have to balance the rights of everyone in a rational way. But there is another more important reason, which is in itself quite simple: "The rights of individuals [and groups] end where the rights of others begin." This seems an extreme statement, but is not illogical or unrealistic.

The Gazette

UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO, JAN. 11, 1994
It's normally not something worth losing any sleep over.

But when graffiti in a men's washroom...begins to advocate or endorse the murderous actions of a man crazed with anger and hatred, it's time for the rest of the community to take notice...

But the underlying injustice that exists within the confines of Canada's Criminal Code when it comes to hate propaganda is an indication that this country's legal system is currently ill-equipped to deal with sexually motivated hatred...

Therefore, it is impossible, in the eyes of the law, to propagate hatred against women in Canada, a country where such crimes—be they as innocuous as bathroom graffiti, or as horrifying as gunning down in cold blood 14 university students—seem alarmingly common.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

PHYS. ED. UNSPORTSMANLIKE: BEWIC WEEKEND

THE EDITOR,

Sports and general physical activity make up one of the most enjoyable aspects of my life. Nothing makes me feel better than a vigorous workout or a great game of soccer, and I know there are others who feel this way as well. These activities are rewarding and add fulfilment to my life whether I am in actual competition, or just out for pleasure. Competition on its own is a valuable aspect of sports and one which I particularly enjoy. Above it, however, I value sportsmanship. I value fair play, good grace in defeat, and the ability to regard one's performance in a positive light, win or lose.

At this year's Bewic Sports Weekend, physical activity and sportsmanship had perfect conditions to flourish. Teams from various faculties, clubs, and friendships, gathered together to play broomball, rugby-basketball, volleyball, and inner-tube water polo. They gathered to show their spirit, enjoy themselves, and play some games. For the majority of teams this happened, and many deserving winners emerged. The sportsmanship, for the most part, was to be complimented, with one exception.

My concern is aimed at the Faculty of Physical Education. These students are the epitome of sportspeople (or so we are led to believe). Sports are their passion, it is the area in which their talents lie, and in some cases, the field in which they plan to teach or coach in the future. It is Phys. Ed. students who are going to teach our children how to play sports, how to compete, and how to be a good "sport."

Why then, at the Bewic Sports Weekend awards banquet, did one of the Phys. Ed. teams walk out of the gym when it was announced that they came second in the competitive category of Pool A? Is it a disgrace to be second? This particular team also exhibited less than admirable behaviour in several of their games. This included swearing at members of the other teams, unnecessary rough play, and making threatening comments to opposing team players. Bewic Weekend is meant to be fun. Is this what students are learning in the Phys. Ed. department? Personally,

I think not. Sports should be for everyone to enjoy, despite their ability level, and those students who will be the models for generations to come should take a close look at their behaviour and the effects it could have. I am not one to disagree with competitive behaviour: I think it is very healthy. But please, remember sportsmanship.
—HEATHER PLAXTON
ARTS '94

EDITORIAL CHALLENGED

THE EDITOR,

I wish to express my disagreement with several points raised in the editorial of Feb. 1, 1994, re: Surface.

Your article states that people have been offended because Surface "singled out student leaders on campus, illustrating what they have or have not done for the minority, lesbian/gay/bi or gender causes." I can't recall hearing any complaints about such specific criticism—quite the opposite, in fact.

Last year, there was much criticism of Surface's content re: Cedric Schubert. It seems to me that people were offended not because Surface criticized Schubert's actions, but because its articles suggested that Schubert should be castrated, stripped of his human rights, and given "electroshock therapy"—the writer apparently believing that this involves torture with a cattle prod or something, instead of a technique to suppress memory.

Junipero Lagtapon, now Surface's Editor-in-Chief, offended a lot of people by advocating violence against white people—not against individuals who had, say, assaulted people of colour, in which case the comments might have had some moral justification. Some of my friends disagree with me on this, but I believe that kind of general attack works against the cause of teaching people to get along despite their differences. Surface and Lagtapon received some threats because of that one—it's deplorable, but utterly unsurprising, that a few people responded in kind to his comments.

Lagtapon's later assertion that he was in the article to advocate such violence didn't help. People were offended by the Sex Issue not because it criticized individuals for what they'd done—most of the faces in the centerfold spread weren't familiar to most people—but because in significant part it was offensive without making a clear point. The "How To Make Love To A White Boy" article made no meaningful point with regard to any text available on campus; it was simply a racist attack—"racist" in the (usual) sense of "discriminating on the basis of race."

People were offended by being called names on the basis of exceedingly shaky arguments. The last two years, Surface printed articles by Lagtapon claiming that Homecoming Week "purpling" was "racist" because, he said, this was an attempt by white people to associate dark skin with "savage" behaviour. He called his housemates "racist" because they disagreed with this interpretation. Is it that surprising that people didn't like this sort of thing—and that they were somewhat dubious when Lagtapon said that he was going to turn Surface around and ensure that articles had a critical base?

Your editorial states that "a referendum is in itself an inappropriate method of determining the worth of something geared toward providing a minority voice." The "worth"—perhaps. But it does seem a reasonable way of determining if everyone should be paying for it, when Lagtapon's first editorial specifically stated that it wasn't for everyone. The "if you don't like it, don't read it" argument didn't work too well for Golden Words a couple of years ago.

I've shown copies of Surface to friends of mine at other universities who were working for minority rights and similar social issues. They'd heard about it, but still were appalled at its content. Apparently a lot of people in minority-rights groups at a variety of other institutions agree that Surface was making things worse, not better.

—JOEL POLOWIN
PH.D., CHEMISTRY

THE QUEEN'S ENQUIRER???

THE EDITOR,

We are writing in response to your article entitled, "AMS candidate Arnold plagued by first-year incident," [Feb. 2].

To begin, we want to make it clear that we are writing in response to the article itself, not about any candidate in particular.

talking

H E A D S

"The allotment of carrot cake"
SARAH RICE
ARTS '93

"I heard something about taking it back"
SHERNOLD EDWARDS
ARTS '97

"I noticed that all the women candidates' hairstyles were big and flowing"
—ANGELA SINGHAL
SCI '95

"Monuments of literature"
—JOHN GOODYER
ARTS '94

We are thoroughly disgusted by the attitude The Journal has taken. Jonathan Arnold made an error two years ago in his first year of university. Is there nothing of greater importance at Queen's right now to warrant front page news? Please... if we wanted to read a tabloid we would buy the Enquirer.
—SHANNON BOLTON
CON.ED '97
MELANIE EVERETS
ARTSCI '97

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Real Live Slacker

OPEN FORUM

ROUND III

THE EDITOR,

In response to Dave Ullman's response to my response to what I considered a lousy film review, I would like to question what Dave meant when he stated that he is familiar with me. I don't know what that means; however, if we are, then Dave will surely know that I would never let him get the last word. Warning—I have a lot of spare time. I can write hundreds of these things.

Perhaps I am not familiar with the aims of the entertainment section. If it is about settling for mediocrity, then I concede. My letter was simply a challenge—to improve the reviews and to remind you that people are reading these articles.

If the editor is to "provide guidance and schooling for novices," then why not tell Zabel to rework his piece and give it some more thought. Why not? Well, apparently, inferior is alright as long as you're having fun. If this is the correct sentiment, then I grant you every one of your points. But why not strive for perfection? For precision? If a writer wants to develop talents, then why not practice the others things necessary in writing for a newspaper—like research. Just a thought.

If the only prerequisite for writing an article for the Entertainment section is the same as the only prerequisite for writing any article, then shouldn't the same level of integrity apply? For example: someone writes an article about what an AMS Presidential candidate may or may not have done. It would be expected that the writer was well informed and had done research. You cannot just write, "there might have been breasts in it," and expect to be taken seriously. Why should the Entertainment section be any different?

If everyone is satisfied with second-rate articles, then that is not a problem. But, as I stated in my original letter, just let us know so we will not get mixed up and actually take you seriously. I suggest a disclaimer: "readers beware, the following reviews may be lousy, but we all like to see our names in print."
—BRAD SIMPSON ARTS '95

WEST IGNORED

THE EDITOR,

As a resident of Jean Royce Hall, I have a problem with the stigma and stereotypes attached to West Campus and how this figure into the current AMS Executive campaign. After living here for nearly two years, I charge the Alma Mater Society with a non-existent role in the everyday lives of the students and residents here. Furthermore, I am dismayed by this lack of attention, not only by the AMS, but also by the Queen's Journal.

Having attended the AMS Candidates' Open Forum here last Tuesday night and addressing the question of our residents' security, I was not surprised to find several of the candidate teams unfamiliar with our West-Main Shuttle Service and exhibiting blatant ignorance towards West Campus. One team even went as far as to openly identify common West Campus stereotypes as a basis for following up with vague campaign promises. The security of the residents of Jean Royce Hall is of utmost importance, and yet, most of the teams were ill-prepared to coherently address the issue. In addition, such an issue would be deserving of some small mention in the following issue of the Queen's Journal (Jan. 28). However, when a team was cited to suggest increasing the length of Orientation Week, The Journal yet again alienated us by stating that the team would be working solely with the Main Campus Residence Council (did you know that we have our own residence council which also plans part of Orientation?).

I am not writing to "raise hell" or assume that West Campus has been systematically made the victim of long-time discrimination and bias. We have a diverse and vibrant community which is, contrary to popular belief, an integral part of the Queen's community. We house and service the entire range of students from every faculty and discipline. I think it is a shame that Queen's highest student government and its most respected student newspaper have continually neglected and shown ignorance towards West Campus. It is even more appalling to find AMS Candidate teams address West Campus under the ungrounded assumption that we are in any way disadvantaged. Although we have been quite self-sufficient and perhaps do not figure into the lives of the majority of Queen's students, we are still a part of the Queen's community, and for this reason, we should and must not be ignored time and time again. I hope that all the AMS Executive candidates realize this going into the elections.

—RODEL RAMOS
ARTS '96

THE CRITIC RESPONDS

THE EDITOR,

It is with some reluctance that I break the critics' unwritten code of silence before the outraged complaints of the groundlings so as to reply to charges of conflict of interest levelled at my recent review of Kismet ("Hypocritical Oafs?" Jan. 28). As my trio of indignant accusers point out, both the director of this production (Ken Jacobsen) and the reviewer (myself) have something in common: enrolment in the Department of English and proximate office space. A scandal in the making? Hardly. As unlikely as it may seem, I haven't yet had the pleasure of making Mr. Jacobsen's acquaintance, nor would I have allowed such a meeting to dissuade me from passing judgment on Kismet. Several years of reviewing have taught me that in a theatrical community the size of Kingston's, a critic will inevitably come to know, by reputation at least, most artists of any significance. While this environment may appear overly cosy to some, it only suffers charges of outright critical inest when viewed from the limited perspective of quibbling hacks, such as those I am now obliged to defend my reputation against, whose own oeuvres consist entirely of bilious compositions in that most craven of genres—the Letter to the Editor. Furthermore, the claim that shared enrolment in the Department of English should inspire some form of fraternal loyalty is plainly contradicted by the very words implying it, for my cowardly accusers, English majors all, show not the slightest compunction in sharpening their styluses for a dorsal assault upon one of their own, leaving but a moment to stammer, "Et tu, Brute?"

More dismaying, however, is that The Journal, flying in the face of sound editorial policy, would print the rancid prose of this rank missive disguised under the noms de fumes of "Danny Defoe," "Jack Dryden" and "Al Pope." Defoe, Dryden and Pope? Please! That the Opinions Editor should fail to recognize these as pseudonymous ski-masks for a back-alley blackjacking of a critic's reputation betrays an illiteracy rivalled only by that of the troika of Scribblers themselves. No matter. The true identities of these nameless penmen have been made known to me, for they, too, are bottom-dwellers in basement offices. Their open invitation to visit the basement of Watson Hall will reveal only the sight of what were once three promising young scholars, their creativities now broken under the remorseless Juggernaut of the Academy, hunch-backed like medieval monks in their cells, jaded, bitter, testaments to their own unquestioning faith in the Death of the Author. This alone is the true crime.
—DAVID LEACH
MA ENGLISH

Eds. Note: Not to worry, Mr. Leach, we noticed.

ASUS
OPEN FORUMS:
 February 2nd 6:30 to 8:00pm in Upper Victoria Hall
 and
 February 4th 11:30 to 1:00pm in Lower Ceilidh, JDUC
 Candidates for election include:
ASUS Executive
 94 (Permanent), 95, 96 & 97 Year Executives
 ASUS Reps to the AMS
 Senators
 This is an opportunity for you to find out who is running, listen to panel discussions and to ask candidates any questions you might have!!
INFORM YOURSELF AND VOTE!

Catherine of Siena (14th Century), tormented by temptations and evil visions, cried: "O good and sweet Jesus, where wert thou while my soul was being so sorely tempted?" The answer came, "I was in thy heart, Catherine, for I will not leave anyone who does not first leave me."
 St. Catherine of Siena
 Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00), and St. Mark's Barrifield (11:00).

STAR GENERAL MEETING

Wednesday, Feb. 9
Clark Hall Pub, 7:00 pm

ALL CHAIRS & MEMBERS WELCOME

Interfaith Council: Holy Days for 1994

The Interfaith Council provides this listing of holy days for 1994 to assist the scheduling of meetings, events, and examinations. Observant students may wish exemption. In case of conflicts between examinations and a religious date, the existing procedure will continue to be in effect. A student with a conflict with a final exam should report the conflict to the Exams Office; a conflict between a mid-year or mid-term exam should be discussed with the instructor. This list represents important dates for those faiths active at Queen's and with the Interfaith Council. It is not inclusive for all faith traditions of the world. Further information can be sought from members of the council who may be contacted through the Chaplain's Office at 545-2186.

January	April	August
6 Christian Epiphany	1 Christian Good Friday	10 Islam Death of the Prophet Muhammad
7 Christian* Christmas	3 Christian Easter	18 Islam Maulud-un-Nabi (begins in evening)
14 Christian* New Year's Day	13 Sikhism Baisakhi	29 Hinduism Sri Krishna Jayanti
14 Hinduism Makar Sankranti	14 Hinduism Vaisakhi
19 Sikh Guru Gobind Singh	20 Hinduism Ramanavami
Mid-month Native Mid-winter ceremonies requires absence from work/class	21, 29 Baha'i The Feast of Ridvan
	29 Christian* Good Friday
	May	September
	1 Christian Easter (Pascha)	6, 7 Judaism Rosh Hashanah
	2 Baha'i The Feast of Ridvan	15 Judaism Yom Kippur
	16, 17 Judaism Shavuot	20, 21 Judaism Sukkot
February	21 Islam Eid-ul-Adha	28 Judaism Simhat Torah
16 Christian Ash Wednesday	23 Baha'i The Declaration of the Bab
13-Mar.12 Islam Fasting month of Ramadan	25 Buddhism Wesak	October
	29 Baha'i The Ascension of the Bahauallah	14 Hinduism Dassehra
March		November
4 Islam Martyrdom of Imam Ab Mahashivarati		3 Sikhism Birthday of Guru Arjan Dev
10 Hindu Mid-ul-Fitr		3 Hinduism Diwali
13 Islam Eid ul Fitr	June	28 Judaism Hannukkah
21 Baha'i Naw Ruz	10 Islam First of Muharram
26 sunset & 27 all day Judaism Pesach	19 Islam Asbura
		December
	July	25 Christian Christmas
	9 Baha'i Martyrdom of the Bab

* Julian Calendar
  Gregorian Calendar
  Shi-ite

FEATURES

AMS Candidates' Platforms at a Glance

	Mike Asselstine Wayne Liepmann & Linda Shin	Taz Pirmohamed Kevin Rex & Jane Shantz	Blair Bertrand Ace Smith & Silvia Lukka	Drake Carlyle Karen Ward & Andrea Whiting	Jonathan Arnold Jessica Scadron & Caroline Gallardi
HOUSING	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Lobby for enforcement of property standards Promote education on housing issues among Queen's students 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Lobby for students' interests during municipal elections Implement 'Street Captains' program 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Opposed to Phase II proposals Promote students voting in municipal elections 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Establish new commissionet position to lobby full-time on housing issues Promote education among Queen's students on housing issues 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Create liaison committee between postsecondary institutions in Kingston on housing issues Lobby for student speaking rights at City Council Merge three student wards into one to increase student representation
CHILDCARE	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Believe childcare should be organized in conjunction with other concerned groups 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Not just an AMS issue — need to cooperate with other groups on campus 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> AMS daycare centre is not feasible — instead provide childcare bursaries for students Coordinate services with Queen's Daycare Centre 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Expand Queen's daycare centre at the corner of Union and Alfred Establish childcare fundraising committee 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> No concrete plan, but the team is 'making it a priority'
SERVICES	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Advocate price flexibility at campus pubs Move Publishing and Copy Centre to Parent Resource Centre Space Support budgeting for zero in AMS services 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Establish second-hand store in John Deutsch University Centre Look into the possibility of an AMS organized house insurance policy for students Facelift for Alfie's Cross-subsidization of AMS services 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Develop long-term marketing strategy for AMS services Hire advertising coordinator for campus pubs Budget Walkhome service, Student Constables for zero, use profits from other services to offset losses in other areas 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Reexamine Alfie's marketing strategies. Alfie's facelift Negotiate with Vice-Principal (University Relations) Tom Williams to lower drink prices Possibly move the Quiet Pub Look into expanding Tricolour service to Kitchener-Waterloo, London, possible road trips to New York, Quebec City Expand Walkhome service. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Review Work Bursary Program. Propose legislation to prevent AMS from budgeting for a deficit Propose that AMS take over liquor license for campus pubs Increase Walkhome hours Regular inventory checks of services
HIRING	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Institute group dynamics counselling at the beginning of the summer Continue legislated affirmative action within the AMS 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Review lottery system of hiring Establish grievance procedure for AMS employees 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Institute awareness training for Assembly and Commission members 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Improve training of campus pub staff, especially with relation to harassment issues 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Establish blind hiring policy to eliminate patronage
ACADEMICS	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> In favour of OUSA 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> In favour of OUSA. Advocate better quality instruction through the use of the Instructional Development Centre 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> In favour of OUSA 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Cautious endorsement of OUSA; Income Contingent Loan Repayment Program is not the ideal method of student assistance 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> OUSA right now "doesn't get us anywhere;" involvement in OUSA should be increased
STUDENT INTEREST FEES	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Review student interest fees Summer mail-out with information on opt-outs 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Establish student board to review interest fees Every group receiving fees should make budget public; hold opt-out week when groups can campaign 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Universal opt-outs with individual fees coming up for referendum every three years 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Make students more aware of how their money is being spent. Enable students to opt out of Health Plan at registration 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> more fees should be opt-outable, but student interest fees should not be cut
MISCELLANEOUS	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Endorses Journal autonomy 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Review role of Senate Orientation Activities Review Board (SOARB) Campaign to increase legitimacy of AMS Judicial Committee 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Phase out Journal student interest fee Increase student representation on University Boards and Committees 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Hold AMS Assembly in Victoria Hall or Lower Ceilidh Provide AMS Identification for International Students Endorses Journal autonomy Lobby administration to include environmental clause in all future contract dealings (e.g. food services contracts) 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Weekly Commissionet reports Lengthen Orientation Week Not in favour of AMS restructuring Advocates economic autonomy for The Journal

AMS elections: A Fact Check

With elections approaching quickly, The Journal offers some background on a few of the Alma Mater Society issues facing candidates.

TUITION INCREASES

The Council of Ontario Universities, an organization of university presidents and principals, released a controversial report in August. The COU proposal, as it has come to be known, called for 50 per cent increases in undergraduate tuition, and even greater increases for professional graduate programs. However, the COU is not a government body, and does not set the tuition rates. That is the responsibility of the Ontario government. New tuition levels are expected to be announced very soon, and estimates of the increase vary anywhere from 10 to 50 per cent.

Queen's is a founding member of the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA) which supports a tuition increase of up to 30 per cent, provided it is accompanied by a reformed student aid package and matched dollar-for-dollar with increased government funding.

OUSA favours an income-contingent loan repayment program (ICLRP). ICLR is a loan program with interest rates set at the government's borrowing rate. Loan repayment is made as a fixed percentage of the graduate's annual income. The Ontario government is currently initiating pilot projects with ICLR.

HOUSING ISSUES

Phase II is a housing bylaw proposal released by the Kingston Planning Committee in Sept. 1992. It calls for zoning changes in Kingston which could restrict areas in which students can live.

The Phase II report said housing and zoning regulations should "recognize the particular lifestyle and household characteristics of students and reflect this through specific requirements which relate to building design and location, amenity space, parking and occupancy standards."

Specifically, the report recommended the creation of a liaison board between owners and tenants with supervisory duties in the area of occupant behaviour and property maintenance. Also, the plan would limit student population density in Kingston by restricting the maximum occupants in a dwelling and set standards for minimum floor space in eating, sleeping and washroom areas. A rear yard space requirement is included to discourage the use of front yards in the student areas.

In a Dec. 1 city meeting, a Rental Housing Issues Work Group, composed of students, administrators and community groups, was established to re-evaluate the housing situation. The group has until May 1, 1994 to suggest an alternative to Phase II.

DAYCARE

For the past two years, the Alma Mater Society has been attempting to provide, with limited success, daycare services to Queen's students.

In the AMS election campaign of 1992, the Executive team of Jonathan Baillie, Jason Thompson and Liz Muggah pledged to "address current inadequacies in daycare" at Queen's, and proposed the establishment of a drop-in daycare centre.

Despite these campaign commitments, once elected, Baillie's team made little headway into establishing some form of daycare under the aegis of the AMS.

The issue did not die, however. Katherine Philips, current AMS president, made the issue part of her election platform during the 1993 campaign. She envisioned a drop-in centre staffed on a volunteer basis in order that those students "who have families don't have to be concerned about the financial burden of daycare."

Many options have been discussed this year in an attempt to fulfil this campaign promise. Questions have arisen about the ability of the AMS to conform to professional standards for daycare facilities, and about the cost of establishing a full-fledged daycare service.

This year has seen the establishment of a Parent-Child Resource Centre. This is a drop-in centre, open around the dinner hour, in which parents must supervise their children while there. Plans for a childcare facility per se seem to be on hold. A recently released report on childcare, coming out of Vice-President (university affairs) Todd Minerson's office, advocates that the responsibility for providing childcare for Queen's students be transferred from the AMS to the university administration.

Lori Thorlakson ludes muddling just as much as the next gal. Alison Masemann is the next gal.

LOVERS NEED TO KNOW! Crossword Contest

Word List:

- Females
- Caldsore
- Clap
- HIV
- Herpes
- Burning
- Spermicide
- Syphilis
- Ten
- Sexual activity
- Warts
- Safer sex
- Inflammatory
- Blood
- AIDS
- Chlamydia
- Condorn
- Pill
- Latex

1st Prize:
$25

2nd & 3rd
Prize:
T-shirts

Name: _____
Phone#: _____

Across Clues:

- A common symptom of STD's in moles is during urination.
- _____ condoms provide the best protection against STD's.
- What is the newest and most dangerous STD?
- One should always practice _____ (two words) to prevent infection with on STD.
- The _____ is the best protection against STD's for sexually active people.
- The _____ is a commonly used slang term for gonorrhoea.
- Another name for the AIDS virus is _____.
- _____ should be used in conjunction with a condom to increase protection.
- Up to 80% of _____ who contract chlamydia may have no symptoms.
- Studies show that one in eight to one in _____ students may have chlamydia.

Down Clues:

- Pelvic _____ disease can result from untreated STD.
- What is another bodily fluid (besides semen) through which AIDS can be transmitted?
- _____ is the most prevalent reportable STD on college campuses.
- The Human Papilloma virus causes genital _____.
- STD's are spread through (two words) with an infected partner.
- A _____ is the name of a common Herpes type 1 virus infection.
- The _____ is an effective method of birth control but does not provide protection against STD's.
- Today, _____ appears to be relatively uncommon on college campuses.
- _____ has no known cure.

Return the completed crossword to Student Health Service c/o D. Nolting (via campus mail drop-off in the waiting room).

Winners Announced February 11th!

AMS ELECTIONS
are being held Tuesday Feb. 8 and Wednesday Feb. 9. The Journal urges all Queen's students to get educated and VOTE!

Tonight & Sat.

celtic rock weekend party with

come early!
cheap city
7:30 - 9:30!

THE MAHONES

guests Fri. Easy Access
Sat. The Mugworts

Every MONDAY!
The 20¢
wing thing!
plus Trivia!

Every
TUESDAY!
Play our
N.T.N. Trivia
Challenge! win prizes!
Impress your friends!

Coming Soon!
The Sidemen
The Headstones
Hopping Penguins
Soul Cages
Plaid Daddies
Skydiggers

Every
THURSDAY!
DIPSOMANIA!
WOW.

International Development Week February 6 to 12, 1994

Together
we can change our world

Sunday
5:30 pm Queen St. United Church
(Queen & Clergy)
KICK-OFF TO DEVELOPMENT WEEK
DINNER
featuring Salvadoran food & music,
for more info call OPIRG 549-0066
6:00 pm The Quiet Pub
Movie "The Mission"

Monday
Evening Clark Hall Pub
OPID Smoker
7:30 pm International Centre
Movies:
- "Debt Crisis: Unnatural Disaster in Jamaica"
- "Hungry for Profit"

Tuesday
7:00 pm Lower Ceileih
Jabu Dube-Info officer ANC Canada
"Promises for Justice, Realities of Oppression: Can Socialism be the future of the new South Africa"

Wednesday
Evening Princess Court Cinema
Two films on Black Community in Canada as part of Black Awareness Month
- "Survivors" (48 min)
- "Them (that's not)" (55 min)

Thursday
7:00 pm Dunning Auditorium
WILF WILKINSON -VP Rotary International, Chair of Development Committee
speaking on: "SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT & ROTARY EXCHANGES"
7:30 pm International Centre
Movies: "To be a Woman"; African women's response to the debt crisis
"The Money Lenders: The World Bank and IMF"

Friday
7:00 pm ADIC
Movies: "Holding Our Ground", "Manufacturing Consent"
Two day conference on Black History Awareness and Development Begins
"Turning on the Lights"
Register 6:00 pm International Centre
Saturday
10:00am-6:00pm International Centre, conference continues Keynote: 7:00 pm

SPORTS

Men's V-ball takes silver at Dal

BY DANDY JOKELOS

The Men's Volleyball Team came home from The Dalhousie Classic with a silver medal last weekend, and the best tournament finish for the Gaels in recent memory.

The Gaels started out against Memorial University from Newfoundland. Queen's took the match in straight sets, winning 15-8, 15-12, & 16-14. The Gaels were led by "Rowdy" Ron O'Hare with 13 kills and one stuff block, followed by Mike Spence with ten kills and three stuffs and David Kantor with nine stuffs and six blocks. Queen's got off to a slow start in their next match, losing 15-4 to the University of Saskatchewan Huskies. The Gaels stabilized things significantly, coming back to win 15-4, 15-9 and 15-10. This ensured the team of a playoff berth, with Western next up. Saturday was like Friday night in reverse. The Gaels came out strong winning 15-5, and then dropped the next three sets 6-15, 13-15, & 2-15.

In the other pool, host Dalhousie (#9) led Waterloo two games to none in a round robin match when ex-National Team gun Jody Holden went down with a sprained ankle. The tentative Tigers then dropped the next three sets and also finished second in their pool.

While Dal (with Holden back on the floor) wiped Western out in record time in one semi-final, Queen's took care of Waterloo 3-0 (15-9, 16-14, 15-4) to set up a Queen's-Dal final.

In front of a hometown crowd of approximately 800, the Gaels came out strong in what was probably their finest team effort of the season to date. The Gaels took the first game 15-12, and then dropped the next three 6-15, 7-15, and 10-15. The Gaels were down in the fourth set 6-14 and showed tremendous fight as they hung on for nine rotations and earned four points before Dal got their last point.

All five hitters for the Gaels were in double digits, reflecting the great job setter Kevin Chiswell did in moving the ball around.

There was not much time off for the Gaels as they arrived home and began preparing for the "triple-header" weekend against Toronto, York and Ryerson.

Due to the ice storm and the horrid road conditions, the Friday match against Toronto was postponed, and the Gaels waited until Saturday to make the trip to T.O.

The game against the York at York was critical for the Gaels, as they were one and one with the Yeomen going into the match. Chiswell, suffered a sprained ankle on Wednesday and the Gaels knew that they would have their work cut out for them. A top passing effort would be necessary if the Gaels were to win.

The Yeomen served extremely tough throughout the match and put a lot of pressure on the Gaels' passing. Their strategy succeeded in that the tri-colour squad was forced to run the offense from off the net, eliminating the middle attack, in several situations.

The Gaels, appearing tentative at times, still managed to fight back after dropping the first set 10-15. A second set victory (16-14) kept them in. In the third set the Gaels got behind by four early and stayed close after that, ending up with an 11-15 loss. Game four again produced a comeback with a 15-12 win. In rally point, after some confusion about who was serving, the Gaels tied things at 8-8 and 9-9, but ended up on the trailing end of a 15-11 finish.

Mike Cvihun led the Queen's offense with 20 kills, Spence added 19, and O'Hare and Kantor each chipped in 14 kills. Spence and right side hitter Mark (Prior) McKenna led the defensive effort with six stuff blocks and four digs apiece.

That left Queen's at eight and two in league play, the same record as the Yeomen, who, by virtue of that match victory, hold first place.

Sunday Queen's headed downtown for their second last league game.

Coming off a tough loss, the Gaels started slowly but were able to rally back and take the match 3-0 (15-12, 15-13, 15-8). John Jickling led the Gaels offense with 14 kills. McKenna added six kills and seven blocks.

The Gaels are currently in Quebec City for the Laval Rouge Et Or Winter Carnival Tournament, where they will be competing against the top teams in the country, as well as the Russian Junior National Team.

Queen's, now eight and two, headed to Toronto last night for their last league game of the regular season, a game with no bearing on the final standings. Unless there is an "upset" when Toronto visits Laurentian this weekend, Toronto will play the Gaels here on Sunday Feb. 13 at 2:30 p.m. in Bartlett Gym.

Rubin "Hurricane" Carter - a former middleweight championship contender - advocates the reduction of illiteracy in society.
MARIKA GLICKMAN

Synchro team lands 2nd place

BY THE SYNCHRO TEAM

On Jan. 29 and 30, the Queen's synchronized swimming team made the lengthy journey to the University of Toronto athletic centre for the OWIAA qualifying competition.

The day began long before the crack of dawn on Sunday with a trek through ice and snow to the pool. Competition opened with the senior girls figures at 7 a.m., followed by the novices and intermediates.

Senior girls figures had a very strong showing with Sarah Dunstall placing third, followed by Leila Meyers in fourth. The Thompson twins took eighth and twelfth spots in the same category.

Anita Bapooji had an incredible performance, coming in first place overall (much to her surprise) in intermediate figures. Laura Scull achieved a fourth place finish, while Michelle Brooks came in eighth.

In the novice category, Chanda Reid had a very consistent swim and placed sixth. Rookies SYNCHRO CONTINUED ON PAGE 22

Track feud deepens

BY FRANK DIXON

Several recent developments in the feud involving the Queen's Golden Gaels varsity track program and the breakaway group QUACK Athletics seem to point towards an increasingly severe impasse between the two camps, rather than a reconciliation.

The Journal has learned that Kingston high school and community track athletes affiliated with QUACK (Queen's University Athletic Club Kingston) Athletics have been recently unable to book blocks of training time in the Queen's Jock Harty Arena indoor track facility. However, Queen's students associated with QUACK are unaffected, since student interest fees cover their use of the indoor track.

A Jan. 24 letter from John McFarlane, chair of Facilities and Services, to Dave Scott-Thomas, coach of the community-based QUACK athletes, gave notice of the unavailability of training time. In his letter, a copy of which has been obtained by The Journal, McFarlane wrote: "Given the heavy demands by our scheduled program and casual users (students, staff and faculty) I regret that I am unable to provide a block booking for your community club."

Jeff Brison, a QUACK Athletics coach, Queen's Ph.D. student, and co-coach of the Queen's Golden Gaels cross country team, responded to McFarlane's letter the next day.

Brison's letter, a copy of which has also been obtained by The Journal, noted that "Winter training facilities are very difficult to come by in Kingston." Brison stated, "I thought that as a head coach of the Queen's Cross-Country team I could expect the support and encouragement of the University." Brison also noted that "Kingston Track Club and the Royal Military College Track team are allowed to" use the Jock Harty track.

Individuals on both sides of the dispute who have been interviewed by The Journal are unanimous in asserting that the feud is a major distraction from their administration, coaching, training and competition.

In a forthcoming issue, The Journal will present a detailed story on the background of the evolution of QUACK from its founding to the present time, the sequence of events which led to the separation, and the personalities on both sides of the dispute.

Playoff hopes high for men's hockey Gaels

BY ADIT VOHRA

So far, the Men's Hockey Team season has been full of ups and downs. Coming off a largely successful season (8-11-3 win-loss-tied record), the Golden Gaels had high expectations entering the 1992-1993 season. With many veterans returning to the lineup and a solid rookie cast, the Gaels were bound to improve on last year's performance.

Remarkably, through the long losing streak, all the players have maintained a positive attitude. The players have committed to a team approach and in spite of their record, they're pulling together and believe that success is imminent. Shannon Storr, assistant captain and last year's team top rookie, adds: "Considering the awful streak, it is quite incredible of how the players have held strong moral wise."

The Golden Gaels have seven games remaining before they head into the playoffs. For the team to be successful, each player must contribute 100% effort. The Gaels have all the talent to become a strong competitor in the league. They have an excellent goalie in Bill Landry, a solid defensive core and some consistent snipers.

The Gaels will continue to roll on that winning streak on Friday, Feb. 4 at 7:30 p.m. against the Ottawa Gee-Gees. On Sunday, Feb. 6 they'll meet UQTR at 2:00 p.m. These are bound to be really exciting games; but the Gaels need your support! Lately, attendance has been improving but we're still far from a sell-out. Come on out and give it try, it's free with Student I.D. and it's a lot of fun. Support them Gaels!

Despite a dismal record, the hockey team is far from done. Many of their losses have been by less than two goals, and the team has improved enormously since Christmas. As far as assistant coach Kevin MacInnis is concerned: "The season is not over and we're optimistic in turning things around going into the playoffs."

Head coach John Phelan adds: "It's all work in progress and it is important that players perform in practices in preparation for the games."

Presently, the Golden Gaels are in third place in their division, four points ahead of RMC and three points behind Toronto. Last year, the Gaels captured the final

MORE HOCKEY NEWS ON PAGE 20

City Sports
Phone 542-4415
298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT.
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

Winter Wear 25% OFF	Badminton Racquets 20% OFF
Great Selection of Hiking Boots
Court Shoes 20% OFF	Head 180 Squash Racquet Reg: $139.97 Sale: $89.99

TEAMS | FLOORS | CLUBS | FACILITIES
JACKETS | T-SHIRTS | RUGBY JERSEYS | GOLF SHIRTS | SWEATS
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys | Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

A.M.S. Achievement Award

Are you eligible for on A.M.S. Achievement Award? This new award, instituted this year is designed to recognize outstanding volunteer contribution to the A.M.S. 10 points are needed in order to be eligible for the award. People who have reached 15 points are eligible for an award with honours and individuals with 20 points are eligible for an award with distinction.

POINTS VALUES FOR POSITIONS ARE AS FOLLOWS:

Points	Activity
5	Chair of the Board of Directors
4	Deputies
4	STAR Assistant Co-ordinators
4	Tricolor Yearbook Volunteers
3	Student Directors on the Board of Directors
3	Committee Chairs
3	Orientation Facilitators
2	Sub-Committee Chairs
2	Orientation Co-ordinators
2	Assembly Speaker
2	Assembly Members
2	Committee Members (of an A.M.S. committee)
2	A.M.S. Rep. to a non-A.M.S. committee. (i.e. JDUC Programming Committee)
2	Task Force Representative
2	Journal Contributor (4 stories or 4 issues of production staff)
2	Studio Q Contributor (reporter on 2 or technical staff on 3)
2	Kaleidoscope Buddy
2	Infobank Volunteer
2	Parent Resource Centre Volunteer
1	Participant Model United Nations
1	Participant Model Parliament
1	Participant Undergrad Games

If you need more information or want to pick up an application form drop by the A.M.S. office.
Applications are due by February 18th.
The award will be presented at the A.M.S. Appreciation Night—Sunday, March 27, 1994.

Men's Hockey Gael Player Profiles:

Andrew Clark Bill Landry

Left-winger Andrew Clark is playing in his third year for the Golden Gaels. Along with Linemates Gaty Girardi and Jeff "Goose" Gosselin, Clark is one of Queen's most prolific scorers, on a team best known for its physical, grinding style. Clark finished off an impressive season last year with two goals in the playoffs. This year, he has netted 17 points in 19 games. However, Clark doesn't pay much attention to his statistics. "Individual performance is not the most important thing," he said. "It's how we play as a team — how we play as a line."

Andrew Clark

Bill Landry is certainly a key player in the Gaels post-season plans. In his five years netminding for Queen's, the 6'4" goalie has guided the team to many victories. One of his most memorable moments was in first round playoff action against UOQR last year. Landry was unbeatable and almost won the series single-handedly. Although this year has not been his most consistent, when he is on top of his game he is one of the best goalies in the league. Landry gives a lot of credit to his defence. With captain Dan Brown, Derek Morin, Shannon Storr, Kenneth Ronson, and Mike Longo, Queen's has the luxury of putting a solid defensive corps in front of a seasoned netminder. "Our defence is good, but it has occasionally broken down," said Storr. "It's difficult to participate in rushes when we only dress 4-5 defencemen. I often assume a more defensive role."

The veteran goalie is often seen as a type of role model. "Even though we had that streak, this is one of the best teams I've ever played on," Landry said. "The team has pulled together. I feel really close to my teammates this year."

Before the season ends, Landry would like to reduce his current 3.70 GAA to under 3.00. He is not yet certain of his plans after he leaves Queen's next year, but he has considered playing for the AHL. However, his most important goal for the moment is leading the Gaels to a division title. He feels that the Gaels have a very good chance to surprise a lot of people. As assistant coach Kevin Macinnis put it, "If our best players play as our best players can play, we are a very good team." Bill Landry is definitely one of their best players.

Bill Landry

Added Girardi, "our styles of play complement one another."

The 5'9" Torontonian loves to play the game, as evidenced by his determination both on and off the ice. Along with Gosselin, Clark is in his third year of Commerce. He admits that school and hockey both take a lot of work, and a lot of time management.

"It keeps me focused," he said. "I make time to do whatever needs to be done."

Clark feels that this season hasn't been as bad as the fourteen game losing streak would indicate. "We've lost some close games, which could have gone either way," he said. "Coach Phelan has pushed us hard, but I think it was necessary to make our practices more productive." He added, "the practices have been getting more productive since Christmas — which was probably our low-point."

In terms of team goals, Clark believes that Queen's has an excellent shot at making the playoffs, where they could surprise a lot of people. To do this, he thinks the team has to stay focused and take each game as it comes. The remaining seven regular-season games are critical in preparation for the post-season. He also feels that constructive practices are a key in building momentum. Clark hopes that this momentum will carry them through the playoffs and into next season. Look for Clark to be back next year.

INTRAMURAL NEWS

Pay attention BEWS who are involved in any of the following sports: ball hockey, recreational basketball, bowling, curling, hockey, indoor soccer, innertube waterpolo, and those entered in the inter-fac hockey tournament, the schedule for this week — Feb. seventh to tenth — is posted in the PEC. Check the intramural notice board for details on exact dates and times. The same goes for WIC and BEWIC participants.

Queen's swimmers ready to race

BY NATATION

The Queen's swim team has completed their last regular season competition before team finals. Despite stiff competition from Ontario's top-ranked swimming power McMaster University, Queen's swimmers displayed a high level of adversity by demonstrating both mental toughness and physical endurance.

Getting the meet off to a fast start, the Queen's women won the 4x100m medley relay with strong performances from each of the individual swimmers. Although they had a tough act to follow, the men turned in equally impressive swims when they finished just shy of the McMaster powerhouse medley relay squad. Todd "the Funz" Funston — looking a little heavier in the mid-section — demonstrated the value of good home cooking when he turned in a competitive 100m backstroke leg.

In the individual events, the Queen's women's breaststrokes fulfilled Cyndi "Inspiration" Housken's prediction as veteran Kim Grootveld qualified for the CIAU's. Can we say Victoria? Cyndi gets the window seat. Fellow breaststrokes Carolyn "P.O." Burke and Siobhan "I have ten hours of construction" Roberts demonstrated that they too have the "powa" when they finished with personal bests in both the 100m and 200m events.

In the freestyle sprint event, Sarah "Hitched" Lamont showed the benefits of her altitude training when she turned in a scorching time in the 50m. Following in this veteran's wake, so to speak, rookie Lisa Frith demonstrated the value of Florida training camp by blowing her competitors away in the 100m freestyle. Not to be outclassed in the distance freestyle events, Sandy "Great Haircut" Thomson and Kathy "4:31 — learn how to race everyone else" Palmer put in competitive swims after a gruelling two weeks of taper-less training.

Toby "Troll" Benyan swam to perfection in the 200m freestyle with a strong second place finish. Following Toby's inspirational swim, Todd Baron showed his versatility, courage and team dedication by swimming the 200m individual medley and the 100m butterfly back to back. Ian "I want the middle seat" Gardiner made a valiant attempt at qualifying for CI's in the demanding 1500m freestyle event. Ian demonstrated that he too can pace with the "big guns" of Canadian swimming. We know you will be "Victorious" in Toronto, Ian. (You can send us the post-card.)

In just two weeks the Queen's

Athletes of the week

Jenny Laughton, a forward with the women's basketball Gaels, has been chosen The Journal's female athlete of the week.

Jenny Laughton

Laughton pumped in a career-best 28 points and grabbed seven rebounds in Queen's 88-67 win over the Ryerson Lady Rams on Saturday. She also scored 15 points and pulled down three rebounds in a narrow 65-58 loss to the #3-ranked University of Toronto Lady Blues the previous night. Laughton, from Ottawa, is a 4th-year PHE student and a four-year Gaels veteran.

Our male athlete of the week is Steve Fruitman, a 4th commerce student. He is currently ranked number one in the CIAU rankings for shotput. Steve's longest throw of the season is 14.48m, an amazing 48cm over the standard. Steve finished first at the Western meet and 2nd at the Windsor meet and is undefeated by Canadian competition. He would like to thank his mom and dad.

Steve Fruitman

women will travel to Guelph University to compete in the Ontario conference finals. A week later the men will compete in their own finals in Toronto. Although this is largely a development team, Coach Rod Agar has high hopes. "Several of our key swimmers will be graduating this year, but the rookies have proven to be quite promising," said Agar. "As far as I can see, the future looks good."

Given Coach Agar's superior eyesight, we know that this bodes well for the future of Queen's swimming. The future's so bright, we gotta wear shades. Good luck.

HOCKEY POOL STANDINGS
1	Cherowen 176
2	Patieuse 161
3	Foogie 160
4	Farrah 159
5	Grizzly 159
6	190 Barry 158
7	Jeffer 155
8	W.A.F.C. 152
9	Habchick 149
10	Number 1 147
11	Yo Yo Ma 137
12	Aliens 136

Train to be a TEACHER

in Great Britain!

Ministry approved courses in U.K. Universities

For more information, contact

TEACH

Phone 1-905-388-7158
Fax 1-905-383-7770

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

BULLETIN

On Sept. 10/93, the Journal's Food Critic claimed that Jj's was "the most under rated off-campus restaurant!"

"Well, our 200+ regulars know the secret...
Cool Environment + Great Food + Frugal Prices = SUCCESS!"

* Catch the Blue Jays at Jj's *
409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547 - 3771

i love a man in UNIFORM

FEB. 4 - 7

free coffee & donuts
at every screening!

Princess Court Cinema
(Princess at Division)
546-FILM

Department of Electrical Engineering UNDERGRADUATE ORIENTATION

Monday, February 7, 1994
7:30 p.m.

Program

- ◆ Challenges for the Electrical Engineer
- ◆ Program Options
- ◆ Electrical Engineering Club Activities
- ◆ Demonstrations and Displays
- ◆ Refreshments
- ◆ Discussions with E.E. Staff and Students

Walter Light Hall

Queen's Engineering takes Stanley Cup

BY MAX BLANCO

This past weekend saw the Clark Hall Pub hockey team bring home the hardware from the annual Guelph invitational engineering tournament in convincing style.

Right from the opening faceoff at 8 a.m. Friday morning, domination was the name of the game. Waterloo was the first victim of the QE steamroller, suffering an 8-0 defeat. Centre Bryan Box potted the natural hat trick faster than you could say "Wayne Gretzky" in the first period, and the team never looked back. Coach Chris Ferguson escaped with the shutout after facing a barrage of 10 shots on goal.

The puck dropped in game 2 against Carleton two hours later, on Guelph's Olympic size rink. The large ice surface didn't seem to slow down the hitting, as Brad Dineley dished out a highlight-film hit at the start of the second period. Carleton engineering informs us that the victim has learned his lesson, and now plans to keep his head up whenever playing contact hockey. At the final buzzer the score was 5-2, and Queen's was in firm control of its own destiny heading into its last round-robin game.

Ryerson never seemed to show up for the final game, as the score attests. With an 8-2 victory, Queen's was headed straight for the final.

Gryph's sports lounge, overlooking the hockey surface, was the site of the post-game festivities as the team awaited the outcome of the other division to determine their opponents in the final. McMaster went undefeated in their division to meet Queen's for the Cup.

The tension was palpable as both teams emerged onto the ice Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m. Mac looked good for a while, but Queen's soon showed who was hungrier. The action was fast and furious, with Queen's taking the body everywhere. Most of the play occurred inside Mac's blue line, as the well-oiled Queen's machine out-hustled and out-hit the boys from Hamilton.

Everybody put in strong games, especially the defense, who carried over their slick-puck control and bone-crushing hitting from Friday. When the smoke cleared, the final score showed a 3-0 Queen's victory, and Mac was glad to get off the ice and into the safety of their dressing room. Overall, the score was not indicative of the play, as Mac's goalie made a lot of key stops to keep his team in the game, but no one man could stop the Queen's juggernaut.

The tournament was a roaring success, and the team even got extensive tours of Whitby, Ajax, and Scarborough courtesy of driver Rick Frise. The Guelph Engineering Stanley Cup should be on display in Clark Hall Pub at least until next year. Special thanks go out to our sponsors at Clark and EngSoc. The team plans to take its undefeated record on the road soon; the next stop on the tournament circuit should be Ecole Polytech for reading week.

Synchro success

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19

Julie "Bartender" Hollick and Michelle "Guppy" Goecke improved immensely, finishing 16th and 24th respectively.

After a successful morning, Queen's went on to compete in the duet and team events. In a field of 13 duets, Meyers and Dunstall came in a solid third place, closely followed by the Thompson Twins (a.k.a. Sarah and Rachel) in fourth. Finally, the day wrapped up with the intense competition of the team event, which featured seven teams vying for top spot. The Queen's team—consisting of Bapooji, Brooks, Dunstall, Meyers, Reid, Scull and the Thompson twins—swam surprisingly well and finished in second place behind Western.

Special thanks to Ida Stegenga, Jennifer Chown and Micoles Scheidl for their superb coaching expertise. With only two weeks to polish up figures and routines, everyone is looking forward to the OW finals, taking place Feb. 11 to 13 at McMaster University. Good luck, girls!

OPEN FACULTY ART SHOW

Submissions due Feb 14
for info call 536-2155.

The Art Show will be held during...

Artsfest! Feb 28 - Mar 3

SPORTS

One point weekend for women's hockey team

BY WENDY ELEY

Over the weekend, the hockey Gaels played three games and finished up with a respectable 1-1-1 record. Friday night action featured the Queen's Golden Gaels versus the second place Guelph Gryphons. The scoring opened at 4:44 of the first period when Jill Herbert put the rebound from Simone Wilson's shot past the Guelph netminder. Play continued from end to end throughout this intense game. Guelph was next to capitalize, scoring at 10:32 and following with a second goal with only five seconds left in the first period.

The Gaels did not let this late goal deflate their intensity. Katie Clapp was a big part of the team, as she led the Gaels' spirit squad, "pumping everybody up" throughout the intense play. Her success was proven when fellow rookie Shannon Heward connected with yet another Wilson rebound.

Coming into the third tied at two, the Gaels did not let up. Sarah Hurst put the puck into the net off another rebound. Rebounds proved to be the key to the Gaels' offence in this game. Single assists were given to Cori Heaphy, Melanie Hurst and Herbert. The Gaels, thinking they had taken two points from the Gryphons, were proven otherwise. After pulling their goalie and maintaining possession in the Gaels' defensive zone, the Gryphons put one by Queen's goalie Tammy Eger on a shot by defenseman Michelle Holmes. Neminder Eger played an excellent game, contributing greatly to the 3-3 tie.

The Gaels played another strong game against Guelph on Saturday. Guelph put the first two on the board, the first coming from a cherry picker's breakaway early in the first period. The second was scored from behind the net off a bad bounce only 15 seconds into the second period.

Down 2-0, the Gaels continued to work hard. The fast paced game was intense and exciting for both players and fans. Stacey Harvey added to the excitement when she dove through a number of players to shove a loose puck through the pads of Guelph goaltender Jen Dewar. Harvey's goal was assisted by two Gaels on the point, Julie Walker and Wendy Eley. Eley tied the game up at two with a shot that rebounded off both posts and into the net with only 29 seconds remaining in the second period.

The Gaels were on a high and came out for the third ready to give all they had left. Guelph, in the middle of the period, scored their third goal and Queen's was unable to tie it up again. The Gaels finished their weekend season-play with only one point, but the games could have gone either way.

The coaches were glad to see their team back on track following a poor performance in Toronto last weekend. Hopefully this point will put the Gaels into third place, which would mean a semi-final playoff game against the Guelph Gryphons later this month.

On Sunday Queen's hosted a nearby Brockville team and ended the weekend on a positive note. The Gaels took a while to get their offensive attack rolling, but came out strong in the second period. Julie Walker led the team with four points in Sunday's exhibition play. She began her attack with a blistering slapshot which rebounded off the chest of Melanie Hurst and into the net. Hurst used her stick for her second goal of the game with assists from Herbert and Walker. Walker could not be stopped!

The third goal was scored after Walder stuckhanded through the Brockville team and slid the puck beneath the goaltender's pads. Rookie Courtney Davis amazed her team as she carried the puck from over half ice, took the defense wide with her and beat the goalie on a low shot to the corner. Walker took her fourth point of the game from Davis' goal.

Shannon Heward finished the Gaels' scoring in the third off a rebound. Single assists were added by Tanya Casey and Stacey Harvey. Brockville managed to place one puck past Catherine Drimmel, but it wasn't enough to beat the Golden Gaels. Tammy Eger and Catherine Drimmel were commended for their solid goaltending in this weekend's play.

Today the Gaels head to Montreal for the Concordia Invitational Tournament. The Gaels hope to play well before they round out the regular season next weekend in Toronto.

Badminton domination

BY N. WALLIS

In the middle of January, the men's badminton team travelled five long hours to Western for what was the final tournament of the year. The squad (consisting of Andy Trickett, Peter Metcalfe, Steve Frank and Nigel Wallis) ended the season on a high note, winning 14 matches. Special mention should be given to Metcalfe for his 4-0 record on Saturday in singles against some extremely hard competition. When the tournament resumed on Sunday, despite challenging circumstances, the Gaels were ready (which is more than can be said for Western's squad) and played some remarkable matches. The first doubles team of Frank and Wallis overcame some rather uneven play to go 3-1; while Trickett and Metcalfe, playing together in a tournament for the first time had some difficulties in adjusting to each other's styles.

Overall, it cannot be said that the season's results fully reflect the efforts of the athletes involved. Seva Golosky, the team's coach, characterized the year as a rebuilding one—noting the unfortunate loss of several high ranked players.

With Rich Thomson's mid-season graduation, the Gaels lost one of the OUA's top athletes over the last four and half years, and our team's reserves were called upon. Furthermore, it should be noted that several players overcame injuries during the course of the season that severely impeded their play (and this year, they weren't all self-inflicted—Pete!).

While every one on the team responded with enthusiasm to the challenge of playing above their expected level, unfortunately as a team we appeared to lack the necessary depth to challenge for the playoffs.

While many of team's most notable moments occurred off court (the Queen's Adopt-A-Drinker program; my personal apologies to 375 Johnson... 75¢ each; mmm!), there were some memorable games and shots that deserve a mention, including: Rich's heart-breaking 17-16, 18-17 loss to three-time OUA champion Quang Hoang; Pete's unorthodox serves; Andy's efforts in doubles; and Nigel hitting 15 smashes in just one rally against the University of Toronto's number one doubles team. Furthermore we would like to thank Tim Woodman for all his efforts in our support.

The OUA playoffs this weekend shape up as another showdown between Toronto and Western, who should dispose with York and Ottawa with relative ease. The finals should go right down to the last match, with U of T being slightly favoured to wrest the title away from the two-time champs, Western.

ENTERTAINMENT

Chatting with The Charlatans

Charlatans: more than just shoe-gazers

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE CHARLATANS UK BY DENNY SILVERTHORNE

The Charlatans UK have had a tough time recording albums. Before going into the studio for their second release, After Between 10th and 11th, their guitar player left, and their bassist had to undergo therapy for manic depression. Now, prior to the recording of their new LP, Up To Our Hips, keyboardist Rob Collins was convicted of aiding in an armed robbery! According to the band, Rob was driving a friend one night, and when his friend nipped into the corner store for some cigarettes he also robbed it at gunpoint, leaving Rob, "unknowingly," to drive the getaway car.

I had a chance to talk with singer Tim Burgess and drummer Jon Brookes in Toronto about the new album which is expected out in late March. On recording the new album, Jon said, "We just surrounded ourselves with gadgets that we understood, instruments that we knew. That way, it's true to us. We didn't try to be too clever." As Tim explained, "I think we messed around with too many knobs last time."

With the new single, "Can't Get Out of Bed," already out, you may have already heard their new sound. It is definitely a lot different from their previous efforts, moving more towards a guitar-based band in the style of the sixties and seventies R&B groups like The Rolling Stones. As Tim explained, "The guitars got turned up, really, because, like, Rob wasn't around at mixing time. I also think that [guitarist] Mark's really improved. I can see us getting into more blues." Furthermore, Tim confessed, "My favourite singer's David Crosby, although I wouldn't want to look like him."

The focus on the guitar work lead me to ask whether they had changed their mind about becoming "the biggest organ-based band ever." But Jon was quick to point out, "We are already. Us and The Faces." Tim added, "I think we're better than that, really. I'm a much better singer than Rod Stewart, and I don't pretend to be Scottish either."

The band were very friendly and chatty, and are really pleased with the relaxed feel of the album, which resulted from producer Steve Hillage's encouragement of off-the-floor recording. Jon stated that "Steve wanted to make us sound like he knew it should, whereas Flood was producing us in more of a production capacity, whereas Steve really listened to us." In fact, they had so much fun recording the album, just enjoying the process, that they hope to go back into the studio before the end of the year.

The band is touring Europe and England throughout March, and hope to play America in April or May. With all the Lollapalooza rumours flying around, I thought I'd ask them if they had any interest in joining a tour like that.

Personally, for me, I don't like it, even though I've never been," answered Tim. "And we don't like body piercing," remarked Jon. "Also, I like to play live dates on our own, I think we function better. We can play longer, and also, we get more free drinks," continued Tim.

As to the rumour that Tim gets bored with gigs over thirty minutes, Tim responded, "Yeah, I've got the attention span of a goldfish. Which is about three seconds, probably."

One of the more interesting songs on the album is the long instrumental "Feel Flows," which sees some acoustic guitar, a Charlatans first, and which Tim thought was so good he didn't want to mess with it. The band was listening to a lot of Black Crowes and Nine Inch Nails at the time of recording, which seems to explain the more seventies type feel, and could put them ahead of their cross-town rivals The Stone Roses, who are also rumoured to be delving into the rock past of that era for their long-awaited album. Ironically, The Charlatans were originally seen as Roses rip-offs, but the timing of this album could put them at the head of the pack. As Tim revealed, "I've not heard any of the other bands' records. But I'll salute anyone that makes an album, you know, I'll be clapping."

And Tim added, "We're the most interesting thing that happened last year." And, if this new LP, decidedly more classic rock friendly than previous discs, takes off, they could be the story of 1994 as well. You'll have to wait until March, but to get a feeling for the album, take a look at this promo picture, which features a relaxed Burgess with a guitar no-ticer at the forefront. As Tim put it, "That picture sums up the whole LP. It sums it up, that's how relaxed it was."

Altman's definitely not a player

SHORT CUTS DIRECTED BY ROBERT ALTMAN PRINCESS COURT CINEMA BY GREG SMITH

Robert Altman's epic Short Cuts is a draining experience. It drains energy, it drains the mind and it drains the senses. Above all else though, it drains away any doubt of Altman's cinematic genius. With an incomparable ensemble cast of 22 interlocking characters and Raymond Carver's short stories at his disposal, the director has followed up 1992's hit The Player with 189 minutes of random, funny and harsh portraits of American society untouched. And not a blemish can hide from Altman's hyper-observant gaze.

To snugly explain the "meaning" of this film would be an injustice, because it is a very personal experience that transcends an explanation. Also, to summarize these scattered stories would be similar to describing a tapestry thread by thread. Nonetheless, Short Cuts is laden with powerful scenes that are undeniably affecting.

The film begins with the heavy drone of helicopters flying in formation above Los Angeles, spraying for a deadly epidemic, and ends with an earthquake that shakes all of their lives. In one house is Lois Kaiser (Jennifer Jason Leigh), who changes her infant daughter's diapers while performing phoresis for extra cash, cooing "my panties are getting a little wet." Her blank expression speaks volumes.

Carver's blunt narratives on Altman's caustic canvas translate into a melange of the ordinary and the bizarre, whose results are entrancing. As concerned parents, Ann and Howard Finnigan (Andie MacDowell and Bruce Davison) agonize over their hospitalized son, two bizarre characters intercede and harass the couple. Baker, Andy Bitkower (a hilarious Lyle Lovett) hounds the poor couple for forgetting to pick up their dying son's birthday cake. Meanwhile, Howard's estranged father (Jack Lemmon) re-appears in his son's life after a prolonged absence only to haunt Howard with a manic, nine minute confession, which brings his son to tears. Such coincidence and chance composes Short Cuts, resulting in a mesmerizing pastiche that is at once wonderful, and at the same time, real.

Short Cuts follows the lead of other classic Altman movies, particularly Nashville, by packing the screen and soundtrack with minutiae and character nuance that reward careful observation. Take Dr. Ralph Wyman (Matthew Modine): as the Finnigan's doctor, he displays a calm, unflinching confidence. Yet, for just a moment, Ralph can be seen swallowing back a handful of aspirins, proving his calm to be a lie. This brief clue re-surfaces later in the film, when Ralph's insecurities about his wife's faithfulness uncontrollably bubble to the surface. Altman has crafted a film with a scope of detail that is enormous.

What a movie! You gotta love it.

Much credit must also go to the phenomenal cast. The finely calibrated teamwork of Lily Tomlin and Tom Waits, and of Matthew Modine and Julianne Moore provides equally chilling portrayals of dislocated lovers, despite the huge class difference between the two couples. Playing a make-up artist, Robert Downey Jr. sears every scene he is in.

The same can be said about Tim Robbins, who plays Gene Shepard, an adulterous police officer who hates his dog and arrests motorists for driving too slow. As the helicopters spray the neighbourhood to kill the medfly, Gene's wife (Madeleine Stowe) yells at Gene for making the dog stay outside. Gene barks back, "Don't you get environmental on me!" That moment, like so many others in the film, is both hilarious and sad. Interspersed amongst sardonic flickers of humanity is a sadly poetic disaffection, hauntingly rendered by Altman and his cast.

Altman's rebel spirit is bracing, and his film is a treasure because it demands energy, thought and observation—everything that Tim Robbins' sleazy Hollywood executive from The Player would hate in a film. Short Cuts makes it clear that Robert Altman wouldn't have it any other way.

Queen's BFA takes the stage

QUEEN'S FINE ARTS EXHIBITION STAGES
BY VANESSA STETTLER

It was with some trepidation that I became involved in the art show held at Stages this past Monday. Although exposure for student artists is a pleasant change from the indifference encountered on campus (as demonstrated by lack of attendance at the Art-On-Line Red Room Shows), Stages hardly seemed the ideal gallery alternative.

In terms of practicality, the amount of wall space that I could recall while envisioning Stages did not seem adequate for the amount and variety of artists solicited by Stages. Furthermore, I will admit to imagining scenes of drunken patrons spilling on and knocking into the displayed paintings, prints and sculptures. Billed as "The Expression Show," the event promised body painting, a live sheet metal sculpture, a DJ from Toronto and work representing all four years of Queen's Bachelor of Fine Arts (BFA) program.

Each of these four attractions satisfied expectations to varying degrees. Much to the chagrin of body painting artist Janet Williamson, her demonstration was given a very voyeuristic and exhibition skaver. One had only to listen to the inflections in the voice of the Stages answering machine, promising, "live body painting on Madison Models" to assume what element of human nature was being appealed to. However, grace under pressure prevailed and despite Janet Williamson's nervousness and anxiety, all three models displayed unique, intricate and black tribal designs that decorated their legs, chest, backs and faces. The "live sheet metal sculpture" proved a little overrated and very anti-climatic, although perhaps I am a little biased because I can't really take anyone that seriously who wears sunglasses at 6:00 at night inside Stages. The sculpture consisted of artist Matthew Moore cutting out and applying black adhesive to a pre-assembled wall of chained together sheet metal which left me rather unmoved by his artistic demonstration. I noticed this was also the general reaction of much of the audience. An exhibiting artist said that he had seen him do a very similar piece at the Phoenix Club in Toronto. Despite his diligent efforts, which kept him occupied for most of the evening (it wasn't complete when I left at 12:45), the piece was, in the words of one patron, reminiscent of "a glorified car decal."

Sculpture by Nancy Lee Preston

TRICIA BAUMAN

Michael X, the "DJ from Toronto," despite his lack of PJ Harvey and Pixies, among others, was quite willing to take requests, which were answered with amazing rapidity and kept the dance-floor occupied for the duration of the show.

When the work finally went up, any fears regarding the venue were waylaid: Stages proved to be an ideal location for the large canvases and multi-media sculptures. The paintings and prints covered the walls on the first and second floors, with additional works suspended over the dance-floor and from the second floor railings. The sculptures were located on the raised platforms beside the dance-floor and the entrance.

The reaction from those who attended was very favourable and those exhibiting felt the show was well worth their effort. Stages was even said to be considering hanging work on their first and second floor walls permanently. The night was a great success by Stages' Monday night standards, with over 200 people attending the event. Stages is even considering the possibility of holding a similar event in two weeks, on Valentine's Day.

Carrey is so very

Jim brings his colour to the big screen

ACE VENTURA PET DETECTIVE
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY DAVID ULLMANN

James Carrey is the kind of person that most people would find annoying in real life. He would be the geek at the back of your high school history class making stupid noises and shoving pencils up his nose. And that's pretty much what he does on film as Ace Ventura Pet Detective, only somehow it's hysterical.

Ace Ventura lives in a rented apartment where he avoids the landlord and drives a temperamental late model '70's Chevette. In other words, he seems like any of a number of bad Mickey Spillane creations. But then on second look, there is an otter in his toilet, penguins in his ice box and puppy chow in his car ash tray. Basically, he's a man who loves animals.

Technically, within the con-finer of the film he is a pet detective who finds missing pets and collects the reward. (Sounds like something the CP&P should look into for Arts graduates, but I digress...) In fact, the film is a showcase for this new Canadian talent, and demonstrates that the bones in his body are made of rubber and that there are no lengths to which his hair isn't willing to grow to keep you in stitches.

Along the trail of the missing Miami Dolphin mascot, Snowflake (a dolphin), he encounters an otter, a shark and a squished cockroach, but none of them are talking, so the Doolittle Detective is stumped. However, never fear, by the time he stuffs himself into a box and visits the set from Deliverance, things begin to take shape.

This film is made memorable by the physical elasticity of the lead character. There are simply some positions that the human body is not supposed to bend into, but someone forgot to tell this young man.

Carrey has Chaplin's balance and Peter Seller's timing. Like both of these titanic top bananas, Carrey's humour has no need for dialogue. His physical slapstick transcends any language barrier. If you've ever seen any of the fights that Inspector Clouseau used to have with his butler Kato, you'll know what I mean.

This Burlington, Ontario native who made his TV debut on Global Television, and who has since gone on to become, "that white guy on In Living Color," looks like he is on his way to becoming a household name.

There is no accounting for taste in what we find funny. Take Ace Ventura Pet Detective as an example. Without a doubt, this puerile piece of pulp did not take any great mind to create, but it is, nonetheless, the funniest film I have seen in a long time. If you're worried that you've seen the best bits in the commercial, don't be.

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS
Fri, Feb 4
CD Release party for U.I.C.
Sat, Feb 5
49 ACRES
Thurs, Feb 10
The Morgan Fields

• PUB GRUB
• IRISH PINTS
• SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan
76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) Tel: 544-1966

What are the Odds on a hell of a good time?

ODDS WITH RHYMES WITH ORANGE ALFIE'S
BY GEOFF HAMILTON

Wednesday night at Alfie's was a hell of a good time. It started off with Rhymes with Orange, a hard, poppy, groovy, effervescent loud and vigorous band with spunk and style and toques and some cool tunes. They ran on stage with these stunning, Cyclopean miner's headlamp things, and as they jumped and grooved they projected beams of light that cut wild and wily swaths across the darkness. The beams rose and fell, darted and paused and then darted again, flitting about like ethereal phalli over the receptive crowd.

The hand's first admirers were two enthusiastic and uninhibited males. They took the dance floor alone and just let go, feeling the music, and then being the music. These guys were having a great time from the start. RWO's lead vocalist, Lyndon Johnson, threw a piece of wood onto the floor and one guy ran out and grabbed it. Then the other guy came and snatched it away from him, and then after that they sort of shated it for a while, all the time dancing with the same intensity, never once losing the rhythm. After a couple of songs, the crowd warmed up and they didn't have to be out there alone any more. Alfie's filled up almost completely and RWO got everyone going pretty good.

Johnson was fairly impressive, but the drummer was the best. He thrashed away at his instrument in tortured hairlessness, his sleek head bobbing and veering, his muscles contorting and uncoiling at a furious, mesmerizing pace. When it was over, and he walked off the stage glistening and glowing from the effort, you could tell he had given everything and that he was really spent. A performance like that is as satisfying for an audience as it is for the performer himself.

The guys in the band needed a place to stay for the night, so after the set there was an announcement asking for people to put them up. Johnson was immediately surrounded by volunteers. Johnson was a real gentleman, and he talked to everyone who went up to him, and signed a lot of things as well. "What do you think of Kingston," someone asked. "It's great," he replied, revealing a charming smile that left more than a few admirers with Nothing rhymes with orange.

What an odd looking man.

Odd balls at Alfie's

CONTINUED FROM PREVIOUS PAGE

hawking, puppy-dog expressions. Then came the Odds. They are a hard, twisty, snappy and swirly bunch of rockers, with some really good songs and some really good lyrics. One of the guys in the band has a fantastic head of frizzled hair that looks just like an overgrown patch of Velcro. He was good, and the lead singer was good too. The floor was packed hard with dancers the whole time.

The band played some fast stuff for a bit and then came a slow song called "Wendy." It included the often repeated line, I miss fucking Wendy under the stars the night that Elvis died. It was a nice song, with a tenderly tragic, tragically tender feeling to it. Everyone really got into it and there were a number of people who were in love that danced slow and close. That line, though, is very intriguing. Is a causal relationship implied? Given that celebrity deaths are potent aphrodisiacs, did the departure of Elvis prompt the love-making? Or did it go the other way--was Wendy Elvis's lover, and did her infidelity with some young aspiring rocker lead to the great gyator's suicide? Or what's the matter with me? I'm a heterosexual man. It does, however, include a perfunctory nod (of sorts) to political correctness: I'll make it with them, unless they say no. Even on the most extreme edge of concupiscence, no still means no. All this went over incredibly well with both sexes, and it was the most actively danced-to song of the bunch. Everyone was having a hell of a time out there, getting down, getting up, flouncing about like caught fish.

The crowd started petering out after 12:30, but there was still an eager contingent listening to the encores until after one o'clock. All in all, Alfie's on Wednesday was a hell of a good time.

They are a hard, twisty, snappy and swirly bunch of rockers.

MORRISON'S RESTAURANT
Good Home Made Food, Fast Service
Open 5:30 a.m. to 7:45 p.m. MONDAY TO SATURDAY
SUNDAY 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. (Breakfast Only)
318 KING STREET EAST
KINGSTON, ONTARIO, 542-9483

Canada's New Democrats
Kingston & The Islands Federal New Democratic Party Riding Association
Invites you to attend the 1994 ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING
Tuesday, February 8 at 6:30 p.m.
Wilson Room
Kingston Public Library
followed at 8 p.m. by FORUM
On RENEWAL
The Future of Social Democracy
with
DESMOND MORTON
Historian and Principal of Erindale College
JAMIE SWIFT
Broadcaster and journalist
MARION DEWAR
Former Mayor of Ottawa and former Member of Parliament

Pinocchio's Chicken & Ribs
"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entrée and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994
531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed
14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

THE ARROGANT WORMS

Time: 7:30
Ticket Price: $12
Location: Grand Theatre
Date: Feb., 16, 1994
Tickets Available: Performing Arts Office; Grand Theatre. For info 546-5997

WORMS

THE ALEXANDER AND IAN VORRES HELLENIC FELLOWSHIP 1994 COMPETITION VALUED AT $1800

THE FELLOWSHIP WAS ESTABLISHED BY MR. IAN VORRES (BA'49). THE AWARD WILL BE MADE TO AN UPPER YEAR UNDERGRADUATE OR TO A GRADUATE STUDENT AT QUEEN'S INTENDING TO PURSUE ORIGINAL WORK IN GREECE DURING ONE YEAR OR TWO CONSECUTIVE YEARS IN PHILOLOGY, ART HISTORY, ART CONSERVATION, ARCHAEOLOGY, HISTORY, POLITICAL STUDIES OR PHILOSOPHY, OR TO ATTEND A FULL YEAR PROGRAM AT AN APPROVED INSTITUTION, OR TO PARTICIPATE IN A SUMMER SESSION OR EXCAVATION IN GREECE SPONSORED BY THE CANADIAN ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE IN ATHENS OR OTHER APPROVED INSTITUTION

APPLICANTS SHOULD FORWARD A LETTER OF APPLICATION WITH CV AND PROJECT DESCRIPTION, ALONG WITH THE NAMES OF TWO REFERENCES TO: DR. R.S. KILPATRICK, HEAD, DEPARTMENT OF CLASSICS, WATSON HALL, ROOM 506. THE AWARD WILL BE ADJUDICATED BY A COMMITTEE FROM THE DEPARTMENT.

FINAL DATE FOR APPLICATION: THURSDAY MARCH 31, 1994

STEREO RADIO DAZE

CFRC-FM 101.9 / cable 90.9 is YOUR campus-community alternative in Kingston! The NEW winter/spring 1994 schedule has begun. Program guides are available at the Infobank.

- *Special events this week include:
 - Live varsity hockey Golden Gaels vs Ottawa (men) tonight at 7:30 pm.
 - Live varsity basketball Golden Gaels vs Ryerson (women and men) tomorrow at 6 pm.
 - Exclusive interviews with Vancouver's The Velvetens & Toronto's She Stole My Beer on Heated Edge today at 3 pm.
 - Interview with Susan Cogan and spotlight on Johnny Clegg on LIMIN', Mon. at 3 pm.

CRFC CALL-IN 545-2121: Call us and have your say! Mon.-Wed. 10 pm.

Mon.: Comic Books
Tue.: The Etiquette of Tipping
Wed.: To be announced

CHARTS FOR THE WEEK OF JAN. 24th-30th, 1994.

TOP 5	TC	LC	ARTIST	RECORD	LABEL
1	2		Cub	Betti-Cola	Mint
2	2		The Inbreds	Hilario	PF
3	--		Various Artists	Morganfields
4	13		Cowboy Junkies	Pale Sun Crescent Moon	MCA
5	8		Various Artists	Scoop This	BMG

RAP	TC	LC	ARTIST	RECORD	LABEL
1	3		Jamal-Ski	Roughneck Reality	Columbia
2	1		Rascalz	Really Livin'	Calabash
3	--		Snoop Doggy Dog	What's My Name	Interscope
4	--		Daddy-O	Brooklyn Bounce	Brooklyn
5	10		US 3	Hand On The Torch	Blue Note

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS? THEN GET THE ANSWERS!

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

Nominations for the

Tricolour Award

the highest non-academic, non-athletic award that can be received by an individual Queen's student, are now open.

Nomination forms are available at the AMS Office and should be returned there by the deadline 5:00pm

February 11th, 1994

Nominations will not be accepted after this date.

For more information contact
Pete Stuart
at the AMS Office (545-2725)
or at home (547-5358)

Street Life

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES
The Toucan: 49 Acres

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)

Blink 7:10-9:40
Philadelphia 7:00-9:50
Shadowlands 6:45-9:35
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:05-9:45
Schindler's List 8:30

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)

Grumpy Old Men 6:55-9:10
Tombstone 6:45-9:30
Intersection 7:00-9:35
The Air Up There 7:00-9:15
Pelican Brief 6:45-9:25
The Piano 6:50-9:20
Iron Will 7:10-9:25

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)

Friday & Saturday
I Love A Man In Uniform 7:00
Short Cuts 9:00

Sunday & Monday
Short Cuts 6:00
I Love A Man In Uniform 9:30

CLUBS

FRIDAY
AJ's Hangar: One Duke's Boog and the Brovtyard Whips
Sen's Pub: Leisare Sui Lorry Quiet Pub. 4-9pm Kristen Pickersgill and Chris Smith
Toucan: U.I.C.
Alfie's: She Stole My Beer with Volume

SATURDAY
AJ's Hangar: One Duke's Committee Band

GALLERIES
AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

OPENING EXHIBITION...
The Ethics of Making: The farming royons of John Heward
The Hon. Shelo Finestone, Minister of State with Department of Conacoan Heritagew will open the exhibition.
February 6 from 3-5 pm

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...
through Feb. 6
Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection
through March 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order
through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections from the Long Collection of African Art
through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Mosterworks of Modernism

EDWARD DAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)

Juried Exhibition 1994: Featuring two and three dimensional works by 17 artists from Kingston and the surrounding area until February 5

THEATRE
ROTUNDA THEATRE, THEOLOGICAL HALL
Queen's German Theatre Group presents Goethe's Faust, Part One
February 4-5 at 8 pm.
Tickets $5 (students/seniors), $7 (adults)

THE 88Y GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess Street (530-2050)

Threshold Theatre presents Direct From Kingston Festival 94
This year's performances are: Snow, Seroli, Aulo Da Fe, This Property Is Condemned, The Onion Skin, Army Of Lovers, Boxed, and Refugees.
until February 13.
Tickets $6 (for one show), $10 (for two shows). Weekend maineines poy-what-you-con.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUE ROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or simply to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmets can enjoy a luxurious accommodation, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147

THE INBREDS - Kingston's smallest band still turning bass and drums into a full meal deal. 21 song "Hilario" available downtown, or direct: PF Records Box 21003, Kingston, Ontario K7L 1C0 (postpaid - CD - 10.00, tape 5.00)

ARTS - 95 Masquerade semi-annual Friday February 11th, Portsmouth. Tickets and more info at Mac-Corry 10 - 2:30 February 7th - 11th.

EATING DISORDERS? WANT TO HELP A FRIEND? Friends for Health can help you help your friend. Next meeting February 10th, 7 - 8 p.m., 32 Queen's Crescent. For more information call 545-6712

BAGELS! Queen's Hill will be selling real Montreal bagels with cream cheese. Really cheap. In Mac-Corry on February 8th and 16th. Come have a nash! Don't miss out!

LAST DAY FOR ARTSCI 96 SEMI TICKETS!!! Buy them today in Mac-Corry, 11:30 - 2:30.

CHARITY BALL '94 - Get swept away for an evening in "New York, New York". Dinner and dance tonight at the Ambassador Hotel. Tickets still on sale today in Mac-Corry.

95'S... Got a jacket from your first year? Pretty gross, eh? Come to the odds and ends ASUS Jacket sale. Sell or trade for a spiffy new jacket! Call 545-6278 for info.

ARTS - 95 Masquerade semi-annual Friday February 11th, Portsmouth. Tickets and more info at Mac-Corry 10 - 2:30 February 7th - 11th.

BEVIC DAY RESULTS ARE IN! (Team Death) Overall MVP: Hank White, Volleyball MVP's: Khoo, Az-wi-pe and Cupit/Heath. Broomball MVP's: Kelly, Tony and Kyna. Waterpolo MVP's: Cherewaty, Sleepy and Lara/roast Beef/Bob.

BEVIC DAY RESULTS ARE IN! (Team Death) Overall MVP: Hank White, Volleyball MVP's: Hank, Ice and Hoostuff/Hindel/Olaf. Rookie of the Year: Kevin "Roast Beef" Ridge. T.S.N. turning point: Kelly Hubley's overtime victory.

"WE NO LONGER enslave animals for food purposes." - Commander William Riker, in response to request from barbaric alien race for live food animals. Queen's Animal Rights Committee.

HEALTHY EATING CONCERNS?

Call the Confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon - Thurs 6 - 9 p.m., 545-6000 ext 4444. Leave a message anytime.

SOAPBERRY SHOP'S energizing hair and scalp mud leaves your scalp feeling tingly and gives your hair more shine and manageability. Stimulates and promotes healthy hair growth. 225 Princess St., 545-1028.

DO YOU THINK about the weight craze that permeates our society? Join us February 12, or 3rd for a video from TV Ontario's WEIGHT CRAZE SERIES and a facilitated discussion. Call 545-6712 for times and places.

PARENTS! Problems studying when your children are around? Come out to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Bring your children. Our volunteers will occupy your children while you study. Watch for upcoming events for children. Our new hours beginning January 24th are Monday to Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m.

EURAIL PASSES. Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available. Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

HELPWANTED

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED! Do you like children? Looking for some volunteer work? The Parent Resource Centre needs volunteers to staff the centre Monday to Friday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m. Please sign up at the centre in the lower ceiling of the JDUC.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Friday, February 11th to: Gord McIlquham, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Maitland St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 2V3.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing inground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

CLASSIFIEDS

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best trips to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

COMMERCE LEATHER JACKET for sale. '94 (or you can change crest). Size 42. $140 or best offer. Call Maria at 547-6727.

MONTREAL-KINGSTON FLIGHT. February 28 3:50 p.m. from Dorval. $45. Perfect route home for Reading Week. Call Teagan at 546-5448.

FOR SALE: Yamaha DX7 s keyboard. Hardly used. Mint condition. Cartridge, stand, pedal, sheet music included. Call Chris at 542-7993 to make an offer.

READING WEEK GETAWAYS to Panama City Beach Florida and South Padre Island Texas; $249 and $349 Quad Occ. Call Steve at 542-1344.

SPRING BREAK '94!! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Christine at 544-4506.

LOST & FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chandar at 544-1649.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ben Righ. Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

PERSONALS

ERNIE - I'd give up 90210 for you, ice cream and chocolate too. If you'd only go to the Arts '95 semi with me, I'd be as happy as the Blind Melon beer.

HISTORY TEACHER - What clucks like a tiger and winks? (wink)

STEPHANIE ROBINSON FOR SENATOR: Choose an experienced, effective and enthusiastic student representative. On February 8 & 9 elect STEPHANIE ROBINSON for 1 year ASUS Senator.

MODEL PARLIAMENT, to the member from erie - I saw you early in the weekend and I could not take my eyes off you. Although I did have a short conversation with you I never learned your name. I was at the Grad club when you left and I still can't get you out of my mind. Your sexy smile and friendliness is beautiful and refreshing. From a distance an admirer.

ANDREW TAYLOR, an effective, experienced voice for students. On February 8th and 9th vote ANDREW TAYLOR for ASUS Rep to the AMS.

ADRIENNE, ADRIENNE, ADRIENNE: Do you know how much we appreciate your wit, humour, patience, kindness, caring, compassion, friendly disposition, contagious laughter, sudden explosions of bitchy behaviour, and your love of bad, sick and disgusting words? No, neither do we. Love... all of us.

ARI GOLDKIND ASUS REP TO THE AMS ON FEB 8 & 9 GO FOR THE GOLD!!!

WANTED DECISION MAKERS

CAUTION! Only those who can see the big picture and make decisions in the best interests of the whole community should read past this point.

QUESTION: What do the following have in common?

Academic Development, Agenda, Academic Procedures, Bookstore, Budget Review, Fine Arts, Library, Nominating, Operations Review, Scholarships & Student Aid, Athletics, Student Affairs, International Centre, Sexual Harassment Complaint Board.

ANSWER: They are all Senate Committees which need student members, beginning September 1, 1994.

CHALLENGE: If you want to help make decisions which will affect academic life, contact the Senate Office at 545-6095 or drop in for more information and pick up an application in Mackintosh-Corry B400.
Application Deadline: Fri., Feb. 18, 1994.

WINTER REGISTRATION '94

Special Schedule for Queen's Students February - April

- KIDS TO ADULTS
- Beginners to Advanced
- Classical Ballet R.A.D.
- Modern Jazz, Tap
- Creative Movement (ages 3 to 7)
- Ballroom
- AEROBICS
- Pro Instructors

Come Dance with us... See the difference!

Two classes per week for the price of one with presentation of this coupon!

5678
dance studio
259 QUEEN STREET DOWNTOWN 547-5678

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET
542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

Hey chump! Vote for Joey!

Special thanks to Supermodel STASIA "STACY" DILLON — two minutes for lookin' so good!

This ain't no Ralph Lauren Stacy's lovin' her big floppy hat (made right here in K-Town) ($24) and jacket ($25), both from Rag Temple.

MISC. FASHION

Photos by DEREK YARNELL

Text by Joey & The Other Derek

Before you go screaming "sell-out!", these stores featured don't do much (if any) advertising with this paper, and we didn't get anything (that we didn't pay for) in return for this review. We walked in completely unannounced, taking managerial and general staff by surprise, and tried on stuff we liked. We didn't have the time or space to peruse all the stores; we have, however, tried to at least make mention of them.

NEON: This is a Montreal-based chain store outlet which can supply you with the basics to be fashionable in this rough and tumble world. They've got jeans in a wide variety of brands (Levi's, Ikeda, Gap, Edwin) and colours as well as a selection of fancy footwear, including Doc Marten and Sam and Libby shoes and boots. They also carry parkas, leather jackets, shirts, sweaters, and even socks and gitch.

PRODIGAL SUN: A heavy-duty boarder/hip-hopper/traver-tive joint, Prodigal Sun carries the latest in wearable gear with street cred, such as Fresh Jive, Spliff and Black Flies. We're talkin' t-shirts, big-ass baggy jeans, toques and caps and lots of 'boarding gear (snow or skate). They're also opening a room in the back where struggling young artists like yourself can put their stuff for display and sale. Yes, you're going to pay big bucks for the labels, but the prices are actually better than those in Uncle Oris or Too Black Guys in Toronto and X-Large (the store owned by the Beastie Boys) in New York.

QUEEN'S CLOSET: The traditional fashionable used clothing store in Kingston. You can find many gems sifting through all the goodies including jackets, a huge assortment of patched jeans, suits, and shoes of all varieties. Best of all, the prices are great...where else can you get a suit or semi-formal dress for under $40?

RAG TEMPLE: A little bit of everything in this store. The front has vintage clothing, jewelry, accessories, stereographic posters (the ones you have to stare at for a few minutes and then — blam!) and knick-knacks for decorating your home. They have recently added a section in the back where jewelry can be repaired or custom-made.

OTHER STORES: Willy's, Phase II, Jungle, Modern Primitive, Army Surplus, and of course the Red Chamber where we get all of our "intimate" apparel.

So who'cha who'cho who'cho want? Stacy keeps her head in a LSD toque ($20). Spliff quilted jacket ($93) and Fresh Jive ultra-baggy jeans ($89) while Joey loses his in a Fresh Jive two-tone work jacket ($80) and Raw Vibe ($22) plaid cap. After seeing this shot, they killed and ate the photographer. Dope homey stoopid stylin' stuff from Prodigal Sun.

BURGER KING FREE Bacon Double Cheeseburger

When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by buyer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants. Expires Feb. 18/94

BURGER KING FREE Chicken Sandwich

When you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by buyer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants. Expires Feb. 18/94

- NEON
40 Princess Street, between King and Ontario (beside Lick's)
- PRODIGAL SUN
177 Division Street, just north of Princess
- QUEEN'S CLOSET
Division Street, just north of Stookey's
- RAG TEMPLE
208 Wellington Street, just north of Princess

Haberdashery. Joey wears a hood-thingy ($4) and surplus army jacket ($20) while Derek the photog goes for the Jimmy Walker Dyn-o-mite! look in the ultra-70's hat from Shaft ($35). Rag Temple provided the clothes.

Don't Forget Your Cocktail Party With Us!

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1994 • ISSUE 30 • VOLUME 121

Fri Feb. 11 - Hopping Penguins
Sat Feb. 12 - Leslie Spit Tree-O

inside The Journal

ON GUARD FOR THREE

In an exclusive interview, Canada's Chief of Defence Staff General John de Chastelain talks about peace-keeping in Somalia and Bosnia, the impending defence budget cuts, and the cancelled EH-101 helicopter deal. —For interview, see page 4.

KINGSTON THEATRE

The Baby Grand Theatre plays host to the Direct from Kingston Festival, which showcases K-Town's playwrighting, acting, and directorial talents. —See Entertainment, page 23.

SNAPSHOTS OF ASIA

The Great Dragon's Fleas is a wonderful armchair journey through Asia. It brings to life an amazing array of people and places, in elegant prose. Author Tim Ward chronicles his travels in India, Bangladesh, Thailand, Indonesia, China, and Tibet. He is an ideal travel companion: funny, bright, and very inquisitive. —Literary Lapses review, page 17.

"The prestige of the university needs to come through a higher quality education and the future success of Queen's graduates, not just from research." —Rector David Baar commenting on the quality of education in the face of upcoming tuition hikes. Story page 3.

Law school cheating incident resolved

BY BROCK MARTLAND

A very tense law class is calming down, as a cheating incident has finally been resolved. But the larger problem of competition in law school remains.

The incident occurred in Professor Sheila McIntyre's first-year Public Law class. The course held a 100 per cent final exam in December, consisting of three questions. McIntyre provided students with one of the three questions in advance, asking them to prepare a response and then write it out during the examination period.

However, some law students failed to comply with these instructions. Having obtained exam booklets from practice exams, an unknown number of students—estimated at five or six people—wrote out the first question at home, then smuggled booklets into the December final. This enabled them to spend the three and a half hours focusing solely on the two answers they had left.

McIntyre said two students have admitted guilt. "We think there are more, but we can't prove it and don't know from anything reliable."

While one student was turned in, McIntyre said, the other took advantage of an amnesty offer, "in fact explaining that it was an honest mistake about instructions" for the take-home part of the exam.

Both faculty and students attributed part of the motivation for cheating to competition in first-year law.

McIntyre said that "to the extent that it was calculated cheating, it was intended to get an edge on other students. Most of us think it was a kind of hyper-competitiveness." She attributed this to a "terrible job market" for students who have articulated.

McIntyre said that "every year's class has a slightly different personality... There are different reports this year about that [first-year] class, of unusually fierce competition on the one hand, and unusually intense insecurity about the future on the other. And I think that that's a fair observation."

"We're seeing examples of everyone for herself or himself more than we have in recent years," she said. "This is just more intense than a year ago."

The class's Faculty Board Representative, Giles Norman, spoke of "the kind of pressure people are under, that they feel they have to do this just to get better marks."

Norman said, "there seems to be more of an 'if you can get away with it, try it' attitude."

He agreed that a poor economy has meant increased competitiveness. "Law used to be pretty much guaranteed employment, and that's not the case any more."

Before it was resolved, Norman said, "it was not a good situation at all. Everybody started pointing fingers at everybody else... I got the impression that a lot of people were talking about other people behind their backs and that there was a fair degree of animosity." Now, he said, "people just want to get on with it."

McIntyre said that originally, the 56 students in her class were given an option: in the absence of certainty about guilt, either rewrite the exam or accept a pass/fail grade in the course.

LAW CONTINUED ON PAGE 5

The Hansen Brothers test the ice on Lake Ontario.

BRENT DAVIS

Guerilla theatre disrupts Model UN

Dramatists expelled for controversial actions

BY AFFAN QADIR

Two students frustrated with stagnant debate at the Model United Nations turned their anger into "guerilla theatre" this past weekend, and were expelled from the event for it.

In an attempt to heighten an awareness of violence against women, Queen's delegate Fawn Morrison, along with McGill delegate Richard Latour, staged a mock physical assault.

As delegates in the Committee on the Status of Women were about to adjourn for dinner on Friday night, Morrison burst into the room wearing violent make-up that simulated "fresh bruises around the eye and upper lip," she said.

"I just ran through the door screaming very loudly, 'Help! Help me! He's coming after me! He's gonna get me! Help me!'" Morrison said.

Following Morrison into the room was Latour. "I came in yelling, 'Where is she? If I told you once... don't you run from me! I pushed a desk, yelled 'bitch!' and then she ran out and I chased her," he explained, adding that there was no physical contact during the dramatization.

As Morrison ran out of the room in Kingston Hall, she turned around and asked the committee, "What are you doing? You're supposed to be helping me."

Morrison insists that the incident was not meant to be a joke, rather it was an act of "guerilla theatre," which she said is "any form of dramatization that conveys a strong political statement which exercises the ultimate form of freedom of speech."

Morrison said she was frustrated with the unproductive debate taking place in the Committee on the Status of Women, and decided to make a political statement.

"I felt that they were trivializing the issue of domestic violence where the discussion was shallow and artificial, I wanted to bring it a little closer to home," she explained.

GUERRILLA CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

Students seek art gallery

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

In a meeting last week, Bachelor of Fine Arts students mapped out their strategy to host Canada's first completely student-run art gallery in the yet-to-be-opened Stauffer Library.

BFA Association President Lynda Turner outlined her association's plans for the 2,000 square foot gallery, which would display primarily the work of Queen's fine arts students, while also featuring works from alumni and the greater Kingston community.

The Student Art Gallery Club (SAGC) needs at least $30,000 and maybe as much as $50,000 per year to run an effective gallery, which would suit the needs of both fine arts students and the student population at large.

The group has put forth a plan to raise $10,000 on its own, with the sale of student art, draws, and alumni contributions.

It is also seeking funds through the university administration, and an additional student interest fee. The group plans to have a question added to the next Alma Mater Society referendum in the spring, requesting for student support through an interest fee. The deadline for submission of the required 600-signature petition is Feb. 28.

Vanessa Stettler, a third-year BFA student, and Lenore McMillan, a BFA student in her second year, are excited that student art would be displayed in a student-run gallery.

Similar facilities exist on other campuses, such as York University in Toronto, but these are run in conjunction with university administrations.

The space would also incorporate the talents of other groups, including music and drama students. These groups would participate in events such as exhibition openings and receptions.

Stettler said she didn't want to give the impression that the gallery would serve the fine arts community exclusively. "We'd like to be very accessible to the community," she said.

Turner said that a "Gallery Awareness" week was being planned to inform students of the fact that they would have a gallery to call their own when the new library opens on homecoming weekend in October.

ART CONTINUED ON PAGE 7

ASUS

&
Montreal Images
present:
The Bi-Annual

POSTER SALE

FEBRUARY 9TH, 10TH, & 11TH
ALL DAY

TRICOLOUR BEAT THE READING WEEK RUSH -- TRAVEL TO OUR "LAST MINUTE CLUB" TROPICAL DESTINATIONS.

★ STAY TUNED FOR THIS FRIDAY'S READING WEEK TRICOLOUR SCHEDULE

	TORONTO	OTTAWA	MONTREAL
DEPARTURES: FRIDAY	$20	$16	$25
West Campus	1:55	5:35	2:50
Victoria Hall	2:05	5:45	3:00
JDUC	2:10	5:55	3:10
Drop-off Points:	Oshawa,* Union Station, Scarborough Town Centre, & Bus Terminal	Kanata T.C.* Pinecrest,* Carling and Kirkwood, & Bus Terminal	Kirkland Shopping Plaza & Bus Terminal
RETURNS: SUNDAY	8:00	8:00	5:45
Pick-up Points:	One block west of Union Station near City Park Plaza	Bus Terminal	Bus Terminal

* Request Only

Tickets are on sale at the Queen's Box Office
For more info call 545-2558
NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

NOMINATE!

YOUR PROF FOR THE HIGHEST HONOUR AWARDED BY STUDENTS TO PROFS AT QUEEN'S

Nominations are now being accepted for the

FRANK KNOX AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING

Pick up an information package at the AMS office, ENGSOC, COMSOC, ASUS, GREY HOUSE, or SPECIAL NEEDS OFFICE and nominate your prof today!

Inquiries? Please call Andrew Ferlejowski or Todd Minerson (545-2725)

Nominations are due February 18

A.M.S. Achievement Award

Are you eligible for an A.M.S. Achievement Award? This new award, instituted this year is designed to recognize outstanding volunteer contribution to the A.M.S. 10 points are needed in order to be eligible for the award. People who have reached 15 points are eligible for an award with honours and individuals with 20 points are eligible for an award with distinction.

POINTS VALUES FOR POSITIONS ARE AS FOLLOWS:

Points	Activity
5	Chair of the Board of Directors
4	Deputies
4	STAR Assistant Co-ordinators
4	Tricolor Yearbook Volunteers
4	Student Directors on the Board of Directors
3	Committee Chairs
3	Orientation Facilitators
3	Sub-Committee Chairs
2	Orientation Co-ordinators
2	Assembly Speaker
2	Assembly Members
2	Committee Members (of an A.M.S. committee)
2	A.M.S. Rep. to a non-A.M.S. committee, (ie. JDUC Programming Committee)
2	Task Force Representative
2	Journal Contributor (4 stories or 4 issues of production staff)
2	Studio Q Contributor (reporter on 2 or technical staff on 3)
2	Kaleidoscope Buddy
2	Infobank Volunteer
2	Parent Resource Centre Volunteer
1	Participant Model United Nations
1	Participant Model Parliament
1	Participant Undergrad Games

If you need more information or want to pick up an application form drop by the A.M.S. office. Applications are due by February 18th. The award will be presented at the A.M.S. Appreciation Night—Sunday, March 27, 1994.

Quality education at Queen's?

AMS President and Rector demand more bang for the academic buck

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

As the student population braces for imminent tuition hikes, and the administration awaits funding cuts, student representatives are turning their attention to the future quality of education.

In a recent letter printed in the Queen's Journal, Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips and Rector David Baar questioned whether tuition increases will translate into increased quality of education at Queen's.

"A lot of people have already responded to our letter because it really hit home," said Philips. "Everyone wants a good education."

Baar said the letter was "a request for benefits for students who will be paying more tuition. Queen's students want more than to just pick up the government's slack," he added.

The letter was an attempt to get the university to be more responsive to teaching concerns, social issues and student involvement. It asked for tangible improvements for undergraduate students to accompany higher tuition fees.

Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser read the letter and suggested that there was a difficulty in distinguishing the university's operating budget from its capital budget.

He explained that the money Queen's receives from tuition is separate from that which is allocated toward long-term projects. "Queen's operating budget is a base budget that is tuition-related, and it is completely separate from the school's non-recurring and project-specific capital budget," said Fraser.

"It is essential to understand that money cannot be moved across borderlines. For example, the government funding and private donations for Stauffer Library cannot be used for lab materials."

The letter from Philips and Baar referred specifically to the Bio-Sciences complex project, the Herstoncoeur International Study Centre, and an art gallery as long-term commitments which do not address the primary needs of Queen's undergraduate students.

However, Fraser pointed out that the new Bio-Sciences complex involves the renovation of Earl Hall, and more specifically the addition of new labs and classrooms.

"This is necessary because there are so many biology students and they need more space," said Fraser.

In response to concerns about Herstoncoeur, Fraser pointed out the overwhelmingly positive undergraduate response to the program, and the need for Queen's to establish an international presence in the world.

Baar still charges that the study centre will be "financially inaccessible to the average Queen's student."

Fraser also mentioned that the proposed art gallery expansion involves a new Art Studies Centre that would benefit fine art and art history students. He stressed that "a balanced environment between faculties is necessary at Queen's."

Philips believes that "what is needed is not necessarily more in financial terms. We know what is possible and what is not possible.

Our letter was fighting not against tuition increases, but for a higher quality education."

Baar referred to the dismal lecture conditions in Ellis and Dunning auditoriums as problems that Queen's could solve with inexpensive solutions.

He also said that the school's over-emphasis on professors' research affects their teaching quality. "The prestige of the university needs to come through a higher quality education and the future success of Queen's graduates, not just from research," explained Baar.

Fraser maintained that "Queen's has more resources at the classroom level than other Ontario schools in our peer set. We still provide a high quality education."

Twistin' the night away at the AMS Charity Ball, Friday.

MIKE O'CONNOR

AMS joins new business consortium

BY SHARON WILSON

The Queen's Alma Mater Society has joined a new national university business alliance that it hopes will reduce costs.

Tim Wilson, AMS vice-president (operations), said the basic idea behind the Canadian Campus Business Consortium is to unite the student market and "negotiate price discounts with companies across Canada."

Wilson said the combination of mass student numbers and funds will allow the coordinator of the CCBC a greater leverage to get deals on such items as office supplies. He added that the CCBC would not be handling any money, as universities would enter into the contracts with the companies on their own.

Currently, the universities forming the CCBC are Western, Waterloo, Wilfrid Laurier, Queen's, Toronto, Dalhousie, UBC, Brock and the University of Alberta.

When asked if the CCBC had any political aspirations to become a national university alliance, such as the Canadian Federation of Students, Wilson stated that the organization is "completely apolitical."

But U of T student politician Merry-LN Unan, in an interview with York University's student newspaper, said there was a discussion at the consortium's founding conference about forming a political organization "to rival the Canadian Federation of Students."

Wilson added that there was talk of creating a national student alliance whose views would be similar to that of the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (of which Queen's is a founding member), but this discussion was held after the CCBC conference, held in late November.

Although some CCBC representatives stayed for this discussion, "it has nothing to do with the CCBC," Wilson said.

The annual membership fee to the CCBC will be based on the annual gross revenue of each student government and the full-time student population of each university.

Right now, Wilson said, Queen's fee stands at about $6,500, a figure he expects will be lowered as more universities join the alliance.

Based in Waterloo, the CCBC has two permanent employees, one acting as an administrator and the other as a coordinator interacting with the suppliers in negotiations.

Wilson said he felt joining the alliance was a good idea because Queen's "pays dramatically higher prices than other schools."

When asked if he thought Queen's was missing out by not belonging to a national university student alliance, Wilson said, "we have informal liaisons with other schools that certainly help us."

Surface hits the streets

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

The first edition of Surface not to be funded by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society hit the streets Thursday, and Editor Juni Lagtapon is already looking for cash to put out the next issue.

Lagtapon said the $500 to $700 it takes to put out an issue of Surface was provided by advertising revenue, the Alma Mater Society's Racism and Ethnic Discrimination Committee, and the Ontario Public Interest Research Group.

Arts and Science students vored not to continue funding the paper in a referendum last October.

Lagtapon said he might be able to scrounge together enough funds to put out another issue before the end of the year. "Things are still very much up in the air," Lagtapon said.

However, Surface will not survive in the long term without some sort of permanent funding, he said.

Long-term funding for the magazine may come from ASUS, in the form of an opt-outable student interest fee which could go before a referendum in the spring. Lagtapon said this would be a best-case scenario.

If funding doesn't come through, Lagtapon said, he hopes next year's Surface editor will fundraise in order to keep the paper alive.

The idea of funding Surface through the Alma Mater Society has been bantered about during the AMS executive campaign, though generally candidates have said that it's an ASUS issue. Lagtapon said although he doesn't intend to pursue this route, it could be a "realistic" possibility for next year.

SCHOLAR-IN-RESIDENCE

Dr. Monica Boyd, visiting scholar in the Queen's Gerontology Project and the Department of Sociology, will deliver her lecture, "Female, Foreign, Old and Poor: Immigrant Women in Canada," on Wednesday Feb. 16 in Policy Studies room 202.

Boyd has written numerous articles and books on topics such as the changing family, gender inequality, international migration and ethnic stratification.

A faculty member of Carleton University for 22 years, Boyd is currently a member of the Canadian National Statistics Council and of the Statistics Canada Advisory Committee on Social Conditions.

NDP HOLDS FORUM ON RENEWAL

The future of social democracy in Canada will be the topic for discussion tonight at the Forum on Renewal, hosted by the Kingston and the Islands Federal New Democratic Party Riding Association.

The forum will feature author and historian Desmond Morton, Canadian broadcaster and print journalist Jamie Swift, and former Ottawa mayor Marion Dewar.

The forum is open to the public and admission is free. It begins at 8 p.m. in the Wilson Room at the Kingston Public Library.

RAMADAN BEGINS

The sighting of the new moon on the night of Feb. 10 or 11 will mark the beginning of Ramadan—the Islamic month of ritual fasting. During Ramadan, Muslims abstain from food and drink from dawn until sunset, when the fast is broken by Iftar, a small meal.

For the month, all Kingston and Queen's community Iftar will be held in the International Centre of the John Deutsch University Centre. Iftar times will range from 5:30 p.m. at the beginning of the month to 6:10 p.m. at the end. They are hosted Feb. 23 and Mar. 9 by the Queen's University Muslim Students' Association and Feb. 19, 26 and Mar. 6 by the Islamic Society of Kingston.

Tarawih prayers will be held in the JDUC at approximately 7:30 p.m.

WOMEN'S OPEN SPACE

If you are interested in the concerns of women at Queen's, there will be an "open space event" to take stock of achievements and future directions. Participants will set the agenda and identify women's issues that are relevant to the community right now.

The event, sponsored by the Office of the Dean of Women, will be held Friday Feb. 11 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in lower Victoria Hall.

An interview with Canada's Chief of Defence Staff

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

After his speech to Queen's Model United Nations, Canada's Chief of Defence Staff General John de Chastelain spoke with The Journal about defence spending, Canada's role in Somalia and the former Yugoslavia, and other issues. The general was recently recalled from his position as Canada's 18th ambassador to the United States to resume his previous duties as Chief of Defence Staff in Ottawa.

QJ: The first Liberal budget in over a decade is expected to be brought forward within the month. What changes with regard to defence spending do you expect and how will these changes affect Canada's military?

JdC: We know what changes will affect us, well, at least part of it. The Liberal government announced in their red book the proposed cuts over a period of four years... a total of $4.6 billion. The problem now is in recommending to government how we see those cuts being made and implemented with the least disturbance to our operational capability. The next budget will be presumably in 1995, and by that time the defence review will have taken place and future cuts will be made in light of that decision.

QJ: With successive years of decreasing military spending, alongside stepped-up involvement in international peace-keeping efforts, which aspects of Canadian military operations can the public expect to live without?

JdC: We've already had to live without some. You'll recall that, as a result of the 1991 budget reductions, we withdrew forces from Europe. We had stationed troops in Germany since 1950. With the end of the Cold War you could argue that that was less required, and with the cuts in our budget we could no longer afford to keep those troops there.

If we're using all our expeditionary capability in support of the United Nations, which we were at the beginning of last year, under those circumstances, that brigade would not have been available to NATO, and they know that. So Canadians have already foregone a number of options and a number of operational capabilities. It's just how we manage the future defence funding to see whether we can maintain this general capability across a broad spectrum of possibilities in the future.

QJ: One of the measures certain to occur is the closure of bases across Canada. Where do you see these cuts occurring?

JdC: I think it is certainly a consideration that bases could be closed as a part of this go-around. We have made recommendations to the government knowing what cuts are going to be made in this budget. To make those cuts and still maintain our operational capabilities, we have to stop doing a number of things—we have to cut our overhead. We have to try and concentrate on doing those things which can only be done by troops in uniform, and therefore look at some of those things that we've got troops in uniform doing, that might be possible to do by other means, either by privatizing or civilianizing... But it does mean that we'll have less infrastructure, less units, less institutions, assuming the government accepts our recommendations.

QJ: Recent events in Somalia seem to have tarnished an otherwise healthy image of our international peacekeepers. The resulting political fallout damaged the credibility of the outgoing Conservative government. What steps are you taking to ensure that such events do not occur again, aside from current judicial pursuits?

JdC: Well, judicial steps as you know are not in my control. This is a matter for the courts, and the courts are dealing with them, and therefore I really can't comment on them. We have already put in place measures to make sure that the chain of command and the troops know what is considered acceptable and what is considered unacceptable is understood at all rank levels. Recommendations are still being made to me.

But, you're right; it has cast a stain on our reputation, and that will be difficult to overcome. But at the same time, what their unit achieved in Beler Huen was commendable. I had a number of people who were involved, from the United Nations and the United States—the President's representative in Somalia telling me that they made enormous strides in getting self-government back to work in that area. But you're right; it has been greatly overshadowed by the unfortunate events.

QJ: There are growing concerns over the safety of our peacekeepers in Bosnia. How long can Canadians expect their soldiers to remain in the line of fire until something is done to alter a very dangerous situation? Will the threat of air strikes continue to be used as an empty one, or will we see, in the short run, air strikes being used to target groups which pose a threat to our forces?

JdC: Our troops are being targeted relatively infrequently, but more frequently than in the past. There have been circumstances where we've had troops killed, either by being shot or blown up by mines, which you could argue was specific targeting... Since our mission in Bosnia Herzegovina is one of providing humanitarian aid, and given that we are not under a particularly great threat—that's not to say that that couldn't change in a hurry—the use of air strikes would, in the first place, lead to an end of the humanitarian aid. It would end the mission for which we are there, and it would probably put at greater risk our troops, who might well be targeted if air strikes were used indiscriminately. We have always accepted and still support the concept that if we are specifically being attacked, then yes, air strikes can be used in self-defence, and that is foreseen in [United Nations] Resolution #836.

QJ: One of the Liberal government's first actions was to keep their promise of scrapping the multi-billion dollar EH-101 helicopter program. A recent article in The Globe and Mail underlined that these machines will only be able to operate until the year 2002 at the latest. What plans, if any, does the Defence Department have to replace the aging fleet of Sea Kings, or will the Canadian Navy and Air Force simply eliminate the need for helicopters entirely?

JdC: Well, if we go without, that will cause a change in our operational responsibilities right now, and that will have to be decided by the defence review. Even though that article quite rightly pointed out that it is taking an awful lot of effort and resources to keep the Sea King flying, they are still safe. They're expensive to maintain, and we use them less robustly than if they were new. We maintain safety standards on them, but that doesn't mean that one doesn't go into the drink occasionally. But they certainly have to be replaced by the end of the century.

But, what are we doing about it? Well, nothing at the moment except looking at the alternatives there are between now and the turn of the century. The reason we selected the EH-101 was we thought it was the best aircraft for the job. The government and the people of Canada have decided that they consider that unaffordable—fine, that decision is taken. Now we have to find something that is affordable.

QJ: When does Canada start saying no to continued involvement in UN peacekeeping operations?

JdC: We've already started to say no to missions. Having turned them down, the UN has coerced us into accepting them anyway, the most recent in Lebanon. We said we'd only stay six months, and to everybody's surprise, we left after six months. In circumstances where we've been asked to renew a mandate, we've said no, and Cyprus is the most recent example. We say no more frequently than you might understand, although mostly in terms of numbers and capabilities, rather than saying we won't take part at all.

QJ: Another of the Prime Minister's first moves was to replace you as ambassador to the United States with his nephew. What do you feel was the reasoning behind that move, and how did you feel about him ending your short-lived career as a civilian diplomat?

JdC: Ambassadors serve at the will of the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister appoints ambassadors and Chiefs of Defence Staff. I was surprised to be appointed ambassador by [former Prime Minister Brian] Mulroney. As to why he [Prime Minister Jean Chretien] chose to bring me back and appoint the ambassador from Brussels, you'd have to ask him that. But the point he made to me was that he wanted me back as Chief of Defence Staff.

You could argue that it made a lot of sense to appoint Mr. Chretien to Washington. First of all because he's a very senior diplomat. He also was ambassador in Mexico and speaks fluent Spanish, and is well known in the Mexican government, which is one of the key issues in economics and one of the principle areas of diplomacy along with the United States.

The government and the people of Canada have decided that they consider that unaffordable... Now we have to find something that is affordable.

Sharing the secrets of stress release through tae-kwon-do. YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

Model UN goes high tech

BY AFFAN QADIR

The United Nations Security Council was gathered in the Red Room in Kingston Hall this weekend, listening attentively to a televised satellite broadcast of UN Commander Laurent in Sarajevo, begging the council for assistance. Well, not really. Mock satellite interviews with UN personnel through television hook-ups in a nearby room added a dramatic effect to the annual Queen's Model United Nations conference held this weekend.

The conference, which attracted over 220 delegates, has traditionally provided a forum for debate relating to international affairs. "UN forces have suffered casualties and injuries near the Bosnian town of Zeba, a convoy has been hit by rocket-fire from the Bosnian Serbian Army. I ask you to send more fire power, troops or evacuate us. Get us out of here or allow us to crush the Bosnian Serb monsters," the French Commander Laurent pleaded.

However, Security Council Chair Laura McKay was quick to qualify the Commander's statements. "Any opinions given through satellite are the opinions of the UN commander. However, the warnings should be heeded," she explained. The Security Council began to debate whether air strikes were a viable option and the tensions became increasingly evident among delegates.

Asked whether air strikes would alleviate the stress of the situation, Commander Laurent responded favourably.

"Yes, anything to get us out, force must be responded with force," he explained.

In a matter of an hour, French jets had carried out air strikes on Serbian positions, but the casualty report of UN personnel was the worst ever at 156 either wounded or dead.

Events seemed to unfold rapidly, and for good reason too—in a single weekend, issues ranging from domestic violence and child labour to nuclear proliferation and security had to be addressed. At the International Court of Justice, delegates passed a resolution which outlined how the court would consider cases brought to the War Crimes Tribunal as they applied to the situation in Bosnia.

"Essentially, it establishes a legal framework for advising the Security Council on the establishment of a War Crimes Tribunal and further addressing the issue of consent of the country being investigated," Algerian delegate Jeffrey Legault explained.

When asked about the conflict in Bosnia and the role of the UN, Legault described the Balkan crisis as an international conflict that is often mistaken for a civil war, and spoke of the limited role of the UN.

"The international community can't do anything unless states in conflict come to an agreement among themselves. The change has to be in their attitude—not [the United Nations'], all we can do is mediate," Legault added.

Fellow delegate John Gowsell agreed that the course of action the UN has taken in the past hasn't furthered the cause of peace in the Balkans.

"The United Nations isn't a save-all. Peacekeeping doesn't solve anything, it simply delays antagonisms between parties in conflict," Gowsell said.

When asked about his experience at the Queen's Model UN, Gowsell described it as an incredible learning experience. "At this conference you're surrounded by extreme intelligence, you learn about international law, politics, debating, parliamentary procedure—all in a concentrated way," he explained.

The weekend conference also featured a speech from a real policy expert, General John de Chastelain, Canadian chief of the defence staff.

"The nature of peacekeeping has changed in the last five years, due to a shift in world dynamics with the end of the Cold War," de Chastelain explained. He further added that Canada will want to play a continuing role in international peacekeeping. "It is inconceivable that Canada would not wish to take part in some type of peacekeeping around the world," he said.

Hey Queen's!

CAN OVER 3 000 STUDENTS BE WRONG?

4 MONTH SPECIAL - JANUARY - MAY $129.00

Superior Nautilus

80 Princess Street • 544-6222
AEROBICS • NAUTILUS • FREEWEIGHTS • CARDIO

Princess Court Coin Laundry and Dry Cleaning

alterations and repairs

Located Behind Burger King
394-396 Princess Street, Unit #3
Kingston, Ontario. 544-0928.

$1.00 wash $4.00 wash and fold service

Open 7 Days a Week 8 am - 9 pm
Ann Tomu-Au

Queen's Symphony Orchestra

(directed by Duane Bates)

presents
DVORAK, SYMPHONY #8

plus
Mozart, Sinfonia Concertante (K.364)
Omar Daniel, Black Dogs (1993)

Wednesday, February 9, 1994 - 8:00 p.m.
Grant Hall
Admission: $6.00 regular; $3.00 students/seniors
(Available at the door)

MY ASTONISHING SELF

A Gift from My Astonishing Self Boutique this Valentine's Day...

That's Amoré!

- ♥ Sultry Lace & Chiffon Teddies
- ♥ Sophisticated Peignoir Sets
- ♥ Sensuous intimate appeal

Don't forget about him!

- ♥ Sexy Silk & Cotton Boxers in an array of colours & prints

My Astonishing Self
257-A Ontario Street
at Princess 546-6186

Le Caveau WINE BAR

354 KING STREET, EAST KINGSTON
547-1617

An intimate rendezvous right in Downtown Kingston, brimming with charm and atmosphere. We offer over 30 wines by the glass. Create your own wine tasting experience from our extensive list.

Our menu offers a variety of international foods created with the emphasis on freshness and presentation.

Finish your meal with a selection from our decadent dessert list.

Allow our attentive staff to indulge your good taste.

1994 AUDITIONS

Okay, what did you do last summer? Did you go where no man has gone before? Did you drive a stock car? Did you perform for thousands of people? NOT? Well, there's always THIS Summer. You can do any of those things and get paid for it! It's just too good.

Paramount Parks is holding auditions for the 1994 Summer Season at Paramount Canada's Wonderland. We need experienced technicians, singers, dancers, characters, actors, and variety performers of all types.

If you're over 16, call 855-832-7454, or write: Paramount Canada's Wonderland 8550 Jane Street, P.O. Box 624, Vaughan, Ontario L6A 1S6. Paramount Parks would like to turn your summer break into your big break!

Kingston, Ontario
Monday, February 14
Queen's University, Grant Hall
12:00, Technician, Character, Actor
12:30, Variety Performer
12:30, Singer, Actor
1:30, Dancer

Vaughan, Ontario
Saturday, February 12
Sunday, February 13
Paramount Canada's Wonderland
The Paramount Theatre
12:00, Technician, Character, Actor
12:30, Variety Performer
1:30, Singer, Actor
2:30, Dancer

ACCESSORIES UNLIMITED

Get Ready For Your Formal

- DESIGNER GOWNS
- ELEGANT JEWELLERY
- FASHION HOSE
- EVENING GLOVES

Sparkle!

NEW SPRING FASHIONS ARRIVING

- COMRAGS
- LOUCAS
- SUSIE TOMPKINS

326 King St. E. 546-6200

Pam's FLOWER GARDEN

CUPID'S CUTTING PRICES

FOR VALENTINES SAY IT WITH ROSES!

Redeem this coupon at Pam's Flower Garden 793 Princess before Feb 12th and receive 20% discount on a dozen long stem roses in a box, or purchase 6 carnations and receive six for FREE or purchase 6 roses in a box and receive FREE chocolate.

Pam's Flower Garden, 793 Princess Street.
Open Saturday, Sunday & Monday for your last minute Valentines' Orders!
Valentine's Day is February 14th so order early!! Call 549-8160 for delivery.

OPINION

A front for hatred

Would the racist who put a Heritage Front poster on campus please step forward.

It is not likely that a response will be coming soon. However, it is essential that Queen's respond to what may appear on the surface to be an insignificant event, but is actually a blatant illustration of racism.

The Heritage Front poster, which was brought to the attention of Alma Mater Society Education Commissioner Clare Fielding in the afternoon of Feb. 3, was titled: "White and Proud." It explained that "the lack of white pride is truly a sad and strange thing, because no group has more to be rightfully proud of than do the white people of the world."

While the language used in the poster was seemingly academic, a look below the surface reveals the agenda of the Heritage Front: the declaration of white supremacy. As explained in the poster, the Heritage Front believes the white race is responsible for the progress of civilization and the accomplishments of white men are unequalled.

Anyone preaching the superiority of the white race would see in Queen's a significant potential to expand their support. The stereotype of Queen's as a white Anglo-Saxon Protestant university has a certain amount of credence.

Furthermore, the recently growing frustration against political correctness may lead groups like the Heritage Front to believe that this university includes a number of potential recruits.

But does the notion that Queen's is a community of WASP's who are tired of being told what to say and think, translate into a university laden with racists ripe for the picking? Certainly not, but the Heritage Front is well versed in propaganda techniques and recruitment practices that many individuals and groups inadvertently fall victim to.

Educated or not, many students feel the need to belong to a group and the soft surface of the Heritage Front intrigues students to find out more. More often than not, the student is not made aware of the racist ideas that form the core ideology of the organization.

The prevention of what is arguably hate literature from rearing its ugly head on campus is not only beyond our control but is contrary to constitutional rights. Hopefully, most individuals have the wherewithal to see the Heritage Front for what it is and denounce the organization. For those individuals who do not, they need to be educated. This is why Queen's has an Education Commission.

If Clare Fielding wishes to respond to recent criticism from Surface regarding her ineffectiveness as the AMS Education Commissioner, then she should do more than simply denounce the Heritage Front poster. As Education Commissioner, Fielding must initiate a proactive campaign against the penetration of white supremacy on campus. If Queen's is as much a "bastion of systematic racism" as Fielding thinks, then why is she not attempting to rectify the situation?

If the entire campus is notified of a sexual assault on campus, then why can't this line of communication be utilized to announce [denounce] acts of racism?

Moreover, the AMS Education Committee should immediately deconstruct the intricacies of Heritage Front propaganda and reveal the true nature of the organization. Without such clear action, Queen's and Kingston are in jeopardy of witnessing the Heritage Front becoming an ingrained element in our community.

It seems no coincidence that this Heritage Front poster was found the day after Surface was released. The Heritage Front would want to capitalize on the anticipated negative reaction to anti-white statements.

Let's hope that Queen's students are not ignorant enough to fall for the politely expressed opinion of Heritage Front documents which place the white race as superior to others.

There is nothing wrong with being proud of your heritage. But what the Heritage Front doesn't tell you on their sacharin posters is that not only do they advocate pride in white culture, but they advocate it at the expense of other cultures and races.

It is unlikely that the Heritage Front presence on campus will cease to exist, but this does not mean we should ignore them as an unfortunate fact of life. Instead the AMS Education Commission should use this opportunity to address the polarization of students over Surface and the existence of racism on campus.

While it would be wrong to prevent the freedom of expression, it is reasonable to expect the proper education for students to effectively combat the ugliness of racism which is perpetuated and furthered by the Heritage Front.

Congratulations Jeff Gray, Editor-in-Chief 1994-95!!
Celebrate like you did at the last Journal party — slurp! slurp!

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah "BigMac" Whittier	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen "Dunning" Hall
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David "Grumpy" Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel "the SuperBowl only comes once a year" Sutherland
NEWS EDITOR Jeff "FarmAnimal" Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey "Domewick" DeVilla
PRODUCTION MANAGER CFRC Collin HOW	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR "Welcome to MIA - MIA Bonjour" Glickman
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas "Cursorially disinclined" MacGregor	MISC/BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey "duh" Villa
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Ooh, Roberto "Styling Mousse" Furse	LITERARY LAPSES EDITOR Megan "Robi/Dave/Nichols"
FEATURES EDITOR Alison "Moral High-Ground" Masemann

CONTRIBUTORS
Tricia Bauman, Sheldon Bradshaw, Lisa Chen-Wing, Brent Davis, Christian deBruin, Frank Dixon, Elizabeth Ireland, Yodit Rothe Johnson, Ben Jones, Jonathan Leigh, Andrew McAllister, Laurie North, Lee Petrie, Chris Price, Affan Qadir, Pat Robbins-Madill, Owen "Thought-you-were-safe" Pimm, Michael Moss, Andre Nowakowski, Amanda Selfridge, Rob Thompson, Andrew Turner, Michael Wierzanski, Sharon Wilson, Bohdan Yaskewczko

THE "NEW LOOK" HERITAGE FRONT

What's another grand?

University students in Ontario could be facing one of the most dramatic tuition increases in recent history—and nobody at Queen's seems to care.

Nobody, that is except for Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips, Rector David Baar, and a few other dedicated AMS-types whose names don't often reach the front pages of The Journal.

What is the rest of Queen's thinking? Does no one else care? Can everyone afford a thousand dollar tuition hike? Because that is exactly what the Council of Ontario Universities is proposing to do.

Of course, they are also talking about student loan programs and the like, but nothing rings through stronger than their desire to have students and their families take on a larger burden of the cost of a university education.

For two reasons Queen's is in a difficult position to fight a 50 per cent tuition increase proposal. First of all, both Queen's students and administrators have been instrumental in creating partnership proposals that advocate moderate tuition hikes in conjunction with increased financial aid support from the government and the private sector.

Part and parcel with this is the demand for better student loan programs. The basic policy statements are seen in both the administration's "Blueprint for Action" and OUSA's "Students for Change" document.

Because Queen's supports tuition increases (as part of a broader package), Queen's is hard put to jump up and down decrying a large tuition increase.

The second source of Queen's difficulty in fighting this proposal is our principal, David Smith, who is also currently acting as the chair of the COU.

With dissent already evident among COU members over the 50 per cent tuition hike proposal, a public statement made by Principal Smith is well-near impossible. By standing firmly in defence of the proposal he betrays his student body, and by decrying it as outrageous, he betrays the organization from which it came.

Despite this, Principal Smith must make a statement one way or the other. We can only believe that he thinks he is acting in the long-term interests of the students, and thereby believes he is betraying neither the students or the COU.

If this is the case, Principal Smith, would you please say so. To you it may only be a discussion paper, but to us it is our future!

It is because Queen's students appear to support tuition increases that we look apathetic to this issue. But this is not the case. Just because Queen's students are not sending thousands of faxes to Queen's Park does not mean Queen's students don't care. It does, however, reinforce the stereotypical impression of Queen's as a school full of rich kids leaning on Mom and Dad for an education.

For many students this is not the case, and someone should speak for these and all students at the university level. OUSA is not enough.

David Baar is right in demanding that Senate take a stand on this question. If this is a discussion paper, Senate should discuss it and come to some conclusions. And then tell us what they are. Queen's students—present and future—deserve to know.

CHRISTINA SALAVANTIS
ARTS '93
PART-TIME MARRIOTT WORKER

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

MARRIOTT RECYCLING QUESTIONED

As a member of the alternative food coalition "Gut-Feeling," I would like to clarify a few issues for the students on campus. Comments made in the Jan. 28 issue of The Journal about recycling in the Marriott kitchens are worth further scrutiny.

It is a direct lie for Food Operations Manager Bruce Griffiths to say that the food services on campus recycle things like glass. Queen's kitchens, which prepare thousands of meals a day, do not recycle anything but corrugated cardboard and french fry oil. We know because we handle the garbage. A few things are sent back to the original companies if there are rebates, like milk crates and beer bottles. Everything else goes in the garbage. The blue bins that you see at the cash operations are there only for students who wish to use them. Workers in the kitchens do not sort recyclable glass, cans, other metals, plastics, cardboard, newspapers or any of the other items ordinary households put in their blue box.

I am the anonymous worker who was quoted as saying that wine and liquor bottles from Bar Services go directly into the garbage bins. We asked many times why this had to be done but no satisfactory answer was ever given. Whose responsibility is it to pay for recycling in these kitchens anyway? Marriott's or Queen's? Certainly not the workers'. However, my fellow student workers and I at Bar Services have gone so far as to drive to various apartment buildings that had accessible industrial size blue bins to dispose of the empties.

I estimate that if Queen's has on average 10 Bar Service functions a month with an average of three cases of wine per function, that 4,320 wine bottles a year go directly into the landfill. That number does not take into account the hard liquor bottles, imported beer bottles, and aluminum beer and pop cans.

Kingston has the longest running garbage crisis in Ontario. Local garbage is shipped to Carp, Ontario, near Ottawa, at a cost of approximately $160 a ton. Garbage disposal has been the biggest single component of Kingston-area tax increases in recent years. This has become a significant drain on community funds that are needed for other things.

Despite this, Residence and Food Operations Director Bruce Griffiths' comments in The Journal focused conveniently on the responsibilities students should be taking for recycling. The students are encouraged to use environmentally friendly napkins, the students are encouraged not to take many napkins. Nice try Bruce. This is all well and good, but napkins and mugs are not at issue here. The issue here is industrial size waste from one of the biggest food-ops in Kingston. What then are Marriott Corporation and the Queen's administration doing to implement recycling on an industrial scale in our giant food system? The answer is nothing. Marriott kitchens throw away cans and bottles that hold everything from spaghetti sauce to fruit cocktail, and no one seems remotely interested in why this is so. Griffiths' comment that Queen's does not generate enough compostable material to warrant shipping, presumably to COR-CAN's soon to be completed composting site in Joyceville, is blatantly false. Other area institutional waste producers, like CFB Kingston, have already committed to COR-CAN's facility. What excuse does Queen's have for hesitating? Lack of funds? Or lack of concern?

I think Queen's is very hypocritical to boast about their new academic environmental programs and their "standards of excellence" while at the same time refusing to spend money on basic recycling. Queen's has money for new buildings, renovations and English castles, but—let me get this straight—it can not find the finances to implement real recycling that would help the community and create more jobs for workers?

Sounds ridiculous to me. CHRISTINA SALAVANTIS
ARTS '93
PART-TIME MARRIOTT WORKER

Real Live Slacker

IN THE BATHROOM...

TRULY EARTH FEMALE, IT IS A PITY THAT YOUR MALES DO NOT ADEQUATELY STOCK YOUR BATHROOMS WITH "WAD"!!

LATER...

What are you doing for reading week?

"Stalking Tonya Harding in Lillehammer."
—MARY CAMERON, ARTS '95
—KELLY COTTON, PHYS ED '95

"I'm going to one of the crime capitals of the world—Baltimore!"
—JULIA BARSS, POLS '95

"I'm going to sponge off friends in Whistler."
—DAVID BAAR
ECON PhD

"I'm going to go to Florida and try to forget that this will be my last week off in the next five years."
—RAVI SIDHW, MEDS '95

ODDS FAN DISAPPOINTED

THE EDITOR,

I don't mean to rain on the Entertainment section's parade yet again, however, I was particularly disappointed by Geoff Hamilton's review of the Feb. 2 Odds show at Alfie's (Odds balls at Alfie's, Feb. 4). As a longtime fan of the Odds, I felt that Hamilton's review did the show, the band and Journal readers a terrible disservice.

It wasn't that Mr. Hamilton gave them a bad review. From what I can glean from his inane and banal comments, Mr. Hamilton thought they were 'good.' The disservice done here was that the review gave absolutely zilch information to any readers who have never seen or heard of the Odds. Mr. Hamilton's introduction to the band exclaims, "they are a hard, twisty, snappy and swirly bunch of rockers, with some really good songs and some really good lyrics." He continues in the next paragraph, "one of the guys in the band has a fantastic head of hair just like an overgrown patch of Velcro. He was good, and the lead singer was good too." What the hell does that say about the band's performance?

Hamilton's review not only neglects to mention any of the band members by name (drummer Paul Brennan, guitar/vocals/ "Velcro hair" Craig Northey, keyboard/vocals Steven Drake and bass/vocals Doug Elliot), but he neglects to give any information about their roots in Vancouver, subsequent move to L.A. and record deal with Zoo Entertainment/BMG Records. How exactly, based on Mr. Hamilton's review, would an interested audiophile obtain some recorded material from the band? I sure as hell don't know, because he even forgot to mention the names of their two albums: Neopolitan (their self produced debut) and their most recent outing, Bedbugs.

Credit should be awarded however, for managing to mention at least two songs from their set, albeit only one of those two correctly. (It's "Wendy Under the Stars," Mr. Hamilton!) As to his ramblings regarding the aforementioned songs, "big questions?" What the hell? Mr. Hamilton did plug the band's most recent single, "Heterosexual Man," which was in heavy rotation on college and 'alternative' radio over the past summer. In response to his claim that the song is "a frank celebration of a straight guy's lust," I would remind him of a term called irony.

I am aware that The Journal's contributors donate their time to write for the paper. Nonetheless, this sophomoric and uninformative attempt at reviewing live rock and roll shows that Mr. Hamilton should have put a little more time and research into learning what an effective review is all about!
CHRIS GILBERT
ARTS '95

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Liberal Guilt and Philadelphia

In a recent praise-filled review of the movie Philadelphia, your reviewer treated the picture as many other guilt-ridden liberals have—ashamed in their admiration of such an obviously poor movie. Accolades abound for a movie that isn't too political or preachy in its message; as the Tom Hanks character Andy says, "I'm not political, I'm gay." I can accept that Andy might not be politically motivated, but by virtue of being gay and living with AIDS everything about Andy is political whether he or the movie-going public wishes to acknowledge the fact or not. This is merely one area of the movie that simply does not work.

Tom Hanks' performance is another aspect of the movie that does not work. I have no qualms with his decision to play a gay man. There are many different gay men. However, he is unconvincing and his acting is bad. Hanks' performance borders on the humorous in a supposedly moving scene where he walks around with his IV translating the words of his favourite opera, while the Denzel Washington character Joe looks on. It is clear that Hanks knows nothing of opera but also that he does not feel anything he is saying. The change in the lighting as it becomes fire-like occurs very conveniently as Andy translates the section dealing with fire. The scene lacks any subtlety.

The movie is filled with cliché after cliché along with the occasional stereotypes. Yes, gays and lesbians are creative people and we tend to come through for our close friends, but I do not know any gays or lesbians who could prepare for a costume party on a moment's notice and still manage to show up with a barbershop quartet and a black lesbian soul singer to entertain the other guests (who brought the sound system)?

The familial scenes are almost too much. I have rarely seen such saccharine positive slop. Andy comes from an affluent white family that doesn't appear to have a problem with his homosexuality (it can happen, the fact that he is living with AIDS (some families are supportive), or that his partner is a man of colour (is this a family of previously progressive hippies that evolved with the '90s?). In my entire circle of gay male friends I know of a small handful of families who are "comfortable" with their child's sexual orientation, and only one that could be the prototype for Andy's family. Granted, the filmmakers may have wished to present a perfect ideal that homophobic people might take a lesson from, but it is certainly a leap from reality.

To further emphasize this sense of family, children and pregnant women in the movie are used as a not-so-subtle response to many people's feeling that gays and lesbians do not constitute families. At the end of the film, the equally subtle home movies carry the same message. The movies go back to Andy's childhood, where sexuality has not budded yet and he is "just like every other strate kid," with an unbelievably functional family. Why didn't the movies touch on his life with his lover Miguel (played by Antonio Banderas)? Or would such movies emphasize the "sterility" of gay coupling in opposition to the rampant use of "fertility" throughout the film? Perhaps their life together wasn't so great, it would certainly appear that they aren't an affectionate couple; they don't kiss even when Andy is dying (sure Andy removed his oxygen mask just to "talk" to Miguel).

The treatment of AIDS in the movie is touchy at best. Lesions are used to shock and manipulate our emotions. Other characters with AIDS are exploited to induce shock and sadness from a sensitive viewer. Where are people with AIDS who aren't as wealthy as Andy and can't afford AZT or any people of colour or drug users with AIDS (don't they deserve the same compassion as this rich white guy that we're all supposed to identify with)? OK, so this is a wealthy gay guy with AIDS who's fighting discrimination but not in a political way. But is it really?

The movie presents itself as the story of a man living with AIDS and as the movie opens the initial focus is on the Hanks character, but as Joe (Washington) is introduced it becomes his story, the story of a homophobic man who undergoes a "transformation." We have the usual issues that poor strate men must deal with—like being 'hit on' in a drugstore while buying pampers for their children. Washington is handsome but what are the chances of this happening? Probably about the same as Joe's miraculous "transformation." People can change their attitudes through education, but to go from blatant homophobia to defending a gay man living with AIDS against discrimination in just a few weeks?

Despite the obvious problems of clichés, stereotyping, tokenistic use of the gay and lesbian "community" not to mention people of colour, the screenplay—written by a gay man—is bad and full of obvious constructions, the acting is also pretty bad, particularly Hanks and Andy's family members. Yes, this is mainstream Hollywood's first big AIDS movie that uses gay characters and while I want to see a more "political" movie made, I did not go to Philadelphia with such expectations.

However, I did expect a movie that might entertain or move me, Philadelphia did not (I should say I'm the kind of person who cries watching Bell long distance commercials). I only wish that your reviewer could have looked beyond liberal guilt to see Philadelphia for the poorly constructed movie that it is.
—LANCE LAMORE
ARTS '94

OPEN FORUM CANDIDATES AGAINST CAMPAIGN-RELATED ASSAULTS

THE EDITOR,

As Presidential candidates in the AMS election of 1994, we want to formally take a stand against assaults of any kind. In an article printed in the Feb. 4 Journal, it was reported that a woman was assaulted in connection with the current AMS elections. In no way do we encourage or support assault with any motivation. This event greatly disturbs us because we never wanted to see the campaign descend to violence. Though we have constantly stressed the importance of student government and voting, we never suggested that any of our supporters should physically attack our opponents. We may differ on questions of policy but as candidates we stand united against any sort of action which may threaten the well-being of any individual.

—MICHAEL ASSELSTINE, JONATHAN ARNOLD,
BLAIR BERTRAND,
DRAKE CARLYLE
AND TAZ FIRMOHAMED

OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 11

Surface: obsolete and morally flawed?

For most of the past few months, opponents of Surface and I have been under personal attack and insinuations have been made that we are somehow opposed to minority views. The long awaited February edition of Surface certainly remained consistent. Informed arguments consisted of calling those who do not support Surface closed-minded as well as intolerant and threatening.

These sorts of allegations are simply false and the time has come to once again explain exactly why there is nothing wrong with opposing Surface. Indeed, the Surface referendum was not fought just over funding. It was fought to combat Surface's obsolete, morally flawed view of what is acceptable in Canadian society.

At first glance, there appears to be little consensus among the two sides contesting the newspaper. However, at the heart of the issue, there is a basic agreement: on the equality of individuals. Littlejohn, De Souza and others could not agree more strongly that discrimination based on sex, colour, creed, religion or sexual orientation is wrong. All people have a right to be judged on the content of their character and the quality of their actions. People that believe anything less deserve to be called the racists and sexists which they are.

Unfortunately, Surface believes that instead of promoting equality among individuals, there is an even better way to deal with the inherent discriminations of our society. This philosophy defines racism and sexism in such a way that we are to conclude that only those in a majority position could be discriminatory. Mr. Lagtapon would have you believe that any group, including women, minorities and lesbians/gays have the right to attack and libel white straight men simply based on their race and sex. Supposedly, these sorts of actions are supposed to empower minorities, end discrimination and put the white oppressor in his place.

It is this radical definition of discrimination which has led to many of Surface's troubles. By this logic, it would be acceptable for white people to go to China and make racist comments against the Chinese there, simply because whites are in the minority. Or, are we also to believe that as we step on a plane in Cairo it is impermissible to discriminate against white people but when one steps off the plane in Toronto it somehow becomes acceptable?

Over the course of its existence, Surface has pursued this philosophy with a vengeance. Many first year students have not had an opportunity to see the sorts of articles Surface is prepared to print. Regrettably, Surface has in the past decided, and these are just some of the more memorable examples, that: Jesus was a flaming faggot, brown is so much better than white, all white men are rapists and people of colour should not date white people. Last year, people were offended when Surface decided that Professor Schubert should be castrated and given electroshock therapy. Campus objection reached a pinnacle when the Sex issue came out in March. Many students could legitimately not understand how advocating violence against white men served a worthwhile function.

The most recent, AMS funded, issue of Surface shows that there are no plans for change. Some of the comments in this month's issue include "I have killed a white man and I want to kill more," and "for shame you fucking white dog." The position that Surface has taken over the years is that all of these sorts of comments are just expressing the anger of oppressed individuals. However, this is precisely where the argument breaks down.

It does not follow that because one has been the victim of discrimination that it then becomes acceptable to discriminate or advocate violence against others. This sort of prejudice creates a climate of antagonism and hatred which only hinders the kind of discussion and co-operation that is necessary to progress towards a non-discriminatory society. I firmly believe that anyone who can find a useful purpose for racism and sexism, even against majority groups, is using deficient moral criteria.

This is not to say that Surface has never contained articles that have been non-discriminatory and progressive. Nevertheless, the many intolerant articles discredit what there is that might be deemed good about the paper. One can imagine a situation in which one of Canada's otherwise reputable publications contained occasional anti-Semitic articles. It would be difficult for one to argue that the paper was still worthy of respect and support.

Newspapers are clearly a very powerful means of communication. Minorities do need a voice; they do need to be heard. However, Surface has shown that it is not the paper to live up to this responsibility. It is important to remember that Surface does not have the support of all minorities. It represents the views of a small elite which does not speak for all of the oppressed groups which it claims to represent.

The time for changing Surface is therefore over. A new newspaper that advocates true equality is needed now more than ever. Please do not misunderstand me. I do not pretend to be an expert on how to fight oppression. However, I do know that fighting it with even more discrimination will never be the right way.

—ANDREW DICK, ARTS '95
AMS REPRESENTATIVE TO THE AMS

OPEN FORUM TAKE PRIDE IN DIVERSITY

THE EDITOR,

Hey, listen. Really listen. Do you hear the cries? Do you feel the pain? Can you smell the blood? Nazism—the atrocious holocaust of 6 million Jews during the Second World War. Sound distant to you? Well, don't let it. Just listen again.

Canada has changed considerably concerning many issues, and it is inevitably still changing. Just initiatives like affirmative action have provided a consistent combat towards equal opportunity and equal representation in the workforce. Multiculturalism has been the model worked towards in recent decades, and its support for the rich mosaic has indeed sprouted in all corners of the nation. Unlike the American melting pot system, multiculturalism in Canada has allowed people from different cultures to live together, while celebrating their distinct racial and ethnic backgrounds. Yet there are still tremendous strife in such an ideal system.

Stories about cults, false prophets, and racial bigotry are hitting the news with shocking reality and shocking regularity. There are people who feel it is right to lose tolerance of foreign immigrants when economic problems arise, saying that newcomers are taking over positions in universities and the workforce. There is systemic racism—the subtle yet highly inappropriate is subsidized Tutoring brought to you by your Faculty and the AMS. To pick up forms, go to the Infobank or your Society Office or call:

OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 12

DO YOUR MARKS SUCK? MIND FIND

545-6000 Ext 5300
Remember: All payroll sheets must be handed to the AMS Office by April 30.94.

Finally we commend to thy fatherly goodness all those, who are any ways afflicted or distressed in mind, body, or estate.

In nothing be anxious; but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.

Philippians 4:6&7

The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.

Deuteronomy 33:27

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrifield (11:00).

AMS HOUSING ISSUES COMMITTEE DID YOU CHECK INTO THE ROACH MOTEL? TELL US ABOUT IT!!

The AMS Housing Issues Committee is holding a contest to find the most un-fit-to-be-lived-in houses in the ghetto.

There will be prizes galore, and all you have to do is tell us in a page or two;

WHAT MAKES YOUR HOUSE THE BIGGEST HOLE IN THE GHETTO

Submissions will be accepted at the AMS Communications Commission office.

The criteria that submissions will be judged by include:

Overcrowding, plumbing problems, structural problems (those pesky walls keep falling down?), heating problems and general all around lack of proper maintenance, but not damage you have done or messes that you have made.

LANDLORD OF THE YEAR

The will be conducting a contest to find the best landlord in Kingston this year, and recognize them with an award.

To nominate your landlord, please let us know, in a page, why you think they should win this award.

Include specific examples, as well as your name, student number, and address, and drop it off at the AMS Communications Commission office.

DEADLINE IS FRIDAY FEB 11 AT 2 PM

ASUS JACKETS

is looking for a committee for 94/95

Positions available:

1. Committee Chairperson(s)
2. Director of Finances
3. Director of Operations
4. Director of Advertising
5. 5-7 Committee Members

Applications will be available at "The Core" 183 University.

The deadline for applications will be February 18 at 5:00 pm

For more info please phone 545-6278

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS? THEN GET THE ANSWERS

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

Kingston Opera Guild

KINGSTON OPERA WEEK February 14-19 1994

Opera nut? Opera novice? If you answered yes to either question, then this concert of some of opera's most popular songs by the COC Ensemble cannot be missed.

Tuesday, February 15, 1994,
at 8:00 p.m., KVCI Auditorium.
Tickets are $12.00 for adults and $8.00 for students

M.C.R.C. EXECUTIVE ELECTIONS TAKE PLACE TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8 AND WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9 AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

- Upper Ban Righ Cafeteria line 4:30-6:30
- Leonard Cafeteria line 4:30-6:30
- Brockington Cafeteria line 4:30-6:30
- Victoria Hall Front Desk 7:00-9:00
- Gordon/Brockington Desk 7:00-9:00
- Waldron Tower 7:00-9:00

EXERCISE YOUR RIGHT TO VOTE!
TUESDAY, FEB. 8
WEDNESDAY, FEB. 9

Brought to you by the M.C.R.C. Elections Committee

OPEN FORUM

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11
discriminatory practices in institutions and governments. There is marginalization of minorities who do not fit in with the mainstream culture. There is the extremely overt appearance of Neo-Nazis and white supremacists who advocate persecuting people of different colour or religion. Examples of such horrors are endless.

What needs to be called for is definitely a lot more awareness and improvement. It's time to start thinking about ways to integrate such a fine multicultural mosaic for a better living system in whole. As in the past, it has been generally acknowledged that the best medium of promoting cultural, racial, and ethnic awareness is through education. What we need is an integrative society in which all members have the pride to define in themselves not only their own heritage, but their identity as integrated Canadians and a fulfillment of group achievement.

Realistically, of course, such an ideal can never be achieved. Yet this does not mean that we as society cannot work towards it. There are huge differences in customs, beliefs, and values that create the rich mixture that defines Canadian multiculturalism. Let us not only tolerate these differences, but learn to appreciate, accept, and take pride in this diversity as the Canadian way of life. Let us redefine what happiness is to ourselves and smile. Let us hope that inhumane and immoral history like the Jewish holocaust will never have to repeat itself again.

JUDY LEUNG
AFIS COMMITTEE AGAINST RACISM AND ETHNIC DISCRIMINATION

JUST TURN IT DOWN

THE EDITOR

I've followed closely in The Journal complaints about noise coming from the Quiet Pub, expressed by the graduate students living in the Grad Residence above the JDUC. Their objections led to the shortening of QP hours before Christmas. I feel I can offer a solution that will best serve the grad students, the QP, and the rest of the campus too. It is a solution so straightforward that I am amazed that it was not offered sooner: turn down the music.

What a remarkable idea, you say! What a novel approach! Just consider the endless list of benefits to all concerned! The grad students may putter in their rooms and lounges in peace; the patrons and the QP may once more engage in the delightful art of good conversation, lost in recent years to the rising volume of music and movie soundtracks; the able wait-staff and barpersons no longer return home with their ears ringing. Is it not marvellously simple?

When I first arrived at Queen's in the—dare I confess—late '80s, I found it a pleasure to take a friend to the QP, settle into the cosy sofas and sip elegantly served drinks, which at that time started at two dollars each. This was a place where I could discuss with a friend the greater questions of life, just as previous university students have for generations. But the atmosphere changed as I moved up the student ranks, and I find now with disappointment that the QP's style is little different from the other licensed establishments on campus; the second and third floors of the Grad Club are now the closest one can come to a "quiet pub," without venturing downtown.

I realize that when people cannot hear each other around a table, they tend to drink more (for lack of anything else to do), so on the surface it seems an effective way of upping business in a pub. But surely there is a place for a truly quiet pub in the Queen's community, for those who savour good company and conversation as well as a well-prepared cocktail. I would ask that the manager of the Quiet Pub take time to seriously consider my suggestion, and respond on these pages.

—ELIZABETH BROWN, ARTS '93

WHAT CHRISTIAN AWARENESS WEEK WAS ALL ABOUT

THE EDITOR

And so ends a week of backwoods moralists trying ever so subtly to guilt people into joining a religion no one but my grandmother really believes in anymore. No? So what was Christian Awareness Week about?

Christian Awareness Week was a joint venture by Christian groups on campus to increase knowledge of Jesus Christ.

But don't most people already know about Jesus? Not really. Despite living in what is becoming known as a "post-Christian" society, many university students have only vague ideas about what Jesus actually said. That's why there were so many posters with quotations from the New Testament. We wanted people to know exactly what Jesus said. And the free bibles? The same reason. We believe that people should be able to decide for themselves about Jesus, but should make that decision based on real evidence.

How about the cookies? That was a little different line of reasoning. Jesus' message was one of giving and love. Jesus fed thousands of people (John 6:1-15, Mark 6:30-44). As Christians we wanted to give something to people on campus, free, with no strings.

All of this sounds too good to be true. Is God really like that? Yes and no. Jesus makes it very clear that God loves people (John 3:16) and that God forgives people (Matthew 6:14). God delights in giving good gifts to his children (Matthew 7:11). But the bible also makes it clear that everyone is guilty of sin or doing things that are not God's will (Romans 3:23) and that the result of this is death (Romans 6:23). Because God is both just and loving, Jesus, a part of God, came to earth to die for humanity's sins so that we would not have to die, but could have the relationship with God he intended for us in creation (John 3:1). It isn't enough to believe that Jesus existed. People need to ask for forgiveness and let Jesus change them (John 14:23).

That sounds like religious hocus pocus. Surely rational people don't believe all that stuff about miracles and rising from the dead? Some don't, but many do. Jesus has never coerced people into believing in him. God wants people's love (Matthew 22:27). That kind of a relationship can't be forced. But think about it, if Jesus didn't rise from the dead, 2000 years of history and the moral basis for a lot of Western laws and culture are based on a hoax. Thousands of believers will tell you about their relationship with Jesus Christ and how knowing Jesus has changed their lives. So that was Christian Awareness Week. Yes. The most important decision a person ever makes is deciding who Jesus is, but that decision is one that that person needs to make on his or her own.

—LEE-ANN SMALL, OT '95

WRITE US A LETTER

The Opinions editor encourages all members of the Queen's community to express their viewpoints on any given subject. The Opinions section strives to present all sides of an issue fairly and equally. Letters that are deemed hateful or libelous (as defined by the Ontario Human Rights Code) towards any individual will not be printed.

Letters MUST be under 500 words and MUST be accompanied by the author's name, faculty and year (if applicable), phone number, and signature. The deadline for letters is Sunday for Tuesday issues and Wednesday for Friday issues. The Journal reserves the right to refuse and/or edit all submissions. Confidentiality may be available upon request.

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE

Established in 1971

Toronto Montessori Institute is now accepting applications for the 1994-1995 Teacher-Training Course.

This course leads to a Diploma to teach 3 to 6 and 6 to 12 year olds, applying Montessori educational theory and methodology.

Prerequisite: Undergraduate Degree.

Course duration: August 2, 1994 - June 30, 1995.

Enrollment is limited. For further information, please call Pam Debo, Registrar, at (905) 889-6882.

Course is accredited by the Montessori Accreditation Council for Teacher Education (MACTE).

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE 8569 Bayview Avenue, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3M7

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

NOW AVAILABLE: WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 9th

ALFIE'S MUGS

FURIOUS STYLES WITH LEISURE SUIT LARRY

$6 $6 $6

REFILL THEM FOR CHEAP PINTS!

DOORS OPEN AT 8:00 BRING YOUR MUGS

valentine's day sucks!

This Saturday:
Bitter Singles Smoker '94

Come meet other bitter singles! Hear our DJ spin bitter singles like "Add It Up"! Come drink bitter singles (or bitter doubles)! Special prizes! Don't miss it!

Clark Hall Pub • unfknblvbl!

Lunch...
EAT IT!
...at Quiet Pub

Wanna Talk?

Friday afternoon Live...

CHRIS BORTH & KRISTEN PICKERSGILL

4pm

FREE THURS AFT. MOVIES!!! coneheads
In the Line and of Fire

QP!

SAT NIGHT IS A ARTS '97 VALENTINE'S SMOKER
6PM

Come Hear!

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

LITERARY LAPSES

Fantasy of a delirious tongue consonants, meat teeming maggots, dross /olling, solvent conspirator/gnashing machinations stifling

each tender mushroom bud like no nature should design word meat, broth of stock talk traded mid-bite, /dimmed and blimmed/to whom that cream descends(?)
/But, I...a worm!-a very worm!
on the glittering meathook of civility/standard ivory frieze & happy mashingsmy walls!!-ceiling upon myself, and po' grandbrother brain, oodly in hurt tininess

/to Freedom!!, to Freedom!!/ now, bivouacking from treacherous terrace muscle crescendo sends to blue wavelength calm, schooling with Great Fish,
with Whale, Skate Wing, and Tiger Shark, baroque aquamarine dwelling scene leaving grandbrother beastly there, choking, full cherry gasps great bubblings of unspeakable wonder
Yes, the ranks reply electrographic,
"e'th Out! 'e'th Out!"
forget about biological clause,
'bout bait, and meat parasite tennancy is over this mouth's rent's in the mail in the posted-ticketed-stamped-licketed mail!! You, yes, you boohooing, sobbing there, kneeling through the shore red evidencepurer & diviner than any of those ham-Handed thinkings
(((?!))) speechless, yes
to say the least,
But, oh! but, oh sweet horror burning
now in Mind channels, of that Greater lease
on leaden beastliness, now, now, now
and ever to the meat.

Abbey Demundo

Carmina...

Sonnet and Twenty Syllables

Do you remember aught of me?

Of you, these fractured images: your eyes
At midnight, when their dark shine overmatched
The stars', and the tuned wind made quiet sighs
Amongst your coiled strands of hair, ensnatched
And fickle dropped, like schoolchildren who range
For green suppliant vines; your ready smile
When we first met, and clumsy words exchange'd
Of school, and weather -- wondering the while
If we were interesting, and our clothes
Arranged; the constellation of three moles
That starred your back, which I with care enclos'd
With compassed fingertips; and eyes like coals,
Like blackened coals, when I left 'cross the sea,
And halting asked if those black eyes could see, --

Forsee if you would think of or remember me.

Iain McCormick

The Killing Fields

With her hair fair and her forehead wet among the poppies there sleeps a girl there in the field at the end of the road.

And like a young girl's passion she shines against bluebottle rainbows and the insects from her clotted mouth running down the rusty wound over ripples in a satin slip caught on a coathanger, and the prongs of a crucifix snarled in its chain around her neck
her beautiful neck.

Sandro Pasquali

Morning Stories

Waking Up (Cutting the Thread)

Hovering between wake and sleep cold and warm
you are sewn in duality

Dreams freeze; shatter with the touch of a cold floor
as you rise, disgruntled to disentangle your contradictions

Proselytizer at the Door

Hasty bathrobe. And cold air on the shins.

"Look, my house is burning so I don't need your paint!"

P. Skrivanic

Beds, books, breakfasts, brothers and more books

Bachelor Brothers' Bed & Breakfast
Bill Richardson
Douglas & MacIntyre
$14.95
152 pgs.

*I was a season in hell, the worst of times,
a winter of discontent. Work had soured, love had taken a Greyhound out of town, the days were empty husks. I was bereft of purpose. Oh, it was bleak, bleak, bleak.*

Bill Richardson's Bachelor Brothers' Bed & Breakfast recounts tales from the lives of Virgil and Hector, bachelor twin brothers who operate a bed and breakfast in a secret location off the coast of British Columbia.

What is unique about the brothers' establishment is that it functions as a literary retreat -- people flock there for Jane Austen or Raymond Chandler reading circles, or to tackle Moby Dick or War and Peace. It is, in one guest's words, "a haven for bibliophiles" -- a bibliophile being a person who recognizes that "the ratio of books available to time available is terribly skewed."

Bibliophiles the world over will find Bachelor Brothers' to be a humorous novel, laden with odd literary allusions and dealing with the sort of situations with which only true devotees to the world of literature -- or students who have to read a lot -- could be familiar. Cats who gravitate naturally to books and proceed to sprawl across them, oblivious to the frustrated reader. Reading in the bath. Marginalia in used books. Hector experiences a "Proustian moment." The brothers' parrot, who was found in the attic, is named Mrs. Rochester, after the unfortunate character in Jane Eyre.

There is much more to the novel, however, than these literary witticisms. The book is written in anecdotal style, with instalments by Virgil and Hector and their guests, who, in lieu of signing their names in a guest book, write their own biographical sketches. Richardson draws the reader deftly into the myriad lives of his characters. The result is a series of tales that range from touching accounts of loves lost during World War II and friends lost to AIDS, to the origin of the twins' names and their mother's promiscuous history, to anecdotes about the small community in which the B & B is located.

The local lore and its characters are indeed richly textured. The Well of Loneliness, the only cafe in the area, finally installs a cappuccino machine, much to the chagrin of Virgil and his subsequent sleepless nights. Hector's love interest, who writes (as yet) unpublished romance novels, is also a door-to-door make-up salesperson, and teperter for the local "newspaper" The Occasional Rumour. And the twins' car mechanics are two female psychics who use their gifts to diagnose the ailments of their customers' vehicles.

The brothers themselves are quite content with their relatively peaceful lives. They have no desire to wander out of their valley, and the one time that they do venture out ends in disaster. Virgil and Hector describe themselves as "gentle and bookish and ever so slightly confused."

They each have their own quirks, such as Hector's penchant for moisturizers and shampoos and his love for his old ratty bathrobe. These dressing gowns are like bread pans. They can be spot cleaned when necessary but should never be subjected to wholesale laundering... Robes like this are statements of personal history. They are archives where the discerning eye or nose can distinguish the ghosts of breakfasts and bedtime snacks past. Virgil, on the other hand, has an uncanny talent for memorizing poetry and continually laments this lost discipline. Hector teases me about the way I can align a snippet of poetry with any occasion. He has pointed out that every so often, in the middle of a quotidian conversation, I will slip into iambic pentameter.

Yet although one of the brothers mentions that they really are quite different from each other, I found these differences hard to distinguish. Richardson uses the same style of writing for each brother, so that only their experiences are distinct -- their actual personality features seem identical. One of them likes croquet and one likes Scrabble, but I can't remember which hobby belongs to which brother. But this similitude, considering that they have lived together all their lives, after all, is not surprising.

Interspersed among the tales of the book are a few other gems as well, such as "Virgil's List of Books for When You're Feeling Low," "Hector's List of Favourite Authors for the Bath" and a recipe for "muffins without peer."

Bill Richardson's book is a refreshing read. It pokes fun at literature and the people who read it, it is crammed with delicious little stories, and it is very well-written. In the words of the deceased local poet, Solomon Solomon: So, God who cares for tigers! And who made us burning bright! Thank you for your kindness! I'll sleep happily tonight.

MEGAN NICHOLS SAYS "CALL ME ISHMAEL"

Searching out Asia's great dragons

The Great Dragon's Fleas
Tim Ward
Somerville House
$19.95
252 pgs.

Tim Ward would make an ideal travel mate. He carefully avoids the touristic and seeks out the essence of a country, working towards truly understanding a country rather than merely seeing it. He is very bright and has a wonderful sense of humour -- as such, his book The Great Dragon's Fleas gives the reader a chance to experience adventure and discovery.

Tim Ward left Canada to pursue a spiritual quest in Asia, eventually spending six years there. His book is loosely centred around this quest: a Buddhist searching for truth, and exploring the varieties of religion on a continent in which religion so often dominates life. Ward offers snapshots of life in South and Southeast Asia, adeptly bringing the situations he describes to life. His portrayals of the people he meets are compelling and often leave the reader emotionally affected.

The Great Dragon's Fleas begins in Dharamsala in Northern India, as Ward visits the home of the Tibetan Government-in-Exile. There, he is lucky enough to be granted a brief audience with the Dalai Lama, the Tibetan leader who is the focus of immense devotion and love for Tibetans worldwide. Ward also side-trips to a local sadhu, a Hindu holy man who, before his life as a professional spiritualist, worked for 32 years as a ticket collector for the Indian National Railways in Bombay. Ward's writing about such people is very often funny, but it is not the superior laughter of the ugly, hegemonic tourist. Rather, it is the appreciative amusement of an open-minded newcomer to Asia.

Ward heads south to visit the avatar Sai Baba near Bangalore, India. The Baba is supposedly a living god, and he commands a large and enraptured group of pilgrims. Ward spends a short time with the Baba, witnessing the desperation of those seeking a blessing but constantly failing. As he leaves, Ward seems to agree with a pilgrim who concludes, "He's failed the test. He's not God."

From India, Ward moves through Bangladesh and into Southeast Asia. In Bangkok, he describes the culture shock he finds in a chaotic city of sex and tourism. He travels to Petchaburi, to the home of an Americanized Thai woman he has befriended, and there witnesses the meeting of a modern, essentially Western woman with her traditional Thai family.

Ward moves down to Sumatra in Indonesia, and discovers a cannibalistic culture which converted to Christianity, on the island of Nias. He then flies up to China, and encounters a female Buddha who is honoured at Mt. Potou.

Throughout his travels, Ward meets fascinating people, and though his stops are brief, he gains insight into the reality of life in these countries. For instance, at Mt. Potou Ward pairs up with Zhou, a student doctor who tells him that he is required to perform ten forced abortions a day. Zhou also surprises Ward by explaining how the Chinese education system instructed him about "the Canadian Revolution," when the oppressed Canadians broke free of the shackles of imperialist England. Ward explains that Canada never had a revolution.

Just as Ward began by meeting the Dalai Lama, he achieves closure by ending his book with his trip to Tibet. Ward describes life in Lhasa, the capital, during a brief period when the Chinese government permitted the open practice of Buddhism. He tells of the army presence in the occupied territory, and of the enduring love of the Tibetans for the Dalai Lama, despite the Ward's writing is marvellously evocative. I found myself laughing and agreeing with him very often, remembering distinctly the Indian head-shake which he describes so well -- Sunil wobbled his head side to side as if making a horizontal figure eight with his nose: Indian body language for "maybe yes, maybe no, I don't know" -- or the ever-present "Officer Responsible for Refusing All Requests."

I also found his writing personally vivid and moving. His chapters on Bangladesh brought back the powerful impressions which that country made on me when I travelled there last year. He so accurately describes the details -- the endless cups of chai (sweet, milky tea), the overflowing trains and buses, the mad rickshaw traffic in Dhaka, the beggars, and the poverty. But he also presents the amazing resilience and warmth of the Bengali people, who retain such hope and happiness despite devastating hardships. It is here that Ward succeeds best, in writing so humanely about the people he encounters.

Ward's writing is often humorous, and always clear. He writes with a beautiful, poetic flair which animates the scenes he describes, and reminds me of Ben Okri.

In guiding the reader through Asia, Ward offers insight into various aspects of the continent: the religion, history, and politics of the countries he visits, the daily life of the people, and the impact of tourism. The Great Dragon's Fleas is immensely readable and offers an amazing chance to sample a fascinating fragment of Asia.

BROCK MARTLAND CLAIMS THAT HIS 2-IN-1 COLLAR PROTECTS AGAINST BOTH FLEAS AND TICKS.

Have you ever thought there might be an author in you?

Literary Lapses is hosting its second annual short story contest. The deadline for entries is Tuesday, March 1, and stories should not exceed 2,000 words. Submissions can be dropped off at The Journal, 272 Earl Street. If you have any questions, call Megan or Tim at 545-2800. Prizes will be announced when we know what they are.

The ARROGANT WORMS

Teacher Training in Australia or Britain

Graduate Qualifications in Education Primary and Secondary that will allow you to teach in Ontario. 3- or 4-year graduates may apply. Information may be obtained by contacting,

K.O.M. CONSULTANTS

P.O. BOX 60524
Mountain Plaza Postal Outlet
Hamilton, ON
L9C 7N7
Telephone or Facsimile 905 318 8200

Printed Passage Books Ltd

50% OFF

All 1994 Calendars and Datebooks
Great Selection Still Available!

and

Largely Literary T-Shirts
Regularly $22.95
Now Only $11.48

Printed Passage Books Ltd.

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

Free Coupon digital playground Free Coupon

10% OFF
Displaymaker poster prints

Limit 1 per customer. Offer expires Feb 31/94. Limit 1 coupon per invoice.

3 feet wide...any length poster printer plotter
300 dpi
16.4 million colours
all file formats

backlit film glossy paper
IBM or MAC files
all desktop publishing programs

DisplayMaker
Big Color Digital Printing

computer technology you can use
209 Wellington Street, Kingston, ON, K7K 2Y6 (613) 547-5700

SPORTS

Gaels lose to UQTR and get dumped by the Gee-Gees

BY ANDREW TURNER AND
ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Over the weekend, the men's hockey Gaels lost both home games against two strong teams from Ottawa and Trois-Rivieres. On Friday, the Gaels lost 4-1 to an irritable team from the nation's capital. Much more disappointing, however, was the Gaels 5-4 overtime loss to 'les Patriotes' on Sunday.

Against the Gee-Gees, the Gaels were outplayed by a feisty, gritty team whose physical play gave the Gaels trouble. The Gee-Gees got on the board first midway through the first period only to see the Gaels fight back and later tie the score on a blast from Derek Morin, who was set up by Gosselin and Girardi.

However, the Gaels never really threatened for the remainder of the game as the Gee-Gees scored three unanswered goals to win the game 4-1. From the fans' point of view, it was an exciting game that saw emotions almost come to blows on several occasions. The leaders behind the blue line, Morin and Brown, enjoyed antagonizing their rivals from Ottawa with several exchanges of verbal pleasantries.

On Sunday, the Gaels produced a spirited effort behind the stellar performance of Goalie Bill Landry only to lose in overtime to one of the league leaders, 'les Patriotes' from UQTR.

The Gaels came out flying on Sunday against 'les Patriotes', whom they upset last year in the playoffs. Both teams picked up where they had left off last season without any love lost. Landry played well to keep the Gaels in the game early in the period. At 7:48 the Queen's Golden Gaels were given a chance to pull ahead when 'un Patriote' received a cross checking minor. Mike Lobinowich capitalized eight seconds later after taking a pass inside the UQTR zone and letting a wrist shot go which beat the goalie through his legs.

Two minutes later 'les Patriotes' tied the score on a shot from the slot (Much thanks to Bill Budgell for his enthusiastic assistance on recalling this goal). Not to be outdone, the Gaels pulled ahead again just past the midway mark. Gosselin made a nice behind-the-back pass inside the blue line to Bucher. Bucher then dropped the puck for the incoming Longo, who unleashed a wrist shot that beat the UQTR netminder on the glove side.

A questionable call came at 15:22 of the period when the referee (Lloyd) handed the Gaels two minors. The Gaels penalty killing came within 22 seconds of successfully holding 'les Patriotes' back when a player from UQTR put in a rebound that Landry had no chance to save. The opening frame ended with the score tied at two.

The Gaels came out hungry again in the second. At 2:17 they got a bit of a weird goal from Longo. After keeping the puck in along the boards, Longo shovelled the puck towards the net. The UQTR goalie tried to play the puck but missed and it slid seductively across the goal line.

The score remained 3-2 until

Greg Fenton fights off a Gee-Gee defender while the Gaels are on the offense.

BOHDAN YAKIMECZKO

18:51 of the period when UQTR executed a nice passing play that finished with a fine move on the helpless Landry to tie the score. Queen's showed a lot of grit, bouncing back less than a minute later to regain the lead as Robbins converted on a scramble in front of the UQTR net. Robbins showed good concentration taking a rebound off his skate and directing the puck to his stick and then firing the puck past the screened UQTR goalie.

The Gaels came out in the third period twenty minutes away from the upset. Landry was out of his head stopping 'les Patriotes' time after time. Chants of "we're not worthy" soon developed after a couple of Landry's saves. With 40 seconds left in the period, 'les Patriotes' pulled the goalie to gain the extra attacker. It seemed inevitable that UQTR would tie it up. To our disappointment but not to our surprise, 'les Patriotes' scored with 17 seconds left in regulation time as the Gaels could not get the puck out their zone.

In the overtime frame, both teams had an equal number of opportunities to win the game.

Then, after a good Bucher rush, 'les Patriotes' caught the Gael defenders in a communication breakdown which resulted in the puck being fed out of the corner to an open Patriote attacker who potted the winner.

Once again, Landry was named the Gaels' most valuable player for the game in this losing cause. The Gaels are back in action on Feb. 18th against Guelph at 7:30 p.m. and on Feb. 19th at 2:00 p.m. against U of T. For all those not having fun in the sun, come check out the Gaels at Jack Harty Arena.

Hoops Gaels smarting — playoff hopes dim but possible

Men's team must win two on the road to stay alive

BY ROB THOMPSON

The men's basketball Gaels might have been better off if they had just stayed home Saturday night. They were beaten soundly by the Ryerson Rams 84-69, in a score which flattered Queen's.

It was a promising start for the Gaels as they jumped out to an early 15-8 lead in the first five minutes of the game. That was the extent of the success enjoyed by Queen's on this night. The Rams shook off their bus legs, taking the lead at the eleven minute mark, and never looking back. Alex Beason paced the Rams in the first half with 21 points, among them a three pointer from a different time zone and a jam inside the paint. When the teams retired for the break, it was the visitors holding the lead by a 43-35 count.

Dave Smart again led the Gaels in the first half, notching 15 points, and Roger Wheeler added seven.

The Gaels pulled within five points early in the second half, but that was the closest they would come the remainder of the game. After the teams traded hoops in the early going, Ryerson used their speed and leaping ability to pull away. An 18-2 run, highlighted by several spectacular rejections of Gael layups, provided all the cushion that the Rams would need to ensure the victory.

Ryerson led by as many as 25 points midway through the second half. Some late scoring by the Gaels and careless play by the Rams allowed the score to remain respectable for Queen's.

Beason led all scorers on the night with 32, bringing his season total against the Gaels to 68. Also worth noting were the five three pointers and 18 points notched by Michael Chisolm. Dave Smart paced the Gaels with 23 points, although he played sparingly in the second half. Wyeth Clarkson added 14 points to the Gael cause, all of his points coming in the second half. Finally, Roger Wheeler notched 11 points.

It was a disappointing night for Queen's fans. After such a strong performance last weekend against the Varsity Blues from Toronto, it was hoped by many that the Gaels had turned the corner. With the season having already passed the midway point, the Gaels only have one league win to show for their efforts, making a playoff berth a formidable task.

The Gaels find themselves in a position where they must win two games on the road next weekend when they travel to Ottawa to face the Gee-Gees and the Carleton Ravens. The Gaels have the talent to beat both of these squads, having lost tight battles to them earlier this season. If they play as they are capable of, two victories are a realistic hope. But if they show as lacklustre an effort as they did Saturday night, it will effectively end any playoff hopes for a Gael team that has the talent to beat any team in the league on any given night.

The Gaels are next at home Tuesday Feb. 15th against the York Yeomen, and conclude their home schedule on Friday Feb. 18th against the league leading Laurentian Voyageurs. Tip-off time on both nights is 8 p.m.

Roger Wheeler goes for the lay-up in 84-69 defeat.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

"Tyke" Kwon-do is all the rage in the Kang Duk Kwon demonstration. YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

ROOTS
WINTER WIPEOUT
SALE
ALL SHIRTS
$39.99
REG $59.95 AND UP
34 PRINCESS STREET
546-7668

women's basketball
Ryerson Rams sheared 62-41

BY FRANK DIXON

There's just no doubt about it — Queen's Golden Gaels are 21 points better than the Ryerson Lady Rams.

For the second time in a week, the Gaels (3-3) defeated Ryerson by 21 points in an OWIAA league game, this time at Bartlett Gym. Queen's won 88-67 last weekend. The home side got off to a hot start and were never in trouble in this defensive battle which saw Ryerson shoot a deadfall 22 percent (14 for 65) from the floor. This was the second straight win and third consecutive strong effort for the resurgent Gaels, and it came on Parents' Night in front of an appreciative crowd of some 300 fans, which included the parents of virtually all the Queen's players.

Vicki Wilson led the Gaels with 20 points and six rebounds. Through six league games, she leads the OWIAA East in scoring, and stands second in the OWIAA, with an average of 21.2 points per game.

In contrast to the teams' earlier encounter, which was a free-wheeling, high-scoring affair, both sides paid more attention to trying to shut down the opponent. The Gaels, obviously, had more success with this. One player who was definitely shut down, at least in the first half, was Ryerson's Darcel Wright, who scored just three points before the break as Queen's built a 34-15 lead. Wright scored 34 points by herself against Queen's last weekend. She bounced back with 19 points in the second half, finishing with 22 to lead all scorers, but the game's outcome was long since decided by then.

The defensive struggle seemed to favour the Gaels, for the simple reason that they have two players in particular — starting guards Tanya McIntyre and Jaylene Morrison — for whom playing defense is not a chore but a joy. McIntyre turned in her usual solid all-round game: 10 points, six recoveries, six assists, six blocked shots. Point guard Morrison contributed eight points and helped shut down Wright. Back-up point guard Erica Hollingdrake saw considerable court time, and played well.

Queen's head coach Dave Wilson remarked, "any time you can hold any team in this league to 15 points in a half, you've achieved something worthwhile."

The Gaels face a vital game tonight when they travel to Toronto for a 6 p.m. date with the York Yeowomen. A three-way fight is shaping up between Queen's, Ottawa and York for the third and fourth playoff spots in the division. A win tonight would be sweet, for the shorthanded Gaels should soon receive a boost with the return of two-time OW All-Star Cathy Amara, out since the league opener with a knee injury.

frank & carnosci
An "earnest" appraisal

BY FRANK DIXON

Regardless of whether American figure skater Tonya Harding skates at the Lillehammer Olympics, the media circus is going to focus on her lurid drama at the expense of thousands of other athletes from around the globe who have trained just as hard for their moment in the snow. That is a shame, because many obscure sports and athletes get worldwide attention only during the winter Olympics.

At press time, the United States Figure Skating Association had passed the burden of making a decision on Harding's fate to the U.S. Olympic Committee. Unless you're from outer space, you know that Harding's estranged husband Jeff Gillooly pleaded guilty to racketeering charges last week in the Jan. 6 assault on rival skater Nancy Kerrigan, who knocked Kerrigan out of the U.S. championships. Several other sleazy associates of Harding and Gillooly face a variety of charges in the attack, although Harding herself has not been formally charged with anything. She has, however, admitted to knowing details of the attack on her teammate after it happened, and by lying to investigators held up the course of justice.

Kerrigan, apparently nearly recovered, will definitely skate at Lillehammer. The USOC could disqualify U.S. champion Harding from the U.S. team on grounds of poor sportsmanship, but are proceeding carefully because of the fear of lawsuits by Harding, who admitted in a TIME magazine interview that she craved the dollars which could flow through endorsements following a strong Olympic showing.

This two-bit drama has already been the death of far too many trees. Too bad the media isn't making more of the story of speed skater Kristen Talbot, who donated bone marrow to save her brother's life shortly before the Olympics.

Will Harding skate? It's very likely. But remember that figure skating is a subjective sport, with results determined by judges. If she does skate, you better believe that no matter how well she performs, she won't make the medal podium.

ASUS JACKETS
is looking for a committee for 94/95

Positions available:

1. Committee Chairperson(s)
2. Director of Finances
3. Director of Operations
4. Director of Advertising
5. 5-7 Committee Members

Applications will be available at 'The Core' 183 University. The deadline for applications will be February 18 at 5:00 pm. For more info please phone 545-6278

Lost & Found

BY SPORTS STAFF

Q. The Toronto Blue Jays have a shot at winning three World Series in a row. What was the last team to do so?

A. The Oakland A's won three in a row from 1972 to '74. Three teams (the Cincinnati Reds, the N.Y. Yankees and the Jays) have since won two in a row.

Q. Who is the only NHL player to have scored a goal of each possible type (i.e. even strength, power play, short handed, empty net and penalty shot) in one game?

A. Mario Lemieux did this against the New Jersey Devils in 1988.

Q. What famous Canadian figure skater is missing part of her foot?

A. Elizabeth Manley is missing a small toe and part of the surrounding area on one foot. She took up figure skating as a form of physical therapy to help her balance.

Q. Don Shula recently became the winningest coach in NFL history. What coach holds the record for career winning percentage?

A. Vince Lombardi. His record stands at 105-35-6 for a winning percentage of .740.

Q. What tennis player won the only recorded "golden set" (winning a set without losing a point) in professional tennis?

A. Bill Scanlon won a set 6-0 without losing a point against Marcos Hocerar in the WCT Gold Coast Classic in 1983. He won the match 6-2, 6-0.

Q. What is the origin of powerboat racing?

A. A gasoline engine was first installed in a boat by Jean Lenoir on the River Seine, Paris, France in 1865. Organized powerboat races were first run at the turn of the 20th century. The first major international competition was the Harnsworth Trophy, launched in 1903. Modern powerboat racing is broken down into two main types: circuit racing in sheltered waterways, and offshore racing. Offshore events were initially for displacement (nonplaning) cruisers, but in 1958 the 170-mile Miami, Fla.-to-Nassau, Bahamas race was staged for planing cruisers.

Q. How many triple crown winners have there been?

A. There have been eleven, the first in 1919 and the last in 1978. They are, in order: Sir Barton (1919), Gallant Fox (1930), Omaha (1935), War Admiral (1937), Whirlaway (1941), Count Fleet (1943), Assault (1946), Citation (1948), Secretariat (1973), Seattle Slew (1977), and finally Affirmed (1978).

Q. What jockey has the highest career earnings?

A. Laffit Pincay Jr. has won an incredible sum — $169,091,348.00. This is from 1964 through December 31, 1992. You read it right the first time.

Queen's claims unbeaten second in Historic Hockey

Queen's was on the ice in the Historic Hockey Series. BRENT DAVIS

BY FRANK DIXON

Kingston harbour.

Three teams — Queen's, Royal Military College, and Royal Canadian Horse Artillery — took part in this unique round-robin event. It was well-attended by some 300 enthusiastic and warmly-clothed fans.

Queen's, which won the last two Series, was represented by ten final-year PHE students, and was coached by Ed Deans.

The RCHA Second Regiment team from Canadian Forces Base Petawawa wound up winning the Series with a convincing 5-0 victory over RMC in the final game. Combined with their opening 1-1 tie against Queen's, this was enough to give the soldiers the Brigade Trophy on goal differential. Queen's beat RMC 2-1 in the middle game, with Kirk Gutzman and Craig Evans scoring for Queen's. With a natural hat trick in the clinching win, RCHA's Steve Drover captured Most Valuable Player honours. Scott Kent of Queen's, who scored only four seconds into the opening game for a new Series record, was his team's MVP.

Several of the RCHA players had only recently returned from Commando duty with the Canadian Army in Somalia.

"The series is both a re-enactment of old-time hockey, and a competition in itself," said Ed Grenda, of the Kingston-based International Hockey Hall of Fame, a sponsor of this quaint, one-of-a-kind spectacle. "Queen's graduates were influential in spreading hockey to places like Pittsburgh and Baltimore before the turn of the last century. The RCHA team is the spiritual descendant of soldiers from the British Garrison at Kingston which played a primitive form of hockey on Kingston harbour as early as 1855."

Insofar as was possible, original equipment and rules were used. This meant seven players a side (with three substitutes), specially-commissioned sticks which reached about waist-high when players were on skates, a square-shaped puck, and nets consisting of six-inch wooden posts driven into the ice, without a crossbar. The biggest rule difference from modern times was the rule against forward passing. RMC in particular had difficulty with this.

However, modern skates were used, since ancient ones would have been too fragile and unusable, even if they could have been found. Players took the ice without pads, and tams and toques provided some warmth against the icy winds. Queen's players wore Gaels' rugby sweaters, which have certainly proven to have plenty of wins in them (witness seven OUAA championships in eight years).

Queen's coach Ed Deans is retiring from the University this year, and could have capped his career with three straight Series wins had Queen's managed to triumph. However, with Deans' kind of winning record, rumour has it the Ottawa Senators will offer to Deans a lucrative multi-year deal to turn the last-place NHL team around!

Michener Visitorship Committee presents
Senator Solange Chaput-Rolland

Fortitude OR Solitude

Tuesday, February 15th 1994 at 4:00 p.m.

Walter Light Hall, Room 205
Union Street (near Barrie)

Queen's University at Kingston
Admission is free and everyone is welcome

ENTERTAINMENT

Woodstock

SHE STOLE MY BEER WITH VOLUME ALFIE'S
BY CHRISTIAN DEBRUIJN

I can't stop writing punk rock 'cause I'm stuck...in a ghetto of folkies. If something as dumb comes along, please give me some 'cause this isn't the '60's. The Rheostatics Kingston's Volume, formerly an all cover band, took the stage first this Saturday in support of their debut self-titled indie-cassette, available in the next few weeks. "Unique" and "deconstructionalist" would be an accurate description of the bands mix of punk-metal combined with thrash-hardcore elements with just the right amount of portable key boards thrown in.

On "13" and "No Wonder," lead singer Mike List put on his best and somewhat repetitive Black Francis screaming persona. The most interesting original number of the night was "In-bred," fuelled by Chris Walmsley's carchy guitar hooks. Full marks go to the band for choosing to cover the Velvet Underground's "Heroin." However, List failed to capture Lou Reed's passion and drama depicting the struggle of a junkie who wants to inject himself with the needle but realizes at the same time it's his ultimate destruction. Other covers included fairly average versions of Tool's "Sober," Rage Against the Machine's "Killing In The Name Of," Sons of Freedom's "Mona Lisa" and a passible romp with the Pixies "Tame." Volume was going nowhere being strictly a cover band. It is ultimately artistically destructive for a band to base its existence on the talents of others. However, I'll say this in Volume's favour: at least they're attempting to break the mould that they've established. Give them time to write and play more and you never know. But on the whole, Volume was kind of just there, more disappointing than pleasing.

From Vancouver, the headliners, She Stole My Beer have the best name for a band I've heard in awhile and are a former Grateful Dead cover band. Their two sets were comprised of almost all originals from their independent album Spark Off The Guard Rail on Spinar records. The band sounded like a mesh of the Dead combined with '70's southern guitar rock with a hint of The Band's distinct organ thrown in. The better numbers of the night included "Nobody's Fool" and "Derox," which saw the band turn off Jordan White's keyboards and break out of its Dead trap. Their playing became much quicker and shorter, sounding more like a California-era American Music world.

Other semi-pleasing numbers included a fateful cover of the Allman Brothers' "One Way Out" and in the encore an interesting interpretation of Prince's "Strawberry." The rest of the numbers frankly didn't do much for me. On "Smack" and "Grinch" SSMB guitarist Chad Chilibeck's self-indulgent guitar solos combined with the unnecessarily extended Dead-ish jams to make for very boring songs. When the band engaged on their extended numbers I could overhear comments like: "Oh man, it's so psychedelic." Well I don't know what's so psychedelic about a simple mesh of country and blues.

After the show vocalist and rhythm guitarist Tom Taylor commented on the psychedelic labelling: "No, I think people really misinterpret our musical style along with that of the Grateful Dead. If you want real psychedelic rock, try early Pink Floyd."

When I asked Taylor about his feelings about modern rock, his answer disturbed me: "You know, there's not much music out there today being made that I like. If I can say this as a majority band opinion, the best music was being made in the '60's and '70's and obviously it shows in our music."

On the whole, SSMB are very good at what they do—they are technically sound musicians and judging from the crowd response, they put on a good show. However, I strongly question any band that tries to recapture a pop culture and musical genre that has been overblown in its importance and spir out in favour of newer forms.

This is the 1990's. You can't go back to Woodstock baby, you are just twenty-something years old...you weren't even born.

She stole my beer, but I still got my smoke.

CHRIS PETRIE

Saigon Delights: Kingston's newest Vietnamese Restaurant

SAIGON DELIGHTS
BY LEE PETRIE

Greetings gentle readers. In response to the bags of mail containing requests for information about the life and work of your humble restaurant critic, I have decided to favour you with answers to these oft-asked questions in addition to my latest (and no doubt eagerly-anticipated) restaurant review.

Dear Journal Restaurant Critic,
What is the best part of being the Journal Restaurant Critic?

Gentle Reader,
First and foremost, I enjoy the prestige. But when I visited Saigon Delights, I realized that as much as I enjoy the numerous social perks of the job, what I really like is the thrill of stealing menus. This was accomplished with relative ease at Saigon Delights, because their menu is a laminated piece of paper. Places like Chez Piggy rate much higher on the difficulty scale because their menus are hard cover. The Pilot House rates near-impossible because there is only one menu and it is a chalkboard nailed to the wall.

Dear Journal Restaurant Critic,
I am plagued by the nagging suspicion that sweet and sour chicken balls aren't really an authentic Asian delicacy and that Ho Lee Chow is just a name cooked up by a white ad exec. Where can I get some Asian food that isn't covered in that weird orange sauce?

Gentle Reader,
I am afraid that I must confirm your suspicions. But have no fear—your desire for sauce that isn't manufactured in refinery can be satisfied at Saigon Delights, Kingston's newest Vietnamese restaurant.

Dear Journal Restaurant Critic,
Do you get to meet a lot of famous and glamorous people while you are dining in Kingston's finest restaurants?

Gentle Reader,
There is a certain amount of celebrity status attached to this job, and of course, celebrity attracts celebrity. In fact, while at Saigon Delights, we were lucky enough to make a sighting of Rod "Pass the Sweet and Sour Shrimp" Fraser. As Vice-Principal of Resources and All Things Financial, Rod surely knows value when he sees it. Saigon Delights' prices will appeal to even the most meagre budget. $3.75 buys an appetizer of three Cha Gio, Vietnamese spring rolls. Meat, shrimp, and silver noodles fill a rice paper wrapper which is deep fried until crispy and served with an aromatic clear sauce mixed with finely grated carrot. A similar creation, Goi Cuon, is available for vegetarians and replaces the meat and shrimp with deep fried tofu, rice, noodles and vegetables. Tofu has acquired an unnecessarily bad reputation as a staple of 1970's California hippie vegetarian cuisine (if you can call it that). Granted, raw tofu has a similar texture and flavour and about as much aesthetic appeal as extra mild Colby cheese (available on a VIA train near you!). However, when incorporated into these tasty spring rolls, the tofu takes on the flavour of the vegetables and spices and its texture becomes more substantial through deep frying. Shrimp rolls complete the appetizer selection. Rice noodles, crunchy bean sprouts and whole shrimp fill the soft, unfried rice paper wrapper. Spicy chunky peanut sauce and grated carrots are provided for dipping.

make them all the more appealing—nothing is more than $6.95. The Com Suoi Nuong Cha (also known as the Number 9) is a good choice for the starving student. The plate is piled high with rice, a grilled pork chop and Vietnamese meatloaf. Nothing represents the 1950's Good Housekeeping approach to cooking quite like meatloaf. Happily, the Vietnamese version bears only passing resemblance to the ol' brick o' meat, as it comprises meat, vegetables, and spices in an egg suspension. This dish is improved by adding the fiery sauce provided at each table. Please note that this sauce should be approached with caution and respect. If you're not sure how hot it will be, perform this simple test: place a dollop on the sleeve of your shirt. If it burns through the fabric in less than a minute, it's hot. I'm sure that with a skillfully sewn patch, my dining companion's shirt will look as good as new.

Dear Journal Restaurant Critic,
Often when I go out for dinner, the food is terrible and the portions are so small. What's a hungry student on a budget that makes the poverty line a lofty goal to do?

Gentle Reader,
Saigon Delights offers a tempting array of main courses (thirteen to be exact) and the prices whelmingly spicy. Vegetarians may be disappointed that only one veggie entrée is on the menu, the Number 18, a plate of stir fried bean curd, vegetables, and rice. This dish also benefits from the addition of hot sauce. Less-than-interesting soy sauce is the dominant flavour, and the hot sauce gives the bean curd and vegetables a necessary boost. Number 16 is a mixture of shrimp and chicken in Vietnamese crepes and is delicately flavoured with coconut, which will appeal to those who prefer subtler spicing.

Saigon Delights is not licensed under LLBO, which is unfortunate for two reasons: first, because spicy food is well-complemented by cold beer; and second, because it meant that one of my dining companions had a bad case of the shakes by the time the meal was over.

The restaurant won't win any awards for its decor—it is unassuming, but clean and bright. The staff is friendly and efficient and when you ask for water, you get a whole pitcher! My advice to the chef: don't be shy with the spice. When the menu says spicy, make it so. Fiery dishes don't appeal to everyone's taste, but the menu is well-balanced by milder choices, so the chef can afford to take a chance and make a few dishes high octane.

Saigon Delights is located at 272 Bagot Street, Kingston, between Princess and Montreal.

Spotlight on Direct from Kingston '94

Direct From Kingston Festival '94 is an ambitious showcase for Kingston playwrights, actors and directors. Building on the success of last year's performances, this year's festival features seven plays exploring a dynamic range of theatrical forms and subject matter. All performances are held at The Baby Grand Theatre and dates and times vary. Please see the listings for a complete schedule of performances.

THE REFUGEES WRITTEN BY HARRY RINTOUL
DIRECTED BY CHRISTOPHER GRISMER
BY PAT ROBBINS-MADILL

Ever feel like it's the middle of winter, it's thirty below and the walls are beginning to close in? Well, you might ask yourself what would happen if you put a gay man, a drifting girlfriend and her abusive boyfriend together in the same apartment under these strenuous conditions. The interactions between these misplaced characters form the basis of The Refugees.

Sydney (Todd Van Allan) is a gay hustler who dreams of breaking into radio. His love for trivia regarding the recording lives of Elvis and The Beatles is only topped by his love for Kraft Dinner and the perfect cup of tea. Tawe (Dylan Trowbridge) on the other hand loathes Kraft Dinner and seems more partial to beer than his girlfriend Patsy (Alicia J. Francis), who incidentally, is forced to sleep with her landlord when she can't make the rent.

The first sign of tension occurs when Tawe screams at Sydney, "You're a fag!" During the course of the play, the issue of Sydney's sexual orientation and choice of profession (if one could call it a choice) comes to the fore through Tawe's failure to communicate his feelings toward Sydney, Patsy, or for that matter, himself. Tawe often launches into blind rages or if he's not hitting Sydney or Patsy, he's beating the couch (a very dusty couch).

Patsy is that third element in the play that seems more like a vehicle for the exploration of Sydney's and Tawe's relationship, rather than a truly bonified character. Perhaps this is the fault of the playwright. The actress played the part rather well despite the shortcomings of the script.

Patsy's a drifter. Her father was an army man who moved around a lot before he eventually disappeared. Having moved from school to school, province to province and apartment to apartment, Patsy's one wish is to "maybe get my name in the phonebook." Unfortunately she never does, and her character is as elusive as a scratched phone number on a piece of scrap paper.

After Sydney gets beat up by a bunch of "Burbies" (that's suburbanites), he toys with the idea of finding a girlfriend because a girlfriend will insure that he won't get beat up again. Tawe displays a hint of compassion while dressing Sydney's wounds but later punches Sydney in the face when Sydney admits his love for him. One night, the two go out and get loaded and Tawe tries to make a pass at Sydney, thinking that sex is what Sydney wants. Rather, all Sydney wants is to be loved for who he is, not what he is. Tawe is perplexed and says to Patsy, "I wanted to show him I cared."

It's interesting to note that Tawe approaches his girlfriend's feelings the same way, and when he says "women are so fucking insecure," he betrays his underlying sexism. Tawe's sexist attitudes seem to have been formed by the dysfunctional relationship he had with his mother, who had enough trouble dealing with "one brat" of her own. When Sydney mentions his mother's tips for preparing the proper cup of tea, all Tawe can do is lash out at Sydney with his tongue.

To make things worse, Sydney and Tawe are both unemployed. With nowhere to go, all they can do is pick at annoying aspects of each other's personality. Introduce Patsy and she becomes the target in a bitter tug of war.

If you love happy endings and simple resolutions, The Refugees is not a play for you. At times it may offend, but not without a purpose. The Refugees is a play that deals with the complex issues of sexism, abuse, homophobia, unemployment, prostitution and rape. It offers some keen insights into these issues, but doesn't pretend to offer simple solutions to complex problems; if anything, it states that dysfunction breeds dysfunction and that these problems lie with something deeper, something deeper than a box of Kraft Dinner.

The Refugees will be performed at The Baby Grand Theatre on Feb. 6 at 3:30 pm., Feb. 8 at 8 pm., Feb. 9 at 9:30 pm., and Feb. 13 at 7 pm.

Having a bloody good time.

YODIT ROCHE-JOHNSON

THE ONION SKIN
WRITTEN BY PAMELA S. MAIN
DIRECTED BY ANDREA DYMOND

ARMY OF LOVERS
WRITTEN BY KATE BARKER
DIRECTED BY ANNE HARDCASTLE

BY LAURIE NORTH

Escape from winter's melancholic trance by immersing yourself in the exhilarating live theatre of Threshold Theatre's Direct From Kingston, a festival of original plays by local Kingston playwrights, directors and actors.

The Onion Skin, by Queens' drama student Pamela S. Main, explores the alienation a woman experiences in choosing to pursue her dreams rather than "performing social obligations to society."

The plot of The Onion Skin revolves around Emily Fitzgerald (Tracy Michailidis), a woman who was adopted by an affluent family. Imbued with naive, unblemished dreams of youth, Emily discovers her biological mother is alive and sets out to find her. Emily locates her mother, but discovers that the highly acclaimed jazz singer that people described her to be was little more than an illusion. Instead, Peggy Gerald (Lisa Baylin) is a drunk, angry woman who sings for her "sperm baby cockrills," her pseudonym for wine. She is the ruined queen of the Beat Generation's Greenwich Village, now drowning in her own reservoir of self-eradicating pity.

Thankfully, Main refrains from revealing Emily's identity to Peggy in a typically, overt "Oh Mother, it's me" manner. Instead, she preserves the secret, using odd characters to unravel the threads of Peggy's identity: Benny the bartender (Dean S. Armstrong), when not mesmerized by the pages of Penthouse, inadvertently gives Emily background information about her mother. Tina the cocktail waitress, a steadfast fan of the formerly, charismatic Peggy also helps out, urging Peggy to talk to Emily: "why don't you tell her about..."

As Peggy fleetingly recalls sarcastic yet touching vignettes, an angelic wistfulness appears on her overblushed face, one that looks like it has been deeply chiselled by a century old scowl. Gradually, Emily and Peggy share anger and pain that has been buried for years. Understanding the reasons for her mother's dreadful downfall, Emily is forced to face the hard reality and subsequently recognizes the same in herself.

Contrasting with Main's emotional rollercoaster, is Kate Barker's latest work, Army of Lovers, which humorously examines the politics and tensions within Kingston's lesbian community. One of Barker's underlying themes is to what extent "political correctness" should rule one's life.

Barker's dynamic depiction of characters is extremely realistic. She explores familiar attitudes and idiosyncrasies found within the woman's community, ranging from radical feminism to New-Age fanaticism.

When the young and enthusiastic lesbian Ella (wonderfully played by Lucy Carahine) arrives in Kingston, she is very excited to meet another "living gay person," as she told Barb (Suzanne Hersh). Although appearing naive, Ella soon reveals her independence and courage by refusing to support Barb's political convictions which would result in the expulsion of another member, MIK (Katie Scaife) from the collective.

Suzanne Hersh brilliantly performs the dual roles of two distinct characters: Barb, a loud and strongly opinionated woman whose conversations frequently transform into arguments, and Gabrielle, a relaxed woman who's engrossed in New Age meditative healing and sounds, as if she's just experienced the best massage of her life.

Anne Hardcastle's impressive direction enhances the play's realism. During scene changes, we watch two men dressed in black transform the sparse props. When Gabrielle speaks directly to the audience, verbally visualizing her dream of creating the largest woman's festival ever, we feel that we too are involved in the collective.

Speaking as a lover of live theatre, I am very proud of the talent within our community and believe these artists should be supported and commended for their achievements.

The Onion Skin plays on Fri. 10:00 pm., Sat. 9:00

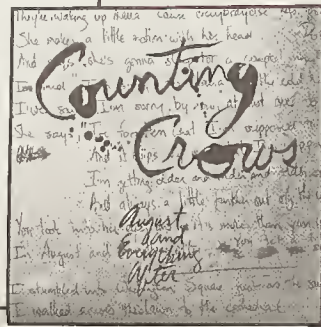

Lucy Carahine plays Ella in Army of Lovers

LAURIE NORTH

COUNTING CROWS
AUGUST AND EVERYTHING AFTER Geffen Records

This San Francisco band has achieved the sudden fame most bands only dream of. Counting Crows have been on Saturday Night Live, and were chosen the best new band of the year by Rolling Stone—with good reason. Their album is an exceptional, emotional, reflective and very mature piece of work. "Mr. Jones," the lead single which is everywhere on the radio now, is memorable not only for its groove, but also for its self-conscious introspection. In his lyrics, singer Adam Duritz shows his vulnerability: I wish I was beautiful/Believe in me, help me believe in anything. And his ambition: When I look in the television I want to see me, staring right back at me. And my favourite: I want to be Bob Dylan/Mr. Jones wishes he was someone just a little more funky. The album is full of lyrics which refreshingly break the typical confines of rock albums. Musically, the band has found a sound of its own, although, if mapped out, they would fit somewhere between REM, the Hothouse Flowers, and the Tragically Hip. Duritz's singing has a nervous intensity which clearly reminds me of Gord Downie or Eddie Vedder (even Bruce Springsteen, at his peak), a wound-up vigour which begs one to dance or drink. Pass me a bottle, Mr. Jones!

BROCK MARTLAND
RATING: A+

THE INBREDS HILARIO
PF Records

Everything about The Inbreds screams indie rock. As they issue their fourth release on their own PF Records, The Inbreds proudly carry the motto of "bass & drums can be done!" The Inbreds are comprised of Mike O'Neill, on bass and vocals, and Dave Ullrich on drums. No guitars here. However, this is not to declare that their music is primitive and base. Hilario is a wonderfully sincere collection of songs. The intimacy of the production and arrangement of the band makes for an appealing artistic experience.

ANDREW MCALLISTER
RATING: B+

As a result of the numerous sources these recordings draw upon, the sounds generated by the music are amazingly diverse. Some tracks were produced at Chemical Sound in Toronto, while others were simply recorded straight to a tape deck. What is common to all tracks is an intimacy created by a lack of studio overkill. The Inbreds don't hide behind walls of sound. While Mark O'Neill's bass playing is littered with interesting influences, his style is an original synthesis. Always melodic, sometimes melancholy, his emotive bass playing is not unlike that of Joy Division or the churning of Pale Saints. "On Good Taste," the vocal harmonies are lush, harkening back to the Beatles. Ullrich provides strong rhythms while O'Neill rips along, proving himself the J Mascis of bass. Like Eric's Trip, the unabashed sincerity of The Inbreds makes their music attractive and addictive.

THERE'S A RIOT GOIN' ON

FT POSTPUNK QUEENIE
PJ HARVEY 4-TRACKS
ISLAND RECORDS

On her first two releases, Dry and Rid of Me, in a juxtaposition of punk and blues, Polly Jean Harvey gave bold poetic images of dry vaginas, fetishistic lovers and stories about women who want too much. Just like Poly Styrene and Laura Logic from X-Ray Spex, when in 1977 they screamed for liberation in "Oh Bondage Up Yours!" Harvey challenges cultural/gender stereotypes and empowers women by encouraging celebration of their own sexuality. In comparison, Harvey makes Julianna Hatfield's confessional 1992 release Hey Babe sound like a school girl crush.

Despite Harvey's provocative stance on female sexuality, she describes herself as "not being a feminist." All her musical idols are male and she believes that "the personal is not always political." If the 1990's are a decade of new feminist thought, then PJ is its musical symbol.

After just two albums it takes a lot of guts to release an album of 4-Track outtakes, B-sides and previously un-released material, but Harvey pulls it off impressively. The production is beautifully raw/aggressive and makes you wonder why she bothered with all. The bass and drums are hardly minimal back-up vocals, and at times a harmonica and a Hammond organ for good measure.

The Rid of Me tracks, such as the title track, "SOFT Queenie" and "Snake" are far better in their original state. As far as the new material goes, it makes one wonder what Albi- ni was thinking by including "Highway 61 Revisited" and two versions of "Man Sized," which are essentially fillers in comparison.

"Easy," with its abrasive defense of female sexuality, answers the question of why so many women have embraced her. In "M-Bike," a song about a man seeing worldly possessions as being more important than his lover, Harvey, in a fit of nihilistic rage, screams: I'm going to drive it off a cliff... I think what you like but I fuckin' hate this motorbike. On heart-break numbers like "Goodnight" and "Hardly Wait," Harvey doesn't fall into the trap of self-pity. She bluntly states her feelings and moves on. Both "Goodnight" and "Realing" explore fantasies with lines like: I wanna bathe in milk, eat grapes / Robert DeNiro sit on my face... Aphrodite she got nothin' on me. These two songs best sum up the two main themes found in PJ Harvey's music: desire and disappointment.

PJ Harvey is by far the most interesting and confrontational female artist to come out in years. If Rid of Me was Harvey's coronation, then 4-Track Demos legitimizes her role as the Queen of post-punk and the most important female artist of the 1990's.
CHRISTIAN DEBRUIJN
RATING: A

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

present

THE COLORADO STRING QUARTET

- * First 'First Prize' winners the Banff International String Quartet Competition
- * 1983 Naumburg Chamber Music Award
- * Founders, Soundfest Chamber Music Festival

Programme

Mozart - Quartet in C Major, K.465
Mendelssohn - Quartet in F minor, op. 80
Shostakovich - Quartet in A-flat Major, Op. 118 (No.10)

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!
(plus GST)

Saturday 12 February 8PM Grant Hall

$20 / $8 (Child) plus GST
Visa & Mastercard accepted

Tickets: Queen's Box Office, JDUC
Union & University 545-2558

DE LA SOUL
BUHLOONE MINDSTATE
TOMMY BOY MUSIC, INC.

It takes no more than a cursory glance to note the domination of hip hop culture by "gangster" imagery. The commercial successes of Dr. Dre, Snoop Doggy Dogg and Cypress Hill attest to the widespread appeal of hard core rap. Nonetheless, hip hop remains musically and intellectually diverse, as evinced by the recent release of De La Soul's third album, Buhloone Mindstate. Whereas gangster rappers tend to engage in prolonged deliberations concerning their affinity for "gats," (guns) "stunts," (women) and "blunts," (joints) the triumvirate who comprise De La Soul (Posnuvate, Trugoy, and Maseo) concern themselves with subjects of a less intense and offensive nature—a fact which has been construed by some to be indicative of an attempt to "sell-out" to a broader-based, non-black audience. De La Soul replies to its critics in traditional hip hop fashion: by lashing back. The very title of the new album—Buhloone Mindstate—is an indictment of the ego-inflated, "fantasyland" mindset of gangster rappers. Two songs in particular, Eye Patch and Ego Trippin', expand upon this theme with playful jabs which point out the inherent absurdity of gangster rap. The former is critical of the "hard core" style in general; the latter is an attack on the credibility of "gangsterism" itself: And everybody's talkin' about your stuff funny / But they're still telling lies to me / I've got the trees in my backyard / And it's hard for them to tell a lie to me. Although such criticisms surface throughout Buhloone Mindstate, it would be a mistake to think that this album is all work and no play. If anything, the opposite is true—De La Soul is all play and no work. In the process of listening to their humorous anecdotes one is reminded of a critical point: hip hop is as much about friendship and social justice as the violence which permeates American ghettos and lends itself to gangster rap. Hip hop is about reality. The question we are left to answer is "which is real"—the laid-back social commentary of De La Soul, or the frenzied and often mindless rhetoric of gangster rap?

BEN JONES
RATING: B+

Street Life Listings

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Blink 7:20 9:35
Philadelphia 7:05 9:50
Shadowlands 6:45 9:35
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:05 9:45
Schindler's List 8:30
I'll Do Anything 7:10 9:40

CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Gummy Old Men 7:05 9:25
Tombstone 6:45 9:30
Intersection 6:55 9:35
Pelican Brief 6:45 9:25
The Piano 6:50 9:20
Iron Will 7:10 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Tuesday
True Romance 7:00
Short Cuts 9:20
Wednesday
Them That's Not and Survivors 7:00
Short Cuts 9:20
Thursday
Short Cuts 6:00
True Romance 9:30

CLUBS

TUESDAY
Cocoma: Battle of the Bands
Alfie's: Thorax with Fal Spider
The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers
Stages: Boston Tea Party (Tribute to Boston)

WEDNESDAY

Alfie's: Furious Styles with Leisure Suit Larry Al's Hangar: Yuk Yuk's Comedy

THURSDAY

The Toucan: The Morganfields
Duke's: Bras
Stages: Valentine Charity Auction

PERFORMANCES

GRANT HALL
Queen's Symphony Orchestra performs the latest in Canadian orchestral music, ranging from Omar Daniel's Black Dogs to Anton Dvorak's Symphony #8.
February 9 at 8:00 pm

THEATRE

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE 218 Princess Street (530-2050)
Threshold Theatre presents Direct From Kingston Festival 94
This year's performances are:
Snow - Feb. 10 at 10 pm, Feb. 12 at 3:30 pm, and Feb. 13 at 9 pm.
Refugees - Feb. 8 at 8 pm, Feb. 9 at 9:30 pm, and Feb. 13 at 7 pm.
Army of Lovers? - Feb. 8 at 10 pm, Feb. 12 at 7:30 pm, and Feb. 13 at 4 pm.
The Onion Skin - Feb. 11 at 10 pm, Feb. 12 at 9 pm, and Feb. 13 at 2 pm.
Baxed - Feb. 10 at 9 pm, and Feb. 11 at 7:30 pm.
Aula Da Fe/This Property is Condemned - Feb. 10 at 7:30 pm, Feb. 11 at 8:30 pm, and Feb. 12 at 10:30 pm.
Serati - Feb. 9 at 8 pm, and Feb. 12 at 2 pm.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

Brown Bag Lunch and Reception with Queen's BFA graduate, Mary-Ann Kokoska.
February 9 from noon to 1 pm.

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through Feb. 6
Mass Appeal: Multiples from the Permanent Collection

through March 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections from the Lang Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The farming ravens of John Heward

EDWARD DAY GALLERY 253 Ontario Street (547-0774)

OPENING EXHIBITION...
February 8
Russian artist, Mikhail Kaurzakov. Recent paintings on paper and canvas. Continues to Mar. 5.

The Fifth Annual
J. C. W. SAXTON
Playwriting Prize

Value: $400

Open to any student enrolled at Queen's

The play should be at least one half hour in length

The play may have been previously submitted for class work

The play must not have received prior public performance

The play must not have been previously published

Scripts with name, address and phone number to be submitted to the Queen's University, Department of Drama

Winner will be announced 1 April 1994

Scripts must be picked up by 8 April 1994

Deadline for submissions: 1 March 1994

DECISION OF THE JUDGES IS FINAL

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA

394 Princess St.
(Just Below Division)
546-FILM

This Weekend's Films

MANICATAK
A new comedy by Lee Hild
A NEW COMEDY BY LEE HILD
A NEW COMEDY BY LEE HILD

EXQUISITELY ROMANTIC JACK MATHERS, NERDULL BRILLIANT!
JAMES TULLOCH
NEW YORK POST

Bad Behaviour

Friday at 7:00 Friday at 9:40
Saturday at 7:00 Saturday at 9:20
Sunday at 9:00 Sunday at 7:00
Monday at 9:00 Monday at 7:00
Tuesday at 9:05

*Filmmaker Alanis Obomsawin will be at the Friday evening screening.

Jj's Bistro Bar

Check out the Real Thing at Jj's!

6 oz Deluxe Burger
Served with a Mountain of fries!
only $4.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's *

409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547-3771

We inspire eating!

MORRISON'S RESTAURANT

Good Home Made Food, Fast Service

Open 5:30 a.m. to 7:45 p.m.
MONDAY TO SATURDAY

SUNDAY 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
(Breakfast Only)

318 KING STREET EAST
KINGSTON, ONTARIO, 542-9483

WHAT'S UP?

Pickup What's Up forms at the AMS Office, Lower JSUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5 p.m.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Bring it to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

February

Feature

If you don't wear it, Donate it! The Queen's Share The Warmth clothing drive is coming to your door this Thursday from 4 to 7 pm! Your clothes will help local charities keep citizens and students warm this winter, and each jacket, scarf, shirt, etc. earns you a raffle ticket for great prizes donated by downtown business! The collection continues in the Lower Ceilidh Mon-Wed Feb 14-16. To help call the AMS Communication Office (545-2732) and share the Warmth!

Seniors need your help! Come out and volunteer for Shovel It! and help them survive the winter. Sign up outside the AMS office.

The Ethics of Making: The forming rays of John Heward singular colour gestures on irregular pieces of unstretched rayon, developed by the Montreal artist John Heward in 1985-87.

Upcoming

Big Sister's Association Kingston is holding their 2nd annual Fashion Show on Wednesday, Feb. 16 at Memorial Hall, City Hall. Reception at 7 pm, show starts at 7:30 pm. Tickets $10. For tickets or more info call the Big Sister's Office at 542-9202.

Films about the artist feature in The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism will be presented at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at 1:30 pm on Sundays, February 20 and 27. Although these Sunday programs are free, a voluntary offering to defray the cost of renting the films would be welcomed. The exhibition of paintings, prints and sculptures by Helen Frankenthaler, Robert Motherwell, David Hockney and Kenneth Noland are on view at the Art Centre until April 3. For further information, please call 545-2190.

March 8 & 9: Preliminaries of the Andrina McCulloch Public Speaking Competition. Finals on March 10 in 201, Kingston Hall. Open to all Queen's Students. Register at Performing Arts Office, JDUC. Before Feb. 28. Total prize money $1900.

For an amazing weekend of fun and games, with students from other universities, come out for Queen's Undergrad Games March 10-13. Application forms are due by Feb 10 outside the AMS office. Look for us in Mac Corry Feb 7-9. Queen's Undergrad Games - Just Play It!

Tuesday

Black History Month: Jabu Dube, African National Congress "Promises for Justice" Realities at Oppression, 7 pm at Lower Ceilidh, JDUC.

Wednesday

Black History Month: Films "Them that's not" and "The Survivors", Princess Court Theatre at 7 pm.

The Queen's Symphony Orchestra directed by Dvone Bates in concert at 8 pm in Grant Hall. Works by Dvorak, Mozart and Daniel. Admission only $6 for adult & $3 for students and seniors. Tickets available at the door.

A brown bag lunch and reception will be held at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at noon. Mary-Ann Kokoska, a graduate of the Bachelor of Fine Art program at Queen's University, will talk about her installation, Drawing in Succession, and then mingle with guests at the free public reception. Please bring your information, please call 545-2190.

QSEAC Election for 1994-95 executive committee will be held in Mac-Corry. If you are interested in any position, please call Minh 547-6877. All other members, please come out and vote.

Friday

Black History Month: Turning on the Lights "Rethinking our legisties toward reshaping Our destinies", by Esmereki Brown and Siyacha. Ellis Auditorium at 7 pm.

Saturday

Black History Month: Turning on the Lights "Rethinking our legisties toward reshaping Our destinies", by Afua Cooper, Nukecla Silvera, Calswell Taylor, etc.. Ellis Auditorium at 10 am.

The Performance Arts Office, Queen's University is pleased to present The Colorado String Quartet. Tickets for this concert are $20, $8 for children and $7 for Queen's students, plus GST. The concert takes place at 8 pm in Grant Hall, University Avenue. For tickets and information please call the Performing Arts Office, 545-2557.

Thursday

Black History Month: Films "To be a Woman" and "The Money Lenders" at 7:30 pm in the International Centre.

The Queen's Chinese Students' Association is holding the Chinese New Year Banquet at the Buffet Uncle Tong, Downtown at 7 pm. Karaoke at 9 pm. Come and enjoy the festival spirit and delicious food. Tickets are $15 for members and $18 for non-members (Karaoke only, $3 and $5) and will be available at Mac-Corry lunch time, Ban Right and Leonard dinner time. For more info, please call Gilbert 530-0828.

The Aesculapian Society presents the 11th Annual H.G. Kelly Visiting Lectureship. Dr. Robert Buckman, oncologist in University of Toronto, Magic or Medicine? The lessons and challenges of complementary medicine. Etherington Hall Auditorium at 5:30 pm. Everyone Welcome!

Sunday

Carol Podedworny, Visiting Scholar/Critic at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, will be delivering the first of two public lectures at the Art Centre at 3 pm. She will talk about The Changing Art Gallery and how shifts in the theoretical and artistic practice have affected interpretation, curatorial practice and display in galleries and museums. Her second lecture, at the same time on Sunday March 6, will deal with Contextualizing First Nations Art. Both lectures are free and open to the public. For further information please call 545-2190.

To the Fluid Sheet Construction, an exhibition of working drawings by David Rabinowitch, one of Canada's foremost sculptors, will open at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. The drawings, donated by Mr. and Mrs. David Campbell of Toronto, will remain on view until April 24. For further information, please call 545-2190.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

EATING DISORDERS? WANT TO HELP A FRIEND? Friends for Health can help you help your friend. Next meeting February 10th, 7 - 8 p.m., 32 Queen's Crescent. For more information call 545-6712.

SAFE LOVE. Buy your sweetie a Valentine's condom. February 11 and 14, JDUC and Mac-Corry. Also available in the Birth Control Centre, in the Grey House, Now!!!

ROMANCE, candy and safe sex! Valentine's condoms available in JDUC and Mac-Corry February 11th and 14th. Great gift!!! 10 - 5.

POCKET CHANGE buys you protection! Valentine's condoms on sale in JDUC and Mac-Corry, February 11th and 14th. Also available in the Birth Control Centre now!

WRAP CUPID'S RASCAL!! Buy some Valentine's condoms, February 11th and 14th, Mac-Corry and JDUC, 10-5. Available now in the Birth Control Centre, Grey House.

THEY WILL GIVE YOU a big wet one for it! Buy some special Valentine's condoms, February 11th and 14th, JDUC and Mac-Corry, 10-5.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House, 51 Queen's Crescent. Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change!!!

GAY IS GREAT! Lesbian is lovely! Bisexual is brilliant! Action = life! We are family! We are everywhere! Queer and proud! Be out! Be strong! February 14th, pink triangle day. Call 545-2960.

WOMEN IN SAME SEX RELATIONSHIPS were deemed "Asocios" in Nazi Germany and were required to wear black triangles. They as gay men, were some of the millions of victims of Hitler's Holocaust.

PINK TRIANGLE DAY is on Valentine's Day! Show your support for lesbians, gays and bisexuals by wearing a pink triangle and by thinking twice about showing public affection with your opposite sex partner.

PINK TRIANGLE DAY - February 14th gay men were required by Nazis to wear the pink triangle during the Holocaust. Today, it is a symbol of pride and strength for queers everywhere.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-INS Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome!

THE GREY HOUSE at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, the Queen's Women's Centre and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring slots are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

TEACH CONVERSATIONAL ENGLISH IN JAPAN Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore - Full time, temporary or for the summer. Up to $4500.00 per month. No experience, no qualifications necessary. For info pick up free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or write to Asia Facts (QJ) P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

THE UNDERGRAD REVIEW is looking for your academic work. If it's less than 6000 words, please submit it to the ASUS Core, 183 University Ave., or call 545-6278.

PARENTS! Problems studying when your children are around? Come out to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Bring your children. Our volunteers will occupy your children while you study. Watch for upcoming events for children. Our new hours beginning January 24th are Monday to Thursday 5:30 - 9:30 p.m.

ARTS - 95 Masquerade semi-formal Friday February 11th, Portsmouth. Tickets and more info at Mac-Corry 10 - 2:30 February 7th - 11th.

95'S... Got a jacket from your first year? Pretty gross, eh? Come to the odds and ends ASUS Jacket sale. Sell or trade for a spiffy new jacket! Call 545-6278 for info.

ARTS - 95 Masquerade semi-formal Friday February 11th, Portsmouth. Tickets and more info at Mac-Corry 10 - 2:30 February 7th - 11th.

SEXUAL HEALTH QUESTIONS? Call the Confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Monday - Thursday 6 - 9 p.m. 545-6000 ext.4444. Leave a message anytime.

CREATIVE WRITERS. Discuss your own writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

LONG WEEKEND CHECKLIST from Soapberry Shop... 122 Princess St. Travel size and earth friendly shampoo, conditioner and bath gel... citronella natural insect repellent... sun lotion, lipbloss, ... 545-1028.

EURAL PASSES. Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available. Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

HELP WANTED

BABYSITTER REQUIRED: 5678 Dance Studio is looking for babysitter on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. downtown location 259 Queen St., near Barrie. Info call 547-5678 ($6.00 plus per hour).

HELPERS NEEDED once a month to assist a non-profit organization. Contact Kingfest at 545-6497.

TELEMARKETERS REQUIRED for Kingston area. Part time evenings. Call (613) 969-0953 or 969-0834, between 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. on February 9, 10 or 11th for an interview.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Friday, February 11th to: Gord McIlquham, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Marlford St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 2V3.

CLASSIFIEDS

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing in-ground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

WANTED

FULL-TIME FIRST YEAR WOMEN OF ALL FACULTIES: Needed for study on adjustment to Queen's. Sign-up in "Frosh" binder - main lobby of Humphrey Hall or phone 545-9853.

ECONOMICS BOOKS WANTED: 1) The European Miracle, 2nd ed. 2) Br. Industrial Growth during Industrial Rev. 3) Economics of Trade Unions. 4) Industrial Relations in Canadian Industry. Call Robert at 354-0304.

MALES 18 + YRS: needed to complete questionnaire on dating and sexual behaviour. Paid $6 for 30 minutes. Call 545-6552, leave first name and phone number for "Levi's story".

HOUSEMATE WANTED: for May 1st to live with 4 upper years in a large house on Earl at Division - $250 per month. Male or female, non-smoker. Call 530-2466 or Julie at 547-6201.

WANTED: Male students (18 - 24) to fill out questionnaires. Takes about an hour. Eligible to win cash prizes (up to $75). Call Elizabeth at 531-5181 or Weiling at 531-9028 if interested.

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

WILL PAY $15 to person traveling by bus to Ottawa, Fridays at 6 p.m. to accompany an 8 year old boy. Call Connie Barber at 546-5103. References required.

FOR SALE

APPLIED SCIENCE JACKET FOR SALE. '94 (or you can change crest). Size 48 (large). $120. Need furniture for next year? Bedroom and desk. Take it May 1st '94 cheap! Call Rob at 530-2582.

ARTS'96 JACKET, size 38. Excellent condition. No crests sewed on but pass crest included. $150 cash. Call Kate at 542-7817.

SNOWBOARD: Kemper Rampage 160. New and unused. Literally giving it away! Incl. Kemper bindings. Call 544-8672 and make an offer.

LAPTOP COMPUTER plus WordPerfect 5.1 disks (Dos 6.1 included). A steal at $650. Buy my Zenith data systems SuperSport laptop and I'll laser print your essays free for two months! Call 548-7089.

FORMAL TUX FOR SALE:

classic black tails Tux (large) with pants, cummerbund, and bowties. Why rent one when you can own one. $200 or best offer. Call 549-1652.

SPRING BREAK '94! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Christine at 544-4506.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: Blue Phe '94 leather jacket. January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

$100 REWARD! A black Jansport backpack was taken from Alfie's on Friday, February 4. I don't care about the pack, but the contents are valuable to me and useless to anyone else. Return it and you'll get $100, no questions asked. Call 549-0023.

LOST: Man's Seiko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orvil at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ban Right, Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch.

Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: Ar AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

TO THE BLADE PRINCESS: Thanks for the reply which I just read February 2nd, 1994, because I never read the Journal. For my sake, I hope what the Jays mean to you, racing is to me. Have fun at the O.W.I.A.A. skates. Your boy, The FIPT.

STITCH: Can't believe it's been a year! Thanks for everything! Here's to many more great times together. Yours till the Bills win a Superbowl! Love ya, L.

YAE! Thank you so much! (Bounce, bounce, bounce...) Love Jacque (a.k.a. computer illiterate) P.S. Happy week before your birthday (bounce)

YODIT: Sorry for the cold afternoon at the Grad. And your tight schedules! Nothing kept me waiting more than knowing I wanted to be your friend. Call me tonight for a chat, or at least, we can look for a warmer place! (name ends with "R")

ERNE! I'd give up 90210 for you, ice cream and chocolate too. If you'd only go to the Arts '95 semi with me, I'd be as happy as the Blind Melon bee.

HI, MY NAME IS MARK, I am a quiet, clean and very good looking journalism student at Concordia. I would like to sublet a room February 14th to March 4th, while I am on exchange at the Whig. Phone 514 849-4555.

SHERRY: it has been so long since I heard the sound of your voice on my telephone asking "Caroline? No. Tanya? No. Who eez eet?" I miss you like I miss Charlie's Angels. Please be my friend: call, write, fax or e-mail. SOT. A.D

OAS DELEGATE and DG's, thanks for an awesome weekend. Look forward to seeing you all soon, US delegation.

EILONWY of the Auburn hair, Taran apologizes for acting like and assistant pig-keeper and hopes he can become a valiant hero once again.

DEAR CASEY: The date—Monday, February 14th. The time—after Tai-Chi. The event—night of wining, dining and romance. LUFFE, your mish.

NEW ONTARIO STREET RESTAURANT / BAR

LOOKING FOR ENERGETIC & EXPERIENCED WAIT AND BAR STAFF. APPLY WITH RESUME AT 192 ONTARIO ST. WEDNESDAY, FEB 09 2pm - 5pm THURSDAY FEB. 10 2pm - 5pm

BACK PAGE

Tales from the crypt

RIDICULOUS STUFF FROM JOURNALS PASSIM

Many of you suspect that Queen's was once a much stranger, darker place, where the bizarre was commonplace. Some people, like Joey, lived it, and the tales he tells can chill the marrow in your bones.

This week, the Back Page is going to explore two of the strangest stories of the 1985-86 academic year. Let's go all the way back to November, 1985. The big issues are divestment from South Africa and smoking at the Quiet Pub. You grab the latest issue of that bastion of Queen's-ness — The Journal — and eagerly browse the top stories:

Carleton kidnaps Queen's Bands manager

"A group of Carleton students kidnapped Queen's Bands Manager Ross May (Arts '87) late Saturday night in an unsuccessful attempt to recover their stolen panda.

"May was handcuffed, blindfolded and taken to Carleton University in Ottawa where he was kept under lock and key until his return to Queen's early Sunday evening. The students hoped to exchange May for their stolen football trophy.

"...They don't see a difference between a human being and an inanimate object," May said.

The Panda, Pedro, was a three foot brass bear given to the university which raised the most money for Ethiopian relief (Queen's: home of the socially unconscious). The Panda kidnappers operated out of — you guessed it — Clark Hall and issued statements like:

"Pedro was bored in Ottawa, he wanted someone to liberate him."

An unsuccessful attempt was made by Carleton students who broke into the Golden Words office but were unable to locate the bear. Apparently they settled for Mr. May instead.

"We like to liberate things," said EngSoc President Sandra Todd.

Sex drug ad in porn mags not linked to Queen's docs

"Advertisements linking Queen's university with a sexual stimulant sold through a number of soft porn magazines have left members of the community outraged.

"The ads offer readers the opportunity to send for a product called 'Yohimbe,' a stimulant which produces 'bigger, harder and longer lasting erections'.

"Doctors from Queen's University discovered during testing that men with organic impotency responded to Yohimbe, a derivative of the African Yohimbe tree bark," one ad reads.

Although the Queen's university sexual dysfunction clinic had been testing the substance over a period of several years, representatives of the university denied any involvement with the advertisements. Perhaps Queen's was attempting to find new sources of revenue, perhaps the researchers were kinda kinky. We may never know the truth behind the Yohimbe conspiracy.

Researched by Derek Walker, who is a recovering Yohimbe addict and a traitorous Engineer.

Vocabulary

ciderrspace (noun, pun on cyberspace, William Gibson's term for the "world" that exists within the Internet computer network): drunk-ness. This word is meant to be surrounded by computer terms. Example: "My head aches because I logged several hours in ciderrspace last night."

flup (verb, combination of flip and fluff): the act of turning a pillow over to its cooler and fluffier side. Example: "Flup the pillow, honey, you'll be more comfortable."

gaydar (noun, pun on RADAR, RAdio Detection And Ronging): the (probably mythical) ability to tell whether a person is gay or straight. Example: "Joey, when you say you like the Pet Shop Boys, you set off my gaydar."

[bound for the] puzzle farm (verb phrase, psychological): is going crazy. When one is loopy, one has pieces of his or her puzzle missing and must therefore go to the puzzle farm and find said missing pieces. Example: "Brock Martland showed up at the meeting naked again. He's bound for the puzzle farm."

SOURCES (IN ORDER): TOM DUBA FROM CIRC, D) JOEY FROM CLARK, D) JENNI FROM ALFIE'S, SUPERMODEL JOEY

"This spot here says '35' — what colour was that again?"

Valentine's Day sucks

...and to prove it, we're running a special edition of MISC this Friday! If you have any stories about dates turned into nightmares and the like, we want to hear from you! Submit your tales of bitterness and woe by Wednesday at 5:00pm to the Journal House (272 Earl Street, between University and Division) or via e-mail to Joey (3JMD2) or Derek (3DCW3). We'd like to hear from you!

The semiotics of French Cinema, made easy...

Semiotics is the study of signs and symbols. French film is loaded with symbols, not because the French mind is more attuned to symbolic imagery (as they would have you believe), but because it's hard to have lots of dialogue if the actors are constantly lighting their cigarettes. Here's a quick guide to common symbols in cinema francais...

- Baguette: sex
 - Bicycle: sex
 - Champs-Elysees viewed looking towards the Arc: sex
 - Cigarette smoke curling upward through shafts of light: sex
 - Eiffel Tower in a wide-angle shot with the Trocadero behind it: sex
 - Train of considerable length with engine rhythmically straining with increasing intensity towards a dark tunnel during a particularly hot night: a Beaudrillard-esque deconstruction of the class struggle in 19th-century France and how it is mirrored in today's bourgeoisie...uh, just kidding. That's also sex.
- Joey says "Have you killed a Journal Rack Critic today?"

FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 18/94

FREE CHICKEN SANDWICH when you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires Feb. 18/94

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

Specialists for the University Community

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group
549-3553 549-3561

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1994 • ISSUE 31 • VOLUME 121

Valentine's Day Flowers 15% OFF

McMAHON'S HOUSE OF FLOWERS

117 Princess St.
546-1133

Pirmohamed, Rex and Shantz capture AMS victory

BY BROCK MARTLAND

Taz Pirmohamed, Kevin Rex and Jane Shantz will helm the Alma Mater Society in 1994-95, winning this year's elections with 31.4 per cent of the vote.

Pirmohamed's team defeated the team of Bertrand, Smith and Luka by only 75 votes—a margin of only 1.9 per cent.

Following these frontrunners at some distance were Asselstine, Liepmann and Shin and, just behind them, Carlyle, Ward, and Whiting.

AMS ELECTIONS
Pirmohamed, Rex and Shantz:	1,288
Bertrand, Smith and Luka:	1,213
Asselstine, Liepmann and Shin:	670
Carlyle, Ward and Whiting:	643
Arnold, Scadron and Gallard:	195
Eligible voters:	12,114
Votes cast:	4,108
Spoiled ballots:	99

These figures, provided by the AMS, are unofficial.

hind them, Carlyle, Ward, and Whiting.

Voter turnout this year was fairly high, with 33.9 per cent of eligible students voting. This figure compares to about 31 per cent last year.

This year's AMS executive, President Katherine Philips, Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson, and Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson, passed the mantle to the winning team Wednesday night.

Philips, Wilson, and Minerson, along with stray Journal and Studio Q reporters, surprised the Pirmohamed team at home.

The team was ecstatic with the victory. "I can't believe it. I'm so thrilled," Pirmohamed said. "We thought we lost it by just a hair."

"What we really tried to come up with was new and innovative ideas, and I think that really paid off," she said.

Pirmohamed attributed the Welcome to the AMS... The team of Pirmohamed, Rex, and Shantz was in high spirits Wednesday as they celebrate their AMS election victory with the current exec.

BRENT DAVIS

inside The Journal

WOMEN'S CENTRE

The conflict at the Women's Centre continues. Much of the dispute revolves around the Basis of Unity, a position statement which some allege excludes women and stifles debate. According to the centre's media coordinator, the conflict exists between two factions: those who support the Basis of Unity and those who don't. —Story on page 3.

FAT SPIDER

Did Thorax bring a heavy metal revival to Alfie's? Are Fat Spider the musical offspring of the Grateful Dead? Find the answers to these questions and more as these two bands are reviewed by man-about-town Paul Koidis Jr. —Entertainment, page 21.

BADMINTON VICTORY

The Queen's women's badminton team captured the OWIAA Championship this past weekend at McMaster, dethroning the University of Western Ontario in a clean sweep. The title is the first for Queen's in over 10 years. —For story, see page 16.

BE MY VALENTINE!

Features examines the love (and sex) which so often accompany Valentine's Day. —Features, page 12.

"If you rob a bank and go to jail, you'll be allowed to smoke. But with this legislation, if you pursue post-secondary education, you can't." —Ontario Liberal MPP Dalton McGuinty, commenting on legislation which would ban smoking on university campuses. Story to the right.

Sexism at AJ's has student quitting, management apologizing

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER

Sick of the sexism around her, Queen's student Bridget Kerr quit her financially lucrative job at AJ's Hangar last Monday night.

The incident that led her to quit occurred on Monday night at a promotional meeting that staff were paid to attend.

In all, four male staff members, two male managers, and three female staff members attended the meeting. Two of the women, Bridget and Kara Kerr, are sisters. Everyone at the meeting was either a Queen's student or alumni.

On Tuesday, Bridget described the events of the meeting to The Journal.

When Bridget arrived at last Monday's meeting, staff members were talking about running Olympic events at AJ's during reading week.

One of the possible events discussed by the men was a Nancy Kerrigan pinata.

"They were thinking of giving out a hammer so people could bash her," Bridget said.

After talking about it with one of the other women, Kara told the men that this event advocated violence against women. In response, the men made charges against feminists at Queen's, accusing them of making huge issues out of everything.

One of the men referred to "anal, lesbian, Queen's, feminist bitches."

However, both managers allowed the meeting to continue in the same tone. "The fact that the managers let this go on was insulting to us as Queen's students and as feminists," Bridget said in an interview with The Journal.

Another joked-about suggestion was a Lorena Bobbitt event, in which women would use knives to cut up long hot-dog weiners.

"[The managers] continually laughed at the jokes the guys were coming up with. They didn't show any sign of holding back," Bridget said.

At this point, the three women had had enough and got up to leave the room. As they left, the men continued to laugh and jeer.

After the meeting, the three women spoke with the managers.

Bridget told them she was appalled by the way they handled the situation. She said that if that was the way they wanted to project the image of the bar, then she wasn't going to be a part of it.

The managers apologized to Bridget for what happened at the meeting. Bridget was told to come to the next meeting as it would be run very differently.

"But they said this after saying that they couldn't stand up and tell the guys to be quiet because it was an open forum... And [the next meeting] will be handled differently? That's quite the contradiction," Bridget said.

"They didn't make me quit. It was my own choice. I know the attitudes that a lot of guys at AJ's hold, and having sat through such insensitivity and cruelty there was no way I could continue working in that environment," Bridget said.

Kara told The Journal that the conversation at the meeting the week before was no

AMS CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

The butt stops here

Far-reaching bill would prohibit smoking anywhere on campus

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

With the federal government considering lower tobacco taxes, smokers may be able to find cheaper cigarettes. But they won't be able to smoke them on campus if an Ontario government bill goes ahead.

Ontario Health Minister Ruth Grier has put forward Bill 119, which would, among other things, ban smoking on all Ontario university and college campuses, as well as at public and secondary schools and private vocational institutions.

lighting up would be prohibited both inside and outside of all campus buildings, including university residences—even student rooms.

Dalton McGuinty, a Liberal MPP, originally sponsored private member's bill 118, most of which, he says, was incorporated into the government's new bill. McGuinty, who is also the Ontario Liberal Party's colleges and universities critic, said the original focus of his bill was on keeping tobacco products out of the hands of children.

But the government added the section including university campuses, much to McGuinty's chagrin.

"If you rob a bank and go to jail, you'll be allowed to smoke," McGuinty said. "But with this legislation, if you pursue post-secondary education, you can't."

McGuinty sent a letter to university principals and administrations, alerting them to the fact that smoking could be prohibited on their campus. But so far, no reply has been received by either McGuinty or the committee studying the bill.

"What surprised me was that we hadn't heard from administration, faculty, or students," he said. "The reason I sent that letter was to get somebody in here to talk about it."

Larry O'Connot, Parliamentary assistant to Ruth Grier, said that it was "per-

NO SMOKING CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

NOMINATE!

YOUR PROF FOR THE HIGHEST HONOUR AWARDED BY STUDENTS TO PROFS AT QUEEN'S

FRANK KNOX AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING

Pick up an information package at the AMS office, ENGSOC, COMSOC, ASUS, GREY HOUSE, or SPECIAL NEEDS OFFICE and nominate your prof today!

Inquiries? Please call Andrew Ferlejowski or Todd Minerson (545-2725)

Nominations are due February 18

SLIP at the HOLIDAY INN

DOUG REANSBURY

WEDNESDAY TO SATURDAY
FEB. 9th TO 12th

NEXT WEEK:
GEORGETTE FRY

DRAUGHT & DOZEN
60 oz. PITCHER OF DRAUGHT & 12 WINGS - $14.50
1 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 549-8400 EXT. 657

READING WEEK VACATIONS

WHY GO TO CUBA, CANCUN, OR ACAPULCO WHEN THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS OFFERS GETAWAYS TO TORONTO, MONTREAL AND OTTAWA AT THE LOWEST PRICES AROUND!

	THURSDAY, Feb. 17	WEST CAMPUS	VIC HALL	JDUC	DROP-OFF	COST ONE-WAY (G.S.T. Included!)
TORONTO	5:30	5:40	5:50	Oshawa Scarborough T.C. Union Station Bus Terminal	$20
FRIDAY, Feb. 18
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:15	Oshawa Scarborough T.C. Union Station Bus Terminal	$20
MONTREAL	2:50	3:00	3:10	Kirkland Shopping Plaza Bus Terminal	$25
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	Kanata Pinecrest Carling and Kirkwood Bus Terminal	$16
RETURNS : SUNDAY, Feb. 27
TORONTO	8:00 pm	Union Station (one block west near City Bank Plaza)
OTTAWA	8:00 pm	Bus Terminal
MONTREAL	5:45 pm	Bus Terminal

Tickets are now available at the Queen's Box Office. For more information, call 545-2558

No Exchanges or Refunds

Conflict in Women's Centre

BY BRAD ELDER

Traditionally, all voting members of the Queen's Women's Centre collective pledge to support what they call their Basis of Unity. But lately, that Basis of Unity has become a basis for contention.

And the upheaval now has some Women's Centre members envisioning the possible closure of the centre.

In late January, The Journal reported that a new era was beginning at the Women's Centre, as centre veterans Mary Syrett and Bobbi Spark were stepping down to make way for a new group of centre coordinators.

However, controversy erupted when newly appointed Women's Centre spokesperson Laura McKay, replacing outgoing member Mary Syrett at the Queen's Student and Community Services Group board meeting, publicly disavowed the Basis of Unity.

McKay, speaking for the Women's Centre, announced their intention to discard the Basis of Unity on the grounds that its outdated mandate excluded women and stifled dialogue on women's issues.

Specifically, McKay said she objected to the anti-pornography and pro-choice prerequisites for collective membership.

Syrett responded quickly to what she perceived as "a false representation of the women's centre" and an unconstitutional move on behalf of McKay that was "massively disrespectful of women's agreements."

In a letter distributed throughout the Queen's Community on January 30, Syrett said she originally thought that McKay's decision to represent the Women's Centre meant that she would support the Basis of Unity "in spite of its difference from [McKay's] personal belief system."

The letter read, "I am saddened and disappointed that Laura did not have enough respect for the Centre and for herself to read [the constitution] before taking actions that are illegal and damaging to the Centre."

In addition, Syrett said, "there is no 'new' group of coordinators for the Women's Centre."

Now, according to McKay, the centre has polarized into two factions: one, composed of Queen's students and alumni, which supports the Basis of Unity, and the other, comprised exclusively of Queen's students, which disputes various aspects of the Basis of Unity.

In a recent interview with The Journal, Syrett said Laura McKay and other Women's Centre coordinators "tried to enact a hostile take-over [of the centre] ... and hang a former QSCSG rep [Syrett] out to dry."

Syrett said that, in "a major Queen's preppy move," McKay and company are attempting to oust anyone in the centre who "doesn't conform to the young, preppy stereotype."

She said McKay's group is guilty of "privilege bonding," in the spirit of, "hey, your daddy's a corporate lawyer, my daddy's a CEO," and called their actions heterosexist, classist and possibly racist.

McKay, meanwhile, dismissed Syrett's charges against her.

She said her group, which seeks to alter the Basis of Unity, is working not toward a hostile take-over, but "communication and openness within the Women's Centre, a facilitation of debate of issues with women helping women."

McKay added that her group is "hoping to work with [Syrett and company] in every way ... in a conciliatory fashion."

She stressed that her group is not guilty of "racism, classism or homophobia/lesbophobia in any manner."

In addition, McKay said her objections to the Basis of Unity were "not a rejection of the hard work that has been done" in the past.

Rather, she said, she wishes to "build on the gains we have made as women in the last 20 or 30 years. Those principles of feminism remain close to our hearts ... but new ideas must be welcome."

But according to Syrett, any new ideas that contradict the Basis of Unity would have to come to fruition outside the scope of the Queen's Women's Centre.

Syrett told The Journal that while "we don't want to interfere with anything that Laura McKay and her supporters want to organize at Queen's," those endeavours Hi-Ho Silver! A child practices equestrian skills at the Parent Child Resource Centre.

DEREK YARNELL

would have to be distinct from the Women's Centre.

McKay responded by saying that while essentialist feminism is "the root of strength of the women's movement today," it is time to incorporate new principles of feminism into the Women's Centre.

For her part, Syrett now envisions only two possible destinies for the current Women's Centre. The first, she said, would be the smooth and orderly conclusion of the existing centre.

It is this option which she feels would be most appropriate.

Syrett said the Women's Centre is weak and unsupported, and that "it should be closed."

The second avenue the Women's Centre could pursue, Syrett noted, would need a constitutional amendment to require the voting quorum of the centre's collective to have a majority of women of colour.

Subsequent amendments could also ensure that women of poverty and lesbians be assured a majority vote.

Syrett said that such amendments would ensure that marginalized women would always retain voting power, and the centre "wouldn't be an attractive place for women who are interested in privilege bonding."

McKay responded to the suggested amendments by saying that while the centre should be inclusive, it must be "careful that [the amendment] be an open and equitable one and not a tokenist one."

As for the possibility of the Women's Centre closing, McKay said that it would be a regrettable decision in light of the fact that the centre is "the only women's only space in all of Kingston" and that it "has so few resources as it is."

Syrett said Janet Collins, who is coordinating the breast cancer conference for September '94 and is pursuing a master's degree in Classics, will now be the Women's Centre rep to the QSCSG.

Karolyn Alkoura, a part-time student at Queen's who is legally blind, will be the centre's new treasurer.

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

The Queen's Black History Collective and the Kingston Global Community Centre have been running a number of events for Black History Month, and more are planned in the coming weeks. They include:

Friday, Feb. 11, and Sat. Feb. 12: Tuning on the Lights: Re-thinking Our Legacies Towards Reshaping Our Destinies, a conference presented by the QBHC, the KGCC, and the Ontario Anti-Racism Secretariat. Registration is tonight at 6 p.m. in Ellis Hall, with a keynote address, at 7 p.m. A reception will follow at 8 p.m. in the International Centre, located in the John Deutsch University Centre.

Speakers at the conference include author Afua Cooper, United Nations Resource Specialist Esmerelda Brown, and author and Sister Vision Press Managing Editor Makeda Silvera.

Feb. 18 and 19, at 7 p.m. at the Princess Court Cinema, the QBHC and the KGCC present the film Quartier Mozart, a winner of the African Film Prize at Cannes.

The award-winning film Lumumba: Death of a Prophet will be shown Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m. at the International Centre.

THREADS FOR CHARITY

The Alma Mater Society's Community Interaction Committee is currently holding a "Share the Warmth" winter clothes drive.

From Feb. 14-16, the committee will be collecting clothing donations in the Lower Cellidh of the John Deutsch University Centre, starting at 10 a.m.

Donors' names will be entered in a draw for prizes contributed by downtown businesses. There is also a competition between faculties to see who donates the most.

The clothes will be given to the St. Vincent de Paul Centre and the Queen Elizabeth Collegiate and Vocational Institute, where they will be distributed to both students and members of the Kingston community who need them.

U of O, St. Lawrence slash fine arts

BY JASON BENNETT

While Queen's Fine Arts students unveiled plans for Canada's first completely student-run art gallery this week, students at the University of Ottawa and St. Lawrence College were hit with budgetary cuts that could effectively signal the end of Fine Arts at those institutions.

The University of Ottawa's Department of Visual Arts issued a press release this week which announced the sounding of "the death knell ... for the academic pursuit of the Visual Arts within our community."

Calling the budgetary measures "draconian cutbacks" which "signal a bleak future for art education in Canada," the communique asked for support in fighting the cuts.

Facing similar financial restraints, St. Lawrence College revealed on Tuesday that 93 full-time positions at all three of the college's campuses would be terminated. In addition, it announced the end of fine arts education entirely at its Kingston campus with the exception of the graphic arts program.

Pat Finucan, director of fine arts at the college, said St. Lawrence faces a budget deficit of over $8 million this year.

Seen as the direct result of reduced provincial funding for post-secondary institutions, these measures follow a trend which has affected every department across the province. However, arts programs are the first victims when it comes time to cut spending.

"Certainly we are being singled out," said Leslie Reid, a professor of Visual Arts at the University of Ottawa. "We're being told that there is no room for the school of art here."

Reid, a Queen's alumna, said her department has undergone budgetary cuts three times worse than most other departments. "What we're faced with is an indefinite suspension of enrolment in our Visual Arts program which could lead to an eventual cancellation of the program altogether," she said.

Reid pointed to a bias in the university's administration which deems fine arts to be "non-intellectual." She said there "exists a real distrust of the creative process among decision-makers," which is forcing departments such as music and art into potentially threatening situations.

However, David McTavish, head of the Queen's Art Department, said the fine arts at Queen's have not experienced unequal budgetary treatment, nor are they faced with the sort of cuts that threaten the University of Ottawa or St. Lawrence College programs.

McTavish said "the Queen's Art program has not been singled out," and that "everybody has suffered across the board equally" at Queen's.

Otis Tamasauskas, chair of Fine Art Studies, said there has been "an upward vertical shift towards art programs at Queen's recently," and that all departments at Queen's are equally vulnerable to cuts.

Both disagreed with the idea that the university has shifted its focus away from liberal arts education towards more technical and professional programs such as engineering and commerce.

"The visual arts are an essential and crucial component of any university's curriculum, a component which is strong here at Queen's and getting stronger," McTavish said.

Faculty and students at the University of Ottawa plan to fight the impending cuts by holding rallies, hosting guest speakers in support of the arts, running a publicity campaign, and asking those concerned to write or fax the university's rector.

ARMY SURPLUS STORE

109 PRINCESS ST
NEXT TO GOLDEN ROOSTER

TIME TO THINK ABOUT TREE PLANTING

SPRING INTO SPRING
AT THE ARMY SURPLUS STORE
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL TREE PLANTING NEEDS

- SLEEPING BAGS
- INSECT NETS
- BOOTS
- RAINWEAR
- GLOVES
- WORK PANTS
- BACK PACKS
- TENTS

AIR MATTRESS, BUG REPELLENT, FLASHLIGHTS, COMPASS, KNIVES, CAPS, UNDERWEAR
MON/TUES/WED 9AM - 8PM
THURS/FRI 9AM - 9PM
SAT 9AM - 6PM
SUN 12PM - 5PM
546-0305

A Little Gift For Someone Special

A Great selection of Classic Art Cards to send your special Valentine's message,
as well as other gift ideas.

2 locations

198 Princess Street 743 Bayridge Dr.
546-1868 (At Taylor-Kidd)
389-1700

Open Thursday and Friday 'til 9 p.m.

DON'T LEAVE QUEEN'S WITHOUT IT!

... SENATE COMMITTEE EXPERIENCE ...

You can make a difference - Your opinion does count

If you are interested in life outside your own faculty or department, apply to join a Senate committee and contribute to decisions which affect academic life in the university as a whole.
Terms start: September 1, 1994

APPLICATION DEADLINE: FRIDAY, FEB. 18, '94
MORE INFORMATION & APPLICATIONS AT
THE SENATE OFFICE, MAC-CORRY, B-400
CALL 545-6095

Academic Development, Agenda, Academic Procedures, Bookstore, Nominating, Budget Review, Fine Arts, Library, Operations Review, Scholarships & Student Aid, International Centre Council, Sexual Harassment Complaint Board.

It's my party and I'll cry if I want to... Historian Desmond Morton makes a point on NDP panel. BRENT DAUG

New Democrats debate future

BY ALISON MASEMANN

In spite of the New Democratic Party's dismal showing in the 1993 federal election and Bob Rae's unpopular government in Ontario, social democracy in Canada is not dead yet, according to three prominent panellists who spoke at the Kingston Public Library on Tuesday evening.

The discussion was sponsored by the Kingston and the Islands NDP Riding Association and featured noted historian and the Principal of Erindale College at the University of Toronto, Desmond Morton, former Ottawa mayor and NDP MP Marion Dewar, and Jamie Swift, journalist, author and former provincial NDP policy advisor.

Morton began the discussion, asserting that social democracy's history in Canada provides "a profoundly moral root" of which New Democrats must never lose sight. Morton described social democracy as "a moral imperative as simple as the Golden Rule and as difficult to follow easily."

Swift echoed the necessity of renewing the NDP's commitment to social democracy. He asserted that the recession of the 1980's and the subsequent "jobless recovery" has created a society of individuals who feel "defeated and at sea."

Dewar's speech emphasized the need for social democrats to view one another as friends first and foremost. "We don't always agree with our friends, but we can have that debate and we can respect each other," she said.

Morton addressed the popular backlash against the NDP that followed the Rae government's policies. "The problems the Rae government has faced are not the product of malevolence, folly, stupidity [or] political naivete ... they are the problems of democratic socialism today," he said.

He criticized New Democrats and union leaders for "whining on the sidelines" once the Rae government had been elected. "When did you sell a Rae government policy that you agreed with on the doorstep," he asked.

Morton admitted that Rae has made mistakes. But he sees this as the "tragedy of socialism in power," and not a result of Rae's personal shortcomings.

"Understanding government and how to make it socialist is a challenge we never addressed in our party because of decades of impotence," he said.

Dewar stressed the importance of grassroots activism in the face of what she described as an increasingly elite party administration.

"We have to be a little more cogent in the way we express ourselves, both to Bob Rae and to the provincial party, about things that work and the things that don't work," she said.

Swift was critical of Rae's behaviour in government. He attacked what he called Rae's "real-worldism," or his tendency to dismiss criticism by social democrats by telling them to "get real."

world, "equality and our cherished individual freedoms are overwhelmed by market relations."

Social democracy needs to address the "remarkable erosion of middle income prosperity" which has occurred over the past decade, Swift said.

He expressed scepticism about the growth of worker training programs, which prepares workers "for marginal participation in a labour force of just-in-time workers... [with] diminished expectations."

Swift also criticized the Reform party leader, Preston Manning, calling him "a little Fuhrer" and labelling Reform policies as "smelly little orthodoxies."

Dewar was equally critical of Jean Chretien's federal Liberal government. She said the Liberals cancelled the EH-101 helicopter contract and the proposed Pearson Airport privatization deal to improve their public image while continuing to "work along in partnership with their business friends."

Dewar's remarks emphasized the need for a swift recovery from the demoralizing effects of the October election. "Cry if you want to, but don't cry for more than a month, and then let's get on with it."

The discussion was held following the Kingston and the Islands NDP Annual General Meeting, and was attended by approximately 80 people, primarily party members. The speakers were introduced by the NDP candidate in the recent federal election, Kingston lawyer Mary Ann Higgins.

How Do You Like the "Free Market" So Far?
CAN SOCIALISM DO BETTER?

guest speaker: David McNally

Tuesday, 15 February, 8:00 pm
Third Floor Common Room, JDUC

International Socialists

Funding contribution from JDUC Speakers Fund.

ANC speaker addresses democracy in South Africa

BY SHARON WILSON

As part of Black History Month, the information officer to Canada for the African National Congress, Jabu Dube, spoke in the lower ceiling of the John Deutsch University Centre on Tuesday evening.

Before a crowd of about 50 people, Dube talked about the continuing struggles towards democracy in South Africa.

Dube stressed that the ANC, formed in 1912, was created in the struggle for national liberation in South Africa. The ultimate goal, he said, is "to win back what is rightfully ours, that which was deprived us ... by the injustices of the British government."

Dube spoke of the changes taking place in South Africa, and, more specifically, the election of a new government, which will take place on April 28, 1994.

For the first time in history, black South Africans will have a chance to vote for the candidate of their choice in the Constituent Assembly election. Voting will be "a big experience in their lifetime," Dube said. According to Dube, many precautions will be taken to ensure a successful and equitable election process.

He said there must be proper education about the voting procedure to ensure that first-time voters, unfamiliar with the ballot system, do not spoil their ballots or mark the wrong candidate on the ballot.

In addition, Dube said, independent election and media commissions have been set up in South Africa to ensure that all political parties are treated equally.

Although Dube said the vote is an important point of departure in the struggle against apartheid, he cautioned that "voting in itself should not be seen as the be-all and end-all of national liberation."

Many challenges still remain ahead for the blacks of South Africa, he said.

"On the one hand we will be able to vote in parliament, but we don't control [it]," he said.

Dube attributed this lack of control to the legacy of apartheid in the country's bureaucracy and administration, which remain under a "complete monopoly of the white power structure."

Dube said the ANC "must win really big in this election to make changes in the future."

Although Dube said the ANC currently enjoys about 66-70 per cent of national support in South Africa, he believes a close vote would lead to a shared government, and make it impossible for the ANC to pass progressive legislation.

Dube reminded the crowd that the changes which have come about in South Africa have been changes forced upon the apartheid regime that "could not have come about without the consistency and tenacity of our people."

Dube said whichever government comes to power in April, it will have no choice but to address the "alternative agenda." He said, "the option of apartheid is gone and gone forever ... people will not settle for a status quo economy."

Dube concluded his speech by saying, "in South Africa, it is still a struggle, and people are not going to rest until that struggle is overcome."

Dube's speech was sponsored by the South African Solidarity Group, the African Students Association, the Black History Collective and the Kingston Global Community Centre.

Dube: "consistency and tenacity."

AMS targets new principal

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

victory to "the fact that we weren't dealing with old, stale issues."

"We were saying 'we want to forge out new ground' ... and push the frontiers of what the AMS does," she said.

Pirmohamed is looking forward to the transition with this year's AMS executive. "I feel like I'm going to have a very smooth transition. I've done a lot of work with Kate [Philips], and done a lot of what the president does," she said.

The team will also be preparing for another transition — that of William Leggett, who will replace current Principal David Smith in August.

"We think we're going to make a big splash with Principal Leggett. I think he's going to be surprised, I think he's also going to be a little shocked that we've got so many plans for next year's executive," Pirmohamed said.

Despite the fact that only 10.6 per cent of eligible voters at Queen's actually cast ballots in support of the team, Pirmohamed maintained that "we've got a mandate to lead the school, and I think that's all that matters."

STUDENT SOCIETY AND RESIDENCE ELECTION RESULTS

ASUS	COMMERCE SOCIETY
President Andrew Boggs	President Jen Gordon
Vice-President Kristin Cochrane	Vice-President Steve Goldbach
1 Year Senators Joel Davison Harden	Senator Rob Renaud
Erin Eacott
2 Year Senator Jill Cruickshank
MCRS	ENGINEERING SOCIETY
President Warren Flannery	President Matt Fenwick
VP (Operations) Erin Dearie	VP (Society Affairs) Dan Guttman
VP (Discipline) Kenji Marui	VP (Operations) Jamie Harkness
	Treasurer Ted Hammond
	Senator Matthew Seagrims

Summer Odysseys

WORLDWIDE ADVENTURES

FEB 15, 1994
7:00 p.m.

THE SHOT
GARRETT ST at DIVISION

Air and Rail fares
Hostel information
Eco Tours
Car rentals/leasing
Country by Country
info
Travel Tips
Films
Great door prizes
and much more!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess Street
General Travel
549-3553

15 Montreal Street
Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3561

A.M.S. Achievement Award

Are you eligible for an A.M.S. Achievement Award? This new award, instituted this year is designed to recognize outstanding volunteer contribution to the A.M.S.

10 points are needed in order to be eligible for the award. People who have reached 15 points are eligible for an award with honours and individuals with 20 points are eligible for an award with distinction.

POINTS VALUES FOR POSITIONS ARE AS FOLLOWS:

Points	Activity
5	Chair of the Board of Directors
4	Deputies
4	STAR Assistant Co-ordinators
4	Tricolor Yearbook Volunteers
3	Student Directors on the Board of Directors
3	Committee Chairs
3	Orientation Facilitators
2	Sub-Committee Chairs
2	Orientation Co-ordinators
2	Assembly Speaker
2	Assembly Members
2	Committee Members (of an A.M.S. committee)
2	A.M.S. Rep. to a non-A.M.S. committee. (ie. JDUC Programming Committee)
2	Task Force Representative
2	Journal Contributor (4 stories or 4 issues of production staff)
2	Studio Q Contributor (reparker on 2 or technical staff on 3)
2	Kaleidoscope Buddy
2	Infobank Volunteer
2	Parent Resource Centre Volunteer
1	Participant Model United Nations
1	Participant Model Parliament
1	Participant Undergrad Games

If you need more information or want to pick up on application form drop by the A.M.S. office.

Applications are due by February 18th.

The award will be presented at the A.M.S. Appreciation Night—Sunday, March 27, 1994.

EUROPE with AESU TOURS TRAVEL FOR 18 - 35 YRS OLD

Contiki Tours to Europe/Australia/New Zealand. Fares starting at $419.00 + tax to European destinations. Low fares to Asia. Charter fares in Canada.

Book Early for the Lowest Fares

Call Betty at Dailey Travel
307-Alfred Street, 544-5755

DIABAR

Lunch & Dinner 7 Days. 5 Courses of Luncheon. Special Every Day. 20% Off Sunday through Thursday with Coupon (A La Carte Menu Only)

479 Princess (at University)
Take-Out or Reservation
548-7053
Free Parking at Rear

Princess Court Coin Laundry and Dry Cleaning

alterations and repairs

Special: $4 pants hemming & $8 pants taper

Located Behind Burger King
394-396 Princess Street, Unit #3
Kingston, Ontario. 544-0928.

$1.00 wash $4.00 wash and fold service
Open 7 Days a Week 8 am - 9 pm
Ann Tonu-Au

Fabulous Formals

begin and end at
Grasshopper Hill Fabrics

224 Wellington Street
Wellington at Queen

548-3889

Vogue 268

Sopinka addresses law keeners

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

Supreme Court of Canada Justice John Sopinka addressed a tightly-packed audience of 200 in Macdonald Hall on Wednesday afternoon.

Sopinka spoke for over an hour to an audience of mainly law students and faculty about the differences between the bar and the bench, giving advice on appealing a case properly, and recounting some of his most famous cases.

As a barrister, Sopinka represented nurse Susan Nelles, accused of murdering infants at a Toronto hospital, in her successful appeal for compensation from the government for her widely-publicized court ordeal.

"For excitement and drama no case could top the Nelles case," said Sopinka.

Sopinka also reminisced about defending Cornwall Mohawk protestors in the 1960's earning the nickname "Chief Babbling Brook" from his clients.

He touched on other favourite cases, including a violent altercation in a bar and a libel suit against the CBC.

His speech, which was presented by the Queen's Law Forum, was heavy on the legal jargon.

But Sopinka also joked about the lighter side of the Supreme Court. "Must a judge be a monk? Even members of the clergy have more rights," he said. He said dispelling the monastery myth would help to attract the best lawyers in the country to the bench.

He addressed the Queen's law students directly and warned them not to enter the practice of law purely for financial gains. Sopinka stressed the importance of volunteer and community work for lawyers.

On a lighter note, all eyes fell on the law professors when Sopinka mischievously mentioned the importance of getting "criticism from academics on Supreme Court decisions."

Sopinka attended Queen's for a year before transferring to the University of Toronto. He also played for the Toronto Argonauts for three years before beginning his 28 years as a barrister.

He noted that the main difference between the merits of the bar and the bench is "speaking directly for half the day versus listening to drivel all day."

However, he did conclude that his work is very important and challenging. "I've had my share of good cases and some of them have attracted considerable media attention. I love my work," said Sopinka.

AJ's responds

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

better, though this past Monday's meeting was the worst.

"The major thing that is stuck in my mind is the really insulting part that they said about Queen's feminists... when they're the ones trying to bring those people into the bar," Kara said.

At this time Kara plans to continue working at AJ's, though she did consider quitting. "I don't want to have to put up with all of that verbal abuse, but I have enjoyed working there," she said.

In an interview with The Journal, AJ's manager James Bonham-Carter, who was at the meeting, said he was apologetic from square one as he knew the meeting had not gone appropriately. "I should have put an end to it but I didn't. That's where I made my mistake," he said.

Bonham-Carter said he knew the comments were offensive, but explained that it was the nature of the group. "Friends can get offensive with each other," he said.

He said that after the women left the room, the men reacted with nervous laughter. "It was a group of people who felt guilty and nervous about what fools they had been," he said.

However, he said the meeting continued to "saunter off in its own direction, making light of the situation."

When asked how he reacted to the "anal, lesbian, Queen's, feminist bitches" comment, Bonham-Carter told The Journal he wasn't sure if he said anything to the individual formally.

Although he said it was as much the responsibility of a friend of the speaker to say something about that type of comment, Bonham-Carter said he would handle the situation differently in the future and ask the individual to leave the meeting.

"If it had been during normal working hours and if he had said something around a customer or in not such a loose forum, I would have reprimanded him immediately," Bonham-Carter said.

After the meeting with the three women, Sakell, the other manager in the meeting, reprimanded the men.

He told the men that the women were very upset, but that "still didn't register with them," he said.

Bonham-Carter pointed out that the men had missed the issue, himself included.

Sakell and Bonham-Carter expressed disappointment over Bridget's quitting.

"It's a shame that Bridget quit over the issue because I think we all learned a lot from it," Bonham-Carter said.

AJ's co-owner Brian George told The Journal AJ's management would be discussing the issue with the entire staff.

Universities.

The reason that the problem was passed onto the COU, he said, was that if individual universities dealt with it on their own, they would be seen as supporting smoking. "No responsible institution wants to be seen as being against the overall aim of this bill, and that's to stop smoking," he said.

"I don't think anybody thinks that it's practical or reasonable to ban smoking in peoples' rooms," he said. "Everybody's happy with the situation [of smoking banned in public places] we have now."

Milligan said the COU would prepare a submission on behalf of all Ontario universities.

"This is the problem with the NDP," McGuinty said. "They wreck a perfectly good bill by putting in this kind of ridiculous measure." The bill would raise the legal age to purchase and smoke cigarettes to 19, with strict penalties levied against merchants who sell to minors.

Among other measures, pharmacies and vending machines would not be allowed to sell tobacco products.

Exchange Agreement with Queen's University of Belfast

Under the terms of this Exchange Agreement, a Queen's University student will be selected to undertake postgraduate work for a period of 12 months (1 October 1994 - 30 September 1995). Preference will be given to doctoral candidates but, in special circumstances, master's candidates may be considered. The time spent at Belfast may be counted as fulfilling part of the residency requirements at Queen's.

Queen's University at Belfast will provide a maintenance allowance of £5,500, a conference award of up to £275 and tuition fees will be waived. However, the student will be responsible for travel expenses and residential accommodation.

For further information, please contact Mrs. Jane Kallin, Registrar, School of Graduate Studies and Research. Applications must be submitted by March 15, 1994.

1994-95 ATTENTION GRADUATE STUDENTS READMISSION TO THE GRADUATE RESIDENCE & HARKNESS HALL

1. Application forms for residence and room preference forms will be available commencing Friday, February 11 at the Residence Admissions Office, ground floor, Victoria Hall. Please note that the office is closed daily between 1:00pm and 2:00pm.

2. Residence applications will be accepted at the Residence Admissions Office commencing 9:00am, on Friday, February 11. All application forms and room preference forms must be submitted to the Residence Admissions Office by 4:00pm on Friday, February 18.

3. Admission into residence, allocation of rooms, and Waiting List positions will be determined by a lottery. The results of the lottery will be posted on Friday, February 25, at the Residence Admissions Office, Jean Royce Hall desk, Harkness Hall and the Graduate Residence.

4. Students planning to enter first-year Graduate Studies, Law, Medicine, or the M.B.A. program may not apply for residence until an offer of academic admission to the University is made. Students who have received conditional offers will not be permitted to submit an application until the offer is unconditional.

5. A $400.00 deposit will be required, if accepted into residence, by Friday, March 11. $200.00 of the $400.00 residence room deposit will be refundable if the Residence Admissions Office is notified in writing before May 31 that residence accommodation is no longer required. The deposit is non-transferable. Please submit your deposit to the Office of Residence & Food Operations, Victoria Hall (any concerns regarding payment of the deposit should be directed to this office - 545-2529).

6. Indicate on your application form whether you are interested in only one or both of these residences (and the order of preference). It is not possible to be accepted into one residence and on the Waiting List for the other one, or to be on a Waiting List for both residences.

7. If you have any questions, please call Susan Buck at the Residence Admissions Office at 545-2550.

Valentine's Day Party

Sat. Feb 12
1994

DOORS OPEN AT 8 PM

Free Admission for you and your Valentine 'til 10:00 pm (with coupon)

First 100 people receive a free carnation

Kissing competition
Enter before 10 and qualify to win a romantic dinner for two.

SKITZO-MANIA

EVERY THURSDAY "COME ON DOWN TO THE FLIP SIDE"

DOORS OPEN AT 8

VALENTINE'S COUPON
FREE ADMISSION BEFORE 10 PM FOR 2 PEOPLE
SAT., FEB 5
THE COCAMO

178 Ontario Street

544-6885

O P I N I O N
Guerilla theatre denounced?

"Guerilla theatre," designed to shock and confront its viewers, is a political statement used when accepted channels of action are no longer effective. It can also be used as a means of drawing attention to an ineffective or outdated system.

Guerilla theatre can be a powerful form of expression. Delegates to the Status of Women Committee at the Queen's University Model United Nations last weekend witnessed its impact first-hand.

In a graphic and shocking display, two delegates to the Committee on the Status of Women who claimed to be frustrated with stagnant debate, dramatized an assault on a woman complete with life-like makeup and overturned furniture.

For any woman present who had experienced domestic violence, the scene could have been traumatic. Private suffering and violence made graphically public and anonymous by such a dramatization risks dehumanizing its victims. It can also have the effect of subordinating the victims' social realities to the actors' desire for a political statement.

Whether the actions of the two delegates were purely political "show-boating" or were motivated by deep concern for the issue of domestic violence remains to be seen. Regardless, such a dramatization can certainly be seen to mock the plight of victims of abuse world-wide. Millions of women, in cultures and social realities we can hardly imagine, experience domestic violence every day. Such a trivialization of domestic violence is inexcusable. But was the reaction of the QUMUN Executive to the incident completely justified?

We must remember that role-playing is the basis of Model United Nations. Delegates take on the views of nations around the world, regardless of their personal views on the issues at hand. The delegates follow the rules and procedures of the United Nations, learning the ways and means of the UN and international diplomacy.

The UN provides an international forum for rational discourse, in part because its rules of decorum and procedures for action serve as a guide for its participants. Model United Nations serve as a parallel forum for discussion of issues of international concern, and follow the rules and procedures of the real UN.

QUMUN's organizers attempted to create a realistic forum for participants. We can only believe that the incorporation of a satellite hook-up with QUMUN's Secretary-General, "live" from the former Yugoslavia was meant to recreate realistic UN situations. The Secretary-General advocated strong acts of aggression against participants in the Yugoslavian conflict. Once again, we can only assume that this was designed with forethought to spark debate about an international event of great importance.

Given the organizers' incorporation of such theatrics into the QUMUN's conference, their reaction to a parallel action is surprising. The decision to expel the two delegates appears to have been a purely political one, designed to punish the two for the challenge to decorum their unsanctioned actions represented, and perhaps for upstaging the organizing committee.

Admittedly, the delegates' decision to ignore the proper channels in favour of a guerilla theatre protest may not, in retrospect have been the best choice. The two delegates broke the rules of the conference and their actions created a stressful situation for the QUMUN participants and they should therefore be reprimanded.

The blame for the "ruining" of the remainder of the Committee on the Status of Women's discussion, however, lies as much with the organizers as with the guerillas. In expelling the two delegates, the organizers illustrated their positions of authority to all the delegates at the conference. However, the reaction of the QUMUN organizers leaves two sets of questions, which were demanded by the theatre piece, glaringly unanswered.

First, were there problems within the Committee that the action was designed to flesh out? Obviously the two delegates were dissatisfied with the course and speed of the debate that took place.

Second, if debate is so stagnant and unrewarding because of the vastly different views of the "nations" involved, is a model United Nations the place for such debate? Perhaps QUMUN's seemingly overarching concern with rules, decorum, and procedure could be balanced with a desire for forceful, constructive, and productive debate on such a pressing international issue.

The fact that such a powerful and desperately passionate dramatization evoked little or no further discussion within the Committee or the Model United Nations as a whole reflects poorly on the organizers. A great opportunity to discuss domestic violence was offered to the organizers and the other QUMUN delegates, regardless of the guerilla theatre's challenge to decorum and procedure.

Guerilla theatre is a localized, grassroots level protest and agitation for change, much in the way of guerilla warfare. The effectiveness and appropriateness of enacting such a piece at a simulation of one of the world's most rigid and rule-bound bureaucracies is questionable. But at a forum where everyone is acting anyway, is it so unpardonable?

The people, the plan, the difference

Another election has come and gone, and as Pirmohamed, Rex and Shantz recover from their hangovers, political pundits are busy trying to read the vote.

With five teams running, the possibilities seemed endless. But as voting days grew nearer, only two teams found themselves in the frontrunning.

These two teams, Pirmohamed's and Bertrand's, managed to capture the public's attention.

Only one other team captured the public's attention on a grand scale, and that was Arnold's team. While the nature of that attention was not exactly vote-gatnering, Arnold did stand out on another front as well.

On most policies, with possibly one exception, Arnold's team seemed to be the furthest right. They focused less on social issues, presented more traditionalist policies and took a conservative stance on fiscal issues.

The one policy exception may not be as glaring as it appears. Arnold's team is the only team to articulate a stance on Surface. They vowed they would financially support Surface, but Surface would remain subject to certain conditions stipulated by the Alma Mater Society. Given his reaction to the poster incident, the Surface promise didn't look too promising.

At the risk of oversimplifying, it may be deduced that Arnold's dislike of "political correctness" is not shared by many students at Queen's — at least not many who voted.

One thing is for certain: this was not a high-school election in which image dictated victory or defeat.

If image had been the deciding factor, chances are Carlyle, Ward and Whiting would have cleaned up. But this was not the case. It is possible that image served only to boost but to curse this team. Perhaps views on who "looks" like a good candidate have changed.

With five teams, the election did not look like it would conclude with a horse-ace finish, but that is exactly what it did.

Both Pirmohamed, Rex and Shantz, and Bertrand, Smith and Lulke appeared to be the best prepared teams. Pirmohamed's team ran a slick campaign, while Bertrand and his running mates engaged in stripped-down politicking.

Bertrand's electoral success, (he did garner 29.5 per cent of the vote), indicates that many Queen's students like not only his policies but his style of politics. His approach was refreshing in its simplicity.

Many students were surprised Asselstine's team fell so far behind both Pirmohamed's and Bertrand's. However, with five teams running it was important that each team clearly distinguish themselves. Asselstine's team was not able to do this. The dividing factor in this election may have been the literature Pirmohamed's team used to prove to voters they were not ad libbing answers to questions posed to them.

In short, they had the people, they had the plan, it seems to have made the difference.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM
QUACK CAN USE TRACK

THE EDITOR.

In the Feb. 4 edition of The Journal, sports reporter Frank Dixon wrote that Queen's had denied Quack Athletics the use of the Queen's indoor track. At the time Mr. Dixon wrote, that was the case. I would like to point out, however, that in a letter dated Jan. 27, the Chairman of Facilities and Services of the School of Physical and Health Education, John MacFarlane, advised me that he was prepared to present our club's request for use of Queen's facilities for review at a senior administrative group meeting on Monday, Jan. 31. On Tuesday, Feb. 1, Mr. MacFarlane graciously contacted me and attempted to work out an arrangement that was both convenient to our training group and that would not disrupt other users of Queen's facilities.

—JEFFREY D. BRISON
QUACK ATHLETICS COACH

UNDERSTANDING SURFACE

THE EDITOR.

It will come as no surprise to anyone that I disagree with Mr. Dick. In his letter of Feb. 8, "Surface: obsolete and morally flawed?" he, once again, goes about explaining exactly what is wrong with Surface. However, Dick seems to feel that he can use the same techniques that he has always used to discredit the paper, simply because it worked once. Unfortunately for him, people have now seen through his quoting out of context and liberal catch-phrases, and discovered the ugly truth that lies beneath.

Mr. Dick takes quotations out of Surface issues from the past in the sixth paragraph of his letter. There are four quotes, that come from three (or maybe even only two, I'm not exactly sure) articles over two years of Surface. From these brief and out of context quotations Dick attempts to extrapolate that Surface is entirely "racist," "sexist," etc. Dick also points out two quotations from this past issue of Surface. One of the quotations is from a poem about the tyranny of white oppression and the anger the poet feels. The other quotation is in reaction to an ad from the Campus Bookstore that used part of a "Nigger Head Brand" ad. The ad contained a very stereotypical white man's depiction of a black man. Personally, I think the type of anger expressed in both of these quotations is more than justified considering the circumstances and context of each. However, Mr. Dick says that the expression of this anger represents "discrimination." I'm sure that he would react much more calmly, logically, and much less "offensively" to the violence and ignorance of white people, but then again, he's not the victim of that violence and ignorance, is he? In fact he benefits from it. So, how can he justify his criticism of how others react to these things? I don't know.

I must admit I used to have many views about Surface similar to Mr. Dick's. I remember reacting with indignant anger to the poem by the Limp Wrists which Mr. Dick quoted twice. However, several friends talked with me and explained the context and the circumstances under which the poem was written. And since then these same friends, and others, have talked with me several times when I have reacted defensively when criticized by "minorities." These friends helped me to understand and to learn from the anger in Surface and I love them for that.

If it were not for them I would still be ignorant of the "big picture" and I would still be spouting liberal catch-phrases that are unrealistic and idealistic and allowed me to pretend that everyone in the world could live by the same rules, despite all of the hatred and oppression. I'm only sorry that Mr. Dick isn't lucky enough to have friends as patient and understanding as mine.

—PETE STUART, CON ED '94

GUERRILLA THEATRE

THE EDITOR.

With regards to the "guerilla theatre" incident at last weekend's Model United Nations, I am deeply dismayed that The Journal did not perceive the need to interview any of the delegates who were actually members of the Committee on the Status of Women.

Those who were not forced to witness the upsetting dramatization (ie. Mr. Perry) are in no position whatsoever to judge and evaluate the effect and ramifications of the incident. While I would like to commend the QUMUN Executive for dealing with the situation swiftly and effectively, the spectre of Ms. Morrison's reprehensible actions hung over the Committee for the rest of the conference and had a very damaging effect upon many of the Committee's delegates, including myself. I have been riding an emotional roller-coaster since the incident and I do not know if I will ever be able to forgive Ms. Morrison and her cohort Mr. Latour for putting me through this ordeal.

At the outset of the conference, every member of the Committee understood the seriousness and urgency of dealing with the very pressing global problem of domestic violence. However, at a model UN, participants are supposed to assume the persona of a delegate representing a specific national point of view. Rather than having each delegate espouse the opinions of concerned Canadian university students, a model UN seeks to elicit opinions from around the world and recreate the difficulties international diplomats face when trying to teach a consensus. As the Committee Chair, Ms. Charania, mentioned, if Ms. Morrison was unhappy with this process, other avenues existed for her to express her dissatisfaction with the tone and direction of the debate. Despite the existence of these avenues, Ms. Morrison let her emotions get the better of her and subsequently acted in a very irresponsible manner.

When one considers the fact that a woman is abused every thirty seconds in Canada, the issue of domestic violence hits home. While I respect Ms. Morrison's genuine passion to eradicate this horrifying statistic, I suggest that she channel her energy into more productive and less harmful activities than "guerilla theatre."

—CRAIG ROSARIO, COMM '97
DELEGATE FOR SAUDI ARABIA ON THE COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

PALE WHITE THINGS HUMAN, TOO

THE EDITOR.

Last winter in Toronto, a young OAC student walked through the halls of her high

If you were an animal what would you be and why?

H E A D S

"A lion 'cause they're king."
—ELIZABETH MACKENZIE, ARTSCI '95
ALI SQUIRES, ARTSCI '96

"A teddy bear 'cause it's Valentine's."
—JOEL HARDING, ARTS '95

"Polar Bears so we can stay warm and drink Coke."
—THE WEDNESDAY NIGHT WALKHOME STAFF

"A human so we could get back at all those kids."
—THE PARENT/CHILD RESOURCE CENTRE STUFFED ANIMALS

school. She passed by people who were talking in languages she didn't understand. They glared at her and she glared back because she was different. She was "other." She made her way to class and began preparing for her big independent study presentation. Suddenly, two large girls of another race appeared at the door of the classroom, and started laughing, pointing and shouting racial slurs at her. She looked around the room for support, but everyone was convinced she deserved this torment because she was in a racial minority. There was nothing she could do except endure the harassment and pray they wouldn't beat her up later.

That student was me, and I am a white, Anglo-Saxon Protestant.

Laugh if you will, but that is a true story. It is also a story that Surface should keep in mind the next time they decide to publish racist garbage. The people at Surface assume that whites have never encountered racism...well think again! I've endured racist slurs since grade two, attended a high school where whites were a minority, and I've been ridiculed because of my colour. Granted, the racism I've experienced is not like the racism non-whites experience, but it still hurts. And those of us from big cities know what it's like to be the only one of our

OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall	ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Adrienne Down
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland	ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT Ryan P. Chen
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey DeVilla	SLAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Marika Glickman	ASSISTANT SPORTS Justin McKellar
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey DeVilla	ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yardell
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Furse	LITERARY LAPSSES EDITOR Megan Nichols	ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSSES Tim Mitchell
FEATURES EDITOR Alison Masermann	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder
	BRUCE MARLAND
	LORI THORLAKSON

CONTRIBUTORS

Tricia Bauman, Jason Bennett, Lisa Chen-Wing, Prentis Clairmont, Steve Coghlan, Brent Davis, Frank Dixon, Andrew Gullyville, Larry Hagan, Jo Hindle, Elizabeth Ireland, Yodit Johnson, Dave Kemp, Helen King, Paul Koidis Sr., Bryan Lambert, Jonathan Leigh, Owen Niess, Michael Moss, Shannon Niemi, Laurie North, Tara Roy, Amanda Selfridge, Sharon Wilson, Jeff Wood, Christopher Zabel

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie
ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT Gabrielle King
ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Harner
SALES REPRESENTATIVES Fiona Maccaulay Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Friday, February 11, 1994 • Issue 31 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston, Ontario. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the University's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of the Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.

Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728
Internet: journal@quicdn.queensu.ca

Circulation 10,000
Issue 32 will be published on Tuesday, February 15, 1994.

Real Live Slacker

Hey, you!

My favourite computer company, Apple Computer, who created the Macintosh (which led to Windows for IBM machines), has come under fire for its policy of supporting gay rights in the workplace. Thanks to the well-organized religious right, mail to Apple against gays outnumbered pro-gay mail 500 to 1. This Valentine's Day, let's even the odds. Send queer-positive e-mail to Keith Sullivan, whose e-mail address is sullivan6@applelink.apple.com and help make life easier for gays and the folks who made life with computers easier.

—Joey.

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Short Cuts, the newest Robert Altman film, lauded by critics and audiences alike as one of the year's best movies, is the most misogynist film I have ever seen. The movie is the loosely-woven fabric of the lives of somewhat unconnected individuals living in a certain area of Los Angeles. One of the concrete threads tying all the characters together is geographic location and another, I would argue, is the misogynist attitude which pervaded all the depictions. One of the larger plots revolves around the discovery of a nude female body by a number of middle-aged buddies on a fishing trip. Upon the finding, not only do the men make comments about the size of her "tits" and make "jokes" about necrophilia, thereby eroticizing the violence, but they also decide to delay reporting the body for a couple of days so they can continue to fish, thus belittling its importance.

A second moment wherein the bodily harm of women is highlighted is when the Robert Downey Jr. character, who is a makeup artist, makes up the face of his girlfriend to look beaten up, so that he can take pictures of her in that state. During the photo shoot (pun intended), he pretends to hit her, laughs about it and tells her he is getting "turned on" by the whole situation. When the photos of this woman are processed, they are accidentally swirled with those of the first female body, taken by one of the fishermen, producing strange looks on the part of the recipients of the respective pictures, and a supposedly comedic moment of the film—comedy at the price of fetishization of abused female bodies.

One of the final scenes of the movie (and no, I don't care if I ruin the end for you) is the Chris Penn character killing a young woman cyclist by beating her over the head with a rock. An earthquake immediately begins, and, as we later find out, the death is reported solely as a result of falling rocks. As a friend pointed out, it seems that the movie is willing to move heaven and earth to avoid dealing with violence against women.

Altman's Short Cuts misogynist

The women that don't end up dead are completely objectified by a wide display of nudity. There are explicit voyeuristic moments, such as one individual spying through a fence to see Lori Singer's character peeling off her clothes. Other scenes show women naked in various social settings, such as whirlpool gatherings and mid-afternoon livingroom lounging. One scene involves a woman telling her husband that she cheated on him, while she is wearing nothing but a shirt which is not long enough to cover her genitalia. A superbly acted sequence, the viewer's attention is nevertheless called away from her speech, and is directed towards her open vulnerability and the diminution of her significance via the sexualization of her dialogue.

In total, all but two of the female characters display considerable amounts of nudity, while the men universally are well covered. The only significant moment of male frontal nudity is the sight of Huey Lewis' penis. Don't get too excited though (not that you necessarily were), we see a long shot of him peeing off a large rock into the water in which the first female body is lying, thereby further degrading her and at the same time asserting his phallic position of power. I am not trying to argue that there should be no nudity of any kind, nor am I attempting to claim that everyone should be filmed naked. My point is that in this film, the nudity of women is entirely fetishized and sexualized, while the men retain their fully-clothed authority.

These extremely unequal gender portrayals destroy what has the potential to be a truly intricate and absorbing film. The interwoven episodic structure of the plot, the complex character development, the universally great acting, and the biting critiques of authority figures, familial relations and environmental apathy, all demonstrate the originality contained within Short Cuts. However, like many films "innovations, the writers and directors are only prepared to go so far. Many will experiment with form, narrative structure, and methods of social critique, but few will take the plunge into the dangerous waters of gender politics. It is the downfall of this movie that not only do the filmmakers not explore the roots of sexual divisions, but actually violently reinforce the victimization of women.

Ultimately, it is this all-pervasive obsession with eroticized violence and fetishization of women that stands out as the most memorable element of my exposure to Short Cuts. Unfortunately, critics and audiences are seemingly so desensitized to such portrayals of women that the problems involved are not deemed worthy of mention. Most of the audience at the Princess Court were roaring with laughter, even in the scenes depicting graphic displays of the results of male violence. Greg Smith, the reviewer from The Journal, called Short Cuts a "treasure," claiming that within American society, "not a blemish can hide from Altman's hyper-observant gaze." It appears that the filmmaker's "blindspot" of misogyny is reinforced by the ignorance and acceptance of those who consume the material. It is no small wonder that women are degraded, abused and killed within a society that is entertained by such violence.

—CARRIE ROTHWELL ARTS '95

OPENFORUM

QMSA ON CHILDCARE

THE EDITOR,

I am writing about your article of Feb. 4, on the issue of childcare on campus. I feel that the article badly misrepresented what I had to say on the issue, and also was untrue in several respects.

I have read the childcare report that was released to Alma Mater Society Assembly the week before the article appeared. Indeed, it would have been hard for me not to read it as I sit on Assembly and am expected to comment on what comes before it. I told your reporter that I had not seen the full report compiled by the childcare committee last year, which was the primary source of the information contained in this year's report. I said that I would like to see it, as it would be instructive to see what was left out of the package that was given to Assembly two weeks ago. I have been told by a member of the Childcare Committee of last year that the report released by Mt. Minerson had some glaring omissions—other alternatives that could be pursued.

I did not state or imply that final responsibility for the provision of childcare should lie with the AMS instead of the administration of Queen's. It is, after all, an accessibility issue.

What I did say was that I thought it unlikely that the university administration will do so. Let me put it another way. At the last assembly, Ms. Fielding, the education commissioner, suggested that the AMS should join the staff and faculty associations and the unions in their ongoing attempts to lobby the administration for childcare, as the latter have been for the last several years. If the unions can't force the administration to provide the necessary resources I'm sure that the thought of the AMS demanding childcare has the administration quaking in their boots.

The group on campus with the largest interest in seeing the effective provision of childcare is mature students. It is my responsibility, as the Mature Students' Association representative to Assembly, to agitate for childcare. I do not expect the AMS to pauper itself to do so; however, the resources must come from somewhere. As it seems unlikely that the resources will be supplied by the administration, the next logical place to go is the AMS.

My comments concerning AMS profitability were taken out of context and distorted. I suggested that instead of investing in money-losing enterprises such as Vids in the Hall, it would be more reasonable to invest in an enterprise that would have a reasonable chance of breaking even, such as the off-campus childcare centre option provided in the report. As was suggested at last Assembly, a student fee to make up the difference between optimal cost to the consumer and the real cost of running the operation seems to make a lot of sense, and can be more easily justified than the current student fee that goes to the Queens' Star Trek Club. Not that I have anything against Star Trek, but let us keep our priorities straight here. Which is more meaningful to society at large, Star Trek or education and good care for children?

In the larger context of AMS profitability, I pointed out that the levels of service found in the campus pubs (with the exception of Clark) is probably reflective of the desire of the AMS to serve student needs, (i.e., not very high) and this is reflected by the fact that, as I have heard, AMS services have run up a collective deficit of around $180,000 since September. If AMS operations were run with service to students in mind, they might become profitable businesses. These profits can be used to help provide useful services to students, such as Walkhome, such as childcare.

—JACK TROUGHTON
QMSA REPRESENTATIVE TO THE AMS AND ASUS

The JDUC Program Committee and the Queen's Debating Union present

Should Surface Re-Surface?

This House believes that Surface should be a University funded paper.

Wednesday, February 16
8:00 p.m. in Wallace Hall

Speaking for the Resolution

Harvey Schachter past editor of the Whig-Standard

Mike Perry
Representative of Surface

Speaking Against the Resolution

Darren Littlejohn
Co-Leader of the No campaign

Marc Givens
Alumnus & Litigant against Surface

Hear Both Sides of this Controversial and Important Issue

At the conclusion of the debate the House will entertain (and encourage) anyone in the audience to speak for or against the resolution, or any facet of the issue, for a maximum of 3 minutes.

Faculty HOT SHOTS Competition II

at the
Women's Basketball Game
Tuesday, February 15th
6 pm vs. York

Challenge your rival faculties and have a chance at a great prize package.

FACULTY CHALLENGE

The largest faculty group in attendance will be rewarded with free pizza.

HOTS SHOTS

- Enter your name/faculty at the ticket table when you come to the game.
- At half-time of the women's game, a male and female from each faculty (see below) will be randomly selected in pairs to shoot.
- Working as a team, each pair will have 60 seconds to score as many points as possible. (Missed shots will be recorded for tie-breaking purposes)
- The pair with the highest total wins a "Treasure Chest" of prizes, including VIA Rail voucher each for $100.

Arts & Science ('94-'95) • Arts and Science ('96/'97) • Rehab • Law • Nursing • Rehab • MBA/Grads
Winners from Jan. 28: HOT SHOTS - Sally Kline and Wayne Lee.
FACULTY CHALLENGE - Phys. Ed.

PLUS OUR REGULAR FEATURE
The SHOT Long Shot* Contest - Your Chance to win $5,000
*Sponsored by The SHOT Pool Pub.

No, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him who loved us. For I am convinced that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor rulers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans 8:37-39

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

OPENFORUM

PALE WHITE THINGS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9

kind on a bus, or to be crowded off the sidewalk (attention Masala Woman!).

Surface would do well to remember that if they published such racist comments about any other race, there would be a national outcry. Instead whites endure their slurs in silence, the way non-whites used to endure racism. "For shame, you fucking white dog?" For shame you insensitive paper! We are not "pale white things" but humans. For "if you prick us, do we not bleed?" And if you grab our throats and squeeze, do we not die? Most of us do not wish any harm on non-whites. But if you keep pushing us like this, who's to say we won't push back in self-defence? Next time Surface, think about the real white people before you write about the hateful white monster, because, in reality, that hateful monster is now you.

—ELIZABETH MOORE
ARTS '97

Happy Valentine's day!!

Tonight!

The Hopping Penguins

Come early! How come?
Beat the line!
Cheap 7:30 - 9:30!

Wed. February 16th
Smartest Monkeys
with guests freeway band

Mondays
20¢ Wings
5-10 PM

Coming Soon!

The Sidemen
The Brides
The Headstones
Street Noise
The Skydiggers

393 Princess Street 531-5300

satursday

The Leslie Spit Tree-O

with guests...
VOLUME.

Come early! How come?
See above.

Play N.T.N. Trivia!
Every Tues. Night.
Prizes to be Won!
Spaghetti to be eaten!
A.Y.C.E. only $2.99

Tuesday, Feb 15th

Fundraiser for Princess Court Cinema

Featuring:
The Mahones
The Mugworts
Boag & the Whips

Good bands - Good cause!

FEATURES

Valentine's Day is fast approaching, bringing with it—along with the chocolate and roses—other sensual pleasures, including intimacy. As you try to make this Valentine's Day special, we would like to offer some suggestions on how to make your sexual experiences special too.

Love—exciting and new—come aboard...

Why is it that we attach such a great deal of importance to something we know so little about? The answer remains ominous in the realm of human behaviour. The fact that love is the driving force behind much of what we do, and is able to transform our lives drastically, has intrigued us since the beginning of time. Even though opinions vary as to what exactly love is, all agree that it is a powerful enigmatic emotion, capable of rendering us helpless in its grasp.

As a result of love's mysterious nature, and our attempt to understand it, we have scrambled desperately to make distinctions about love wherever possible. Out of our vain attempt to define love arises the most predominant distinction: the difference between falling in love and being in love. Even though they are regarded as different states of emotion their similarities are shockingly apparent upon close examination.

The most obvious tell-tale sign between falling in love and being in love lies in the terms themselves. 'Falling' in love suggests an involuntary process. It is as though the lover who 'falls' is in constant motion, quickly experiencing various stages of love while being completely oblivious to, and incapable of, controlling him or herself. The process is analogous to an exciting adventure.

However, since the lover cannot 'fall' forever, and must eventually touch ground (or some semblance of reality), the joy-ride is short-lived. The lover must, alas, return to the bland world of reality. Conversely the lover who is 'being' in love is relaxed and comfortable with their beloved. The state of being in love connotes a feeling of satisfied desire and contentment. The lover is in the non-threatening and stable state of 'being' as opposed to the uncertainty of 'falling.'

These differences in states of emotion account for the characteristic irrationality of the infatuated lover who is falling in love and the reasonableness of one who experiences being in love.

Not only do the states of 'falling' and 'being' in love cause differences in behaviour, but they also help to explain the underlying motives behind a relationship and the personalities of the people involved. A person who is a 'love-junkie,' one who "rides atop an adrenaline rush", is in the relationship for selfish reasons: to experience the 'high' one feels when in love and to receive instant sexual gratification.

Conversely, the rational lover, with their calm sense of reality and two feet firmly planted on the ground, realizes that a successful relationship is one in which mutual consideration is a priority. This lover's concern for their beloved is equal, if not greater, than for themselves.

The lover in love with love is usually unhappy and insecure, looking to the beloved for reassurance and acceptance. The real lover, in contrast, has a healthy self-image and looks to the beloved to enhance and share their life. This accounts for the sense of oneness that exists in real love as opposed to the topsy-turvy, rollercoaster ride that is experienced with infatuation. The romantic adventure is the most appealing aspect of the relationship for the infatuated lover. For the 'real' lover the appeal lies in the thought of a partner with whom to experience life's joys and sorrows.

Since the state of 'being' in love is not driven by unrealistic expectations and is sustained through understanding it lasts longer. The lover is aware of the beloved's shortcomings but nevertheless still loves them, and may, perhaps, love them more so. In contrast, the infatuated lover builds an idealistic image of the beloved, one that is, ultimately, impossible to live up to. This manufactured ideal serves to cause them great pain and disillusionment when they inevitably discover that they were fooling themselves.

Unfortunately, this "I'll love you if..." type of love is the most common type of love and is responsible for most heartaches.

The degree to which sex is important is a distinguishing factor between 'falling' and 'being' in love. Since sex plays a paramount role when one is falling in love it is held up to critical review. This is in keeping with the preoccupation with appearances in falling in love and points to the insatiable desire for perfection.

Why is it that the confusing state of 'falling' in love is so common while 'being' in love is so rare? The answer perhaps lies in the fact that fantasies are more appealing than reality and that we have an unlimited appetite for perfection that is scarcely fed by society.

When we do in fact find someone who measures up we are devastated to find that our perception of him or her was clouded by our expectations. This illustrates the short-lived experience of falling in love and how we must eventually come down to reality. The only way to avoid the negative consequences of falling in love is to be aware of society's carefully contrived presentation of the ideal love affair and reject it as a sham. Only when our expectations are realistic and our motivations sound can we hope to experience the joy of real love.

Stephanie Relic is a fourth year English/Philosophy major who knows all about love.

Lessons in Loving Sending the right signals

- Think through what you want to say and how you'll say it, especially if it's an important or emotionally charged message.
- Let your partner know what your priorities are; try not to crowd in so many requests and instructions that it's difficult to grasp your key points.
- Be concise. Long-winded discussions are more likely to confuse than clarify. On the other hand, being concise doesn't mean being simplistic or superficial. Don't leave our important information about your feelings or desires in order to be brief.
- Don't talk at your partner. Give him or her a chance to respond and interact.
- Try not to begin communications by criticizing or blaming your partner. Starting on a negative note puts your partner on the defensive and makes objective listening difficult.
- Don't be afraid to put what you need to say in a letter if you're having trouble saying it face-to-face. Writing it down shows that you cared enough to take the time to say it carefully.
- Ask for feedback from your partner to be sure you've been understood and to get his or her reactions.

How to put on a condom

Although condoms do not provide 100% protection against pregnancy and/or transmitting or acquiring an STD, they are highly effective if they are used properly every time you have sex.

1. Try different brands of latex condoms to decide which one you prefer. Some people are allergic to spermicidal coatings or certain lubricants on condoms.
2. Use a reservoir-tip condom.
3. Put the condom on the erect penis before any contact between the penis and vagina or anus.
4. Unroll the condom slowly and carefully all the way down the erect penis, smoothing out air bubbles. Have spare condoms available in case you find a tear or hole in the one you are using.
5. Use a water-based lubricant (like KY Jelly or Astroglide) to help decrease the risk of condom breakage. You can never use too much lubricant. Do not use an oil-based lubricant.
6. After ejaculation, withdraw while the penis is still erect; remove the condom carefully, holding onto the base to prevent slipping. Be careful not to spill the contents.
7. Dispose of the used condom (not down the toilet!) Never reuse condoms.
8. If you are also concerned about pregnancy in case the condom breaks, use other contraceptive methods with the condom.
9. Cheap condoms are available at the Birth Control Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Free condoms can be found at Student Health Services and the Kingston AIDS Project.

Being a good listener

Many people have the mistaken notion that being a good listener simply means sitting back in a chair and keeping your mouth closed. But the ability to listen accurately and empathetically is actually a complex process. Some tips:

1. Effective listening requires your undivided attention.
 2. Effective listening is an active rather than passive process.
 3. Effective listeners are patient in their listening style.
 4. Effective listeners avoid putting undue emphasis on one word or phrase in a message, and they wait for the message to be completed before they react to it.
 5. Effective listeners pay attention to what the speaker is actually saying instead of approaching conversations with preconceived notions of what might be said.
 6. Effective listeners are attuned to their partners even when there's been no request for a discussion.
 7. You don't have to agree in order to listen - in fact, it can be useful to agree to disagree.
- (quoted from William H. Masters, Virginia E. Johnson & Robert C. Kolodny, Masters and Johnson on Sex and Human Loving, Boston: Little, Brown and Co., 1988.)

Negotiating Safer Sex

1. Don't be afraid to talk openly about sex with your partner. Practice (alone or with friends) talking casually about sex, and safer sex practices, before you get into a situation in which you need to assert yourself.

2. Consider safer sex to be a self-love issue. Your health and life are too important to jeopardize. Ever. For anyone.

3. Never let yourself be convinced by someone telling you that they are STD-free. Tell them that while you believe that they are telling the truth, you nevertheless always practice safer sex. For you, safer sex is exciting; in fact, since you feel more comfortable during safer sex, you enjoy it more than risky sex.

4. If someone says that they don't want to use protection while having sex with you, take this as a signal that they don't really respect you, and aren't worth your time. If someone doesn't honour your wish to have control over your sexual health—which is only possible when you are only practising safer sex—then they do not deserve to be with you.

5. Remember that you are important. If someone really respects you and wants to have sex with you, they will want to have safer sex, as you define it, with you. Stay in control.

Safer and less safe sexual practices

Sexual activities that include no direct contact with your partner's semen, blood, or vaginal fluid are safe. Those that involve direct contact with semen, blood, or vaginal fluid are risky in terms of transmitting STDs, including HIV.

Safer Sex Activities:

Talking
Sharing Fantasies
Touching and Massage
Masturbation and mutual masturbation (as long as no semen or vaginal fluid comes into contact with broken skin)
Kissing

Riskier Sex Activities:

Oral Sex on a Man—The risk of acquiring HIV by performing oral sex on a man is low but uncertain. Some other STDs may be transmitted by oral sex on a man. Using a condom for oral sex reduces the risk. So does avoiding oral sex until a few hours after brushing or flossing your teeth, if you are the person whose mouth is involved. The risk of acquiring HIV by having oral sex performed on you is extremely low, if it exists at all.

Oral Sex on a Woman—The risk of acquiring HIV by performing oral sex on a woman is very low but is also uncertain. The risk of acquiring other STDs, such as herpes, may be more easily transmitted.

Oral/Anal Contact—The risk of transmitting HIV to either partner through oral/anal contact is uncertain but seems low. Using a latex square or condom cut open as a barrier will further reduce the transmission of HIV or other organisms.

Vaginal Intercourse—HIV and other STDs may pass from either partner to the other during vaginal intercourse without a condom. Unprotected vaginal intercourse is high risk sex.

Anal Intercourse—HIV may pass from one partner to the other during anal intercourse without a condom. It is high risk sex. Condoms are more likely to break during anal intercourse; using lots of water-based lubricant is very important.

What is a dental dam?

Dental dams (latex squares) are small pieces of latex sheets that may provide some protection against transmission of HIV and other STDs during oral sex on a woman or during oral-anal contact. They are used as a barrier between the body of one partner and the mouth of the other. If you use a latex square, carefully hold it in place and dispose of each square after use. If you do not have a latex square, use an open condom cut lengthwise. Latex squares are sold at the Birth Control Centre and at Wrap-around Condoms on Princess Street at Bagot Street.

STD symptoms and where to go for help

If you have noticed any bumps, lumps, a rash, sores on your genitals, pain when urinating, or if you have noticed itching or unusual discharge from your genitals, then you may have a sexually transmitted disease. Arrange for an examination by a physician, as soon as possible, at one of the following:

Student Health Services.....545-2506
K.F.L.A. Health Unit.....549-1232
North Kingston Community Health Unit.....542-2813

To learn more about safer sex practices, you can also call:
The Birth Control Centre.....545-2959
Kingston AIDS Project.....545-3698
AIDS Infoline.....545-1414

1. Improved Self Esteem

Possessing high self esteem is essential to having safer and comfortable sex. If you are not feeling confident, you may be unable to assert yourself in situations where it is vital to do so. For example, if you are having sex with a man, and he refuses to put on a condom, it can be very difficult to say no if you don't feel sufficiently self-assured.

People who are confident and secure are better equipped to demand that their partners respect their desire for safer sex. Having sex against your better judgement increases stress and tension in a relationship and ensures that you will never have the wonderful, comfortable sex that you want.

One other facet to the self-confidence/self esteem issue is body image. Work on loving yourself and your body; it is hard to enjoy sex if you don't. And if part of the problem is that your partner doesn't love you or your body then find another partner who does. It is hard enough to maintain self esteem when it is just yourself who finds fault with you. You don't need a partner to join the opposition. Remember that you're good enough, you're smart enough, and damn it—you deserve respect from your partner.

2. Communication

In an intimate situation, it is extremely important for both partners to express their needs and desires openly without embarrassment. Sex should be a pleasurable experience. If it isn't, you should be able to tell your partner. Talking openly about sex can be difficult and awkward; one effective way of opening the lines of communication is to offer positive feedback, both during sex and afterwards. Tell your partner, for example, that you really enjoyed it that time when he or she didn't drool all over you!

As well, one easy way of letting a partner know that sex is being enjoyed is to make noise at appropriate times (feel free to sigh, moan, yell, pant, grunt, etc.). If your partner isn't making noises, start talking about it.

More noise and talking to your partner leads to better, more exciting sex. But remember, communication requires two people. Partners need to be mentally and emotionally present for great, hot sex. If you are dreaming about Cindy Crawford while you are having sex, you are probably not attending to your partner. This can be a problem especially for men. If it is for you, try going without pornography for a while. If you suspect that your partner is a Cindy Crawford fan, perhaps you should consider liberating his magazines and finding an environmentally-friendly demise for them.

3. Avoiding Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STDs)

If you are worried about giving or receiving STDs, you will find it difficult to enjoy sex. If you have an STD, or are worried about acquiring one, there are certain precautions which you can and should take. Insist upon using latex squares (as an oral/body barrier) or latex condoms. Make sure that a barrier precaution is always used when you have sex; if it is considered to be a regular component of sex for you, then you can stop thinking about it and concentrate instead on enjoying sex.

4. Avoiding Unwanted Pregnancy

Worry-free sex (for opposite-sex couples) also entails guarding against unwanted pregnancies. There are several highly-effective, readily-available birth control methods, and it can be fun and exciting to integrate their use into your sexual play. You will feel most secure and comfortable if you are using a birth control method with a high effectiveness rate. These methods include the Pill, and combining condoms with spermicidal foam, or diaphragms with spermicidal jelly.

5. Exploring Your Sexuality

Just as we used to think that the world was flat, some people's sexual horizons are equally unidimensional! For those of you who think only of a penis going into a vagina when you think of sex, think again. To maximize your chances for having pleasurable sex, you should consider adding more dimensions to your sexual experience. Explore your sexual orientation! Don't restrict yourself to any possibilities. And, if you always play one role in sex (e.g., passive or active), try switching - don't get type-cast! Take responsibility for ensuring that your sex is good sex.

6. Massage

Caresing, stroking, and massaging creates positive feelings of closeness and safe intimacy. The creative use of pleasuring fingers and other body parts can calm, soothe, or excite. Touching your partner is non-threatening and it is a good way to explore your partner's body to the fullest. It can lead you to discover erogenous zones you never knew your partner had. Try using cruelty-free scented massage oils (be sure to keep oil-based lubricants away from latex condoms).

7. Experimenting

Most people probably would like to try something novel in their sex play, but are reluctant to break out of their old routines. Alternatively, some people worry about sounding 'perverse' should they give voice to their fantasies. However, without experimentation, sex is stagnant and dull. So, expand your concept of what sex is. Sex refers to many things, including oral sex, anal sex, massage, masturbation, nipple play, group sex, using sex toys, and much, much more. Don't do things which you just cannot get comfortable with, but let your imagination run wild!

8. Location, Location, Location

Are you having sex in the dark? Having sex under the covers with the lights out obscures the fact that you are having sex, and encourages one or both partners to be mentally or emotionally absent (if you cannot see who you're with, it is very tempting to imagine that you are not with your partner). Try lighting up the room with candles or a coloured lightbulb.

Another location consideration is being some place where barriers against STDs and/or pregnancy are close at hand. Being without protection guarantees worried sex. Make sure that you are exercising some control both over location and protection. It can enhance sexual pleasure to have sex in novel locations; just be sure to bring protection with you.

9. Sex for One

Just because you don't have a partner doesn't mean that you can't experience sexual pleasure. As they say on Home Improvement, "do it yourself!" Sex for one is neither perverted nor difficult, despite what may be thought. Although masturbation is commonly considered to be solely within the domain of men, it is equally pleasurable for, and should be explored by, women. After all, who should know your body, and your preferences, better than you?

This practice can be so arousing that you may experience feelings of guilt about not being able to share it with someone else. Don't feel bad, it's your own little secret! As with any sexual activity, just remember that practice makes perfect.

10. Orgasm

No discussion of sex, it seems, can be complete without mention of orgasm. There are two things to remember about orgasms. First, sex does not require them. If you prefer non-orgasm sex, or at least more variety in your sexual play, then insist upon it. Second, if you are in a relationship where you wish that sex did not consist only of an orgasm for your partner, but not for you, then demand equality. For every time your partner has an orgasm, you should be having one too. After all, good sex isn't just one person pleasuring another; it is both people being pleased. If you are a woman with a man, and you never orgasm during penis-vagina sex (and most women don't), insist upon your partner bringing you to orgasm in another way, which is pleasurable for you.

Special thanks to Martha Bernard, Bill Hotder and Jessica Goldberg from the Birth Control Centre for providing this Valentian feature.

Sex, Alcohol, &

Why Are We Always on the Defensive?

For a lot of us, sexual activity is a real part of life. This isn't "the old days" when we, as college women, were expected to deny our sexuality, or keep it totally under wraps. Today, we are encouraged to talk about it openly, that way if we choose to have sex, we hear everything we need to know to make the best, (and healthiest) decisions possible.

There are lots of places where men and women meet - in residence halls, in class, at sporting events, even in the laundry room. But think about the places we most often go when we are actually looking to meet someone - the parties, the bars, and other places where alcohol will be served.

Why? Because after drinking, it becomes easier to dance, easier to make conversation with people we don't know, to talk, to laugh, whatever. Inhibitions break down. Whether they are friends of friends, or total strangers, with great smiles and a good line or two, we feel less self-conscious when we have a "buzz" on.

Alcohol helps us to forget about the things that make us nervous. It helps us let our guard down and let's us go with the flow. Does he like me, or does he just want to sleep together? Is this one of the good guys, or one of the bad guys? How can I make my boundaries clear without turning him off? What are my boundaries anyway?

We all know that ideally, the best way around these fears is to have a relationship with a guy with whom all of these questions and fears have been dealt with through honest talk and mutual interest. If you don't have that (but want it), sometimes alcohol seems like a good "shortcut" to getting things going in the right direction. The problem with the use of alcohol - especially too much alcohol - as a substitute for real comfort is that we put ourselves at risk - physically and emotionally. It's not that men are inherently evil, it's just that men and women are all looking to find someone who pushes the right buttons. Sex - before, during and after - is an issue. Whether or not we choose to act on it, we all have decisions to make. And, when things get complicated, we really do have to be on the defensive.

Is it that maybe the guys don't think about the risks as much as they should? Or is it just that we have to think about the risks more than they do?

Dr. Jekyll, Mr. Hyde, and the Morning After

"Great smile, really likeable... When he showed an interest in me, I was thrilled. It was a fun night, and I guess everything felt right because I went home with him. Then, in the morning, his attitude was really different. I left angry at him, but more angry at myself for falling for his act."

For the most part, we don't begin with intentions of going home with jerks, but it happens sometimes. There are nice guys out there, then there are guys who are really good at "seeming nice." If you are going to play "hit and miss," you're going to get hurt sometimes.

Guys call it "beer goggles," but we wear them too sometimes. When you drink, your brain sleeps, and your hormones stay wide awake. Your judgment goes downhill, or maybe you just care less than you would if you were sober. In any case, while some can shake off a bad decision pretty easily, most of us find it a little harder to do. It really eats at our self-esteem because many of us tell ourselves, "I should have known better."

Things like self-esteem, reputation, guilt and uncertainty can all be present when the alcohol wears off, and if the caring isn't there, we can feel really empty. In these cases, it's sort of sad, because we realize the men put on "the act" before the casual encounter, and we have to put on "the act" afterwards. If the caring isn't there, all those negative adjectives start running through our heads, and we have to pretend like we don't care either.

Then we are back where we started from ... unsatisfied.

Body Language?

"I guess he thinks I led him on, but I never had any intention of sleeping with him. Especially not on the first night that I met him. Why can't guys simply enjoy the moment, the flirtation, the excitement, without immediately flirting some grand sexual conquest?"

Flirting is a lot of fun. The spontaneity can really get you going. Even so, if you want to set some boundaries, you should determine them ahead of time. The guy can't know these if he doesn't know you. But in some cases, when things suddenly turn hot to cold, guys are "thrown off." Men are generally told that they are to be the initiators, so some make assumptions and keep going forward until something stops them. Sometimes, depending on the individual woman, the assumptions can be right, sometimes wrong.

And they don't know each other well enough to discuss using a condom?

When it comes to sex, "guess work" (yours and the man's) can get you into all kinds of trouble. Men pick up on body language, and they often misinterpret it. You owe it to yourself, and the man, to establish clear-minded communication from the start.

If you have been drinking, your ability to communicate suffers. If the guy has been drinking, his ability to understand you (and possibly his willingness to listen in the first place) might be lessened. That leads us to the big danger ...

Something That Scares Us All...

"I am a victim of date rape. I feel violated and angry. He committed a crime, and I held him accountable. Then why do I feel guilty? What I can't get out of my mind is that there might have been things I could have done to make the situation less likely ..."

Statistics tell us that one in six of us will be a victim of forced sex from a man we know. It's a crime, it's a violation, and it's devastating. And, in almost every situation, alcohol abuse (by the man, the woman, or both) is part of the scenario. You've got to realize that there are things you can do to lessen the chance that this will happen to you. No guarantees, of course.

First, if you are playing "the hit and miss game" with one-night stands, you are putting yourself at a greater risk. You certainly can never trust your judgments of a person's character when one or both of you have been drinking. Never make an assumption that because a man is a gentleman, or because a friend of yours knows him, that he is incapable of date rape.

Second, the most valuable weapon against many unwanted sexual situations is a clear line of communication. You have the right to say "no" at any point. But a lot of men will aim for any area of "gray" that they can find. You have the obligation to make your limits known (the earlier the better), eliminating the guessing games. If you are throwing "maybes" at him, instead of clear and undisputable "no's," you are creating "gray areas."

Again, having a partner who cares for and respects you, and who can respond appropriately and maturely at those times when things "do not feel right" is going to provide the most rewarding experience. If you allow yourself to enter into a potentially sexual situation where caring, respect, maturity and good communication are missing, yet alcohol is present, you are in a high-risk situation.

And, a final word about safety. It's important that as women, we look out for each other, helping each other make positive, consistent decisions and helping each other avoid potentially dangerous situations, especially when alcohol is present.

Risque? Risky ...

"They say that we should carry condoms too, but the guys always seem to have them. Well, things got carried away last night and I guess the alcohol made us a little careless because we ignored it completely ... God, that was stupid."

Safer sex is the responsibility of both parties. Carry a condom, even if it sits in your purse forever and falls out in front of your mother, carry it! Unsafe sex is high-risk sex. And, if you drink and then find yourself in a sexual situation, you are less likely to do all of those things you know you are supposed to do. The "heat of the moment" becomes your worst enemy.

The risk of unplanned pregnancy is certainly an issue, but only one of many. In addition, real-life issues like sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, are real worries. Heterosexuals are the fastest growing group of AIDS carriers. More than ever, we should have discussions about past sexual activity with partners.

See the Spring Break Displays in Mac-Corry on Tuesday for Free Stuff

Healthy Choices

Sexy, Scared and Sober?

For a lot of us, sex is part of the college experience. For better or worse, decisions about sex (whether or not to do it, with whom and when) are thought about, and talked about a lot.

Each guy's sexual history is going to be different. Crowded parties, candlelight dinners, top bunks. Women we've known for years, women we've known for hours. Once, twice, who's counting. But when it comes to "sex under the influence," we are all on common ground, especially in terms of potential risks.

Doesn't it seem like alcohol "makes things easier?" After drinking, it becomes easier to dance, easier to introduce yourself to people you don't know, to talk, to laugh. Inhibitions break down. You might move your conversations, actions, and expectations toward the possibility of sex. Magically, women can seem much more "available" when everyone has a "buzz."

The reason it gets easier is because alcohol helps us to forget about the things that make us nervous. Is she really attracted to me, or just flirting? What's the right way to approach her? Is she going to make me feel like an idiot? Alcohol frees us up by making everything seem OK. It helps us get our nerve up.

We all know that ideally, the best way around these fears is to have a relationship with a woman where all of these questions and fears have been dealt with through honest talk and mutual interest. But we all know that the idea of sex comes up in "less than totally comfortable" situations as well. It comes up when you meet someone at the party, at the bar, or wherever. And sometimes alcohol seems like a good "shortcut" to getting things going in the right direction. It provides sort of a "false comfort."

The problem with the use of alcohol - especially too much alcohol - as a substitute for real comfort is that we put ourselves at risk - physically and emotionally. When we drink to make things easier, sometimes things just get more difficult - maybe not at that moment, but often afterwards.

Beer Goggles

"When I went to the party I didn't plan on sleeping with anyone. When I woke up with her this morning, I wished I hadn't. I must have had some serious beer goggles on."

"I was drunk" doesn't make you feel much better when you wake up in the morning with regrets. When you drink, your power to make smart decisions is shot. Your brain sleeps, but your hormones are wide awake.

When we drink, we think in the short-term. Truth is, even encounters which seem "casual" can have long-term considerations. We don't usually give these a lot of thought on the way to bed though. Things like self-esteem, reputation, emotional stability might seem very important when all is said and done.

Sometimes our biggest "beer goggles" come because we feel pressure from our friends to find sex. Then, we end up pressuring ourselves, telling ourselves that we should be having sex - with anyone - because that's what we think everyone else is doing. That's often when we make the mistake of tuning to alcohol. It seems like the way to get that thing we so desperately seem to want.

We get worked up, get drunk, find a partner. Then, we have a mess to worry about later. We are back where we started from...unsatisfied.

Body Language

"She was hanging around me all night, she slow-danced with me, she said 'yes' when I asked her to stay after her friends went home. Sex seemed natural. But she went home instead; I don't know what the hell I did wrong..."

Don't make assumptions. Too much alcohol, and you might find yourself reading into a woman's actions and misunderstanding her body language. When it comes to sex, "guess work" can get you into all kinds of trouble.

First, you can never assume that just because a girl has expressed an interest that you have the green light to take it as far as you want to. And even if she said "yes" before, that doesn't necessarily mean "yes" again. We know and understand this, but when we test the limits, we can get in hot water.

Second, remember, if the woman has been drinking, her judgment and communication skills will not be at their highest either. Don't let the body language you interpret take the place of a true understanding of a woman's intentions and limits.

Going Too Far

"I was drunk, she was drunk, and we ended up back in my room. We started messing around, but then she passed out. I don't know why, but I just kept going. I can't believe I'm saying this, but I think I might have raped her..."

If you are too drunk to understand a woman trying to say "no," if you are too drunk to listen and respect a woman's trying to say "no," or if you continue to have sex with a woman who is passed out or incapable of giving consent, it is rape. Even if you think you would never - in a thousand years - force sex on a woman, you might lose control if you have been drinking. It's happened to a lot of men, and thousands of women have suffered the consequences.

In these situations, drinking won't excuse the crime or make things easier for you or the woman in question. Rape is rape, drunk or sober. If you commit a crime, you pay, regardless of your poor judgment, your beer goggles, or your misunderstandings of body language. You could go to jail, jeopardizing your academic and personal career. You will also have to live with the fact you have caused serious pain and trauma to another person,

All we can really think about is

SEX. SEX.

SEX.

THINK?

pain you likely never intended to cause.

Something in society told us that men are supposed to go after "it" until a woman makes us stop. "Fact is, it is unfair to put that responsibility on the woman. Good, meaningful sex is a beautiful, mutual thing. Rape is not.

You'll be a better man to say, "I think we need to slow down a bit," rather than to make guesses and gamble with the outcome. All of this is easier to do when you have your head together, free of the confusion that alcohol can bring to a situation.

No Glove, No Love

"We hear a lot about safer sex, and I always have a condom with me. Believe it or not. But I was with this girl last night, and we were pretty wasted. She didn't bring it up and I didn't really think of it..."

Safer sex is the responsibility of both parties. Unsafe sex is high-risk sex. And, when you are drunk, you are less likely to do all of those things you know you are supposed to do. The "heat of the moment" becomes your worst enemy. Sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, are real worries. Heterosexuals are the fastest growing group of AIDS carriers. More than ever, we should have discussions about past sexual activity with partners (something which doesn't usually happen in a casual sex situation). Having sex without knowledge is like driving drunk with your eyes closed.

Sex as it Should Be...

You might find yourself in a variety of sexual situations during college. You might fall in love and have the perfect, safe, satisfying, sober sexual relationship we all wish for. All of us - men and women - want it to be great, meaningful, intense, and all those other adjectives that make fantasies "fantastic."

Sex "as it should be," resulting in positive feelings, and free of doubt, regret, physical or emotional damage, is the only kind worth having. Your chances of achieving "perfect sex" are heightened if you avoid letting alcohol be your guide. Until you find the right time and the right woman, don't let alcohol talk you into accepting anything less.

AMS Educating Students on Substances.
For more information contact
ESOS at 545-2725, Ext. 5329

Women's badminton OWIAA champions

BY SHANNON NIEMI

Since the beginning of September, the women's badminton team has been training hard to achieve top honours in the league. The effort of all team members paid off as the team brought home the OWIAA trophy and banner last weekend—the first OWIAA badminton title in over 10 years.

The first night of practice brought the hope of a gold medal finish. Great badminton players were changed and ready to play. Three of these athletes were newcomers to the Queen's team which included the first-year superstar Sara Gibbings, Tracy Dunn (the number one seed for McMaster last year), Lara Davidson who has had great talent all of these years but just didn't quite make it to try outs. The remainder of the team consisted of the veterans Michele Reszetzki, Lisa Currier, Lisa Low-Ring, Veronica Pahic and Shannon Niemi. Coaches Cindy Beach and Seva Golosky were also very aware of the potential for the team as they have been coaching for a few years now and are familiar with the calibre of Ontario university teams.

The first tournament of the year was very encouraging. The two day event held at Queen's was a showdown for the Eastern Division with Queen's rising far above everyone else. The team cleaned up as all 24 matches were won by Queen's players. Gibbings, Niemi, Davidson and Pahic won all four singles matches while the teams of Gibbings and Niemi, and Davidson and Low-Ring won the remaining eight matches in the doubles event. Unfortunately the second seed, Tracy Dunn was unable to play this tournament due to a broken wrist injury.

Bolstered by the quick recovery of Dunn, the team became a greater threat to the other teams in the OW league. The three remaining tournaments were incredibly successful with a total of 92 wins and a mere four losses. This point total placed Queen's far in front of the second placed Western.

Going into the OWIAA Championships held at McMaster last weekend in first place had Queen's playing the fourth placed Waterloo team in the first round. Queen's defeated Waterloo with relative ease in the semis to continue to the final round. The

Congratulations to the women's badminton team for winning the first Queen's OWIAA championship of 1994. COURTESY OF WOMEN'S BADMINTON TEAM

Western team defeated the third ranked McMaster team to continue into the gold medal round (well, silver medal round for Western).

The outcome of the final round could not have been predicted as Queen's had only edged out a team victory of four for six at the previous tournament against Western. The Queen's team was mentally prepared for individual matches that would contribute to the team's victory.

The strength of the team prevailed throughout the final round and took the OWIAA title from the defending champions (UWO) with a clean sweep. Six matches were won with the teams of Gibbings and Niemi, Dunn and Davidson winning each of their doubles matches and Gibbings, Dunn, Niemi, and Davidson winning each of their singles matches.

The awards ceremony was Queen's all the way. The individual medal winners were awarded as Gibbings won the OWIAA individual women's singles title, and the team of Gibbings and Niemi won the OWIAA individual doubles title. The team medals were then awarded to the well-deserving Queen's team along with the trophy and banner.

The Queen's victory will be remembered by all of the badminton teams competing at the finals with the rousing rendition of the 'oil thigh' performed after the victory.

Gaels split hoops doubleheader with York

BY FRANK DIXON

WOMEN: GAELS 77, YORK 69

Vicki Wilson hit 28 points and grabbed 5 rebounds, and Jenny Laughton hooped 20 points, pulled down 6 boards and dished out 6 assists to lead the Gaels (4-3) to a critical win over a young but talented York (3-5) squad. The Gaels hit all 18 free throws, and survived a frantic late Yeowomen comeback attempt.

Gaels need to sweep Ottawa and Carleton to make the playoffs. YODIT ROCHE-JOHNSON

Queen's led 46-33 after a first half which saw the Gaels execute their offense effectively. Aided by some questionable refereeing, York used a trapping zone press to force turnovers and shut down the Gaels, drawing within three points with less than seven minutes left.

But Queen's reserve guard Erica Hollingdrake drove the lane for a spectacular layup, was fouled, then completed her three-point play with a free throw, restoring a six-point edge at 67-61. Morrison and McIntyre then returned, and the Gaels held on.

Strong games from Morrison (11 points, six assists, five steals, four rebounds), McIntyre (seven points, seven assists), and Stephanie Jamieson (six points, 11 rebounds, three assists) spurred the Gaels.

Vicki Wilson, with an average of 22.1 points per game, has pulled ahead of Western's Michelle Vesprini (22.0) to lead the OWIAA scoring race.

The Gaels travel to Ottawa this weekend for two games. Tonight they face the third-place Ottawa Gee-Gees (5-3) in another crucial game, while tomorrow Queen's meets the winless Carleton Ravens.

MEN: YORK 83, GAELS 65

The York Yeomen (5-3) rode a 12-2 blitz to open the second half, and exploited 36 per cent Queen's floor shooting and an off-game by star guard Gaels' Dave Smart to easily defeat the struggling Gaels. Although Queen's (1-6) didn't play well

Queen's Track huge success at Classic

BY BRYAN LAMBERT

At 5:30 a.m. on Monday, Feb. 5, a small group of Queen's Track & Field Athletes made the trek to Toronto to compete in the University of Toronto Track & Field Classic. The high quality performances turned in by the athletes attended indicates that the team is focused and ready to perform well at the upcoming OUA/OWIAA Championships in four weeks.

Veterans Leslie Bruce and Lesley Morrison both captured gold medals in their respective events. Bruce ran the third fastest time ever over 300m for Queen's athletes in recording a swift time and personal best of 41.41 seconds. Leslie added to her medal count with a 7.94 second personal best run in the women's 60m to earn a bronze medal. Morrison jumped a solid 1.70m to easily win the women's high jump.

Second-year athlete Sarah Leonard, last year's CIAU bronze medalist in the women's shot, is showing that she is slowly returning to her winning form by throwing 12.44m in the shot—winning a silver medal. Brian Derby continues to jump strongly in the men's long jump and recorded a strong bronze medal effort 6.63m in the event.

Notable mentions for the meet go to Anna Wilkinson in the women's 55m hurdles with a superb personal best (pb) of 10.52 seconds which ranks her number nine all-time at Queen's. Rookie Krista Tylecki had great day recording two pbs in the women's 60m (8.50) and long jump (4.84m). Todd Jones continues to have an incredible graduating season running a fast 4:04.07 for the 1500m. Stephanie Sloan also deserves mention for shaving two tenths of a second off her 60m time.

Now that Stephanie is running faster and stronger this should no doubt help her in her long jumping as the season winds down.

Rookie of the meet honours were earned by Amanda Pardy who has consistently improved in all her events over the season. She moved to the number eight all time performance for Queen's in the 60m this weekend with a solid 8.19 result. Derek Lunn and Neil McCourt shared the male rookie honours. Lunn has had a roller coaster season in the men's shot put and with consistent effort managed to throw a pb with a 12.08m effort at U of T. McCourt recorded two personal bests on the day in the men's 60m (7.69) and 300m (39.10).

Leslie Bruce garnered veteran honours with her outstanding performances in the women's 60m and 300m races, earning medals in both events. Multiple events athlete Geoff Stewart is having a phenomenal final year and handily walked away with male veteran of the meet honours based on his six event, four pb day. Stewart sprinted to a 60m (7.82), jumped 1.90m in the men's high jump, triple jumped of 12.33m, and threw the shot 7.90m—all pbs. Geoff also long jumped 6.02 and ran a solid 40.81 time in the men's 300m. Geoff has been a man of many roles this season (athlete, assisting in coaching the long and triple jumpers, captain and team psychologist) and deserves to be commended for his positive commitment and leadership.

In all 21 people attending the meet set 36 personal bests, making this meet a successful stepping stone to the OUA/OW and CI Championships. The team looks ahead to challenge for CIAU standards at the Cornell-Kane Invitational in Ithaca, New York.

Hey Fonzie, sit on it

BY ANDREW GUILFOYLE

Coming off a sub-par performance two weeks previously, a determined squash squad set off for the OUA championship last weekend. Leaving freezing Kingston one day early to acclimatize to paralyzingly cold London, the predominantly veteran team had definite medal visions. After convincing early season defeats to both Western and Waterloo, and disheartening ties against Ryerson and McMaster, the team was seeded a shaky third entering the weekend.

With team veterans Rob Evans and John Irwin suffering from mysterious ailments, the Gaels set out six strong. In the first competition, against an overmatched McGill, the tail end quickly decided matters. James "You know, there's a lot more virgins out there than you'd think" Beresford easily won in three games, while the academic of the team, Keith Smith, took a short time away from his books to also cruise to a 3-0 victory. Chris "quit yapping and order, Mom" Johnston, coasted in three games, as did Andrew Guilfoyle. With the victory assured, Mark Chatterly and Jeremy Thompson kindly gave McGill two matches, to prevent a whitewash.

The team rose early Saturday to feast with Elvis, before facing Waterloo in the semi-finals. In a show of Queen's superior depth, the opening matches quickly swung the Gaels' way. While Beresford dropped only a game to win 3-1, Smith convincingly destroyed the coach's son (who admittedly had been playing only 3 weeks) 3-0. Chris pulled out a hard fought 3-2 win to set the stage for a dramatic finish. Against three veteran Waterloo players, with a combined thirteen years of University squash experience, the top three came up agonizingly short. With Guilfoyle and Chatterly each winning single games, Queen's had tied in matches 3-3, but lost in games 12-11.

In the bronze place joust, a dismayed team nonetheless regrouped for the battle. With Beresford starting the team off with his usual workmanlike win, Smith again triumphed quickly, although his opponents leg cast did seem an unfair hindrance. With Chris tired from his epic victory earlier, a meaningless match was lost, while Guilfoyle and Chatterly easily won. This ensured Queen's the bronze places (although not medals due to university cutbacks), behind Waterloo and victorious Western.

As usual, the Gaels performed exceptionally well in the Saturday night contests, with Keith "Nice team" Smith leading the squad in scoring off of the court, for the second term running. Jeremy "Hi we're from Queen's and we were wondering if we could get in for free?" Thompson endeared himself to the frat boys, look for him on upcoming editions of Electric Circus. Thanks go to James "he's my boyfriend and he's coming with me" Beresford for ensuring the team's safe return to the hotel.

The team would like to thank Roy Ollier for both coaching as well as ensuring no dehydration occurred. As well, thanks go to Jeremy for the superb job of organizing, inspiring and driving our often lackadaisical crew.

Finally, best wishes to Chris, Jeremy, James and Jane's Addiction in all future pursuits. Losing these three veterans, and more importantly Chris' parents (the only documented fans in the history of Queen's squash), will be a loss felt for years. Yes guy! Team! Nice!

Athletes of the week

Leslie Bruce is this week's female athlete of the week. Leslie received a gold and a bronze at last week's track meet. For the gold, Leslie ran a 41.41 in the 300m; for the bronze, she ran a blistering 7.94 in the 60m. Congratulations.

Leslie Bruce

Steve Cobham

The male athlete of the week is Steve Cobham. Steve's accomplishments range from a 95 per cent win to loss ratio over this season and winning a gold medal at the Queen's Invitational. Most recently, Steve qualified for the sabre finals in the OUA. As well, Steve is currently ranked number two in the east division and is a strong contender for the OUA championship.

Basketball

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

ently, Wyeth Clarkson's buzzer-beater put them within two points at the break, 39-37. That score flattered the Gaels' effort, because the Yeomen picked off nearly a dozen offensive rebounds.

But Queen's then collapsed completely in a 3 1/2 minute span, as the quick Yeomen converted Gaels' turnovers, penetrating soft defense in the paint with clever passing and deadly finishing. York went ahead 51-39, overcame Queen's press attempts, and soon expanded their lead to 20 points.

With two seconds left, Queen's reserve guard Mark Holland received a dirty foul, and a nasty shove but erupted. Yeoman guard Andrew Vallejo and Queen's rookie post Corwin Cambay (team-leading five rebounds, two points) were ejected. Cambay is suspended for one game according to Queen's OUA coordinator Bill Sparrow.

Smart had trouble hitting his reliable three-pointer, and scored only 15 points, still good enough to lead the team. He entered the game with a 26.7 average, third in the OU. When Smart establishes both the shot and the drive, he starts drawing fouls, then moves to the line for a dozen or so points. But none of that worked Tuesday, and his sub-par night only reinforced his importance in keeping the Gaels in games. Reserve Queen's forward Roger Wheeler hit 10 points, his second straight double-digit scoring effort since returning from a recurring back problem. But '68 rookie post Rich Cook sat out with a bad knee, which was aggravated against Ryerson. Cook had contributed three straight solid games, and remains doubtful for future matches. Holland, with 12 points, played his best game in a Gaels' uniform. Clarkson hit 13 points and rookie Mickey Stoniowski added nine.

It's crunch time this weekend in Ottawa for the last-place Gaels, who haven't won away from Bardett Gym since Jan. 16, 1993. Tonight, they return to Ottawa's Montpetit Hall, the site of that win, then meet Carleton tomorrow. Queen's must be careful to stay in the playoff hunt.

Hockey Gael Profiles

BY PRENTIS CLAIRMONT

Dan Brown

Team captain Dan Brown is playing in his fourth and final year with the Gaels. The 5'11 defenseman has been through a lot, including a 15-game losing streak this season. The veteran tries to keep things loose in the locker room, and leads by playing his game on the ice. However, he gives most of the credit to his teammates for sticking it out. "A lot of teams would have just folded after losing fifteen in a row. The streak was a character-builder as much as anything," he said.

Brown has assumed a more defensive stance this season. Last year, he notched 35 points and was selected as a second-team OUA all-star. His offensive production has dropped in 1993-94, but he believes that the whole team is more defence-oriented. "Everyone has had trouble scoring. With the loss of Brian Rogers and Chris Glover, we can't afford to fall behind and hope that our offense can bring us back," he said.

"We need to limit our opponents to 2-3 goals, and we've been getting better at that lately," he added.

The 200-pound defenseman admires Ray Bourque's style of play. Like the Bruins' veteran, Brown is a two-way player, contributing five goals and 16 points. Explained Brown, "I emphasize the offensive part of my game sometimes, especially when the team is down."

Brown believes that the Gaels have a good post-season ahead of them. With five games to go, Queen's is four points ahead of RMC and three behind U of T (with a game in hand). "A lot can happen in a sudden-death game and a 3-game series," said Brown.

As for personal goals, Brown is considering playing in Europe next year. The physical education major might also study sports administration at the University of Ottawa. Wherever he goes, the Gaels will certainly miss one of their all-time leading scorers and top defencemen.

Mike Lobinowich

Right-winger Mike Lobinowich is playing his third season for the Golden Gaels. The slick skating forward is having a good season, but is not enjoying seeing his team struggle. The low point for Lobinowich, as for most of the team, was losing to RMC. The Gaels were favoured to win, but just couldn't seem to turn things around.

However, the Gaels have regrouped, winning two of their last four and are playing better in general. "We owe our turn-around to Coach Phelan," says Lobinowich. "Sometimes you need someone to throw water in your face."

The 6'1, 180-pound forward has scored 18 points this season, and plays on one of Queen's most offense-oriented lines. Along with centre Ryan Kantautas and left-winger Kenny Robbins, Lobinowich often plays on the power-play. Usually, Kantautas grabs along the boards to get the puck to Lobinowich, who feeds Robbins, the sniper. However, the line has also been working on its plus/minus. Lobinowich says: "The coach wants us out there to score goals, but at the same time, we can't be a liability to our defense."

Before Queen's, Lobinowich played in Junior B as a defenceman. One of his favourite hockey memories is being selected as a first team all-star in the central division. He will also always remember last year's play-off victory against UQTR, where his line contributed two goals.

This post-season, Lobinowich believes that the Gaels can go one step further. He says, "If we play our physical style and cut down on our mental mistakes, we have a good chance of winning the division."

As far as his hockey or academic career goes, Lobinowich is taking it one year at a time. He plans to return next season and hopes to be reunited with his brother on the ice. A Lobinowich scoring duo? Stay tuned!

Nordic skiers finish strong

BY LARRY HEGAN

Fact: Deep River has the highest per capita PHDs in Canada. Fact: Snow is never a scarce commodity in Deep River.

The Queen's Ski Team brought home some promising hardware from last weekend's NCD Interdivisional. It seems that the side trip to the nuclear waste disposal chamber in Chalk River had positive side effects.

Saturday's race was a 15km classic style race for both men and women. The Queen's Team had to ski it blindly without having had time to pre-ski the course (a big loop), except of course native Emily Doubt, who blazed her way to a third place finish for junior women in front of her home town crowd. Other results were Lee Anne Laverty and Joanne Thomson coming third and fourth respectively in the senior women's race, Alison Douglas seventh, Lori Armitage tenth, and Jennifer Edwards coming fifth in the junior women's race.

The weekend was a success. Coach Harry Lake is impressed, and looks forward to our championships during the first weekend of reading week, but realizes the real battle is over what groovy tunes get played in the van during the following places: Larry Hegan ninth, Yens Thalenhorst 17th, Craig Hawkes 26th, and Kevin Bell came 13th in the junior men's race.

Sunday's races were shorter distances, in the skating style. Larry Hegan was forced to have a fast 10km race, because he had to quickly get back to the van to avoid losing his toes to frost bite, coming third. Once again Queen's took three in the top ten of the men's race, with Ian Michael and Paul Green coming seventh and ninth respectively, Yens Thalenhorst 21st, Craig Hawkes 24th, and Kevin Bell came 15th in the junior boys race.

In the women's 7.5km race Lee Anne Laverty forgot about all the stress of being in med school and cruised to a silver medal. Emily Doubt scooted her way also to a silver medal in the junior women's race, probably going so fast for an excuse to not stop smiling the rest of the trip. Lori Armitage came tenth, Alison Douglas 11th, and Jennifer Edwards came fifth in the junior women's race.

The weekend was a success. Coach Harry Lake is impressed, and looks forward to our championships during the first weekend of reading week, but realizes the real battle is over what groovy tunes get played in the van during the drive to victory.

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch
and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service
available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

REUNION

Free Pool and Bug Juice at THE SHOT

Saturday, February 12
8:30 pm

547-7600

394 Princess St.
(Just Below Division)
546-FILM

This Weekend's Films

Friday at 7:00
Saturday at 7:00
Sunday at 9:00
Monday at 9:00

*Filmmaker Alanis
Obomsawin will be at the
Friday evening screening.

Friday at 9:40
Saturday at 9:20
Sunday at 7:00
Monday at 7:00
Tuesday at 9:05

Dissecting Intersection

INTERSECTION
DIRECTED BY MARK RYDELL
CAPITAL THEATRE
BY CHRISTOPHER ZABEL

The morning sun streams into a tastefully decorated bedroom as we meet Vincent Eastman (Richard Gere) lying in bed staring meaningfully into space, with his girlfriend, Olivia (Lolita Davidovich). Clad in boxers, Vincent sneaks out of bed and goes over to the desk where he playfully types "I love you" and then starts eyeing carefully a model house. This behaviour reveals to us that Vincent is either really into Barbie or is an architect, and his half-lens glasses imply sensitivity and a thorough knowledge of the classics.

"Anybody home?" Olivia asks while she makes an alluring early morning hair adjustment. Vincent is intent on his model which signifies how important his work is to him, but he still playfully answers, "Just us mice." Olivia, after some strategic sheet manoeuvres, looks wistfully at the ceiling and dreams aloud, "Is there anything we can drink to make us two inches tall? Then we could move in." Being a writer, she can come up with these gems almost at will and has the licence to overlook possible difficulties (see Honey, I Shrunk the Kids). However, because such a magical beverage is yet to be found, this nauseating banter continues with variations and at length.

The basic idea isn't as hard to follow as the trailer for this movie would guess. Vincent Eastman has recently left his wife, Sally (Sharon Stone) to move in with his girlfriend, Olivia. Vincent encounters numerous difficulties involving his daughter, a business relationship with his wife, and a creeping suspicion that his girlfriend is a flake. Also complicating the love triangle is the opening flashback sequence where we see Vincent's Mercedes skid off the road, perform a triple flip and land in a ditch. Is he going to die? Will he be okay? Will he go back to his wife? Will he marry his girlfriend? (How many flashback sequences can you fit into one movie? Is this movie's target audience ready for the innovative "flashsideways?") All of these questions and more are answered in Intersection, the highly overwritten story of three lives in transition.

I think there was a time, during my youth perhaps, when I thought that Richard Gere was worth mild idolatry. An Officer and a Gentleman, Breathless (for those who have tolerance for remakes), and American Gigolo (when it was just a cool looking box that your parents wouldn't let you rent) all suggested Gere's tentative inclusion on the A-list of actors, near the bottom with Martin Sheen and Michael Douglas. However, even if we pretend that Pretty Woman wasn't just an irritating formula sell-out, there really isn't any way to reconcile his antics at the Oscars last year with my original impressions. "Maybe if we all hope really hard then all of the problems in China will go away," said Gere, with good intentions and little else on his mind. Since when were telekinetics Hollywood-chic? Still, my main problem with this movie isn't that Gere lacks artistic integrity and may be spending too much time with the Dalai Lama. The premise and innovative use of flashbacks has potential, but the plot and characters fail to utilize it. The story is trite and the characters are only uninteresting repetitions of character stock types—the dutiful wife, the other-woman, and the confused guy who doesn't know what he wants. How many times do we have to hear the new woman in Daddy's life explain to the moody little brat that she "isn't trying to replace anyone?" Kids watch TV, they should know that by now.

And, the movie's big philosophical revelation: you could die in a car crash at any moment so live every moment as if it were your last, isn't all that deep an insight into the human condition? It would have been effective if the movie inspired any sort of emotional investment, but by the end you really don't care if Gere's character dies or not.

Intersection is really terrible and boring, and has nothing remarkable about it except that Stone's character seems to have found a hospital waiting room where you can actually smoke. After the first few meaningful close ups, you start to notice that Gere has a really big nose. That then begins to get almost as distracting as the obviously symbolic clock that the camera keeps flashing to—which signifies the time you're wasting when you could be at home reorganizing

Not the sexiest couple alive (we need Cindy for that). But maybe close.

New At Buffet Uncle Tong Downtown

點心 Dimsum

Dimsum: delicious delicacies served as an appetizer, side dish or entree. Over 10 items to choose from... Spring Rolls, Dumplings, Chinese Pig in a Blanket, Fried Shrimp Wonton, Poik Shui Mai and more! Our Dimsum Cart comes to your table for your personal selections. From $6 to $2.00 per serving. Items subject to change without notice.

STARTS
SUN. FEB. 6
THRU EVERY SAT. & SUN.
NOON
TO
2:30 P.M.

Dimsum is not included in our buffet

想飲茶(廣東式點心)請到

UNCLE TONG DOWNTOWN

368 King Street East at Princess

Smoking a Fat One?

FAT SPIDER WITH THORAX
ALFIE'S
BY PAUL KOIDIS JR.

I was a teenage werewolf.

TRICIA BAUMAN

Thorax, a local band, took the stage with their attempt at some sort of heavy metal revival. But did they succeed? One might think so. The relatively small crowd immediately lauded what seemed to be a group of local heroes, despite the content of this curious brand of rock and roll that these three musicians pounded out.

The singing of Thorax's front man could probably be best described as some form of non-singing that starts way down near the intestines. The band's first tunes seemed painful to a listener who had no previous experience with this particular genre of music, yet an appreciation for the band was inevitably forthcoming towards the end of the set.

Thorax's renditions of both Joan Jett's "I Love Rock 'n' Roll" and Kiss's "Rock and Roll All Night" were ambitiously approached, attempting to combine musically proficient versions of these two standards with a grungy heavy metal drawl. Judging from both the favourable responses of a seemingly loyal following and the full dance floor, these attempts were met with a respectable degree of success. However, listeners from outside of the Thorax fold were left with the empty feeling that one gets after listening to a poorly done cover of classic rock song, sung for some unknown or perhaps satirical effect.

The end result of the Thorax experience left the audience divided into two camps: those appreciating the retrograde celebration of days gone by and those who felt the whole gothic revival endeavour to be profoundly disturbing and promising to weigh heavy on one's soul for some time to come. But then again, this may have been the band's intention all along, in which case everybody's a winner in a weird way.

The glasses say it all.

TRICIA BAUMAN PHAT CONTINUED ON PAGE 22

Whether you need your tuxedo rental next week, next month or next year, reserve by February 27, 1994 and lock in this special offer for your entire group.

FREEMAN
FORMALWEAR
DOING RIGHT SINCE 1918

Dover's Men's Wear
Corner of Princess and Bagot
544-6864
Supplier to the Arts '94 and Commerce '94 Formals

Hey Queen's!

CAN OVER 3 000 STUDENTS BE WRONG?

3 MONTH SPECIAL
FEBRUARY - MAY $109.00

Superior Nautilus

80 Princess Street • 544-6222
AEROBICS • NAUTILUS • FREEWEIGHTS • CARDIO

ASUS JACKETS

is looking for a committee for 94/95

Positions available:

1. Committee Chairperson(s)
2. Director of Finances
3. Director of Operations
4. Director of Advertising
5. 5-7 Committee Members

Applications will be available at "The Core" 183 University.

The deadline for applications will be February 18 at 5:00 pm

For more info please phone 545-6278

Simply Elegant. Simply Classy.

Special Formal Price

Any Style in the 1994 Catalogue

Classy

$65.00

The Only Way to Celebrate

Reisman's MENS SHOP

214 Princess Street 546-0110

GOT THE FEBRUARY BLAHS ???
NOW AVAILABLE
ORIENTAL DISHES AND PIZZA
DO YOUR LAUNDRY,
AND PLAY
FREE POOL

Limited to one game per visit WITH WASH.
Valid only with coupon, 5pm to 8pm daily.
Wednesday excluded

Scrubbies At the Bistro
Licensed Under the L.L.B.O.
Laudromat, Billiards, Arcade and Bar
IF YOU'RE NOT SCRUBBIN' IT
YOU'RE NOT CLEANIN' IT

Last Load: 12 midnight Expires Feb. 28/94
471 Princess Street (at University) 548-4916

NOTICE:
The Scrubbies coupon distributed in the 1993-94 Who's Where is no longer valid.

FOR YOUR SWEETHEART
AT VALENTINE'S

Send Great Cookies in a Flower Box

18 Gourmet Cookies ONLY $18.00
BECAUSE YOU CAN'T EAT FLOWERS™

Give 6 Gourmet Cookies and a Soft & Cuddly Pet

ONLY $10.95

WE DELIVER DOWNTOWN KINGSTON (613)542-0050

A world turned inside out

WORKS OUT OF ORDER
THE AGNES ETHERINGTON
ART CENTRE
BY MICHAEL MOSS

Works Out of Order is a series of six multi-media works by Kingston artist Deborah Washington which, due to its proximity to the reception area in the Agnes' Focus Gallery must, I'm certain, be distorting the receptionist's brain. Perhaps that's not so bad when one thinks about Washington's attraction to chaos theory and the fact that the brain is the organ that represents order. However, before looking at these pictures, turn off the switch inside of you that tries to make sense out of everything you see. What I mean is that one misses the point by employing cognition as a tool for comprehending the nature of her work.

Washington's paintings are a Big Bang of crazy colours, weird photographic images, and fractal graphics exploding out of her canvases like a giant hemorrhage. If anything, they contain a powerful sense of action, of eternal movement. As for chaos theory, my knowledge of the subject stretches about as far as Jurassic Park. So perhaps my appreciation of her achievement is impaired by ignorance, but nonetheless, her paintings are so visually engaging that theory, for all I care, can take a back seat. And yet when thinking about the nature of art, the concept of order so hateful to the Post-Modern mind seems inherently linked to any type of artistic expression. After all, art is an ordering of selective images no matter how abstract or unpremeditated they may be.

In any case, Washington chops up whatever umbilical cord may have joined her chaotic paintings with ordinary perception. In Fluke in the System, the fifth painting and climax of the series, Washington confronts her personal spectre of death. Of this painting, she said, "things almost come to a standstill." The end result is as if she sliced open a human body and let everything drip out onto the canvas.

The bloody reds and dark bile colours make a suitable colour environment for the images of brains, arms, teeth, veins and other assortments of organs which appear sporadically throughout the picture. Her fascination with the human body stems from its irregularity: "The beat of the heart is irregular, if it were regular then we would die. There is chaos within our bodies."

With less intensity and greater sublimity, Washington's second painting, Tsunami, explores the deep blue of the sea. Along with the overwhelming sea-green and wavy blue crests of colour some adventurous yellow was cleverly added to enhance the energy of the picture. In a giant wave (a reproduction from the Japanese master, Hokusai) fertility symbols are tossed about like a violent birth of Venus. A fossilized bird floats along with some heavy stones and some bright coral, while a spiral fractal makes a sucking whirlpool.

Tsunami, or seismic wave (translated from the Japanese), jars the senses, triggers impressions, showing us a world of unpredictability and, above all, naturalness. There is nothing smooth or refined in Washington's series. Everything turns in on itself. It is the world inside out.

These guys are phat

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

musicians who still hadn't lost their raw garage band appeal. In particular, Dan Curtis, who has been playing in a number of relatively successful local cover and original bands, displayed remarkable grace and energy with both his guitar and vocal chords.

However, the rest of the band, although very tight on the whole, are still in need a little more refinement. As well, despite the bassist's wild playing style (broken strings and all) and obvious proficiency on the fretless bass, all was for naught as his axe was, owing to poor mixing, drowned out by the other musicians.

The vocal responsibilities were shared among three members of Fat Spider most likely in an attempt to rest the lead singer's throat which must have been raw from not only belting out notes outside of his range, but from the copious amounts of cigarette smoke he inhaled during the performance.

Overall, Fat Spider may not exactly be everyone's cup of herbal tea. It seems as though the band attracts a specific type of listener who still considers Jerry Garcia's collective works as progressive. In fact, due to remarkable similarities in both dress and dance moves, it was hard at times to distinguish the band from the audience. As well, I swear I could smell incense burning during the performance although I could not readily detect which direction it was coming from—the audience or the band members themselves.

Full marks, however, go to the band for their execution of an arguably formerly en vogue style of music; they are very good at what they do. But does it really matter that an increasingly large number of people don't particularly care for it any more? You be the judge.

Free Coupon digital playground Free Coupon

10% OFF Displaymaker poster prints not valid in combination with other coupons or discounts

Limit 1 per customer Offer expires Feb 28/94 Limit 1 coupon per invoice

3 feet wide...any length! poster printer plotter 300 dpi 16.4 million colours all file formats backlit film glossy paper IBM or MAC files all desktop publishing programs

computer technology you can use
209 Wellington Street, Kingston, ON, K7K 2Y6 (613) 547-5700

Got the cash? Buy the culture!

BY ROB FURSE

As a lover of fine film you've come to appreciate the cinematic offerings of the Princess Court Cinema, but times are tough all over, and the Court has felt the fiscal squeeze as much as anyone. Feeling sympathy for their plight, Boag, of Boag and the Braveyard Whips has arranged a band benefit at A.J.'s Hangar next Tuesday February 15th. Also included on the bill are local Kingston bands the Mahones and the Mugworts. (Tickets can be purchased now at A.J.'s and the Princess Court box office.)

Martha Rudden of Princess Court, says revenue has been declining for three straight years, and this fall, which is traditionally a prosperous time for the Cinema, saw revenue and attendance "down substantially." This despite a rise in overall cinema memberships from 1500 to 1800 subscribers. The $16 dollar memberships ($10 for students) entitles subscribers to a $2.25 discount on movie admission, monthly programs guides and eligibility to run for the Princess Court Board of Directors.

Rudden says Princess Court's situation is common of repertory theatres across Canada: "the recession has bit into everyone's pockets."

Rumours of Princess Court's imminent demise have abounded since the Whig Standard printed an article implying the theatre would be closing in April. Rudden maintains this was the result of a misunderstanding and is untrue. She stresses that the Court, which was formed in 1977 by Queen's professors, and moved to its present downtown location in 1988, is not yet in debt. The board just "wants to let people know what's happening now, before the situation gets drastic."

Complementing their fundraising efforts is a new "community representative" program which allows people within the Kingston community to promote Princess Court films, with posters and programs in exchange for free passes.

Princess Court which became a registered charity in 1980, receives only 5% of its $350,000 budget from grants. So if you can't make it out to A.J.'s next Tues the 15th, do yourself and the Court a favour and go see some of the best cultural offerings in Kingston.

A not so rosy statement

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19

leads her to violence in a truly disturbing monologue delivered with stunning rage by Lara Koresky. The narrative is punctuated with such monologues throughout the piece, describing the human toll war takes when people are "ready, willing, and more than able to kill in the hopes that we are all different." Most memorable was Lisa Foran, who as Stefan's mother, tells the story of a young soldier taken prisoner by her village during World War Two—easily the most moving performance seen in Studio 102 in a long time.

Find out what she's pondering...go see Studio 102 tonight! DAVE KEMP

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS
An Clachan Apartment Complex
(near West Campus)

- ◆ Rent $602 per month
- ◆ September leases
- ◆ Utilities included
- ◆ Stove and fridge provided
- ◆ FREE PARKING available
- ◆ NO RENT INCREASE in September '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

ASUS JACKETS

Do you want to Buy Sell Trade a used ASUS Jacket?

Come to the special 'Odds and Ends' Sale
Tuesday Feb. 15
6-9 pm.

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entrée and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

We have everything for your Formal
A World of Formalwear Awaits You

CAREER GIRL
SPECIAL OCCASIONS & TUXEDO TOWN
ONE BLOCK UP FROM CAPITAL THEATRES

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
253 PRINCESS ST.
542-2026

HOURS
MON-FRI 10:00-7:00
WED-FRI 10:00-7:00
SAT 10:00-7:00
SUN 10:00-7:00

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists

Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call
542-5595

SOAPBERRY SHOP

Massage the one you love this Valentine's!

SoapBerry Shop Aromatherapy Massage Oils and Lotions are just what your loved one needs to relax and enjoy Valentine's.

New Location
255A PRINCESS STREET. 545-1028

Michener Visitorship Committee presents
Senator Solange Chaput-Rolland

Fortitude or Solitude

Tuesday, February 15th 1994 at 4:00 p.m.

Walter Light Hall, Room 205
Union Street (near Barrie)

Queen's University at Kingston

Admission is free and everyone is welcome

Street Life

These listings were carried as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
ODEON THEATRE
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Blink 7:20 9:35
Philadelphia 7:05 9:50
Shadowlands 6:45 9:30
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:45
Schindler's List 8:30
I'll Do Anything 7:10 9:40

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Grumpy Old Men 7:05 9:25
Tombstone 6:45 9:30
Intersection 6:55 9:35
Pelican Brief 6:45 9:25
The Piano 6:50 9:20
Iron Will 7:10 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Friday
Konehsotke 7:00
Bad Behaviour 9:40
Saturday
Konehsotke 7:00
Bad Behaviour 9:20
Sunday & Monday
Bad Behaviour 6:00
Konehsotke 9:30

CLUBS

FRIDAY
Quiet Pub at 4 pm.: Chris Borth & Kristen Pickersgill
Toucon: Sausage
Duke's: Boro Losken Experience
AJ's Hangar: Hopping Penguins

SATURDAY
Clark Hall: bitter singles smoker
Toucon: roll i.e.c.
Duke's: Goudibirds
AJ's Hangar: Leslie Spil Tree-O

SUNDAY
AJ's Hangar: Wild Blues Yonder
The Wellington: afternoon jazz evening Kingston Folk Club

MONDAY
Slopes: Art 1994 Valentine's Day Rave
Thw Wellington: Blue Mondays

PERFORMANCES

GRANT HALL
Queen's Performing Arts presents the Colorado String Quartet
February 12 at 8 pm.
Tickets available at the Performing Arts Office for $21.40 (adult), $8.58 (children) and $7.49 (Queen's students). All prices include GST.

KINGSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
130 Johnson (549-8888)
Kingston Opera Guild presents Canadian tenor Benoit Boutet with Margaret McLellan.
February 13 at 7:30 pm in the Wilson Room.
Tickets are $8.00.

ALFIE'S
Queen's Jazz Ensemble in concert.
February 14 at 9:00 pm
Tickets are $2.00 at the door.

THEATRE

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess Street (530-2050)
Threshold Theatre presents Direct From Kingston Festival 94
This year's performances are:
Snow - Feb. 12 at 3:30 pm, and Feb. 13 at 9 pm.
Refugees - Feb. 13 at 7 pm.
Army of Lovers - Feb. 12 at 7:30 pm, and Feb. 13 at 4 pm.
The Quinon Skin - Feb. 11 at 10 pm, Feb. 12 at 9 pm, and Feb. 13 at 2 pm.
Boxed - Feb. 11 at 7:30 pm.

Aula Do Fe/This Property is Condemned - Feb. 11 at 8:30 pm, and Feb. 12 at 10:30 pm.
Seroli - Feb. 12 at 2 pm.

Tickets $6 (for one show), $10 (for two shows). Weekend matinees pay-whol-you-con.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

The Changing Art Gallery: A free public lecture with visiting scholar/critic Coral Padedworny, independent curator/writer and specialist in contemporary First Nations art. February 13 at 3-4 pm

OPENING EXHIBITION...

February 13
To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinowitch until April 24

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through March 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Lang Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The forming rays of John Howard
EDWARD DAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)

through Mar. 5
Russian artist, Mikhail Kozlovskoy. Recent paintings on paper and canvas.

KINGSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
130 Johnson (549-8888)
through Mar. 3
Exhibition: The work of Queen's 8FA student, Lynn Hunt, is now on display in The Wilson Room.

RADIO DAZE
CFRC 101.9.1 90.9 CABLE IS YOUR CAMPUS-COMMUNITY ALTERNATIVE IN KINGSTON!

*PICK UP A FREE PROGRAM GUIDE FOR THE WINTER/SPRING 1994 SCHEDULE AT THE INFOBANK.

CHARTS

*Special events this week include:
Heated Edge Supershow today at 3pm featuring:
exclusive interviews with The Others and Bad Fun, live in studio:
Volume and The Morganiels prize pack giveaway (autographed CD + T-Shirt)
Saturday Radio album giveaway on North of Niagara, tomorrow at 8AM
The 2nd Annual Anti-Valentines Day Special on Coolidge, Sunday at 12 Midnight (e-mail requests @3ajd2)
Caribbean Calypso Carnival Cook-up on LIMIN', Monday at 3pm
Live from Alfie's Pub, the Queen's Jazz Ensemble, Monday at 11pm
CFRC Call-in 545-2121: Call us and have your say! Mon-Wed 10pm
Mon: Valentine's Day Hotrot Stories
Tue: How to make your home more energy efficient

Top 5

TC	LC	Artist	Record	Label
1	2	The Inbreds	Hilario	PF
2	32	Blind Mr. Jones	Stereo Musicals	Bizarre
3	8	Shonen Knife	Brown Mushrooms	Virgin
4	-	Tori Amos	Under the Pink	Atlantic
5	4	Cowboy Junkies	Pale Sun Crescent Moon	Atlantic

Top 5 Worldbeat

TC	LC	Artist	Record	Label
1	2	Third World	Ragga Ambassadors	Mercury
2	3	Obo + Jorge	Tarantula	Blue Orchid
3	1	Dub Syndicate	Echomania	On U
4	-	La Musgrana	Lubican	Green Linnet
5	9	Gipsy Kings	Love & Liberté	Elektra

Top 5 Dance/Soul/Ambient

TC	LC	Artist	Record	Label
1	14	Various	Mondo Techno I.O	Cont.
2	1	Analogue Reprise	i	Indopen
3	-	Various	Trance Europe	Volume
4	5	Various	Techno Mancer III	Anter.
5	-	Autechre	Incurabula	TVT

Top 5 Loud Rock

TC	LC	Artist	Record	Label
1	1	Psycho Circus	Scarred	Anthem
2	3	King's X	Dogman	Atlantic
3	-	Scorpions	Face the Heat	Mercury
4	9	Dio	Evilution	Reprise
5	2	Varga	Prototype	BMG

It says here ...

Hey, all you rich kids! If you can make it to T.O. and have discriminating tastes in music, you may be interested in the following shows:
Bootsauce - February 16 at The World Nightclub
Redd Kross - February 19 at The Palladium
The Wonderstuff - February 20 at R.P.M. (tell the 'Stuffies to get stuffed for their Alfie's show two years ago!)
Buffalo Tom - March 4 at The Opera House
De La Soul - March 5 at The Palladium
Cocoteau Twins - March 6 at Massey Hall

Legends of the Fall - an epic spanning the lives of a simple Northwestern family. The cast includes Btadd Pitt, Anthony Hopkins, Aidan Quinn, Julia Ormond, and Henry (where have I been since E.T. and Cloak and Dagger?) Thomas. Out in the Fall.

Mary Shelley's Frankenstein - At last, an adaptation which debunks Hollywood's brutal misinterpretation. Produced by Francis Coppola and directed by Kenneth Branagh, look for Robert De Niro, Helena Bonham Carter, Aidan Quinn, and John Clesse in leading roles. What, where's Emma, Ken? Slated for Fall.

The Flintstones - Yabba-dabba-doo! John Goodman stars as our loveable Stone Age hero, Rick and Robert Davi. Look for it in the Spring.

Cop Tips Waitress $2M - a romantic comedy featuring Nicolas Cage, Bridget Fonda and Rosie Perez. Opening in the Spring.
The Little Rascals - Okay, we don't have too much info on this one, but this nostalgic-TV-show-turned-movie is directed by Penelope Spheeris and produced by Steven Spielberg. For release in August.

Fond of self-flagellation?
Come write for Entertainment (Repository for abuse and home of the mal-adjusted.)

THE WAC
OUTFITTING COMPANY
MADE IN CANADA SINCE 1968
ORIGINAL BRAND

Grad Hats IDUC Book MERCHANT
BookSTORE

FEBRUARY SALE

CUSTOM COTTON CAPS $6.95
CUSTOM POLAR FLEECE VESTS $39.50
GARMENT DYED SWEATS $29.95

Tel: 547-0864

Only at JJ's

Catch the Leafs at JJ's

The "Philly Melt"
Served with a Mountain of fries!

Only $4.95

OPEN Mon - Fri : 11 am - 12 am
Sat : 12 pm - 12 am
Sun : 4:30 pm - 11 pm
409 Johnson Street at University Tel: # 547-3771

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

Remember the "BRAT PACK"?
Well, they're back at...

Vids in the Hall!!

This Saturday & Sunday, get 50 cents off any movie starring early 80's favorites like Molly Ringwald, Andrew McCarthy, Anthony Michael Hall, Judd Nelson & Many More!

Check the store for details.

Vids in the Hall!!

We're open 3-11 every day in the JDUC.

Quality-Comfort-Care
EYEWEAR

Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE

& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS
Fri, Feb 11
Sausage with The Caspers

Sat, Feb 12
Uncommon Society

Thurs, Feb 17
Zen Bungalo

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan
76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) Tel: 544-1966

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUE ROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

UNDERSTAND YOUR LEASE BEFORE YOU SIGN IT! Appliances included? Lawnmowing fees extra? Parking no charge? Get help getting answers - call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

ROSES ARE RED Violets are blue Send me a Balloon-o-gram 'Cause I'd do it for you!! Send your love a gift they'll always remember... Call the Core at 545-6278.

LESBIAN & GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2960 - staffed Monday-Friday 7-9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

HIDDEN COSTS CAN BE EXPENSIVE. Know the questions to ask before you sign the lease. Get help getting answers - call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

FRESH BREWED coffee at the Core... 25 cents a cup! The best price on campus - Enjoy a cup while ordering a Balloon-o-gram for your Valentine!

WORLDWIDE ADVENTURES! February 15th Odyssey Travel information night, 7-9 p.m. at The Shot, 8 Garrett St. Great door prizes. Be there.

GAY IS GREAT! Lesbian is lovely! Bisexual is brilliant! Action is life! We are family! We are everywhere! Queer and proud! Be out! Be strong! February 14th, pink triangle day. Call 545-2960.

WOMEN IN SAME SEX RELATIONSHIPS were deemed "Asocial" in Nazi Germany and were required to wear black triangles. They as gay men, were some of the millions of victims of Hitler's Holocaust.

PINK TRIANGLE DAY is on Valentine's Day! Show your support for lesbians, gays and bisexuals by wearing a pink triangle and by thinking twice about showing public affection with your opposite sex partner.

PINK TRIANGLE DAY- February 14th gay men were required by Nazis to wear the pink triangle during the Holocaust. Today, it is a symbol of pride and strength for queers everywhere.

TEACH CONVERSATIONAL ENGLISH IN JAPAN Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore - Full time, temporary or for the summer. Up to $4500.00 per month. No experience, no qualifications necessary. For info pick up free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or write to Asia Facts (OJ) P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

PARENTS! Problems studying when your children are around? Come out to the Parent Resource Centre in the JDUC. Bring your children. Our volunteers will occupy your children while you study. Watch for upcoming events for children. Our new hours beginning January 24th are Monday to Thursday 5:30-9:30 p.m.

95'S... Got a jacket from your first year? Pretty gross, eh? Come to the odds and ends ASUS jacket sale. Sell or trade for a spiffy new jacket! Call 545-6278 for info.

SEXUAL HEALTH QUESTIONS? Call the Confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Monday - Thursday 6-9 p.m. 545-6000 ext.4444. Leave a message anytime.

THE SOAPBERRY SHOP has 98% pure Aloe Vera gel. Provides quick relief for burns, insect bites, chapped skin and shaving irritations. Promotes healing and moisturizes. 225 Princess Street, 545-1028.

EURAIL PASSES. Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available. Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

HELP WANTED

BABYSITTER REQUIRED: 5678 Dance Studio is looking for babysitter on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. downtown location 259 Queen St., near Barrie. Info call 547-5678 ($6.00 plus per hour).

HELPERS NEEDED once a month to assist a non-profit organization. Contact Kingfest at 545-6497.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Friday, February 11th to: Gord McIlquham, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Maitland St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 2V3.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing in-ground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

BABYSITTER NEEDED Tuesdays and/or Thursdays 2:00-5:00, for a 5 month old baby. Experience/references preferred. Call 549-1219.

INTERESTED IN TRAVEL! Travel Cuts is looking for an enthusiastic student to work part time promoting unique student travel services to Queen's students. For more info call Ellen at

CLASSIFIEDS

1 800 798-CUTS.

WANTED

FULL-TIME FIRST YEAR WOMEN OF ALL FACULTIES: Needed for study on adjustment to Queen's. Sign-up in "Frosh" binder - main lobby of Humphrey Hall or phone 545-9853.

MALES 18 + YRS: needed to complete questionnaire on dating and sexual behaviour. Paid $6 for 30 minutes. Call 545-6552, leave first name and phone number for "Lori's story".

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

TIRED OF HOUSEHUNTING? Cozy house at Earl and Toronto needs two housemates to share with two others and a car. Available May 1st '94. $250 - reduced summer rent. Call Julie at 547-3105.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

MOVING SALE: Amp and speakers $300, TV and VCR $300, Panasonic printer $100, dresser and organizer $50, filing cabinet $30, answering machine $30. Call Marc at 542-9765.

ARTS/CJACKET FOR SALE - large, great condition, steel zipper, winter lining included. Please phone 549-5084. Price $175 negotiable.

FOR SALE: Two software packages - WordPerfect 5.1 for Windows and Lotus 1-2-3 Ver. 1.1 for Windows. $150.00 and $100.00 respectively or both for $225.00. All manuals included. Call 354-4681 evenings.

DISHWASHER FOR SALE. Hotpoint great condition, tap hook-up, mobile must ASAP. Please call 549-5084. Price $170.00 negotiable.

HEY JERKY, BE MY VALENTINE AND BUY ME SOME @#!# CLOTHES. Bamboo curtain, Fresia Jive, Souled Out, Raw Vibes, Brass recordings, all boarding vids (Dirty Dozen, Project 6...), Lids, Beans, T's, longseives, etc. Up to 40% off! "Don't make me come down there for you to, Tough Guy". PRODIGAL SON 177 Division St., 547-5800.

FOR SALE: Richey 18" mountain bike, Shimano XT drivetrain, syncros/bar, SPD pedals $650. 55 cm road racing bicycle frameset, with Stronglight headset and FX 5140. Profile Airstyle tri-bar $75. Phone Michael at 547-4183.

FREE TO GOOD HOME One "Green Monster" hide a bed couch, twin-not a Ghetto couch. Call 546-2942.

TUXEDO SALES-RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS. Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Prince and Queen) 547-2347.

SPRING BREAK '94! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $59 - Ocean front mo-

tell Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ont reg #2422707.

Badminton racket for sale-brand new YONEX racket-most self-cheap price. Andrew 547-0102

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Christine at 544-4306.

4 BEDROOM, Princess at University, balcony, appliances, laundromat, photocopier, spacious rooms, close to campus, A&P, beer store and nightlife. Quiet building. Very low utilities. $1150 per month. Call 549-3069.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chandana at 544-1649.

LOST: Blue Phe '94 leather jacket. January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Man's Seiko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orville at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Reward sentimental value. Extreme. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold 1/2 bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Bar North, Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

PERSONALS

HI, MY NAME IS MARK, I am a quiet, clean and very good looking journalism student at Concordia. I would like to sublet a room February 14th to March 4th, while I am on exchange at the Whig. Phone 514 849-4355.

MY IMZADI! I love you more than any language can describe I desire your quirky habits (within reason!!) and love your womanly dexterity! Many kisses, cuddles and nickels, Steponya

PARKER: You have an "Extra - Large" physical presence on campus. I won fair and square. You owe me! S.S. Headache

ARTSCI '96 EXEC - Thank you Thank you to all of ya who worked so hard to make last week's Semi-Formal a success. You are awesome! Lisa

FROM ALBERTA: Meghan Lewis be mine - Dear TO MY DEAR SMOOTHIEBEAR: You will never be let go on! Thanks for being my only sunshine and the light in my life. Happy Valentine's Day! I'll always love you. Cakes

CF, I like to keep my promises. Please be my Valentine. Love, DD

393: 2 more weeks and I reclaim a life. Florida will be awesome, I'll miss you! Happy Valentine's Day to the best housemates around. Love, Kairy.

Hey Christine...maybe next time I'll even make it all the way to Hull. Eddie's a freak. Happy Valentine's Day to the Prince of Darkness. Amanda ALISON: Don't smile - my heart stops. J.G. TOMMY Valentine's Day #3 is just around the corner. Let's celebrate and de-stress by eating every appetizer on the menu, renting an obscure intellectual movie and...um...talking about tactical manoeuvres. Loaf, Adrienne.

Eilonoy of the auburn hair, thank you for your elegant saving of my hide in King Smo's castle using Gwystyl's special mushrooms and eggs. Maybe I can do the same for you later. Love, Taran OAS delegates, keep the Congo line alive and keep harassing Roger!!! Best wishes from the U.S. delegation. P.S. Chile's birthday is soon, so stay tuned.

TO THE MONKEY HOUSE: Happy Valentine's Day from the housemate you never see. Have a great weekend, and keep an eye on my bed Lorraine! Sarah.

THE EARL STREET BOYS: Love ya, Love ya, Love ya!!! Happy Valentine's Day you bunch of pathetic, sex-starved, love-hungry hounds!

TO ALL THE BOYS ON CAMPUS WHO HAVEN'T NOTICED ME: I'm here!! I'm over here!! Come find me!!!! I'm waiting for you to discover me!!! Love your secret admirer,

TO CASEY: Our second Valentine's is in as many years, and of many to come. Rendezvous - Monday night, my place - and we'll slurp on TBOH'Daz and talk dirty! Goin' to miss ya this weekend, so come back quick. LUFFE, Mish.

Earlier in the year, MISC featured a shag tape contest, but what if you don't have any one to shag with? What are you supposed to do on Valentine's Day if you're a bitter single? Well, we at MISC strongly believe in the cathartic powers of music, so for the benefit of the amorously-challenged, we have compiled a suggested list of songs to soothe your lovelorn soul on this lonely, nauseating, Valentine's Day.

The Wedding Present specialize in angst-y, brutally honest bitter lyrics. "Brassneck" is particularly great for exorcising those bitter, angry emotions still floating around from that last breakup... do you remember saying that you'd stay for good? No, I didn't think you would. And we couldn't have been closer, but it was different then, that's all in the past - there I said it now at last... I kept so many old things, I never quite stopped hoping. I think I know what it means - it means I've got to grow up, it means you want to throw up!

One trick you gotta try for the benefit of all those puking kissy-facey clods around you: play Public Image Limited's (aka P.I.L.) "This Is Not A Love Song" as loud as you can, as many times as possible - that will drive those loving couples outta your way in a jiffy! Johnny Lydon is blessed with one of the most annoying, grating voices ever known to humankind, and this song is simply four minutes of him whining over and over. "THIS IS NOT A LOVE SONGING" against a repetitive thumping dance beat. Pure brilliance.

Robert Smith and company are leading troubadours of the modern love ethic. While The Cure has written love songs about successful relationships (eg. "Love Song"), the disastrous consequences of pursuing love is a common motif in their repertoire. Notable dirges include "Boy's Don't Cry" (in Between Days), "All I Want" and "Pictures Of You." If you don't really care to indulge in nihilism and only want to be happy (albeit temporarily), then try spinning "Friday I'm In Love" a few times (its so cheerful it's annoying).

Any band that is able to make self-litigious fashionable must be brilliant. With Johnny Marr at the controls and Morrissey at the mic, The Smiths have probably recorded every conceivable mood swing. As expected, love figures as the primary culprit for all those fits of depression. Easy-to-relate-to-lyrics include: "I wear Black on the outside / Because Black is how I feel on the inside" ("Unloveable"), "I know it's over / But it never really began / And in my heart it was so real... On mother I can feel soil fall over my head / I know it's over / I am human and I need to be loved / Just like everybody else does" ("How Soon Is Now?").

Other melancholic classics include, in no particular order of preference:

- "Valentine's Day Is Over" - Billy Bragg
- "I've Been Waiting" - Matthew Sweet
- "My Love Life" - Morrissey
- "This Is How It Feels" - The Inspiral Carpets
- "Always On My Mind" - Elvis/Willie Nelson/ The Peet Shop Boys (oh what a menage a trois!)
- "Ain't No Cure For Love" - Leonard Cohen
- "The Last Day of Our Acquaintance" - Sinead O'Connor
- "Love Will Tear Us Apart" - Joy Division
- "I'll Can't Change Your Mind" - Sugar
- "I'll Sail This Ship Alone" - The Beautiful South
- "Ever Fallen In Love?" - The Buzzcocks
- "We Will Not Be Lovers" - The Waterboys
- "Birds" - Neil Young
- "Hello Goodbye" - The Beatles
- "Love Reign O'er Me" - The Who
- "Never Never" - The Assembly
- "I Can't Make You Love Me" - Bonnie Raitt
- "Achy Breaky Heart" - Billy Ray Cyrus
- "So Sad About Us" - The Breeders
- "Out of Your Life" - Bob Mould
- "Add It Up" - The Violent Femmes
- "Slow Train to Dawn" - The
- "Anything by My Bloody Valentine (even though you can't understand their lyrics)

Slan Beddoe-Stephens believes that we should make war, not love. Ryan P. Chen has an imaginary girlfriend who shall remain anonymous. Both wear lots of black and write self-indulgent, totally biased and boring music reviews for entertainment.

Take yer tongue outta my mouth, I'm kissin' you goodbye!

Hey, kids, welcome to MISC number sixteen! We know we promised a two-page Valentine's day bitter-rama, but space considerations have forced us to go with our standard single page format. Fitting, eh? MISC was supposed to be a twosome and got really alone, like a wolf howling for its pack under the icy sliver of a crescent moon.

Whoa. Let's take a little breather before moving on, perhaps have a nice stiff slug of bourbon, or five... Welcome back. The next item falls in the "What Was I Thinking" category, where a certain rant critic somewhat less-than-fondly remembers a date:

When I was in second year, I was courted by one of those cool long-haired types. Our first date was proceeding in a most satisfactory way, until I gave him a good-natured poke in the stomach, which had the unfortunate result of causing him to...how shall I put it...break wind. I'd like to joke this was our last date, but I guess the joke was on me because I went out with him for two and a half years and let's just say that our first date set a rather unpleasant precedent for the rest of the relationship!

Our next entry is from C.R., who enclosed this letter with the following written on the outside:

Life is Hell when you phone a girl you're interested in knowing and she talks about the guy she's fallen head over heels for, for a half-hour and you never do get the answer to the Chem assignment you were using as an excuse for the phone call.

And now, the letter...

Dear Joey and Derek: This is true, completely true; the depths to which people that were once in Love [that's his capitalization, kids, not ours...ed.] could sink to. Ask yourselves, what could possibly be the most impersonal method of ending a relationship? Breakup. To this stupefying dejection, this fossilizing, freezing solitude, even heartbreak is preferable for some kind of tenuous connection to another, whether fleeced with love or steeped in hurt, at least lends the assurance that such a connection is possible, that a motive indeed exists for another to look inside. That is the fundamental doubt which Valentine's day uncovers, the gnawing dark that self-flattering deceptions can only barely keep at bay: are we worth someone else's attention? Are there reasons for them to care about us? Twenty-four hours spent alone on Valentine's Day is too close to answering "no" to these questions.

So, all you lovers - you ideal, tender, happy lovers - remember to give a thought to the lonely people on Valentine's day, even in the midst of your dreamy-eyed pleasure. Give a thought to the icicles in their hearts and the extinguished light of their eyes. And, for their benefit, though they will never know, and you will cer-

ing up via a "dear John" letter? Axing it with e-mail? Just heading out for a newspaper, never to return? Try this one out, and froshies: listen up! We were late-blooming high school sweethearts, meeting by chance before Christmas in Grade 13, falling hard in the best small-town fashion possible. We survived going to different schools, and spent a wonderful summer together. We vowed we could survive first year long-distance. Bell Canada loved us. But as April came and exams hit, marks became paramount. She began to drift, despite the knowledge of our imminent summer reunion. Her mother had gotten us both a job working night shift in the local factory.

We got back, got together, and April was the furthest thing from our minds...or so I thought... A couple of weeks after starting, she dropped the bomb. Near quitting time one night as I was working on the sub-assembly line on a solo riveter, happily riveting and singing to myself (The Phantom of the Opera, I think) she walked with a bin in her hand to collect parts for her line. I took out my earplugs and smiled. She looked at me through her safety glasses and then yelled "I've been thinking, we should just be friends from now on."

"You want to break up?" "I think I would be happier if I had time to sort things out for myself." She went and got her parts, and I had to return to my riveting. When the final buzzer went, she punched out before me so all I got was a goodbye as I stood farther back in line. Phoning her the next day confirmed everything. There was no hope. I'd been dumped on the assembly line. Just before our year and a half anniversary too. She quit the factory a short time after, and went to work during the day shift at another one in the next town over. "Higher pay," she said when she did talk to me, but the extra quarter an hour wouldn't have even covered her gas money. I stuck it out at the factory, talking to her mother who worked the day shift on occasion as I came and she left. We still talk, albeit rarely, but I've moved on. This letter is my catharsis. Bitter, me? Just be warned, froshies. P.S.: Please print this so I can send it to her. Bwab ha, ha, ha, ha, ha!

Chilly postscript, eh? While we're on the topic of revenge, I'd like to remind anyone scorned out there that there is the old Klingon saying: Revenge is a dish best served cold (in the Philippines, there is a similar saying, except we substitute fresh mangoes for revenge. This is a subtle ploy to go see the ASEAN display on right now in JDUC.) For those of you who seek retribution, keep in mind that karma will often do the dirty work for you. To coin a phrase: time wounds all heels. Frankly, we're amazed that C.R. could safely operate heavy machinery with a broken heart. It is typical MISC fashion to end an article with some witty little "sound bite" that irreverently but completely sums up the topic. We'd like to, but one of us is late for his weekly Sex Without Partners support group meeting. To the unattached: see y'all there. To any couples reading: Happy fucking V-D, you hateful little spooge-dogs.

Joey has a gaping lime-soaked pit where his heart once was. Derek is far too sappy for his own good.

BURGER KING logo and promotional text for Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price. Includes coupon code and expiration date.

BURGER KING logo and promotional text for Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price. Includes coupon code and expiration date.

S H O T A R T

Cue'pid

Growth of Diners 547-Pool

Odyssey Travel Fair
Eurail Pass Giveaway
Tonight!

Haskell
at
The Cleavers
Alsol

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1994 • ISSUE 32 • VOLUME 121

Tues. 15 MAHONES
Wed. 16 Smartest Monkey
The Freeway Band
Thurs. 17 Dipsomaniac
Fri. 18 Sideman
Soul Cages
Sat. 19 Streetnoise
The Change
Sun. 20 Wild Blues Yonder

Kung Hei Fat Choy! Queen's sub-frosh celebrate the Chinese New Year. The Year of the Rooster has been replaced by the Year of the Dog, and Queen's hosted a celebration for students on Saturday. Story on page 4.

TV stations refuse gay rights ads

BY DAVE COLEMAN

Have you ever wondered how some ads make it on TV? The Coalition of Lesbian and Gay Rights in Ontario (CLGRO) is wondering the opposite—why the public service announcements it produced have not been aired.

The CLGRO produced three 30-second public service announcements (PSAs) to raise awareness about the realities of same-sex couples in Ontario.

Chris Veldhoven, a CLGRO member and part-time employee at the Queen's Human Rights Office, said the ads were designed to "address the commonalities" shared by same-sex couples and heterosexual couples.

But according to Veldhoven, none of the ads have been aired since they were released Nov. 30.

John Tucker, station manager at local TV station CKWS, said the announcements were rejected "due to content."

Tucker said, "it can't be described in words" why the spots were rejected, but emphasized that, "to my recollection [the PSAs] were not appropriate for our audience," which includes young children and retired people.

CJOH-TV spokesperson Ray Sapiano said, "it's an important but sensitive issue. As long as the viewers are the ones who butter our bread, we don't want to piss anyone off."

Veldhoven alleged that "station managers are homophobic themselves or are scared of the public backlash... it's part of systemic homophobia."

ADS CONTINUED ON PAGE 5

inside

The Journal

AMS SERVICES REVIEW

Student-operated video outlet Vids in the Hall may be on the chopping block, as Board of Director's Chair Grant Hughes has come out in favour of cutting the service, which had announced it had a debt problem to the tune of around $50,000. But the Quiet Pub and The Kitchen Sink, in spite of also being cash losers, are going to remain.

—See story page 3.

CALL HIM LENNIE NOW

Canadian poet Leonard Cohen has released a new anthology called Stranger Music. At 59, Cohen still trucks on, attracting a younger generation of fans with his music, while his poetry seems to take a backseat to his recording career.

—For review, see page 12.

MEN'S V-BALL NAILBITER

The Men's Volleyball Gaels scraped by the University of Toronto Varsity Blues in a nailbiting semi-final contest this weekend.

—For story, see page 15.

BACK PAGE

This edition of the Back Page features a first-hand account of the horrifying experience of being held hostage in the Eaton Centre Birk's jewelry store heist earlier this year.

—See page 27.

"Everyone knows gays kiss like straight people, but if the gay rights group wants shock value, they're not going to use my TV station to achieve it."

—Douglas Bassett, president and CEO of Baton Broadcasting, which owns CJOH-TV, speaking about his company's refusal to air a gay rights public service announcement.

Heritage Front poster legal: administration

BY AFFAN QADIR

Queen's University administration has found its hands tied with respect to a Heritage Front poster found on campus on February 3.

According to Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams, the poster did not break any laws.

"The one poster that did appear had nothing in it that was illegal according to our lawyers," Williams said.

But Williams said he finds the subtle message of the posters "repugnant," and suggested that one step university administration can take in the future is acting on campus rules of property denigration.

"Posters that are not authorized will be taken down," Williams explained.

In a meeting with Alma Mater Society Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson and the Education and Communications commissioners, Williams listened to the concerns of the student government regarding the Heritage Front poster incident.

The meeting focused on security issues which may increase the responsiveness of Queen's Security and Parking Services to future incidents.

Minerson said, "the primary concern of Queen's administration is that of security on campus," adding that he shares similar views. He said administration has plans to speak to Campus Security and brief them on the workings of the Heritage Front.

According to Minerson, the AMS will be educating staff as well as the student body in the near future concerning the activities of the Heritage Front.

"We've shared our experience with other universities in the province, and have also notified AMS services such as the Walkhome staff as well as the pub staffs. We're also looking to invite speakers to educate students on this issue," Minerson explained.

Surface Editor Junipero Lagtapon acknowledged the limitations the university administration may experience in dealing with the incident, but insisted that their response ought to be immediate.

"They can't respond too much because the Heritage Front is not saying anything blatantly racist. But if you knew anything about the Heritage Front, their racism and their support of white supremacist groups, then it is clear that they are trying to recruit students to their cause," he said.

When asked about the response of students on campus to the incident, Lagtapon explained that it has been mixed. "From the people I've talked to, they're horrified that the Heritage Front is coming. What they're going to do about it I don't know."

"[Students] are too comfortable with their position and privileges. This is a race issue that only pertains to a small portion of the population, while the rest have little motivation to act," he said.

A spokesperson for the AMS Committee on Race and Ethnic Discrimination, who asked not to be identified, said the Heritage Front is using "craffy" methods to recruit students, and it is only through education that students can be warned.

"Once you reveal the true nature of the Heritage Front to students on campus, I do have faith that they'll reject it. The Heritage Front are very crafty using 'awareness' and 'pride' as guises of their true agenda which is white supremacy," the representative explained. He added that the "administration has to come out and make a statement so that students know where the administration stands on the incident."

Zero-tolerance controversy skips Queen's campus

BY LORI THORLAKSON

As the March 1 deadline for compliance draws near, a government policy of zero-tolerance for sexual harassment and discrimination that has caused controversy at some Ontario campuses has raised little debate at Queen's.

In November 1993, the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training released a framework outlining a zero-tolerance policy for discrimination and harassment.

The guidelines are a set of minimum standards that Ontario post-secondary institutions are expected to meet in order to conform to the Ontario Human Rights Policy.

The framework is to be used by schools to "review and assess their existing policies and make any needed changes," the document states.

The framework calls for policy which can deal with situations such as a "negative learning environment," which the report defines as "conduct or comment that creates and maintains an offensive, hostile, or intimidating climate for study or work."

Although the zero-tolerance policy has gotten a chilly reception on some Ontario campuses, Queen's Human Rights Office Director Irene Bujara said the guidelines are not a significant departure from existing policy at Queen's.

Queen's already has a comprehensive anti-harassment and anti-discrimination framework, which meets or exceeds the standards set out in the government framework.

Zero tolerance is already inherent in Queen's policies, because every complaint that is brought to the Human Rights Office must be investigated, Bujara explained.

Queen's policy includes measures for handling complaints of a negative learning environment. "By and large, people don't bring on frivolous complaints," Bujara said.

However, the zero-tolerance guidelines have some people worried, seeing the framework as a possible vehicle for stifling academic freedom in the name of political correctness.

Carleton University President Robin Farquhar, has decided to ignore the March 1 deadline.

QUEEN'S CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

READING WEEK SCHEDULE GET YOUR TICKETS
BEFORE THEY'RE GONE!

DEPARTURES:	West Campus	Victoria Hall	JDUC	Price One-Way
Thursday, Feb. 17
TORONTO	5:35	5:45	5:55	$20
Friday, Feb. 18
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:15	$20
MONTREAL	2:50	3:00	3:10	$25
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	$16
RETURN: Sunday, Feb. 27
TORONTO	8:00	One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza
MONTREAL	5:45	Bus Terminal
OTTAWA	8:00	Bus Terminal

TICKETS ARE ON SALE AT THE BOX OFFICE
NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

M.A.D.

Music, Arts, and Drama
A series showcasing Queen's talent!

A Queen's Music Students' Jazz Combo

Wed, Feb 16, 12 noon
Lower Ceilidh

GREAT DEBATES

Debates on campus issues, organized in collaboration with the Queen's Debating Union.

This house believes that Surface should resurface.

Wed, Feb 16, 8:00pm
Wallace Hall

MBA Privatization

The Senate Budget Review Committee is currently reviewing the proposal for a privatized MBA program.

Any member of the Queen's community who wishes to make a submission on any aspect of the proposal is invited to do so.

Send written submissions to Resources Planning:

F-406 Mackintosh-Corry by February 28th, 1994.

NOMINATE!

YOUR PROF FOR THE HIGHEST HONOUR AWARDED BY STUDENTS TO PROFS AT QUEEN'S
Nominations are now being accepted for the

FRANK KNOX AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING

Pick up an information package at the AMS office,
ENGSOC, COMSOC, ASUS, GREY HOUSE, or SPECIAL NEEDS OFFICE
and nominate your prof today!
Inquiries? Please call Andrew Ferlejowski or Todd Minerson (545-2725)

Nominations are due February 18

Black History speaker discusses slavery

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

As part of Black History Month, the Queen's University Black History Collective, the Kingston Global Community Centre and the Ontario Anti-Racism Secretariat sponsored a two-day conference in Ellis Hall on Friday and Saturday.

The conference, "Turning on the Lights: Rethinking Our Legacies Toward Reshaping Our Destinies," featured a number of prominent speakers including a keynote address by Joy Croft-Leary.

Croft-Leary is an American consultant to private and public institutions, and an advocate for the understanding of Black culture and history. She is currently working on a doctorate in clinical psychology.

Croft-Leary remarked that since the majority of the world is a world of colour, "our future is in expanding our culture." She referred to this as the "ethical imperative of the world."

Croft-Leary said approximately nine to 26 million slaves died on the "trip" to North America. "It was the most degrading and horrible situation and yet, you don't know about it. You don't know about it because those people were not deemed important," she remarked.

She commented that although slaves suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder—a disorder from which Holocaust survivors, veterans and victims of rape have suffered according to psychology—slaves are not listed as having this disorder in psychology texts because "it might entertain the notion of guilt."

Moreover, Croft-Leary said

she believes that African-Americans now suffer from what she refers to as post-traumatic slave syndrome.

"It's far worse than post-traumatic stress disorder, because it's a syndrome which is perpetuated," she commented.

"Some say African-Americans don't suffer from depression.

"He was sixteen. That's invited suicide," Croft-Leary said. "These boys recognize that their manhood isn't there, that they can't live the American dream. Rather than face humiliation, they take themselves out."

She said the problem is that no one is writing about this syndrome. When she talks about post-traumatic slave syndrome to other clinicians, she remarked that they know it is true, "but to acknowledge it involves a lot of issues."

"The sin of slavery is a sin against the human spirit. It robs people of their dignity and worth. And there's no investment in acknowledging that," she remarked.

Croft-Leary said she believes that "African people are the unloved people of the world. I think largely we are suffering from broken hearts. No one ever apologized to what happened to African-Americans. That trauma endures and it is going to endure."

In order to deal with people of colour, she said people have to get up close and real. "You must always act to heal this trauma," she urged the audience.

Croft-Leary said the history of race has to be questioned because many terms referring to blacks suggest a lack of humanness.

She explained that when she looks at history, "history is often his story and therefore is not accurate. Things we learn are not always healthy."

Referring to such inaccurate history, she said, "when we buy the lie, it's traumatic. We have to uncover the lie so we can tell the truth. But until we tell the truth, we can never heal," she said.

Croft-Leary said that her motivation is healing "so I can look at myself with a level of dignity which is owed me."

Stephanie Simpson, coordinating chairperson of the Queen's University Black History Collective, said the conference is the first of its kind at Queen's.

"We need to address some of the more pertinent issues affecting people of colour in Canada," she said.

Simpson said she was pleased with the conference. "I thought that it went pretty well. We're planning on making this an annual event."

"The reason the QUBHC formed is to make people more aware of these issues," she commented, "and hopefully to get a recognition of the viability of Black Studies beyond Black History Month."

"Rethinking our legacies is something we all need to do during Black History Month. It isn't just a people's colour celebration. The point is for all of us to educate ourselves and become aware of histories that have been lost because of racism and oppression," Simpson said.

Caldwell Taylor and Afua Cooper

TRICIA BAUMAN

curate. Things we learn are not always healthy."

Referring to such inaccurate history, she said, "when we buy the lie, it's traumatic. We have to uncover the lie so we can tell the truth. But until we tell the truth, we can never heal," she said.

Croft-Leary said that her motivation is healing "so I can look at myself with a level of dignity which is owed me."

Stephanie Simpson, coordinating chairperson of the Queen's University Black History Collective, said the conference is the first of its kind at Queen's.

"We need to address some of the more pertinent issues affecting people of colour in Canada," she said.

Simpson said she was pleased with the conference. "I thought that it went pretty well. We're planning on making this an annual event."

"The reason the QUBHC formed is to make people more aware of these issues," she commented, "and hopefully to get a recognition of the viability of Black Studies beyond Black History Month."

"Rethinking our legacies is something we all need to do during Black History Month. It isn't just a people's colour celebration. The point is for all of us to educate ourselves and become aware of histories that have been lost because of racism and oppression," Simpson said.

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

CAMPUS FOOD WASTE

Concerned about the waste of food on Queen's campus? "Gut Feeling" will be holding a panel discussion on this issue, featuring Kerry Markwick from the Kingston Environmental Action Project, Janine Papadopoulos from the Kingston Are Recycling Corporation, Mirka Januszkiewicz (a City of Kingston Environmental Services Engineer), and a Queen's Waste Management spokesperson. The discussion will take place today in the John Orr Room of the John Deutsch University Centre, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

SENATOR TO VISIT

Senator Solange Chaput-Rolland will be speaking today at 4 p.m. in room 205 of Walter Light Hall, delivering the Michener lecture "Fortitude or Solitude."

PRINCIPAL AWARDED

Principal David Smith will receive the Order of Canada at a ceremony to be held tomorrow at 3:30 p.m. in Ottawa's Rideau Hall.

AMS Board to vote on Vids closure

BY GEOFF HAMILTON AND THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

Vids in the Hall appears to be on the AMS's cutting block.

On Wednesday, the Alma Mater Society will vote on a recommendation to close the doors of the debt-ridden Vids in the Hall by April 30.

And at Thursday's AMS Assembly, AMS Board of Directors Chair Grant Hughes said that the Board will recommend closing the service.

Vids, the AMS-run video store, has been losing money since its opening last year and currently has a projected budget deficit of $53,000.

The services review, prepared by Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson and Administrative Services Director Stephanie Taylor, noted that a 178 per cent increase in sales would be necessary for the store to break-even. Taylor described this increase as "quite unrealistic, even for the foreseeable future."

According to the report, the store "lacks the selection and quantity of choices that its competitors are offering," and is therefore uncompetitive in the Kingston area.

However, the Board of Directors commended the managers and staff for their successful efforts to boost sales in January, and "for dealing with this difficult year so professionally and with such dedication."

The store's successful performance during the month of January may bring the deficit down a thousand dollars to $52,000, Taylor speculated.

Despite this recent upturn, Taylor said the store would likely incur huge losses next year. In November, 1993, Vids in the Hall survived a proposal to close the store after the AMS determined that closing the store would be $5,000 more expensive than continuing operations with a reduced movie stock.

However, with movie leases and rental space up for renegotiation in the new fiscal year, Taylor said closing the store is now a viable option.

During the review of AMS services, the qualitative value of the service to Queen's will be considered, in addition to its financial situation.

But Taylor suggested that any benefit of having Vids on campus is outweighed by the $53,000 forecast deficit.

"The AMS could benefit students more by spending the money and resources on services that are financially viable," Taylor said.

"We do not feel that the video store is enhancing employment or educational opportunities for students at Queen's" enough to justify the enormous deficit, she said.

The store provides employment for eight staff members and two managers.

Taylor said the AMS currently has no concrete ideas on how to use the space, adding that this decision may be one for the incoming executive to make.

QP, Kitchen Sink: alive in '95

"Qualitative considerations" ensure survival of unprofitable AMS services

BY GEOFF HAMILTON

QUIET PUB

While the future of Vids in the Hall looks grim, the Alma Mater Society has decided to continue running the Quiet Pub.

The Quiet Pub, which has lost money for the past three years and is expected to have a deficit again this year, has been reviewed by the Board of Directors and will remain open.

The recommendation regarding the Quiet Pub noted that, although the QP is expected to lose money for the fourth straight year, its contribution margin—its ability to cover fixed costs such as administrative fees and overhead—is still positive. The pub therefore contributes to AMS overhead.

AMS Services Director Jess Dutton said that simply closing the pub would not solve the problem, since "administration costs would remain" and would have to be picked up by other services.

In making its decision to keep the QP open, the Board also cited the availability of the pub, its competitive pricing, its convenience, and the satisfaction it provides to the Queen's community.

In addition, the Board noted that the pub is safer than downtown bars because of its proximity to the AMS Walkhome Service, the fact that its staff and managers are trained in the Server Intervention Program (a program that teaches those working in the pubs how to monitor alcohol levels), and that security is close by and performs routine checks.

QP losses for the 1992-93 year were more than $26,000, compared to a loss of $2,896 for 1991-92, and $79 for the previous year. In 1989-90, the pub recorded a profit of $14,795 (compared to about $5,000 this year). If $100/day is budgeted, then a loss of $462 will remain.

In making its decision, the Board affirmed that the Centre is a "unique service" and provides the Queen's community with marketing and entrepreneurial experience.

On Wednesday, Feb. 9, the AMS Board of Directors passed a motion that will allow the Entrepreneurial Centre (the Kitchen Sink), to continue functioning for 1994-95.

The Kitchen Sink will incur a loss of about $5,000 this year, a loss which was forecast in the service's budget.

The AMS's approval set forth plans to increase revenue and lower costs for 1994-95. It included a recommendation to decrease the fees paid to the AMS and the John Deutsch University Centre for office, services and royalties, to investigate the possibility of a corporate sponsorship, and to rework the rate structure for booking space.

Moreover, Croft-Leary said

she believes that "African people are the unloved people of the world. I think largely we are suffering from broken hearts. No one ever apologized to what happened to African-Americans. That trauma endures and it is going to endure."

In order to deal with people of colour, she said people have to get up close and real. "You must always act to heal this trauma," she urged the audience.

Croft-Leary said the history of race has to be questioned because many terms referring to blacks suggest a lack of humanness.

She explained that when she looks at history, "history is often his story and therefore is not accurate. Things we learn are not always healthy."

Referring to such inaccurate history, she said, "when we buy the lie, it's traumatic. We have to uncover the lie so we can tell the truth. But until we tell the truth, we can never heal," she said.

Croft-Leary said that her motivation is healing "so I can look at myself with a level of dignity which is owed me."

Stephanie Simpson, coordinating chairperson of the Queen's University Black History Collective, said the conference is the first of its kind at Queen's.

"We need to address some of the more pertinent issues affecting people of colour in Canada," she said.

Simpson said she was pleased with the conference. "I thought that it went pretty well. We're planning on making this an annual event."

"The reason the QUBHC formed is to make people more aware of these issues," she commented, "and hopefully to get a recognition of the viability of Black Studies beyond Black History Month."

"Rethinking our legacies is something we all need to do during Black History Month. It isn't just a people's colour celebration. The point is for all of us to educate ourselves and become aware of histories that have been lost because of racism and oppression," Simpson said.

Concerned about the waste of food on Queen's campus? "Gut Feeling" will be holding a panel discussion on this issue, featuring Kerry Markwick from the Kingston Environmental Action Project, Janine Papadopoulos from the Kingston Are Recycling Corporation, Mirka Januszkiewicz (a City of Kingston Environmental Services Engineer), and a Queen's Waste Management spokesperson. The discussion will take place today in the John Orr Room of the John Deutsch University Centre, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

SENATOR TO VISIT

Senator Solange Chaput-Rolland will be speaking today at 4 p.m. in room 205 of Walter Light Hall, delivering the Michener lecture "Fortitude or Solitude."

PRINCIPAL AWARDED

Principal David Smith will receive the Order of Canada at a ceremony to be held tomorrow at 3:30 p.m. in Ottawa's Rideau Hall.

ASUS JACKETS

is looking for a committee for 94/95

Positions available:

1. Committee Chairperson(s)
2. Director of Finances
3. Director of Operations
4. Director of Advertising
5. 5-7 Committee Members

Applications will be available at 'The Core' 183 University.

The deadline for applications will be February 18 at 5:00 pm

For more info please phone 545-6278

Get more than a summer job.

Student Work Abroad Programme

Experience living and working in another country.

BRITAIN • GERMANY • FRANCE • JAPAN • AUSTRALIA
NEW ZEALAND • IRELAND • FINLAND • UNITED STATES

TRAVEL CUTS

1-800-667-2887

(THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)

ACCESSORIES UNLIMITED

Look Fabulous at Your Formal

THE DRESSES THAT DREAMS ARE MADE OF ...

- Gowns by Lida Baday
- Designer Jewellery
- Fashion Hosiery
- Evening Gloves

And so much more!

P.S. New Spring Fashions Arriving Daily
326 King Street East • 546-6200

Doggone it — the Chinese New Year has arrived!

BY DAVE COLEMAN

The cockadoodle-does of the rooster have been put to rest for another twelve years. Welcome the year of the dog, swept in this week during Chinese New Year celebrations.

On Saturday evening the Chinese Student and Scholar Association hosted the Great Chinese New Year Party in the Wallace Room of the John Deutsch University Centre.

It was a festive occasion, with approximately 300 students, children, parents and local friends out for a meal, speeches, music and dance.

David Wei, a PhD business student, said it was the "best turnout ever" for the Kingston version of the New Year celebration, although it was significantly milder than celebrations in China.

Described as an event similar to the North American Christmas, the New Year has traditionally been a family affair. Wei said that in his hometown of Beijing, New Year's is celebrated for two weeks, with the evenings punctuated by fireworks.

The formal opening ceremonies had a great deal of well-wishing for the next year. Mayor Ken Matthews made a brief speech, in which he stated that he was impressed by the family element of the festivities.

Vice-Principal (Research) William McLatchie emphasized the university's commitment to Chinese students.

"We attach great importance to Chinese students at Queen's," McLatchie said, noting that Chinese students make up the largest single international group at Queen's.

"We invest large amounts of money in China to bring [graduate students] here, because you have so much to offer us in your scholarship," McLatchie said.

The audience enthusiastically cheered on the variety of entertainers, as dancers, musicians, and singers performed traditional and contemporary Chinese works. There was a fashion show, and the performing was rounded out by a rousing nationalistic song.

Zhifei Ye, PhD mechanical engineering, described the music as touching. "These songs are ones that we've known since we were kids. It speaks of our home, and for many of the people here, they've been away for a long time. It's powerful."

Ismael Sahin, a Turkish student finishing his PhD in civil engineering, said the evening was an eye-opening experience. "I have many Chinese friends ... it's a great opportunity to learn about Chinese culture," he said. Martin Tsai, a Taiwanese student, said that he didn't understand much of the Mandarin dialogue, but loved the evening regardless. "I just enjoy the music," Tsai said.

Sharing the warmth

The Alma Mater Society ran a clothing drive in the Queen's student ghetto on Thursday night, collecting unwanted clothes for Kingston's needy.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

International Centre presents....

Stockholm University International Graduate School
Daniel Cohn (Rep. in Canada)
February 16, 1994, 12:00 - 1:00 P.M.
Oak Room, JDUC
Brown Bag Lunch

The International Graduate School (IGS), founded in 1947, affords non-Swedish students the opportunity to pursue postgraduate studies in the social sciences, especially political science, international relations, sociology, development studies and industrial relations.

The presentation will touch on the purpose of IGS, the style of instruction, details about the program and a brief summary of what it is like to be a foreign resident in Sweden. Following the presentation Mr. Cohn will be available at the International Centre, Resource Library from 2-4 pm to meet individually with students. For information please call 545-2604.

Everyone Welcome!

Women at Queen's suggest mandate for new principal

BY CARINA BLOFIELD

Last Friday, Queen's female faculty, staff, students and alumni had a chance to voice their concerns about the status of women on campus and to put forth recommendations for the next principal of Queen's, William Leggett.

Called Open Space, the event was informal and inclusive. Facilitator and Queen's Faculty of Education alumna Eleanor Belfry-Lyttle explained that the Open Space approach relied on the "operating principles of coffee-breaks."

The Alma Mater Society and the Office of the Dean of Women organized and sponsored the activities.

Approximately 60 participants met for the opening circle, proposed topics of discussion, and gathered in small groups to brainstorm the topics raised.

By the end of the day, the women had drafted a clear and comprehensive mandate for William Leggett. "We need recommendations to avoid the empty slogans and to establish the criteria," was the message on a bulletin board posted in the room.

"If [Leggett] wants to know what's happening here at Queen's," Belfry-Lyttle commented, "this is certainly one way to tell him..."

Leggett dropped by the event in the afternoon, and listened in on some of the discussions. The recommendations of the women will be presented to him in March.

A spirit of cooperation and unity prevailed among the women present. As one participant summed it up, "if we can identify our common concerns, we'll find a way of regulating our uncommon differences."

According to the Dean of Women, Pamela Dickie-Young, "the people really enjoyed the process of setting the agenda themselves."

Belfry-Lyttle added, "the energy is good ... there's a sense that all meetings should be conducted this way."

The discussion produced bulletin boards which commented on the "chilly climate at Queen's," and included the proposal to "hijack The Gazette for a women's issue that would highlight women's groups on campus and the achievements of women."

The group addressing the history of women at Queen's recommended "a central place ... so that any woman who has a problem can go there and be told what they can do for her."

This group also suggested that each female student accepted to Queen's receive an introductory package including a history of women at Queen's, their heritage, and what is expected of the students.

"I am woman, hear me roar," was written on the "musings and graffiti" board.

However, the message next to it asked, "where is everybody? What (who) kept so many away?"

The extremely low student turnout at the event disappointed participants and organizers. Nicola Doyle, the chair of Equality Issues Committee and a '95 engineer, said, "it is important to get a balance and different perspectives and points of view from other students."

Belfry-Lyttle agreed. "The lack of students will certainly be a question in the follow-up meeting. We will ask who was here, who wasn't, and why not," she said.

At the closing ceremonies, each participant shared their impression of the day. Two red roses were handed out: one to a Queen's alumna of 1924 as a representative of the past, and the other to Doyle as a representative of the future.

Dickie-Young described the event as "a chance to take stock of women at Queen's—what people are interested in, what they have on the top of their agendas." Hopefully, she added, a similar gathering will be held again next year.

Ads rejected by local TV

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

Douglas Bassett, president and CEO of Baton Broadcasting—which owns nine TV stations including CJOH—commented on the ads. "Everyone knows gays kiss like straight people, but if the gay rights group wants shock value, they're not going to use my TV station to achieve it," he said.

Veldhoven concurred that the PSAs were "challenging," but questioned the suggestion of shock value. "The status quo sees the PSAs as shocking because we are pushing buttons and they don't know how to react," he said.

Veldhoven said the real purpose of the ads is to humanize a lifestyle. "These are real people, not monsters. We are putting a face to these people to dispel myths."

"Our society is based on support," Veldhoven said. However, "co-parenting is not recognized [legally, and Ontario] is just beginning publicly, not legally, to recognize same-sex couples with children."

The PSAs aim to put pressure on the provincial government to legislate same-sex rights in areas such as family law, inheritance rights and employment benefits.

The ads have a voiceover which encourages viewers to contact their local MPP regarding Bill 45 and other relationship recognition legislation.

One ad shows a pregnant woman discussing her lesbian relationship. A second shows a man nervously waiting outside his lover's hospital room, denied medical aid and visiting rights because of his sexual orientation. The third PSA shows two men kissing.

According to Tucker, even if the CLGRO had the finances to pay for advertising slots, they would not be guaranteed air time. He said CKWS has rejected paid advertisements in the past, such as one for the Hollywood gore-fest, The Texas Chainsaw Massacre.

The station is "obviously cautious" about what they air, Tucker said.

Describing the CLGRO PSAs, he asked, "do you want to expose younger children to concepts that might be difficult for them to digest?"

Veldhoven said the ads "respond to the heterosexual definitions of the family."

The CLGRO's Working Group on Relationship Recognition aims to present existent alternative lifestyles to the public, with an end-goal of legal recognition, according to Veldhoven.

Publicity is necessary, Veldhoven said, since "invisibility perpetuates invisibility."

The CLGRO will meet in about a week to decide its next step.

Summer Odysseys

WORLDWIDE ADVENTURES

FEB 15, 1994
7:00 p.m.

THE SHOT
GARRETT ST at DIVISION

Air and Rail fares
Hostel information
Eco Tours
Car rentals/leasing
Country by Country info
Travel Tips
Films
Great door prizes
and much more!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess Street
General Travel
549-3553

15 Montreal Street
Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3561

GOT THE FEBRUARY BLAHS ???

NOW AVAILABLE
ORIENTAL DISHES AND PIZZA
DO YOUR LAUNDRY,
AND PLAY

FREE POOL

Limited to one game per visit WITH WASH
Valid only with coupon, 5pm to 8pm daily
Wednesday excluded

Scrubbies At the Bistro

Licensed Under the L.L.B.O.
Laudromat, Billiards, Arcade and Bar
IF YOU'RE NOT SCRUBBIN' IT
YOU'RE NOT CLEANIN' IT

Last Load: 12 midnight
471 Princess Street (at University)

Expires March 10/94
548-4916

NOTICE:
The Scrubbies coupon distributed in the 1993-94 Who's Where is no longer valid.

GSSs

Nominations are still open for the positions of

PRESIDENT and VP SERVICES

This nomination period will close on March 1st.

Everywhere ... Swimwear

My Astonishing & Self Boutique's Designer collection of swimwear for 1994 has arrived! Unique International lines such as Diva, Cottex, Grenier, and Bayer Blue are here for you to discover!

My Astonishing & Self
257-A Ontario St. at Princess 546-6186

FOR QUEEN'S ONLY THE BEST TUXEDO DEAL IS

$69

NO EXTRA CHARGES

Choose from our entire selection. Everything is $69 plus taxes.

NO EXTRA CHARGES!
FREE FASHION PANTS
FREE VESTS
FREE SHOES

All you need is a $20 deposit
WE BEAT EVERY COMPETITORS PRICES
Available only at TUXEDO TOWN KINGSTON
One block up from the Capital Theatre with CAREER GIRL

Assembly Report

BY LORI THORLAKSON

In a bristling Alma Mater Society Assembly meeting last Thursday, Assembly touched on such issues as Heritage Front posters on campus, Publishing & Copy Centre price increases, and student housing.

HERITAGE FRONT ISSUE DISCUSSED

Todd Minerson, vice-president (university affairs), addressed the recent appearance of Heritage Front material on Queen's campus.

Three "white and proud" Heritage Front posters were found on campus last week, and media in Kingston received Front press releases over the weekend.

Minerson said he met with Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams along with AMS Commissioners Dera Nevin and Clare Fielding to discuss the issue.

Campus Security has been informed of Heritage Front activity and asked to be on the watch for people putting up Front posters.

Minerson stressed the importance of presenting a unified front against white supremacist groups and said he is drafting a statement of solidarity with other universities.

Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin added that the Heritage Front presence and its potential impact on the community has been discussed at City Council meetings.

COPY PRICES UP

Chair of the AMS Board of Directors Grant Hughes announced that the Board has approved price increases at the Publishing and Copy Centre. Single copies at the centre will jump from 6 cents to 7 cents. Even with the price increase, the Copy Centre will still provide the "lowest price in town," Hughes said. Hughes said the review of three AMS services is underway and the recommendation for Vids in the Hall is to close it down.

HOUSING ISSUES

Communications Commissioner Nevin reported that the City Planning Department has agreed to begin negotiations with Queen's regarding suggestions for amending Phase II city planning proposals.

A rental housing work group which is presently examining municipal issues recommends completely scrapping the Phase II proposal and starting with Phase III.

A resolution with the city may be welcome news, as Queen's housing case is stalled at the Ontario Municipal Board, Nevin said.

She added that she has been advised to have the Human Rights Office examine proposed housing bylaws, and the input of law students will be sought in the arbitration process, in an attempt to save money.

Queen's less critical

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

In a letter to the Ontario Council on University Affairs, Farquhar said that although Carleton will submit its own policy framework to the Ministry of Education, "it would be prudent to take time for a thorough examination of where we are collectively headed" before they do so.

On Feb. 4, Farquhar received a petition from professors and students, calling for a rejection of the zero tolerance guidelines because of the fear that it would amount to censorship.

Bujara, however, said she doesn't have any concerns that the framework will restrict academic freedom. Those that criticize the guidelines on these grounds, she said, are putting the emphasis where it doesn't belong.

"The spirit of human rights legislation is to foster an environment where the university will think about the curriculum and what it means," she said. "This usually means expanding boundaries rather than restricting them. Our current problem is we are restricting and not allowing for diversity."

Bujara's criticism of the guidelines was that the March 1 deadline sent a confused message to universities who had to come up with a comprehensive policy in such a short time. The practitioners, not the administration, are left with the task of reviewing the guidelines, although it is the administration who makes the final decision, she added.

"Confusion creates the kind of hysteria we are seeing right now," Bujara said.

ART ON THE LINE

Student Art Gallery representative Vanessa Stettler presented the strategic plan for "Art on the Line" to Assembly.

Stettler said the group is seeking permanent funding in order to hire a coordinator. The four options available to the group include obtaining funding through student activity fee, holding a Fine Arts fundraiser annually to raise $10,000 a year, negotiating with administration for funding, or securing funds through the work bursary program, she said.

OF NOTE ...

In his report, Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson said a Student Constable had been terminated for abuse of privileges.

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

THE PUB PAGE

FEBRUARY 15th
Yellowbelly and The Gaudi Birds
FEBRUARY 16th
THE MAHONES

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

THE PUB PAGE

avant-ski

at clark hall pub

u've hrd of unfknblvbl (th clrk hll pb slogn) but hve u hrd of unfknblvbl (th t-shrt)?

on sale now at the pub!

We're closing for reading week this Friday, and will reopen the first Monday back. Visit our homeys at ALFIE'S and the QP if you're in town over Reading Week! Ski (or study) safe!

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

At the Quiet Pub

this week

TUESDAY

The Olympics on the big screen

Tough Britain Tuesdays

WEDNESDAY

9020 IMP

THURSDAY

Robin Hood Men in tights 4 pm

A Man Without a Face 6 pm

FRIDAY

OPEN ALL DAY

SOCCER NIGHT IN CANADA

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

QUEEN'S SECONDARY SCHOOL LIAISON WELCOMES YOU AND YOUR FAMILY TO OUR

MARCH BREAK OPEN HOUSE 1994

Wednesday March 16 ARTS CONCURRENT EDUCATION (ARTS) Phys & Hth EDUCATION (ARTS) FINE ART Music COMMERCE	Thursday March 17 SCIENCE CONCURRENT EDUCATION (SCIENCE) Phys & Hth EDUCATION (SCIENCE) ENGINEERING REHABILITATION THERAPY Nursing
--	---

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

- TOUR guides
- REGISTRATION STAFF
- GENERAL guides

If interested, please attend the Sign up and Information/Training Session

Monday, March 7th
4:30 pm
Stirling Hall "A" or call 545-2217 Today!

Quest for sisterhood

In recent years, the Queen's Women's Centre's quest for sisterhood has been afflicted with a serious malaise, and now an already weak and unsupported centre is being further undermined by infighting.

Specifically, two factions have emerged within the centre, as the old guard is being challenged by the insurgence of a new group of feminists, determined to change the face, and philosophy, of the centre.

And while the battle is being waged largely on a constitutional front, the root of the struggle appears to lie in which type of feminism, and whose feminism, the Women's Centre will espouse.

On the one hand, there is the group which approaches feminism from the essentialist perspective, which, in loose terms, recognizes a core difference between men and women, and views the key to social transformation as women working with women.

On the other hand, more liberal feminists are striving to modernize what they view as outdated and restrictive tenets of the Women's Centre.

And in the middle of this tug of war stands the one document designed to consolidate the feuding Women's Centre: the Basis of Unity, an anti-pornography, pro-choice principles statement which all members of the Women's Centre Collective must sign and support.

Ironically, that which was designed to unite has become the centre of controversy.

The new group objects to these tenets on the grounds that they are outdated and exclude women whose religion and/or feminist perspective would prevent them from adhering to the Basis of Unity.

So perhaps it is time to question the thinking behind the Basis of Unity. If it was designed to unite the centre's members under one essential vision, one might ask what the point is of forcing a women's centre to adhere to a single perspective.

Does a unifying mandate make sense at a juncture when the feminist vision is diverging into many distinct—and contradictory—forms?

According to the Constitution of the Women's Centre, one aim of the centre is to represent the interests of women to the administration of Queen's University, the student government and other community and campus bodies.

Yet it would seem that a restrictive principles statement such as the Basis of Unity—which by definition excludes from the Women's Centre Collective any woman who doesn't align herself with anti-pornography and pro-choice ideals—will inevitably fall short of the aim to adequately represent women on campus and in the Kingston community.

Some have suggested that the existing Women's Centre close, to allow a new group of women to take over the reins. But this too is missing the point.

Replacing the essentialist tract with another would still have the unfortunate consequence of eliminating a voice from the feminist debate at the centre.

It would seem more constructive to abandon the idea that the Women's Centre can only champion one feminist perspective, and recognize that all feminist perspectives share one definitive goal: the quest for political, economic and social equality for women.

If internal disputes and power struggles are the product of a rigid Basis of Unity, it's time to consider finding strength in diversity, and allow a variety of feminist voices in the Women's Centre.

Every Queen's student pays a non-optoutable student interest fee to the Women's Centre, so shouldn't every woman be comfortable expressing her own feminist beliefs in the Grey House?

If the Women's Centre is perceived to be a place that is intolerant of outside views, it not only curtails valuable debate within its walls, but it also perpetuates the lack of student involvement in the centre.

Furthermore, there is an inherent inconsistency in feminists attempting to impose ideological viewpoints on other feminists. If the feminist fight is against oppression, surely a monarchy of ideas at the Women's Centre makes no sense.

It seems time to do away with the Basis of Unity on paper, and find a basis of unity in practice, implemented at the Women's Centre through an inviting, and inclusive, approach to representing the special trials of women on campus and in society.

Neither side of the struggle at the Women's Centre wants to lose face; ideological differences at the centre are intensified by personal conflicts and the perception of class disparities. If, for a moment, the parties involved were to put their differences aside and recognize aspects of feminism that they agree on, they could save the centre.

And if the Women's Centre Collective was more receptive to different feminist perspectives, and Queen's students and community women determined to join in a feminist struggle, the Women's Centre would likely become the effective and potent tool that it was originally designed to be.

Plea bargaining 101: Law students escape rap

This year's first-year law class has been characterized as fiercely competitive and intensely insecure about their hopes for articling positions and future employment.

The search for higher grades led an unknown number (thought to be six) law students to cheat on their Public Law class final, worth 100 per cent of their grade. Two of the students who cheated will be writing a rewrite for full credit after reading week.

The other students who remain unknown to the administration and will face no penalties for their actions have effectively gotten away with one of the most offensive forms of academic dishonesty.

The fact that these are law students makes the cheating even more repugnant. There is a greater onus on lawyers to be honest, as they are training to become a part of the justice system. These students will one day uphold the framework of our legal system, and yet they ignored both the rules of academic honesty and the Queen's Code of Conduct, with little more than a slap on the wrist from the School of Law Administration. It is grossly inappropriate for such a flagrant ethical failure to go unpunished.

What sort of penalties would undergraduate students face for such a serious infraction? And why did the Law students face no such penalties?

With only two of the cheating students known, the rest of the first-year law class is tainted with the possibility of involvement in this incident. It is unfortunate that because a handful of students are unwilling to come forward, all 56 people in the Public Law class will be suspected of academic dishonesty.

With such a light penalty, a fear of punishment could hardly be a factor in their refusal to admit their guilt.

The ethos of the administration is contrary to what would be expected in such a situation. Law faculty, administration, and students all need to accept their share of responsibility for the incident, but the real accountability lies with the administration.

The School of Law has implicitly condoned the cheating by taking such a relaxed stance about the incident. Offering excuses such as a tough economy, fierce competition, and a terrible job market, the administration has attempted to explain away the reasons behind the cheating.

There has been remarkably little other reaction from the Law School administration. Their lack of condemnation leaves questions about cheating at Law school in general and in Queen's Law: does the Law Administration accept cheating as a normal part of Law school? Is cheating acceptable in Queen's Law? We certainly hope not.

There is no excuse for cheating. The so-called progressive nature of Queen's Law does not necessarily incorporate a sense of leniency. Among Law students it is particularly reprehensible and a more formal reprimand for the students involved is only appropriate.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

SYRETT RESPONDS TO MCKAY INTERVIEW

THE EDITOR,
I am writing this letter in response to your interview with Laura McKay.

According to the constitution of the Women's Centre at Queen's University, a woman is a voting member of the collective if and only if she signs and is in agreement with the Basis of Unity. This Basis of Unity is printed on the back of our pamphlet which has been distributed throughout the Kingston and Queen's communities.

Laura McKay attended a Women's Centre collective meeting for the first time last autumn. I assumed that she would have read the statement that is printed on the back of our pamphlet as part of the Basis of Unity that says that only women who are in agreement with the Basis of Unity may participate as voting members (and therefore as representatives) of the Women's Centre. All other women are welcome to attend meetings, and to contribute to discussions, and to volunteer, to attend any other Women's Centre events and otherwise participate in the Centre.

Any member of the collective is free to write to any publication in the world, name themselves as a member of the Women's Centre, and state their views. An intelligent reader will not thereby assume those views to represent the Women's Centre.

Earlier in the year Laura McKay had harranged me on the subject of her disagreement with the Basis of Unity. Consequently, on Jan. 24, I was surprised to find that she still wanted to be involved in the Centre, and naively and optimistically assumed that that was because she had decided to participate and support the Basis of Unity in spite of its difference from her personal value system. This is something that I do myself. A woman's personal beliefs are not the jurisdiction of this group, but integrity of action in accordance with the principles of the group as stated in the constitution when acting as a representative of the group definitely are.

Laura's action in attending the QSCSG meeting on Jan. 25, during which she disavowed her support of the basis of unity, are unconstitutional and therefore cannot represent the Centre.

The Women's Centre does not do its business nor our internal communications in the pages of The Journal. Our business is done at collective meetings, which are announced on the outgoing message of the Centre at 545-2963. The time and place of each meeting is established at the previous meeting, and recorded in the minutes. When time and energy are available, those meetings are also publicized through the Journal and Kingston This Week/End.

There is no "new" group of coordinators for the Women's Centre. Check the minutes of the collective meetings, which are kept in the communications book at the Centre. There may or may not be a group of women who would like to "take over" the Centre (for whatever purposes) but legally this does not affect us unless any of those women were to attempt to defraud the Centre and the Queen's Community by representing the Centre when (legally) they don't.

The Women's Centre Constitution sits on the desk, by the phone, accessible to all members and guests to read. I am saddened and disappointed that Laura did not have enough respect for the Centre and for herself to read it before taking actions that are illegal and damaging to the Centre.

For health reasons, I must reduce the responsibilities that I have taken on for the Centre. I have been involved with the Centre since 1989, first on the library committee and then as Treasurer, a position that I have never really wanted. I assumed that the treasurer was resigning, and no one else was willing to take it on.

On Monday Jan. 24, Laura McKAY wanted to take on that responsibility but because of her actions against the principles of the Basis of Unity that shift cannot take place. Consequently, I am still treasurer until a legal collective member is found to take that responsibility.

MARY SYRETT
TREASURER, QUEEN'S WOMEN'S CENTRE

MCKAY RESPONDS TO STORY

THE EDITOR,
I am writing today to clear up a number of inconsistencies regarding the reporting of the front-page article on the Women's Centre last week. Understanding the obvious difficulties inherent in conducting an interview on the telephone, I feel that many quotes need the context in which they were delivered, or the conditions as appropriate.

The statement that the women's centre, which is in a period of flux at present and alive with new possibilities and problems, is "non-political" is inaccurate. The words "non-political" were used in the following phrases, "the women's centre in future, will hopefully be non-political in the sense that it may not reflect just a single political view. Still, the centre is political in the sense that it is committed to fighting for women's rights, education and support of women by women."

As well, the Basis of Unity, passed as part of the Women's Centre Constitution in 1986, has become contentious in many circles, as there is debate over the appropriateness of certain clauses and over its need for review. The quote, "the Basis of Unity is going to be scrapped" was inaccurate. I said, "with as much debate as is taking place within the circles of women concerned with the Centre, who knows... the Basis of Unity may be amended or in future even scrapped. Right now we are concerned with the direction of the Women's Centre and finding ways that women can help women." Again, I would like to stress that the difficulty of telephone interviews is duly noted, but it is important that the record be set straight on this issue.

All-day forum is being held in Victoria Hall this Friday for those interested in issues pertaining to women. In addition, the next meeting of the Women's Centre is in the Grey House Monday Feb. 21 at 7:30 pm (phone: 545-2963). All ideas, perspectives and viewpoints are welcome. Come help and make your Women's Centre all that as Queen's members you feel it should and can be!

LAURA MCKAY
WOMEN'S CENTRE MEDIA COMMITTEE

What are you doing for Valentine's Day and why?

BY JOEY DEVILLA

"We're doing construction hours—how romantic!"
NATASHA MIJASEVIC
ARTS '94
ALISTAIR CAIRNS
ARTS '94

"Two mid-terms."
TIM JOHNSON
ARTS '94

"When's Valentine's Day, anyway?"
CRAIG ROBERTS
ARTS '95
SARAH LOUDEN
ARTS '95

"Playing video games"
MIKE JONES
ARTS '94
CHARLES SINCLAIR
ARTS '94

The Opinions editor encourages all members of the Queen's community to express their viewpoints no any given subject. The Opinions section strives to present all sides of an issue fairly and equally. Letters that are deemed hateful or libelous (as defined by the Ontario Human Rights Code) towards any group or individual, will not be printed. Letters must not exceed 500 words and must be accompanied by the author's name, year, faculty, and telephone number. The deadline for all Opinions submissions is Sunday at 2:00 pm for Tuesday issues and Wednesday at 5:30 pm for Friday issues. The Journal reserves the right to edit and/or refuse any and all submissions. Confidentiality may be available on request.

Recently, The Journal has received letters expressing different opinions on similar issues. Unfortunately, these letters will not be published as they were not signed and accompanied by telephone numbers.

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall	ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Adrienne Down
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland	ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT RYAN P. CHEN
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey deVilla	Slan Bédoué-Stephens
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Marika Glickman	ASSISTANT SPORTS Justin McKellar
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey deVilla	ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yarnell
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Furse	LITERARY LARGES EDITOR Meagan Nichols	ASSISTANT LITERARY LARGES Tim Mitchell
FEATURES EDITOR Allison Masemann	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder
	Brock Martland
	Lori Thorlakson

BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie	ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT Gabriele King
ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen	CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Hamer
SALES REPRESENTATIVES Fiona Macaulay Stuart Kedwell	HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Tuesday, February 15, 1994 • Issue 32 • Volume 121
The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal.
The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.
Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of the Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2. Telephone: 613-545-2800. Facsimile: 613-545-6728. Internet: journal@qucdn.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue 33 will be published on Tuesday, March 1, 1994

LITERARY LAPSES

THE RISE AND FALL OF

Cohen

Stranger Music
Leonard Cohen
McClelland & Stewart
$29.99
401 pgs.

I have no talent left/ I can't write a poem anymore/ You can call me Len or Lennie now/ like you always wanted.

in 1969 because he did not think it was up to snuff. The fact that he now feels that he should release a second selected works when he has not really created anything better than his first collection seems to show that he will never again return to full form as a poet.

Not that this limits the pleasure and beauty of Stranger Music. Featured here are selections from all his books of poetry and record albums and also some previously unpublished work. Chapters from his second novel, Beautiful Losers, also appear, which will surely raise certain academic eyebrows ("You mean he considers that novel poetry? Well, scrap that thesis..."), but unfortunately no selections from his first kuinstlerroman, The Favourite Game, are included. This is a genuine disappointment, since there are many passages in that book which would have fit nicely beside Beautiful Losers, including his wonderful descriptions of Montreal at night, and his cinematic-style descriptions of his family and lovers.

Most selections appear as in the original publications, although he has retitled some pieces, especially in the selection taken from Death of a Ladies Man. The different and added commentary to many of the poems from Death is the most pleasurable discovery in the collection, especially for anyone who has not had the opportunity to see the original of the hard-to-find edition.

Evaluating collections or anthologies is always a difficult task. Someone familiar with the oeuvre of an artist always feels that the editors have missed key works or at least personal favourites. In this case Cohen has selected his own work (with the help of respected literary critic Rebecca de Mornay), so many of the old favourites are there: "I Have Not Lingered in European Monasteries," "Bird on a Wire,"

"Heirloom," "A Kite is a Victim," "For E.J.P." and many more. The only notable oversight would be the powerful "The Only Tourist in Havana Turns His Thoughts Homeward," although I personally miss "Destiny" and these lines from "Energy of Slaves": I have no talent left/ I can't write a poem anymore/ You can call me Len or Lennie now/ like you always wanted.

As for the uncollected work, one can see why Cohen has been concentrating on songs these days. "When Even The" shows some of the experimentation that characterized Beautiful Losers while "To a Fellow Student" recalls "I See You on a Greek Mattress." Cohen's typical lust poems are present from an over-fifty perspective in "Paris Models" and "My Honour," the latter eliciting some real sympathy from the reader. Only the final poem in the book stands up to Cohen's earlier work. "Days of Kindness" is great and seems a confession or apology for his past, and it acknowledges the sacrifices he has taken for his art.

Stranger Music is a fitting cap to a brilliant career in literature, but it does bring regret to one who has loved Cohen's verse. As one travels from book to book and year to year through this collection we see all of Cohen's rises and falls until we are left with the occasional powerful couplet in the songs of the 1980s and 1990s. Still, some of this later work is his most popular and it is reassuring to think that younger and younger generations are picking up on Cohen by hearing his music, and that—at least in this small way—they are keeping great poetry alive.

Few books of Canadian poetry appear in hardcover these days.

Fewer sell for close to thirty dollars. Fewer still make the best-sellers lists in Canada and the United States.

Then again, there are few poets like Leonard Cohen.

With a thirty-seven year career in music and literature, Cohen has seemingly done it all. He has written critically acclaimed and best-selling books of poetry. He wrote the first post-modern novel in Canada. He has become a world renowned singer/songwriter. One would think that at the age of fifty-nine Cohen would be slowing down, but last year's The Future album is considered by many to be his best yet, and it has even gained him popularity with people one-quarter his age.

In the realm of poetry, however, Cohen has definitely slowed down. His last book, Book of Mercy (1984) consisted of prose-prayers (devotional poetry?) that did not even come close to his earlier work, which leads one to believe that he was not kidding with Death of a Ladies Man (1978) — Cohen has left the world of letters.

Stranger Music is perhaps his final farewell to this mode. Cohen shows, by placing both songs and poems together in this volume, that he considers them equal. Many would disagree, but it is hard to deny the genuine poetry of songs like "Suzanne," "Chelsea Hotel," or even "Closing Time."

Cohen's resignation is made clearer by the fact that he dislikes books of selections. His Selected Poems 1956-1968 was only printed once, making it a collector's item, but he himself disliked it, refusing to accept the Governor General's award for it

Paradise for the paranoid

The Paranoid's Handbook
Christopher Hyde
Key Porter Books
$13.13
104 pgs.

We all have our own personal fears, anxieties and obsessions. Some of us even get a little paranoid about them sometimes, even though we suspect deep down that we're being irrational. Christopher Hyde's new "guidebook," The Paranoid's Handbook, takes paranoia to new heights, however, which will justify any paranoid's fears. After reading the rationalizations (and especially proofs) Hyde gives for all possible qualms, my phobias no longer seemed unfounded—instead, they became distressingly logical. Even if you aren't paranoid about anything, you will be after reading this book. About virtually everything. You'll probably wish you never read it.

The New York Times has called Canadian writer and ex-television journalist/producer Hyde the "Paranoid Prince of Doom"—and not without good reason. Hyde's book does, of course, address the things most people have at least a cursory fear of, such as air travel, marriage, violent crime and nuclear disaster. The disturbing part is that he provides real live—although sometimes undocumented and often questionable—statistics with which to back up these fears. (Did you know that the largest chemical warfare station in the world is located in Alberta, Canada?)

Hyde's strength, however, lies in his talent to make you afraid of the basic elements and activities of life—the things from which there is no escape. Things like supermarkets and drug stores. Pets. Restaurant embarrassment. Being lied to. Death. He repeatedly emphasizes that the only way to avoid these dangers is to stop eating and never leave the house—actually, better make that your bed, you might slip and kill yourself in the bathroom or have a deadly kitchen accident.

The handbook also caters to phobias specific to certain sectors of society, such as toxic shock syndrome, childbirth, lefthandedness and premature ejaculation.

Although Hyde's handbook is a good laugh and great for idle conversation, it also has some valuable information. You may prefer to turn a blind eye to the plethora of additives in virtually every piece of food you eat. And to the fact that feminine hygiene products have been found to induce yeast infections, and that the same companies that have a monopoly on these products are also the leading producers of treatments for the infections (conspiracy??). But even though it is impossible to avoid everything that is hazardous to your health (and life), at least you can avoid some of them.

The Paranoid's Handbook also comes complete with chapters entitled "A Paranoid's Glossary of Fearful Things" and "Creating a Personal Paranoia for the 1990s" for the serious paranoid: This, of course, is the true value of a well-honed paranoia—you are making fear work for you. When someone panders to your paranoia he is, by definition, deferring to you... Even if you're confidophobic (afraid of telling secrets) I can promise you absolute anonymity. Of course, when all is said and done, the true paranoid will assume that everything I've said has been a lie. This is a classic paranoia in its own right—skeptophobia or The New York Times disease, the fear of believing the printed word. Frightening, isn't it? Yes, indeed.

MEGAN NICHOLS IS—HEYWHO ARE YOU!! WHAT DO YOU WANT?!

5 Minutes Before Bed a look at what Queen's reads

SUE CAMERON
CHIEF STUDENT CONSTABLE

Just finished

The Firm and The Pelican Brief
John Grisham

"They're a little long-winded. I want to know what's going to happen, but they're so long, and there's so many intricate plots. [Nonetheless,] that's the kind of book I like... I'm not into romantic novels or anything like that. I would definitely prefer a mystery or some sort of a suspense novel... I find any courtroom drama really interesting."

A Favourite

One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest
Ken Kesey

"I had a lot of—I don't know if you want to call it sympathy—for the main character. I read [this book] a few years ago, and I still look back and think, wow, that was just completely intense. It was an awful story, because of the issues that were going on, and how mistreated [the main character] was. I was just enthralled through the whole thing."

You might win a trip to Paris

Or you might not. The second annual Literary Lapses short story contest is up and running! The deadline for entries is March 1, so drop off your stories soon at The Journal, 272 Earl Street. Try to keep your stories under 2000 words in length. Also, please include your name and phone number with your submission on a separate sheet of paper. Prizes will be announced later, as if fame and prestige were not incentive enough. If you have any questions, call Megan or Tim at 545-2800.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

Planning a trip?

Whether you're getting away for a week in the sun, or preparing for the backpacking adventure of your life, we have the books you need. Come in and browse through our extensive Travel Section before you go! If you can't find the book you're looking for on our shelves, ask about our free Special Order Service.

Printed Passage Books

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

THINKING OF TRANSFERRING TO THE COMMERCE PROGRAM? THEN PLAN TO ATTEND THE COMMERCE PROGRAM INFORMATION MEETING

Tuesday, March 8
Room 12, Dunning Hall
7:00 PM

Representatives of the School of Business Undergraduate Office, the School of Business Faculty, Commerce Students and Queen's Admissions Office will discuss:

- The nature of the Commerce Program
- Jobs and Careers after Commerce
- The School of Business International Exchange Programs
- Queen's Commerce Culture and Student Life
- Admissions Procedures, Criteria and Standards

If you're thinking of business school, please join us. If you're unable to attend, information can be obtained from Room 120, Dunning Hall.

Hiring Schedule

Positions

AMS Commissioner and Directors

Applications Due: March 4

AMS Deputy Commissioners
AMS Service Managers,
Editors and Coordinators

Applications Due: March 11

AMS Committee Chairs
AMS Service Assistants

Applications Due: March 18

Walkhome Day Coordinators,
Constable Group Leaders and
QEA Managers

Applications Due: March 25

AMS Committee Members
AMS Services Staff

Applications Due: April 1

AMS Commissions

Academic Affairs
Campus Activities
Communications
Education
Internal affairs

AMS Services

Alfies
Entrepreneurial Centre
P&CC
QEA
Queen's Journal
QSC

QP
Studio Q
Tricolour Express
Tricolour Yearbook
Walkhome
Who's Where/What's Next
Work Bursary

SPORTS

Gaels win volleyball nailbiter

BY ROB THOMPSON

On Sunday afternoon in Bartlett Gym, the men's volleyball Gaels advanced to the OUA East finals by defeating the University of Toronto Varsity Blues in a nail-biting semi-final match. The Gaels took the match in five sets by scores of 16-14, 8-15, 15-9, 14-16, and 15-11.

The first set was an indication of the excitement to come. The score stayed at 14-14 for five rotations before the Gaels were able to put it away. The home side had a 14-11 advantage in the set and came perilously close to squandering it.

Strong service by the Blues proved problematic for the Gaels in the second set, and Varsity was able to score some easy points to equalize the match at a set apiece. Queen's had trouble finding setter Kevin Chiswell on their serve reception giving U of T too many free balls.

In the third, the Gaels returned to form and cruised out to a 9-1 lead in the set. Better passing and blocking were the keys for Queen's in this set. The Gaels closed out the set in dramatic fashion. Leading 12-6, Queen's gave up a free ball after some spectacular digs off the net. On the return, Mike Spence rejected the Blues hitters to win a point for the Gaels that they had no business winning. For set point, Mike Cvihun dropped an ace to stake the Gaels to a 2-1 lead in the match.

The fourth set, lasting 45 minutes, was perhaps the most exciting of the match. Neither team took a decided advantage early in the set despite some powerful kills and authoritative blocks by both squads. Eventually Queen's was able to pull ahead by a 14-11 count to enjoy five match points before the Blues fought back to equalize. The visitors didn't stop there, and hushed the crowd of 500 by stealing the set 16-14. A lack of aggressiveness on the service late in the set was a key factor in the Gaels dropping the set.

It all came down to the thrilling and dreaded fifth set, decided by rally-point scoring. The Gaels came out fired up and rattled off the first five points to set the Blues back on their heels. They extended their lead to 9-3, at which point U of T called a time-out. It was the break that the Blues needed, as they crept back to a 9-8 count. That was the closest they would come, and the Gaels pulled away to take the final set 15-11.

Four Gaels reached double figures in kills for the afternoon. David Kantor and Mike Spence paced the attack with 20 each. Captain Ron O'Hare had 16, and Mike Cvihun had 13. The Gaels were led at the net by Mark McKenna with six stuffs, and Kantor and Spence each marked five 'return to sender.'

Head coach Brenda Willis said that the keys to victory were "our ability to tool the block, and our passing late in the match."

She gave U of T credit for their play, but said, "the team that puts the ball away the best wins the game," which is exactly what the Gaels did on the day. Without question the better of the two teams emerged the victor.

The OUA East finals will take place next weekend. Queen's travels to York whom they have defeated once during league play and once in tournament play this season. At stake is a berth in the CIAU finals, which would be a first for Queen's.

What a greco-roman weekend as Kent White grinds his opponent into the mat.

BRENT DAVIS

OT win gives men's hoops split in Ottawa

BY FRANK DIXON

GAELS 88, CARLETON 78 (OT)

(OTTAWA) On Saturday, Queen's guard Wyeth Clarkson scored 18 of his 20 points in the second half and overtime, and Queen's (2-7) survived a 41-point, 20-rebound game by Raven Taffe Charles to snap a four-game losing streak.

This game had more twists than a John le Carre novel: a buzzer-beater leading to OT, a scary performance by Charles in his last career home game, a shoving melee leading to two ejections, and more than 25 lead changes.

Queen's was fortunate to escape the first half tied at 34, since they missed five of six free throws and shot only 37 per cent.

With 11:41 left and Queen's leading 51-49, Raven reserve Jeff Robins smacked Gael scoring leader Dave Smart in the face with both elbows, precipitating a bench-clearing shoving melee. Following a ten-minute zebra's tere-a-tete, Robins and Gael's guard Sean Smith were ejected, and both teams received two fouls leading to four free throws apiece. Smart drained all four Gaels' free throws, but Carleton's Reagh Vidito made only two, giving Queen's a 55-51 lead and possession.

The lead alternated repeatedly. At 69-69 with 70 seconds left, Clarkson stole the ball, scored on a leaner, then followed 30 seconds later with a baseline jumper to give Queen's a 73-69 edge. But with one second left and Carleton down by two, Charles spun left out of a baseline double team and fired a shot that hit the glass, rolled around the rim and fell for a 73-73 tie.

The five-minute OT was dominated 15-5 by the Gaels, but not without incident. Smart was hit hard again, fell and was helped off. He finished with 25 points, and his average now stands at 25.4 ppg, third in the OU.

Smith broke a two-game scoring drought with 14 points, including four three-pointers, before being ejected. He has been seeing a lot of man-to-man defense, but took advantage of more room from the Ravens' zone for his treys. Gaels' rookie Mickey Sloniowski hit 13 points (including five in OT), and grabbed nine boards. He has taken over the team lead in rebounding with 4.9 rpg. Post Cook played a pivotal role despite pain with nine points and seven rebounds. Clarkson grabbed a career-high 10 rebounds.

After the game, Smart saluted the gallant efforts of several teammates. "Late in regulation, I was getting double-teamed, but Wyeth [Clarkson] really stepped up," Smart said. "He's come out of nowhere this year to keep us in most of our games. And [reserve guard] Mark Holland played terrific defense down the stretch."

When it was pointed out to Smart that Queen's outscored the Ravens 15-5 in overtime with Les Harold out of the lineup, Smith ejected, Mike Ruscitti and Roger Wheeler fouled out and Smart knocked out by injury, Smart replied, "We won because our guys on the floor at the end [Holland, Clarkson, Cook, Sloniowski and Darren Dugan] played great when it mattered most."

OTTAWA 92, GAELS 70

On Friday night, the Ottawa Gee-Gees opened an 18-point halftime lead, and overcame Dave Smart's 10 points in three minutes opening the second half to run roughshod over the Gaels. Ottawa shot 58 per cent from the floor and exploited a 37-25 rebounding edge. Smart led game scorers with 29 points

MEN CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

BY FRANK DIXON

GAELS 84, CARLETON 40

(OTTAWA) Gael Vicki Wilson hit 13 of the first 15 Queen's points on her way to a game-high 31, and snatched a game-high 14 rebounds as Queen's tarred-and-feathered the winless Carleton Ravens (0-10) on Saturday night. The Gaels used big advantages in size, speed, and smarts to put this one away early.

Queen's opened the game with a 15-0 run, led 40-21 at halftime and were never challenged as they moved their OWIAA East record to 5-4, good for fourth place in the strongest division in the country. The Gaels outrebounded Carleton 42-24, and shot 52 per cent from the floor, compared with 27 per cent for the Ravens, as they controlled all facets of the match. Carleton, facetiously called Last Chance U. by detractors, had no chance in this game.

The triumph sets up a must-win game against the fifth-place York Yeowomen (3-6) tonight at 6 p.m. in Bartlett Gym. A victory tonight will clinch a playoff berth for the Gaels for the fifth straight season. Queen's could still make the playoffs on scoring differential even if they lose to York by fewer than eight points.

Wilson's 31 points allowed her, with 815 career points, to surpass the 800-point mark in career OWIAA scoring. She is the first Gael and only the eighth player in history to do so.

Queen's point guard Jaylene Morrison came up with a career game of her own with 18 points and five rebounds, effectively leading her team's offense. She scored repeatedly with slicing dribble-drives and ten-foot jumpers. Forward Jenny Laughton continued her impressive play in this, her best season, hitting 14 points and grabbing seven rebounds.

With the score so one-sided,

Vicki Wilson: 815 career points

Women's hoops split in Ottawa

Vicki Wilson tops 800 career points

Gaels' head coach Dave Wilson was able to utilize his bench players extensively, and several of them made solid contributions. Ginger Howell (six points), Kristin Smith (four points), Anne Marie Baribeau (four points), and Erica Hollingdrake (four points) each helped out.

Carleton, the weak sister of the division for many years, looked last season like they might be on the verge of getting out of the basement this year. But several key recruits wound up as academic casualties. Rookie Raven guard Gillian Roseway (16 points, seven rebounds) showed speed and good instincts, and could lead her team to better days in the future.

OTTAWA 78, GAELS 66

The Gaels lost all chance of finishing higher than fourth place with this Friday night setback. Tremendous execution and smart coaching allowed Ottawa (6-3) to beat Queen's for the second straight time in OW play. Queen's had defeated the Gee-Gees by 18 points in a pre-season game at the end of November, but has suffered injuries to key players Trina Rasmussen and Cathy Amara since then. Had those two been available, the Gaels might have been able to overcome Ottawa.

The Gee-Gees got at least 19 points from three different players, who combined to outscore the Gaels by themselves. Melanie Oehling hit 26 points, Fabienne Perrin hooped 22, and Stella Ighorewo scored 19 points and pulled down 15 rebounds.

The opening half ended with Ottawa ahead 42-29, and was characterized by the Gaels' failure to convert many golden opportunities.

WOMEN'S CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

Fri, Feb 18
Benefit for Trucks to Nicaragua

Sat, Feb 19
The Inbreds with The Others

Thurs, Feb 24
Wild Strawberries

Fri, Feb 25
Saddle Tramps

Sat, Feb 26
Doctor Teeth with Friends of Stu

• PUB GRUB
• IRISH PINTS
• SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST
12pm - 5pm

Toucan

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) Tel: 544-1966

Chicken Breast, Cow Ribs

Check out the REAL thing at JJ's
5 oz Grilled Chicken Breast or 6 oz Rib Steak, served with a side of fries.

Only... $4.95

* Catch the Blue Jays at JJ's *
409 Johnson Street at University Tel: 547-3771

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

Quality, Comfort, Care
EYEWEAR

Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD.
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE

& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE

THE BIG ONE

THE ULTIMATE WINTER CLEARANCE SALE

ALL DESCENTE SKI WEAR
25 TO 50% OFF

PACKAGES

COMPLETE ALPINE SKI PACKAGE SKI, BOOT, BINDING INSTALLED 299⁹⁹

EVERY SKI, BOOT & JACKET ON SALE

BANFF MEN'S/WOMEN'S INSULATED JACKETS 30% OFF

ALPINE FLEECE JACKETS 39⁹⁹

M.S.L. 99.95

LANGE 4.6 MID SKI BOOT 199⁹⁹

M.S.L. 136.00

THINSULATE MEN'S SKI GLOVE 14⁹⁹

M.S.L. 50.99

PLUS ... GOGGLES, HATS, AND MORE ...

COMPLETE SKI SERVICE Dave Jones Sports

HOURS: MON-WED 9-6, THU-FRI 9-9, SAT 9-6

86 PRINCESS STREET • 544-7544

The figure skating championships took place over the weekend. Details in Friday's issue. BOHDAN YAKIMECZKI

INTRAMURALS

A whole lot of tournies going on!

BY ROB CAMP

While that was the action two weeks ago, the BEWIC Inertube Waterpolo Tournament ran this weekend past. Once again there were eight keen teams vying for the ultimate water-sport championship. After a divisional scrum from which only two would survive, there emerged the two finalists: perennial champion and odds on favourite Scilohocla (a.k.a. Flying Fish, Tag Team, or whatever sneaky name they can think of); and definite upstarts from left field, Eddies and Friends. Scilo survived a tough contest against Xoted to make the finals while the Eddies beat Moose and got help in the other contest to sneak in.

The finals were a see-saw affair that saw Scilo take a commanding lead only to relinquish it in the second half. Finally, late in the game, the Eddies succumbed after a couple of disallowed goals seemed to break their spirits. Scilo finished them off quickly en route to a 10-7 victory. Thanks to all participants, refs and convenor Heather Mace.

Upcoming Stuff: Next Wednesday in room 205 of the PEC at 6 p.m. is the managers meeting for both the WIC and BEWS Broomball Tournaments. Attendance is mandatory if you want a team.

Faculty of Arts and Science

- NOTICE -

FRIDAY, MARCH 4/94 IS THE FINAL DATE TO DROP WINTER TERM HALF COURSES WITHOUT ACADEMIC FAILURE

Field hockey gears up for OWIAA finals

Team ranks third heading into championships

BY L BROWN

Two weekends ago the field hockey Gaels travelled to Toronto for their ranking tournament, and in preparation for OWIAA finals, had the opportunity to face each of the five other teams in the indoor league.

The Gaels' first game was against the Guelph Gryphons. From the beginning, the Gryphons proved to be formidable opponents. Despite the Gryphons' first few dominating minutes and an early goal, the Gaels were able to adjust to the quick pace. Queen's tied the game in the first half with a goal by Laila Brown on a penalty corner. Although the score remained 1-1, the game was an exciting battle of both offense and defense.

An hour later, the Gaels met the Waterloo Athenas on the court. Once again, the Gaels took some time before settling into their game. A goal by Laura Fares in the first half broke the deadlock and put the Gaels in the lead. This was followed by another goal by Louise Barclay in the second half. Waterloo refused to give in and quickly answered this goal with one of their own. That was the only goal that goalkeeper Jen Putdy allowed the Athenas. The Gaels won the game 2-1.

In their third game, the exhausted Gaels were matched against the York Yeowomen. York, traditionally a strong team, represented a challenge for the Gaels. The Yeowomen came out in standard form, managing to score two goals within the first three minutes of the game. After the third minute, however, the Gaels appeared evenly matched against their opponents. The game proved exciting, with many scoring opportunities arising for the Gaels. Unfortunately, the Gaels could not overcome their early lapse and were defeated 2-0.

After a good night's sleep, the Gaels rose on Sunday prepared to meet the Western Mustangs. This match-up is always exciting. The Gaels were ready for the challenge and quickly took control of the game. Despite several defensive errors, the Mustangs were unable to put the ball in the Gaels' net. The Gaels, too, were unable to capitalize on their scoring opportunities. This led to a disappointing 1-1 tie with the Mustangs. Until we meet again...

For the final game of the weekend, the Gaels were pitted against the CIAU outdoor field hockey champions, the University of Toronto Blues.

In a similar "Gaels pattern," the Blues scored the first two goals within the first two minutes of the game. The Blues had to work for their third goal, which was scored in the last ten seconds of the first half. In the second half, the Gaels defense held the Blues to a 3-0 win. The Gaels offense also worked hard, creating numerous scoring opportunities.

The Gaels' weekend performance ranked them third in Ontario. This is a promising position for the indoor field hockey team. With three weeks of practice remaining before the finals, the Gaels are hard at work improving both offense and defense. The team has high aspirations.

THE ALEXANDER AND IAN VORRES HELLENIC FELLOWSHIP
1994 COMPETITION VALUED AT $1800

THE FELLOWSHIP WAS ESTABLISHED BY MR. IAN VORRES (BA'49). THE AWARD WILL BE MADE TO AN UPPER YEAR UNDERGRADUATE OR TO A GRADUATE STUDENT AT QUEEN'S INTENDING TO PURSUE ORIGINAL WORK IN GREECE DURING ONE YEAR OR TWO CONSECUTIVE YEARS IN PHILOLOGY, ART HISTORY, ART CONSERVATION, ARCHAEOLOGY, HISTORY, POLITICAL STUDIES OR PHILOSOPHY, OR TO ATTEND A FULL YEAR PROGRAM AT AN APPROVED INSTITUTION, OR TO PARTICIPATE IN A SUMMER SESSION OR EXCAVATION IN GREECE SPONSORED BY THE CANADIAN ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE IN ATHENS OR OTHER APPROVED INSTITUTION.

APPLICANTS SHOULD FORWARD A LETTER OF APPLICATION WITH CV AND PROJECT DESCRIPTION, ALONG WITH THE NAMES OF TWO REFERENCES TO: DR. R.S. KILPATRICK, HEAD, DEPARTMENT OF CLASSICS, WATSON HALL, ROOM 506. THE AWARD WILL BE ADJUDICATED BY A COMMITTEE FROM THE DEPARTMENT.

FINAL DATE FOR APPLICATION: THURSDAY MARCH 31, 1994

Former Golden Gael could strike gold in Lillehammer

BY FRANK DIXON

Sheridan Baptiste played three different sports for the Queen's Golden Gaels while he was a student here from 1984-89. Now in the Winter Olympics at Lillehammer, Norway, the multi-talented athlete could strike real gold as a member of Canada's four-man bobsled team.

Baptiste, an Ottawa resident, is a member of driver Chris Lori's sled, one of two solid four-man squads Canada has entered for the Olympics. Lori's team, which also includes Chris Farstad and 1992 Summer Olympian Glenroy Gilbert, has scored some impressive results during the current season. But Lori could be overshadowed by another Canadian sled, driven by Pierre Luedders, which has really been coming on recently. Two strong teams give Canada excellent medal chances in this high-risk sport where a few thousandths of a second are often all that separates first and tenth place. Sports Illustrated predicts that gold, silver and bronze medals will be won by Switzerland, Austria, and Germany respectively, but the effects of weather conditions on starting order could upset that in a hurry.

This is Baptiste's second Olympics—in 1992 he went to Albertville, France. But Canada's bobsledding effort that year was plagued by infighting and poor organization, making the team the laughingstock of the Games. All indications are that those problems are things of the past.

Baptiste was one of the most versatile athletes ever to attend Queen's. He competed for the Golden Gaels in basketball (one season), football (four seasons) and track and field (five seasons)

Sheridan Baptiste COURTESY OF THE OTTAWA SUN

It's a WAC hat my dear Watson!

THE WAC
HATTING COMPANY
ORIGINAL BRAND

Tel: 547-0864

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS
An Clachan Apartment Complex
(near West Campus)

- ◆ Rent $602 per month
- ◆ September leases
- ◆ Utilities included
- ◆ Stove and fridge provided
- ◆ FREE PARKING available
- ◆ NO RENT INCREASE in September '94

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue
545-2501

Faculty HOT SHOTS Competition II

at the
Women's Basketball Game
Tuesday, February 15th
6 pm vs. York

Challenge your rival faculties and have a chance at a great prize package.

FACULTY CHALLENGE

The largest faculty group in attendance will be rewarded with free pizza.

HOTS SHOTS

Enter your name/faculty at the ticket table when you come to the game.

At half-time of the women's game, a male and female from each faculty (see below) will be randomly selected in pairs to shoot.

Working as a team, each pair will have 60 seconds to score as many points as possible. (Missed shots will be recorded for tie-breaking purposes)

The pair with the highest total wins a "Treasure Chest" of prizes, including: VIA Rail voucher each for $100.

Arts & Science ('94-'95) • Arts and Science ('96/'97) • Rehab • Law • Nursing • Rehab • MBA/Grads
Winners from Jan. 28: HOT SHOTS - Sally Kline and Wayne Lee.
FACULTY CHALLENGE - Phys. Ed.

PLUS OUR REGULAR FEATURE
The SHOT Long Shot* Contest - Your Chance to win $5,000
*Sponsored by The SHOT Pool Pub.

Men's BBall

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 15

in the same gym where he set a single-game Queen's OUAA record with 38 last year.

Queen's guard Dave Reid led his team with 24 points, seven rebounds and four assists. Ottawa had four other players scoring in double figures: Greg Maillet (15), Bobby Brown (13 points, eight rebounds, six assists), Clarence Porter (ten), and Ted Welz (ten). The home team's quickness, athleticism and desire overpowered the flat Gaels, who could only manage a season-low 28 points in the first half. Ottawa's guards showed particular ability to hit open teammates on the run with crisp passes which led to good looks at the basket. Queen's missed Wheeler (back) and Corwin Cambray (suspension) for this game, and Cook played with his sore right knee heavily taped. Reserve forward Harold stepped up with a career game: 17 points and five rebounds. Harold showed tremendous determination on the boards and some strong moves to the hoop, but hurt his right big toe and had to miss the Carleton game. Clarkson couldn't get anything to work, scoring just one point before fouling out with 11 minutes left. He had entered the game with a 17.7 ppg average—eighth in the division—and had scored in double figures seven straight games. Cook (six points) and Slonowski (five points, nine rebounds) made key contributions for Queen's.

The Gaels must win all three remaining games to have a playoff shot. Tonight at 8 p.m., Queen's hosts the third-place York Yeomen in Bartlett Gym. An unconfirmed report has York's leading scorer Vic Fantin academically ineligible for the rest of the season. At press time, the status of Smart and Smith was unclear. Smart awaits results of medical tests, while Smith could be suspended following his ejection. With Wheeler and Harold also iffy, and Cook playing hurt, manager Mark Dolato might have to suit up tonight for the shorthanded Gaels.

The Gaels must win all three remaining games to have a playoff shot. Tonight at 8 p.m., Queen's hosts the third-place York Yeomen in Bartlett Gym. An unconfirmed report has York's leading scorer Vic Fantin academically ineligible for the rest of the season. At press time, the status of Smart and Smith was unclear. Smart awaits results of medical tests, while Smith could be suspended following his ejection. With Wheeler and Harold also iffy, and Cook playing hurt, manager Mark Dolato might have to suit up tonight for the shorthanded Gaels.

The Gaels must win all three remaining games to have a playoff shot. Tonight at 8 p.m., Queen's hosts the third-place York Yeomen in Bartlett Gym. An unconfirmed report has York's leading scorer Vic Fantin academically ineligible for the rest of the season. At press time, the status of Smart and Smith was unclear. Smart awaits results of medical tests, while Smith could be suspended following his ejection. With Wheeler and Harold also iffy, and Cook playing hurt, manager Mark Dolato might have to suit up tonight for the shorthanded Gaels.

Women's BBall

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7

opportunities after cleverly working the ball into position. Head coach Dave Wilson remarked after the game, "We must have missed ten layups in the first half." Had Queen's managed to hit six of those, it would have been a completely different story.

Ighorewo, who has an amazing combination of size, strength, speed, and anticipation, finished the half with an astounding ten defensive rebounds, cutting off Gaels' second chances. The Gee-Gees closely shadowed the Gaels' point guards all night, played a trapping defense against backup point guard Erica Hollingdrake, and forced many turnovers which they exploited for scores.

Ottawa went up 58-39 with 12:41 left, started working the clock, and appeared to have it wrapped up. But Queen's made some halftime adjustments defending the wings, and these started to pay off as the Gaels scored 13 of the next 14 points to draw within seven at 59-52 with seven minutes to go. Queen's was concentrating on shutting down Perrin and Ighorewo, but that opened up chances for Oehling, who scored a dozen of her points in the last seven minutes, putting the game out of reach.

Ottawa decided that Vicki Wilson was simply NOT going to have a great game. Wilson, who had often enjoyed tremendous success against the Gee-Gees, got special attention as Ottawa sealed off the low post, which is her normal hunting ground. She was usually double-teamed in the paint by one player in front of her and a second behind her, and finished with 15 points and was able to shoot only 11 times. Laughton got hot from the outside in the second half, finishing with a team-high 18 points. Good games by Morrison (ten points), Tanya McIntyre (nine points, six rebounds, five assists) and Stephanie Jamieson (eight points) were not enough for victory.

Ottawa decided that Vicki Wilson was simply NOT going to have a great game. Wilson, who had often enjoyed tremendous success against the Gee-Gees, got special attention as Ottawa sealed off the low post, which is her normal hunting ground. She was usually double-teamed in the paint by one player in front of her and a second behind her, and finished with 15 points and was able to shoot only 11 times. Laughton got hot from the outside in the second half, finishing with a team-high 18 points. Good games by Morrison (ten points), Tanya McIntyre (nine points, six rebounds, five assists) and Stephanie Jamieson (eight points) were not enough for victory.

ENTERTAINMENT

Me and the Morganfields

THE MORGANFIELDS
THE TOUCAN
BY ANDREW MCALLISTER

Having first seen the Morganfields play the Drake Hotel in Toronto about three years ago, I knew I could expect a good show. Back then, the Morganfields were small fish in the Toronto independent scene, who prided themselves in producing consistently powerful rock music. Their punk/hardcore edge attracted good crowds to essentially free shows. This has changed. The Morganfields have made the jump to MCA/Watch Music and have moderated their music, seeking more melodic avenues than their punk beginnings. Thursday night was merely an affirmation of what The Morganfields have done so well, for so long.

The Morganfields are a three piece band who have been together (in various forms) for about four years. While Guitarist Alun Piggins and drummer Jay Santiago have consistently comprised the core of the band, the group has been a virtual revolving door for bass players. Mike Pond currently holds the hot seat, providing harmonies with Piggins to ensure his position (but I would not be surprised to see another line-up change in the near future). Having flirted with the independent scene for so long, the Morganfields have had their share of work finding a market for their music. "Alternative doesn't really mean anything any more...most of it out there is genre music," claimed Piggins. Regardless, The Morganfields had no problem drawing a crowd to The Toucan.

Since he wasn't very good at soccer or hockey, Piggins decided when he was 14 that he wanted to make his music the method of his subsistence. This long love affair with music showed in the performance Thursday night. The Morganfields were incredibly tight. Piggins' with his lanky frame, looking as awkward as a misplaced teen, stood upright relentlessly screaming the lyrics to the placid audience, not wavering on a single note. His guitar, seasoned with distortion, was aggressive but controlled by the knowledge gained through experience. Santiago's drumming pounded like the jackhammer rhythms of Sugar's Malcolm Travis. While I found Mike Pond's bass playing somewhat uninspired, it tied everything together. Their sound is immensely simple: Replacements and Neil Young with hints of punk.

While the performance was excellent, I believe that Piggins' songwriting is perhaps a little too inspired by Paul Westerberg and Neil Young. The same four chords, used just a little too often, are stale and highly derivative as a result of overuse by previous performers. Ironic indeed, considering "Second Wind" is about selling out one's artistic creativity. Regardless of these accusations, kudos must be forwarded

The Morganfields hair thrashing at the Toucan.

TRICIA BAUMAN

Neil Young. The same four chords, used just a little too often, are stale and highly derivative as a result of overuse by previous performers. Ironic indeed, considering "Second Wind" is about selling out one's artistic creativity.

Regardless of these accusations, kudos must be forwarded to The Morganfields for their dynamic and tight show. Piggins and Pond have a lot of stage presence; they don't just stand and stare at their shoes. Piggins' fantastic vocal work is expressive and convincing. His gritty voice gives his all-too-familiar lyrics an edge. His guitar solos are equally good, even if they do remind me of Neil Young. Overall, The Morganfields provided an evening of entertainment which was well executed and seemingly enjoyed by the crowd. As a live band they excel. I eagerly await to hear the offerings which are forthcoming as a result of their new record deal with MCA/Watch Music.

Rail t.e.c. tracks its way to Kingston

Jas. Campbell stylin' the James toque.

RAIL T.E.C.
THE TOUCAN
BY CATHERINE LIPA

The Toronto based group rail t.e.c. took the stage at The Toucan this past Saturday night, fresh from opening for the British band James last week in Toronto at the Opera House. The result was an energetic, polished performance for the rather sparse crowd in attendance.

"I'm So High" started off the night on a dark note caused by the extreme absence of lightning. However, lead vocalist Jas Campbell could still be seen sporting a James toque, and other James paraphernalia could be seen around the stage, attesting to rail t.e.c.'s admiration for the band.

The Toucan's small stage was rather constraining for the five-piece band, especially with the lively frontpeople, lead vocalist Jas Campbell and keyboardist and back-up vocalist, Barb Castelvi. During the fifth song of the night, "Radio Free," Campbell refused to be confined by the stage railing any longer. At this point, he took over the vacant area in front of the stage and wandered towards the back of the pub, singing to audience members along the way and jumping up on one of the front tables to do a little table dancing on his way back to the stage.

"We didn't expect anything to happen," Campbell explained in an interview after Saturday's concert. However, they quickly capitalized on the unexpected success of "Guilt" and their efforts eventually lead to opening spots for Curve and Carter The Unstoppable Sex Machine.

World," probably their best known song here in Kingston, it became evident just how much more energetic and raw rail t.e.c. are live, both musically and physically, than on record and video. This dreamy song was given some punch and the constant playing around between Campbell and Castelvi made the band a true pleasure to watch.

With the exception of one song, "Tomorrow Never Knows," the rest of the night's set consisted of songs from rail t.e.c.'s debut Intrepid release, Never Coming Down. This song was a slight departure from the upbeat nature of rail t.e.c.'s music and highlighted Castelvi's beautiful and surprisingly strong voice.

The show finished off with one of the first songs that the band recorded, "Guilt," which had been in heavy demand throughout the night. This was the track which brought rail t.e.c. to the public's attention after gaining air-play on the Toronto radio station CFNY, which took songwriters Campbell and William Broad by surprise.

"We didn't expect anything to happen," Campbell explained in an interview after Saturday's concert. However, they quickly capitalized on the unexpected success of "Guilt" and their efforts eventually lead to opening spots for Curve and Carter The Unstoppable Sex Machine.

The many similarities that can be drawn between parts of rail t.e.c. songs and British bands (such as Suede on "She's So Clean") can be explained by Campbell's love of modern music bands such as The House of Love ("Guy Chadwick is my idol," confessed Campbell), Blur and Catherine Wheel. As Campbell explained, "you listen to something for a long time, and then you don't and it comes up when you're songwriting." And, since Campbell does all the songwriting with Broad, his musical tastes will consequently appear.

However, as apparent in any of their songs, the rail t.e.c. sound is created as, according to Campbell, "everyone puts their own flavour to it anyway."

And what is the rail t.e.c. sound? As Campbell accurately described the band, rail t.e.c. has "elements of techno, dance and straight-ahead rock." If you were one of the many unfortunate people who missed rail t.e.c.'s show on Saturday, you might have to wait quite a long time before you see them again in Kingston. Between signing with a new label in Canada, signing a deal in England, touring Western Canada in March and April and working on new material for their next album, rail t.e.c. have their hands full as they continue on their self-confessed "slow and steady" rise.

Tonight! Fundraiser for Princess Court Cinema
3 Great Bands:
The Mahones
The Mugworts
Boag & the Whips
Fri & Sat Cheap! 7:30-9:30

Mon. Feb. 16th Sweetest Monkeys w/ guests The Freeway Band	Thurs. Feb. 17th Last Dipsomania before reading week! Come early!	Fri. Feb. 18th The Sidemen w/ guests Soul Cages	Sat. Feb. 19th Streetnoise w/ guests The Change	Every Sun. Wild Blues Yonder No Cover - Great Party!
Smart in Town for Reading Week? Invites you to come down and participate in our 10th Annual Hammered Olympics!
Agenda:
Mon. Feb. 21 - Olympic wings only 20¢ ea. Eat 1000 - get 20 FREE!
Tues. Feb. 22 - Olympic Trivia 8:30 A.Y.C.E. Olympic Spaghetti $2.99!
Wed. Feb. 23 - The Little Hammered Trio! Bring a Reindeer & beat the cover!
Thurs. Feb. 24 - Olympic Dipsomania! 1/2 price if you pay with crowns (or whatever Norwegian currency is) Special Olympic Shooters All Week! "Sore Knee" (Black Sambuca & Blue Curaco) "The Tonya" (whiskey in a dirty glass) *may not be available Only a Buck!!
Sat. Feb. 26 - The Blushing Brides w/ guests Boag
Fri. Feb. 25 - The Headstones w/ guests The Plaid Daddies
393 Princess Street 531-5300

A Spitiful Night

LESLIE SPIT TREE-O WITH VOLUME AJ'S HANGAR BY PAUL KOIDIS JR.

Patrons of AJ's Hangar were pleasantly surprised Saturday night as Kingston's own Volume took the stage in support of their upcoming independent self-titled cassette. Traditionally the butt of biting criticisms and odd jokes, Volume delivered a quality performance promising to change the tide of public perception. In fact, they were very well received. Both loyal Volume groupies and newcomers alike found themselves tapping their feet and nodding approvingly to the alternative genre of music the band put forth.

A bare-legged and barefoot Mike List lead the band through a set of songs which consisted mostly of originals with a few faithfully done covers thrown in for good measure. Volume opened their set with "13," a tune displaying both a developing knack for clever songwriting that curiously mixes energy and angst which characterizes the slacker generation. Among the other personal favourites of the evening was "Minnesota," which possessing a good riff, strong vocal driving vocals and a very catchy twangy hook, has definite alternative radio appeal.

The covers were approached true to form but fell flat at times, particularly the rendition of Tool's "Sober," which ultimately should have been dropped from the roster altogether. However, in all fairness, the band sounded reasonably tight considering they did not have the benefit of either professional sound mixing or even a proper sound check. Perhaps this explains the painful incident of stray feedback off the otherwise inaudible keyboard which sent a shrilling and piercing soundwave through most of the audience, rivaling List's own shrilling and piercing delivery (ouch).

Volume have a definite raw quality about them, probably owing more to a lack of musical precision than the school of hard knocks, and are indeed in need of refinement. Although the band is definitely improving, they need to polish up their live performance skills. Yet, what the band may lack in musical proficiency they more than adequately make up for in moxy. For instance, it was impressive to note that although they have been playing together for only a year, most of the band's set was comprised of originals. As well, the band took the AJ's opportunity to debut a new song entitled, "Carry Me," written on the same day of its maiden performance.

Toronto's own Leslie Spit Tree-o, the night's headline band, arrived in town to soak up the local culture we have to offer by way of AJ's Hangar. The Tree-o is actually a five person ensemble, (explaining the confusion surrounding the incorrect spelling of the name) and have been successfully playing the circuit for some time now. The band actually experienced a modest degree of national success a few years ago with a catchy song and even catchier video which spotlighted the talents of a lethargic street dog with an arguably deceptive charm (yawn).

For anyone who doesn't watch Much Music, and accordingly is unfamiliar with the type of music for which the Tree-o is famous for, the band's music might be described as rebellious Indigo Girls meets James Brown. Something along the lines of folk ditties punched with moments of very soulful vocals undertaken by someone who probably also has a smoker's cough. Perhaps I have just described another Canadian, Sass Jordan, but for clarity's sake please try to keep the distinction straight.

The Tree-o began their set with "UFO," a well constructed song with a moderate tempo, solid progression and obvious mainstream appeal, but lacking for the moment, any visible audience approval. They followed it with another similarly well constructed song, known as "Cover," again with mainstream radio appeal, but possessing a more pronounced blues presence in the vocal lines. The band's rendition of "Angry" was memorable as it blended a great droning bass line with an incessant pinching, tinny sounding hook. However, as the Yawns, yawns, and more yawns.

TRICIA BAUMAN

set progressed, most of the songs seemed to mesh into one another, and judging from both the restlessness of the audience and the sparse dance crowd, the crowd seemed to be begging for some sort of musical oasis.

That oasis finally appeared when the band struck the opening chords to "Angel," the aforementioned popular song, featuring the video with the dog, although the canine was notably absent during the performance. The Tree-o finally succeeded to get members of the audience to pay more attention to the band rather than their pints, but only briefly, as their first set ended abruptly thereafter.

The second set of the evening, which started off with a couple of catchy ballads, essentially consisted of more of the same type of music played in the first set (yawn). In fact, the band played a second rendition of "Angel," which sounded a lot like the first rendition. And the dog was still not there. Towards the end of the set, the audience thinned out quite considerably except for the dozens of drunken patrons fumbling about, out of step on the dance-floor.

On the whole, the seeming failure of an otherwise successful band to engage the audience may just be the result of an off night. Typically, the Leslie Spit Tree-o offer just the kind of musical energy and spirited dancing which we have come to expect from seasoned musicians and performers. So what went wrong? Perhaps the crowd was expecting to see the dog and were subsequently unable to rise above their bitter disappointment. Perhaps the lead singer, described by one patron as "island unto herself," and clad in grey long underwear, Doc Martens and a t-shirt, which she must have slept in, had a touch of the flu. Whatever reasons were responsible for this rapid performance, one thing was abundantly clear. Most people wouldn't have felt cheated out of the four dollar cover charge if at least the dog had shown up.

I found myself sitting in front of the TV last Monday night, watching Jeopardy! and pretending to do work. I was trying to convince myself that having a book open on my lap meant that I was getting something accomplished—nice try, Jane.

Planning on making my way to a more productive workspace after Alex Trebek bid me adieu, I was enticed by the announcer saying, "Coming up next, The American Music Awards!" I knew I shouldn't have done it, but I sat down again.

I guess I should explain. I hate music award shows. Not only do they feature the same performers every year (usually artists I'm not overly fond of hearing anyway), but they also tend to award these same people each time—generally more than once throughout the night in a variety of supposedly "different" categories.

Every year, however, I watch the shows anyway in the hopes that they might change. Unfortunately, I always regret it.

This year I was forewarned of the torture that would follow over my three hours of viewing. As soon as I discovered that the hosts of the show were Will Smith (aka "The Fresh Prince"), Reba MacIntyre and—please say it isn't so—Meat Loaf, I should have walked away. But I persevered.

The evening began with two performances by Rod Stewart. Not only is he not American, but his first song was "Maggie May"—a tune he made famous twenty years ago. I thought this was supposed to be a fresh new show! I calmed down a little when they later presented him with an achievement award. I guess they thought having him open the show would draw a crowd or something, and he did seem to have a reason to be there after all.

One of the first awards of the night was presented to the "Favourite Rock/Pop Duo or Group." And the nominees were... (listed in alphabetical order, of course) Aerosmith, Pearl Jam and U2. The winner? A very surprised Aerosmith.

A few awards later, the category "Favourite Hard Rock/Heavy Metal Duo or Group" came up. The possibilities were (once again) Aerosmith, Pearl Jam and someone whose name escapes me. Again, the award went to Aerosmith.

Pardon me? I couldn't help but be reminded of the Grammy Awards of a few years ago. Trying to be progressive, the recording academy established a heavy metal category and gave the award to Jethro Tull instead of the obviously more deserving Metallica.

Aerosmith's win(s) raise other interesting questions: why were they nominated in both categories? How can they win both categories? Why bother having different categories if the same people win each one? How do they determine which artists should be nominated there?

This last question is particularly relevant to the "Favourite New Artist Heavy Metal/Hard Rock" category. The winner was Stone Temple Pilots (who also won the "New Artist Pop/Rock" category. Does this idea sound familiar?) But it's the idea of who their competitors were that made me do a double take: Smashing Pumpkins and Blind Melon. Yes, you read it correctly—Blind Melon!!! Aren't they that boring 70's-sounding poppy band, you ask? Not according to the Academy of Recording Arts—they're "heavy metal."

An aside to the members of the Academy—if you don't like your jobs, I know a lot of other people who would be interested. In another few months, I'll be available.

The big star of the night was Whitney Houston. Not only did she receive a standing ovation for her performance, but she was also presented with a special award of merit on top of the accolades she garnered in the Pop/Rock, R&B/Soul and Adult Contemporary divisions. (In the latter two categories, she was usually up against the same people, once again leading one to question how one determines the nominees.)

I'm not sure if I should be proud of myself for surviving the entire show—I even watched the country music performers, only resorting to the mute button when Michael Bolton was announced—or if I should be kicking myself for watching them again in the hopes that things would change.

It would all have been worthwhile if NKOTB (formerly known as The New Kids on the Block) had performed rather than just presented. Oh, well! Hopefully they'll make more than just an appearance at the upcoming Grammy Awards. If only I could be guaranteed a seat in the front row...

Egads!

JANE MUNDELL CONSIDERS HERSELF A QUALIFIED ROCK CRITIC BECAUSE SHE OWNS THE TIME-LIFE HISTORY OF ROCK TAPES.

ALL BANDS:
entry deadline for QEA/Alfie's
Battle of the Bands
is this Friday at 4:30 PM!

Get your tape and application into the QEA now!

QEA OFFICE: LOCATED IN THE JDUC NEXT TO THE TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK
PHONE: 545-2731

BE FAMOUS!
WIN PRIZES FROM THE FUNHOUSE AND OTHERS!

ENTER NOW!

The 1994 Chancellor Dunning Trust Lecture

Ursula Franklin

FRSC, Companion of the Order of Canada
Professor of Metallurgy, Emeritus, University of Toronto
Massey Lecturer 1989, Author of The Real World of Technology
Dawson Medalist of the Royal Society, 1991

Technology
and the
Tasks of Civilization
A Perspective
on the Twentieth Century

Tuesday, 15 February 1994
8 pm, Dunning Hall Auditorium
Queen's University at Kingston

Final Classics Concert features four local musicians

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
ENTERTAINMENT STAFF

The Kingston Symphony will present the final concert in its Friday Night Classics series on Friday, February 18 at 8 pm at Grant Hall. The guest conductor will be Georg Tintet and the feature soloists are four principal players from the Kingston Symphony: Gisele Dalbec (violin), Paul Mahr (cello), Laura Seiffert (oboe), and Susan Graves (bassoon). Featured on the program will be Haydn's Overture to L'Isola Disabitata, Sinfonia Concertante in Bb Major Op. 84, Symphony No. 103 in Eb Major ("Drum Roll") and Delius's Two Pieces for Small Orchestra. Tickets for the performance range from $12 to $18 and are available at the Grand Theatre Box Office, or by calling 530-2050. Rush student seats at $8 are available one hour prior to the performance upon presentation of current student ID.

Correction: Last issue incorrectly listed the Colorado String Quartet. The performance on Saturday, February 12 has been rescheduled for a matinee on March 20 (exact time is to be announced). The Entertainment staff apologizes for any inconveniences that may have resulted.

Campus Kits

For Her
$6.99

APPROXIMATE VALUE $25.00

For Him
$6.99

SAVE WITH CAMPUS KIT
AT THE BOOKSTORE NOW!

Try it... learn it... use it.

POWER PUBLISHING TOYS AT THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

COME HELP OUT WITH PRODUCTION AT THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Next press night is Sunday, February 27.
The Queen's Journal House • 272 Earl Street • 545 2800

Huge Mid-Winter Sale!

North Ridge is having a great sale on almost everything in the store!
Patagonia, Sierra Designs, North Face, Lowe Alpine, Royal Robbins and more ot.

up to 40% OFF!

NORTH RIDGE WILDERNESS

80 Queen Street, Downtown Kingston 546-4757

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

is now accepting applications for its next three entering classes. (September 1994, January 1995, April 1995)

General requirements at time of entry include:

- Approx. 2-3 years of college in a life or health science degree program.
- A minimum G.P.A. of 2.5. A more competitive G.P.A. is favored.
- A personal interest in a career as a primary care physician.

Northwestern offers:

- A professional school of 500 students with student faculty ratio of 12:1.
- A well-rounded education in Basic and Clinical Sciences, Diagnosis, X-ray, and Chiropractic.
- Full accreditation by North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the Council on Chiropractic Education.

Call: 1-800-888-4777 or Write: Director of Admissions
2501 West 84th Street, Minneapolis, MN 55431

Street Life

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Philadelphia 7:05 9:45
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40
Schindler's List 8:00
I'll Do Anything 7:10 9:30
Beethoven's II 2:15 4:40
Sat and Sunday!
In the Name of the Father 6:45 9:35
My Girl 2 7:20 9:25

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Grumpy Old Men 6:50 9:15
The Fugitive 6:50
Pelican Brief 9:15 (Double Billing)
The Piano 6:45 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30
The Getaway 6:55 9:35
Blank Check 7:05 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Tuesday (Feb. 15)
The Story of Boys and Girls 7:00
Bad Behaviour 9:05
Wednesday (Feb. 16)
Perfectly Normal 2:00
The Story of Boys and Girls 7:00
The Architecture of Doom 9:00
Thursday (Feb. 17)
Perfectly Normal 7:00
The Architecture of Doom 9:00
Friday & Saturday (Feb. 18 & 19)
Quartier Mozart 7:00
Jamon Jamon 9:00
Sunday (Feb. 20)
Van Gogh 6:30
Jamon Jamon 9:20
Monday (Feb. 21)
Jamon Jamon 7:00
Van Gogh 9:00
Tuesday (Feb. 22)
Van Gogh 6:30
Fearless 9:25
Wednesday (Feb. 23)
Paris, France 7:00
Fearless 9:10
Thursday (Feb. 24)
Paris, France 9:20
Friday & Saturday (Feb. 25 & 26)
M Butterfly 7:00
Dazed and Confused 9:00
Sunday & Monday (Feb. 27 & 28)
Dazed and Confused 7:00
M Butterfly 9:00

CLUBS

TUESDAY
Alfie's: Yellowbelly w/ The Goud-ibirds
AJ's Hangar: Princess Court Benefit Concert feat. The Mahones, Mugs-worts and Boog and the Broveyard Whips
Stages: No Fences (Tribute to Garth Brooks)
Shot: Hoşkell and the Cleavers
WEDNESDAY
Alfie's: The Mahones
JUC: The Fence-sitters
AJ's Hangar: Smartest Monkeys w/ The Freeway Band
THURSDAY
Toucan: Zen Bungalow
FRIDAY
The Toucan: Trucks To Nicaragua Benefit
Duke's: Gaudibirds
AJ's Hangar: Sidemen w/ Soul Cages
SATURDAY
The Toucan: The Inbreds w/ The Olhers
AJ's: Street Noise w/ The Change

PERFORMANCES

GRAND THEATRE 218 PRINCESS STREET (546-5698)
An afternoon of family fun with Heather Bishop
Feb 20 at 2 pm
Tickets are $8

THEATRE

THEATRE 5 370 KING STREET WEST (546-5460)
Theatre 5 presents Draculo
Feb. 17-9, 24-6, Mar. 3-5 at 8 pm
Tickets are $10 (adults), $8 (seniors), $6 (students)

McARTHUR HALL AUDITORIUM
The Kingston Mastersingers Incorporated presents Anything Goes, featuring the music of Cole Porter
Feb. 17-9, 24-6 at 8 pm
Tickets are $12 and are available at the Grand Theatre Box Office (530-2050)

DOMINO THEATRE 370 KING STREET WEST (634-2602)
Domino Theatre presents Henrik Ibsen's Ghosts
Feb 24-6, Mar. 3-5, 10-12 at 8 pm

Tickets are $8 at the Grand Theatre or at the door.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

Free Sunday Film Series: The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism
February 20 at 1:30 pm

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through March 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Lang Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through Apr. 28
To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinson

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The forming royons of John Heward

EDWARD DAY GALLERY 253 Ontario Street (547-0774)

through Mar. 5
Russian artist, Mikhail Kaurzakov. Recent paintings on paper and canvos.

KINGSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY 130 Johnson (549-8888)
through Mar. 3
Exhibition: The work of Queen's BFA student, Lynn Hunt, is now on display in The Wilson Room.

Exchange Agreement with Queen's University of Belfast

Under the terms of this Exchange Agreement, a Queen's University student will be selected to undertake postgraduate work for a period of 12 months (1 October 1994 - 30 September 1995). Preference will be given to doctoral candidates but, in special circumstances, master's candidates may be considered. The time spent at Belfast may be counted as fulfilling part of the residency requirements at Queen's.

Queen's University at Belfast will provide a maintenance allowance of £5,500, a conference award of up to £275 and tuition fees will be waived. However, the student will be responsible for travel expenses and residential accommodation.

For further information, please contact Mrs. Jane Kalin, Registrar, School of Graduate Studies and Research. Applications must be submitted by March 15, 1994.

A bone of contention

DOMINO
OUTBURST RECORDS
BY BEN JONES

While the validity of generalizations can be overstated, the oft-noted delineation between east and west-coast hip hop is very real. East-coast rappers, the majority of whom hail from the various boroughs of New York City, tend to be more intellectually-and spiritually-minded than their gun-wielding, joint-smoking "gangster" cohorts to the west. This distinction is not without relevance, particularly with respect to the frequently mindless rhetoric of gangster rap.

A cursory glance at the back cover of Domino's self-titled debut album reveals little other than the rapper's origins (Long Beach, California), disposition to materialism (as evinced by the title of the song "Money is Everything"), and apparent likeness to former U.S. vice-president Dan Quayle (they both spell "potato" with an "oe" ending). Upon listening to the album, however, one is overwhelmed by the extent to which Domino's music is representative of west-coast hip hop, and, more specifically, of the misogynist vein of gangster rap.

Since hip hop is a musical genre which holds lyrics as its centerpiece, it seems only logical that its practitioners should have something of relevance to talk about. However, as even a quick listening reveals, lyrical content is definitely a weakness on this album. This factor is undoubtedly exacerbated by the fact that Domino is neither a gangster rapper—as evinced by the absence of the wantonly violent lyrics usually found on the albums of such rappers—not a critic of social justice. As a consequence the album suffers, quite literally, because Domino has very little to talk about. In this disc is at times almost unlistenable. If only the lyrics were more characteristic of east-coast rap, this album would be a definite winner.

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS
HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

NEED CUSTOM CLOTHING?

Come and check out:

Levanna Designs

CALL 545-6278

The lowest prices
100% Satisfaction
100% Quality

GUARANTEED

ASUS JACKETS

Jackets!
Jackets!
Jackets!

'Odds and Ends' Sale

Tonight 6-9 pm
JUC Upper Ceilidh

Unclaimed and Discounted jackets for sale at low prices!
Bring your own jacket and buy, sell or trade it with others!

BUSKING OUT!

busk v.intr. to perform for voluntary donations usually in the street or in subways ... or in the JDUC!
(Concise Oxford Dictionary)

Students, faculty and staff: get in the act for Busking Out!, our second annual spring festival, March 21 - 25.

Register now in the JDUC general office.

Performers will be asked to donate proceeds to Sexual Assault Crisis Centre through the AMS United Way Committee.

Prizes for best performances!

A.M.S. Achievement Award

Are you eligible for on A.M.S. Achievement Award? This new award, instituted this year is designed to recognize outstanding volunteer contribution to the A.M.S. 10 points are needed in order to be eligible for the award. People who have reached 15 points are eligible for an award with honours and individuals with 20 points are eligible for an award with distinction.

POINTS VALUES FOR POSITIONS ARE AS FOLLOWS:

Points	Activity
5	Chair of the Board of Directors
4	Deputies
4	STAR Assistant Co-ordinators
4	Tricolor Yearbook Volunteers
3	Student Directors on the Board of Directors
3	Committee Chairs
3	Orientation Facilitators
2	Sub-Committee Chairs
2	Orientation Co-ordinators
2	Assembly Speaker
2	Assembly Members
2	Committee Members (of an A.M.S. committee)
2	A.M.S. Rep. to a non-A.M.S. committee. (ie. JDUC Programming Committee)
2	Task Force Representative
2	Journal Contributor (4 stories or 4 issues of production staff)
2	Studio Q Contributor (reporter on 2 or technical staff on 3)
2	Kaleidoscope Buddy
2	Infobank Volunteer
2	Parent Resource Centre Volunteer
1	Participant Model United Nations
1	Participant Model Parliament
1	Participant Undergrad Games

If you need more information or want to pick up an application form drop by the A.M.S. office. Applications are due by February 18th. The award will be presented at the A.M.S. Appreciation Night—Sunday, March 27, 1994.

The Commerce and Engineering for Environmental Change Conference presents:

"The Greening of Technology: Towards a Prosperous Tomorrow"

The third annual conference will take place March 4 & 5, 1994 at the Faculty Club. Speakers include representatives from:

- The Body Shop
- ORTECH Corporation
- INCO
- National Round table an Environment and Economy
- Black & Decker
- Forestry Policy Branch of the Canadian Government
- Department of Industry

Interested Commerce and Engineering students can pick up delegate applications at either ComSoc or EngSoc. For more information contact Jen Martandale at 542-2098 or join us at Clark for a delegate smaker featuring the movie "The Bear."

1994-95

ATTENTION GRADUATE STUDENTS READMISSION TO THE GRADUATE RESIDENCE & HARKNESS HALL

1. Application forms for residence and room preference forms will be available commencing Friday, February 11 at the Residence Admissions Office, ground floor, Victoria Hall. Please note that the office is closed daily between 1:00pm and 2:00pm.

2. Residence applications will be accepted at the Residence Admissions Office commencing 9:00am, on Friday, February 11. All application forms and room preference forms must be submitted to the Residence Admissions Office by 4:00pm on Friday, February 18.

3. Admission into residence, allocation of rooms, and Waiting List positions will be determined by a lottery. The results of the lottery will be posted on Friday, February 25, at the Residence Admissions Office, Jean Royce Hall desk, Harkness Hall and the Graduate Residence.

4. Students planning to enter first-year Graduate Studies, Law, Medicine, or the M.B.A. program may not apply for residence until an offer of academic admission to the University is made. Students who have received conditional offers will not be permitted to submit an application until the offer is unconditional.

5. A $400.00 deposit will be required, if accepted into residence, by Friday, March 11. $200.00 of the $400.00 residence room deposit will be refundable if the Residence Admissions Office is notified in writing before May 31 that residence accommodation is no longer required. The deposit is non-transferable. Please submit your deposit to the Office of Residence & Food Operations, Victoria Hall (any concerns regarding payment of the deposit should be directed to this office - 545-2529).

6. Indicate on your application form whether you are interested in only one or both of these residences (and the order of preference). It is not possible to be accepted into one residence and on the Waiting List for the other one, or to be on a Waiting List for both residences.

7. If you have any questions, please call Susan Buck at the Residence Admissions Office at 545-2550.

WHAT'S UP?

Pick up What's Up forms at the AMS Office Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5p.m.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

February

Feature

Queen's Feminist Review is now accepting submission until Feb. 15 from members of the Queen's Community at the AMS front desk. Essays, short stories, poetry, art, photography, sheet music, cover submission. For questions please call the Education Office of the AMS at 545-2725 ext. 4816

The Macedonian Students' Society of Queen's University is looking for new members. No experience necessary. Just call Cary at 531-0354 or drop us a note in our box at the AMS. That's all it takes. Don't be shy. Call or write today. We're waiting for you...

This Week

Tuesday, Feb. 15

Come one, come all! Any group or organization on campus that advertizes, fundraises, or promotes understanding and community awareness is invited to a meeting tonight at 7 pm in the Oak Room on Street Captaining. This programme will make your jobs easier! Don't miss out on a chance for better results! Contact Lisa at 545-2732 for more info.

Big Sister's Association Kingston is holding their 2nd annual Fashion Show at Memorial Hall, City Hall. Reception at 7 pm, show starts at 7:30 pm. Tickets $10. For tickets or more info, call the Big Sister's Office at 542-9202.

Friday, Feb. 18

Come and enjoy a Drama/Cultural performance to celebrate Black History month at Ellis Aud. at 6 pm featuring the "We are one theatre production" from Toronto invited by the Queen's Black History Collective. All are welcome.

Sunday, Feb. 20

Films about the artists featured in The Painter's Art: Masterworks of Modernism will be presented at the Agnes Art Centre at 1:30 pm on Sundays, Feb. 20 and 27. Although these Sunday programs are free, a voluntary offering to defray the costs of renting the films would be welcomed. The exhibition of paintings, prints and sculptures by Helen Frankenthaler, Robert Motherwell, David Hockney and Kenneth Noland are on view at the Art Centre until April 3. For further information, please call 545-2190.

Wednesday, Feb. 16

The AMS Coffee House presents: The Fencesitters. 8-11 pm in the Lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Come out and have a great time!

What is "fill Us In"?

"Fill Us In" is an AMS effort to gather input from students in an attempt to respond to your needs. AMS executive members and commissioners will be going around on a regular basis to listen to your comments and collect written feedback. If you don't want to wait for them to come to you however, you may pick up a form yourself outside the AMS office. Forms should be returned to the Communication Commission or to the front desk at the AMS.

The collected forms will then be directed to the people best able to respond to your concerns and suggestions. Keep your eye on the What's Up page for regular reports on improvements your student government is making as a result of your initiatives!

Don't miss your chance to have a say in the direction that your newly-elected student government will take. The best way that the AMS can serve you is by knowing what you want.

If you have any questions or suggestions regarding Fill Us In, please don't hesitate to contact Liz Harvey at the Communications Commission, 545-2732.

Upcoming

Big Sister's Association Kingston is holding their 2nd annual Fashion Show on Wednesday, Feb. 16 at Memorial Hall, City Hall. Reception at 7 pm, show starts at 7:30 pm. Tickets $10. For tickets or more info call the Big Sister's Office at 542-9202.

Films about the artist feature in The Painter's Art: Masterworks of Modernism will be presented at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at 1:30 pm on Sundays, February 20 and 27. Although these Sunday programs are free, a voluntary offering to defray the cost of renting the films would be welcomed. The exhibition of paintings, prints and sculptures by Helen Frankenthaler, Robert Motherwell, David Hockney and Kenneth Noland are on view at the Art Centre until April 3. For further information, please call 545-2190.

March 8 & 9: Preliminaries of the Andrina McCulloch Public Speaking Competition. Finals on March 10 in 201, Kingston Hall. Open to all Queen's Students. Register at Performing Arts Office, JDUC. Before Feb. 28. Total price money $1900.

For an amazing weekend of fun and games, with students from other universities, come out for Queen's Undergrad Games March 10-13. Application forms are due by Feb 10 outside the AMS office. Look for us in Mac Corry Feb 7-9. Queen's Undergrad Games -- Just Play It!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

BE CREATIVE! Carolyn Smart, Creative Writing Proving Writing/Publishing Workshop - John Orr Room, March 4th, 7-9 p.m. sign up at InfoCentre, Lower JDUC or call Melissa at 549-6889.

ARTS/FEST UNPLUGGED!!! We need musical talent! Acoustic night at the QP Tuesday, March 1st, 1994. Contact Julia at 531-5121.

VARIETY NIGHT AT THE GRAD CLUB!!! Stand up comic, band friends of Stu, Poetry reading etc. Anyone welcome to contribute! Monday February 28th 8 p.m. Phone Melissa for more info at 549-6889.

341 WAYS TO MAKE your letters more interesting! Book-making/Letterwriting Workshop - March 5th 2-4 p.m., John Orr Room - Guest speaker - Mr. Stephen Lewis! Sign up at InfoCentre or call Melissa at 549-6889.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House 51 Queen's Crescent. Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m.; Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m.; 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m.; Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP INS Thursdays, 8-9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, Gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome!

CAN'T SLEEP? Call the confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon. - Thurs. 6-9 p.m. 545-6000 ext 4444. Leave messages anytime.

THE WRITING CENTRE offers free advice about your writing assignments. Tutoring services are now available. Phone 545-6315 for an appointment.

CREATIVE WRITERS. Discuss your own writing with the acclaimed novelist Kate Sterns. For an appointment, phone the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

LESBIAN & GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2960 - staffed Monday - Friday 7-9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

HIDDEN COSTS CAN BE EXPENSIVE. Know the questions to ask before you sign the lease. Get help getting answers - call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

WORLDWIDE ADVENTURES! February 15th Odyssey Travel information night, 7-9 p.m. at The Shot, 8 Garrett St. Great door prizes. Be there.

HAVING A BIRTHDAY??? Free cake, champagne and a whole lot more at Dr. Girdy's Party Hard. Call Marc at 542-8616

TEACH CONVERSATIONAL ENGLISH IN JAPAN

Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore - Full time, temporary or for the summer. Up to $4500.00 per month. No experience, no qualifications necessary. For info pick up free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or write to Asia Facts (QJ) P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

95'S... Got a jacket from your first year? Pretty gross, eh? Come to the odds and ends ASUS Jacket sale. Sell or trade for a spiffy new jacket! Call 545-6278 for info.

EURAIL PASSES. Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available. Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

HELP WANTED

DESPERATELY SEEKING decision makers - faculty, staff and students needed to Senate Committees. Apply at the Senate Office (Mac-Corry B400; 545-6095).

NEED CASH FOR SLACK WEEK? Queen's Consulting needs telephone surveyors. Work on your own time. Leave name and number at 545-2309.

EXCITING NEW BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Summer job managers required coast to coast, excellent resume experience, low risk high profit, selling and installing in-ground irrigation systems. Call: Student Sprinkles at 1 800 265-7691.

EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH!!! Breakaway Tours is looking for motivated students, organizations and clubs to promote Spring Break and New Years trips! Leader in student tours for the past 11 years, we are looking for the best reps to promote our company. Best commission structure available, so call today to apply! Call 1 800 465-4257. Call and compare us to anyone!!!

BABYSITTER NEEDED Tuesdays and/or Thursdays 2:00-5:00, for a 5 month old baby. Experience/references preferred. Call 549-1219.

INTERESTED IN TRAVEL! Travel Cuts is looking for an enthusiastic student to work part time promoting unique student travel services to Queen's students. For more info call Ellen at 1 800 798-CUTS.

WANTED

WANTED: Dead or Alive two housemates to live with two guys. 178 University Apt #2. Spitting distance from Allies. Upright people need not apply. 531-1984 Patio Lantern House.

WANTED are short stories, poems, drawings, songs, essays, photos etc. For THE ILLUSTRATED MANUSCRIPT - Artsfest Anthology '94! Sold during Artsfest (February 28th - March 5th). Submissions to 183 University, call Melissa at 549-6889.

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

CLASSIFIEDS

HOUSEMATES (2 or 3) wanted to fill 5 bedroom house, rent $222 not including utilities. Very close to campus. Call Kevin or Greg at 531-9267.

HOUSEMATE WANTED: Two upper year female engineers are looking for a cozy house to live in awesome, third house at Albert and Earl. Non-smoker preferred. Please call 547-0375.

FOR SALE / RENT

WISH YOU'D BOUGHT A Queen's jacket? Here's your chance! Arts & Science jacket for sale, worn once perfect condition - price negotiable. Size 38 small. Call Julia at 544-0229 or 5441920

FOR SALE: Tuxedo, medium size, $100. Sega Genesis and three games for sale $175. Call 549-4392.

YONEX badminton racket, near perfect condition. MUST SELL. Call Andrew at 547-0102

ARTSCI '94 jacket for sale. Size 40 regular, nothing written on it. $150.00 or best offer. Call Steph at 549-4970.

FOR SALE: Two software packages - WordPerfect 5.1 for Windows and Lotus 1-2-3 Ver. 1.1 for Windows. $150.00 and $100.00 respectively or both for $225.00. All manuals included. Call 354-4681 evenings.

DISHWASHER FOR SALE. Hotpoint great condition, top hook-up, mobile must sell ASAP. Please call 549-5084. Price $170.00 negotiable.

HEY JERKY, BE MY VALENTINE AND BUY ME SOME @#%!! CLOTHES. Bamboo curtain, Fresa live, Souled Out, Raw Vibes, Brass recordings, all boarding vids (Dirty Dozen, Project 6...), Lids, Beans, T's, long sleeves, etc. Up to 40% off. "Don't make me come down there for you to, Tough Guy". PRODIGAL SON 177 Division St., 547-5800.

FOR SALE: Ritchey 18" mountain bike. Shimano XT drivetrain, synchro/bar, SPD pedals $650. 55 cm road racing bicycle frameset, with Stronglight headset and FX $140. Profile Airstyle tri-bar $75. Phone Michael at 547-4183.

SUPER NINTENDO for sale. Including two joysticks and two games. Call 546-0813 for details.

FREE TO GOOD HOME One "Green Monster" hide a hed couch, twin - not a Ghetto couch. Call 546-2942.

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classic, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

SPRING BREAK '94! Daytona Beach from $99 - Howard Johnson party complex! Panama City Beach from $139 - Ocean front properties! Cancun Mexico from $559 - Ocean front motel! Quebec City skiing from $239. Book now - space limited!! Visa, Mastercard, American Express. Call BREAKAWAY TOURS 1 800 465-4257. Ontreg #2422707.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Christine at 544-4506.

ONE ROOM LEFT to share with 3 upper years. Large, clean and at the top of University. Non smoker male preferred. Available May 1st. Call 547-3944.

4 BEDROOM, Princess at University, balcony, appliances, laundromat, photocopier, spacious rooms, close to campus, A&P, beet store and nightlife. Quiet building. Very low utilities. $1150 per month. Call 549-3069.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST:HP 48 G calculator. Where? Not sure. How will you know it's mine. Well it's not yours. Reasons to return it: 1) Rewards; 2) clear conscience; 3) avoid activation of self destruct. Call Greg at 531-9333 please.

LOST:In Mac-Corry: a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Heart-shaped gold watch on Saturday February 12th. Extreme sentimental value - engraving on the back. Reward offered. Please call Elizabeth at 546-0005.

LOST:Blue Phe '94 leather jacket. January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Man's Seiko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orvil at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Allies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ban Rich, Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

PERSONALS

THE ANTI-HOMOPHOBIA and Anti-Heterosexism Council of the Human Rights Office would like to thank all those who attended "Lesbians and Gays in the Courts: Questioning Legal Strategies" presented February 2nd by Diana Majury, Faculty, Department of Law, Carleton University. For a transcript, call Chris Veldhoven at 545-6886 or drop by the office, 1st floor, Old Medical Building.

MONSIEUR OUEST No matter what happens you will always be HOT GUY...actually, even better, a NICE HOT GUY!

MADAMOISELLE TARA SHAW - What would be the probability of us looking into chemistry beyond the organic type. Odds are you'd choose me over E1 or E2. Your shy (south) Western Valentine.

BOBBIE: Hello, gorgeous! Welcome back to the real world. I hope your little ears didn't freeze in the cold North wind. Please come back to me quickly. My feet are cold. Miss you! Love me.

NURSE BILL: We have little in common but my temperature still rises at the thought of your lips pressed to mine. I have a terrible fever. Please cure me. Patiently waiting.

TIM FROM WESTERN Seeking a missing heart in 2nd yr. Eng. Met at Brunswick House NY's Eve. Had a wonderful time. Should have found a pen to write down your last name. Call me (519) 439-7049.

LAURA G: We didn't get a chance to speak at Girdy's on Saturday night. If you know who I am, you know where to find me.// CJV, SM, CD, AD: Cigars, cheap rum, palm trees swaying in the tropical breeze, hot sand, hot men, lack of lunch and a hotel named after an alcoholic beverage...these beauties await you in CUBA. DSB.

TO MY PALS IN NEWS: Happy Valentine's Day to a bunch of wierdos. KTF

PATRIIHCICIA: Thank you so much for a beautiful Valentine's dinner. Too bad my date was better looking than yours.

To: the girls Amanda, Cheryl, PJ, MS, Deb & Mik: Happy belated V-day. From: The Lion's Den.

To: Kerm & Lo: Happy Late Valentines Day. Can't get enough of that sugar crisp.

To: Our much maligned AMS President: Those in the know are aware of the good job you're doing! Keep up the good work - only ten weeks to go! Happy Valentines Day! FED.

Eilonwy, Valentine's #3 was grand, wasn't it? Gotcha, luv ya. See ya soon, Taran.

TO JEN WHITE: From one journalist to another, I hope you're feeling much, much better. Let's be long-distance Valentines! A big "Hi" to Jane, Doug & Jeffy. Love your cousin, Brad.

BACK PAGE

It has been more than a month now, since I was taken hostage during a hold-up at Birks in the Eaton Centre. It seems amazing that it has been that long, because in a strange way, I feel like everything I have done since that day has been affected by the event.

It happened to me
a true story

With time, the terrifying memories of being forced to act at gunpoint have diminished. They have been replaced by a mental analysis of my own actions and thoughts during the episode. Of course, I have received reactions from every person I encounter, each of whom has shared with me that they can't relate, or they have no idea how they would have reacted. On reflection, it has become clear to me that most of us are probably quite well equipped to deal with such a circumstance in the most rational manner.

I find it scary, but also very humorous when I think back to the millions of thoughts that rushed through my mind during the ten minute ordeal. When the robbers first approached me, I remember thinking that I would try to stall them. If I could do what they wanted slowly enough, maybe they would be caught. I was thinking how stupid they were to take so long and be so greedy, because they would surely not get away.

While we were in the store, most of my attention was focused on ensuring their capture, and getting the jewellery back. Once I was alone with them, running down the mall, I had to watch the police retreat and I knew I was on my own. I guess my brain kicked into overdrive. I started thinking about, not fearing, the consequences of being killed. I thought of my parents' reaction, and the reaction of all the people whose eyes I had looked into as I left the store. Never once was I afraid of being killed; if that were to happen there would be nothing I could do about it, and so that would be wasted energy.

Then I was struck with the opportunity. Somehow, in a split second, my brain realized that I had a chance to get away; and I took it. This was not a long and drawn out decision, but one that was made and acted upon before I even realized I had done it. I am not an ultra-intellectual. Nor am I an experienced hostage. This reaction must have been based on two things. Part was instinct, and based on amazingly logical thoughts working in double time. The other part was based on, yes, movies and TV. Where else would I possibly have gotten the idea to hide behind a car to avoid possible bullets? How else could I have known that the unidentifiable object the off-duty officer whipped out of his pocket was an official badge rendering him a friend? I sometimes wonder who got more ideas from their media exposure: me or the robbers.

I am still uncomfortable with any symbol that reminds me of that day: hats with ear flaps, masks, guns, etc. I don't, however, have an overwhelming fear of it happening again. This is not because I don't think it could happen to me twice. On the contrary, I almost expect that something similar will happen at some time. I have been struck with the reality that these things do happen, to real people, at any time. Somehow, though, I have this new faith in my own, and everybody's, built-in survival mechanism. Obviously not every story has as satisfactory an ending as mine. I can not even be sure that if I were to be caught in trouble again, that things would work out as well. I do believe, however, that we are all survivors, and if we have even the slightest opportunity to come out on top, we will pursue it in a way we didn't even know was possible.

The writer wishes to remain anonymous.

Vocabulary

B U I L D E R

buddah (noun, hip-hop slang): marijuana. Probably derived from Buddha, the title for Siddhartha Gautama, the enlightened one and the Rastafarian reference to "the weed of wisdom." Example: "Score me some buddah, dude? Can be turned into an adjective, buddah-ful, as in "It's a buddah-ful day in the neighbourhood." Other synonyms for marijuana from hip-hop include the phunky feel one (Cypress Hill) and cheeba (Tone Loc).

go postal (verb phrase, derived from recent media events): yet another synonym for "go crazy." The phrase stems from US postal workers cracking under pressure and going on violent sprees. Example: "I've got three mid-terms and two essays due this week - I'll go postal if I do any more!"

marinate (verb, slang from the rap group Das EFX): to chill out, often with an alcoholic drink. Example: "Homeslice, I'm just gonna sit on the porch with an Extra Stock and marinate." RS. For the sake of those of you who want to private school, chill out means to relax. Homeslice and hamey mean wendy.

HEY, WE'D LIKE to let you know about a new group on campus. Called Bi The Way..., the group is for bi's, the bi-curious, and friends and families of bisexuals. If you're lonely and no one gay or straight understands the way you are, tune into CFCR's Virtual Reality on Monday nights for details on how you can get involved.

The Beatification of Elvis
by Dougal Lamont

Saints, relics, shrines and the like are peculiar things. In the past and occasionally in the present, Mary's tears, pieces of the cross and the hair and toenail clippings of the apostles were all shucked to believers. The fact that the pieces of cross assembled would have produced a structure several feet high and that toenail clippings alone could fill a sack was of little or no interest to the gullible masses.

Our thirst for ritual and relic remains unquenched, although it has now turned away from any notion of spiritual fulfilment. Instead, the pilgrimage is made to a tacky mansion in Memphis called Graceland, where an overweight, drug-addled, washed up Vegas lounge singer with a penchant for deep-fried peanut butter, banana and bacon sandwiches died of a heart attack on a toilet in 1977.

This truck driver, who was not shown from the waist down during his first appearances on TV because he suspended a length of rubber hose down his pant leg, became famous because record companies needed someone white who sounded black so they could make a killing peddling the music called rock and roll to America. Most of the songs he became famous singing were written in a music industry sweatshop by two Jewish gentlemen named Lieber and Stoller.

He managed to cement his fame by that great tool of the martyr, death. He is just one of several martyrs and saints who have been elevated to the status of worship in the past thirty years. Marilyn Monroe and James Dean are both in this category, in that their iconography is everywhere. But they are not worshipped the way someone like Jim Morrison is.

Morrison, a bad poet and an alcoholic with a propensity for collapsing drunk in the middle of concerts and talking about his dick, is one of the greatest saints of the late twentieth century. He was once charged with performing a lewd and indecent act in public, to wit, simulating masturbation on stage in Florida. Along with his gloomy lyrics, dying a bloated alcoholic death in a bathtub in Paris added to his mystique. The Doors made more money per year in the 1980's than they did in their entire recording career in the 60's. Morrison's grave in Paris was a much visited and vandalised site, culminating in the theft of his headstone a couple of years ago. The music of The Doors remains the music of choice for the depressed adolescent who likes to get high in a basement and feel like a rebel, or for emotionally retarded adults who choose to behave like depressed adolescents.

Real saints were not always perfect, though often that's how they got to be saints. Having been naughty at one point, they saw the error of their ways and turned to the path of righteousness. Take St. Augustine, patron saint of beer and lost causes (abem...the patron saint of the lost cause is St. Jude - slacker Catholic editor), whose oft repeated prayer was, "Lord, give me chastity - but not yet!"

Sainthood, like any position of leadership, has the down side that you cannot choose your followers. When Dan Quayle said that he loved Jimmi Hendrix, it should have been time for everyone in North America, if not the world, to sit back and have a long think. Perhaps Jimi's altered spelling of his own name is what caused ol' Dano to stumble on potatoe, as he so elegantly spelled it. He might have seemed a good deal cooler if he had said, "Well, that's how Hendrix would have spelled it if he were alive today," but instead he will be remembered as the stupidest vice president since the previous one, George Bush.

The consumption of worthless religious relics certainly has its parallel in the collecting of Elvis paraphernalia. Any useless piece of junk will do, whether it's an official collector's plate of Elvis' Hawaiian comeback or the latest in Taiwanese die-cast plastic iconography, the King's followers do not discriminate. Most of the stuff that passes for memorabilia are the modern equivalent of the Saints' toenail clippings.

There have been those who have compared worshipping Elvis with worshipping Christ - Christ is after all supposed to be the King of Kings, and Elvis is known as The King. They both died young. They both had comebacks, followed by a final demise.

It is possible to take the analogy a little too far. Christ, as far as I know, did not start dating a 14-year-old French-Canadian and wait for four years so he could marry her. Nor did Christ sport massive porkchop sideburns or wear rhinestone spangled tight bell-bottom jumpsuits and do Karate on stage. But who knows? Maybe if he had, he'd be more popular today.

Dougal Lamont is responsible for the recent ABBA revival.

FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER when you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by heater. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays
Expires Feb. 25/94

FREE CHICKEN SANDWICH when you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by heater. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays
Expires Feb. 25/94

AN UPDATE FROM THE ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMISSION...

Following the tuition fee increases which will be announced before the end of this academic year, the issues of university accountability, student aid, and transfer payments to the provinces will be discussed. It is important for students to be both aware of the current situation as well as the changes which may occur. This summary was designed to provide introductory information regarding each of these areas.

ACCOUNTABILITY

Universities receive close to 80% of their operating budget from public funds. In a climate of fiscal restraint every university must demonstrate to the taxpayers and students that they are making efficient and effective use of those funds. The issue of university accountability (as defined above) has been discussed at Senate and will be discussed at the March 4-5 Board of Trustees meeting. The cause of the increased interest in accountability was the release of the Broadhurst Report (a study commissioned by the government) outlining the ways in which universities could become more accountable to the government, the public and students. Some of the recommendations may translate into voting student members on the Board of Trustees (students can currently attend as observers) and the publication of university financial statements and annual reports for every interested individual.

STUDENT AID

Changes to the provincial and federal systems of student aid are expected to be released in the next few months. Specifically, the current OSAP system which provides student loans (no grants) will most likely be revised. The Income Contingent Loan Repayment Plan (ICLRP) is one of the models which is being closely examined by the government. The ICLR model outlines a universally accessible system (eliminating the current means assessment) and allows loans to be repaid according to income level. The payments will not have to be made if a student is earning less than the Ontario Median Income. The ICLR pilot project currently under way was designed to evaluate the effectiveness of this proposed system.

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT (EPF)

This federal act dictates how money is transferred from the federal to provincial governments. Currently, transfers made to the provinces under the EPF system include both health care and education. The lump sum of money is allocated by the provincial government and there is no formula outlining how much money should be given to each sector. As a result since 1977-78 (when the system was implemented) the amount of money budgeted per student has steadily declined. The policy has been criticised because transfer payments to universities are not fixed and are subject to massive decreases as the health care sector rapidly expands.

THE ONTARIO UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT ALLIANCE (OUSA)

On January 28-29, four Queen's delegates were present at the Inaugural OUSA assembly. The assembly was organized to discuss current policy, ratify the OUSA constitution, interact with key figures on the provincial education scene and discuss the future of the organization.

FOR MORE INFORMATION ABOUT ANY OF THESE ISSUES PLEASE CONTACT THE ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMISSION IN THE AMS OFFICE OR CALL 545-2725 EXT 4818.

United Way
Pool Tournament
5:30 Today

Haskell and the Cleavers Tonite

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873
TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1994 • ISSUE 33 • VOLUME 121

TUES - Willy P. Bennet
- Pot Temple
WED - Fot Spyder
THURS - Dipsol
FRI-SAT - Skydiggers!

inside

CFS PROTESTS, OUSA WAITS

While member schools of the CFS-O are protesting tuition hike proposals, OUSA, of which Queen's is a founding member, appears to be taking a relatively lax approach to the issue. —See page 3.

BLUE RODEO

The Journal scores an impromptu interview with Blue Rodeo's Jim Cuddy. Blue Rodeo played the Grand Theatre on Valentine's Day to a sold-out crowd. —For coverage, see page 22.

SPORTS

In the sporting world, Gaels skaters turned in a silver medal performance, as Queen's played host to the OWIAA Figure Skating Championships. —See page 16.

"This type of social activity creates a haven for harassment and coercion and gives students who participate the advantage of developing a camaraderie [sic] with their instructor." —A memo from Carleton student government official Theresa Cowan advocating official restrictions on student-faculty socializing. For story, see page 2.

Tuition hikes to be "substantial"

BY LORI THORLAKSON

Within days, the Ontario government is expected to announce tuition increases which Education Minister David Cooke warns will be "substantial," while blaming the increase on the federal budget.

Cuts to transfer payments to Ontario in last Tuesday's federal budget have left the province with $3 billion less than expected, which Cooke said will affect both tuition and payments to universities. Cooke is expected to announce tuition hikes and cuts in payments to universities next week. Tuition has increased 7 per cent each year for the past two years.

Queen's Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser said Ontario universities have already been told by the provincial government they can expect a minimum $24 million cut to government grants. This represents a 1.5 per cent cut to the base grant to Queen's. Fraser expects this figure, announced when higher revenues for the province were predicted, will increase.

The impact on Queen's is uncertain, Fraser said. "Until we know if the tuition increase is enough to offset the cuts, it is hard to know what environmental students will face."

However, Fraser predicts the cuts will affect the quality of education at Queen's. "Having absorbed close to a 7 per cent cut with the Rae government's recession plan, any additional cut comes out of the real resources that will provide the quality of the learning environment," Fraser said.

Fraser said he expects that construction of Stauffer library and the planned biosciences complex will not be affected by the cuts.

That money, he said, is in a special capital fund which the government has tried to protect during its cuts.

"Having money out there for capital projects is a way of generating work, and restarting the Ontario economy, so I think the government sees that as very high-powered dollars," Fraser said.

Fraser said Queen's will not absorb the increase to keep tuition at current levels, Queen's hopes to follow a policy of increasing student aid by a corresponding amount.

Alma Mater Society Education Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed said she is hoping to see a "comprehensive proposal" from the government, which would address accountability, accessibility and student aid.

She expects the tuition hike to be as high as 15 per cent this year. "We are expecting more than just a straight tuition fee proposal," she said.

Pirmohamed, also the AMS president-elect, said the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance is planning to circulate a petition among universities in March, calling for student aid reforms.

Because OUSA had been expecting the tuition announcement since December, they had not made any lobbying plans, Pirmohamed said.

Past increases to student aid at Queen's, which Pirmohamed said have been largely student-driven, may be a temporary solution, she said. "I think that it is a first step, but I don't think it is enough." With files from the Globe and Mail.

Former Whig Editor Harvey Schachter defends Surface at debate. TRICIA BAUMAN

Debate tackles Surface quandary

BY DAVE COLEMAN

On Feb. 16, the latest chapter in the Surface debate has been written, and this one involved just that—a debate.

The debate allowed for an airing of ideologies about the much talked-about newspaper, and focused on the resolution, "this house believes that Surface should resurface."

It was part of the Great Debates series organized by the John Deutsch University Centre, and was conducted in collaboration with the Queen's Debating Union.

Queen's student Mike Perry and former Whig-Standard editor-in-chief Harvey Schachter were yes-side advocates in the debate. The "no" position was championed by Darren Littlejohn, the oft-quoted Surface opponent. His teammate was Mark Givens, a Queen's alumnus who launched a grievance against the magazine.

The debate organizers were quick to mention, "it is not through a lack of trying" that the panel was all male.

Perry led off the debate, insisting that "diversity should be shown." Stating that expression is limited by having the Queen's Journal as the sole form of student print media, Perry said Surface is "a forum for voices not traditionally heard."

Perry said that Queen's cannot turn a deaf ear to the funding needs of Surface. "Money equals freedom of speech."

Littlejohn confronted perceptions about his personal politics. "People equate me being against Surface as being racist or homophobic," Littlejohn said. "This is not true."

Littlejohn's main quarrel with the embattled ASUS paper is what he perceives to be a bullying attitude. "There are many ways to deal with marginalization.

SURFACE CONTINUED ON PAGE 7

AMS director protests pay cut

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

With time running out in its mandate, the outgoing Alma Mater Society executive seems to be leaving a sour taste in the mouth of one of its appointed directors.

Meisha Hunter, director of Educating Students on Substances (ESOS), distributed a letter to AMS Assembly on Feb. 8, lamenting the fact that she had not received her complete honourarium of $3,000.

The letter stated that Assembly approved an operating budget for ESOS of "somewhere around $5,000, in addition to the honourarium paid to the director." The total budget was expected to be between $8,000 and $10,000.

In her letter, Hunter called the description of the operating budget "deliberately vague."

However, she said, the motion passed by Assembly "nonetheless makes it clear that the director is to receive an honourarium in the amount of $2,000 to $4,000.

"In reality," the letter read, "the director's honourarium was reduced to $500 by the AMS executive."

The final budget figure was determined after a successful referendum question last year, which added 25 cents to the student fee earmarked for the ESOS budget. The total budget for ESOS was $8,000.

Hunter earned $1,100 for her work with the committee over the summer, but she says she has only received an additional $500 since September, meaning she has yet to be paid almost half of the total honourarium.

In her letter to Assembly, Hunter said she felt uncomfortable going public with the issue, but said she saw it as "unreasonable to expect a director to work 20 to 25 hours per week for an entire year and be given $500." She said the reduction "threatens the continuation of this program."

Hunter said she brought her concerns to Assembly for two reasons, the first being that this is where the "ESOS proposal was originally debated and approved." The second was her view that the executive had effectively vetoed a vote taken in Assembly and failed to implement the wishes of the Assembly.

While reluctant to comment on the issue beyond the text of her letter to Assembly, Hunter said she wanted "as little mudslinging as possible."

"This will also be a matter for Assembly," she said.

Hunter took her concerns to AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner Bob Adderly, who is acting as a mediator between Hunter and the AMS executive. She has also discussed the matter directly with executive members, but declined to give names of specific individuals.

A meeting between Hunter, Adderly, and the executive was held on February 17th. Another is scheduled to be held before the March 3 assembly.

Todd Minerson, AMS Vice President (University Affairs), had little to say. "I'm not making a comment until we reach a resolution on the issue." Neither Adderly nor AMS President Katherine Phillips were available for comment.

TRICOLOUR GOT THE MID-TERM BLUES?
 Take a relaxing ride home ...
 In climate controlled comfort ...
 On a scenic luxury cruiser ...
 To visit loved ones ...
 And eat some real food!

	WEST CAMPUS	VIC HALL	JDUC	DROP-OFF POINTS	PRICE
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:10	Oshawa, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal	$20
MONTREAL	2:50	3:10	3:20	Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal	$25
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	Kanata, Pinecrest, Carling & Kirkwood, Bus Terminal	$16
RETURN: SUNDAY					PICK-UP POINTS
TORONTO	8:00pm		One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza
MONTREAL	5:45pm		Bus Terminal
OTTAWA	8:00pm		Bus Terminal

TICKETS ARE ON SALE AT THE BOX OFFICE
 NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

Student—professor relationships questioned

BY SHARON WILSON

A debate has been sparked at Carleton University after a student government official sent a memo to the university's departmental chairs and directors expressing concern over the increasing level of social activity between professors and students.

The memo states that "this type of social activity creates a haven for harassment and coercion and gives students who participate the advantage of developing a camaraderie [sic] with their instructor."

The Carleton University Students' Association's Director of Services, Theresa Cowan, clarified her reasons for writing the memo in a statement released after the controversy erupted.

Cowan said the memo "was not written to extinguish all instructor-student interaction, [but] was intended to remind instructors that they hold positions of power, and that this power should never be abused." Here at Queen's, student politicians do not appear as concerned. Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips said the student government has no desire for the regulation of student/professor relationships.

"It's pretty much a free world," she said. While Philips agreed that social situations involving students and professors might create a situation that would be uncomfortable for some students, she said she didn't think it's "something that can be mandated at all by the university."

Assistant to the Dean of Arts and Science Susan Bedell said the faculty recognizes that the fairness of academic evaluation may be compromised in situations where there are close personal ties between the student and the instructor. The conflict of interest policy allows for alternative means of evaluation arranged through the Department Head or the Dean.

Surface formally debated

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

Surface tries to say their way is the only way," Littlejohn argued.

Citing the Ontario Human Rights Code, Littlejohn asserted, "racist comments against any group is wrong."

Schachter approached this hot issue from a novel angle, speaking more from his own experience than of Surface. "Nobody understands satire ... they can assume the worst or the best," he said.

Schachter said people must be tolerant of dissenting views. "The university is a place of learning, a place to be unsettled, a place where you should be challenged ...

you can't just close your eyes and pass over [challenging ideas]."

Givens called upon the audience to ask minorities if Surface represents them. "Is Surface available for everybody to use?" Givens concluded the answer was no.

Stating that he is "100 per cent in support of minority groups," Givens said, "Surface could have been a dialogue instead of a vehicle of vehement hatred." Givens commented that he "doesn't think Surface should be shut down" necessarily, saying its editorial policy should be revamped.

Debate Facilitator Justin Moodie declared that there was no resolution on the matter.

Not A Commerce Student? Are You Interested in Taking Commerce Courses Next Year? HERE'S HOW

A certain number of commerce courses are open to undergraduate students in other faculties; however the space in these courses is limited. In order to most equitably allocate these spaces to students, the School of Business uses a balloting system for preregistration.

To preregister for any commerce course, you must complete a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot. Preliminary timetables will be available with the ballots; however, courses, sections and slots are subject to change without notice. Applied Science students may pick up ballots from their discipline offices, and students from all other faculties may pick up ballots in the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120.)

All completed ballots must be returned to the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120) by 4:00 p.m., Monday, March 28.

Forms will be processed according to the priorities assigned by your faculty; graduating students generally receive priority over all other students. You cannot ballot for courses for which you do not have prerequisites. If you are successful in the balloting procedure, your commerce course(s) will be pre-printed on your registration form in September.

ATTENTION ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS
 You cannot pre-register or ballot for commerce courses on an Arts and Science preregistration form. You must use a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot.

QUESTIONS?
 Please see Mrs. Moss, Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120)

CFS-O protests tuition hikes while OUSA waits-and-sees

"The CFS has been doing this type of protest for years and it never seems to get them anywhere...." Katherine Philips, AMS president

As students await the final decision regarding tuition increases for Ontario Universities, numerous schools across the province are rallying their student bodies to protest the hike in fees.

But here at Queen's, the prevailing attitude towards the hikes appears to be wait-and-see.

Member schools of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario (CFS-O), such as Trent, York, U of T and Windsor have taken an aggressive stance against the increase proposed by the Council of Ontario Universities.

In a document released in August, the COU recommended tuition increases of 50 per cent for undergraduate students, and even heavier hikes for graduate and professional school students.

The CFS mobilized students to declare Jan. 26 a day of protest, giving them the opportunity to organize petitions, demonstrations and faxes to be sent to Queen's Park, demanding the attention of Education Minister David Cooke and MPP's.

The interest generated was so great that some schools carried the protests over for another day. Ryerson and Carleton even went so far as to organize follow-up activities. On Feb. 4, Carleton staged a twelve-hour music marathon at their campus pub, during which time local bands performed for free and speakers were present to talk to students about the increases.

Ryerson also organized a Fax-a-thon to give students a chance to contact their MPPs to express how the increase would affect them personally.

According to Brigitte Herbert, CFS-O communications director, these efforts are paying off as awareness of the issue grows. "Our work at Queen's Park has been successful because up until this point the MPPs were not considering the opinion of students," she said.

"It has really hit the panic button because [the MPP's] are trying to play it safe in the face of the upcoming elections ... As the whole community is becoming involved, they have to take the protests seriously."

But Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips said "the CFS has been doing this type of protest for years and it never seems to get them anywhere... maybe there's a better way."

By comparison, the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, whose members include Queen's, Western and Laurier, has taken a less adversarial position to the COU proposal.

"It's more of a wait-and-see situation," Philips said, "but we will definitely fight to ensure that students' interests are met, including the availability of financial aid."

CFS-O's Herbert argued that "it's true some people think that what we do has no impact, but right now that's hard to measure ... because no matter what the outcome is, it's more than likely the results would be worse had we done nothing at all."

A tuition increase announcement from the Ontario government is expected this week, and David Cooke has warned that students will be slapped with a more "substantial" increase, blaming it on the federal budget.

Student officials at both Carleton and Ryerson attest the popularity of the protests to the frustration and powerlessness that students are experiencing.

Mo Gannon, editor-in-chief of the Carleton Charlatan, said, "people are determined to take a stand. They're not outraged but they're scared. Many of them think [the increases] are inevitable, but the protests are a consciousness-raising attempt ... increased awareness is changing the apathy."

Ryerson Vice-President (Education) Michael Bournstein said that Ryerson students are also frustrated with the tuition proposals. "They're upset and they don't have a say in the decision and are welcoming the opportunity to voice their opinion," he said.

"Because we are in a large cosmopolitan city, we have a diverse student body ... many come from low income families who cannot afford more tuition. This change would mean that many of them could not return next year. They realize how large increases would negatively effect their chances of obtaining an education."

Philips said the most important issue at hand is ensuring that the quality of university education will increase as tuition is hiked.

She suggested that if there is no noticeable improvement, then protest might be the only alternative. But as the AMS takes its direction from Assembly, she said, they must wait for approval of any such action.

If Queen's students wish to demonstrate against the COU proposal, Philips hopes that they will work with the AMS to do so. "Although I do believe that we could send a definitive message to Queen's Park against the increase, not every possible outcome of the tuition decision will necessitate protest," she said.

A chip off the old block

DEREK YARNELL

ICLRP may be privately run: Fraser

BY DENNIS PAO

The income-contingent loan repayment plan, proposed by the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance and others to assure accessibility in the face of rising tuition rates, will most likely be privatized, according to Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser.

"The ICLRP will be funded by private institutions such as banks, and only administered by the government," Fraser said.

The Bank of Montreal recently became the first bank to offer a student loan program independent of the government program already in place. Although not an ICLRP, such involvement may be indicative of what the future holds for student assistance.

"We implemented this program because the federal programs and the OSAPs [the Ontario Student Assistance Plan] aren't there anymore," said Doug Perry, manager of the Princess and Barrie Street branches of the Bank of Montreal.

According to Fraser, representatives from banks, government, and universities met in July, 1992 to discuss the role of each body in an ICLRP system. They came up with three proposals:

- A program administered and financed completely by the government;
- A program administered by the private sector, but with government guarantees on the loans;
- The same program, but without government guarantees.

"The ICLRP would be administered by the government, because the private sector doesn't have the analytical power of Revenue Canada to monitor the financial status of each student," explained Fraser.

"However, given the political concerns associated with the deficit, the government is unlikely to finance the loans itself," he said. "The private sector would provide the money and the government can choose whether or not to guarantee the loans in the event of default."

If the government decided not to guarantee the loans, the scheme would be essentially run by private institutions. Revenue Canada would still monitor the financial status of each student, but the collection of loans would be left up to the individual banks, Fraser said.

The Bank of Montreal's Perry suggested, "it's pretty hard to say what the banks would do [if the government doesn't back the loans]. The agreements would probably have to be co-signed, 99.9 per cent of the time, by a parent. The onus would thus be on the parent to pay back the loan in the event that the student defaults."

Fraser emphasized that although the private sector will be involved, students from lower-income families will not be at a disadvantage.

"One of the fundamentals of the ICLRP is that it cannot be discriminatory," he said. "Low-income students can benefit from subsidized interest payments or special rates. And we can stipulate that if your family income is above a certain amount, then you can't apply."

Fraser said the ICLRP would be "accessible to all students, regardless of income."

Miles Clark, an Alma Mater Society representative to the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, said if the program is similar to OUSA's proposals, accessibility will not be a problem.

IN 50 WORDS OR LESS

COOPER TO VISIT QUEEN'S

As part of the fireside chat series, Ms. Helen Cooper, former Kingston mayor and chair of the Ontario Municipal Board, will speak on "Women as Leaders: The Challenges, Rewards and Costs."

The presentation, sponsored by the Office of the Dean of Women, will be held on March 10 at 8 p.m. in the Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room in Ban Righ Hall. Everyone is welcome to attend.

QUEEN'S RESEARCHERS HONOURED

At its February meeting, the Killam Selection Committee awarded $2 million to 20 outstanding Canadian researchers in the 27th annual competition for the prestigious Killam Research Fellowships, administered by the Canada Council. The following three Queen's researchers were named as new Killam Research Fellows for 1994:

Mireille Calle-Gruber, French Literature; Claude Ollier, ecrivain de l'altreite

Merlin Donald, Philosophical Psychology: Consciousness Viewed from a Neurobiological Perspective; Colin Leys, Political Science: The Global Market Economy Against Liberal Democracy? The Case of Britain, 1979-1994.

QUEEN'S ENGINEERS SUCCESSFUL

Thirteen Queen's engineers participated in the 15th annual Ontario Engineering Competition, held Feb. 18-20. Queen's had two designs entered in the "Entrepreneurial Design" category, one entered in the "Corporate Design" category, an entry in the "Editorial Communications" category and four teams of two engineers entered in the Parliamentary Debate.

Queen's results: Tina Smith (Apple Math '94) and Laura Hemstock (Engphys '96) won first prize in Parliamentary Debate (Silver Tongue Award and a $1,000 cash prize, jointly sponsored by the Sanford Fleming Foundation and the Consulting Engineers of Ontario).

Mike Serbinis (Engphys '96) won first prize in Corporate Design ($2,000 cash value). His project was entitled, "Microsoft Network Life," and was the development of a Real-Time Network Optimization Problem-Solver using applied artificial life techniques.

Matt Schoenhardt (Engphys '96) and Craig Davison (Mech '95) won third place in Parliamentary debate ($500 cash prize).

CANADA'S MONARCHY

- AFFIRMS THE HERITAGE OF OUR PAST
- DISTINGUISHES US FROM THE USA TODAY
- PROVIDES A STABLE FRAMEWORK FOR OUR FUTURE

INTERESTED AGREE

MEET JOHN AIMERS, THE MONARCHIST LEAGUE OF CANADA
SUNDAY, MARCH 6, 4:30-5:30 PM

Informal meeting at Todd Alexander's house,
178 University Street

ALL WELCOME Information from Todd
531-3848 & League Offices (800) 465-6925

We have everything for your Formal
A World of Formalwear Awaits You

DOWNTOWN
KINGSTON
255 PRINCESS ST.
542-2026

CAREER GIRL

SPECIAL OCCASIONS & TUXEDO TOWN
ONE BLOCK UP FROM CAPITAL THEATRES

HOURS
MON-FRI 10:00-12:00
SAT 10:00-12:00
SUN 12:00-5:00

AMEY'S TAXI

546-1111

SPECIAL - Limited Time Only
University Coin Wash
282 University Avenue (at Brock)
Drycleaning - 15% off
Suedes/Leather - 10% off
WASH AND FOLD SERVICE - 10% OFF
WITH THIS COUPON
546-3590 Expires: March 31/94

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

After allegations of being caught with his hand in the cookie jar, Students' Administrative Council President Edward de Gale resigned Feb 7. De Gale was allegedly given a $400 cut on a $2400-$2800 computer purchase the Council made in late January.

The university's Assistant Vice-President of Student Affairs, David Neelands, learned of the kickback and informed the student council executive. An upcoming inquiry will examine the incident, along with the mysterious disappearance of $500 from the council coffers.

De Gale has returned the $400 and has obtained legal counsel.

The Newspaper

X

CAMPUS BRIEFS

THE UNIVERSITY OF LETHBRIDGE

It appears that the University of Lethbridge Pronghorns are teetering on the brink of extinction. Earlier in January, the University of Lethbridge's general faculties council voted 19-18 in favour of eliminating the university's athletics program, which costs approximately $450,000 annually.

School President Howard Tennant said that he is confident that at least part of the program will survive. He thinks both men's and women's basketball teams should survive, along with the Pronghorn hockey team, which is currently ranked number one in the country. The axe would fall on the soccer, cross-country, and track and field teams. Tennant noted that the U of Lethbridge cannot expect to be bailed out by alumni support, as U of T's athletics department was last year.

"The university's only 27 years old," he said. "The majority of our alumni graduated only 10 years ago, so they're not in the position to help fund programs."

The Gazette

Program reaches out to young internationalists

BY BROCK MANTLAND

The Queen's branch of AIESEC, the International Association of Students in Economics and Commerce, is reaching out to elementary students in Kingston.

The "Reaching Out" program places AIESEC volunteers in classrooms to teach children about internationalism. The students examine specific countries in small groups, and will present their countries in an international fair at the John Deutsch University Centre.

The Queen's branch of AIESEC created the program, which went on to capture an award for "best global theme programme" at the AIESEC Canadian National Conference. It will compete as Canada's entry against projects from around the world in AIESEC's Global Theme Conference, held in early June in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

AIESEC-Queen's Vice-President (Global Theme Programme), Juliet Knapton, described the program's focus as "education towards internationalism and cultural understanding."

"Reaching Out" sends about 30 volunteers into four different classes over a six week period.

The students, all in grades three to five, begin with basic learning about the countries they're examining. They then progress to more complex matters, such as population, geography, employment, production, food, and occasionally even the difficult subject of religion.

"Our final day is to basically talk about racism," Knapton said.

"For six weeks we go to the schools and work with the kids in their classrooms. On the seventh week, they come to Queen's AIESEC volunteer trains young internationalists in the ways of the world.

It's called the international fair."

At the international fair, students from the three public schools taking place will congregate to display their information, pictures, colouring, and presentations.

The young internationalists will also play games such as "geographical baseball," in which trivia questions are pitched at the children.

Currently, the children are still working towards this fair. They are organized in pairs, each pair focusing on one country. The volunteers work closely with these groups.

Knapton said the project has had great success thus far. "It's worked really well [because] it seems a lot of the Kingston area public schools want to have an international focus, but there's no money ... They were more than happy to have us come in," she said.

Knapton characterized the program's pupils as "amazing, they've been so responsive. They really soak everything up."

She believes "they really get an awareness that there is another way of living. And what we try and emphasize is that another way of living doesn't mean better or worse. Just different."

Winston Churchill Teacher Alan Walker, whose grade four students are taking part in the program, said, "I think it's great."

"Children respond so well to instant feedback. That makes a huge difference," he added.

Besides increasing students' awareness of the world, Walker said, "educationally, one of the biggest gains is just in research skills."

Gordon Webster, an AIESEC participant, is optimistic about the role the project is playing. "It'll develop their understanding of the world," he said. "We're trying to create a better awareness. With a better awareness, maybe the world will be a better place tomorrow."

The international fair presentations will take place Wednesday, Mar. 9, from 1 to 3:30 p.m. in Wallace Hall.

Faculty of Arts and Science

- NOTICE -
FRIDAY, MARCH 4/94
IS THE FINAL DATE
TO DROP WINTER TERM
HALF COURSES
WITHOUT ACADEMIC FAILURE

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

birth school clark death

Yup, that's about all there is.

the tunes no one else plays the party everyone deserves

clark hall pub • the unfknblvbl alternative

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

TOUGH TRIVIA
EVERY TUESDAY NIGHT!!!
LUNCH AT THE OP

THE QUIET PUB
FREE THURS MOVIES
Dazed and Confused
4pm
THE PROGRAM
6pm

Friday Afternoon Live
4pm

next week: DEAD-HEAD NIGHT & WINE-TASTING EXTRAVAGANZA II

MARCH 1st
BATTLE OF THE BANDS
SEMI-FINAL 1

MARCH 2nd
LITTLE BILLY SHAKESPEARE
AND
THE RUSTIC GOMERS

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

Alfie's

THE PUB PAGE

OPINION

Same-sex ads shocking??

CKWS-TV recently refused to air public service announcements about the realities same-sex couples face in Ontario. Station management has decided that the content of the announcements is inappropriate for their audience. CKWS is, evidently, afraid that the announcements will offend a sizable chunk of their market.

The three announcements were produced by the Coalition for Lesbian and Gay Rights in Ontario (CLGRO). They depict situations faced by gays and lesbians in the course of living in a homophobic society.

While some at CKWS have suggested the announcements are simply for shock value, CLGRO believes the ads present an effective challenge to persistent attitudes of heterosexism and homophobia often found in our society. The Station management's reaction to the announcements is evidence of the systemic homophobia and heterosexism CLGRO is concerned about.

With an audience including children, regulation of programming and advertising content is understandable. It is unlikely, however, that a child will be adversely affected by these educational announcements. Surely there are violent programs and advertisements with sexist or racist undertones aired on CKWS which, if station management is concerned about consistency, should also be refused air time. Most would agree that the 1-900 commercials — which are different in that they are paid advertisements and are shown only later in the evening — are offensive and sometimes shocking to viewers of any age.

CKWS is afraid of offending its viewers, and more importantly, its advertisers. Management's concern for the reaction of a conservative, vocal minority of advertisers has prevented the announcements from seeing the light of day.

It is an unfortunate reality that fear of an advertising pullout can dictate which public service announcements are aired on CKWS. It is unfortunate that the stations' refusal to air the announcements, prompted by homophobia, will not spark an advertising pullout.

Is the object of the broadcaster simply — and only — to turn a profit? Do considerations of profit and loss alone determine which public service announcements will be aired? Is all programming content at CKWS similarly determined?

By definition, public service announcements are designed to affect public opinion. Battling homophobia and heterosexism is an issue the media should use its powerful position to advance.

CKWS has squandered an opportunity to lead society in overcoming homophobia and heterosexism. Instead, it has allowed public opinion to determine its advertising/announcement content.

Paradoxically, the announcements in question were designed to challenge the public in the hope of changing commonly-held attitudes about homosexuality and lesbianism. Education is one of the most effective tools those agitating for change can embrace; it is a disgrace that the fear of a backlash from advertisers and viewers has prompted CKWS management to refuse the ads.

Little change can occur without the existence of a readily available, publicly accessible forum for distribution of the means of education: a forum which television provides. CLGRO's announcements are a much-needed and, judging from CKWS's reaction, effective means of challenging systemic homophobia, but the announcements cannot affect any change while they sit collecting dust somewhere at CKWS.

Rather than using their position of power as shapers of public opinion to challenge and perhaps change their viewers' attitudes toward same-sex couples, CKWS has allowed fear of reprisals to determine its content — a clearly inappropriate means of determining what is aired when dealing with an issue the public remains, for the most part, very uncomfortable with.

If those with power to change public opinion allow that power to be usurped by those supporting the status quo, the general public loses a catalyst for change. In an age when television has become more and more of a substitute for reality, broadcasters have more and more power to shape public opinion — for the better or for the worse. CKWS has abdicated the responsibility which accompanies this power: the responsibility to challenge and change public opinion.

The issues of freedom of speech and censorship are also raised by CKWS's refusal to air the ads. It is a frightening possibility, though likely more real than we care to admit, that advertisers can determine what is aired and what sits on a shelf: not only in programming, but in public service announcements as well.

CKWS does not realize homophobia is no longer acceptable, particularly by such a powerful force upon public opinion. In its reluctance to stir the waters of established public opinion, CKWS has come down on the side of homophobia. By cowardly refusing to air CLGRO's announcements, the station management at CKWS has offended a large segment of its viewing audience and has missed a vital opportunity to inform and educate the public on issues that affect more of us than they may care to realize.

But the accusation that this activity

Sex, profs and students

She's a 20 year-old psychology student, he's a prof in his mid-fifties—and there's more to their relationship than rat mazes and positive reinforcement.

Sex between faculty and students at university is nothing new. Both John Kenneth Galbraith and Lester B. Pearson met their wives while teaching them at university. Recently, however, the subject of student relationships with their professors or otherwise—has risen, in the form of a ban on prof/student relationships on a few campuses in the United States. An advisory memo to deans and department heads from a Carleton student government official has sparked a controversy on that campus.

The Carleton memo was somewhat broader in scope, declaring all prof/student relationships outside the classroom as potentially dangerous, and as hindrances to academic impartiality.

In other words, students who can afford to go out for a beer with their professors gain their favour, while those who can't, don't.

Here at Queen's, the attitude doesn't seem to be quite as severe. Queen's professors are encouraged to attend departmental smokers and events, professors invite a class over for dinner, and the end of the term is often celebrated over a pint.

Admittedly, there are barriers to some students that make extra-curricular prof-student relationships impossible. Many students who have jobs and/or families to attend to or who are on tight budgets can't take advantage of social opportunities as well as some other students can.

But the accusation that this activity

clouds professors' academic judgement doesn't seem to be a concern here. Professors and students can enjoy beneficial interaction outside the classroom and evaluations can still be fair. If any grievances arise, the University has conflict of interest guidelines which allow for evaluations to be carried out by a third party.

However, the Carleton memo's concerns about sexual harassment are valid ones. Students in relationships with professors are making themselves vulnerable to coercion and harassment if the relationship goes sour.

And conflict of interest guidelines do not work if the parties involved are not interested in calling attention to their relationship, as relationships between students and professors, in some cases, remain a social taboo.

The University must ensure that its procedures and policies to deal with sexual harassment between professors and students are fair and responsive.

That should be the priority. Implementing a ban on all prof/student relationships would be impossible to enforce—and would also probably drive prof/student relationships further underground making any sexual harassment, coercion and conflict of interest incidents even harder to report.

Furthermore, as both students and professors are adults, a complete ban on all social relations is insulting. However, because professors hold positions of power, relationships can potentially become unbalanced and manipulation is a distinct possibility. As adults, as in any relationship, both partners should enter with their eyes open, aware of any potential pitfalls.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

Three views on Law School cheating

PART ONE: THE DEAN

THE EDITOR,

I am writing in response to your recent editorial concerning the handling of matter of academic dishonesty by the Faculty of Law. Let me make it quite clear at the outset that the Faculty of Law has always taken matters of academic dishonesty most seriously and that we will continue to do so in the future. As for the matter of the first year Public Law exam, discussed in your editorial, your readers should be made aware of the difficult problem facing the Faculty of Law in this particular case.

This situation was not a clear cut case of academic dishonesty, as your editorial suggested. Indeed we had very little evidence indicating how many students had breached the rules established for this examination and, even more important, whether these alleged breaches were intentional or merely the result of misunderstanding the exam instructions. Given this lack of evidence, it was decided that students should be given the opportunity to acknowledge that they did not comply with the rules set for the examination and that they would not be prosecuted for academic dishonesty but, instead, be required to re-write the Public Law exam. Two students, to their credit, did come forward and they now face the onerous task of re-writing the exam. We have no reliable evidence that any other students violated the rules for this examination.

I share the concern of the Queen's Journal that academic dishonesty not go unpunished, but I suspect that you would have been equally outraged if we had proceeded to bring academic dishonesty charges against our students based only upon hearsay and innuendo.

—DONALD D. CARTER
DEAN, FACULTY OF LAW

PART TWO: PRES. OF LAW '96

THE EDITOR,

Having just read your editorial entitled, "Plea Bargaining 101: Law students escape rap," I cannot help but be somewhat disturbed by your publication's blanket condemnation of the first year law class. To call The Journal's characterization of Law '96 both unflattering and inaccurate would be a gross understatement of fact. To imply that the entire class has been "tainted" by the incidental exaggeration, but also a fine example of tabloid journalism at its best.

You base your entire stereotype upon the opinion of a single faculty member, who commented that the first year class seemed more competitive academically, as well as more insecure about their job prospects in comparison to previous years. I have purposefully omitted the words "fiercely" and "intensely" from the preceding assessment (as were included in your editorial). It seems that your writers have a penchant for the dramatic.

While I personally question this generalization, I suppose that there is a small minority of individuals within all faculties that exhibit these traits. In all likelihood, this is a direct reflection of the current economic climate, and the increasingly short supply of higher education. The toll this takes upon individuals is unfortunate indeed, however to take aim solely at the law school's environment is irresponsible and unfair. I am certain that every department and faculty comprising Queen's University share this common problem.

In no uncertain terms am I attempting to justify what occurred, nor am I trying to trivialize it. However, the fact remains that two individuals in a class of 60 were caught cheating within an examination framework that incorporated a take-home question. The process, through a logistical slip, proved incapable of preventing previously prepared answers from being submitted during the exam. While this is regrettable, it is certainly not "scandalous" as your paper implies, and the fact that two people were caught should not adversely tarnish the combined reputations of the other 58 in the class, or the other 160 members of Law '96.

Within any group, no matter its size, nor its consistency, there will always be those who attempt to shirk the system. While this is profoundly regrettable, it also happens to be human nature, and the best that we can do in an imperfect world is attempt to guard against it. Queen's Law does not advocate cheating. A majority of the first year class wishes that those responsible were dealt with more severely, however, given the lack of firm evidence about the culprits, and the need for sensitivity that such accusations require, the administration dealt with the matter in an expeditious and appropriate manner.

Your editorial was callous and judgemental to make sweeping generalizations about the entire class of Law '96, based upon a single opinion, and upon the actions of an isolated pair. Before you throw the baby out with the bath water, I think you owe Queen's Law Class of 1996 an apology.

—KELLY JAMES HARBRIDGE
PRESIDENT, QUEEN'S LAW CLASS OF 1996

PART THREE: A LAW '94 SLAMS LAW '96

THE EDITOR,

Cheat. v. To deceive and defraud, n. Swindling; defrauding. The act of fraudulently deceiving. —Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition

The headline of the Feb. 8 Journal proclaimed a recent incident of cheating among the first-year Law class "resolved." In what sense of the term is the issue "resolved?" Is it resolved because the two students who turned themselves in will face the "punishment" of writing the exam under the conditions they should have written under in the first place? Is it resolved because others who also cheated have not been discovered or come forward? Or is it resolved because if the professors and students of Queen's Law School shut their eyes really, really tight, the problem might go away?

This so-called resolution is an outrage. Not only have these students disgraced themselves, they have discredited their fellow students, their professors, and their profession. Little wonder the general public has the perception of lawyers that it does. And what of the friends of these students in Professor McIntyre's Public Law class? No regard to the fact that the entire class almost faced a re-

What did you accomplish over reading week?

talking

H E A D S

"I got frostbite."
—CHRIS WALSH
ARTS '94

"I saw the complete works of Bill Murray on video."
—MATT FENWICK
ENG '95

"I slept."
—KEN MUNNOCH
ENG '97

"A lot of rest and relaxation for midterms."
—DAN WONG
COMM '97

write and might face the stigma associated with the entire incident during articling interviews (don't believe that law firms will consider this matter "resolved.")

What of the profession itself? Rule One of the Canadian Bar Association Code of Professional Conduct includes as its first Guiding Principle: "Integrity is the fundamental quality of any person who seeks to practise as a member of the legal profession." The Code later adds that "(d)ishonourable or questionable conduct on the part of the lawyer in either private life or professionally will reflect adversely upon the lawyer, the integrity of the legal profession and the administration of justice as a whole." Hollow words, apparently.

As a future member of the legal profession, I, for one, am disgusted that this incident is seemingly being treated as a mere peccadillo by the law school, to be dismissed with a wrist slap and a tut-tut. These students might be

CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Sarah MacWhirter

PUBLICATIONS MANAGER
David Pavao

NEWS EDITOR
Jeff Gray

PRODUCTION MANAGER
Colin Ho

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Douglas MacGregor

ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Rob Furse

FEATURES EDITOR
Allison Masermann

OPINIONS EDITOR
Karen Hall

SPORTS EDITOR
Joel Sutherland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Joey deVilla

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
Marika Glickman

MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR
Joey deVilla

LITERARY LAPSUS EDITOR
Megan Nichols

ASSISTANT NEWS
Brad Elder
Brook Martland
Lori Thorlakson

ASSISTANT PRODUCTION
Adrienne Down

ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT
Ryan P. Chen

ASSISTANT SPORTS
Justin McKellar

ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY
Derek Yarnell

ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSUS
Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Ritchie

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT
Gabrielle King

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Andrew Nielsen

CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER
Alex Hamer

SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Fiona Macaulay

ASST SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Stuart Kedwell

HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER
David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, March 1, 1994 • Issue 33 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in the Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents © 1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of the Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.

Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 1X2
Telephone: 613-543-2800 Facsimile: 613-543-6728
Internet: journal@qucdn.queensu.ca

Circulation 10,000
Issue 34 will be published on Friday, March 4, 1994.

Real Live Slacker

EVIL BABY-SITTER
ACCORDING TO THE COMIC STRIP "DLBERT", IF FRIENDS ASK YOU TO BABYSIT THEIR KIDS, YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO CONVERT THEIR RELIGION!

HAIL ERIK ESTRADA, OFFICER FONCHERELLO ON "CHIPS"!

BUBBLE WRAP IS FULL OF A CHEAP BUT DEADLY NERVE GAS! EACH POP TAKES AWAY 30 SECONDS OF YOUR LIFE!

IF YOUR MUM AN' DAD HANG THE TOILET PAPER THIS WAY, IT MEANS THEY'RE ALIENS WHO ARE RAISING YOU AS LIVESTOCK!

TURN EVERYDAY HOUSEHOLD ITEMS INTO SEMIOTIC SHERGASBORDS!

ONCE REPROGRAMMED, RETURN THE KIDS TO THEIR USUALLY UNSUSPECTING PARENTS!!!

THANKS FOR WATCHING THE KIDS, CHELSEA!

MY PLEASURE, DR. MARTIN!

RED RUM! RED RUM! RED RUM!

THANK 2 ALL WHO APPEAR IN THIS STRIP

BY JOEY DEVILLA

OPEN FORUM

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9

handling trust fund accounts and even people's freedom one day, and the message they are getting is that if you are deliberately deceitful for your own benefit it is no big deal! They are free to go on and start looking for a Legal Ethics term paper to buy (should plagiarism not be an option).

At the very least, those who were caught should be made to apologize in public to Professor McIntyre and to their colleagues in first year, and should receive a failing grade in the Public Law course. I would suggest that suspension or expulsion would be even more appropriate. This is not a matter of my being bloody-minded or vindictive. These student took deliberate steps to cheat themselves, their friends, and their professor. And the deliberateness of their actions also suggests that any claims of mistake as to the exam's instructions were probably the result of wilful blindness on the students' parts. Moreover, if the supposed motivation for this deceit is the intense pressure of trying to get an arduous position in a shrinking market, I would suggest that: 1) the market might be a little better than it is if the general public did not believe the legal community was so morally bankrupt, and 2) if your first reaction to a stressful situation is to cheat, how does that bode for your future practise of law?

In conclusion, just one further point. To those of you who cheated but were not caught, you are the worst offenders of all. You deceived everyone and you are too much of a coward to even admit it. Are you able to face yourself in the mirror in the morning?

There is a hackneyed phrase in legal decisions about bringing the administration of justice into disrepute. After this farce, I know exactly what it means.
—ANDREW ELRICK, LAW '94

ESOS APOLOGISES FOR HET-ONLY CONTENT

THE EDITOR,

I am writing this letter in response to concerns which were raised in regards to the Sex, Alcohol and Healthy Choices spread in last Friday's Journal. The Educating Students on Substances Committee would like to apologise for the solely heterosexual content of the text and graphics. We understand that straight people are not the only people who go to bars, have parties, get drunk, get involved with another person, or have sex while under the influence.

The aim of the Educating Students on Substances Committee is to raise awareness about the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs, specifically with regards to issues such as unsafe sex under the influence, consumption patterns in residence, addiction, substance use among athletes, and sexual harassment.

The Committee receives literature and material from the Addiction Research Foundation, Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, BACCHUS, AWARE (Action on Women's Addictions Research and Education), HomeWood Health, Educ Alcohol, the American College Health Association, Health and Welfare Canada, the Liver Foundation, and the Alcohol and Drug Referral Centre of Kingston. Unfortunately, the literature referred to by ESOS does not include discussion of lesbians/gays/bisexuals in any way other than as a separate group.

What has come to the attention of ESOS are the following concerns 1) that homosexual attitudes and issues regarding safe sex under the influence were not discussed in our Journal submission/advertisement and 2) that homosexual issues regarding substance use and abuse must not be treated separately. Homosexuals live in residence as well as heterosexuals, homosexuals frequent bars as well as heterosexuals, homosexuals are athletes as are heterosexuals, and homosexuals have sex as do heterosexuals.

The matter of how to resolve this concern still remains. The ESOS Committee has received a list of organizations and groups from the Education Commission which distribute literature that could be used in order to broaden the perspective of the educational events and literature of ESOS to include everyone in the Queen's community. Recommendation will be made to next year's Director to address the concerns raised here when preparing educational literature and events. The ESOS Committee is willing to receive any constructive ideas in regards to this matter from the Queen's community.

—THE COMMITTEE FOR EDUCATING STUDENTS ON SUBSTANCES

BAN SMOKING AT QUEEN'S

THE EDITOR,

I am writing on behalf of non-smokers everywhere to speak out for the right to breathe. I felt I had to respond to some of the comments made in the article "The Butt Stops Here" (Friday, Feb. 11).

First, I want to say that I would support Bill 119 to ban smoking on the entire campus, rights of smokers notwithstanding. If someone is smoking in my vicinity, I know it, and I would support any bill that eliminated smoking from my environment. Dalton McGuirey stated that members of a university should be "allowed to smoke" and that it's unreasonable that prison inmates can smoke while university students and staff can not. I think that it is perfectly reasonable that if you are "allowed" to rob a bank then you can justifi-ably poison your lungs. A university is a place of higher learning, therefore it should be associated with intelligent ideas and policies, like not smoking.

Second, Dr. John Milligan of Queen's Occupational Health and Safety said that "everybody's happy with the situation we have now." I want to say that at least one person is not as happy as he would like to think. While I appreciate to no end the non-smoking policies within buildings, I do not enjoy having to enter those buildings through a cloud of smoke. Ridiculous policy, Dr. Milligan? Lowering taxes on cigarettes in response to political pressure was ridiculous.

While I am adamant about my own position, I recognize that smoking is an addiction and that smokers may feel victimized by such policies so I offer some solutions to Queen's. Perhaps we could create a new smoking area, say on the roofs of buildings. However, I could just picture the falling (or perhaps carefully aimed) butts hitting the happy non-smokers entering the building through a clean air passage, so maybe that wouldn't work. As for smoking in residence rooms? I know that if someone smoked on my floor, I would know it immediately and would not be happy. Maybe they could create smoking floors, or an all-smoking residence—wouldn't that smell nice? I'm sure you could even get corporate sponsors. (Q. "Where do you live?" A. "Matinee Hall")

For the time being, all I can say is that until an odourless, smokeless cigarette is invented, I will continue to encourage such policies as Bill 119.

—ANGELA BATE
B.S.C. '92, ARTS '94

Eds. note: A smokeless cigarette was invented by R.J. Reynolds in the 1980's.

It lost millions and was a huge marketing failure.

Then the king will say to those of his right hand, "Come, you that are blessed by my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me something to drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, I was naked and you gave me clothing, I was sick and you took care of me, I was in prison and you visited me."

Then the righteous will answer him, "Lord, when was it that we saw you hungry and gave you food, or thirsty and gave you something to drink? And when was it that we saw you a stranger and welcomed you, or naked and gave you clothing? And when was it that we saw you sick or in prison and visited you?" And the king will answer them, "Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me."

St. Mott. 20:34-40

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the Book of Common Prayer of 1959, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Borritfield (11:00).

Queerer-than-thou and proud!?

It is hard to be bisexual, lesbian or gay in a heterosexist, homophobic world. However, wholeness is a challenge for those who differ with conventions in other ways.

Sociology holds that the dominant culture decides acceptable behaviour. Individuals who buck tradition are disciplined in a variety of ways. Peer pressure is exerted on mild rebellion until the 'error' of one's ways is seen. Strong opposition leads to isolation, institutionalization, or elimination.

As the 'queer community' is a cultural mosaic, united by some same-sex attraction, intolerance should be reduced, however, in my experience, this is not the case. I have always tried to think critically, ask "why?" and probe answers such as "because I said so," or "that's just the way it is." This caused problems when I began to sort out my sexuality and realize I differed from the dominant 'queer culture.'

Some folks I knew in high school wanted to go to Toronto bars and discos. Queer peers felt this was required and desirable. As I did not want those things, was I an anomaly among anomalies?

Another thing troubling me was I rarely got bothered by homophobes. Had the label been around, I would have been tagged 'straight-acting-and-looking.'

It might be odd to want harassment, but this lack caused me sexual-identification problems (then 'gay,' having no other term) and friction among associates. Many colleagues manifested stereotypical effeminate images (whether innate or learned,) spoke frankly of strong sexual desire, liked disco, and were hostile to heterosexual males in private.

While I had no quarrel with most of these things, these traits were not me. I was rough. I had erotic thoughts about boys (and girls) I liked, but I did not burn with desire. (To challenge a myth about men, some have little libido.) On music and night-life, I preferred a range from Anne Murray to the Sex Pistols and either stayed at home reading or hung with punks, who were mostly straight and more accepting than queers.

Why go down memory lane? Because life has changed little in the 14 years I have explored queer culture, except I identify as bisexual and am political about problems with 'queer culture.'

I will not be ghettoized. While it is understandable to occasionally seek the exclusive company of queers, cocooning cannot not lead to liberation. We must be visible—for we are everywhere. We must forge links with other oppressed groups in order to fight back.

My dislike of bars has intensified; my quarrel with pink capitalists is the same as that with straight ones, and I will not subsidize union-busting bar-owners simply because they are queer.

I support people in pursuing their desired life. However, it is hard when that courtesy is not returned by those 'queerer-than-thou-and-proud' reluctant to accept diversity into a community founded around divergence from the mainstream. To serve notice—we're here, we're queer (both senses), and we're not going away.
—TIM MURPHY, ARTS '89

Hiring Schedule

Positions

AMS Commissioner and Directors

Applications Due: March 4

AMS Deputy Commissioners
AMS Service Managers,
Editors and Coordinators

Applications Due: March 11

AMS Committee Chairs
AMS Service Assistants

Applications Due: March 18

Walkhome Day Coordinators,
Constable Group Leaders and
QEA Managers

Applications Due: March 25

AMS Committee Members
AMS Services Staff

Applications Due: March 30

AMS Commissions

Academic Affairs
Campus Activities
Communications
Education
Internal affairs

AMS Services

Alfies & QP
Entrepreneurial Centre
P&CC
QEA
Queen's Journal
QSC

Hoods & Gowns
Studio Q
Tricolour Express
Tricolour Yearbook
Walkhome
Who's Where/What's Next
Work Bursary

LITERARY LAPSES

Friends, lovers,
confidences and confusion causes confrontations with lines to cross,
and impenetrable boundaries

Loneliness and uncertainty lies under surfaces that glitter with empty smiles which never quite reach the eyes emotions,
observed by the spiraling paralysis of the heart, as a hard wedge develops with rationalizations, tears,
and justifications
for wanting,
without knowing what

On opposing sides of the great divide, neither wants to be the first to attempt the precarious journey through the landmine filled with invisible obstacles,
despite the distant bridge which holds out the promise of reaching the safety of the other's side,
where firm hands,
and soft mouths
caress with delight
as the shimmering darkness enhances the surprise of unexpected gentleness which abounds in the firm thrust

As parts interlock;
hands,
mouth,
and eyes
a language is spoken, which only they can understand born briefly, there is but a short time for it to thrive

Tanya Schechter

For Jen

The day of the carnival
When we rode all of the rides and kissed was when you were most beautiful.

Sandro Pasquali

Point of Contention

Lakeside under clouds casting stones in silence
Like our thoughts they sink below the surface leaving only ripples

P. Skrivanic

How

Yesterday I found myself filled with fear

I forgot your face and pulled out an old snapshot

But when I tried to write you down
I was left speechless...

(How can you catch the colour of a sunset in words?)

Heather Katherine Grace

The Circle

There is a circle
in my body
that I can't confine.

It determines the knuckles of my spine and it knows something of the wine that carries from limb to limb
the warm bird
of my bones.

Kevin Bowers

Rabbit, Rabbit

I knew before you told me
And I've known for some time
Please excuse the bad poetry
I'll just try and make it rhyme
Now I'll always love you as a friend
Whatever you choose to do
But this is something novel
This amazing sexual coup
One side or the other
You really don't seem to care
And I thought as your friend
It would be easy to be fair
In fact I thought I was okay
And I thought it was cool
After my self-serving HAH speech
I feel like a fool
But old attitudes die hard
And culture's not easy to kill
There would have been no Crying Game
We'd have just beaten up Dil
But I'm trying to keep my mind open
So it won't hold me back
I hope you understand all this
And that you'll cut me some slack
I'm not sure if it's wrong
And I don't know if it's right
But I don't want to argue
And I don't want to fight
I hope to overcome this
And accept you as you are
I know I've been trying for a while
And I haven't gotten very far
No more can I bluff this pair of jokers
I had to tell you how I feel
I'm sorry if I hurt you
But now it's your turn to deal.

The Bingo Queen

Dance studio

I walked this street all winter long.
The broad flanks of snow lay piled into distant mountains at my feet, the dark facades of houses rising sheer as soiled torsos. Shadows snapping at me like black velvet capes of hidden matadors.
The dance studio was on the third floor.
The windows struck up sulphur blue lights into the dark. Sometimes I saw heads.
They all moved the same way, like fish sparked by food in an aquarium.

I never tired of looking at them,
their limbs ticking in awkward unison,
and froze while standing in the parking lot across the street. For months I imagined them always dancing three floors above everywhere I went.

Jason Heroux

Good writers never meet deadlines.

So we've extended ours. Submissions for the Second Annual Literary Lapses short story contest are now due March 22. And we mean it this time. Drop off your entries at The Journal, 272 Earl St. Stories should be under 2000 words. The two winning entries will receive gift certificates from Printed Passage Books.

TYLER WAS ALONE in the little green shed behind the house when he found it. He was supposed to be fetching some flowerpots for his mama, but the old shoebox, cobwebby and hidden until Tyler knocked over a tall stack of newspapers, seemed somehow important. It was a mystery. Tyler listened for anyone coming before picking up the box. He could hear flies buzzing in the little plastic window of the shed. There was a fat elastic band holding the lid of the box on, but it snapped when Tyler plucked at it, and the contents of the box spilled onto the earthen floor.

Ghost Rider. The Amazing Spiderman. The Uncanny X-Men. Phantom Force.

For a moment, Tyler stood and stared at the comic books in awe. There were about a dozen. Then, after making sure nobody was watching, he pulled the shed door shut and sat down in the dirt to read. He piled up the newspapers again and sat next to them, so he could hide the comics immediately if anyone came. Finally, feeling like an explorer breaking into a tomb, Tyler opened the first.

Dr. Gizmo's Unbelievable Vanishing Cream (patent pending)

A short story by Robert MacDougall

"Spidey! Are you O.K.?"
"My head... can't think straight... must concentrate... must... find... Kingpin!"
"The Kingpin? Crikey, Spiderman, he's getting away!"

Tyler knew Spiderman, and thought he'd heard of the Uncanny X-Men once or twice, but the rest were strangers to him. That didn't matter. He was lost in the bright colours of the pictures and the dry feel of the pages. Super-powers, despicable villains, hideous plots... Tyler found he couldn't read the panels slowly, but had to flip through each comic faster and faster. Whammo! Pow! Oof! There was so much he wanted to read and see and remember, and something was telling him to cram it all into his head as quickly as possible before — Before what? Before it could all disappear.

"Damn that slippery spider, boss... he's vanished without a trace!"
"Nobody just vanishes, you fool. I suppose next you'll be telling me this so-called 'Spiderman' can fly!"

Things had a way of disappearing. One time he and Jonathan Purdy pooled together about a month and a half of allowance to buy a couple of Superman comics at the Seven Eleven and the biggest, heaviest glass bottle of Cream Soda they could afford. (Tyler wasn't allowed to drink soda pop at his house.) They sat on the little patch of lawn in front of Jonathan's house, reading about Superman versus Mr. Mxyztylpx and swilling Cream Soda until Tyler thought he would bust. They must have lost track of time, though, because Tyler stayed past four-thirty and his mama came looking for him, cruising slowly down the street in her long green station wagon and hollering his name.

"Tyler Buckley Calhoun!" she said. "You were expected home one half hour ago!"

Tyler tried to apologize, but once she saw the comic books, there was no stopping her.
"I am surprised at you, Tyler Calhoun. I thought we had discussed our feelings about comic books." Tyler's mama watched Oprah, and was a fearless judge of right and wrong. When she said "comic books" it was like she was spitting out something bad to eat. "And as for you, Jonathan Purdy, I know your mother has her hands full keeping charge of you and all those sisters of yours without a man in the house. But I still expected better of you than this."

Jonathan looked like he might cry, but instead he ran off into his house without saying a word. Tyler remembered that. His mama kept hollering all the way home, and that night Tyler's daddy gave him a pretty good spanking. But where did those comic books go, Tyler wondered. He never saw them ever again. Come to think of it, he never saw much of Jonathan Purdy after that either. Tyler flipped on. At the back of the X-Men comic were a couple of pages of ads.

Amazing... Outrageous... Hilarious...
X-RAY GLASSES!!!
NOT an optical illusion but a SCIENTIFIC breakthrough that lets you see through... ANYTHING!

There was a cartoon picture of a guy with X-Ray glasses on looking at his hand. You could see all the bones floating in it, unconnected. Another guy with the glasses was watching a lady in a skirt. Yowsa! he said.

Throw your voice! Hypn-O Eyes! The hilarious Bag-O-Laffs! 1000 Scratch-n-Sniff Decals! The terrible Guillotine! (appears larger than actual size) Doctor Gizmo's Unbelievable Vanishing Cream! (pat. pend.)

The ads were almost better than the comics. Tyler had never known such things existed. And you could send away for them, to Sacramento, California, or Battle Creek, Michigan. They weren't cheap, but they weren't impossibly expensive, either. The terrible Guillotine was just $6.99.

Tyler looked for the order form to cut out and send away, and his heart stopped.

Full Name: Scott Gill Calhoun
Address: 1925 Appleton Road
City, State: Victoria, British Columbia

The force of the revelation left Tyler reeling. Of course! His big brother Scott had once had hundreds of comic books: Spiderman, X-Men, and Phantom Force, but also Batman, Daredevil, Judge Dredd, and probably lots more Tyler couldn't remember. The green shoebox... the top of their closet had held maybe three rows of those boxes! And even before he could read, Scott would sometimes let Tyler look through the comic books with him and read him the words.

"The game's over, Kingpin. Give it up!"
"Oh really? I don't think so, webhead. I think it's time I squashed this spider... once and for all!"
Aaargh!! Ooof!! Ka-Pow!!

Tyler flipped back to the dates on the front of each comic book. They were all about ten years old. He looked again at the order form. It was filled out in blue ballpoint which had faded with the years. The letters weren't written but printed, big and wobbly like Tyler's writing.

He traced the letters of Scott's name with his finger and tried to call up his brother's face. Scott was a teenager forever in Tyler's memory, and it was strange to imagine that he had ever been eight or nine. He remembered their room, and the bunk beds they slept in. He remembered the busted guitar that Scott had to hide from their folks and a Wolfman poster his daddy tore down off the wall.

Tyler remembered Scott telling him stories and teaching him games and wrestling with him and letting him win. He remembered boxes and boxes of comic books.

Tyler remembered lying in bed, listening to Scott and his parents scream at each other, and he remembered his brother coming upstairs and kicking things around. He remembered the night, of course, that Scott filled a laundry bag with warm clothes and told Tyler to take care of himself. He knelt down and hugged him then, and for a moment Tyler thought his big brother might even cry. But that was impossible. Scott just swallowed hard and then threw the overstuffed laundry bag over his shoulder and slipped out into the dark. Tyler, six years old then, caught the screen door so it wouldn't slam and wake his daddy.

All of these marvellous thoughts went through Tyler's head as he sat there in the little green shed with his brother's comic books in his laps. He was transported back to the old red house with a ravine behind the back yard, and to the days of a brother who knew about comic books and monster movies and everything. And so he didn't hear his mama until she threw open the door and said, "Tyler Calhoun. What in the name of the Lord are you doing holed up in here?"

Maybe he could have hid the comics, but he didn't try. "Look what I found, mama! These were Scott's comics! Do you remember? He filled out one of the forms in here and everything!"

The colour drained out of her face and her mouth fluttered open. "No, Tyler. No. There's nothing in here but junk. Old useless junk," she said, grabbing The Uncanny X-Men hard enough to tear the cover. "I don't know why we should keep it around. I don't know what possesses people."

"But mama, I—"
"Don't but me, young man. Go to your room."
And of course he did, leaving his inheritance — Spidey and Ghost Rider and all the rest — scattered in the dirt where he had been sitting.

Tyler didn't ask about the comic books when they called him down for dinner. He knew they were just gone, peeled off like a decal on his brain. Things that were gone like that, Tyler knew, didn't come back.

YES! I have read your ad and I am a TRUE BELIEVER. I wish to receive your FREE catalog of over 100 FABULOUS and INCREDIBLE novelty items TODAY, and have enclosed $3 for postage and handling.
Please rush.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

coming soon

Life After God

new short stories by

Douglas Coupland

author of Generation X

hardcover $20.00

reserve your copy today

Printed Passage Books

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

ASUS is now hiring

Commissioners

Academics	Communications	Internal Affairs	Society Affairs
Deals with all academic issues relating to Arts & Science students, including the DSC, Mind Find, Academic Orientation & Faculty Board.	Responsible for dealings with all campus media including the Journal, Surface, etc as well as several committees within ASUS.	In charge of all internal dealings within the society, including the CORE, fall and winter elections, ASUS Assembly and all judicial matters.	Responsible for co-ordinating the volunteer, fund raising committees within ASUS, including Kids 4 Kids, Balloon-ograms and Buddies.

All commissioners are also responsible for sitting on ASUS Council, attending and making bi-weekly reports to ASUS Assembly and maintaining regular office hours.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact any of the present commissioners at the ASUS CORE, 183 University, or call 545-6278.

Applications can be picked up at the CORE and are due on Friday, March 4th, 1994 by 4:30 and interviews will begin on Monday, March 7th. Interview times will be posted at the CORE.

THINKING OF TRANSFERRING TO THE COMMERCE PROGRAM?
THEN PLAN TO ATTEND

THE COMMERCE PROGRAM INFORMATION MEETING

Tuesday, March 8
Room 12, Dunning Hall
7:00 PM

Representatives of the School of Business Undergraduate Office, the School of Business Faculty, Commerce Students and Queen's Admissions Office will discuss:

- The nature of the Commerce Program
- Jobs and Careers after Commerce
- The School of Business International Exchange Programs
- Queen's Commerce Culture and Student Life
- Admissions Procedures, Criteria and Standards

If you're thinking of business school, please join us.
If you're unable to attend, information can be obtained from Room 120, Dunning Hall.

AMS Assembly Grant Applications

The Assembly Grant Application deadline has been extended!

Applications are now due:
Friday March 4, 1994
4:00 pm

Applications should be completed and submitted to the reception desk of the AMS Offices in the JDUC.

Interview times will be posted on the outer doors of the AMS Offices by 5:00pm. Interviews will be held in the AMS Offices in the evening between March 7 and 10.

For more info phone the AMS Office at 545-2725

THIS MONTH IN THE JDUC

- Tue, Mar 1 - Fri, Mar 4
AMS United Way Committee, Sale
Lower/Upper Ceilidh
- Tue, Mar 1 - Fri, Mar 4
ASUS, Artsfest
Ceilidh/McLaughlin Room/John Orr Room
- Fri, Mar 4, 9:00pm
Scottish Exchange Students, Ceilidh
Wallace Hall
- Mon, Mar 7 - Fri, Mar 11
AMS Committee Against Racism and Ethnic Discrimination, Awareness Week
Upper Ceilidh
- Tue, Mar 8, 12noon
MAD (Music, Arts, Drama):
Joey Latta, Classical Guitarist
Lower Ceilidh
- Tue, Mar 8 - Thu, Mar 10
AMS Education Commission, Women's Issues
Lower Ceilidh
- Wed, Mar 9, 8:00pm
GREAT DEBATES with Queen's Debating Union
Wallace Hall
- Fri, Mar 11
Queen's Medical Outreach, Display
Lower Ceilidh
- Fri, Mar 11
Queen's Red Cross, First Aid Demonstration
Lower Ceilidh
- Mon, Mar 14
ASUS, Kids for Kids Charity Auction
Lower Ceilidh
- Tue, Mar 15, 12noon
MAD (Music, Arts, Drama):
Queen's Ballet and Jazz Dance Club
Lower Ceilidh
- Thu, Mar 17
Student Health Services, For the Health of It: Community Health Resources Fair
Lower Ceilidh
- Fri, Mar 18
Queen's Medical Outreach, Auction
Lower Ceilidh
- Mon, Mar 21
Students for Action Committee, International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
Upper Ceilidh
- Mon, Mar 28 - Thu, Mar 31
Black History Collective, Display
Upper Ceilidh
- Wed, Mar 30, 8:00pm
GREAT DEBATES with Queen's Debating Union
Wallace Hall

BUSKING OUT!

busk v. intr. to perform for voluntary donations, usually in the street or in subways...or in the JDUC!
(Concise Oxford Dictionary)

Students, faculty and staff: get in the act for Busking Out!, the JDUC's second annual spring festival, March 21-25.

Register now in the JDUC general office.

Proceeds donated to Sexual Assault Crisis Centre & AMS United Way Committee.

Prizes for best performances!

QMA

News & Reviews

THE QUEEN'S MARKETING ASSOCIATION

THE QMA WANTS YOU!

Now is the time to start thinking about getting involved in the Queen's community with the largest organisation on campus — the QMA.

The QMA has over 25 chair positions available for the 1994-95 school year. We are looking for high-energy people who are interested in greater involvement in university life through hands-on participation on various projects within our 7 divisions. We encourage members of all faculties and all years to apply. Absolutely no experience is necessary.

If you have initiative, leadership and a team focus, the QMA may be for you! For more information we encourage you to come out to our information session on March 2nd. Look out for posters announcing the time and place.

If you have any questions please feel free to call Sylvie at 531-8652. In the meantime, think about getting involved in the QMA!

1994 QMA ADVERTISING COMPETITION

This year's advertising competition is well under way as the 24 participating teams work to create fresh and innovative advertising in competition for the 300$ cash prize.

The best of these ideas will be presented on March 12th, to a panel of judges from Warner Lambert, Kraft General Foods, and Procter & Gamble. Everyone is invited to attend, so watch for posters at the end of the month!

A Note to the Contestants: Don't forget that your submissions are due in the Commons by March 1st, at 5:00. If you have any questions please call one of Competition Committee members.

Good Luck!

Herstmonceux Castle T-Shirts!

The QMA business division is launching their latest product: Herstmonceux Castle T-shirts! These 7-coloured shirts are fabulous, and are a great bargain at only 18$ a shirt! There will be only 100 shirts available so be sure to get yours right away! The shirts will be available from March 4th to 11th in Mac Correy.

Upcoming Speakers:

John Sloan — Celestica Inc.
March 2nd, 5:30, Dunning 9

John Sloan will be speaking on the changing role of engineers in the business world today. An executive MBA, he has worked as an electrical engineer in IBM manufacturing, testing, cost engineering, and presently heads the Celestica Inc. IC memory card unit. Celestica Inc. is an IBM Canadian company which produces such memory cards as IC and SIMM, as well as hardware for IBM.

John Ballantyne — SPAR Aerospace
March 14th, 5:30, Location TBA

John Ballantyne, a Queen's grad, is an advanced technological engineer for SPAR Aerospace, the makers of Canadarm. More information on Ballantyne's speech will be available in March, so be sure to look for poster with more details.

QMA NATIONAL CONFERENCE

A REVIEW

The 1994 National Conference was held January 27th and 28th at the Ambassador Hotel here in Kingston. The Conference was a great success as about 200 students from across Canada, faculty members, and representatives from the business community attended the two-day event.

Marci Lipman
President, Marci Lipman Inc.

The theme of the Conference was: "Towards 2000... Marketing for the 90's Consumer." Among the impressive lineup of speakers were Roz Baker, director of operations of Roots Canada; Michael Kehoe, general manager of paper products for Procter & Gamble; Marci Lipman, president of Marci Lipman Inc.; David Sculthorpe, director of marketing of Adams Brands for Warner Lambert; Ferg Devins, National Brand Manager of Molson Breweries; Tom Mason, vice-president of marketing for General Motors; and the chair of Unitel Communications, George Harvey. The talks centred on, and dealt with how

Ferg Devins
Brand Manager: Molson Breweries Ltd.

technology is changing marketing and how important value-pricing is in the cost-driven market of the 90's.

The highlight of the Conference was marked by the Advertising Workshop hosted by Leo Burnett. Through active interaction, seminar members learned to identify the factors which make great advertising and developed a better grasp of advertising evaluation.

In addition, the QMA Ad Awards were also held, and the conference delegates judged Gee, Jeffrey & Partners' ad for CHUM-FM to be the winner. Of further interest is that this year's National Conference reached such eminence that it was mentioned in Marketing Magazine, a national industry publication!

Finally, the Conference Committee would like to thank all the delegates for coming. A special thanks also goes out to the Queen's School of Business and Procter & Gamble for their generous support. Thanks to everyone who participated, and we look forward to seeing you all out again next year!

David Chalmers
VP: Leo Burnett Company Ltd.

Sponsor Profile: Northern Telecom

Northern Telecom began its existence nearly a century ago as the manufacturing arm of Bell Canada; it has since evolved into a global corporation that employs over 60,000 people worldwide. Today, Northern Telecom is recognized as a world leader in introducing major technological advances and product innovations to the global marketplace. They have extensive operations and customers across North America, Europe, the Asia/Pacific region, the Caribbean and throughout Latin America. Their products are sold in more than 90 countries.

Letter from the Editor:

I just wanted to take this opportunity — as this is the last QMA newsletter of the year — to thank all those who have helped make the newsletter a success. Special thanks then to all contributors, to Dave Pardo of The Journal, and to the Advertising Division Chair, Sarah Lauriston, for her invaluable assistance and constant creative input.

I believe a big thank you should also go out to all QMA core members whose hard work throughout the year has given me much newsworthy material and which has made the QMA once again into a successful and dynamic organisation.

Jillian Boyd ☺

Thanks to our Sponsors!

Holiday Inn
KINGSTON

nt northern telecom

Goldfarb Consultants

W Unilever

WARNER
LAMBERT Procter & Gamble

KRAFT GENERAL FOODS

SPORTS

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1994

Gaels skaters settle for silver

BY ANDRA GILCHRIST

Jock Hartly Arena was barely recognizable as Queen's University hosted the OWIAA Figure Skating Championships. The competition organizers magically transformed the arena into an ice palace by covering the boards with royal blue coverings—it was very impressive and professional. All the participating teams were overwhelmed by Queen's warm hospitality. The weekend began with a great welcoming banquet on Friday evening at the Ambassador Hotel where the teams battled off the ice by playing a little Olympic trivia.

The actual competition began the next day with intermediate similar dance in which Ashley Eide and Jenn Watt began the non-stop point accumulation for the Gaels with a sixth place finish. In senior similar dance a third place was captured by Kim O'Halloran and Deanne Harada. Carolyn Pettit performed magnificently to earn a fifth place in the intermediate singles category. Once again, Deanne Harada dazzled the judges with her flow and style to capture gold in open solo dance. A fifth place in senior B singles went to Dorothy Lai for her good performance. Lisa Keyworth easily captured gold in the senior A singles to top off four years of competing for Queen's. The team of Keyworth, Harada, Eide and Yvette Hayes O'Sullivan earned two bronzes for their strong skates in both the open solo pairs and pairs four categories.

On the following day, Eide earned another third place as a soloist in the senior solo dance event. In the open technical program Andrea Medovarski, nursing an injured ankle, skated cleanly to earn third place. The rookie duo of C.J. Davison and Jana McLean dominated in the intermediate similar pairs event to capture a well-deserved gold. Michelle Dalton skated into fourth place in the open singles event, while Joanna Black and Andra Gilchrist paired up to nab fifth and sixth place in the senior similar pairs and variation events respectively. In the elements event, Dalton, Davison, O'Halloran, Medovarski, Keyworth and Harada combined forces to capture first place.

After the elements event, the Golden Gaels were tied for first place with Guelph. Anxiety was high as the whole team gathered in the dressing room for one last motivating "oil thigh" before stepping onto the ice for the final event of precision. Guelph had already skated a strong precision program, but were not invincible as the Gaels stepped onto home ice to give it their all. In the end, the decision lay in the judges' hands as the Gaels gave an equally strong precision performance. The stress of waiting for the final results was tremendous for the teams, and although the final point totals were 91 and 86 for Guelph and Queen's respectively, it could easily have gone either way. First place was so close, and yet so far for the Gaels as they had to settle for a well-deserved and hard-earned second place in the OWIAA Championship. This ranking was much improved over last year's fifth place finish. Congratulations on a job well done!

Many special thanks go to the spectators who were there to cheer on the Queen's team, to the organizing committee, to everyone who helped put on such a wonderful championship, to Michelle Dalton for all her extra effort, to Nilufer Erdibel and Leanne Tompson for being such great ice captains, to Jen the Trainer, and last but not least, to Carolyn Dennis and Connie Dwyer for their tremendous coaching and support of the team throughout the year.

Comeback kids came close

BY ANDREW TURNER AND ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Sunday morning saw Olympic history waiting to be made in Lillehammer. Either Canada would win its first hockey gold medal since 1952 (also in Norway), or Sweden win its first-ever gold medal in Olympic hockey. The game would indeed be renowned, as it was the first gold medal match to not just go to overtime, but also to a shootout.

Typically, the Canadians struggled in the opening frame and fell behind 1-0 on a Swedish power play goal. The period ended that way, due in large part to the steady play of goalie Corey Hirsch.

The second period saw the play dominated by the Swedes for most of the period. The Canadian goalie was outstanding and a legitimate claim that "Hirsch is God" could have been made by any Canadian booster.

The score remained 1-0 until midway through the third when, in dramatic fashion, the Canadians tied and then took the lead over the Swedes with goals by Kariya and Mayer. Then, with under two minutes left in the period, the Swedes tied it up on a blast from Svensson with Schreiber in the penalty box. Regulation time ended in a 2-2 deadlock.

The ten-minute overtime solved nothing—the gold medal would be decided in a shootout. After five shots each, both teams connected twice. In the sudden death shootout, after Sweden missed the first shot, Petr Nedved had a chance to claim gold but the puck rolled off his stick wide of the open side of the net. On Sweden's ensuing chance, Peter Forsberg put the puck past Hirsch on a great effort. This put pressure on 19-year-old Paul Kariya, who failed to score—Sweden had won.

Along with the entire Canadian team, fans across Canada were forced to be content with the silver. However, in a country where hockey is something sacred and a sport in which we consider ourselves the best in the world, silver is often not good enough.

Nonetheless, considering that our best players are toiling in the NHL right now, Hockey Canada has done an impressive job in producing two silver medals in the last two Winter Olympics. Oh, for the want of gold!

MEDAL COUNT: TOP 10

COUNTRY	G	S	B	T
Norway	10	11	5	26
Germany	9	7	8	24
Russia	11	8	4	23
Italy	7	5	8	20
United States	6	5	2	13
CANADA	3	6	4	13
Switzerland	3	4	2	9
Austria	2	3	4	9
South Korea	4	1	1	6
Finland	0	1	5	6

Canada's best ever!

Medal total of 13 is well-deserved

BY FRANK DIXON

ANATOMY OF A HEARTBREAKER: THE PENALTY SHOOTOUT FOR HOCKEY GOLD.

Part One: Each team selects five shooters. Canada wins the toss, and elects to go first. Teams then alternate shooters after first five.
CANADA
 Goalie: Corey Hirsch
 1. Petr Nedved scores—1-0
 2. Paul Kariya scores—2-0
 3. Dwayne Norris stopped—2-1
 4. Greg Parks stopped—2-1
 5. Greg Johnson stopped—2-2

Part Two: Still tied, teams proceed to sudden death and Sweden goes first.
SWEDEN
 6. M. Svensson stopped—2-2
 7. Peter Forsberg scores—3-2
CANADA
 Petr Nedved stopped—2-2
 Paul Kariya stopped—3-2
 Gold medal: SWEDEN; Silver medal: CANADA.

WOMEN'S FREE SKATE — WINNING BY AN EYELASH

Kerrigan won technical program (0.5 factored placements), Baiul second (1.0 factored placements). Here is how the judges scored:

	GBR	POL	CZE	UKR	CHN	USA	JAP	CAN	GER
Technical Merit	5.6	5.8	5.9	5.8	5.8	5.8	5.8	5.5	5.7
Oksana Baiul (Ukraine)	3	1	1	1	1	2	2	2	1
Artistic Impression	5.8	5.9	5.9	5.9	5.9	5.8	5.8	5.9	5.9
Technical Merit	5.8	5.8	5.8	5.7	5.7	5.8	5.8	5.7	5.8
Nancy Kerrigan (USA)	1	2	2	2	2	1	1	1	1
Artistic Impression	5.9	5.8	5.9	5.9	5.9	5.9	5.9	5.8	5.8

A tie is apparent for Baiul and Kerrigan in the free skate with four clear first-place ordinials each, but Baiul wins the free skate on tiebreak using Artistic Impression score from GER judge, for 1.0 factored placements, against Kerrigan's 2.0 factored placements for second in the free skate. Adding Baiul's 1.0 from the technical program to her 1.0 from the free skate gives her 2.0 factored placements, compared to 2.5 for Kerrigan. The lowest sum of factored placements wins, thus Baiul wins while Kerrigan gets silver.

CANADA'S MEDALS AT LILLEHAMMER

- GOLD(3)
 - Myriam Bedard, 7.5km biathlon
 - Myriam Bedard, 15km biathlon
 - Jean-Luc Brassard, moguls skiing
- SILVER(6)
 - Elvis Stojko, figure skating
 - National team, hockey
 - Nathalie Lambert, 1000m short-track
 - Philippe LaRoche, aerials skiing
 - Susan Auch, 500m speed skating
 - Sylvie Daigle/Isabelle Charest/Nathalie Lambert/Christine-Isabel Boudrias, 3000m short-track relay
- BRONZE(4)
 - Edi Podivinsky, downhill skiing
 - Isabelle Brasseur/Lloyd Eisler, pairs skating
 - Lloyd Langlois, aerials skiing
 - Mate Gagnon, 1000m short-track

Four banners won since last issue

Men's and women's curling landed themselves a banner over the break as well as women's squash and women's fencing. This brings the banner total for the year to eight. The record is ten and this feat was performed in 1990. Congratulations to the women's racquet teams who swept the banners this year (tennis, squash and badminton). Details to come this Friday, be there.

Has the PEC sold out to corporate giants? Don't be naive, drink Evian.

DEREK YARNELL

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1994

SPORTS

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL • 17

Hockey men drop 4-1 playoff game to Toronto

BY FRANK DIXON

The Gaels' season-ending hot streak, fun while it lasted, came to an end last Tuesday night with a 4-1 playoff loss to the University of Toronto Varsity Blues in the OUA Mid East division sudden-death semifinal game.

Performance in uneven strength situations was the deciding factor. Queen's failed to score on six power plays, including a lengthy one with two men up, while Varsity converted two of their three chances with the man advantage. Gaels' head coach John Phelan said as much when he commented, "We just couldn't capitalize on our chances, but they really did, and their goalie was outstanding."

Before a good reading week crowd at Jock Hartly Arena, the Gaels got off to a lightning start when Jamie Dinsmore knocked home Brian Mueggler's rebound only nine seconds after the opening face-off. Mueggler had burst in on right wing after a pass from Paul deVerteuil, and fired a low, sharp-angled drive which Varsity goalie Jim Boulieris kicked right onto Dinsmore's stick.

Queen's carried the early play, but couldn't add to their lead. Boulieris, who would win game MVP honours for Varsity, robbed Kenny Robbins on a breakaway 13 minutes into the game for the first of several superb saves in a one-minute Gael flurry.

Toronto equalized on a power play at 17:19 when captain John Andersen exploited a poor Gael's clearing attempt and rifled a seeing-eye slapshot into the long side top corner from the boards at the edge of the right circle. Two minutes into the second, a Queen's centre ice giveaway allowed Toronto's Tim Welsh to finish off a two-on-one by driving in his own rebound.

The turning point came when the Gaels couldn't get organized during a 73-second two-man advantage midway through the middle period. Queen's was standing around waiting for something to happen, and inexplicably didn't cover the points of the attacking zone, making it easy for Varsity to clear the puck. All night the Gaels failed to screen Boulieris on blasts from the point, and tried too often for the perfect play.

Olympic Trivia

Q. Where were the previous five Winter Olympics held, in order?

A. Albertville, Calgary, Sarajevo, Lake Placid, Innsbruck.

Q. What are the oldest Olympic events?

A. Though the Winter Olympics did not officially take place until 1924 at Chamonix, France, Sports Illustrated lists figure skating champions as far back as 1908.

Q. How many Winter Olympics were cancelled?

A. The games were cancelled in 1940 and 1944 due to World War II.

The Blues added to their lead at 14:58 on another power play when Daryl Cole swung in front of the Gaels' net and fired a low shot past partially screened Queen's netminder Bill Landry. With a two-goal edge, hard-working Varsity stepped up their already fierce checking and started winning most of the battles for loose pucks. Two more Gael power plays were wasted before Toronto's Kyle Mussmachtet sped in on left wing and fired a wrist shot high into the short side, seemingly catching Landry by surprise. That iced it for the Blues.

The spirited setback capped off a bizarre season for Queen's, which won its first two OUA games before dropping 15 in a row, most by one or two goals. But just when playoffs seemed out of reach, the young Gaels gelled and rallied to win five and tie one of their last nine games, finishing second in the four-team division. Critical wins over RMC (4-2, avenging the Carr-Harris Cup loss), Toronto (by 7-3) and division leader Guelph (by 2-1) spurred the team's strong finish. Instrumental to the surge was brilliant play by Landry, solid two-way defensive efforts from skaters, and just enough scoring to get the job done.

Phelan put the Gaels' season in a nutshell with this analysis: "We started out strong at the Waterloo tournament, and with wins in our first two league games. Everybody was working and checking hard, and that's what we need to be successful. But then we started cutting corners—one or two players would break down for a game or a period—and we lost a whole bunch of close ones. After Christmas, the guys came back with a lot of heart, resolved to show they were a better team than their record indicated, and they achieved that."

Gaels' captain and defensive stalwart Dan Brown earned kudos when he was selected to the OUA East's first All-Star team. Phelan remarked that Brown's game featured leadership, steadiness and maturity throughout the season. Last year the former Peterboro Pete made the second All-Star team.

[Eds. note: more Gaels hockey on page 18]

EUROPE CANADA ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance
 · Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399	"Bare Bones"
London	from 379	Round World	from 2399
Rome	from 629	via South Pacific
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
 15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

GOT THE FEBRUARY BLAHS ???

NOW AVAILABLE
 ORIENTAL DISHES AND PIZZA
 DO YOUR LAUNDRY,

FREE WASH

Limited to one coupon per visit
 Valid only with coupon, 5pm to 8pm daily
 Wednesday excluded

Scrubbies At the Bistro

Licensed Under the L.L.B.O.
 Laudromat, Billiards, Arcade and Bar
 IF YOU'RE NOT SCRUBBIN' IT
 YOU'RE NOT CLEANIN' IT

Last Load: 12 midnight
 471 Princess Street (at University) Expires March 10/94
 548-4916

NOTICE:
 The Scrubbies coupon distributed in the 1993-94 Who's Where is no longer valid.

Stone's Flowers
 LIMITED
 246 Princess at Sydenham St.
544-1208
 Present this coupon for a 15% discount on corsages

Fractal Design Seminar
 digital playground presents a seminar on fractal equations. Based on chaos theory, fractals are capable of generating infinitely complex patterns of unique colour, depth and beauty on your computer.
 for further information, call 547-5700
digital playground
 computer technology you can use
 209 Wellington Street, Kingston, ON, K7K 2Y6 (613) 547-5700

Gaels looked good in season finales

BY ANDREW TURNER AND ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Over the weekend of Feb. 18 and 19, the men's hockey Golden Gaels won two games over the Guelph Gryphons and the University of Toronto Blues. On Friday the Gaels played a strong defensive game to edge the Gryphons 2-1 in front of some rowdy fans who postponed their reading week plans to catch the action.

The following day, the Gaels maintained their momentum as they hammered the Blues 7-3.

Against the Gryphons, the Gaels came out aggressively which led to a first minute penalty to Jamie Dinsmore. The Gaels killed off the penalty with persistent forechecking which inspired a quick goal by Robbins on a rebound in front of the Gryphon net. The Gaels were finishing off their checks and the result was an early lead.

With Bill Budgell back in the lineup, the Gaels were a more physical team which led to several skirmishes and great hits. With just under two minutes left in the opening period, the Gaels went up by two goals on a great play which saw the Gaels keep the puck in the offensive zone and result in a nice backhand by Longo.

The Gaels opened the second frame rather flat and they paid the price as the Gryphons closed the gap to one as a Guelph forward blasted a shot by Landry at 2:11 of the period. Landry, however, kept the Gaels on top with several remarkable saves including one on a break away.

Harris, the referee for the game, did his best to infuriate the crowd with some highly questionable calls and non-calls throughout the middle period. Indeed, it appeared as if he had his own separate rule book just for this game. One worrisome decision was to let the period continue after the plexiglass shattered in the corner. Nonetheless, the game went on and the problem was remedied at intermission. Thanks to Landry, the Gaels left the second period still up by a score of 2-1.

The third period saw the Gaels cling to their lead as the Gryphons pressed hard for the equalizer. Harris continued to lose the respect of all in the stands while Landry stood on his head between the pipes. After a hard fought third period, when the dust settled, the Gaels were victorious and Landry was the MVP of the game, once again.

Saturday saw the Gaels come out flying against the visitors from Toronto.

HARRIS CONTINUED ON PAGE 20

Smart breaks records; Gaels lack Midas touch

BY FRANK DIXON AND ROB THOMPSON

Once again, the men's basketball Gaels (3-9, sixth place) have missed the OUA East division playoffs. Queen's head coach Barry Smith kept a dubious personal streak alive with his 13th consecutive campaign (nine as Gaels' head coach, two as a Gaels' assistant, and two as RMC's head coach) without posting a +.500 league mark in CIAU play.

GAELS 92, YORK 66

The Gaels had to win by at least 19 to remain in the playoff hunt. Queen's employed its press very effectively to overcome the Yeomen, who had beaten them by 18 points only a week earlier. It was the Dave Smart show at Bartlett as he eclipsed two of his own Queen's records and moved into third spot on the all-time Queen's scoring list, passing Doug Laughton's 862 career points. Smart poured in 43 points to break both his men's all-time single game (42 vs. McGill, 1992) and all-time OUA league game (38 vs. Ottawa, 1993) marks.

Smart notched 25 first-half points, helping build a 45-36 Queen's lead. York (6-6) never threatened after the break, but suspense remained: Could the Gaels win by at least 19, and could Smart break the record? With Smart scoring 13 of the last 15 Queen's points, both came true. Smart hit four of seven treys, eight of 13 field goal attempts, and 15 of 16 from the charity stripe. He also grabbed seven rebounds to lead the team, and did it all wearing an ankle brace following a hard fall against Carleton.

Smart's great game overshadowed Sean Smith's 16 points and effective playmak-

ing. Mike Ruscitti added 14 points and six rebounds with gritty play off the bench, while Wyeth Clarkson scored 10 points. York was led by John Poulimenos' 16 points and 12 rebounds, but the Yeomen couldn't hit the ocean from the beach at the foul line, missing 21 of 37 attempts.

LAURENTIAN 102, GAELS 85

This Feb. 18 loss eliminated Queen's. It was the final home game for Ruscitti, Roger Wheeler and possibly Smart. They received warm tributes from the crowd and mementos in recognition of their classy careers.

The ninth-ranked Vees (10-2) showed more determination on the glass at both ends, building a 41-28 rebounding edge, and used their press to give the Gaels fits. Queen's had lost by only three points in Sudbury, but the Vees missed point guard Brad Hann for that game. Hann (21 points) was one of four Vees to hit at least 19. Chris Fischer (24 points, 12 boards), Sean Swords (20 points, eight rebounds), and rookie Cory Bailey (19 points, eight rebounds) were too much for the Gaels.

Down 46-37 at the half, Queen's mounted an 8-0 rally to pull within 54-49, four minutes into the second stanza. But following a timeout, Laurentian surged to a 16-5 run with a rain of treys and driving layups by Hann. The Gaels once again drew within range at 79-73 with six minutes left, but could get no closer.

Queen's was led by fine games from Smart (24 points), Ruscitti (15), Smith (13), Mickey Sloniowski (nine points, nine boards), Wheeler (nine points), and Les Harold (eight points). Number two scorer Clarkson (13.5 ppg) had an off-night with

TORONTO CONTINUED ON PAGE 20

VIETNAM: TAPPING THE OPPORTUNITIES

Donald Gordon Conference Centre
Queen's University

Friday, March 4th, 12:30 - 4:00 p.m.

Come learn more about Vietnam and the burgeoning opportunities there for Canadians, now that the trade embargo is lifted.

Sponsored by:

Vietnam Canada Trade Council

Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations
School of Business, Queen's University

FEE: Students and Professors $25.00

For further information, contact: Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations
Tel. 545-6438; Fax. 545-6674

IS ASIA CANADA'S LAST HOPE?

Successes and Challenges of Small to Medium-Sized Canadian Companies in Asia

National MBA Competition and Conference
Donald Gordon Conference Centre
Queen's University

Friday, March 4th - Saturday, March 5th

Come learn more about China, Korea, ASEAN, Japan, India Cheer on the two winners from Queen's!

Sponsored by:

Hongkong Bank of Canada

Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations
School of Business, Queen's University

Conference begins 5:00 p.m. Friday, March 4th

FEE: Students $25.00; Professors $75.00

For further information, contact: Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations
Tel. 545-6438; Fax. 545-6674

Achieve your personal best through Part-Time Studies

You don't need to be an Olympic athlete to expand your limits. The Games may be only a memory now, but spring-summer courses at Queen's are just around the corner. You can choose from a wide selection of day, evening and correspondence courses. Among our offerings this year are archaeology, the biology of sex, abnormal psychology and the sociology of deviance.

Whether your plans include a summer job, travel - or training for the next Olympics - why not drop in to the Arts and Science Faculty Office, #200 Mackintosh-Corry Hall, and pick up a copy of our Spring-Summer Brochure? (NOTE: Returning part-time students will be mailed their brochures. If you haven't received yours by 15 March, call us at 545-2471.) And please come to visit us Saturday 26 March at our Spring Open House in the JIBC, from 10 am to 3 pm. You might even win a prize!

Part-Time Studies
Faculty of Arts and Science
Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 2N6

Women's hoops make playoffs by beating York

BY FRANK DIXON

For the fifth straight season, the women's basketball Gaels have qualified from the country's strongest division into the OWIAA playoffs.

GAELS 68, YORK 55

Queen's (6-6) made it official by turning back the Yeowomen on Feb. 15 in Bartlett Gym. Vicki Wilson scored the first ten points for Queen's, converting inside feeds from Jenny Laughton with some pretty post moves. When York moved to a zone following a timeout, McIntyre responded by hitting from the outside. Stephanie Jamieson was doing a nice job defensively on stellar York rookie Karen Jackson, who had burned the Gaels for 33 points in the teams' previous encounter. Jackson was held(!) to 17 points and 12 rebounds on the night.

Queen's moved ahead 38-26 at the half, but allowed York to draw within five points at 52-47 with 9:17 left. The Yeowomen started hacking away at the Gaels, and got into serious foul trouble, as four players fouled out in the last quarter. The Gaels made enough of their plentiful free throws (25 of 37) to put it away.

Wilson led the Gaels with 24 points, McIntyre hit 15 points and Laughton finished with 12. Jamieson had six points and nine rebounds.

LAURENTIAN 71, GAELS 61

Although they ultimately lost, Queen's gave the #2-ranked Lady Vees a real scare. Laurentian had only nine players for this game, which meant that if they got into foul trouble, they could conceivably lose. Early on, Tanya McIntyre was on fire, scoring with treys and baseline dribble drives, while Wilson was being shut down. Laurentian's mid-range shooting kept it close. With 30 seconds left in the first half, Queen's had the ball and a 35-33 lead, but the Lady Vees forced a turnover, and Carolyn Swords completed a three-point play to give her team a 36-35 lead.

Dianne Norman took over the game for Laurentian early in the second half with rebounding and great post play, as the Lady Vees blitzed 11-3 to go up 47-38. Queen's drew within five at 61-56 with just over five minutes left when Erica Hollingdrake scored the basket of her life on an incredible slashing coast-to-coast drive. But the Lady Vees responded with six straight points, virtually locking it up.

Norman finished with 17 points and 18 rebounds, while Joy McNicol hit 21 points and Swords added 15. Wilson led Queen's with 21 points and 12 rebounds after getting hot in the second half. McIntyre finished with 18 points and six rebounds, while Jenny Laughton had 12 points. Queen's was hurt by 21 turnovers, while Laurentian's dreadful three-point shooting (1-for-16) kept the score close.

TORONTO 84, GAELS 45

This season-ending road game saw #3-ranked Toronto play brilliantly and the Gaels flat as Manitoba prairie. Queen's had only nine serviceable players, as they missed 15 ppg star forward Jenny Laughton (flu), Cathy Amara (knee), and Melanie Leitch. Laughton's absence allowed the Lady Blues to concentrate on shutting down Vicki Wilson, who was given a very hard time throughout the game with double teams and nasty hits.

The outcome was never in doubt, as Toronto led by 44-19 at halftime. The Lady Blues were sinking virtually everything, while the shorthanded Gaels couldn't hang onto the ball or buy a shot. Wilson hit 15 points to lead the Gaels, while McIntyre hooped 13. Ginger Howell started her first career game and scored six points. Justine Ellison led the Lady Blues' deep scoring parade with 15 points.

Note: See Friday's Journal for a special preview on the OWIAA Championships, to be held in Bartlett Gym.

Help Wanted

Who's Where/What's Next Publications is seeking Queen's Students to complete survey

Qualifications:

- Queen's student
- Ability to think critically
- Possess or believe to have possessed 1993-1994 Who's Where telephone directory containing a survey in the back
- Personship

Requirements:

- Fill out Who's Where/What's Next survey
- Put name and phone number on the survey
- Drop off at InfoBank in J.O.U.C. on or before March 12, 1994

Benefits:

- Surveys will be randomly selected to receive...

$50.00 gift certificate toward a batch of beer at

1st prize

237 PRINCESS ST. 544-1440

$30.00 gift certificate for dinner at

Serving Daily from 11:00 am to closing
Kingston's Only Authentic Greek Cuisine
167 Princess St. 542-2288

2nd prize

1 table of free pool from 9:00pm to close at

3rd prize

Draw will be held March, 16 1994

Erica Hollingdrake has her eyes on the prize.

DEREK YARNELL

Performing Arts Office presents

NEXUS

"like paradise in the mind...incomparable virtuosity and amazing good humour."

Programme includes:

- Marubato
- Novelty Ragtime Selections
- Turning Point
- Mbira

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

SUNDAY 6 MARCH
GRANT HALL 2:30PM
$15 Adult / $8 (Children, St. Lawrence, RMC Students)
(All prices plus GST)

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

INSTITUTE OF WOMEN'S STUDIES
Queen's University

presents a public lecture entitled:

"THE GENDER/ENVIRONMENT DEBATE: A SOUTHERN PERSPECTIVE"

by
DR. BINA AGARWAL

Dr. Agarwal is a Visiting Professor from Delhi University who is an economist interested in gender, property, development and environment.

Thursday, March 10, 1994 • 7:30pm
School of Policy Studies, Room 202

Presented with assistance from the Principal's Development Fund, the North-South Institute, the Canadian Association for the Study of International Development (CASID) and the International Research Centre (IDRC).

EUROPEAN AIRFARES

LONDON Return $~~199~~
AMSTERDAM Return $~~199~~

WARNING:
WE ARE UNABLE TO PRINT OUR EUROPEAN AIRFARES.
THE SHOCK OF OUR LOW PRICES MAY BE HAZARDOUS
TO YOUR HEALTH. IF YOU VALUE YOUR LIFE SAVINGS...
CALL TRAVEL CUTS TODAY!

PARIS Return $~~199~~

TRAVEL CUTS
1-800-667-2887
(THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)

6 oz Deluxe Burger
Served with a Mountain of fries!

only $ 4.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's*

409 Johnson Street at University Tele # : 547-3771

SPORTS

Harris is to refereeing as Carleton undergrads are to Nobel Prizes

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

Harris, in a weird twist, gave the Gaels a couple of power-play opportunities early. At 5:49 the Gaels converted on their second extra-man advantage when Longo beat the Blues goalie with a low shot from the point.

The lead was increased when the Gaels scored at the end of another power play. The Blues goalie had been served a delay of game penalty for shooting the puck into the stands. At 10:57, a nice wrap-around attempt saw the puck end up on the stick of Storr who had moved in from the point and made no mistake.

A scant 12 seconds later the Blues cut the Queen's lead in half on a centring pass which was fired past Landry. Both goalies made nice saves to ensure that the score remained 2-1 after a period of play.

The second frame had a quick pace with both teams getting good scoring chances and good goal-tending. Once again, the Gaels powerplay came through at the 5:35 mark. With a U of T player in the box for interference, Brian Mueggler deflected a point shot from Storr past the goalie for a 3-1 lead. The crime of the period occurred when Harris, back to his old antics, thought this was a wrestling match as he watched the valiant Budgell get mauled in the corner. When Budgell threw a shot back Harris then decided to give Budgell a roughing minor and a holding penalty to the Blues, after the fact. Thanks Harris for the quick decision-making.

The Gaels opened up a three goal lead with just over five minutes left in the period. After nearly five minutes of good pressure and huge hits from the likes of Morin, the Gaels scored on a great tic-tac-toe passing play involving MacDonald, Lee and the finisher Robbins. After two periods, the Gaels held a solid 4-1 advantage.

In the opening minute of the third period, tough guy Andrew Clark was given a roughing penalty which led to a U of T power play goal which narrowed the lead to two goals. The Gaels bounced right back on their own power play with Morin feeding Bucher who fired the puck past the hapless U of T goalie. Up 5-3, the Gaels kept pouring it on with great open ice hits, stellar net-minding and crafty passing. Queen's put the game out of reach with six minutes left in the game as MacDonald fed a great pass to Robbins who made an excellent move on the U of T defender to go in alone on net. Robbins made no mistake for his second goal of the game by slipping the puck underneath the U of T goalie.

Strangely enough with just over three minutes left in the game the U of T coach pulled his goalie to gain the extra attacker in a virtually impossible attempt to gain back three goals. This pleased Robbins as he was able to finish off the hat trick with an empty-net goal. The ice was littered with hats from the jubilant fans on hand. The final score in the game was 7-3. To no-one's surprise Robbins was the MVP. The Gaels were looking strong for the playoffs.

On a personal note, it was a pleasure covering the Gaels' home games over this last season. The Gaels never gave up and deserved to win more than a handful of the games they lost. For both of us, it was a shame that we never came to the games before this year. It was exciting hockey that was deserving of more fans. We are sure this will continue to be the case as many of the Gaels will be returning next year. This was a good team that had just hit full stride before the season ended prematurely. Success is not far away. Good luck next year to Coach John Phelan and his troops and thanks for the memorable hockey.

Toronto 70, Gaels 61

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

just one point.
On Feb. 20, it was another 'close, but no cigar' game for the Gaels against the 8-4 Blues, a team Queen's had beaten 67-64 earlier in Bartlett.

The match featured several five-minute stretches where first one side, then the other, dominated. An early 11-0 Toronto run allowed the home side to built a 24-12 lead, which the Gaels managed to whittle to 38-32 by half-time. After the break, Queen's used a 13-4 surge of their own to pull ahead 47-42 five minutes into the half. Tremendous defensive play by rookie post Rich Cook (nine rebounds) and clutch scoring by Smart (19 points) were instrumental.

The Blues then turned to their excellent press to get themselves out of trouble. With eight minutes left, Varsity broke a 56-56 tie with a 12-1 spurt, exploiting four straight Queen's possessions where the Gaels turned the ball over on ill-advised passes to post players stationed too high in the paint. The Gaels' three-point shooters were cold down the stretch, dashing any final comeback hopes.

Clarkson (12 points) and Ruscitti (11 points) also hit double figures. Varsity was led by Carl Swantee's 17 points and eight rebounds.

OUAA HOOPLA

In first-round playoff games last Saturday, Laurentian beat York 79-68, and Ryerson defeated Toronto 72-52. Laurentian hosts Ryerson this weekend for a CIAU championship berth and a spot in the Wilson Cup game for the OUAA championship against the OUAA West winner. West Division playoffs start next weekend.

Ryerson's Alex Beason has established a new OUAA and CIAU scoring mark with an average of 33.4 points per game.

THE TED REEVE MEMORIAL AWARD

Established by friends and associates of Ted Reeve, who was a football coach and a long-time friend of Queen's.

Awarded in the fall to upper-year students to recognize outstanding academic achievement and demonstrated qualities of courage, team loyalty and fair play on an intercollegiate team. Preference will be given to members of the Queen's Senior Football team.

Application by letter should be made prior to March 15, 1994 to the Assistant Registrar (Student Awards). The applicant should list two persons who have been asked to submit confidential letters about his or her academic ability and qualifications plus an official transcript. The recipient will be chosen by a Selection Committee, including representatives of former Queen's football players, the Chair of the Senate Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid and an additional member of the Scholarship Committee. Value: $1,000

The 1993 recipients were: Daniel Brown, Joel Dagnone, Bradley Elberg, Edward Kidd, Kevin Parker, and Mark Robinson.

ENTERTAINMENT

Singing the blues

BLUE RODEO
THE GRAND THEATRE
BY BROCK MARTLAND

Since the release of Five Days in July, Blue Rodeo has been bringing a more acoustic ("unplugged, intimate and interactive," choose your cliché) show to various Canadian concert halls. Valentine's Day saw them play the Grand Theatre, a respectable hall, which apparently instills its sobriety in its audience.

But despite a full house of people seemingly incapable of dancing, the band put on a first-rate show, displaying impressive musical talent and offering some welcome variations on their best-known songs.

In particular, Kim Deschamps (pedal and lap steel guitars) and bassist Basil Donovan stood out. Deschamps fleshed out the band's sound with beautifully melodic playing and Donovan reminded me of Paul McCartney's exceptional bass-playing on Abbey Road.

The show kicked off with "Hasn't Hit Me Yet"—frontman Greg Keelor singing softly to the superb mandolin accompaniment of Jim Cuddy. While the sound crew worked to adjust instrument levels—Keelor's guitar was buried the whole song—Blue Rodeo warmed up a receptive audience nicely.

The band relied mostly on its last three albums for a good breadth of material. "Rain Down on Me," "Bad Timing," "Restless," and "Trust Yourself" covered the spectrum, from the reflective and slow, to the upbeat and anxious.

Familiar numbers were given a new interpretation, an encouraging suggestion which shows that the band is not complacently recycling its album version live, as too many bands do. "Til I Am Myself Again," for instance, was given blocky rhythmic fills from Keelor's guitar, as Cuddy experimented with his vocals. And "Diamond Mine" got a Grateful Dead-style loose jam thrown in.

Visually, the band was at times amusing to look at. While the clean-cut, Wayne Gretzky looks of Jim Cuddy contrasted with the "better to burn out" appearance of Keelor, it was even more amusing to watch Basil (Roy Orbison meets the Munsters), Deschamps (looking like Jerry Garcia or that shaggy guy from any given history class), and Bobcat Goldwath on piano.

Keelor performed "What is This Love?" and "Dark Angels" as essentially solo numbers, getting sparse backup from (variously) bass, piano, and guitar. These two tunes were recorded on the new album with Sarah McLachlan, and her absence was certainly noticeable live. Nonetheless, Keelor's performance was memorable. He appeared a man alone, poignantly pleading, but ultimately bitter.

The show did include a few weak spots, such as "Till I Can Gain Control Again." A tired-sounding cover tune, and Keelor's overdriven solo on "5 Days in May," which sounded like Neil Young without the fluency and left me wondering what the hell he was doing.

But in most every other song, the band shined. "After the Rain" was marvellous, particularly Cuddy's octave jumps. "Rose-Coloured Glasses," "What Am I Doing?" and "Lost Together" (the biggest crowd pleaser) were no less successful.

In many ways the Blue Rodeo show was a perfect Valentine's Day outing even though the majority of the audience did not seem to be coupled up (myself included, save my trusty photographer side-kick). The band's music was at once intensely emotive, beautiful and solidly rocking. Blue Rodeo closed with a hilarious acapella tune: "I Got Stoned and I Missed It." Fortunately, I didn't (miss it).

Greg Keelor relaxes during the show.

BRENT OAVIS

A natural perspective

M. BUTTERFLY
DIRECTED BY DAVID
CRONENBERG
THE PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
BY RYAN P. CHEN

That David Cronenberg's M. Butterfly lacks the grotesque openly announces the film's extraordinary nature. Hitherto, Cronenberg's work has been characterized by his penchant for monstrosity, and the conspicuous absence of the creepy-crawlies that graced films like The Fly and Naked Lunch marks M. Butterfly as an anomaly. But while M. Butterfly may be wanting in the gruesome, it certainly does not skimp on the bizarre, and as such, it perhaps ranks as Cronenberg's most horrific movie yet.

What makes M. Butterfly unlike any other Cronenberg picture is that it doesn't rely on the fictional universes of Stephen King or William Burroughs, but rather on the (sur)realities of life itself. Adapted by David Henry Hwang from his Broadway play, M. Butterfly recounts, albeit with some artistic license, the scandalous love affair between Bernard Boursicot, a low-level French diplomat, and Shei Pei Pu, a diva in the Beijing Opera. Their relationship lasted for two decades and climaxed in the revelation that not only was Shei Pei Pu a Communist spy, but that she, much to Boursicot's surprise, was actually a man.

The details of Boursicot's weird liaison with Shei Pei Pu were made public in a televised trial in 1986, and it is to Cronenberg and Cronenberg's credit that they did not film M. Butterfly as a courtroom-drama-turned-freak-show. Indeed, Hwang and Cronenberg spend less than John Lone and Jeremy Irons share an intimate moment at The Great Wall.

10 minutes in the court-room and instead focus on the tragedy which unfolds in the Pinter-esque rooms of Boursicot's life. Clearly, what intrigues both Hwang and Cronenberg are not so much the sexual conundrums of the relationship than the strange mind-set and warped perceptions which allowed the sexual conundrums to happen.

In Hwang's screenplay, the cinematic counterparts to Boursicot and Shei Pei Pu are found in René Gallimard (Jeremy Irons) and Song Liling (John Lone) respectively. Rather than depicting Gallimard as being seduced by the wiles of an Asian beauty, M. Butterfly, as its title suggests, her words fail to register on the infatuated foreigner.

Gallimard eventually blurs all distinction between fantasy and reality when he asks Song Liling, "Are you my butterfly?" Of course, that Gallimard refuses to see Song Liling's masculinity only confirms our impressions that the Frenchman deludes himself, an interpretation which Hwang and Cronenberg go to great lengths to emphasize. For instance, during the scene at The Great Wall, Song Liling curiously asks Gallimard, "Why did you pick a poor Chinese with a chest like a boy?" Her question is a dare, an invitation to Gallimard to see through her disguise. But Gallimard declines the offer and can only correct her accurate evaluation of herself. "Like a schoolgirl, an innocent girl," he replies. The irony of the scene only intensifies when Gallimard fixes his attention on The Great Wall, since he himself is oblivious to the boundaries between East and West, female and male, art and life.

Ultimately, the upshot of the movie is to expose the phallicentric ways in which gender and sexuality are constructed. When Song Liling's Party superior offers an explanation for the reason why the female parts in the Beijing Opera are traditionally played by males ("Probably a remnant of the reactionary and patriarchal social structure"), Song Liling flatly contradicts her: "Because only a man knows how a woman is supposed to act." It is a difficult lesson which Gallimard learns, but it is one which he wholeheartedly embraces. As he confesses, "I, René Gallimard, have been loved by the per-

TRUING TO CATCH CONTINUED ON PAGE 24

QUEEN'S UNITED WAY WEEK
Feb 28 - March 4

MONDAY Feb. 28	TUESDAY Mar 1	WEDNESDAY Mar 2	THURSDAY Mar 3
Indo Pacific Sweater Sale JDUC	Agency Day JDUC eg: SAAC, International House - Starts at 7pm Pool Tournament - The SHOT - evening	Make your own Sundae at the QP - Starts at 7pm	United Way SMOKER AT ALFIE'S

Getting close to Cuddy

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

Rock Martland snuck back stage at The Grand Theatre after the concert and had a quick interview with singer and guitarist Jim Cuddy.

The Queen's Journal: So is this show part of a tour?
Jim Cuddy: Yes—we are in the midst of a tour. We've been out West, we've been out East. We go home now [Toronto] for a few days and then we go up to Northern Ontario.

QJ: I understand you have a Queen's connection yourself.

JC: I went to Queen's, '75 to '78.

QJ: How is it to be back in Kingston?

JC: Well, I guess it's not a big deal to come back to Kingston, because I thought that we'd just put it out, that we wouldn't tour with it, that we'd start making another record right away. Since we are touring this record, it's been enjoyable, it's musically challenging. We'll make another one. We did a recording this weekend for a Neil Young tribute record, in Montreal. So that whet our appetite a little bit, some new stuff.

QJ: I'm curious about the references to Banff in your songs.

JC: Both Greg and I have spent time there, a year and two years respectively out there. I was a year in Banff and a half-year in Lake Louise, and Greg was two years in Lake Louise. That's a place we go at least once a year. We've got lots of friends out there.

QJ: I've noticed you're often playing the Banff Centre up there, a smaller venue.

JC: I know, I know, it's great. QJ: Where do you think you guys are headed in sort of the longer term? Was it a conscious decision to play halls like this as opposed to the bar scene?

JC: Yeah. We can't do a steady diet of bars. It's not good for us physically. We've played too much there. This is the right size of hall to do this show, and so this is what we've done, across the country. Sometimes the challenge is to just find the right type of venue for the type of show you're doing. This show is just small theatres. We'll complete that, and then we'll figure out something else. I think we're a lot more sensitive to where we play now than we used to be. We can still enjoy the bars, there's a lot of energy in bars. But a steady diet of that, it's not very musically challenging.

A more relaxed Gregg.

BRENT DAVIS

QJ: Do you prefer it when the crowd is seated watching or when it's really energetic, or some sort of happy milieu?

JC: The audience exchange makes a big difference. I'm not sure that people being seated necessitates them being reserved. In a bar you're competing with the alcohol in people's head. We understand that, because we've done years of that, but that's not where this music is taking people, or where we're going ourselves. We get pretty fractured from the audience in bars. So the halls for us are very different. This was a very reserved crowd. They felt their behaviour was appropriate to the hall. Lots of places people just rip it up. But it doesn't matter to us, I don't think. We're just trying to exchange what we're feeling about the music to the audience. How they react is up to them.

QJ: How's the songwriting going? Do you write much with Greg?

JC: No, we never write together, really. We've always written separately, we just have a partnership. But then we work with a band. We're very unique in that way, in that we've always worked with a band. We don't just write songs and then find a band. We bring ideas to the band which the band helps to develop. It's a pretty fertile thing for me. I'm writing a lot of songs right now.

QJ: What sort of direction are they headed, those songs?

JC: I think, a little more space. We learned something on the last record about space, about the value of space, the value of the sound around the band, the air around the band. So the songs have that in mind. Even if they're heavy, electric songs, they still have that space. They're not as frenetic. It's not like we're abandoning anything. I think once you've created a style for yourself, then sometimes it's pushing it, augmenting it. You can't keep doing the same thing, because you don't need to.

Jim Cuddy shines like a diamond mine.

BRENT DAVIS

THIS AIN'T NO STAR SEARCH THE QEA AND ALFIE'S PRESENT BATTLE OF THE BANDS 1994:

MARCH 1ST VOLUME WHOLESOME YELLOWBELLY	MARCH 8TH BOOB-TOOBS FAT SPIDER PLAID DADDYS	MARCH 15TH LOS SEAMONSTERS SEVEN THORAX
---	---	--

FINALS ON MARCH 22ND
PRIZES FROM THE FUNHOUSE, FENDER, SUNSHINE MUSIC, AND ALFIE'S
DOORS OPEN AT 8PM EACH NIGHT

Daniel Day-Lewis receives first hand experience in British torture techniques.

Tears in hell

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER
DIRECTED BY JIM SHERIDAN
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY DARRYL WHETTER

In 1974, four Irish youths were successfully framed by the English government and imprisoned unjustly for the IRA bombing of London's Guildford Pub. Gerry Conlon was one of these four. His father, Giuseppe, was wrongly convicted as a member of the "support group" behind the bombing and was imprisoned with his son. This actual atrocity and the dramatization of this relationship are the vice and muscle of In The Name Of The Father.

From the title onwards, Father deflects attention from the massive issues involved in this political atrocity to the lives of two persecuted people. Sheridan ingeniously avoids the temptation to politically grandstand; the Irish/English politics—and police corruption of the film—are delivered through character. Father is always a story, never the political poster that it could so easily be. Sheridan invariably takes us into these issues, but through the back door. And we all know that "Back-Door Friends are Best."

The mastery of Sheridan's craft (director, co-writer, producer) is evident on all of the plot's many faces: occupied Belfast, the "Haven" of London, torture, conviction, imprisonment, and the eventual human disillusionment and reconciliation. The film's opening riot is one of cinema's finest soundtracked scenes. I won't give away the song or artist, but, again to Sheridan's credit, it's a song you may have passed off due to adolescent overexposure that is reawakened and drilled into you. All of the songs earn their scenes instantaneous mileage: a friendship song on a ferry ride or a revelry song in the drug underworld of seventies London. The rest of the soundtrack is split between apt and driving seventies tunes used for atmosphere and new music from Gavin Friday and Bono used for commentary. And Sinead O'Connor delivers a haunting oral denouement.

Sheridan shapes every scene with skill and importance; there is nothing extraneous or underachieved in the film. Before Gerry (Daniel Day-Lewis) and Irish friend Paul Hill get tortured and imprisoned for a crime they didn't commit, they spend a lot of young energy getting high and laid in London. Sheridan makes these scenes of rampant LSD use and lots of free sex look as fun as... well, rampant LSD use and lots of free sex. The atmosphere of every episode is so tight that you're constantly telling yourself "OK, this is the film's peak, this is where it happens." And of course it rises again, like smoke. There are two glimpses of comic relief in the film, but they barely let you breathe, let alone relax your abdominal muscles.

Father is also remarkable in its continuous manipulation of suspense given a plot that is largely foreclosed. We've already heard that everybody gets convicted, so how does Sheridan make the court scene suspenseful? He nibbles your ears: the jury's verdict is given by two visual images a nanosecond before it is announced verbally. Or watch how he uses a series of four juxtaposing shots of the courtroom seating arrangement to characterize Gerry's parents and the monstrous Inspector Dixon who frames him. These are not rare examples of Sheridan's virtuosity, they are commonplace: Father is not just a must-see movie, it's a movie that must be seen more than once.

In a film which is so visually multi-organic, Sheridan admirably avoids all the ready-made sensationalism in the action; the film constantly signifies itself. The poignant scenes in prison are not burdened by any chummy "this is prison life" expository dialogue. The film's arguably second biggest scene, which occurs in prison, neither has, nor needs, any descriptive prelude. Without actually disclosing the silent and emotive scene, I can only refer to it as "tears in hell." See it on the big screen.

The subtlety of Sheridan's craft is perhaps best illustrated in the character of Joe McAndrew (Don Baker), the IRA soldier actually responsible for the bombing. Paul winds up in the same prison as the Conlon, causing an "ends justifies the means" rift between Gerry and his father over their campaign for freedom. Gerry and the other prisoners, eventually led to riot, are drawn to Paul's magnetic and methodical fighting spirit. And so are we. Paul shows the other edge of his IRA sword, Gerry grows up at the drop of a body. And so do we. The invisible welding of the maturation of the spectator is a signpost for technical genius from Shakespeare to Salinger. Sheridan refuses to ever get caught telling the tale. Paul is a functional must, yet we're overwhelmed with his characterization and his reflection on Gerry's. While we're riveted to Paul, Sheridan is riveting his political commentary behind our backs. Or to our backs.

Amidst and amongst Sheridan's genius there are a few thousand other things which propel this film, uppermost is the acting of Daniel Day-Lewis. He fills Sheridan's long frames, excelling in the chance to act with more of his body than in Scorsese's recent "I'll shoot a typical-Hollywood-mostly-close-ups" Age of Innocence. Lewis covers an uncanny amount of ground with Gerry, 15 years of more conflicts and emotions that most of us know. And every character peak, like Sheridan's sculpting of scenes, seems like it's the only one for Gerry, as if we knew it's where he'd wind up. This holds true during both progress and regress, we're with Gerry in both guilt and happiness.

In the Name of the Father is the perfect political movie. It's about people.

Queen's Drama Presents

The GOOD WOMAN OF SETZVAN

by Bertolt Brecht

Directed by Tim Fort

March 8 to 12

All shows 8 p.m.

Convocation Hall
at Theological Hall

Tickets $8, $6 for students.
Available at the Drama
Department Desk,
Basement Theological Hall.
Information 545-2104

PREREGISTRATION FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

ATTENTION ALL ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS
AND STUDENTS TAKING ARTS AND SCIENCE ELECTIVES

Students wishing to take Arts and Science courses in the 1994-95 academic year must submit their PREREGISTRATION requests through QCARD beginning 14 March 1994. Information concerning preregistration can be picked up beginning 7 March at the following sites:

Faculty of Arts and Science:
Mackintosh-Corry Hall, Rooms F100 and F200
Departmental Offices

Across campus:
Douglas Library (reference desk)
Education Library - West Campus, McArthur Hall
INFOBANK - John Deutsch University Centre
Registrar's Office - Richardson Hall, Room 103
Victoria Hall - Residence Desk

Other Faculty Offices:
School of Business - Dunning Hall, Room 120
Applied Science - Ellis Hall, Room 101
School of Nursing - Cataraqui Building
School of Rehabilitation Therapy - Louise D. Acton Building, Room 202

It is the student's responsibility to pick up the information, READ contents carefully and follow preregistration directions and procedures.

*QCARD is a computerized information system which allows you to record Arts & Science preregistration requests, view your marks, change your address, etc.

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF SUNDAY NIGHT • CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON
824 Northwest Or. (389-7442)
Reality Bites 7:20 9:25
Philadelphia 7:00 9:40
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:45
Schindler's List 8:00
In the Name of the Father 6:45 9:35
My Girl 2 7:10

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
On Deadly Ground 7:15 9:35
Blue Chips 6:50 9:15
Death Wish 5 6:55 9:40
The Piano 6:45
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30

The Getaway 9:25
Slunk Check 7:05 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Tuesday & Wednesday
M Butterfly 7:00
Like Water For Chocolate 9:00
Thursday
Like Water For Chocolate 7:00
M Butterfly 9:20

CLUBS

TUESDAY
Alfie's: Battle of the Bands Round I: Volume, Wholesome and Yellowbelly
Cocoma: Battle of the Bands
Stoges: Trooper (the real, live thing!)

WEDNESDAY
Alfie's: Rustic Gomers / Little Silly Shakespeare
AJ's Hongor: The Blues Review
The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers

THURSDAY
The Toucan: Los Seamonsters

THEATRE

THEATRE 5
370 KING STREET WEST (546-5460)
Theatre 5 presents Orocuro
Mar. 3-5 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $10 (adults), $8 (seniors), $6 (students)

DOMINO THEATRE
370 KING STREET WEST (634-2602)
Domino Theatre presents Henrik Ibsen's Ghosts
Mar. 3-5, 10-12 of 8 p.m.
Tickets are $8 of the Grand Theatre or of the door.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent
(545-2190)

SPECIAL EVENT: bring your own brown bag lunch from 12:00 to 1:00 p.m., Wednesday, March 2 and stay to enjoy a performance by artist (and accomplished drummer) John Heward and jazz percussionist, Richard Bannard.

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...
Ihrugh March 6
Oebaroh Washington: Wark Out of Order

Ihrugh Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections from the Long Collection of African Art

Ihrugh Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

Ihrugh Apr. 28
To the Fluid Sheel Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinowitch

Ihrugh May 8
The Ethics of Making: The farming royans of John Heward

EDWARD OAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)
Ihrugh Mar. 5
Russian artist, Mikhail Kourzokov. Recent paintings on paper and canvas.

KINGSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
130 Johnson (549-8888)
Ihrugh Mar. 3
Exhibition: The work of Queen's 8FA student, Lynn Hunt, is now on display in The Wilson Room.

Trying to catch a butterfly

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

fect woman... I am man who has loved a woman created by a man. Anything else just falls short."

The domination which Gallimard believes he exercises over his "butterfly" also translates into a complicated allegory about imperialism. Overwhelmed by the degree to which Song Liling is willing to submit, Gallimard naively tells the French ambassador, "The Oriental will always submit to the stronger power. If the Americans display the determination to win, the Vietnamese will welcome them."

Of course, history shows Gallimard to be utterly wrong, and the Cultural Revolution, the escalation of the Vietnam War and the Summer of '68 are pathetic fallacies which dramatize Gallimard's terrible downfall.

M. Butterfly, however, does smack of hypocrisy, for Cronenberg's direction of Hwang's script could be seen as a symbolic re-entrenchment of the imperialistic values which Hwang attempts to undermine. And what do we make of feminist criticism which is advocated by men? But both Cronenberg and Hwang seem to be acutely aware of these accusations and boldly declare it. Early in the film, Song Liling wonders how Gallimard can be objective about the system in which he participates. "I think it's possible to achieve some distance," Gallimard answers. His arrogance leaves us unconvinced, and from what dramatic irony tells us of his ignorance, we know that he is completely wrong. The scene is a powerful warning of the frustrating dilemma which faces Western men who try to practise feminist and cultural criticism.

CLASSIFIEDS

Journal classifieds cost $5.00 for students, $8.50 for non-students, and free for Lost & Found. Due Tuesday @ 2pm for Friday papers. Submit in person @ 272 Earl St. Call 545-2800 for more info.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious room to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

PLEASE take a moment to celebrate the life of RANDY SHILTS, American Aids Activist and Gay author of AND THE BAND PLAYED ON and CONDUCT UNBECOMING. Shilts died of Aids related causes late in the week of February 14th. Randy, may your dedication, spirit and energy live on in us. Your efforts will not be forgotten. The Lesbian and Gay Association.

NORTHPOCK POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware dinnerware and wedding registrations. Contact us at 1 476-4918 to make an appointment.

TEACH CONVERSATIONAL ENGLISH IN JAPAN Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore - Full time, temporary or for the summer. Up to $4500.00 per month. No experience, no qualifications necessary. For info pick up free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or write to Asia Facts (Q) P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

HOUSING OPTIONS? Homebased agreements? Leases? Locations? Landlords? Too many questions, too few answers? Get answers! Call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your group meeting, potluck or other event. TV/VR, microwave, dishwasher facilities available for use by Queen's and Kingston groups. Call The Grey House at 545-2958.

STUDENT AFFAIRS CENTRE/Queen's Student and Community Services Group open house!! 51 Queen's Crescent (the Grey House), Wednesday, March 2nd, 1 - 4 p.m. Light refreshments served! Find out about the valuable services offered by these groups.

THE GREY HOUSE at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, the Queen's Women's Centre and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

LOOKING TO VOLUNTEER in the healthcare field? Meet local health agency representatives at the Community Health Resources Fair - sponsored by Student Health, Thursday March 17, 1994 in the JDUC 10 - 3 p.m.

GLAMOUR ADVICE: Mary Kay can help with personalized glamour selection. Call Monica DeJager - Independent Mary Kay Beauty Consultant 377-1343.

LESBIAN AND GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2960 - staffed Monday - Friday 7 - 9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, a recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

DO YOU NEED DOCUMENTS typed fast? We will pick up and deliver! Quality printing. We'll even give you a photocopy free! Only $1.15 per page. Call 634-2349 now!

THE LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION - Kingston, annual general meeting and board elections on Thursday March 24th, 7:30 p.m. 51 Queen's Crescent (The Grey House). All welcome. Get involved! Call 545-2960.

FINAL EXAMS ARE ONLY one month away. Come and discuss health with us at FOR THE HEALTH OF IT - a display of 25 local health agencies. Thursday March 17, 1994, 10 - 3 p.m. in the JDUC.

FEELING STRESSED? Call the confidential healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators Monday - Thursday 6 - 9 p.m., 545-6000 ext 4444. Leave messages anytime.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-INS Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome.

COMMUNITY HEALTH RESOURCES FAIR. Meet the health resource people on and off campus. Thursday March 17, 1994 10 - 3 p.m. in the JDUC. Come on out just FOR THE HEALTH OF IT!

INTERESTED in promoting healthy attitudes to food, weight and body image? Consider volunteering with the PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM.

COPING with academic life can be a challenge. PEER HEALTH OUTREACH helps. Maybe you can too.

SEX in the 90's is a risky proposition. Promoting healthy decision making is one of the outreach opportunities available through PEER HEALTH OUTREACH.

WANT to know more about PEER HEALTH OUTREACH? Call the HEALTH LINE 545-6000 ext. 4444 Monday through Thursday from 6 - 9:00 p.m. and talk to a current Peer Health Educator.

PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM - volunteer applications are available at Student Health or Infobank. Due by March 10. For more information call Diane Nolting, Health Educator 545-6712.

GLAMOUR ADVICE: Mary Kay can help with personalized glamour selection. Call Monica DeJager - Independent Mary Kay Beauty Consultant 377-1343.

CAMP OUTLOOK PRESENTS: A reading by Timothy Findley. Admission is free. Donations at the door for Camp Outlook. Wednesday, March 9th, 7:30 p.m. at KCVL.

THE CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM is a safe place for people who are at risk from excessive alcohol consumption staffed by student volunteers working with an experienced Detox supervisor. Volunteer applications for the Campus Observation Room are available at Student Health Service, Residence Life Office and Infobank. For more information call Diane Nolting 545-6712.

NINO RICCI, best-selling author of "Lives of the Saints" and "In a Glass House" reading at Grant Hall March 10 at 7:00 pm. Be there.

HELP WANTED

INTERESTED IN TRAVEL? Travel Cuts is looking for an enthusiastic student to work part time promoting unique student travel services to Queen's students. For more info call Ellen at 1 800 798-CUTS.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races. 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Monday, March 7th to: Gord McLaugham, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Maitland St., Kingston, Ont. K7L 2V3

WANTED

TWO HOUSEMATES wanted to live with 4 other students in great house at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Non-smokers only. Please call 546-2535 if interested.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

Amuse yourself with a Super NES for sale. Two joysticks, two games, one cheap price. Call 546-0813 for details.

FENDER ELECTRIC GUITAR $325 and FENDER AMPLIFIER $225 or both for $500. Call Stephen at 547-4183 after 5 p.m. or leave a message.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Christine at 544-4506.

4 BEDROOM, Princess at University, balcony, appliances, laundromat, photocopier, spacious rooms, close to campus, A&P, beer store and nightlife. Quiet building. Very low utilities. $1150 per month. Call 549-3069.

Searching for 2 people to move in with four 95' s as of May 1st, on Earl near Aberdeen. The house is large and the rent very reasonable. No more cold winter hikes to campus. Call 531-3442 for more info.

LOST and FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: HP 48 G calculator. Where? Not sure. How will you know it's mine. Well it's not yours. Reasons to return it: 1) Rewards; 2) clear conscience; 3) avoid activation of self destruct. Call Greg at 531-9333 please.

LOST: In Mac-Corry: a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Heart-shaped gold locket on Saturday February 12th. Extreme sentimental value - engraving on the back. Reward offered. Please call Elizabeth at 546-0005.

LOST: Blue Phe '94 leather jacket, January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Man's Seiko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orvil at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ban Righ, Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

ARTSCL JACKET FOR SALE. Barely worn. Great condition. $125 or best offer. Must sell, need money. Call 549-7529.

ARTSCL JACKET FOR SALE: '93 (can change crests) size 44. $100 (nego). Good condition. Bedroom and livingroom furniture to go by May 1st. Cheap. Call Elaine at 544-8043 evenings.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 543-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At AJ's, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St. (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

PERSONALS

McKellar's tuxedo fits like a glove, "I like to show a little Cuff."

I'VE "FIGURED" it out... To my Formula 1 PiLoT, Al: Do I have a story for you. By the way, didn't your Mother/Father ever tell you that it's rude to keep people waiting in suspense? Curiosity is killing me! The SK84AU girl.

Hey Cari...your eyes are like sugar. Love, Vincent.

Hilary B-H, I haven't seen you all year, maybe at the formal? Hey Caroline... KEYS... SHOES... PANIC!! I hope your bumps debump themselves real soon.

If anyone calls for me tell them I'm at the beach. Mandy.

Bob and Mich sitting in a tree, k-i-s-s-i-n-g... Do I hear wedding bells?

Mags: I have returned from Halifax with a better understanding of meditation, but do not worry, I'm not about to shave my head and don the robes. Buddha.

Hey Sherry...Good to have you back. (...Is that a band I hear playing...flowers? Limo?)

Christine...let's make it a Trapiche night! I'm putting you in charge of stopping me from packing up and moving back to the Virgin Islands. Do you know what a euwema is? I do!

Gooser: I'm next up on the racquetball ladder. Name the time and the court and I'll whip you like I always do. Elder.

Les: Holy smokes, I can't believe it's almost 11 months! I really like what I bought you in la belle ville - too bad you'll have to wait till Friday. Watch out for shoes beside the bed. Luv, B.

XOXOXOXOX Smooches for Casey! LUPE, Mish!

ARMY SURPLUS STORE
109 PRINCESS ST
NEXT TO GOLDEN ROOSTER

TIME TO THINK ABOUT TREE PLANTING

SPRING INTO SPRING
AT THE ARMY SURPLUS STORE
YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL TREE PLANTING NEEDS

- SLEEPING BAGS
- GLOVES
- INSECT NETS
- WORK PANTS
- BOOTS
- BACK PACKS
- RAINWEAR
- TENTS

AIR MATTRESS, BUG REPELLENT, FLASHLIGHTS, COMPASS, KNIVES, CAPS, UNDERWEAR

MON/TUES/WED 9AM - 8PM
THURS/FRI 9AM - 9PM
SAT 9AM - 6PM
SUN 12PM - 5PM
546-0305

AMS CLUBS GRANT APPLICATIONS

are now available at the AMS Office, JDUC. Grant applications are due at the AMS Office by 12 noon on Friday, March 11, 1994

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Winner of Four Genie Awards including BEST PICTURE

"A MASTERPIECE"
- Jay Scott, The Globe and Mail

Director Francois Girard and writer Don McKellar will be here Friday night only!

Playing March 4 - 10

Generously Sponsored by Menzies Music

THIRTY TWO SHORT FILMS ABOUT GLENN GOULD
The sound of genius.

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA

Princess at Division 546-FILM

It says here ...

DIVA AND THE DEVLINS

Watch out for the hottest ticket in town on Friday, April 1 at Grant Hall, as the Queen's Entertainment Agency presents Network recording artist, Sarah McLachlan, and from Ireland-EMI recording artists The Devlins. (This ain't no April Fool's joke!)

Tickets are $23, ($20 with student card) and are on sale on March 3 at the Performing Arts Office in the JDUC and House of Sounds. Don't miss this opportunity to see the Divine Miss M (and we don't mean Bette Midler).

THE BEST ARTSFEST '94

Running from Feb. 28-Mar. 5, Artsfest '94 is billed as a weeklong celebration of the arts. The week is designed to remedy "the lack of creative arts outlets for people outside of Fine Arts, Music and Film and promote the inter-disciplinary sharing of ideas."

Highlights of the week include:
Feb. 28: Poetry Reading Nite at the Grad Club
Feb. 28 (8 p.m.): Student Film Screening at the Quiet Pub
Feb. 28: Dance Performances: (Jazz, Ballet, Ethnic) in the Lower Ceilidh (all day)
March 1: Acoustic Night at the Quiet Pub
March 4 (7-10 p.m.): Writing/Publishing Workshop in the John Orr Rm.
March 5 (2-4 p.m.): Writing Workshop with Guest Speaker

AMS Accessibility Task Force

" Making Queen's a place for everyone "

1993-94 Projects:

- Funded the construction of a ramp at the Grey House.
- Offered Sign Language Courses to Queen's students at a reduced cost.
- Funded the Special Readers Room at Douglas Library.
- Organized volunteers to be note takers and transcribers.
- Purchased assistive devices for students with special needs.

Much more can be done to make Queen's a more accessible university...for example

Could you get from one side of campus to the other during the winter if you were in a wheelchair?

How would an individual with a hearing impairment phone for a walk home?

How could a student with a visual impairment get access to the information printed in campus papers?

BACK PAGE

Romance IN ACADEMIA?

Valentine's Day may have come and gone, but many of those bitter singles around campus are still bitter and single. In this issue of the Backpage, we look at those crazy hot dating practices...

Craig Pharoah (left) and Hudson Kerr play "Stairway" in a stairway. DEREK YARNELL

Valentines Day has just recently passed. Boyfriends and girlfriends buying roses, cards, and other gifts for each other that expressed their love on such a joyous occasion. However, for many it was not all bliss. Many Queen's students faced a valentine-less Valentine's Day, which, I believe, is connected to a "non-dating" phenomena on campus. I believe "dating" at Queen's has become obsolete, and finding someone with whom to have a romantic relationship with has become even more scarce.

Four years ago when I was about to plunge into the world of university campus life, my mother took me aside and revealed that I was about to embark upon four years of fun and frolic, and that there will be opportunities of meeting many men — one of whom may well be a potential husband. The thought of meeting several young men, coupled with loss of parental constraints, created an excitement which I have never felt before. This was it! Freedom and an assortment of young men with whom to flirt with, date, and hopefully to have a relationship with!

However, it did not take too long before I realized that this was not the case. Although some may question that my history with dating and relationships may be due to a flawed personality, less than satisfactory looks, or reputation, I beg to differ. For the past few years, I have been listening to not only women's but men's frustrations about the "dating" scene — or to be more general, the courtship culture at Queen's University. Why is it that many men and women who claim that they just want to meet a "nice guy" or "nice girl," are spending their years at Queen's single and discouraged? I feel that the general mood surrounding courtship on campus is dismal.

In my first year at Queen's, I soon became drawn into the wild life of a frosh, where orientation week ran into the months of October and November — until every day drifted into the next. I drank, partied, frequented Alfie's, and eventually met many young men with whom I developed friendly relationships with. On occasion, someone would catch my eye or become noticed through my "goggles" developed from one too many beers. If fortune went my way, we would eventually be introduced through a mutual friend, dance a fast song, buy each other a beer, and find each other for that long awaited last "slow" dance, at which time we both knew that something was going to happen. Whether the interlude later resulted in some form of kissing or touching, an exchange of phone numbers, a walk back to residence, or perhaps even a "sleep over" — these were the glory days of "picking-up" and my first experiences with campus courtship. Although a few "dates" were made — many phone calls were not returned, as the word "commitment" rarely entered many first year student's vocabulary. Why be "tied down" when you had another three years to do that sort of thing?

Little did I know that these "glory days" were sure to end. As first year went on into the second, third and fourth, I found that "meeting" someone with whom I could potentially build a relationship became increasingly difficult. As time progressed, I acquired a great group of male and female friends with whom to go out to bars, parties, and other social events. It seemed as though the "bar" scene was no longer the place nor the time to meet someone. It became a matter of knowing most of the people in the bar, and there was no new good-looking "friend" to be introduced to or mysterious stranger to flirt with. Where it once used to be the case that you could notice or meet someone in a classroom or work-group setting, I found that my classes were getting smaller and I was pretty much acquainted with most of the other students. As time passed, I also became bombarded with sexual harassment and date-rape issues that surround campus newspapers, literature, and campus discourse. When I entered first year residence, a sexual harassment pamphlet and a date-rape prevention information sheet was placed on the centre of my desk. Men in first year received pamphlets on how to avoid sexual harassment and to walk on the other side of the street at night if you and another woman are alone in order to reduce women's fear of being attacked. Almost every month I read extensive articles about sexual harassment and mostly about what women's groups and feminists at Queen's had to say. In addition, my Queen's student that Queen's Principal's Advisory Committee on the Status of Women defines sexual harassment to encompass, "any sexual remarks, suggestive comments, gestures, physical contact or conduct that interferes with an individual's dignity." I was overwhelmed with definitions of what it was that women were supposed to accept as "sexually correct" when interacting with the opposite sex. I am grateful for the "no means no" campaign, as it has brought awareness to both men and women. But, at the same time, such awareness has left many confused about whether or not it is correct to flirt any more, and how to be intimate with someone whom you are getting to know. I wonder if these new rules of sexual correctness has hampered the interpersonal relations between men and women who wish to meet one another!

Although I am leaving Queen's this year with many fond memories, I must question how right my mother was in proposing that I might meet that "special someone" amongst an active "dating" life. I am also worried what turn premarital courtship will take once I leave the campus community. I may never again be in a position where such a large group of single, young, eligible men, will be concentrated in the same place.

This was written by a fourth year sociology student who is doing an honours thesis on heterosexual campus courtship at Queen's. The writer encourages anyone to respond to this article by writing letters to The Journal. The writer also looking for people to talk to regarding their dating experiences at Queen's — leave a message at The Queen's Journal if you are interested.

neologisms

You can't be a hipster doofus without 'em!

neology (noun, from the Greek neos, meaning new and logos, also Greek, meaning word (of God)): the art of coining new words. Such new words are called neologisms. Let's try some neologisms based on the German word Autobahn. infobahn (noun): refers to the "Information Superhighway" that the media keeps hyping. Could be used to refer to the Internet. ghettobahn (noun): refers to Brock Street, which Kingston drivers — especially cabbies — treat as if it were a four-lane superhighway with no posted speed limit. blottobahn (noun): refers to the line-up at a bar that dispenses only draft beer; the fastest way to get drunk. You could even adapt this to "shooter bars" by calling them shot-o-bahns.

pot-o-bahn (noun): any roadway that leads to a Grateful Dead concert.

JOEY'S SOURCES: OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, WIRED MAGAZINE, AMEY'S TAXI, AND ANNOTING DEAD-HEADS.

BURGER KING	BURGER KING
FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.	FREE CHICKEN SANDWICH when you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.
Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.	Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.
Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires March 9/94	Remember $1.69 Whopper Wednesdays Expires March 9/94

Don't be left in the dust!
Come Join the information highway.

Applications are now available for the following Queen's Journal Editorial Board and Business positions...

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Publications Manager | Production Manager and Assistants |
| News Editor and Assistants | Photography Editor and Assistant |
| Entertainment Editor and Assistants | Graphics Editor and Assistants |
| Sports Editor and Assistant | Business Manager |
| Literary Lapses Editor | Creative Staff Manager |
| Opinions Editor | Ads Manager |
| Features Editor | Sales Representative |
| Misc Editor and Assistant | System/House Manager |

Applications are available from Gabe at the Journal House, 272 Earl St., and are due by 4:00pm on Monday March 14, 1994. Applications can be handed in to Gabe or Jeff.

If you have any questions about positions or concerns about accessibility, please call us anytime at 545-2800

THE KEYNOTE SPEAKER FOR THE ANNUAL DAVIES, WARD & BECK SPEAKER SERIES

TREVOR EYTON

Senator of Canada
and Chairman of Brascan Limited

WILL BE SPEAKING AT QUEEN'S ON THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1994 about
"Challenges and Opportunities Facing Canada in the Next Decade."

All members of the Queen's community are welcome to attend.
WHERE: Macdonald Hall (The Law School), Theatres D & E

TIME: 3:00 pm

Organized By

QUEEN'S CORPORATE LAW & INVESTMENT CLUB

Bestselling Author
Nino Ricci
Reading at
Grant Hall
March 10:00 p.m.
From his novels Lives of the Saints and In a Glass House.
Sponsored by the AMS Author Series

THE QUEEN'S
JOURNAL
Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1994 • ISSUE 34 • VOLUME 121

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul Group
549-3553 549-3561

inside
The Journal

MARRIOTT DEMO
Marriott workers and their supporters are taking their grievances to the streets today, union organizer Bruce Dodds says. Dodds also warns that a strike could be on the horizon if his union's demands for higher wages, a pension plan and better job security aren't met in negotiations now taking place.
—For story, see page 3.

BANDS DO BATTLE
Yellowbelly, Volume and Wholesome strutted their stuff at Alie's Tuesday night, competing in the 1994 Queen's Battle of the Bands semi-finals. To find out which group is headed for the finals, see page 21.

EN GARDE!
The Men's fencing team brought back gold from the OUAA championships Feb. 19 and 20 in Ottawa.
—Story, page 15.

THOUGHTS ON DEFENSE
The recent federal budget slashed military spending, shutting some bases down completely, while down-sizing others like CFB Kingston. But before deficit piling takes too big a bite out of our military, it deserves a second look.
—See Feature, page 12.

"I think the casting of this divide as a speech issue is utterly misleading. What divides us... is competing visions of equality, not speech." —Law prof Sheila McIntyre, debating with visiting author William Gairdner on political correctness.

Former Queen's student freed on peace bond

Ex-Surface editor charged in summer incident with Toronto police

BY BRAD ELDER

Last Thursday, Shaheen Hirani, former editor of Surface newspaper, was released on peace bond, as charges against her of assault on a police officer were dropped.

But for Hirani, the victory was bittersweet. Hirani contends that she was the victim, and not the aggressor, in her July 23 run-in with police during a visit by Kim Campbell to the University of Toronto campus.

She said the peace bond, negotiated by her lawyers and the prosecution, is an attempt on the part of police to "escape accountability for their actions," which she described as abusive.

In addition to signing the peace bond, which commits Hirani and co-accused Andrea Lofquist to keep the peace and be on good behaviour for twelve months, the pair had to agree not to pursue the matter further in any legal or administrative body.

This effectively means that Hirani and Lofquist cannot launch a civil suit against the police, can't press criminal charges of assault against police, and can't launch a grievance through the Police Complaints Commissioner's office.

Hirani said that while she is "trying to characterize [the peace bond] as a victory, the fact that the condition is attached is indicative of what the real actions of the police were."

In a press release, Hirani wrote, "the police were obviously very concerned that charges or complaints would be laid against them as a result of their out of control behaviour."

FORMER CONTINUED ON PAGE 4

International Socialists picketed author William Gairdner's speech at KCVI Tuesday night. For story, see page 5.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

$7,500 computer theft from EngSoc

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

Over Reading Week, a computer and laser jet printer valued at over $7,500 were stolen from the second floor lounge of the Engineering Society in Clark Hall.

The computer, stolen on Feb. 21, had been installed in the EngSoc lounge only five days earlier.

Eric Gonneau, vice-president (operations) of the Engineering Society, who filed the report with Kingston Police, first noticed the printer and computer were missing around mid-morning on Monday the 21st.

Because the computer was last used on the 20th, Gonneau said he believes the theft occurred anywhere between Sunday evening and early Monday morning. There were no signs of forced entry into the lounge and the door was locked, he said.

Approximately 30 members of EngSoc and cleaning staff have keys to the office.

"Even though we have a lot of people who have keys, how people hold these keys is a different matter," Gonneau said. "And although these keys say 'do not copy' on them, have any of these keys been copied? It's a matter of trusting who you give the keys to."

Lori Digulla, external services coordinator for EngSoc, said she does not believe the theft was an inside job. "I have a very strong feeling it's not someone whom we issued a key to. You just don't think it will happen until it does. You have to trust everyone," she said.

Digulla said she found the theft very disturbing. "The EngSoc lounge is somewhere I have always considered a home. It's too bad that [the theft] distracts from that atmosphere, but I hope that it will not distract people from coming here in the future," she said.

In addition to housing EngSoc and its executive, the lounge provides offices for the international development group QPID, Golden Words, Clark Hall Pub and Science Quest, a summer day camp for children.

"The EngSoc lounge accommodates many people. It's upsetting that someone would abuse this type of offering," said Digulla.

Although no immediate action has been taken to increase security for the lounge—which has no alarms or surveillance cameras—Digulla remarked, "everyone in EngSoc has raised an eyebrow to it. The issue has definitely come up."

Moreover, both Gonneau and Digulla said they believe it is an important issue which the new EngSoc executive should focus on.

Kingston Police Staff Sergeant Bill Doxtator said a report was filed at approximately 8 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 21, and that police are still investigating.

Ward change proposal causes controversy

Residents fear students will be over-represented

BY TARA ROY

Proposed municipal electoral boundary changes have some Kingston residents up in arms, worried that students will have too much of a say at City Hall.

The plan would leave each city ward with one instead of two councillors, decreasing the total number of councillors from 14 to 10, and increasing the number of wards from seven to 10.

Objections to the plan from Kingston residents include concerns that a student could be elected in Sydenham Ward (where Queen's and the surrounding student area are located), who would fail to represent permanent residents.

Helen Finley, a representative of the Sydenham Ward Tenants' and Ratepayers' Association, said that 80 per cent of the population of Sydenham Ward, the student portion, is "a transient population."

"The permanent residents put more into [the ward] financially and so on. If there's only one councillor and it's a student and sees his or her constituency as students, then we would feel disenfranchised," Finley said.

In the past, having a student as one of the two Sydenham councillors has not been a concern for Finley. "We have had a student councillor—there were complaints like 'why don't you do a better job?' But that's not been a problem, because we had the other councillor to offset the effects," she said.

Kingston resident Roy Bonazza published a formal report on his position, writing, "for Sydenham Ward a real risk exists—of a single-interest group having a preponderant voice at the expense of other communities within the ward."

However, Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin said many of the long-term interests of permanent residents and students in Sydenham Ward are the same. "I can see no reason why we can't be able to cooperate using the councillor as a resource person," she said.

The possibility of a councillor being elected who is unsympathetic to student issues is a concern for Nevin.

"We're going to have to hope we get a good person in there... If it was an anti-student councillor, I just don't know what will happen to us. That would be terrible," she said.

Nevin called the proposal unfair since under the plan, Sydenham would be the largest ward, with approximately 9,620 eligible voters. The other wards would be substantially smaller, like Kingscourt, with only 3,456 constituents. However, all wards would have just one councillor.

"We live in a society of equal representation and that's not what's happening here," said Nevin. "They have effectively decreased the voices of every person in the ward by making it larger," she added.

At an Ontario Municipal Board hearing Monday at City Hall, City Clerk Marian Rogers said population density was not an issue when the new boundaries were drawn up. "Historically, students don't vote as a rule," she said, to account for the large discrepancy.

The idea for the ward changes was put forward in a report, compiled by Interim

WARD CHANGES CONTINUED ON PAGE 4

THE FRIENDS YOU MAKE ON THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS ARE THE FRIENDS YOU'LL HAVE FOR LIFE ... JOIN THE PARTY NOW

	WEST CAMPUS	VIC HALL	JDUC	DROP-OFF POINTS	PRICE
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:10	Oshawa, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal	$20
MONTREAL	2:50	3:10	3:20	Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal	$25
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	Kanata, Pinecrest, Carling & Kirkwood, Bus Terminal	$16
RETURN: SUNDAY			PICK-UP POINTS
TORONTO		8:00pm		One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza
MONTREAL		5:45pm		Bus Terminal
OTTAWA		8:00pm		Bus Terminal

TICKETS ARE ON SALE AT THE BOX OFFICE NO REFUNDS AND NO EXCHANGES

SLIP, HOLIDAY INN KEVIN HEAD

WITH GUESTS BOB ROBERTSON & KEN HALL

WEDNESDAY TO SATURDAY MAR. 2nd TO 5th

NEXT WEEK: DOUG REANSBURY

EVERY MON. TO WED., THE RAG TIME KID 5-8pm DRAUGHT & DOZEN 60 oz. PITCHER OF DRAUGHT & 12 WINGS - $14.50

1 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 549-8400 EXT. 657

THINKING OF TRANSFERRING TO THE COMMERCE PROGRAM? THEN PLAN TO ATTEND THE COMMERCE PROGRAM INFORMATION MEETING

Tuesday, March 8
Room 12, Dunning Hall
7:00 PM

Representatives of the School of Business Undergraduate Office, the School of Business Faculty, Commerce Students and Queen's Admissions Office will discuss:

- The nature of the Commerce Program
- Jobs and Careers after Commerce
- The School of Business International Exchange Programs
- Queen's Commerce Culture and Student Life
- Admissions Procedures, Criteria and Standards

*If you're thinking of business school, please join us.
If you're unable to attend, information can be obtained from Room 120, Dunning Hall.*

Political Correctness

Progress or "modern nightmare"?

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER

In a standing room only debate, best-selling, right-wing author William Gairdner squared off against Queen's law professor and feminist Sheila McIntyre over the issue of political correctness.

The two-hour long debate, which had no resolution, was hosted by the Queen's Law Legal Education Advocates.

Gairdner argued the case for formal equality, while McIntyre spoke for substantive equality.

Gairdner, best-selling author of The Trouble With Canada and The War Against the Family, told the audience that the law has ushered in radical changes that are "injurious to the concept of law itself."

The liberal dream of free individual human beings has been replaced by a modern nightmare, he said.

He argued that affirmative action programs "specialize in draconian, legal inequalities of a kind rarely to be found even in the most openly totalitarian states...for they self-righteously discriminate in favour of one group which has earned no reward against another which has deserved no punishment."

Gairdner compared substantive equality advocates with the gnostics, who he described as religious fanatics who believed they alone had a privileged understanding of the bad world, and Robespierre, Stalin, and Hitler—all men who murdered their own citizens in the name of the public good.

With substantive equality, enemies of the state are either suppressed, silenced, "as I find is happening a lot on our university campuses—no names mentioned," fined, sent off to a camp or liquidated, he said.

"I do not wish to suggest for a moment that Canada or the USA would ever reach such a point. But no one thought that Germany would ever reach it either," Gairdner said.

Gairdner said universities are increasingly resorting to the "specific habits of mind that produced such evils."

Gairdner said that in the past 30 years Canada has changed from a bottom-up society to a top-down state in which a class of elites has decided what the good life is, and is using substantive equality to lead the people to it—whether they wish to follow it or not.

The result of this is a focus on bigger government, politically defined groups, grants, tax grabs and godlessness, he said.

Clearly the audience favourite, McIntyre began by quoting feminist author Catherine MacKinnon who said "feminism is the impulse in every woman for self-respect."

"I'm not interested in forcing anyone to freedom, I want the foot of my neck," she said.

McIntyre said the divide between herself and Gairdner should not be packaged in terms of the language of political correctness.

"I don't see this as a divide about thought control...I think the casting of this divide as a speech issue is utterly misleading. What divides us is, as Mr. Gairdner to his credit admits, is competing visions of equality, not speech," she said.

McIntyre said inequality is not random or a natural curve, but constructed. Her view aspires to eliminate actual inequalities, she said.

McIntyre challenged Gairdner's charges of totalitarianism, saying that reforms have been secured democratically and non-violently.

"I don't understand the basic metaphor that I silence you...that you're brave to speak in my presence lest I label you sexist or racist or a homophobe," she said.

"If you understand that power wedded to speech can chill learning, expression, self-confidence, dignity, and in fact the aspiration to equality, then you can understand why people like me see reason to be concerned about the use of speech by powerholders," McIntyre said.

She described Gairdner's top-down vision as "patent nonsense," but said it was timely. "It's timely because these are bad times...This is a handy time to have scapegoats."

She said the targets of anti-political correctness literature are mostly feminists, people of colour, lesbians and gays, and all varieties in between. "The way we are targeted is by saying we are beneficiaries of affirmative action, whether or not true. The implication is affirmative action departs from the formal equality norm and individual merit so we are substandard," she said.

Later, she said that as an out lesbian in a convention-bound institution, she found the disguised hostility in such literature as Gairdner's frightening in its familiarity. McIntyre said what little they have gained, for some, appears to be too much.

During the question period, Gairdner responded to a number of hostile questions from audience members.

When asked if he believed systemic discrimination was a real problem, Gairdner responded that he thought about half of what he reads about discrimination is true. He said it would be a free society that would solve these problems.

Gairdner also suggested that "in the bottom of her heart," McIntyre must wonder at times if she was at Queen's because she is a woman or because she is good at her job.

The audience greeted his suggestion with a chorus of boos and hisses, and asked him if he had ever asked himself the same question.

He replied that he had never been hired under an affirmative action regime, and so had no need to.

HIDDEN HUNGER WEEK

Queen's Hidden Hunger Committee is holding an Awareness Week from March 7 to 11, featuring a coffee house, food drive, petitions, and a fundraiser.

The food drive will be held on the evening of March 10. Hidden Hunger volunteers will canvass the student housing area for non-perishable food items for the Partners in Mission Food Bank, located at 412 Bagot Street. Last term, the food drive was successful in collecting over 1,500 non-perishable goods.

For more information on Hidden Hunger week or to volunteer for the food drive contact Mike Hammer at 531-5414.

QUEEN'S DIABETES ASSOCIATION MEETS

The newly-formed Queen's Diabetes Association will meet Sunday, March 6 at 7 p.m. in the John Orr Room of the John Deutsch University Centre. The group currently has 15 members, and you don't have to be diabetic to join. The meeting Sunday will feature Dr. John O'Quinn from Student Health as a guest speaker.

The group hopes to provide support for diabetics at Queen's, reach out to diabetic adolescents in Kingston, and raise funds for research.

Sony/McGill deal questioned

BY CARINA BLOFIELD AND THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL STAFF

The question of corporate influence on universities has arisen regarding a two-year old deal between Sony and the McGill music department which brought McGill a quarter million dollars worth of equipment.

Critics allege that the transaction involved trading partial control of the faculty's curriculum in return for equipment from a major corporation.

On January 19, 1994, the McGill University Senate voted to condemn any deal under which a profit-seeking institution gains direct influence over curriculum decisions.

In June 1992, as part of setting up what amounts to an apprenticeship program for a small number of graduate students, Sony Classical Productions gave McGill $250,000 worth of high-end audio equipment on indefinite loan. McGill hired audio recording expert Sony vice-president Christian Constantinov to teach McGill students on the equipment. He teaches three days a month in the graduate music program at McGill.

As well, Sony guaranteed that two graduates would be hired each year as interns by the corporation.

Critics of the deal allege that Constantinov, by virtue of his seat on the faculty council, will have undue influence over curriculum.

Sam Noumoff, a McGill senator and political science professor said, "increasingly, companies and private foundations are now insisting upon a direct role in the management of the monies they make available."

However, as per McGill conflict of interest guidelines, Constantinov can't vote on the faculty council.

John Grew, dean of music at McGill, said private funding for the music program is not at all unusual, as over 75 per cent of the faculty's money comes from sources outside the university.

Many students in the music department support Sony's presence.

Raymond Luk, a second-year music student at McGill, said, "the general consensus is that it is a really good thing."

Queen's Vice-Principal (Resources), Rod Fraser, said when deals between Queen's and the private sector are made, there is always a total commitment to having academic programs under the sole sovereignty of the Senate.

"The idea that a person could buy their way on to a faculty board is a constraint on academic freedom, and on a senate in its judgment of appropriate standards," Fraser said.

Fraser added that sometimes chairs and professorships are established by corporations, but the university retains control over who is chosen, and the professor has unrestrained academic freedom.

Carl Hamacher, dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, provided an example of such a case. A number of Canadian mining companies, he said, have pledged money towards a Chair of Mining Design. In this way, they contribute to the engineering program, but do not dictate curriculum, he said.

"When someone comes in and says, 'I will give an endowment for Chair X,' obviously it is an influence. However, it is a positive one. That is the good form of support," Hamacher said.

Fraser recognized the importance of private-sector contributions in the role of the private sector in funding research contracts, and in company contributions to fundraising campaigns," he said.

However, at Queen's, Fraser said, no corporation has been given a direct say in curriculum in return for contributions.

The Queen's Faculty of Music would not comment on the deal. With files from Canadian University Press.

Marriott workers to protest today

Wages, job security are the aims of employees

BY JASON BENNETT

Marriott workers at Queen's will protest today, while union organizer Bruce Dodds says the university should get ready for a strike. His group is seeking job security, pensions, and higher wages.

"The university administration must be made aware that full strike action is possible for this year," Dodds said. "Some employees will be in strike position as early as this month."

A march of support for Marriott workers is planned for today at 11:30 a.m., starting at Carruthers Hall and heading to University and Union Streets, where Dodds said the group will block the intersection for 20 minutes.

Later this afternoon, Marriott part-time workers are planning to demonstrate at the university's Board of Trustees meeting in the Policy Studies Building.

The Board of Trustees is responsible for the university's operating budget and other financial interests, including the contracting of food services from Marriott on campus.

Dodds warned that food services such as Leonard Cafeteria and the Sidevalk Cafe could be severely restricted or entirely suspended should employees choose to strike.

A pink flyer distributed across campus on Tuesday by disgruntled part-time Marriott workers states: "Hey Marriott! No one can live on a measly $6.70 an hour. Shame on Queen's for allowing it!!!"

Representatives of the Canadian Union of Public Employees met Tuesday to discuss strategies for increasing the representation of all Queen's employees and students at the decision-making level.

Possibilities include allowing Senate membership for Queen's staff representatives, the heading of Senate committees by staff, or even the revision of the Queen's Royal Charter to allow staff members a vote on the Board of Trustees. The Charter presently grants one student, the rector, a vote on the board.

Former Surface editor cleared of assaulting police officer

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

so this is clearly an attempt to try to silence us."

The charges against Hirani, who graduated from Queen's last year and is now a student in Toronto, stem from a confrontation with RCMP, Metro and University of Toronto police on July 23.

At that time, Hirani, Lofquist and seven others were protesting the visit of then-Prime Minister Kim Campbell at Harr House on the U of T campus.

Hirani told The Journal that the ad hoc protest group represented the Ontario Coalition Against Poverty, the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, and Toronto Disarmament Network.

The group was protesting such issues as the helicopter deal, student aid, NAFTA and the prioritizing of the deficit over human needs, she said.

According to Hirani, the ensuing conflict with police began when U of T authorities asked the group to leave Harr House. She said that as the situation heated up, the number of U of T police swelled, and Metro police and plain-clothed officers appeared on the scene.

Hirani said that as she left the Harr House, she was kicked and pushed, and fell down the stone staircase of the house.

At this point, she scuffled with a plain-clothed woman, rolling onto the concrete outside.

"I was pinned to the concrete, my hair was pulled... and my arm was twisted behind my back," Hirani said, adding that the plain-clothed female at no time identified herself as a police officer.

Able to elude the grasp of the female, Hirani said she was subsequently grabbed by the neck by a plain-clothed male, who proceeded to bang her head against the concrete.

Hirani said she later discovered the plain-clothed individuals were RCMP and Metro intelligence officers.

"A lot of us were assaulted, pushed around and beaten up," said Hirani. In addition, fellow protester Lofquist was arrested during the scuffle, as she tried to come to the aid of Hirani.

Globe and Mail columnist Michael Valpy was among those who witnessed the incident, and is quoted in an article appearing in Toronto's Now Magazine this week: "I'm not used to seeing Canadian police be that rough with people, in what was basically a student demonstration."

"The Metro officers I saw were rude... They were using excessive force," Valpy said.

Hirani said that with nowhere left to turn, she told her story to the reporters who had shown up for media coverage of Campbell's visit.

It was not until an hour after the incident, when Hirani had already told her story to reporters, that she was arrested for assaulting a police officer.

Hirani said that when the trial date finally rolled around last Thursday, she and Lofquist were ready to go to court, with "several really credible witnesses, when lawyers came out and said police had offered a peace bond."

She said she is confident that the decision to accept the terms of the peace bond was the right decision, as the courts "aren't our turf—we can fight other battles on other turfs."

"We're going to mount a media campaign in terms of education about awareness about police violence," she added. "Ours is not a unique experience."

In the press release, Hirani also defined the incident as a freedom of speech issue, noting that "the activists are concerned about the seemingly selective enforcement of the freedom of speech code by university administrators."

"Peaceful demonstrators protesting the expenditure of public funds on military helicopters are beaten up on university property while the same administration says it has no authority to remove recruiters for the racist white supremacist group the Heritage Front—there is obviously a major inconsistency here."

Investigating Detective Phil Wilson of Metro Police, 52nd Division, could not be reached for comment before press time.

Ward changes proposed

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

Chief Administrative Officer Frank Collum, which intends to streamline and improve efficiency at City Hall.

Collum's report recommended changes to the current committee structure, and the establishment of a councillors' office to help the representatives with their workloads.

The application has to be approved by the OMB and then the Ontario Legislature by April 1, so that the city can submit its election list to provincial officials in time for the upcoming municipal election in November.

This time frame may pose some problems, for the legislature does not resume sitting until the end of March.

Kingston resident Irene Mooney, who opposes the proposal, is concerned about keeping the existing neighbourhoods intact. "Leave it the way it is," she said.

Another of Mooney's concerns is that councillors will be overworked. Even in the present situation, she said, it is difficult to reach one of the two councillors. "How the devil can you get them when there's only one?" she asked.

City council has debated this issue since June 1993, and since then has taken a number of positions, first accepting the proposal, then rejecting it.

The OMB is expected to come to a decision on the application within the next couple of weeks.

Best-selling author promotes traditional family

International Socialists protest; call him "blatantly sexist, racist"

BY SHELLEE FITZGERALD

Controversial author William Gairdner did not escape the wrath of the Kingston branch of the International Socialists when he gave an address entitled, "Is There Really a War Against the Family?" at Kingston Collegiate and Vocational Institute on Tuesday night.

A protest of the speaker, who was sponsored by the Frontenac Coalition of Concerned Citizens, was staged outside the entrance of KCVI by the International Socialists. The protesters were demonstrating against what they believe to be Gairdner's "blatantly sexist, racist, homophobic, and generally regressive ideas." These ideas, they charge, are reflected in his books The Trouble With Canada and The War Against The Family.

"77 per cent of all Canadian families are married couple families—but you wouldn't know this from reading the newspaper."

"It's important that people oppose his far-right ideas and those of the Reform Party as well," said Patrick Schreck of the International Socialists.

While the International Socialists charge that Gairdner is a former executive member of the Ontario Reform Party, Gairdner denied any such affiliation in his speech, stressing, "I don't belong to any political party and never have."

Gairdner opened his discussion by laughing off the protest and directing a shot at the demonstrators. "I hope none of you [the audience] were upset by the hecklers outside. They haven't discovered that socialism doesn't work except in heaven where you don't need it, or in hell where you already have it."

Members of the International Socialists responded by challenging Gairdner to a debate, which the speaker replied could be arranged at a later time.

Gairdner then turned to an examination of the definition of the family. He suggested that there are "many in society who are interested in diluting and dissolving the definition of family."

Gairdner offered his definition of the "natural family," which includes a married mother and father living together with dependent children.

He spoke of the "unfortunate" situation in Canada and the irresponsibility of the media. "We hear a lot of bad news about the family in the media," he said.

This is a consistent effort by an "ill-educated press [who] are essentially good people with bad ideas. And because they are idealists, if you convince them your ideas are better they'll abandon their ideas and rise up," he said.

Citing figures from Statistics Canada, Gairdner said that "77 per cent of all Canadian families are married couple families—but you wouldn't know this from reading the newspaper."

The speaker further suggested that the number of single-parent families (13 per cent by his figures) is lower than it was in the 1930's and 1940's. He contends that while disease and war were the chief explanations for single-parent families in those days, today it is a result of "women firing their husbands."

The discussion turned to an examination of "the war on the family." Gairdner offered a historical analysis beginning with Plato and ending with the Swedish social experiment.

"Plato," he said, "was a very bright man." According to Gairdner, Plato sought to escape the law of degeneration (caused by a dependency on private values over common ones) by attacking and abolishing the family.

Sweden, too, in its "chilling" experiment in socialism, Gairdner argued, "has set out to diminish the natural family."

Turning the focus to education, Gairdner condemned public school curriculums and text books that broaden the definition of family and marriage to include homosexual couples.

"They are trying to establish a moral equivalency between all these families. When you do this you can stop talking about family and instead talk about people because there is no family anymore."

He continued by suggesting that "redefining the family is terribly important to those trying to change it."

Sex education in high schools, Gairdner insisted, "is the most powerful instrument for divesting parents of authority." Teachers, he said, either purposefully or unwittingly promote premarital sex and abortions through sex education.

Abortion is a practice, he argued, that will ultimately lead to "infanticide of the disabled and euthanasia of the old."

Gairdner then focused on what he calls "the sad story of the 100-year experiment in public education." Condemning public schools for their 30 per cent failure rate, he advocated that people should rise up against the problem and initiate a "choice in education movement," whereby education is removed from the hands of the state and given back to families and communities.

"[Same-sex family advocates] are trying to establish a moral equivalency between all these families. When you do this you can stop talking about family and instead talk about people because there is no family anymore."

"Until we resolve this educational problem," said Gairdner, "we will never get these ideological meddlers [state-paid educators] away from the minds of our children."

He concluded his address by offering a series of solutions to the "war against the family." These include a tax solution for legally married couples that would "empower" women to stay in the home to raise their children. He also described a mortgage deduction for married couples that would "spur couples to get married," and recommended the inclusion of a definition of the "natural family" in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

"A good society," concluded Gairdner, "is a journey and not a destination."

SHOT ART

Growth of Dinner 547 Pool

Roots

SWEATERS

HALF PRICE OR LESS

Roots Kingston. 34 Princess St.
546-7668

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

Air conditioning

AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance^{††}

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

SmartLease
$189
per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates
$750 bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offer applies to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month (equipment as described). A minimum down payment of $1,495 and $200 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Freight $550. License, insurance and taxes not included. Offer applies to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offer applies to qualified retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. ††Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post secondary institution during the period September 1, 1993 through August 31, 1994. Graduates program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

PRE-REGISTRATION OF HISTORY COURSES

An information meeting will be held Tuesday, March 8th, 6:30 pm in Dunning Auditorium.

Students intending to pre-register for seminars in History are strongly advised to attend.

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS? THEN GET THE ANSWERS

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

Quality Comfort Care
EYEWEAR

Marc F Raymond OPTICIANS LTD
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE
& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE

International Socialists

International Women's Day Meeting:

STOPPING VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

SPEAKER: CAROLYN EGAN
TORONTO I.S., ONTARIO COALITION FOR ABORTION CLINICS, STEELWORKERS' UNION ACTIVIST

Tuesday 8 March, 8 pm
Third Floor Common Room, J.D.U.C.

funding contribution from AMS Movable Speaker Fund

UNIVERSITY OF OTTAWA

A three-week investigation into the teaching practices of U of O sociology professor Paul Lamy has resulted in a reprimand for the prof. The investigation took place on the heels of student complaints over homophobic comments that Lamy allegedly made in class. Lamy, who is reported to have said, "you call them bisexuals, I call them psychopaths," during a lecture, faces suspension or dismissal if he chooses to continue to express homophobic opinions in class.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Recently declassified Russian archives about the Stalin regime will be examined by U of T historians.

The research team, which will be headed by Professor Robert Johnson, director for Russian and East European Studies, has received a $1.13 million grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council to study archival information from the Soviet Union during Stalin's rule.

Don't bother looking for a copy of Norman Mailer's

CAMPUS BRIEFS

Marilyn: A Biography in the stacks at U of T's Robart's Library—all you'll find is a piece of wood.

That wood is in fact a placeholder for the book, which, like other graphically and politically controversial books, sits on the restricted shelf.

These books include copies of works by Salman Rushdie and the Marquis de Sade; books containing popular artwork, such as The Art of Walt Disney; portfolios containing loose art prints and books about Marilyn Monroe.

But according to Warren Holder, Robart's director of Access and Information, the library's restricted shelf holds books considered vulnerable to damage or theft.

"I really want to get away from the idea that it's any sort of censorship," said Holder.

The Varsity

Reading Week break and enters decrease

Only one ghetto break-in over break

BY KATHY GOLDER

An increased awareness in housing safety may have helped students avoid break-ins, as this year's Reading Week break saw less break-and-enters take place in the student ghetto than last year.

Between Feb. 19 and 24, there were 10 incidents of break and enter in residential areas in Kingston. Only one of these occurred in the student area.

During the same period last year, there were eight incidents of break-and-enter in Kingston residential areas, four of which took place in the student area.

Staff Sergeant Bill Doxtator suggested that the decrease in break-and-enters in the student area may be caused by increased awareness of the risk of leaving a residence unattended for extended periods.

"Public education and awareness is a big factor," Doxtator said. People tend to have better locks and have neighbours watch their homes, he suggested.

Kingston Police define the student area as the zone encompassing Victoria St. to the west, Princess St. to the north, Barrie St. to the east, and King St. to the south.

Gettin' down in the JDUC. Arts Fest dancers bring rhythm to Queen's.

DEREK YARNELL

LET'S WING IT FOOD & FLICKS
573 PRINCESS ST.

549-1842

FREE MOVIE RENTAL (min $10.00 order)
FREE CITY DELIVERY (min $10.00 order)
15% DISCOUNT ON TAKE-OUTS

$1.00 OFF
Any order of wings or ribs with this coupon

EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

FREE
1/2 lb of Wings With Any Order 2 lb or more with this coupon

EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

NEW DALLAS WINGS HOTI HOTI HOTI A REAL WINNER!

You could Win one of five $1,000 grand prizes

IN THE Kraft Dinner *
CAMPUS CONNECTION
Recipe Contest.

CALL 1-800-26-KRAFT

AND

GIVE a recipe!
You might be a grand prize winner!

"The first 300 qualifying recipe entrants will receive a FREE case of New KRAFT* White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese!"

There will be one winner selected for each of these 5 categories:

1. Best Mealtime Recipe
2. Best Snacktime Recipe
3. Best Recipe (by an individual)
4. Best Recipe (by a group)
5. "Healthiest" Recipe

Remember, delicious, easy-to-make recipes and creative recordings get extra marks!

To save time while studying I make my delicious "Speedy Tuna Dinner". While the KD's cooking I put 1 cup of frozen peas in a colander. Then I put the boiling water from the noodles over the peas to thaw. Add in 1 can of tuna, the peas & some Italian seasonings to your KD and voilà! Try it with new White Cheddar too!

Ima Keener - Noodle U

Joe Koal - Cheddar College

Making "Jammin' Joe's Chili Beef Dinner" takes no time. I cook 1/2 lb. of ground beef in a frying pan and add it to a pot of KD along with 1 cup of stewed tomatoes and 1 tsp chili powder. The hotter the better! Try that new Kraft Cheese & Tomato flavour for extra tomato taste!

RULES and Regs

1. To enter and qualify for this contest call the KRAFT DINNER "Campus Connection" Recipe Contest hotline at 1-800-26-KRAFT and record your recipe. Include your name, address and telephone number and identify the category in which you are entering (see below). If your entry is in the group category, include names of all individuals (max 5) to share equally in distribution of any prize money.
2. In order to be eligible for judging, recipes must use a KRAFT Macaroni & Cheese product as the main ingredient. Recipes previously published by Kraft General Foods Canada Inc. (KGFC) or other recognized sources will be disqualified.
3. No purchase is necessary. Enter as often as you wish, but entries must be received no later than March 31, 1994, the CONTEST CLOSING DATE. Only one recipe per telephone call will be accepted. A recipe may be entered only into one category. Subsequent entry of the same recipe in another category will not be considered.
4. From all eligible entries received on or before the CONTEST CLOSING DATE, 20 recipes from each category will be selected at random by an independent selection organization on April 6, 1994. These selected recipes will be evaluated by the KRAFT Kitchens who will select 1 (one) best recipe in each of 5 categories: Best Mealtime Recipe, Best Snacktime Recipe, Best Recipe by an individual, Best Recipe by a group and "Healthiest" recipe.

5. Each of the first 300 eligible entrants will receive 1 case (24 packages) of KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese with an approximate retail value of $24.00. One grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best recipe selected in each of the 5 categories.
6. Selected recipe entrants and winners of the early bid prizes will be required to sign a standard declaration and release form to confirm compliance with the official rules and regulations and

- acceptance of the prize as awarded. This contest is only open to residents of Canada who are currently enrolled in a recognized Canadian university, college or other post-secondary educational institution. Employees of KGFC, its affiliated companies, advertising and promotional agencies, and the independent judging organization, and all persons residing in their respective households, are ineligible.
7. All decisions of the judges are final. The chances of winning will depend on the number of eligible entries and the quality of recipes received. This contest is subject to all applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws. Only one grand prize per person or group will be awarded.
8. All recorded entries become the property of KGFC, 95 McMillan Drive, Don Mills, Ontario, M3B 3L6, and no correspondence will be entered into except with the selected finalist who will be notified by mail or telephone. By entering this contest, entrants consent to the use of photographs and/or recipes, without compensation, in future publicity and/or publication carried out by KGFC in connection with this contest.
9. KGFC, with the consent of the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux (Quebec), reserves the right to cancel or suspend this contest in the event of any printing or administrative error. Quebec residents may submit any litigation respecting the conduct of this contest and the awarding of any prizes to the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux.

CALL and GET a recipe!
Listen to what other students are making with KRAFT DINNER!
1-800-26-KRAFT

*Registered Trade-mark of Kraft General Foods Canada Inc.

Editorial

O P I N I O N

This lecture brought to you by...

It was only a matter of time. How could big business not capitalize on the captive audience of students in Canadian schools? The Pepsi Cola Company's deal with Metro Toronto school boards was perhaps the first real example of big business infiltration into education on a grand scale.

And now the Sony Music Corporation has done it at the university level. In a so-called controversial deal between Sony and McGill University, the Faculty of Music received $250,000 worth of high-end audio equipment and a Sony representative to take on the teaching duties of an already offered recording course. To conform to hiring practices, the Sony representative has been hired as an adjunct professor and will teach three days a month.

The deal was negotiated by the office of the Vice-Principal, Academic — which, interestingly enough, has at its helm our future principal, William Leggett. While the Faculty of Music at McGill had knowledge of the proceedings, they did not take an active role in the negotiations.

Two years after the deal was signed and sealed, criticisms were raised by a concerned professor at the university.

The criticisms surrounding this deal include suggestions that Sony has created a training ground for future Sony employees without having to pay for that training. McGill has allegedly given up a portion of its academic freedom in the Faculty of Music by allowing a Sony representative to become a faculty member. The Sony employee, as an adjunct professor, is entitled to sit on the faculty council — one of many bodies curricular changes (of any size) must go through. However, as per McGill's conflict of interest policy, this professor will not have a vote on any faculty council decisions.

In fact, the adjunct Sony professor has not been to a single faculty council meeting since his time at McGill began.

The music faculty does not appear to be concerned about this perceived loss of academic freedom. It is instead optimistic about the benefits they will reap from the deal.

The deal between Sony and McGill appears to be a win-win situation. The Sony representative is regarded as the foremost expert in the audio electronics industry and will bring his expertise to the school of music. Sony has agreed to hire two students per summer on an internship basis. The new adjunct professor will be teaching a graduate level course with an average class size of five students. No curriculum changes were made as a result of the deal.

So, what's the problem? While this particular example of corporate penetration into academic affairs at the university level seems safe, the precedent being set is potentially dangerous.

As university funding decreases, the search for alternative sources of income will intensify. Corporations like Sony, which have already put their foot in the door, may find themselves in a comfortable position to exchange funding and equipment donations in return for influence over curriculum changes.

The transformation of universities from educational institutions to corporate training camps would be the natural progression. Computer hardware and software companies make regular donations to university computer science programs. It would be a short step for these companies to alter the curriculum such that students would become unpaid software programmers for the company.

Potentially more harmful to academic legitimacy would be the infiltration of pharmaceutical companies which could covertly promote their products to medical school students.

Granted, these seem to be worst case scenarios, but the fact remains that universities are not immune to outside intervention.

As a result of the funding crunch and the need for facilities to update equipment, we cannot blame schools for accepting donations. What must be carefully considered, however, is the impact that corporate influence may have on curriculum. Schools need to be aware of the dangers inherent in corporate sponsorship. Unfortunately, the financial bind university's are now in is making it more and more difficult for them to reap all the rewards of corporate sponsorship without giving up autonomy in academic freedom.

It would be naive of us to suggest that university programs like music and fine art can prevent corporate encroachment into curriculum decisions. At the same time we can not expect financially strapped departments to pass up much needed assistance. As corporations gain stronger footholds in the learning institutions of this country, "proceed with caution" is the only warning we can expect them to follow.

If the future principal of Queen's, William Leggett feels that corporate sponsorship is the best way to overcome budget cuts, then Queen's must send this cautionary warning to him loud and clear.

Whig firings a Queen's loss

Early this year while most of us were complaining about the cold, Southam quietly sent more than a dozen of its Whig-Standard employees out into that same, bitter cold.

Most of the employees, who had been at the paper since before Southam took it over, didn't see it coming. They were given an hour to clean their desks and get out — this is the less painful way to administer corporate firings.

While many Queen's students seem to prefer The Globe and Mail or The Toronto Star, this loss at the Whig-Standard is a loss for Queen's students as well.

Instead of looking at what they stood to lose, it seems that Southam paid greater attention to the bottom line. Of course, financial stability is not a point of contention.

However, Southam was clearly in La-La Land when they stated that the quality of the Whig-Standard would not be diminished by the firings.

They stated that the objectives of a smaller, community paper could be met within a large corporation such as itself.

We beg to differ. As time progresses, centralization of media has served to lessen the amount and the quality of information disseminated.

Community papers are continuously under financial strain as they try to compete with big city papers like The Globe or The Star. They fill their front pages with news from over the wire, with absolutely no contact with the reporter or the content of the story being reported.

The problem extends beyond the community context. Often what is of relevance to Canadians is either going unreported or is being covered by reporters of different nationalities.

People who care about the quality of the information they receive should be concerned. It is cheaper for a paper to get information off the wire than it is to keep a foreign correspondence desk. The implications of this are obvious.

Balanced reporting is not an issue with wire stories — simply having the story becomes the first and often the only priority. One voice disseminates the news; readers are rarely provided other viewpoints. The "one voice" problem is not limited to news alone.

In the world of the arts, one critic — whose review is distributed to most Southam or Thompson papers — can make or break an artistic production. Hardly fair to the artists or the readers, we believe.

Standards are lowered as they are subordinated to financial success. Print journalism will only suffer from this approach as readers turn to other forms of media for information of often the same calibre.

When papers try to compete on the same level as, for example, television, they de-grade their own medium. Newspaper conglomerates should recognize this fact — only by doing so will they succeed in cornering the market newspapers appeal to.

Big corporations, however, are not particularly warm to the idea of adapting to local markets. A universal and homogenous culture, like Hegel described, is more suitable to their marketing demands.

The Whig-Standard will continue to provide quality reporting on local issues. Students should ignore neither this valuable source of information, nor the voices they are never afforded the opportunity to hear.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Sarah MacWhirter
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER
David Pavao
NEWS EDITOR
Jeff Gray
PRODUCTION MANAGER
Colin Ho
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Douglas MacGregor
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Rob Furse
FEATURES EDITOR
Allison Masemann

OPINIONS EDITOR

Karen Hall
SPORTS EDITOR
Joel Sutherland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Joey deVilla
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
Mark Glickman
MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR
Joey deVilla
LITERARY LAPSES EDITOR
Megan Nichols
ASSISTANT NEWS
Brad Elder
Brock Martand
Lori Thorlanson

ASSISTANT PRODUCTION

Adrienne Down
ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT
Ryan P. Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens
ASSISTANT SPORTS
Justin McKellar
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY
Derek Yarnell
ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSES
Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Ritchie
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER
Alex Harner
SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Fiona Maccauly
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER
David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 4, 1994 • Issue 34 • Volume 121
The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Consents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.
The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.
Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728
Internet: journal@qucni.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue 35 will be published on Friday, March 11, 1994.

CONTRIBUTORS
Ash Baker, Simon Baron, Tricia Bauman, Rob Camp, Lisa Chen-Wing, Jeff Cobham, Brent Davis, Frank Dixon, Steve Fuzlman, Yodit Roche Johnson, Rizwan Khan, Owen Lambeck, Bryan Lambert, Andrew McAllister, Ian Michael, Chris Price, Amanda Selfridge, Charles Sinclair, Jeff Wood, Chris Zabel.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

REACTION TO HEBRON MASSACRE

THE EDITOR.
Israeli terrorist(s) slaughtered dozens of Palestinian worshippers while they were praying in a Hebron mosque, while the Israeli government continues the slaughtering on the streets. This summarizes the current situation in occupied Palestine. Israeli apologists want us to believe that the Israeli government has nothing to do with the latest massacre in Hebron by an Israeli army reservist holding the rank of major, most probably with the participation of a number of Israeli soldiers who were supposedly guarding the place. Well, let us look at some facts. More than 120,000 Jewish settlers live in the West Bank and Gaza on lands illegally confiscated from the Palestinian owners. These settlers have always been encouraged by the successive Israeli Governments to live in the West Bank and Gaza. For example, by giving them almost interest-free loans and free (confiscated Palestinian) land. The whole settlement movement was initiated by a Labour (not Likud) government. These settlers are trained and armed by the Israeli army. The worst punishment a Jewish settler gets for killing a Palestinian is a very short term in prison, typically not exceeding few months, after which he/she gets his/her weapon back and the killing continues. On the other hand, Palestinian houses are blown up and Palestinian kids are killed, even for stone-throwing charges. The Israeli security forces and army routinely kidnap, torture, and kill innocent Palestinians. While Israeli officials were racing to condemn the Hebron massacre on TV, the Israeli army continued its routine job of wounding and killing scores of Palestinian protestors all over occupied Palestine.

PLEASE, please, do not respond to the above by saying that both sides have their own extremists and killings are happening from both. According to the UN resolutions, the West Bank and Gaza are occupied territories, and International Law guarantees for those under occupation (e.g., Kuwaitis under Iraqi occupation, Polish Jews under Nazi occupation, and Palestinians under Israeli occupation) the right to resist, including by arms. Simply, the aggressor and the victim cannot be put in the same basket! Also, do not remind us with the so-called peace process which started and is being carried out according to the Israeli conditions. This process is aiming at replacing the Israeli occupation of some Palestinian cities with joint Israel-PLO control. The PLO would be responsible for collecting garbage, and of course "preventing" the Palestinians from resisting the Israeli occupation. But why wonder if Israel itself was built at the expense of destroying the Palestinian people homeland and dreams. It is ironic to see that while any Jew in the world can "immigrate" and settle in the Palestinian land, millions of Palestinians are living in refugee camps and are denied the right to return to the land they were driven out from by the invading Zionists. And you wonder if racism still exists in this world!

RAEED ODEH
PHD ENGINEERING

CHA GHELLI!

THE EDITOR.
It would seem that every time I write a letter to this paper it is on the topic of the Queen's spirit. I am motivated this time by some disturbing statements by our Alma Mater Society Executive-elect. It is rather unfortunate that the time has come when Queen's spirit is an election issue, and not a given. When the AMS feels that it needs to do something about Queen's spirit there is a problem. The current Executive-elect has stated that when we, the students of this university, think of spirit we think automatically of Orientation Week and that it is the executives responsibility to build Queen's spirit. These two statements are not only insulting to Queen's students and alumni, but they are also a slur on the Queen's spirit.

The fundamental flaw in the logic of the AMS is that they can help build the Queen's spirit. The Queen's spirit is not some structure that they can hammer and chisel, it is a living and growing thing that they could not constrain if they had to. The growth of the Queen's spirit does not begin, nor does it end, in Orientation Week. It begins to grow in a student long before they arrive here at Queen's and does not cease to grow at the end of that first week.

What then is the Queen's spirit? I can only offer my observations on the way it manifests itself. Queen's spirit:
• motivates pandemonium in Grant Hall, Richardson Stadium, Jock Harry Arena, Bartlett Gym, and even SkyDome;
• is felt in the stillness of Douglas Library;
• flies with the snapping of the flag on Grant Hall;
• is knowing what Sapientia et Doctrina Stabilitas and Cha Gheilli mean and living them in all aspects of life;
• is striving for excellence in the classroom;
• is the thousands who apply to come here and the hundreds who get the chance;
• is the thousands who return on Alumni Weekend to reclaim it;
• is being jealous that you'll be gone when the new library opens;
• is knowing what a plinth is;
• is knowing that Alfred Bader was given the opportunity to study here, but not at McGill or U of T;
• is Father Lavery, with broad smile, walking vigorously across campus;
• is being greeted in the Cow Palace in San Francisco with a Cha Gheilli and a hearty hand-shake;
• is tingling that comes when you hear the pipes;
• is the Bands getting cheered all across Canada;
• is the joy and sadness of receiving a degree and moving on;
• is the knowledge that Queen's is the only university.
This is only a small part of what Queen's spirit is. I would ask the Executive-elect to consider this and reconsider their belief that they could help build such a thing. To quote Dr. McNeil, "I am not a Queen's man born, nor a Queen's man bred/ Yet when I die there's a Queen's man dead." So works the magic of this place.
BRIAN BULL
ARTS '93, ZBASC

SHORT CUTS NOT MISOGYNIST

THE EDITOR.
We are writing about Carrie Rothwell's article in The Journal, on Friday, Feb. 11, "Altmans Short Cuts Misogynist."

Short Cuts, although it has some flaws, has some brilliant moments. Its view of American life is depressing. The raising of children is, apparently, an un-come distraction from careers and extramarital affairs; television is the opiate of the neglected children; unhappy adults find solace in alcohol and drugs; and Tim Robbins, as an L.A. cop, abuses his badge to pick up women. All in all, Altman darkly depicts a society out of joint, a society in moral decay.

We see no reason to take note of the film as acerbic social commentary, and the parts dealing with women as misogynist propaganda. We saw no glorification in Altman's depiction of violence against women; rather, we saw his revulsion and felt an overwhelming sadness. Three middle-aged men on a fishing trip, making comments about the size of a corpse's tits and cracking jokes about necrophilia, is not, as Ms. Rothwell thought, "eroticizing the violence." Rather, it nauseates and shames society for its pervasive misogyny.

It seems to us a gravely dangerous assumption that any depiction of violence against women, or perhaps other wrongs, are approving. Where does this assumption end? Has Ms. Rothwell seen the "misogynist" rape scene in The Accused? Or that "racist" flick, Mississippi Burning? Or perhaps Stephen Spielberg's new "anti-Semitic" thriller, Schindler's List?

ROBERT LECKEY AND RYAN MCNALLY
ARTS '97

Which food outlets do you want to see on campus?

talking HEADS

"Open up an entire chain of Movenpick Marches"
YOTI GOVAAS
ARTS '96

"Room Service by Chez Piggy."
SARAH SUGRUE
ARTS '97
JUDY EDDY
ARTS '97

"Tim Horton's on every corner."
LAURA-KATE QUARTEMAINE
ENG '95

"KFP — Kentucky Fried Perogies."
RICK STENDER
ARTS '94
JULIO MARSHALL
ARTS '94

PHOTOS BY YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

Real Live Slacker

BY JOEY DEVILLA

OPEN FORUM

MARRIOTT, ITS PART-TIME STAFF, AND YOU

THE EDITOR,

Cafeteria workers at Queen's, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 229, are in the final stages of contract negotiation with the huge multinational Marriott Corporation. A strike is quite possible in the next few weeks.

Marriott workers, many of whom are high school and Queen's students, are facing the same corporate agenda as students saddled with soaring tuition fees, cutbacks to financial aid and deterioration in accessibility and the quality of education. Students and cafeteria workers have a common interest in fighting the cutbacks in jobs, working conditions and services which affect us all.

Workers in Canada have been under increasing assault from employers and government in the last decade. Standards of living have fallen for working people in Canada since the 1970s. Social services, education and jobs have been slashed by governments at the provincial and federal levels, including the new Liberal government in Ottawa.

Students and workers at Queen's have not been spared: education costs are going through the roof and workers are being asked to accept big contract concessions. Part-time cafeteria workers won a hard-fought battle for union recognition last year and are in the process of negotiating their first contract. They are struggling for wage parity with the full-timers, decent seniority and grievance procedures, and improved working conditions. The full-timers are seeking job security, a pension plan and a small wage increase. In short, they are asking for a decent and fair livelihood.

Meanwhile, corporations are reaping an economic bonanza. 160,000 corporations pay absolutely no taxes in Canada while many others pay minimal rates. In the last 30 years, corporate share of federal taxes has fallen from 50 per cent to less than 10 per cent with individuals picking up the rest. Why must students and workers be the ones left carrying the difference?

Small wonder that Canada boasts the largest number of billionaires per capita. The last decade has seen the rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

Take Marriott corporation for example. It is one of the biggest companies in the world with sales of $8.7 billion in 1992. The Marriott family tanks as one of the 400 richest families in the world, worth an estimated $660 million dollars. And Marriott has the gall to ask cafeteria workers to accept cutbacks?

The bottom line is that working people, students included, are being asked to pay for a crisis which we did not make while corporations are getting off easy.

It is important therefore that students do not fall victim to the divide and conquer tactics of the NDP government and the university administration. We cannot allow students to be pitted against staff and faculty. Students, staff and faculty all have an interest in fighting the cuts and establishing a truly accessible education system. If Marriott and the administration defeat the cafeteria workers, then it will be much easier for them to ram through tuition hikes. If one loses, we all lose. But if cafeteria workers win, we all win. Solidarity between workers and students is essential.

A Marriott Workers Support Committee is being formed by concerned students at Queen's. We hope to provide information on the workers' situation for the Queen's community and to undertake solidarity actions in support of the workers. On Friday, March 4 at 11:30a.m. a Solidarity rally for the workers will begin at Carruthers Hall, ending up at University and Union streets.

SEAN PURDY
PHD HISTORY, INTERNATIONAL SOCIALISTS

When Jesus saw the crowds, he went up the mountain; and after he sat down, his disciples came to him. Then he began to speak, and taught them saying:

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are the meek, for they will inherit the earth.

"Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they will be filled.

"Blessed are the merciful, for they will receive mercy.

"Blessed are the pure of heart, for they will see God.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children of God.

"Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are you when people revile you and persecute you and utter all kinds of evil against you falsely on my account. Rejoice and be glad, for your reward is great in heaven, for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you."

St. Matt. 25:34-40

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

Not A Commerce Student? Are You Interested in Taking Commerce Courses Next Year?

HERE'S HOW

A certain number of commerce courses are open to undergraduate students in other faculties; however the space in these courses is limited. In order to most equitably allocate these spaces to students, the School of Business uses a balloting system for preregistration.

To preregister for any commerce course, you must complete a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot. Preliminary timetables will be available with the ballots; however, courses, sections and slots are subject to change without notice.

Applied Science students may pick up ballots from their discipline offices, and students from all other faculties may pick up ballots in the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120.)

All completed ballots must be returned to the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120) by 4:00 p.m., Monday, March 28.

Forms will be processed according to the priorities assigned by your faculty; graduating students generally receive priority over all other students. You cannot ballot for courses for which you do not have prerequisites. If you are successful in the balloting procedure, your commerce course(s) will be pre-printed on your registration form in September.

ATTENTION ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS

You cannot pre-register or ballot for commerce courses on an Arts and Science preregistration form. You must use a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot.

QUESTIONS?

Please see Mrs. Moss, Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120)

Hiring Schedule

Applications Due: March 11

Alfie's Manager
Quiet Pub Manager
Entrepreneurial Centre Mgr.
P&CC Manager
QEA Manager

QSC Chief Constable
Hoods & Gowns Manager
Tricolour Express Manager
Walkhome Coordinator
All Deputy Commissioners

Applications Due: March 18

Alfie's Assistant Manager
Quiet Pub Assistant Manager
P&CC Assistant Managers
Entrepreneurial Centre Asst. Mgr.

Tricolour Yearbook Editor-in-Chief
Walkhome Assistant Coordinator
Who's Where/What's Next Editors

Applications Due: March 25

Walkhome Day Coordinators
QEA Assistant Managers
Constable Group Leaders

Applications Due: March 30

AMS Committee Members
AMS Service Staff

Thoughts on DEFENSE

• The recent federal budget included significant spending cuts aimed specifically at the military • But before we abandon our national defense, we should consider the benefits it can offer Canadian society and the rest of the world •

IN 1985, the Canadian Armed Forces were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize on behalf of the United Nations and all the troops who have served under its auspices. The military, this country's "mailed fist," was given the highest award for the promotion of peace on Earth.

There was no coincidence in this presentation. Canada remains the only nation which has participated in every UN mission to date. In spite of this type of recognition from abroad, the Canadian Armed Forces seem to be misunderstood here in Canada. Phrases to the effect of "The cold war is over, the military is a waste of money" and "Why do we need helicopters anyway?" abound right now. Why, in fact, do we have a military at all if the cold war is over?

The answer can be found in the word "defend." Oxford defines the word defend as follows: 1. v.t. ward off attack made on, keep safe, protect (against, from; person, thing); uphold by argument, etc. We all engage in the defense of our accumulated valuables in some way or another, be it by purchasing an insurance policy against "acts of God" or self-defense lessons to protect ourselves from personal attack. The action the government takes to protect collective valuables is what we call defense policy.

The implementation of this policy is done through the department of National Defense and various police organizations. The Armed Forces, then, are the country's insurance policy and final security system. No other organization has the personnel, training and equipment to deal with a natural disaster, attack against the country, or internal strife. Events beyond the control of other authorities require the assistance of the military, be they major global events, such as World War II, major regional events such as the Oka crisis or flooding, or minor events, such as search and rescue operations or diving inspection of a canal for safety.

A BRIEF HISTORY

The Canadian Armed Forces have a long and proud history, both on the field of battle and in the field of keeping the peace. Some good examples include:

The War of 1812, in which Canadian militia and British troops not only became the first and only armed force to invade the continental United States, but also successfully burned the White House.

World War I, the battle of Vimy Ridge, in which the Canadian corps, under the command of Field Marshal Sir Julian Byng (later the governor general of Canada) and General Arthur Currie, revolutionized ground warfare by developing the "creeping barrage" of artillery. In addition, those in charge actually explained to the ordinary soldiers what they would be doing instead of marching them upright into the German barrage. The Ridge was captured in 1917 by Canadians after unsuccessful attempts by both the British and French armies. It is hard to overstate the historical importance of this battle to Canadians as it is one of the major events leading us to our current independent status.

World War II, major setbacks at the defense of Hong Kong and the raid at Dieppe scarred the Armed Forces, but during the air battle of Britain, and especially in the ongoing shipping war in the North Atlantic, they were far more successful. In Italy, Canadians distinguished themselves in the house-by-house, hand-to-hand combat that went on there. In all, over 46,000 Canadian troops perished in the war over a million serving.

PEACEKEEPING

Our reputation for proficiency in peacekeeping has been tarnished somewhat recently by events occurring with 2 Commando of the Airborne Regiment in Somalia. However these represent the actions of a very few individuals among the over 80,000 Canadians who have served in all theatres of peacekeeping. Beginning in the late 1940's in the Kashmir and continuing until the present day Bosnia, Croatia, Cambodia and Somalia, Canadians have served with such distinction that it led retired Major General Lewis Mackenzie to half-joke that "Canadians are only the best at two things: hockey and peacekeeping, unfortunately, peacekeeping doesn't make money."

INTERNAL STRIFE

Military intervention within Canada has occurred very rarely. The 1970 FLQ crisis and the 1990 Oka crisis remain the only modern examples. It must be noted in this case that the intervention of the military led to a decrease in armed conflict, rather than an escalation. This is a testament not only to the ability of senior personnel but also to the professionalism of the ordinary soldier. The image of a young corporal eye to eye with a masked Mohawk is one of the most lasting in recent media history.

COMMON MISCONCEPTIONS

The most popularized media images of the military in this country are those coming from the United States. This is rather an unfortunate situation, since the forces in the two countries are quite different in philosophy and structure. While the vision of a private polishing his/her boots or doing push-ups face down in the mud with a drill-sergeant screaming in his/her ear is not entirely without foundation, neither is it representative of either the people or training philosophy in the Canadian Forces.

In general terms, the basis of the Canadian training system is to produce well rounded people, qualified to do not only their own job, but also many others. To paraphrase from Master Warrant Officer Thomas of the Lord Strathconas (armored) in Calgary: "In the armored, we train everyone as armored personnel, rather than specializing into gunner, driver, loader, etc. etc. as the Americans are prone to do. This means that every person in a vehicle or unit can do every other person's job." The importance of this may not be immediately obvious, but cross-training is the basis for the effectiveness of Canadian troops. Since each person is required to be proficient in every part of the task, the loss of one person does not destroy the effectiveness of the unit.

The other aspect to this cross-training is that it demonstrates faith on the part of the military in each of its members. This leads to a sense of professionalism and self-confidence which is vital to success in situations outside the scope of the unit's immediate training scheme. This is part of the reason for the success of Canadians in peacekeeping operations. It is, in fact, this comparative allowance for individuality which has made Canadians successful in situations such as Vinny Ridge, Sicily, Cyprus and others. The notion that when faced with a crisis situation, the ordinary soldier will know what to do and make a decision is a very new one in military philosophy. The fact that troops are not limited to one specific (and perhaps onerous) task is extremely important in the modern military. It also keeps lines of communication between officers and non-commissioned members open.

One of the criticisms of the Canadian

"Betcha ten bucks the censors cut it down to activity was confined to routine patrol skirmishing!"

FROM A 1945 CANADIAN ARMY NEWSPAPER, THE MAPLE LEAF.

Forces has been the seeming overload of officers which it possesses. Actually, this is the most efficient way to maximize the effectiveness of a small military such as our own. In order to produce a competent officer or senior non-commissioned member, the training system must spend a great deal of time, money and effort. The time lag created in this process is critical if a conflict arises. A draft can produce literally thousands of privates/ordinary seamen in a comparatively short time as we've seen in the World Wars, but it still takes several years to train a good officer or senior NCM. Thus, our armed forces, by maintaining a high proportion of officers and senior personnel is effectively much larger than the over 130,000 combined regular and reserve personnel would indicate.

The major problem for the Canadian military at this time is that equipment is also subject to this sort of time lag, particularly large items such as helicopters, ships and tanks. With reductions in equipment purchases proceeding as they are at this time, the military will be very poorly set up for a conflict. This is one area in which the United States is very far ahead of Canada. They have all manner of ships (including battleships), tanks, planes, etc. laid up

Present over one and a half million people who have served in uniform living in Canada. With their families, this number balloons to almost five million people directly associated with the Armed Forces, or twenty per cent of the population of Canada. Many of these people are organized into formal groups such as the Royal Canadian Legion who contribute much to the communities around them. Life in the Military is difficult for those outside the Armed Forces to understand the mindset of military personnel. Why does a soldier do what he or she does for a living? An insightful comment is offered in the book "Peacekeeper" by Major-General Lewis Mackenzie. He says the following about his peacekeeping experience: "I should have felt better in my life. It must have been the constant trickle of adrenalin through my system. There was always some emergency..."

The excitement of active duty is what drives soldiers. The lifestyle has been described as hours and hours of mind-numbing boredom, during which all there is to do is check up on the oil in your vehicle, which you've already done several times any deeper than 500 feet. They are thirty years old and are simply worn out. Also, they do not have the range capability to reach the Arctic and as such, we are completely incapable of even patrolling our northern waters. Meanwhile, both American and Russian submarines are free to travel in our territorial waters with no thoughts to Canadian sovereignty. Obviously we cannot fight them, but it behooves us to at least have the capability to go there.

The main functions of the military, particularly in peacekeeping and crisis resolution, have not been based principally on the destructive ability of the organization. Rather, the military constitutes a large body of highly trained personnel possessing an organized command structure, high mobility over long or short distance in air, sea or on land and an efficient communications system. Very few of these skills are particular to the use of threat or force and, in fact, only very infrequently are our troops called upon to use martial force. The pool of other skills present in the Armed Forces is of primary value to the military in a peacetime situation.

It is commonly thought that there are relatively few people involved in the Armed Forces. However, there are at

BASES LOST:

CFB Cornwallis, N.S.
CFB Toronto, Ont.
CFB Chatham, N.B.
CFB Ottawa, Ont.

BASES DOWNSIZED:

CFB Gander, Nfld.
CFB Shearwater, N.S.
CFB Saint-Jean, P.Q.
CFB Kingston, Ont.
CFB North Bay, Ont.
CFB Calgary, AB.
CFB Edmonton, AB.
CFB Borden, Ont.

WHAT WAS ACTUALLY CUT?

BANDS:

Five of the nine military bands are being closed down, leaving one for each region.

PERSONNEL:

8,100 military
8,400 civilian

CASH:

Seven billion dollars (12 per cent over four years) net annual savings: 180 million/year.

THE FUTURE

General John De Chastelaine said during his visit to the Queen's Model United Nations that the future actions of the Armed Forces would be dependent on the will of the people of this country. He said that decisions would have to be made about allocation of resources according to what Canadians want their military to do. Questions have been raised recently with events in Bosnia where eight Canadian soldiers have been killed to date. Polls conducted by CTV and other organizations indicate that as many as 57 per cent of Canadians do not want this particular mission to continue while 75 per cent want peacekeeping activities more generally to be ongoing. The military clearly has a mandate to continue overseas operations, but what premiums are Canadians willing to pay for their insurance policy?

It was noted in the 1990 defense white paper that the opportunity to get more value for what is spent is possible through an increase in "militia and youth training; by developing multipurpose mobile formations like the French force d'action rapide and by more careful, longer term financial and industrial planning."

It is interesting that when asked by the author in 1993 how he felt about this situation, Major General Lewis Mackenzie responded that "where a regular force unit might take two or three weeks to deploy, a reserve unit will most certainly take three or four months." The impression, then is that there is a happy medium at some point between the reserve and the regular forces. Clearly a reserve force would be cheaper to maintain, but would not allow for swift deployment in a crisis.

The Canadian Forces is currently trying to integrate the primary reserve and the regular force into one through a sharing of administrative and command structures. Problems of joint training schedules and the problems reservists have securing asked by the author in 1993 how he felt about this situation, Major General Lewis Mackenzie responded that "where a regular force unit might take two or three weeks to deploy, a reserve unit will most certainly take three or four months." The impression, then is that there is a happy medium at some point between the reserve and the regular forces. Clearly a reserve force would be cheaper to maintain, but would not allow for swift deployment in a crisis.

The Canadian Forces is currently trying to integrate the primary reserve and the regular force into one through a sharing of administrative and command structures. Problems of joint training schedules and the problems reservists have securing

"I'm sure some military personnel volunteer for peacekeeping duty for higher reasons, such as alleviating human suffering... but for the majority of us, it's the excitement and camaraderie that beckon."
-Major General Lewis Mackenzie

HMCS Athabaskan, HMCS Protecteur and HMCS Terra Nova on duty in the Persian Gulf, 1991.

Present over one and a half million people who have served in uniform living in Canada. With their families, this number balloons to almost five million people directly associated with the Armed Forces, or twenty per cent of the population of Canada. Many of these people are organized into formal groups such as the Royal Canadian Legion who contribute much to the communities around them. Life in the Military is difficult for those outside the Armed Forces to understand the mindset of military personnel. Why does a soldier do what he or she does for a living? An insightful comment is offered in the book "Peacekeeper" by Major-General Lewis Mackenzie. He says the following about his peacekeeping experience: "I should have felt better in my life. It must have been the constant trickle of adrenalin through my system. There was always some emergency..."

The excitement of active duty is what drives soldiers. The lifestyle has been described as hours and hours of mind-numbing boredom, during which all there is to do is check up on the oil in your vehicle, which you've already done several times

The excitement of active duty is what drives soldiers. The lifestyle has been described as hours and hours of mind-numbing boredom, during which all there is to do is check up on the oil in your vehicle, which you've already done several times

We are going to be forced to decide very soon whether we want our Armed Forces operating outside North America.

time off from their regular jobs, inhibit this type of unification, though.

Both Major General Mackenzie and General De Chastelaine were quick to point out that although the First and Second World Wars were fought almost exclusively by reservists, a conflict which arose today would not allow for the massive time lags which took place in those conflicts with respect to training and arming the nation. Clearly, a modern war will be fought primarily with whatever resources are available at the time the conflict begins. The massive industrial build-up of World War II is not going to be possible. This, of course, adds to the current problems with capital equipment purchase reductions. We are going to be forced to decide very soon whether we want our Armed Forces operating outside North America and, if we do, we are going to have to be prepared to invest steadily in new equipment, including some very large capital purchases such as helicopters, tanks and submarines.

Imagine how you'd feel if you were pulled out of the ocean by a Navy helicopter or if an infantry platoon came and helped your community build a hospital. These are things that make people see Canada in a positive light and bring dividends in ways that are not necessarily obvious. Consider how the situation at Oka might have been different if our infantry were trained to less exacting standards; a bloodbath was certainly possible in a situation where the people behind the barricades had AK-47's available to them.

We owe it to ourselves and to the personnel in the Armed Forces to consider carefully what we are doing. Do we want to cripple the Armed Forces of this country, which already have such a small operational strength? We are taking away from our international credibility when we reduce our ability to fulfill our obligations to the U.N., to NATO and even to cope with potential situations internally. What we are doing can be likened to removing the collision insurance from a very, very expensive automobile. It doesn't always seem necessary, but there's always that one day when a situation can't be avoided. Are we going to be able to react? We do not necessarily require an American style super high tech military with aircraft carriers and stealth bombers, but we require a solid, well equipped, well trained force of men and women to be prepared not only for potential conflicts, but also to provide assistance to the people of the country and other countries should the need arise.

We owe it to ourselves and to the personnel in the Armed Forces to consider carefully what we are doing. Do we want to cripple the Armed Forces of this country, which already have such a small operational strength? We are taking away from our international credibility when we reduce our ability to fulfill our obligations to the U.N., to NATO and even to cope with potential situations internally. What we are doing can be likened to removing the collision insurance from a very, very expensive automobile. It doesn't always seem necessary, but there's always that one day when a situation can't be avoided. Are we going to be able to react? We do not necessarily require an American style super high tech military with aircraft carriers and stealth bombers, but we require a solid, well equipped, well trained force of men and women to be prepared not only for potential conflicts, but also to provide assistance to the people of the country and other countries should the need arise.

Andrew Nielsen is a member of the Naval Reserves, is The Journal's Ads Manager, and not only do we all think he's grumpy, his girlfriend does too.

S.T.A.R.

Student Team On Alumni Relations

is now accepting applications for

COORDINATOR

Full-time position
Applications Due: March 11, 1994 at 4:00pm

ASSISTANT COORDINATORS

2 Communcation 2 Committee liaison
1 Finance
Applications Due: March 18, 1994 at 4:00pm

COMMITTEE CHAIRS

2 Cake Service	1 Guess Whose
2 Alumni Kids	Coming To Dinner
2 Alumni Weekend	1 Photography
2 Career Buddy	1 Send-off
2 Creative & New Ideas	1 Parent Orientation Day
2 Senior Alumni	2 Future Alumni

Applications Due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00pm

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Applications Due: March 28, 1994 at 4:00pm

Applications available & accepted now at the AMS and Alumni Affairs office! Phone the S.T.A.R. Office for more information. 545-2060

SPORTS

A golden weekend for Queen's curling

BY JEFF WOOD

On the weekend of Feb. 19-20, the Queen's curling teams travelled to the Ontario Championships held at the Brantford Golf and Country Club. With an undefeated season for the women and a second place ranking for the men, the hopes were high.

The first game for the men began well with a patiently played first end that yielded two points for Queen's. With a one point lead for Queen's playing the seventh end, McMaster scored a big four points to take a commanding lead. Undaunted, the Gaels took two in the eighth, held Mac to one in the ninth, and took another two points in the tenth end to tie the game and force an extra end. In this nerve racking end, Queen's skip Steve Small tapped a McMaster rock with his final shot and rolled to the back of the button. The McMaster skip was unable to get at that rock and his shot slid past to give Queen's the victory.

The second game of the weekend was much easier. After four ends, Queen's and Waterloo were tied. In the fifth end Queen's scored four and followed that with a steal of two to end the game early.

Laurier provided the opposition for the final game on the first day. With both teams having perfect 2-0 records, the winner of this game would likely go on to capture the championship. A deuce in the fifth end put Queen's temporarily in the lead. Laurier came back quickly with two points of their own in the very next end to regain control. The Gaels wrestled back control of the game with another score of two in the seventh end. The eighth was the deciding end. With Queen's lying three, the Laurier skip tried to remove the half buried shot rock and missed. The steal of three for Queen's sealed the win.

Sunday morning provided RMC as the opposition for Queen's fourth game. These crosstown rivals have played the year with this game being no exception. A few critical misses provided RMC with a 6-0 lead through four ends. Coming off a perfect Saturday, it looked like all the guys had to do was show up on Sunday and claim the championship. Unfortunately they decided to journey the hard road.

Facing the six point deficit, Queen's rallied to score a huge four points in the fifth end to get themselves on the scoreboard and back into the game. After RMC took two in the sixth, Queen's played a strong seventh end to take three points and pull within one point of RMC. In the eighth end, Queen's had a steal all set up but the RMC skip made a nice raise take-out to score one. The ninth end looked like it could go to Queen's as Steve Small had a tap-back to score three. Unfortunately he rubbed on a guard and had to settle for a single point.

Coming home down one without the advantage of throwing last rock, Queen's had a long road ahead of them. Lead Dan Cheney started the end with a perfect centre guard and (thanks to the free guard zone) the end was on. Queen's managed to get some rocks into the house and the RMC skip was left with having to throw a draw on his final shot. He put his rock through the house and Queen's took the game.

The fifth and final game of the weekend was against Guelph. With a win the Gaels would capture their second straight OUA title. The men continued their big-end ways by taking four in the fourth after a blank and an exchange of single points. Following two single points by Guelph, Steve made a superb shot by nicking off a rock on the edge of the sheet and removing a Guelph stone from the four-foot to score two. From there the Gaels were able to control the game. The win gave Queen's a 5-0 record in the round robin and the Ontario Championship.

The men's team of Steve Small, Dave Allan, Jeff Whelan, Dan Cheney, Jason Curtis, Jason Adams and Jeff Wood are the cream of the crop in Ontario. With the departure of the three veterans (Steve Small, Dave Allan and Jeff Whelan) the rest of the Gaels will have some big shoes to fill in their quest to three-peat as OUA Champions. Mind you, these gentlemen are splendid curlers in their own right and will do an excellent job of representing Queen's next year.

Following perfect weekends at the East Sectionals and the Cross-over, the Queen's women's curling team hoped to continue their winning ways at the OWIAA Curling Championship in Brantford.

The University of Toronto were the first opponents for the Gaels. After five ends the two teams were tied. In the sixth end Queen's took three points and followed that with a steal of three in the seventh to take a commanding lead. The girls never looked back.

In the second game of the weekend, the Gaels proved to be too much for the team from Nipissing. They stole three in the third end and later on scored deuces in three consecutive ends for a convincing win.

The Gaels finished off the first day of the competition with a solid 6-3 victory over Laurier. With a deuce in the fourth end, the girls took control of the game and kept it for the rest of the game.

Sunday provided Queen's with some stiffer competition. The first game of the day was against Guelph. At the fifth end break the two teams were tied at three. After an exchange of single points, Queen's took three in the eighth

PLEASE SEE UNDEFEATED ON PAGE 18

Men's fencing 2nd at OUs but sabre wins Gold!

BY STEVE COBHAM

The OUA Championships, held Feb. 19 and 20 at Carleton University, marked the high point of the fencing season. The Gaels' position looked good at the start of the competition; the team had four representatives in individual epee and sabre competition, as well as the foil, epee, and sabre teams in the championships.

Although none of our men's foilists had managed to qualify for the finals, it didn't stop the team from working well overall. Harold and Allan Chung, Kristian Leasson, and newcomer Scott Wright, picked up from McMaster in September, put together a strong performance. The foil title was won by a dominant Western team, but Queen's won a bronze medal against strong opposition.

In individual epee, Dave Williamson, also plucked from McMaster in September, displayed a fine performance (obviously polished by his time at Queen's) and won a bronze medal. Teammate Dave Arthurs, a veteran of the Queen's fencing program, was disappointed by his sixth place finish.

In team epee, Dave Arthurs recovered sufficiently to lead the team against the tough opposition. In one of their strongest team epee performances for some time, The Queen's team of Arthurs, Williamson, Andreas Wild and rookie Kevin Armstrong won the silver medal.

The swordsmen victorious and in Championship form

STEVE COBHAM

The sabre competition was fast and furious. In the individual medal round, Henk Pardoel displayed his usual fearless style and won the silver medal, while teammate Steve Cobham finished a very disappointing sixth place.

Queen's was heavily favoured to win the team sabre competition and did not disappoint. In fine style, Steve Cobham, Henk Pardoel, James Wilson and Steve Symons, put on the now standard strong performance and humiliated close rival McMaster to win the gold medal. Henk Pardoel was also the recipient of the prestigious George Tully Trophy. This trophy is awarded annually to the fencer who best displays the combined ideals of sportsmanship, skill and style.

The overall results looked favourable, but the Queen's effort of 37 points was just three behind Western's 40. Queen's did, however, medal in all three team events and two individual events. This demonstrates the depth-of-the program at Queen's.

The men's team would like to thank those responsible for the depth of the program: head coach Al English; Willy Steinke; epee coach Mike McDonnell; sabre coach Hugh Munby; and the Queen's Athletic Administration for their continued support of fencing at Queen's.

[Eds. note: The fencing team should be incredibly proud of their accomplishments this year. Congratulations to the team.]

TRULY GOLDEN Gaels OWIAA Fencing Champs

BY STEVE COBHAM

After a one year hiatus, the OWIAA Fencing banner returned to its rightful home at Queen's University. As many Queen's students headed for the sun or ski slopes, the dedicated group of women fencers travelled to Carleton University to engage the rest of the Ontario Universities in near mortal combat. It was a close fight right from the start, but the Gaels proved their domination of the sport in fine style. Six teams and 12 individuals from the sectionals in the East, West and Central divisions advanced to the finals in each weapon: epee and foil.

Meghan Noseworthy, in her first year at Queen's, demonstrated her skill in the individual women's epee event. The only Queen's fencer to advance to the medal round, Noseworthy gave a strong performance that gained her the OWIAA women's epee title and the first gold medal of the weekend.

The women's epee team of Meghan Noseworthy, Amy Olson, Sarah Hinchcliffe and Heather White put together one of their finest performances. The women epeeists demonstrated a cool confidence that never faltered against the strongest collective efforts of the opposing schools. At the end of a long and gruelling day, the Gael epeeists came out on top and won the second gold medal for Queen's.

All eyes then turned to the women's foil team. The foilists had failed to advance anyone to the medal round in individual competition, although Melissa Santala was close. The women's foil team of Melissa Santala, Sylvia Pascual, Allison Bain, and led by Sue Myong, proved that a collective effort is stronger than any individual one. For the first time, the women's foil were undefeated at the championships. In the final match, the team raised the physical effort to an unprecedented level to triumph over University of Toronto and win a third gold medal.

This year was the first that the women won the banner with three gold medals. Their point total of 30 was nine ahead of their closest competitor, Trent University. At the end of a long season full of victories and defeats, this was the greatest victory of all.

At this time the women's fencing team would like to recognize their coaches, Al English, Mike McDonnell, Tracy Cameron, Willy Steinke, Henk Pardoel, and Hugh Munby. Their efforts made the year a success.

Pinocchio's
Chicken & Ribs

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entrée and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street
(formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

Elementary Secondary Guidance & Counselling Adolescent Years

Home Economics Family Studies Mathematics Aboriginal Education Science French Second Language

University of New Brunswick
Faculty of Education
BE4 Program

IF YOU WANT TO BECOME A TEACHER
APPLY BY MARCH 31, 1994

A new BE4 program for those who hold an undergraduate degree

This degree prepares you to obtain a license to teach in both Canadian and American schools

PUBLIC SCHOOL COMMUNITY COLLEGE
INDUSTRY & BUSINESS PRIVATE SCHOOLS

- Student teaching experience supported by cooperating classroom teachers
- Information technology courses including teaching for Distance Education
- Student-centred faculty with array of specialties

Applications available from:
Registrar's Office
University of New Brunswick
P.O. Box 4400
Fredericton, NB E3B 5A3

Business Education Early Years Physical Education Literacy

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

BASKETBALL

Queen's hosts OWIAA finals

BY FRANK DIXON

The stars will be out this weekend in the Bartlett Gym for the last major home competitive sporting event of the season. The OWIAA basketball championship will feature three of the top four teams in the country: Laurentian Lady Vees, Toronto Lady Blues, and Western Mustangs, ranked two, three and four respectively.

The Queen's Golden Gaels have qualified for the championship, and will have the home court advantage, but formidable Western awaits them. The teams will tip off at 8 p.m. tonight.

The Mustangs, West division champions with an unbeaten 14-0 record, will be led by OW scoring champion and West Division MVP Michele Vesprini, who ended the season with a 22.4 ppg average, just barely edging out Vicki Wilson of Queen's (21.8 ppg.) Three-year veterans Lori Bartolotta and Ayodele Bygrave combine with Vesprini to give the Mustangs a potent, high-powered offense which outscored opponents by an average of 24 points per game. Western has impressive depth provided by a strong corps of younger players.

But the Golden Gaels (6-6 and fourth place in the stronger East division) are by no means short of weapons — their five starters have an average of nearly four years of varsity experience. Wilson, a three-time OW All-Star, is a tremendous scorer and rebounder (8.3 rpg). Jenny Laughton averaged 15 ppg, and led the league in field goal percentage with 56 per cent. Point guard Jaylene Morrison (10 ppg) really matured during the season, and is now one of the country's top point guards. Five-year veteran Tanya McIntyre (nine ppg) is a premium defender and outside shooter, and versatile Stephanie Jamieson excels on defense and as a rebounder. Key reserves for Queen's are guards Erica Hollingdrake and Kristin Smith, and forwards Cathy Amara and Ginger Howell. Amara, twice an OWIAA All-Star at York, has missed most of the season but should return for 10-15 minutes of court time, according to Gaels' head coach Dave Wilson.

"I've got mixed feelings about playing this event at home," coach Wilson said. "On one hand, we usually play really well at home. But on the other, our players will be busy with school right up until game time, while visiting teams will be able to leave that behind them."

Coach Wilson likes the challenge of playing Western. "We've got to shut down Vesprini inside. Western is a very assertive team which plays hard-nosed defense and draws a lot of fouls, but they can score a lot in transition after forcing turnovers. To be successful, we have to take care of the ball, and our bench players have to play solidly when they're on the floor."

The tournament will continue all weekend. Laurentian has qualified for the CIAU finals for 19 consecutive seasons, winning seven CIAU championships in that time. With superior size and experience, they have to be considered favourites. Toronto's impressive perimeter speed will definitely allow them to be a factor.

What about the Gaels' chances? Well, according to assistant coach Tim Orpin, if Queen's can play as well as they did against Laurentian on Feb. 18 (losing by 10 points), they have a realistic opportunity of beating the Mustangs.

TOURNAMENT SCHEDULE

QUARTER FINALS
FRI. MAR. 4
Time	Game
2 pm	1	Laurentian (1E)-Lakhead (4W)
4 pm	2	Windsor (2W)-Ottawa (3E)
6 pm	3	Brock (3W)-Toronto (2E)
8 pm	4	QUEEN'S (4E)-Western (1W)
SAT. MAR. 5
CONSOLATION
2 pm	5	Loser Games 1 & 2
4 pm	6	Loser Games 3 & 4
SEMIFINALS
6 pm	7	Winner Games 1 & 2
8 pm	8	Winner Games 3 & 4
SUN. MAR. 6
10 am	9	5th/6th Place Game
12 pm	10	Bronze Medal Game
2 pm	11	Gold Medal Game

Nordic team creates warmspell

BY IAN MICHAEL

Wouldn't you know that the warmest day of the winter would come at the same time as the OUAA Championships for Nordic Skiing. After having four races either cancelled or delayed due to extremely cold weather this season it was an unbelievable 10 degrees above zero for our first race of the Championships in Duntroon. After claiming victory in the inter-university snowball fight, Queen's set out to conquer the trails. Leanne Laverty led the women's team with a sixth place finish on both days, followed closely by Joanne Thomson. Lori Armitage demonstrated that all her hard work was definitely paying off as she put in the two best races of her season, placing 16th in the classic and 22nd in the skate. Emily "Scor" Doubt and Jen Edwards both had solid performances, leaving the women's team in second position with visions of gold. Sunday's skate race saw the return of veteran racer Alison Douglas, who placed 20th. Larry Hegan proved once again that he has not lost the touch, placing second in Saturday's race and finishing the weekend in second place overall behind two-time Olympian Wayne Dustin of Carleton. The men's team usual top-ten trio was rounded out by Paul Green and Ian Michael in fourth and eighth, respectively.

A Queen's skier goes for the finish line.

IAN MICHAEL

Yens Karl Thalenhorst gave the men a first place standing after the first day with a spectacular 18th position from a field of 64. Craig Hawkes powered his way to a 36th spot on the second day, despite the ever deteriorating snow conditions. Kevin Bell added depth to the Queen's ski team with consistently solid races each day.

The relay took place only hours after the women's 5km and men's 10km classical races had finished. The course, one of the hardest of the year, climbed the full height of the Niagara Escarpment not once but twice. The women's A team of Doubt, Thomson and Laverty finished fourth with the B team, in hot pursuit, finishing seventh.

The men's relay of Michael, Green and Hegan, managed to fight off a three member national team squad from Lakehead to take the silver medal. All in all, the men's team finished third behind some extremely tough competition from the National Training Center located at Lakehead. The women took third place for the weekend behind a new, but extremely talented, entry from Nipissing.

This year's ski team was an absolute success. It was one of the best organized teams on the circuit and maintained its reputation as a serious force whenever present. Thanks must go to Harry Lake, who coached the team tirelessly from the very beginning of dry-land practices in September. Thanks must also go to Sean Leo and Cathy McKay for their first class support at the OU's.

Tonya to play intramurals?

BY ROB CAMP

Howdy, boys and girls, how was your week? If, for example, you have achieved a higher consciousness through sun worship may you rot in _____ (fill in with the noun of your choice). If I see any of you wearing tennis whites to play Intramural Sports, I may have to disqualify you for unnecessary cruelty and one-upmanship against your opponents. If, on the other hand, you didn't go anywhere, then please cover up, because brutally pale skin can be blinding and an extreme hazard to other players. On this happy note, I would like to state that PLAYOFFS ARE COMING!

That's right, it's time to find out who the strong are as they eat the weak (in a manner of speaking, you Hannibal Lecter wannabe's) in sudden-death, winner-take-all playoffs. All sports in BEWS, WIC, and BEWIC will soon be coming down to the crunch, so go check the boards to see if your team will be participating.

Did you know that there was a BEWIC sport in Darts? Not anymore. Due to lack of involvement (only 21 participants), darts will not be offered next year. Other sports residing on this bubble are BEWIC Waterbasketball, BEWIC curling, BEWS waterpolo, and BEWS bowling. If you like any of these sports make sure to sign up next year or, you might never get to play them ever again!

Upcoming stuff: BEWS broomball has started. Are you supposed to be playing? Check the board for details. BEWS swim meet coming up tomorrow! Get up and get wet, WIC broomball is also happening. Where were you? Get out and get playing, 'cause this is where the money players play. By the way, it is illegal to stack your team with former Olympic athletes from Lillehammer as they are not allowed to be added to any Intramural rosters. The exception would be Tonya Harding, who's crying, whining ability would fit in quite well in BEWS Hockey.

Triathletes on track

Today Kingston, Tomorrow Hawaii

BY SIMON BARON

Before reading week, the Queen's triathlon club was one of 10 university teams that competed in the Hart House indoor triathlon. The Hart House was the second race in the interuniversity multisport series. Queen's dominated the race, finishing number one and moving the team into first place in the series rankings.

The race consisted of a 15 minute swim, 15 minute cycle and a 15 minute run. Competitors were given points for the distance they covered in that time, the winner being the one with the most combined points. Queen's fielded the largest team with 30 members, nine of whom were competing in their first triathlon and made it look very easy as they went on to become the top rookie team.

Leslie Pedwell had the fastest cycle on her way to winning the women's division. Ginny Green had a powerful run to finish third overall behind a competitor from Trent. Jane Hamilton was fifth, Allyson Fox was sixth and Karen Ruckman was ninth to make Queen's the strongest women's team in the field.

On the men's side, Martin Rydlo came out of the swim in fourth place; but with an aggressive cycle and run, finished in first place overall. First time triathlete Mike Stewart used a commanding lead out of the swim to finish in fourth place overall behind Doug Kormos of McMaster and

The Queen's triathlon club cycling, swimming and running.

SIMON BARON

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE
ADMISSION TO FOURTH YEAR HONOURS

All students intending to enter fourth year of an honours program in September 1994 must apply for admission. Applications can be picked up and submitted in the Department of your concentration.

Only students who will have completed fourteen courses at the end of the current academic session need apply at this time. Students who will have completed the required fourteen courses at the end of Spring or Summer term should make application at that time.

Humber College Introduces the Post Graduate Program in Recreation Leadership

This exciting, intensive one year program is all you need for a rewarding career in recreation.

Our instructors are all top quality industry professionals and the extensive field practice component ensures you'll learn current skills right on the job.

Applications are now being accepted for September.

For admission requirements or further information, please call Susan Goodman, (416) 675-3111 ext 4212

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

FRI March 4
Smartest Monkeys
SAT March 5
Fall Down Go Boom
MON March 8
Andrew Cash
THURS March 10
Sara Craig

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICKS) Tel: 544-1966

ASUS Surplus Committee

needs a member-at-large to allocate $14,000 within ASUS. If you are interested, please submit a letter to the Internal Affairs Commissioner at the CORE, 183 University for more information, please call 545-6278

Track ready for provincials

BY STEVE FRUITMAN & BRYAN LAMBERT

Reading week kicked off with the Queen's Track & Field Team travelling to Ithaca, New York to compete at the Cornell University Invitational. The Golden Gaels, inspired by the balmy weather, returned home with several stellar performances and two more CIAU qualifiers under its belt.

The women's 4x400m relay team of Mary Pullen, Sarah McClennan, Laura Hodgson, and Leslie Bruce smashed the CIAU qualifying standard by a full second, crossing the line in a time of 4:02.6. Laura and Sarah both turned in personal bests as the team captured the silver medal.

Defending CIAU high jump champ Leslie Morrison added to her collection of silver medals, backing up last week's Queen's record setting clearance (1.75m) with another strong jump.

Queen's shot putters continue to place well, with Sarah Leonard (12.40m) and Steve Fruitman (14.19m) both finishing in third place. Although both are struggling technically, the prospects for provincial championships look promising.

The Men's 4x400m relay team of Dan Coderre, Jeff Kalbfleisch, Steve Dewan and Derek Hacksaw barely missed qualifying for CIAU's by 0.3 seconds, finishing third in a time of 3:25.6. The team has been improving steadily all season and, with great performances like this, should be in a position to medal at the OCAA championships. Brian Derby, grabbing his tenth medal of the season, finished third in the long jump and also posted a personal best time of 6.81 seconds in the 55m. Leslie Bruce will most likely be attending Cornell next year, as for the second time in two years she has medalled in the 55m (7.44 - third place) and set the all time Queen's record in the 200m with a blistering 26.14 second clocking.

Pentathlete Geoff Stewart continues to improve his triple jump (12.55m) and needs only to nail down the shot technique before he can be considered a contender. Drew Slack and Lesley Hughes posted impressive personal best times in the sprints and the 4x400m relays. Sharon Shew (3000m - 10:42.2) and Andrew Stuart (Mile - 4:48.8) both ran excellent races, improving their personal bests by four and seven seconds respectively. Todd Jones' 3000m race resembled short track speed skating as he was cut off and bumped onto the infield.

Todd was in third and poised to make a run at the CIAU standard, which he has been very close to this season. Leslie Bruce, Brian Derby, Allan Feurtado, Regan McCormack, Remko Noteboom, Amanda Pardy, Shannon Pritchard, Mary Pullen, Kevin Robertson and Anna Wilkinson all wrote themselves into the record books, establishing a total of 11 top ten all time Queen's marks on the weekend.

Outstanding athlete honours go to rookies Sarah McClennan and Kevin Robertson, and veterans Leslie Bruce and U.S. customs favourite Remko Noteboom. The Team then finished off reading week with a meet at the University of Toronto. The goal going into the meet was to improve standards already met and have one more shot at making them for the CIAU championships.

Steve Fruitman won the only gold medal of the day, winning the men's shot in 14.07m, while Lesley Morrison won silver in women's long jump and Geoff Stewart garnered the silver medal in the men's triple jump. Bronze medals were won by: the men's 4x200m team of Keith Joiner, Brian Derby, Bryan Lambert and Remko Noteboom; the women's 4x200m relay team of Amanda Pardy, Lesley Hughes, Mary Pullen, and Leslie Bruce; Brian Derby in the men's long jump; Sarah Leonard in the women's shot and Jamie Dickey in the men's triple jump.

Athlete of the meet honours went to rookies Sharon Shew and Neil McCourt and veterans Anna Wilkinson and Jeff Kalbfleisch. The team finished the season at U. of T. with 17 people setting 25 personal bests.

The team now heads into the O.U.A.A./O.W.I.A.A. Championships this weekend in Windsor. Athletes may qualify for CI's by running the standard at O.U.O.W.'s or by placing in the top 2 positions at the Provincial Championships.

Undefeated women

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 15

end to get the upper hand. After a steal of one in the ninth for Queen's, Guelph conceded and shook hands.

The final game of the weekend pitted the 4-0 Queen's Golden Gaels against the 3-1 Waterloo Warriors. A victory would clinch the OWIAA Championship for Queen's, while a loss would put them in a first place tie with Waterloo and necessitate a tie-breaker game. The girls got off to a somewhat shaky start and trilled 4-1 after three ends. A score of three in fourth end tied the game. Queen's took a one point lead with a deuce in the seventh and followed that with a steal of one in the eighth end. Waterloo scored a single point in the ninth end which left the Gaels with a one point lead going into the final end. Queen's skip Cathy Brewer was left with a fairly wide open hit for the victory.

That win clinched the Ontario Championship for the Queen's women and capped off an incredible 13-0 season. The team of Cathy Brewer, Sally Karam, Lori Hetherington and Bethany Barlow played consistently superb throughout the year and distinguished themselves as the class of the province. Queen's Curling coach Marc McDonald has won both the OCAA and OWIAA Championships in the past, but this is the first year that he has won both of them in the same year. He should be congratulated on his hard work and dedication to the two teams. As a coach he sets a fine example of what a curler should be.

Humber can help you

Turn your Education into a Career

Humber College is offering a great selection of special programs designed specifically for University and College graduates.

Often referred to as "Practical Graduate School", these programs are short, (we recognize your previous level of education) so you can get right down to some practical training that includes contact with Business and Industry professionals.

Multiply your career potential by combining the strength of your University background with the practical education for which Humber College has become known.

- Marketing Management
- Radio Broadcasting
- International Telecommunications
- Public Relations
- Journalism
- Recreation Leadership
- Human Resources Management
- International Marketing (Latin America and Asia Pacific)
- Early Childhood Education (Special Needs)
- Media Copywriting

Out of town? call 1-800-268-4867 Local calls (416) 675-5000

BIG COUNTRY.

SMALL PRICES.

TRAVEL CUTS STUDENT CLASS AIRFARES WILL GET YOU EAST TO WEST... FOR LESS, WHETHER YOU ARE FLYING ONE WAY OR ROUND TRIP.

TRAVEL CUTS
1-800-667-2887
(THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)

SCIENCE '44 CO-OP
397 BROCK STREET KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1T3 613-544-4506

Starting To Plan Housing For Next Year?

Science '44 has:

- 8 month contract
- prompt maintenance
- fully furnished
- meal plan available
- open to all students
- available for groups or individuals
- cheaper than residence or a ghetto house

397 Brock Street
544-4506

Just to give yet yet another excuse to procrastinate, you can still RENT ANY MOVIE FOR ONLY

ONE DOLLAR every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday this month from VIDS IN THE HALL.

Also, look forward to our upcoming promotional giveaways, where you could win great prizes like posters, jackets, sweatshirts, and more!

Open every day from 3-11 in JDUC

I'm Too Young to Graduate!!!!

Committee applications for the Arts & Science Graduation Formal will be available beginning March 14.

Positions Available:

- 1 Conbenor
- 2 Operations
- 4 Decorations
- 2 Publicity
- 1 Food and Wine/Entertainment
- 1 Secretary
- 2 Fund Raising

For more information or to pick up an application, please stop by the Arts & Science Undergraduate Office at 183 University or call 545-6278.

TONIGHT

SATURDAY NIGHT

THE SKYDIGGERS!

Come Early! Why? Beat the Line!
Cheap 7:30-9:30! Show off your tan!

COMING SOON!
Lowest of the Low
Bourbon

Tuesday
N.T.W TRIVIA
All-U-Can Eat
Spaghetti - $2.99

Every Thursday
DIPSOMANIA!
Still the best
'mania in town!

Every Sunday
Wild Blues Yonder
Rockin' Blues!
No Cover!

Monday
20¢ Wings

AMS Assembly Grant Applications

The Assembly Grant Application deadline is today!

Applications are due by 4:00pm

Applications should be completed and submitted to the reception desk of the AMS Offices in the JDUC.

Interview times will be posted on the doors of the AMS Offices by 9:00 am Monday. Interviews will be held in the AMS Offices in the evening between March 7 and 10.

For more info phone the AMS Office at 545-2725

International Study Centre, Herstmonceux Castle, East Sussex, England

This program, concentrating on European Area Studies, may make the difference for you!

Want To Know More?

To find out more or to obtain an application package see our representative in:

Mackintosh-Corry
Student Street

Monday to Friday until the end of March
or call 545-2815

Looking For The Competitive Edge?

For little more than the cost of a term at home you could

Study Abroad!

Queen's International Study Centre,

Herstmonceux Castle

Are you a second, third or fourth year student wondering what lies beyond graduation? Want to make your university degree more marketable?

Don't Miss This Opportunity!

$6800 (includes tuition, fees, room, board and field trips)

- Learn about the EEC, GATT and other international agreements which affect your future.
- Study art, languages and cultures of selected European countries. Visit their galleries, monuments, and theatres for a first hand look.
- Experience first hand the history and social fabric of Great Britain that only living in a country can teach.

AND

Earn Queen's credits toward your degree

ENTERTAINMENT

Battle of the Bands Semi-Finals

YELLOWBELLY, VOLUME, WHOLESOME, ALFIE'S
TUESDAY, MARCH 1ST 1994
BY ANDREW MCALLISTER

On Tuesday, Alfie's hosted the semi-finals of the 1994 Battle of the Bands to a large, eager crowd who thirsted upon the prime offerings of Kingston's indie rock scene. Three aspiring groups, Yellowbelly, Volume, and Wholesome descended upon the pub to provide an evening of aural entertainment while competing for prizes and the prestige of indie rock stardom.

The evening opened up with Yellowbelly's pre-show battle cry; a triumphant recording of Holst's "The Planets." Certainly an epic entrance, this four piece group quickly launched into their set. Yellowbelly is led by Patty Ewaschuck on bass and vocals, with Susie Robertson providing additional vocals and rhythm guitar work. Steve Foley provides the bulk of the lead guitar work, shredding out simple chords while Ewaschuck dictates the (backing rhythm). Yellowbelly are incredibly tight, which is surprising considering the fuzz overdose generated by Foley. As a result, they were intense and powerful, which helps them to nail home their dark, tormented and bitter messages. Angry lyrics like, You set me on my feet/what a lie permeate much of their music. "This is a bitter song, like most of our songs," comments Ewaschuck.

While most of their melodies and song structures are simple, drummer Mike Millar liberates these tunes from redundancy. His work never ceases to impress. Millar pulls more than his share of the artistic load of the band. Millar hammers out solid rhythms while stuttered stop and go passages break up regular patterns. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for the rest of the members. Yellowbelly's simple chord structures require stronger supporting melodies and I found their style inconsistent. They seem unable to synthesize contrasting elements in the music. I caught bits of Rush and Galaxie 500. At times they reminded me of Ned's Atomic Dustbin, without the pleasing melodies.

Another epic entrance produced a cross-dressed Volume, jauntily mounting the stage trying not to tread on their skirts. This entrance and unusual garb set the tone for Volume's set - grotesquely demonstrative and derivative. Volume are a five piece outfit, with George Sciban on bass (in lovely puffy pink), vocalist Mike List (wearing something slightly sheer), guitarist Chris Walmsley, Joey deVilla on keyboards, and drummer Andrew Pirie. While they were true to their name in decibel level, Volume were an extremely tight and clean act. Walmsley's guitar work was highly skilled, his solos fluttering and flawless and his strong melodic rhythm base accompanied deVilla's keyboard. Add the omnipresent tight bass of Sciban and the jack-hammer style drummer of Pirie and one infers that these snappy dressers are a performance power-house.

Yet, Volume has problems. They suffered from a lack of innovation in their playing style and songwriting. From the first note that Volume played, Mike List's vocal style was of the generic Pearl Jam school of singing. While their songs were very melodic and easily digestible, they were utterly predictable. Walmsley's guitar work, while amazing, was uninspired and conventional. Although their covers of Rage against the Machine and Sons of Freedom were spotlessly executed, but Volume did nothing to improve upon the original versions, as they did not impose their own strengths of style upon the pieces to create a new product. Combined with their ridiculous stage antics, their sincerity falls into question, and their music is reduced to the status of novelty. Mike List prowled the stage, eventually finding himself on top of the main speaker column, having no other mountain to scale. Joey deVilla's mad gyrations and the occasional playing of his keyboard on his head seemed desperate. Furthermore, these antics failed to overwhelm the crowd or most importantly, the judges.

The final act to grace the stage was Wholesome. What was wonderful about this punk-style three piece was that they were true to their name. As a pleasant contrast to the previous epic entrances, Jonathan Demers simply sent out a greeting to the judges ("I'd like to say Hi!") And modestly informed the crowd that, "this is only our third show ever, the first with lights and monitors." Wholesome is comprised of guitarist Jonathan Demers, bassist Chris Kline, and drummer Dave Milanovic, with vocal duties split between Demers and Kline. Wholesome's sincerity is overwhelming. Demers shuffles up to the microphone, slightly cocks his head, closes his eyes and cranks out some aggressive, heart-warming melodies, while coating them with his gritty voice. Both Demers and Kline's voices are expressive, showing the same anger as Killdozer or bitterness of Dinosaurs Jr. The simple effective songwriting harkens back to Sonic Youth's Sister album. As a result, Wholesome drew the crowd in, not distancing them with a battery of mimicry. It was this same sincerity that helped the Inbreds win last year's Battle of the Bands.

Yellowbelly's Susan Robertson sings another bitter song.

TRICIA BAUMAN

While all bands played exceptionally well, Yellowbelly took top honours and will proceed onto the finals on March 22.

REALITY BITES
DIRECTED BY BEN STILLER
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY CHRIS ZABEL

There was a time when I doubted Winona Ryder. Before the great doubt, I had been nursing a considerable obsession. My Winona picture collection had grown so as to spill onto a second wall and numbered nearly a hundred (not including doubles). I looked back with pride to the week that I paid to see Welcome Home Roxy Carmichael five times. Mermaids was yet another success, but soon after that there was room for questioning.

My faith was first shaken when she was rumoured to have been unfaithful to Johnny Depp. I immediately went into denial, but what couldn't be avoided were the pictures that began appearing in Rolling Stone and Vogue with her in just her under-stuff, or else completely naked and looking far too much like Sheryl Lyn. I really didn't understand. Winona had built a career on being far too smart for tight shirts and big-money sexism. Plus, she hadn't worked up any new interview material since the beginning of her career and her talk of J.D. Salinger, hippy parents and her sock collection was wearing pretty thin.

Winona has never been about looks: she was the role-model who would never sell out, she was the justification of neurotic obsessives and angst ridden disasters everywhere. Now all my fears may be dismissed. With Reality Bites, Winona has redeemed herself in full.

The movie takes place in a haze of junk food and regression. Between Pringles cans and cigarettes, Lelaina (Ryder), Troy (Ethan Hawke), Vickie (Janeane Garofalo), and Sammy (Steve Zahn) get fired from their jobs, smoke some more, make snide remarks in TV-speak and try to name all of the episodes of Good Times.

Having just graduated from university, Lelaina is in the process of making a documentary about the social hole between stupidity and success: the high IQ underachiever. In grainy jerk-pan fashion she chronicles the likes of a drunken roof-top sing-along, Vickie's free clinic AIDS test ("the right of passage of our generation,") and Sammy's efforts at an explanation to his patents of his sexual orientation.

Troy is a genius philosophy major drop-out who can define irony and tides the inside track to Loser-ville USA. After finding out the hard way that employee snacks were not subsidized in his workplace, he moves in with Lainie and Vickie. Lainie and Troy are far too critical of each other not to be falling in love until things get complicated when Lainie smashes her car into Mike's (Ben Stiller), the handsome and Gucci-clad TV big shot. He would rather have a date than a day in court with Lainie and before you can say sellout he's interested in getting Lainie's documentary on the air. The slightly allegorical love-triangle progresses as it should and gradually lends structure to this more-than Slacker conglomeration of bites of "reality."

Anyone in a position to be paid for reviewing this movie will probably admit that it's extremely smart and witty, but qualify all praise saying that it may be a little too sure of itself. This may be true as its writer, 23 year old film grad Helen Childress, probably hasn't had time to attend the school of bitter disappointment yet. She may tend to glorify the failure/go-nowhere life-style (not that there's anything wrong with staying in one place, it just isn't

TALKING CONTINUED ON PAGE 26

Reality

Soundtrack for generation eck?

VARIOUS ARTISTS
REALITY BITES
BMG/RCA
BY SIAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS

Those big corporate music execs probably think they've concocted the perfect soundtrack formula (a guarantee of commercial success) for Reality Bites: Dinosaur Jr., Lenny Kravitz, The Juliana Hatfield 3, World Party, The Posies, Crowded House and The Indians (a lengthy list of impressive names for that "cool" alterna-sound); The Knack, U2, Squeeze and a cover of Peter Frampton's "Baby I Love Your Way" (for that familiar and classic sing-a-long "it's my generation oldies" feel); and a few token, scattered contributions including a vocal debut from Ethan Hawke (for those crazy, die-hard Hawke fans that happen to fall in love with him during the course of the movie).

Reality Bites' TV promo even takes a fraction of a millisecond to not so conspicuously advertise the soundtrack— whenever I see that cute little promo I can't help but wonder: in doing so, does the movie promote the soundtrack, or does the soundtrack serve to promote the movie? It's a tough call. I, for one, have to admit that I did a double-take when I noticed Dinosaur Jr.'s name scrawled on my TV screen during the movie's ad. However, within one listen I learned that just because the names on the soundtrack look good doesn't necessarily mean that they sound good.

I don't know about you, but I'm happy to leave The Knack's (M M M) "My Sherona" as an early '80s inexplicable wonderhit. Why did they have to so cruelly dig it out from far, far away in the archives, where it belongs? According to the press release, the song was remixed by Dave Jerden, who has also mixed The Red Hot Chili Peppers and Jane's Addiction (and now add The Knack to that list?). I suppose this was an attempt to update The Knack with a '90s feel, but I honestly didn't notice.

Other familiar tunes on the soundtrack include U2's "All I Want Is You," Squeeze's "Tempted (94)," which has been rerecorded and mixed especially for Reality Bites (except for some weird wheezing noise, it's not remarkably different) and an ever so sunshiny Prozac-ian reggae cover of "Baby I Love Your Way" (I like the original better, and I don't even like the original that much).

The surprise of the album is by far the most annoying song: Ethan Hawke's "I'm Nuthin'." He sings in a husky, damaged voice that somehow doesn't sound genuine—I have visions of White Fang Hawke-boys smoking lots o' cigarettes to get that rough n' tough manly sound. But most annoying are the lyrics, which attempt to embody that quintessential Generation X, slacker profile: I got a pothead mamalot a cokehead dad (essential dysfunctional family background), Ain't no republican/ro demican (anti-political), Don't want no big TV/ or no flashy garage/never would cut it in no corporate job (anti-yuppie, anti-extravagance) and finally, he looks grungy: they say look at the slob. And there you have it. The scary thing is that Hawke has reportedly already been offered a recording contract.

Two other songs that drive me insane (and not with ecstasy) are Lenny Kravitz's "Spinning Around Over You" and The Juliana Hatfield 3's "Spin the Bottle." Hatfield's bubble-gum fluff voice sounds pretty vacuous as she sings about, surprise surprise, playing spin the bottle. Kravitz does his usual recycling psychedelia thing, with an Ike Turner "baby babe, I'm on my knees for you" quality. Coincidentally, both Hatfield's and Kravitz's songs share a spinning theme (as noted in their titles) and both also feature horribly repetitive "spinning around and around" choruses that give me a really big headache.

However, there are songs BITE THIS CONTINUED ON PAGE 26

Elections for the 1994-95 AMS Board of Directors will be held at the AMS Annual General Meeting on Tuesday, March 15, 1994. 5 student director positions are available. Interested students should fill out an application form available in the AMS office by Friday, March 11, 1994. Questions should be addressed to Grant Hughes, current Board of Directors Chair, in the AMS office.

SALE!

Goretex, Tents, Sleeping Bags, Polartec, Long Underwear.

It's all on sale
10% to 40% OFF!

NORTH RIDGE WILDERNESS

80 Queen Street 546-4757

CANADA'S MONARCHY

- AFFIRMS THE HERITAGE OF OUR PAST
- DISTINGUISHES US FROM THE USA TODAY
- PROVIDES A STABLE FRAMEWORK FOR OUR FUTURE

INTERESTED AGREE

MEET JOHN AIMERS, THE MONARCHIST LEAGUE OF CANADA
SUNDAY, MARCH 6, 4:30-5:30 PM

Informal meeting at Todd Alexander's house,
178 University Street

ALL WELCOME Information from Todd
531-3848 & League Offices (800) 465-6925

EUROPE CANADA ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance - Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399	"Bare Bones"
London	from 379	Round World	from 2399
Rome	from 629	Via South Pacific
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

Expand the horizon of your success in business with Humber's

One-year Post-Graduate Programs in International Marketing

Latin American Profile

- The only business program in Ontario that offers Spanish language instruction and Latin American culture.
- Instructors with extensive business and Latin American experience.
- Optional residential programs in Mexico on completion.

Asia Pacific Profile

- The only business program in Ontario that offers Japanese and Mandarin culture and language instruction.
- Instructors with extensive business and Asian experience.
- Optional cooperative experience with companies in Asia.

To qualify, you need a three-year university degree, college diploma, or five years equivalent work experience.

Call (416) 675-5000, or 1-800-268-4867, for information

Delivering World Class Business Education

A cubist portrait of Glenn Gould

THIRTY-TWO SHORT FILMS ABOUT GLENN GOULD
DIRECTED BY FRANCOIS GIRARD
THE PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
BY OWIN LAMBECK

Don't let the title fool you. Thirty-Two Short Films About Glenn Gould is in fact one unified portrait of the man and his music. It is broken up into thirty-two short segments, each with its own individual style, and each revealing a tiny part of the man. The movie takes its structure from Bach's Goldberg Variations and really works well, turning what could have been a long uninformative biography into fascinating snippets of the life of Canada's most enigmatic musical figure. This is short attention span cinema at its best.

The film takes only a semi-linear structure, beginning with Gould's childhood and ending with his death at the age of 50. The scenes in the middle jump around a lot, and they vary from traditional narrative to the more daring and innovative. Some of the best scenes are those in which Gould's own words are used, such as when two Glenn Goulds appear in the room, with one interviewing the other. This interview, written by Gould, appears early on in the film, and sets the tone for what is to come. The two figures show both sides of the man, one seeing the "artist as superman," the other saying that "the ideal audience to artist relationship is a one to zero ratio." While this may be somewhat cryptic, it is clearly the statement of a man who deeply questioned his own greatness. From this point the movie moves in many directions, interspersing real interviews with recreations of recording sessions and references to various important performances, including the final 1964 concert in Los Angeles.

The choppy structure of the film is obviously due in large part to the fact that there is really very little known about Gould's personal life. Rather than try to fill in the gaps with dramatic conjecture, director Francois Girard and his co-screenwriter Don McKellar have wisely chosen to focus upon small, often obscure and often fictionalized events. In fact, many of the "short films" tell us nothing at all, but merely allow us to enjoy Gould's brilliant playing as the camera dollies around a room. As the film progresses, we start to notice common threads running through the segments. One striking example of this is the way Gould is shown to perceive everything around him in musical terms, from a conversation he hears to the stock market which he plays as deftly as the piano.

Colm Feore stars as Gould, and fit shooting the film into his already gruelling schedule as an actor in the Stratford Festival. A gifted actor, Feore lends a lot of charisma to the role, and shows Gould to be not necessarily an eccentric, but rather a private man who required several hours of being alone for every hour he was with someone else. Although the film does not claim to be an accurate account of Gould's life, and draws few conclusions about him, several pains were taken to be as authentic as possible. Gould's working environment was recreated in a makeshift studio in an old church and his Steinway Grand Piano was shipped 300 miles to be used in the film. Ironically, nowhere in the film does Feore actually play the piano. Instead, director Gerard takes a subtler approach, showing the inside of the piano as the hammers strike the strings in correspondence with Gould's inspired performance.

Thirty-Two Short Films About Glenn Gould is what might be called a "small" film, but that is precisely its charm. It will not leave you feeling that you know much about the life of Glenn Gould, but that's not the point. It is an engaging introduction to Gould, both as a great musician, and as a unique Canadian figure. The great achievement of this film is not in telling the story of a life, but creating a feeling that the viewer is sharing in the deeper creative essence of an individual.

Screenwriter Don McKellar, who is fast becoming a leading figure in Canadian cinema as both a writer and a star in such films as Roadkill and Highway 61, will be present at the Friday screening. Also in attendance will be the film's producer Niv Fichman, one of Canada's leading producers of programs on the performing arts.

Award Winning Author

NINO RICCI

will be at
Grant Hall
Thursday, March 10
at 7:00 p.m.

He will be reading from both LIVES OF THE SAINTS and its recently published sequel, IN A GLASS HOUSE.
ARRIVE EARLY FOR GOOD SEATING!

Only at JJ's

Catch the Leafs at JJ's

The "Philly Melt"

Served with a Mountain of fries!

Only $ 4.95

OPEN Mon - Fri : 11 am - 12 am
Sat : 12 pm - 12 am
Sun : 4:30 pm - 11 pm
409 Johnson Street at University Tel #: 547-3771

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

Dollars for Scholars

Last year, the CMHC Scholarship Program attracted 174 applicants and awarded 27 new scholarships. Those are pretty good odds: about one in six.

Since its inception in 1947, the program has given out almost $27.3 million to 2,495 Canadian students. The current annual maximum is $14,154 per student.

Like most scholarship programs, the one administered by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) looks for top students. More specifically, CMHC scholarships are given only to full-time Canadian students working on a university Master's degree related to housing.

The possibilities for graduate studies in housing are much broader than one might initially think. Awards go to students in such varied disciplines as engineering, environment, business and public administration, social and behavioural science, architecture, economics, law, planning, and history.

Leslie Coates, who in 1993 completed her Master's degree in Landscape Architecture at the University of Guelph, was one of 25 winners in the 1992 competition. She says, "Winning a CMHC scholarship allowed me to expand the scope of what I could do. It gives you a tremendous sense of confidence." The extra time to make contacts in the housing industry afforded by the CMHC scholarship has paid off for Leslie. Her thesis received positive comments in a Globe and Mail column and spawned a lengthier recent article in a widely read journal published by the Canadian Urban Institute.

Ms. Coates was "very impressed" with the aims of the CMHC Scholarship Program. "It's Canada's primary source of financial support for the training of professionals in housing and community planning. It's definitely needed."

If you or someone you know would like to apply for a CMHC scholarship, forms can be picked up now at either the Graduate Studies or Student Awards office. But hurry. Students must submit completed applications to the university they wish to attend by March 25, 1994.

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation awards scholarships of up to $14,154 for graduate studies in housing.

"A MASTERPIECE"

— Jay Scott, The Globe and Mail

Producer Niv Fichman and writer Dan McKellar will be here Friday night only!

THIRTY TWO SHORT FILMS ABOUT GLENN GOULD

The sound of genius.

Winner of Four Genie Awards including BEST PICTURE

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA Princess at Division 546-FILM

Playing Friday, March 4 - Thurs. March 10

Generously Sponsored by Renaissance Music PG

BEASTIE BOYS

BEASTIE BOYS
SOME OLD BULLSHIT
GRAND ROYAL
BY CHARLES SINCLAIR

Some Old Bullshit by the Beastie Boys is a collection of previously unreleased songs that the band recorded in the years leading up to their hugely successful 1986 release, Licensed to Ill. After having listened to the disc for the first time, I was poised to deliver an unrelenting scathing review when my housemate—a self-proclaimed Beastie Boys maniac—entered my room and pleaded: "Chuck, this is before they learned how to play instruments!" Appropriately, my review proceeds from this point.

It is not uncommon for the first song on a CD to set the tone for the entire album. "Egg Raid on Mojo" does this and more. The song consists of the band yelling the title 16 times (I counted) interrupted only by brutally simplistic guitar licks and progressions. The second song entitled simply "Beastie Boys" sounded so similar to the first that I could only discern the difference by glancing at the track number displayed on my CD player. If this wasn't enough, the music gurus behind the production of this soon-to-be-classic deemed it necessary to include a second rendition of "Egg Raid on Mojo" later in the CD, begging the question: Who is this Mojo guy and what did he do to deserve this? For the life of me, I could not tell the difference between the two.

The surprising success of the Beasties' first album, Licensed, was attributed to the band's unique rap style which can only be described as charming in its adolescence. Their 1992 release Check Your Head displayed a more musically refined and mature Beasties. The somewhat infantile hardrock stylings of this newly released Some Old Bullshit represents an unfortunate regression of sorts for the Beasties. As for the title of this CD... actually, that's just too easy.

PREREGISTRATION FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

ATTENTION ALL ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS
AND STUDENTS TAKING ARTS AND SCIENCE ELECTIVES

Students wishing to take Arts and Science courses in the 1994-95 academic year must submit their PREREGISTRATION requests through QCARD beginning 14 March 1994. Information concerning preregistration can be picked up beginning 7 March at the following sites:

- Faculty of Arts and Science:
 - Mackintosh-Corry Hall, Rooms F100 and F200
 - Departmental Offices
- Across campus:
 - Douglas Library (reference desk)
 - Education Library - West Campus, McArthur Hall
 - INFOBANK - John Deutsch University Centre
 - Registrar's Office - Richardson Hall, Room 103
 - Victoria Hall - Residence Desk
- Other Faculty Offices:
 - School of Business - Dunning Hall, Room 120
 - Applied Science - Ellis Hall, Room 101
 - School of Nursing - Cataraqui Building
 - School of Rehabilitation Therapy - Louise D. Acton Building, Room 202

It is the student's responsibility to pick up the information, READ contents carefully and follow preregistration directions and procedures.

*QCARD is a computerized information system which allows you to record Arts & Science preregistration requests, view your marks, change your address, etc.

Performing Arts Office presents

NEXUS

"like paradise in the mind...incomparable virtuosity and amazing good humour."

Programme includes:

- Marubattoo
- Novelty Ragtime Selections
- Turning Point
- Mbira

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

SUNDAY 6 MARCH
GRANT HALL 2:30PM
$15 Adult / $8 (Children, St. Lawrence, RMC Students)
(All prices plus GST)

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF WEDNESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Reality Bites 7:20 9:25
Philadelphia 7:00 9:40
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:45
Schindler's List 8:00
In the Name of the Father 6:45 9:35
My Girl 2 7:10
The Remains of the Day 9:30

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
On Deadly Ground 7:15 9:35
Blue Chips 6:50 9:15
Deathwish 5 6:55 9:40
The Piano 6:45
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:0 9:30
Blind Check 7:05 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Friday
Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould (Director Francois Girard and writer Dan McKellar will be present) 7:00

Mindwalk 9:30
Saturday
Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould 7:00
Mindwalk 9:00
Sunday and Monday
Mindwalk 7:00

Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould 9:15
Tuesday
Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould 7:00
The Boland of Little Jo 9:00
Wednesday
(Independent Showcase) It's Me Again / My Niagara 7:00
Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould 9:00
Thursday
Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould 7:00
The Boland of Little Jo 9:00

CLUBS

FRIDAY
The Toucan: Smartest Monkeys
Duke's: Boro Loskens
AJ's Hongor: Skydiggers

SATURDAY
Alfie's: The Inbreds w/ September Child
The Toucan: To Hell With Burgundy (all the way from Manchester, England!)
AJ's Hongor: Skydiggers
Duke's: Boog and the Braveyard Whips

SUNDAY
AJ's Hongor: Wild Blues Yonder

TUESDAY
Alfie's: Bottle of the Bonds: Boob-Taobs, Fat Spyder, Ploid Daddies
Stoges: The White (Best of Led Zeppelin)

THURSDAY
The Grod Club: The Arrogant Worms

PERFORMANCES

GRANT HALL
Canadian percussion quintet extraordinaire (and Rubbermaid commercial guests), Nexus.
Mor. 6 at 2:30 pm
Tickets are $15 (adult) and $7 (student) and are available at the Performing Arts Office.

THE GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess St. (530-2050)
The Kingston Symphony presents Moslerworks VII, featuring Daniel Friedman's Overture No. 3, Beethoven's Triple Concerto, and Bizet's Symphony No. 1 in C.
Mor. 6 at 2:30 pm.
Tickets range from $16 to $25 and are available at the Grand Theatre Box Office.

THEATRE

THEOLOGICAL HALL
Queen's Drama presents Bertall Brecht's The Good Woman of Setzuan.
Mor. 8-13 at 8 p.m. in Convocation Hall
Tickets $8 (adult) and $6 (students/seniors) and are available at the Drama Department Desk, Theological Hall.
For more info.: 545-2104

THEATRE 5E
370 King St. West (546-5460)
Theatre 5 presents Dracula
Mor. 3-5 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $10 (adults), $8 (seniors), $6 (students)

DOMINO THEATRE
370 King St. West (634-2602)
Domino Theatre presents Henrik Ibsen's Ghosts
Mor. 3-5, 10-12 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $8 at the Grand Theatre or at the door.

GALLERIES

THE RED ROOM, KINGSTON HALL
BFA presents The Red Room Art Show.
Mor. 1-8 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

SPECIAL EVENTS:
Mor. 6 at 3 p.m.
Free public lecture with Carol Poded-wary, visiting scholar/art critic: Contextualizing First Nations Art.

Free public lecture with Dr. Wen-Chin Hsu, Research Curator, Taipei Fine Art Museum, Taiwan, speaking about The History of Chinese Pottery and Ceramics

Free public lecture entitled Before The Death of the Author: Renaissance Art and the "Idea" with Professor Leslie Karrick of the Department of Art

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

Closing Sunday, Mor. 6
Deborah Washington: Work Out of Order

through Mor. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Long Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Pointers' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through Apr. 28
To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinowitch

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The forming rays of John Heward

EDWARD DAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)
Closing Saturday, Mor. 5
Russian artist, Mikhail Kourzokov. Recent paintings on paper and canvas.

Mor. 8 through April 2
North American premiere of mixed media works on canvas by Alexander Ivonovitch Sivog.

FOR QUEEN'S ONLY
THE BEST TUXEDO DEAL IS

$69 NO EXTRA CHARGES

Choose from our entire selection. Everything is $69 plus taxes.

NO EXTRA CHARGES!
FREE FASHION PANTS
FREE VESTS
FREE SHOES

All you need is a $20 deposit
WE BEAT EVERY COMPETITORS PRICES
Available only at TUXEDO TOWN KINGSTON
One block up from the Capital Theatre with CAREER GIRL

ASUS ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

March 24th, 1994

- All members of the Society:
- may be present at any Society Annual Meeting;
 - may speak to any motion under consideration;
 - may move or second motions;
 - may exercise their voting privileges on any motion.

to be held in rm 201, Kingston Hall at 7:00pm

All Undergraduate Arts & Science students are encouraged to attend!

ASUS is now hiring

Commissioners

Academics	Communications	Internal Affairs	Society Affairs
Deals with all academic issues relating to Arts & Science students, including the DSC, Mind Find, Academic Orientation & Faculty Board.	Responsible for dealings with all campus media including the Journal, Surface, etc as well as several committees within ASUS.	In charge of all internal dealings within the Society, including the CORE, fall and winter elections, ASUS Assembly and all judicial matters.	Responsible for co-ordinating the volunteer, fund-raising committees within ASUS, including Kids 4 Kids, Balloon-ograms and Buddies.

All Commissioners are also responsible for sitting on ASUS Council, attending and making bi-weekly reports to ASUS Assembly, and maintaining regular office hours.

Applications are due today and can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University. Interviews will begin on Monday, times will be posted at the CORE.

Talking 'bout my generation

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

for everyone), but that could also be simply interpreted as optimism lived among the people she is writing for and records their struggles as has never been done before. The whole twenty-something thing isn't exactly virgin territory, but I'm going to risk an opinion and say that this movie beats out St. Elmo's Fire. And, although I do think that Melrose Place "is a really good show," it doesn't speak to my specific situation in the same way. Reality Bites is my favourite movie ever and I'm going to ask all of my friends to call me Troy from now on.

These characters live and breath the junk culture that they were weaned and created by. They are "people trying to find their own identity without real role-models or heroes or anything." A Charlie's Angels lunch-box may just be the best we have to go on, and I think most people have spent more time watching Tony Robbins infomercials than they have reading Paradise Lost. When was the last time anyone had a conversation about books that amounted to anything besides name dropping and agreements that yes, this and that book are indeed very good. Many of us worship at the church of the Video Movie Guide, and let MuchMusic form the basis of our ethics. We don't have wars anymore, just the Oscars. If you've spent a considerable portion of your life playing the movie game (actor, movie, actor, movie) then run, don't walk, on movie-night this week and declare in an authoritative tone: Reality Bites.

Bite this

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22

which deserve some credit. Particularly good are Crowded House's peppy "Locked Out" and World Party's "When You Come Back To Me," which sounds very Bowie-esque ("Young Americans") with its swinging saxophone and a full soulful chorus. In addition, Lisa Loeb's delicate, Hatfield-ish sounding (but better) vocals on "Stay" and The Indians' "Bed of Roses" deserve credit as decent songs. However, the promise of Dinosaur Jr offers only a disappointingly mediocre "Tur-nip Farm," (previously unreleased in North America).

Everyone seems to want Reality Bites to be the generational movie sensation in the likes of The Graduate or The Big Chill. If the Reality Bites soundtrack represents the music of "our" generation, I guess we're up shit creek.

CFRC RADIO DAZE

CFRC-FM 101.9 / Cable 90.9 is your campus-community alternative in Kingston!

- Pick up a free Program Guide for the Winter/Spring 1994 Schedule at the Infobank
- Political Science, Sociology, History and English types! Grads, Faculty and Staff! CFRC will be training persons interested in public affairs programming later this month. If you plan to be in Kingston this spring/summer come out to a New Members meeting, Tuesday March 15, 8pm in Carruthers 102. No prior radio experience necessary.

Special events this week include:

- Fall Down Go Boom live on Heated Edge, today at 3pm
- Colin James concert ticket giveaway on Blues Inc., today at 6pm
- CREATION Records artist spotlight (incl. Jazz Butcher, The Pasrel, Slaughter Joe) on The Butterfly Collector, tonight at 12 midnight
- Campus Food Services, Waste Management & Accountability live debate on CALL-IN, Tuesday.

Ching Suen, Ph.D.
Professor of Computer Science

Didier Guillevic
Ph.D. student in Computer Science

"My professor's computer will decipher the biggest puzzle of all. Your doctor's handwriting."

Think about it. A computer programme that can read handwriting using human thinking patterns. It is the brainchild of Dr. Ching Suen, founder and director of Concordia's Centre for Pattern Recognition and Machine Intelligence (a member of the IRIS Group, one of Canada's 15 Networks of Centres of Excellence). This breakthrough is the result of what Dr. Suen describes as "close cooperation within one of the most sophisticated research teams in the world." Recipient of more than $2.5 million in grants, including $1.3 million from Bell, Dr. Suen also wins praise from students like Didier Guillevic, a native of Brittany, who says: "I learned of Dr. Suen's work while completing my Master's in France, Germany and England. He was widely recognized as the leading authority in his field. That's why I chose Concordia for my Doctorate."

And there are other valid reasons Concordia is the right university for so many people: more than 160 undergraduate and graduate programmes with strong reputations in business studies, communications, psychology, fine arts and engineering; a college system offering a personalized approach to education; a friendly atmosphere with professors who are known for their accessibility; a remarkable choice of programmes on a full- and part-time basis; and two campuses with a student body truly representative of Montreal's diverse population.

When you consider that Concordia is also known for being in touch with the real world, you can be assured that what you learn here will go farther out there.

1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd. W
Montreal

Real education for the real world

Graduate programmes offered at Concordia:

- Accountancy
- Administration
- Adult Education
- Advanced Music Performance
- Applied Linguistics
- Aerospace
- Art Education
- Art History
- Art Therapy
- Biology
- Building Studies
- Bus. Administration (Airline & Aviation) (Executive MBA)
- Chemistry
- Child Study
- Civil Engineering
- Communication
- Computer Science
- Economics
- Ecotoxicology
- Educational Studies
- Educ. Technology
- Elect. & Computer Eng.
- English
- History
- Humanities
- Instit. Admin.
- Instruct. Tech.
- Journalism
- Judaic Studies
- Mathematics
- Stats & Actuality
- Mech. Eng.
- Philosophy
- Physics
- Psychology
- Public Policy & Public Admin.
- Religion
- Sociology
- Sports Admin.
- Studio Arts
- Teaching of Math.
- Theology, Rel. & Phil. Studies
- Traduction

For information, please call (514) 848-3800 or write to: School of Graduate Studies Concordia University 1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd. West, Montréal (Québec) H3G 1M8

Queen's Drama Presents

The GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN

by Bertolt Brecht

featuring ORIGINAL SET DESIGN by award winning BROADWAY DESIGNER JIM SANDEFVR

ORIGINAL SCORE COSTUME DESIGNS by Queen's student ANTHONY BASTIANON MARJORIE HAYTER

LIGHTING DESIGN by Queen's student SHAVNA DOBBIE

AND RAW SQUID-ON-A-STICK!!!!

DON'T MISS IT!!!

MARCH 8-12 8 p.m.

$8 GENERAL $6 STUDENTS

INFORMATION 545-2104

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

AMS Hooray!!

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

The '92 - '93 TRICOLOUR YEARBOOKS ARE FINALLY HERE!

Pick up your copy beginning Monday March 7, 1994 between 10:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m. in room 050 in the JDUC. Hours may vary, but it will be posted on the office door.

You must have your student card to receive a yearbook.

To all '97's: You do not receive a copy of this yearbook because it's last year's - yours comes out next year, so please don't ask.

NEED EZ CASH?

FOR THE WEEKEND, RENT, FOOD, PARTYING!

GETTING CASH IS QUICK & SIMPLE AT THE HOCK SHOP. WE WILL PAY YOU CASH ON THE SPOT.

- STEREOS
- VCRs
- MICROWAVES
- CAMERAS
- NINTENDO
- SEGA GENESIS
- CDs & MOVIES
- GOLD JEWELLERY
- GUITARS

ALL ITEMS ARE HELD FOR A 30 DAY POLICING PERIOD, THEN CAN BE REPURCHASED FOR A MINIMUM MARK-UP. NOTE: SELLERS MUST BE 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER. VALID ID OR DRIVERS LICENSE REQUIRED.

TRADE-UP The Hock Shop's unique EZ-TRADE™ concept allows you to trade your electronics, jewellery, computer games or whatever you have for a newer model. We include a NO-HASSLE warranty on all our items.

BEST DEALS IN TOWN!

VCRs * TVs * CDs * GUITARS * CAMERAS * NINTENDO * SEGA GENESIS * CORDLESS PHONES * JEWELLERY * TYPEWRITERS * COMPUTERS & MUCH MUCH MORE.

HOCK SHOP™

549-CASH (2274)
9:30-6PM, MON-SAT
Check us out at 611 Princess Street at Albert

QUEEN'S HILLEL

Shabbat Dinner
on
Friday, March 4, 1994
at 7:00 p.m.

At the Hillel House
116 CENTRE STREET (below UNION)

Admission $5.00

Come and join your Jewish Community

NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE

NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE
NOMINATE

NOT JUST A LETTER

The AMS Letter is awarded each year to students who not only make an outstanding contribution to the Alma Mater Society and to Queen's University in general, but hold positions that otherwise receive little recognition. The letters are awarded in conjunction with the Norman, Ian, and Lorna Rogers' Scholarship which is funded by a bequest of the will of Arthur W. Macleod Rogers.

Nomination packages and additional info are available in the AMS office, lower JDUC. Inquiries call Todd Minerson (545-2725).

Norman, Ian and Lorna Rogers' Scholarship Nominations Due March 18/94.

SATURDAY MARCH 5th THE INBREDS WITH SEPTEMBER CHILD

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

8 P.M. Alfie's 8 P.M.
PUB

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FDR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEBROOK FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

NORTHPORT POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware dinners and wedding registrations. Contact us at 1 476-4918 to make an appointment.

LOOKING TO VOLUNTEER in the healthcare field? Meet local health agency representatives at the Community Health Resources Fair - sponsored by Student Health, Thursday March 17, 1994 in the JDUC 10-3 p.m.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on QCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

LESBIAN AND GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2960 - staffed Monday - Friday 7 - 9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, a recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

FINAL EXAMS ARE ONLY one month away. Come and discuss health with us at FOR THE HEALTH OF IT - a display of 25 local health agencies. Thursday March 17, 1994, 10 - 3 p.m. in the JDUC.

FEELING STRESSED? Call the confidential healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators Monday - Thursday 6 - 9 p.m., 545-6000 ext 4444. Leave messages anytime.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on QCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House 51 Queen's Crescent, Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-INS Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome.

COMMUNITY HEALTH RESOURCES FAIR. Meet the health resource people and on campus. Thursday March 17, 1994 10 - 3 p.m. in the JDUC. Come on out just FOR THE HEALTH OF IT!

INTERESTED in promoting healthy attitudes to food, weight and body image? Consider volunteering with the PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM.

COPING with academic life can be a challenge. PEER HEALTH OUTREACH helps. Maybe you can too.

SEX in the 90's is a risky proposition. Promoting healthy decision making is one of the outreach opportunities available through PEER HEALTH OUTREACH.

WANT to know more about PEER HEALTH OUTREACH? Call the HEALTH LINE 545-6000 ext. 4444 Monday through Thursday from 6 - 9:00 p.m. and talk to a current Peer Health Educator.

PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM - volunteer applications are available at Student Health or Infobank. Due by March 10. For more information call Diane Notting, Health Educator 545-6712.

CAMP OUTLOOK PRESENTS: A reading by Timothy Findley. Admission is free. Donations at the door for Camp Outlook. Wednesday, March 9th, 7:30 p.m. at KCVI.

THE CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM is a safe place for people who are at risk from excessive alcohol consumption staffed by student volunteers working with an experienced Detox supervisor. Volunteer applications for the Campus Observation Room are available at Student Health Service, Residence Life Office and Infobank. For more information call Diane Notting 545-6712.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on QCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

UNDERSTAND YOUR LEASE BEFORE YOU SIGN IT! Appliances included? Lawnmowing fees extra? Parking no charge? Get help getting answers - call Nancy at Town/Gown Liaison: 545-6745.

QUEEN'S ASTRONOMY CLUB presents Dr. Martin Duncan discussing chaos and the stability of the solar system. Stirling A March 13, 1994 at 8:30 pm. Free admission. General meeting at 8:00 pm.

ARTS '97 PARTY OF THE YEAR Mystery Road Trip?? Friday March 18. Bring a friend and party till you drop. Only $10 - Wear your coveralls. Tickets sold in Leonard Cafe.

??? MYSTERY ROAD TRIP ??? Art-Sci '97 Mystery Road Trip. Friday, March 18. Watch for details. Where on where, has my little trash gone?

HEY! ART-SCI '97! Listen up. SEMI FORMAL FRIDAY, MARCH 11, 57. Bring a date. Bring a friend. Bring yourself.

QUEEN'S FIRST AID WANTS YOU! We are now accepting applications for positions on the Queen's First Aid Unit for the upcoming '94-'95 year. All applicants must have current stand-ard first aid and CPR. Applications can be picked up at the Student Health Centre and are due at Student Health by 4:00 p.m. March 10.

EURAIL PASSES Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available - Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your study group. Good rooms, photocopying facilities and easel available! Call Julia at 545-2958 or drop by the Student Affairs Centre (The Grey House).

ALLOAS delegates, you're all invited to a party at Chille's house on March 25. Call U.S. at 530-3222 for more info.

CLASSIFIEDS

HELP WANTED

INTERESTED IN TRAVEL! Travel Cuts is looking for an enthusiastic student to work part time promoting unique student travel services to Queen's students. For more info call Ellen at 1 800 798-CUTS.

RACE MANAGEMENT COORDINATOR Kingston Yacht Club requires person to oversee management of evening and weekend races. 3 evenings a week and several weekends from May 1 to October 1. Must have good understanding of race management and be a competent boat driver. Should have or be willing to get VHF license. Ideal candidate will receive compensation comparable to qualified head sailing instructor. Send resume on or before Monday, March 7th to: Gord McLaughlin, Sailing Director Kingston Yacht Club 1 Millard St., Kingston, Ont. K7L 2V3

EXPANDING photofinishing firm is hiring staff for a new store in Kingston. Full and part time positions starting in March. Apply with resume: 1 HR Photoworks, 107 Princess St.

WANTED

TWO HOUSEMATES NEEDED for other great house on other corner of Earl and Aberdeen, the yellow one with the yard you cut across on your way to class. Call 544-3154 anytime. It's close, em.

FOUR GIRLS want lift to share house, 5 minutes from campus, non-smoker, gas heating, on bus route, close to downtown, sinks in bedrooms. 1 1/2 baths, VCR. $280. Call 547-9095.

MALES 18 PLUS years needed for Pysc 600 questionnaire on heterosexual dating and sexual behaviour. Paid $5.00 for 30 minutes. Call 545-6552. Leave first name and phone number for "Lon's Study".

FEMALE STUDENTS NEEDED to fill out a questionnaire on crime severity. Paid $5.00 for approx. 25 minutes. If interested, phone 545-6552 and leave a message for Matt's study.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Kodak outdoorwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Ontario) 547-2347.

TIRED OF LINE-UPS for equipment at the gym? Home universal weight system for sale. Includes pec. attachment, 188 lbs of plates, hardly used. $220.00 negotiable. If interested in demo, call Doug at 531-7718.

FOR SALE: Shelves, glass end table, couch and a flat top sewing machine cabinet. Prices negotiable! Call Heather at 547-9465.

STUDENT CLASS FARES, budget charters, custom long haul airfares. Odyssey Travel offers a huge range of airfare options. For help with your travel plans call 549-3553.

ARTSQU JACKET FOR SALE. Barely worn. Great condition. $125 or best offer. Must sell, need money. Call 549-7529.

VW JETTA '86 FOR SALE. Excellent condition. Newly painted metallic gold. Air - con, sun roof, fuel injected. 5 gear, automatic lock and power windows. Very clean and absolutely rust-free. Beautiful wheels for only $4,000.00! (negotiable) Call Debra at 547-6762 evenings.

TUX FOR SALE: Great condition, used only twice, size 42. Call 5140 or best offer. Don't rent and have nothing to show for your money! Call 531-2892.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT month contract, prompt maintenance personnel, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Science '44 Co-Op at 544-4506. Everyone welcome to apply.

4 BEDROOM, Princess at University, balcony, appliances, laundry, photocopier, spacious rooms, close to campus, ASP, beer store and nightclub. Quiet building. Very low

Want a chance to win $1,000? Why not enter the KRAFT Dinner recipe contest? Call 1-800-26-KRAFT for details or see the full page ad appearing in this newspaper!

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

utilities. $150 per month. Call 549-3069.

3 BEDROOM apartment, close to downtown and campus, fully carpeted, dishwasher, central air/heat, laundry, security building, full bedroom with own bathroom. A Great Place to Call Home. For info call Maggie, Belh or Kerry at 547-8050.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedrooms, washer & dryer, skylights, dishwasher, microwave, very low utilities and gas fireplace, $1416. Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000. Also, a great 6 bedroom same features.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedrooms, washer & dryer, skylights, dishwasher, microwave, very low utilities and gas fireplace, $1416. Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000. Also, a great 6 bedroom same features.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedrooms, washer & dryer, skylights, dishwasher, microwave, very low utilities and gas fireplace, $1416. Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000. Also, a great 6 bedroom same features.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: HP 48 G calculator. Who's? Not sure. How will you know it's mine. Well it's not yours. Reasons to return it: 1) Rewards; 2) clear conscience; 3) avoid activation of self destruct. Call Greg at 531-9333 please.

LOST: In Mac-Corry, a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Heart-shaped gold locket on Saturday February 12th. Extreme sentimental value - engraving on the back. Reward offered. Please call Elizabeth at 546-0005.

LOST: Blue Phe '94 leather jacket, January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Maria's Seiko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Gwili at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Allies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-9243.

LOST: Black flip pen keychain at Brock and University, Tuesday February 1st at 11:30 a.m. Gold house key 2 car keys, bike lock key. Please call 531-3949.

LOST: Gold I.D. bracelet, name engraved. Probably lost in Mac-Corry. Sentimental value - reward when returned! Thanks. 547-0421.

LOST: Silver and Gold Chain-Link Seiko Watch. Lost Tuesday between JDUC and Chemistry building. Engraving on back (UMF 93). Sentimental value. Reward.

ATTENTION: A reward is offered for the return of the black Eddie Bauer knapsack taken from Ban Righ, Friday, January 21st. It's contents are extremely important! Please, please, please contact Kim at 547-9589 ASAP!

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour.

Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: Kettle Creek pencil case with a calculator inside, in Mac-Corry before reading week. To claim call Jocelyn at 531-4350.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At A.J.'s, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by at the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 Con-E-J jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0452.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

FOUND: Small all white female cat, on Feb. 22. Earl and Sydenham St. Call 547-2573. Claim her before we teach her to swear!

PERSONALS

TO THE BOYS: Que Pasa? Musical! Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba Ba... slop. Sweet Cubal Thanks for a great trip. Luv the Girls.

HOG SCHIEDER! To Mich Mich, Polly P., Harry and Bio-Climb. 'Twas cool, thanks for comin'! Next time we get bush heads. Love Cliff.

SARA AND MB: Hey guys. Have fun at the formal with your dream dates—you're gonna look great! See you at home. AL.

A GREAT BIG THANK YOU to everyone who helped to unload the TRICOLOR YEARBOOKS this Wednesday: Jess, Eric, Kate, Sue, Clare, Catherine, Christy, Kevin, Ming, Shu, Langdon, Chris, Matthew, Eric, Mark, Nadine, Nathan, all the people from the post office, and especially Jeff and Jeff. To all of you and everyone else who volunteered their time to help me, your effort was greatly appreciated! From Karen Kicullen, '93 '94 Editor.

NINO RICCI, March 10, Grant Hall at 7:00 p.m. Arrive Early for good seats!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY PHIL WINTERS! Just wanted to wish you the, craziest, wildest and happiest 23rd birthday event Let's celebrate before the fifth! Love, Raine.

FORMER NEWS EDITOR KRIS RUSHOWY: I miss you and I'm glad you will be coming to Kingston soon. I heard somewhere that March 11 is supposed to be a good night for drinking games... I'm looking forward to seeing you, Sarah. =)

THE THIRD ANNUAL COMMERCE & ENGINEERING FOR ENVIRONMENTAL CHANGE CONFERENCE PRESENTS:

TED PATTENDEN

"TIRE RECYCLING TECHNOLOGY: AN ECONOMICAL AND ENVIRONMENTALLY FRIENDLY SOLUTION"

• PRESIDENT, NATIONAL RUBBER CO LTD
FRIDAY, MARCH 4TH, 1994
7:30 PM AT
WALTER LIGHT HALL
QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
ADMISSION IS FREE AND ALL ARE WELCOME.

WHAT'S UP?

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

Pick up What's Up forms at the AMS office Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

MARCH

Fill Us In

One of the most common concerns voiced so far through the Fill Us In sheets is that people know neither what the AMS really does nor how they can get involved. Some people say they feel intimidated by the AMS and are uncomfortable taking a walk down its "long dark hallway". The AMS certainly does not want to give the impression that it is some sort of exclusive club. All Queen's undergraduate students are members of the AMS and are encouraged to drop by and/or get involved at any time. Commissioners, Deputies, and Committee Chairs are always more than willing to answer any questions about events and activities and how you can get involved. If coming in is inconvenient, please refer to the blue pages in your Who's Where for a good description of the structure and functions of the AMS.

Things are already gearing up for next year and there are tons of opportunities—big and small—to become a part of it! If anything from being an Alfie's staff member to planning a multicultural event interests you, please come in and talk to us. On March 7th, in the Lower Ceilidh, the AMS will be holding a volunteer and job fair. This would be a great way for you to talk to people from the various Commissions and to learn more about the AMS. Chances are, you will find an area in which you would enjoy being involved. Application for everything from Deputy Commissioners to Committee Members and Services Staff will be available. Check the Journal for further information and application deadlines.

The response to Fill Us In has been phenomenal! Keep your eyes open for Council Members in the halls and at events with more Fill Us In sheets. Also remember that if you have any questions, comments, or concerns that just can't wait, you can pick up a form outside of the AMS office or come in and talk to us at the Communications office. We look forward to hearing from you!

Feature

Hoorary! The '92-'93 Tricolour Yearbooks are finally here! You can pick yours up starting Monday March 9, 1994 in Room 050 at the JDUC, between 10am - 4pm. Hours may change; check the door. You must have your student card to get your book. '97s do not receive a book - this is last year's!

Computing & Communications Services: Dial-In Modem Numbers. All dial-in phone numbers for your computer begin with 548 (not 545, except the Telnet line is 545-0383.) The dial-in phone numbers are: 1200bps 548-7328; 2400bps 548-3162; 9600bps 548-8258; V.32bis Telnet 545-0383.

During the month, two new contemporary art exhibitions will be mounted at the Agnes. On March 13, Hunting the Ego, an installation by Harrington area artist Shayne Dark, will open. The wood and metal sculpture installation, which explores social and political issues, will be on view until April 17.

BFA graduate Cheryl Pagurek will present an installation which consists of a "faux" living room plus photographs of previous installations of the 'room' in Victoria, B.C., where the artist now lives. Entitled 5 Fraserwood Avenue, Apt #2, the exhibition opens on March 20 and continues to June 12. Cheryl Pagurek will talk about her work from 2 to 2:30 on Sunday afternoon, March 28 and then mingle with visitors at the reception which follows. All are welcome.

Queen's Players present Star Trek: The Next Defecation on March 9, 11, 12, 16, 18. Tickets are available now at the JDUC box office. See you at the show!

Book Drive: The Queen's Black History Collective is requesting all members of the Queen's Community to donate books for donation to the Correctional System in Kingston. For further information please contact Stephanie @ 531-0414 or Felix @ 547-9785, 531-0414 or Felix @ 547-9785.

Logo Competition: The Queen's Black History Collective is inviting artists to submit a logo design for the collective. Deadline: Mar 15th, 1994. Super prizes. For further information please contact Stephanie Simpson @ 531-0414.

QEA Presents: Queen's Battle of the Bands every Tuesday in March. Allies. Come see Queen's Talent.

Saturday

You are invited! The ARTSFest closing ceremonies. Begins at 2:00pm in the McLaughlin Rm at the JDUC. For information contact Rachel at 530-2455.

Tuesday

Bachelor of Fine Art Students are having an Art show in the Redroom at Kingston Hall. The show only runs until Wednesday March 8th. The cost is free and the Art is Amazing, so GO! Sponsored by Art on the line. Dr. Wen-Chin Hsu, Research Curator at the Taipei Fine Art Museum in Taiwan, will speak on The History of Chinese Pottery and Ceramics at 7:30pm. Refreshments will be served following her pres-

Upcoming

Enjoy a free concert featuring the winners of the 93/94 Kingston Symphony Association Scholarships, Friday March 11 at 12:30 pm in Rm 120 of Harrison-LeCaine Hall. Performers include Christine Brooks, clarinet; Kathleen Hartley, flute; Leela Kowlessar, saxophone; and Tara Kowlessar, flute.

Queen's Medical Outreach Cycle-a-thon: Cycle to Guyana. QMO is holding a cycle-a-thon on Friday, March 11, 1994 to raise money to help subsidize both our Guyanese activities and our health-oriented projects here in Kingston. Due to government cutbacks in funding, we need your help more than ever! Please sponsor a QMO member then come on out to watch us cycle: 8:30 am-4:30 pm in the JDUC, Lower Ceilidh.

The Hart House Bridge Club at the University of Toronto is organizing an intercollegiate bridge tournament on the weekend of March 12 and 13, 1994, and is actively seeking the participation of other colleges and universities. Students of all levels of bridge experience will therefore find the weekend attractive, and will have an opportunity to meet with other enthusiasts. For more information please call Rita Kloss at (416) 978-2446.

Sunday

Visiting Scholar? Critic Carol Podedwomy will talk about Conceptualizing First Nations Art from 3 to 4 pm. The public is invited to enjoy coffee and a chat with Carol Podedwomy after the lecture.

Wednesday

Timothy Findley will be reading from his recent work. Admission is free. Donations at the door for Camp Outlook at K.C.V.I. The Queen's University Muslim Students' Association will hold a Potluck Iftar in the International Centre. Please come at least 15 min-

Thursday

Queen's Hidden Hunger Committee will be holding a Food Drive in the student housing area. Please give generously. All donations to Partners in Mission Food Bank.

Looking for a Job Opportunity in Asia? What about Hong Kong. The Queen's Chinese Students' Association has invited guest speaker Gracie Foo to open your choices in your job search. 6 pm at Ellis Aud. Free Admission and Anybody Welcome.

At 7:30, Professor Leslie Kornick of the Department of Art before a talk entitled, Before the Death of the Author: Renaissance Art and the "Idea." She will discuss the various ways in which inspiration, imagination and creativity were understood by artists and art theorists during the Renaissance.

Ms. Helen Cooper, Chair of the Ontario Municipal board, former mayor of Kingston and Queen's graduate, will present the fifth Fire-side Chat in a series on "Women as Leaders: The Challenges, Rewards and Costs," in the Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room, Ban Righ at 8:00 pm. This series is sponsored by the Dean of Women's Office. Refreshments will be served.

The School of Music presents a Jazz Workshop with

Monday

The AMS wants you! Come to the AMS Volunteer and Job Fair, 10-4 pm in the Lower Ceilidh JDUC AMS Commission and Service Reps will be available to answer any questions and to provide you with applications. It's time to get involved!

Thursday

Queen's Hidden Hunger Committee will be holding a Food Drive in the student housing area. Please give generously. All donations to Partners in Mission Food Bank.

Looking for a Job Opportunity in Asia? What about Hong Kong. The Queen's Chinese Students' Association has invited guest speaker Gracie Foo to open your choices in your job search. 6 pm at Ellis Aud. Free Admission and Anybody Welcome.

At 7:30, Professor Leslie Kornick of the Department of Art before a talk entitled, Before the Death of the Author: Renaissance Art and the "Idea." She will discuss the various ways in which inspiration, imagination and creativity were understood by artists and art theorists during the Renaissance.

Ms. Helen Cooper, Chair of the Ontario Municipal board, former mayor of Kingston and Queen's graduate, will present the fifth Fire-side Chat in a series on "Women as Leaders: The Challenges, Rewards and Costs," in the Elspeth Baugh Fireside Room, Ban Righ at 8:00 pm. This series is sponsored by the Dean of Women's Office. Refreshments will be served.

The School of Music presents a Jazz Workshop with

Hipster Doofus by Rizwan Khan

The Perils of Pumping

In this body-conscious age, no-one can escape the media's perpetual reminders that we are expected to attain the perfect physique in order to maintain any semblance of self-respect. How we react to these reminders is largely determined by gender. Women develop eating disorders. Guys go to the gym. They engage in silly-looking weightlifting exercises in the hope of developing silly-looking muscles in order to attract good-looking girls (of course, you can bulk up to get some buff dudes too, baddo — ed.).

I'm no different. Back in the eighth grade, when my hormones raged and when the pressure to develop bulging muscles in order to win the attentions of "females of the opposite sex" was at its height, I went out and spent a hefty proportion of my paper route money on a weightlifting set. My inherent laziness won out over my hormones and the weights have sat unused in my basement for the last decade or so. Once in a while, though, the urge to pump iron still hits me. On such occasions I have always been able to go downstairs and work out my pent-up stress by "hanging and banging" in my own personal gym. I never have developed any muscles, but at least no one has ever been around to complain about me humming the theme music from Rocky. I've generally had a pretty positive experience in the world of weightlifting.

That is, until I came to Queen's. These days, when the urge to work out hits me, I have to head over to the Phys. Ed. Centre. I really miss my basement now. It may have been dank and poorly lit unlike Queen's ultra-modern athletic facilities, but working out there was still a lot more fun than going to the jock city. Why? Well, for one thing, I didn't have to share the place with about two dozen Hans and Franz look-alikes. You know the type: those guys who wear T-shirts painstakingly designed to show off their pectoral muscles to maximum advantage while they stand around discussing nutritional supplements between sets. Every time a 98-pound weakling (someone like me) walks into the gym, he has to run the gauntlet of these guys as they cut glances at each other, roll their eyes, and generally go out of their way to make the poor guy feel even smaller than he already does. You'd think that shated sweat and pain would be great for creating a bond with guys like these, but noooo! Once you put some weights onto a barbell (which is quite a workout in itself — at least for me), you quickly realize that the minuscule plates that you're struggling with are only going to incur further scorn and contempt from the "Arnold" wannabes. Every time you look around you're surrounded by guys arrayed in various positions on machines that look like medieval torture instruments, each of them lifting more weight than the tonnage of bombs dropped on Baghdad during the Gulf War. And they all do it effortlessly! Not a hair seems to go out of place on these guys! Meanwhile, I'm struggling away, grunting, making hideous faces, covered in sweat... and this is before my first set! All my grunting and facial contortions just call more attention to me. I feel as if the whole place is just standing around and watching me with amused contempt as I struggle to raise the damn bar for one more rep. Needless to say, what little confidence I bring into the gym always deserts me by the end of my first set. From here onwards, it's one blunder after another. For instance, I was doing the bench press the other day (that's the one where you lie on a bench and pump the barbell up and down above your chest in the hope of making your pectoral muscles so sore that they actually grow). On this particular occasion my arms gave out a little sooner than I had anticipated. I lay there with the barbell pinned across my chest, with no way of getting it off. Being a stickler for Phys. Ed. Centre etiquette, I tried my best to look cool and not make a scene. I lay there for a full twenty or thirty seconds contemplating my imminent death from asphyxia, certain that the entire room was standing still, grinning at the girly-man who was about to become the first person ever to die from a crushed rib cage from bench pressing. Just as I thought that I'd gasped my last breath, I saw a guy come over and ask if I needed any help. Unable to vocalize a response, I gave him what must have been the most pathetic nod imaginable, and he called over one of his friends to help lift the barbell off my chest. The humiliation didn't end there. My saviour's friend happened to be — you guessed it — a girl! Now, I'm a liberated, '90s kinda guy and everything (uh-oh, here it comes — ed.), but let's face it; there aren't many things more humiliating for a guy than to have his life saved by a girl in a gym because he was too weak to lift the damn barbell off his own chest. And it's funny how the cosmos seems to conspire against me on this one.

There generally aren't a lot of girls in the weight room most of the time. But if ever I do anything stupid, like dropping a thirty pound weight on my foot and then trying my best to preserve a sense of decorum while hopping around in agony (yes, it really happened), then you can bet that there'll be a girl around to witness it. Weightlifters are always talking about how body-building does wonders for self-confidence, but mine has actually plummeted since I started going to the gym. To top off all this ambivalence I have about going to the gym, there's a persistent feeling I have that I really don't belong there for some reason. I don't know why it is. Maybe it's that sign on the wall that says Please return weights to rack after use. Now, I realize that grammatical errors of this sort are all too common in the world outside the gym as well, but every time I see that sign I can't help but feel that I should be spending my time in a more intellectually stimulating environment.

The question is: if I hate the place so much, why do I keep going back? Well, one possible explanation is that whole grade 12 English thing about "man vs. himself," maybe I'm struggling with some inner, primordial urge to repeatedly make a fool of myself and endanger my life at the same time. Or maybe it's something less esoteric, like the possibility that maybe on day I'll graduate from being a weakling and will join the ranks of the unconscionably muscular superhumans who now look down their pectorals at me. I don't know. Hell, for all I know it could just be some Freudian phallic thing about barbells. But whatever it is, you can bet that I'll never give up. But just promise me you won't come and laugh at me as I work out.

Rizwan Khan uses a Thighmaster and fears getting pummeled by "girls."

I'm a liberated, '90s kinda guy and everything, but let's face it; there aren't many things more humiliating for a guy than to have his life saved by a girl in a gym.

Next week: An analysis of 90210 and Metrose Place (Joey runs the Sydney Fan Club)! Be there!

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

Kingston Brewing Company Redux

Regular readers will recall that last November I called the Brew Pub "Kingston's Mecca of good beer" — and so it was, at the time. However, things have changed. The Brew Pub is now Mecca, Jerusalem, Rome, and Canterbury too — well worth a pilgrimage. There is no finer beer in Kingston. Since brewer Roger took over the kettle in May of 1993, things have been getting consistently better. Those who know the Brew Pub of old will be familiar with the pattern of Regal, Dragon's Breath, and the occasional specialty. In 1992 the Dragon's Breath Pale Ale, brewed for the KBC, at Hart in Carleton Place, was added, bringing the number of regular house beers to three. Now, however, it is not uncommon to find six or even seven KBC beers on tap.

At the moment, along with the pineapple, grapefruit Regal Lager, the malty, nutty, hoppy, full-bodied Dragon's Breath Real Ale, and the fruity, well-hopped Dragon's Breath Pale Ale, are three other beers. Smaugsbrau is a dry, malty Czech-style lager, with a rich gold colour, 6.5% alcohol by volume and a pleasantly hoppy finish. Winter Wallop is a reddish brown, strong ale (a real winter warmer), with a sweetish start, fruity body (sweet-apple and grapefruit) and an astringent, hoppy finish. Aphrodite's Ale (Love Potion Number 10) is a true cream ale, being half ale (Aardvark) and half lager (Smaugsbrau). Into this were added as many aphrodisiacs as could be found: chocolate, ginseng, and rosewater all make an appearance. The result is a very curious beer — the rosewater gives an almost soapy taste, and the ginseng gives a herbal, almost astringent character. A strange brew, but definitely worth a try.

Other beers in the past month have included Dunkelknach, a lager the colour of a stout (brewed with very dark malt), but tasting like a slightly nutty Regal; Aardvark Ale, the filtered and carbonated version of Dragon's Breath Real Ale (try the two side by side sometime), and Cranbrosia, a cranberry lager that combined a subtle cranberry fruitiness with hop, grapefruit and pineapple notes. Within the next week a reprise of Pops's Brew (A Hunny Lager) will be brewed, and at the eighth anniversary of the pub in April, look for a cock ale (more on this beery anachronism in a future column).

Not content with merely brewing the finest beer in Kingston, the Brew Pub is also a centre of brewing knowledge. The pub subscribes to several North American beer magazines, and has a small library of books on the subject. In addition, it is the starting point for trips to other brewing centres (in February there was an excursion to the Hart brewery, and the excellent pub The Swan At Carp), and beer tastings are held on a fairly regular basis, featuring prominent Canadian beer writers and authorities.

Bottom line on the KBC: Go! The beer is great, the staff are knowledgeable, and there is no finer place to have a pint in Kingston.

Sleeman Original Dark

This beer is problematic even before the much-hyped clear bottle gets opened. The label says "Original Dark," but the question has to be asked — original dark what? Is it an ale or a lager? Why don't they tell us? However, putting that problem to the back of our minds, this is a pleasant, if uncomplex beer. The colour is indeed dark — an appealing coppery red, with a moderate, sustained head. The aroma is malty, with some leafy hops. The palate begins dry and malty, proceeding to moderate but pleasant hop, and the slightest hints of fruitiness, in the finish. The dry, crisp character, and lack of fruitiness in the body, say "lager" to me. It is an agreeable beer, but its "darkness" is slightly suspicious. This is not a new flavour for Sleeman by any means, and I think I sense a marketing bandwagon being jumped upon. The ad people have said that "dark" is in, and so a "dark" is brewed, not for the taste, but for the colour. This beer is by no means a bad one, but for a more adventurous, darker beer, try Upper Canada Dark Ale, or Niagara Falls Brewing's Gristone Ale.

Derek & Jaey say: predestination was doomed from the start.

What's on at the Grad Club

The beers are always changing at the Grad Club. The prediction for the week to come (given by the bartender last Tuesday), has these beers on tap: Hart Cream Ale, Niagara Falls Brewing Gristone Ale, Upper Canada Publican's Special Bitter, and Conner's Best Bitter. Go out of your way to give the Gristone a try. In bottles, among others, are Molson Signature Cream Ale and Amber Lager, Double Diamond, Newcastle Brown Ale, Guinness, Smithwick's, Sleeman Original Dark, Samuel Adams Boston Ale and Boston Lager (two fine beers), Niagara Falls Brewing Eisbock and Maple Wheat (both worth a try), as well as two Irish whiskeys and three single malts (distilled from beer, and so worth a mention). A fine selection of beer, with knowledgeable staff, and a convivial atmosphere.

Until next time, always experiment! Never drink the same beer twice in a month. And if you have any questions, comments, or other miscellaneous things to say about good beer, drop off a letter at The Journal, or reach me by e-mail at 3AVHB@QUCDN. Cheers!

FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER When you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by customer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants. Expires March 9/94

Remember
Whopper
Wednesdays
Expires March 9/94

FREE CHICKEN SANDWICH when you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by customer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants. Expires March 9/94

Remember
Whopper
Wednesdays
Expires March 9/94

Don't be left in the dust!
Come join the information highway.

Applications are now available for the following Queen's Journal Editorial Board and Business positions...

Publications Manager	Production Manager and Assistants
News Editor and Assistants	Photography Editor and Assistant
Entertainment Editor and Assistants	Graphics Editor and Assistants
Sports Editor and Assistant	Business Manager
Literary Lapses Editor	Creative Staff Manager
Opinions Editor	Ads Manager
Features Editor	Sales Representative
Misc Editor and Assistant	System/House Manager
Editorial Page Editor

Applications are available from Gabe at the Journal House, 272 Earl St., and are due by 4:00pm on Monday March 14, 1994.
Applications can be handed in to Gabe or Jeff.

If you have any questions about positions or concerns about accessibility, please call us anytime at 545-2800

Don't Forget!

Applications for
The Journal Ed-board and Business Staff are due Monday,
March 14.

THE QUEEN'S
JOURNAL
Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 11 1994 • ISSUE 36 • VOLUME 121

Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul Group
549-3553 549-3561

inside

The Journal

HALF OF TORY CAUCUS VISITS

Federal Progressive Conservative Leader Jean Charest was at Queen's Tuesday afternoon, speaking on the Liberal budget, the PC leadership campaign, and offering his thoughts on the future of his party.

—For story, page 3.

AD FEMINEM

Tuesday was International Women's Day, and this week's feature takes a look at how far women around the world have come—as well as how far we have to go.

—For feature, see page 12.

ON THE RIGHT TRACK

The Queen's track and field team collected a handful of medals at the OUAA/OVIAA Championships.

—For story, see page 21.

EVER HERO OF BUFFALO TOM?

ACE staff reporter Sian Beddoe-Stephens snagged a Buffalo Tom interview before they played at Toronto's Palladium last Friday night.

—Interview, see page 25.

"The demand for a harassment-free environment may inhibit the free exchange of ideas and the debate that are essential to the intellectual vitality of a university."

—Principal David C. Smith, speaking on the Ontario government's zero-tolerance anti-harassment guidelines. For story, see page 5.

Marriott workers vote to strike

Strike possible by March 17 if talks
break down

BY LORI THORLAKSON

The danger of a strike is "very, very real," should negotiations between Marriott and its full and part-time food workers break down, according to union representative Bruce Dodds.

Marriott workers voted Tuesday night to back union strike actions if negotiations end in a stalemate. In a meeting in Carruthers Hall, 76 per cent of full-time and 95 per cent of part-timers voted to strike, if necessary, in support of contract demands.

The workers, represented by Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 229, are seeking pensions, a three per cent cost-of-living clause, job security for 70 full-time workers, and equal pay for 175 part-time workers.

Negotiations between Marriott and full-time workers, who have been without a contract since last April, began last summer, a process that "dragged on and on and on," Dodds said. The negotiations are continuing with the assistance of a conciliator from the Ontario government.

Part-time workers have been in negotiations since early January and the two sides are still a "considerable distance apart," Dodds said.

Marriott workers picket for higher wages and benefits last Friday.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

According to Dodds, full-time Marriott workers currently earn between $11.72 and $12.08 per hour, with most working 30 weeks of the year, none with a company pension. Part-timers average less than $7 per hour with no benefits or pension.

Dodds said it is too early to say when or how a strike may occur. No walk-out date has been set, although full-time workers will be in a legal strike position by March 17 if talks break down, he said.

"If our bargaining goals are not addressed, the basic issues are left and there will be a strike," he said.

Dodds said Marriott should refund students for their pre-paid meals in the event of a strike. "We do not want students on campus to have to pay for long overdue increases in our pensions," he said.

The university also has a role to play in the dispute, Dodds said.

"Queen's sets the food budget, hires the contractor, and has the power to alter the provisions of the contract," he said.

Marriott serves approximately 10,000 meals a day to Queen's students and staff, through a management contract with the university.

Marriott General Manager Jim Fougeret could not be reached for comment.

Queen's students to lose voice at City Hall

BY TARA ROY

An application to Kingston City Council proposes to phase out the City of Kingston-Queen's University Liaison Committee—the only committee at City Hall that a student sits on.

According to Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin, this action will effectively silence student voices at the municipal level. "As of May first, we no longer have a voice at City Hall," she said.

"The AMS hasn't been playing their cards right, and now we're stuck with a bum deal," said Nevin. "[City Hall relations] have not been a priority," she added.

The proposal to phase out the committee is based on former Chief Administrative Officer Frank Collom's report, which sets forth a number of suggestions to streamline Council. Among these was a recommendation to reduce the number of committees operating out of City Hall from 56 to five or six.

Describing Kingston as "very bureaucratic," Nevin said, "I am in favour of making City Hall more efficient, but I'm not in favour of student voices being phased out."

The former liaison committee included the two councillors from Sydenham Ward (which includes the bulk of the student housing area), a representative from Queen's Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams's Office, a staff member of the Queen's Town-Gown Liaison Office and the Queen's Housing Committee, as well as two student representatives—one from the AMS, another from the Graduate Student Society.

Representatives from St. Lawrence College and the Landlords' Association also sat on the board.

"The best thing about [the committee] is that it allows us to discuss our concerns, and have direct input at decisions made at City Hall," said Nevin. "It's basically a communications body that lets our voices be heard," she added.

However, Sydenham Ward Councillor and Committee Chair Jim Neill criticized the liaison committee for not producing results. "I can't remember a report sent to Council for ratification that originated in that body," he said.

Neill said he is "in favour of phasing [the committee] out only if we're able to establish a continued dialogue between students and city staff."

Vice-Principal Williams said, "we've always found it a very useful body. It's a real loss."

City of Kingston Chief Administrative

PLEASE SEE LIAISON ON PAGE 6

Brock plan under fire

AMS calls proposal to charge some education students $10,000 "appalling"

BY JANE MUNDELL

Are entry marks for Brock University's one-year Bachelor of Education program too high for you? No worries—just charge it.

A recent proposal put forth by Brock University will create an additional 50 places in its teacher-education program for anyone willing to fork out a $10,000 admission fee.

That figure is approximately the amount of money received for each of the 350 spaces already existing in the program. It is a combination of funding from the province and of a tuition fee of about $2,300.

The decision has generated controversy on the Brock campus and across the province. Ontario Education Minister Dave Cooke has threatened to cut provincial grants to the university, withdrawing an amount equivalent to the funds that Brock would raise through the project.

Grant Dobson, executive director in the office of external relations at Brock University, said that Brock will be meeting with the minister soon. He hopes each side will listen to the other's concerns.

Dobson said that while the reaction on campus to the decision is split, they have also been receiving a lot of "where do I sign up?" phone calls.

Students who are not accepted into the program at Brock are now heading to the United States and paying $12,000 to $14,000 for teacher-training, said Dobson.

He said the university hopes to improve the Canadian option and "repariate those students."

According to Nicholas Mathieu, the interim editor at the Brock student newspaper, The Brock Press, the administration developed the plan as a result of the high demand for the program.

The result would be a two-tier education system, Mathieu charged, with one level consisting of those who are accepted into the program based on their marks, and the other made up of those who could afford to get in.

Mathieu questioned whether or not students would be able to apply for OSAP (the Ontario Student Assistance Program) if they were paying extra money for their education.

Pete Stuart, president of the Concurrent Education Students' Association at Queen's, said he thinks the plan "is a political thing to call attention to the funding crisis."

He said, "it means there's going to be a certain set of standards to get in unless you have a lot of money, and then you're assured of a spot."

Stuart also suggested that power relationships could develop in class, between those who were accepted into the regular

PLEASE SEE PHILIPS ON PAGE 6

STUDENTS HELPING STUDENTS

The Senate Committee on Student Affairs has recently approved, for the 1994-1995 Academic Year, the creation of Peer Helpers to assist all students (undergraduate, graduate, part-time) from all faculties. If you are interested, applications and information are available at the Rector's Office (JDUC Ground Floor) and at the Senate Office (MacGory B-400).

Peer Helper Terms of Reference:

Peer Helpers are Queen's students from a diversity of backgrounds. They receive training in listening and referral skills and are knowledgeable about the numerous sources of advice and assistance that are available to students. Peer Helpers provide their fellow students with support in problem-solving, by actively listening, helping to clarify issues, and offering non-judgemental feedback.

Peer Helpers are not professionals; rather they

- 1) identify the nature of a student's problem,
- 2) encourage the student to take action when appropriate and explore their alternatives and options, and
- 3) refer the student to the appropriate individual or office that is either responsible for resolving their problem or can assist them in pursuing a grievance.

International Study Centre, Herstmonceux Castle, East Sussex, England

This program, concentrating on European Area Studies, may make the difference for you!

Want To Know More?

To find out more or to obtain an application package see our representative in:

Mackintosh-Corry
Student Street

Monday to Friday until the end of March
or call 545-2815

TRICOLOUR Time is running out ... Get away while you still can on THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS

	DEPARTURES FRIDAY	RETURNS SUNDAY	COST (ONE WAY GST EXTRA)
TORONTO
West Campus	1:55
Vic Hall	2:05	8:00pm	$20.00
JDUC	2:15
MONTREAL
West Campus	2:50
Vic Hall	3:00	5:45pm	$25.00
JDUC	3:10
OTTAWA
West Campus	5:35
Vic Hall	5:45	8:00pm	$16.00
JDUC	5:55
DROP-OFF POINTS	Toronto: Oshawa, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal Montreal: Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal Ottawa: Kanata Town Centre, Carling and Kirkwood, Bus Terminal
PICK-UP POINTS TO RETURN	Toronto: Unions Station (one block west near City Bank Plaza) Montreal: Bus Terminal Ottawa: Bus Terminal

Tickets on sale until 12 noon Friday at the Queen's Box Office
No refunds or exchanges

Looking For The Competitive Edge?

For little more than the cost of a term at home you could

Study Abroad!

Queen's International Study Centre,
Herstmonceux Castle

Are you a second, third or fourth year student wondering what lies beyond graduation? Want to make your university degree more marketable?

Don't Miss This Opportunity!

$6800 (includes tuition, fees, room, board and field trips)

- Learn about the EEC, GATT and other international agreements which affect your future.
- Study art, languages and cultures of selected European countries. Visit their galleries, monuments, and theatres for a first hand look.
- Experience first hand the history and social fabric of Great Britain that only living in a country can teach.

AND

Earn Queen's credits toward your degree

Charest finds the Tory faithful at Queen's

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

Federal Progressive Conservative leader Jean Charest addressed a friendly, overflowing crowd in Watson Hall Tuesday afternoon as part of his bid to rebuild his beleaguered party.

In a speech which dealt largely with the issues affecting youth—including unemployment, education, and the economic future of the country—Charest underlined what he saw as a need to renew outdated social programs.

"We have social programs that, quite frankly, date from another era and another economy," he said. He noted that Canada's economy did not industrialize to any great degree until the 1960's, which left Canada behind in areas of worker training and economic development.

Tackling the subject of the Liberal's February budget, Charest described it as a "no-jobs, more debt, and no-hope budget. With regard to jobs for young people, we don't see a lot of hope coming from it."

In the area of trade, Charest praised the Liberals for passing NAFTA. "How could a country of only 27, 28 million," he asked, "have such a high standard of living if it were not for the fact that we sell to others?"

Reflecting on the PC leadership campaign which saw him lose narrowly to Kim Campbell, Charest noted that some of the reasons which led others to support Campbell led to the election of Jean Chretien and the Liberal Party.

"Charest, you're too young," they said. Then we had the debates and they weren't saying I was too young after that. Then they said, 'we can't support this guy—we've had enough of these guys from Quebec.' Well, guess who's in charge?" Charest asked.

During the question period, one student, who described himself as a former Tory, said that one of the weaknesses in the campaign was a lack of new policy initiatives.

Charest agreed with him, saying decisions were made by those in charge that such policies would not be discussed, even though they had been developed.

A member of the PC club on campus, Andrew Taylor, questioned Charest on whether or not he would reposition the party on the political spectrum. Charest responded that he could not answer the question, explaining that such a discussion would have to occur during the party's rebuilding process.

"He hit the right buttons and I was pretty impressed," Taylor said afterwards. "I was looking for a reason to stay with the party, and I got it."

In speaking with The Journal, Charest said that the first duty of the party is to build a new coalition. "Whether that means going right or left or whatever is really a debate that has to happen at the grassroots level."

Second-year economics student Harry Cho asked Charest if the party would be including policies giving more rights to same-sex couples. Charest responded by saying that extending the rights would be "unmanageable from a bureaucratic point of view."

He went on to say that he was "sceptical" that any useful changes could be legislated in the area. He recognized that coming to such a conclusion was dangerous, but added that he was not "trying to make a judgement."

The man who would be king* admires the Queen's castle. Jean Charest mingles campaign-style in Mac-Corry.

BRENT DAVIS

Death in the Hall: Vids closes permanently

AMS Board of Directors eliminates floundering student service

BY SHARON WILSON

After only one year in operation, the doors to Vids in the Hall are closing forever.

In a Board of Directors meeting last Wednesday, the Alma Mater Society passed a motion to eliminate the ailing video service.

Administrative Services Director Stephanie Taylor said the service's deficit is projected to be at least $53,000.

Although sales at the video store have improved in second term as a result of price specials and a reduced stock, Vids Manager Sue Munro said, "it was not feasible to have it open another year."

Sales for the month of February totalled $3,300, a substantial increase from September, when sales were about a third of that total, Taylor said.

Various alternative avenues to allow the store to remain operational were examined by both Taylor and Munro. However, even the best-case scenario—with Vids relying on volunteer workers—entailed a $15,000 loss, Taylor said.

This option was quickly abandoned on the basis that it would be unfair for students to work for a revenue-based service on a volunteer basis, Taylor said.

Incoming Vice-President (Operations) Kevin Rex said the $53,000 loss from Vids in the Hall will not have any effect on the operation of other AMS services in the future. The loss, he said, will be absorbed by the AMS unallocated funds account.

Taylor attributed Vids's financial difficulties to the inadequate feasibility studies carried out by last year's AMS.

To prevent similar problems from recurring, Munro and Taylor are working to amend the bylaws of the AMS; they would like the bylaws to require strict feasibility standards for new services.

The store will close permanently on April 30, and all leased video stock and equipment in the store will be returned to suppliers. When asked what will be filling the vacant spot in the John Deutsch University Centre next year, Taylor said that although there has been speculation on a variety of ideas, no final decision has been made.

Trustees talk tuition

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

Tuition increases, student service fees, and university accountability were all major topics for discussion at last weekend's Board of Trustees meeting and retreat.

Trustees of the cash-strapped university focused their discussion around the Finance Committee's Revenue Enhancement Task Force Report.

The report's first recommendation is to match the Ontario government's maximum allowable tuition increase, expected to be announced in the coming days.

Discussing the Revenue Task Force's report, Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips said "the recommendations weren't terribly imaginative." Simply hiking tuition is not, in her mind, good enough.

Philips wants guarantees that if tuition is raised, measures will be taken by the university to improve student aid. "What if they make a maximum of 15 per cent [increase] and cut out all of student aid?" she asked.

Another financing option being looked at is a "fee for services" plan, which would target a long list of services which most students take for granted. Some of these areas include intercollegiate and intramural athletics, health services, counselling, and career planning.

Rector David Baar downplayed the discussion of service fees. "They're not saying 'do it,'" he said, "just 'take a look at it.'"

On the issue of university accountability, Philips also pushed for a more effective student voice on the Board of Trustees. Presently, the only student vote is held by the rector, which is a three-year elected position. The AMS executive attends all board meetings, but lacks the power to move motions or vote.

in order to have an effective student voice.

Philips also underlined the problem of continuity, saying that the board deals with a new AMS executive every year. She said fears were raised by board members that creating new positions for students would require opening up the university's Royal Charter, which could lead to a drastic overhaul of university procedures at a time when work needs to be done in other areas.

Other issues discussed included approval of the new Bio-Sciences Complex and an occupational health and safety report.

The Board of Trustees is made up of various members of administration and alumni, including such notables as The Globe and Mail's national affairs columnist Jeffrey Simpson. It plays a role in the long-term planning of the university, overseeing endowments and investments, fundraising, and approving appointments and the university's operating budget.

MUSLIMS TO CELEBRATE EID-UL-FITR

On March 13 or 14 (subject to moon sighting confirmation) the local Muslim community will celebrate Eid-ul-Fitr, the Festival of Fast-Breaking. The event marks the completion of Ramadan, the month of fasting for Muslims. Prayers will be held in the morning, and a dinner will be held at 6 p.m. in Wallace Hall of the JDUC.

MAHONES RELEASE PARTY

Kingston's own Mahones will celebrate St. Patrick's Day this year with the release of their debut CD, Draggin' The Days.

The Celtic punk band will perform at various venues on March 17: The Toucan Pub (where the band first performed exactly four years before) at 3 p.m., the House of Sounds afterwards, and Alfie's Pub at night.

FORMER AMS PREZ NAMED ALUMNI AFFAIRS DIRECTOR

Former Alma Mater Society President Innes van Nostrand has been named director of Alumni Affairs. Van Nostrand, who graduated from Science '86 in geological engineering, received both the Engineering Society Award and the Tricolour Award for his contributions to Queen's. As well as being AMS president, Van Nostrand initiated the Student Team on Alumni Relations. Van Nostrand has been acting director of the department for the past 14 months.

QMA COMPETITION

The Queen's Marketing Association will be holding an advertising competition this Saturday. The finalists—including students from various faculties—will compete for a cash prize of $300, with secondary prizes to boot. Queen's profits will judge the event, on the basis of presentation style and content. The competition will take place at Dunning Conference Room, 12:30 p.m. on Saturday—refreshments will be provided.

LIVE MUSIC LOVERS' WEEKEND

There's more to the Kingston music scene than The Tragically Hip! The 1994 Live Music Lovers' Weekend will take place March 26-27, and will feature the best of Kingston-area rock, folk, country, jazz, classical, concert, and children's music. Over 850 musicians will participate in close to 160 showcase performances, taking place at ten "bandstands" around Kingston. An $8 pass will let you visit any of the bandstands for the weekend, and organizers will provide a free shuttle-bus between bandstands. For more information, contact 545-1408.

EUROPE CANADA ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance
- Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World "Bare Bones"	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399
London	from 379	Round World via South Pacific	from 2399
Rome	from 629
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

Queen's Symphonic Band and Clarinet Choir (directed by Gordon Craig)
and
Queen's Flute Choir
(directed by Donelda Hunter)

Music by Khachaturian, Cesarini, Berstein, and Gliere.

Monday, March 14, 1994 - 8:00 p.m.
McArthur Auditorium
Admission: $6 regular, $3 students/senior Quality, Comfort, Care

EYEWEAR.
Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD.
324 King St. E. Kingston (613) 549-2020
DOWNTOWN ON THE MARKET SQUARE
& COMPLETE CONTACT LENS SERVICE.

Sunday, March 13th
COME OUT 1:00 - 3:30

DANCE FOR HEART

2 1/2 HOURS OF FITNESS AND FUN TO RAISE MONEY FOR

The HEART and STROKE FOUNDATION with Special Guest speaker
Dr. Robert Ross

Refreshments served during breaks and door prizes will be given out.

Pledge forms available at THE CORE and the JDUC INFOBANK.

'94s party in style

Some students register "formal" complaints

BY DAVE COLEMAN

Last Saturday night, '94 artecs basked in the twilight of their university careers at the graduating formal.

About 1,350 guests—dressed to the nines and raring to party—had a variety of rooms to explore under the theme of "Elegance by Twilight" at the Portsmouth Olympic Harbour.

Essentially a Victorian concept, some highlights included a garden scene with goldfish in a circular pond, and period dresses set up in a window shop facade. Murals covered every inch of the massive venue and some clever lighting added atmosphere.

"It was a much more organized formal than last year," said Sperry Chapin, vice-president of Arts '94. Queen's Constables and First Aid worked smoothly, moving people whose eyes were too big for their kidneys into the aptly-named Sick Room.

While guests enjoyed the evening, many qualified their experience. "It's too big and disjointed," said Kate Diakiv, an Arts '94 student. "And the front hall looked like Fruit Loops barf."

Ariane Stren was also critical of the decorations. "So many murals are not necessary. They could have used lights and balloons. It was too gaudy, with tissue paper explosions all over the place," Stren said. Three musical genres were available at the formal: Jerome Poon Ting, popularly known as DJ Sugar, spun out dance music in the enormous main area. The Mahones rocked through their distinctive Irish repertoire, and upstairs The Blue Nites, a jazz ensemble, provided something for the cultured taste.

Some students were concerned with the amount of waste. "Everything there was disposable," said Erica Thompson, Arts '93. Thompson was particularly troubled by the disposable cups. "One table must have had 40 cups left on it. It's too bad no remedial strategies were adopted."

Decorations were also criticized for environmental reasons. "I would have liked balloons and streamers, but people talk about the tradition, the themes," Chapin said. "It's very extravagant for the times."

The Formal Committee designated $12,712 of its $79,215 budget to decorations. $2,838 of that went to mural paper which was thrown away at the end of the night.

Arts '95 President Jason Kenemy, who was in charge of the take-down after the formal, said that although the murals were thrown out, everything else that could be saved or recycled was not. "If things can reasonably be reused, it's good from a financial, as well as an environmental standpoint," Kenemy said. He said all of the wood framing on which the murals were hung was kept, and all of the bottles were recycled.

ASUS ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

March 24th, 1994

- All members of the Society:
- may be present at any Society Annual Meeting;
 - may speak to any motion under consideration;
 - may move or second motions;
 - may exercise their voting privileges on any motion.

to be held in rm 201, Kingston Hall at 7:00pm

All Undergraduate Arts & Science students are encouraged to attend!

CUSTOMIZED
WAG zip polo Sweatsuits 100% Cotton $29.95
OUTFITTING COMPANY
MADE IN CANADA SINCE 1988
ORIGINAL BRAND
Tel: 547-0864

LET'S WING IT
FOOD & FLICKS
573 PRINCESS ST
549-1842

FREE MOVIE RENTAL (min $10.00 order)
FREE CITY DELIVERY (min $10.00 order)
15% DISCOUNT ON TAKE-OUTS

$1.00 OFF Any order of wings or ribs with this coupon
EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

FREE 1/2 lb of Wings With Any Order 2 lb or more with this coupon
EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

*NEW DALLAS WINGS HOTI HOTI HOTI. A REAL WINNER!

Senate votes on Med School funding, harassment framework

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

Last Thursday, the Queen's University Senate held a special meeting in Richardson Hall to discuss the Alternative Funding Plan (AFP) for the Faculty of Medicine, and the provincial government's proposal for zero-tolerance of harassment and discrimination.

The AFP is a direct result of the funding crisis currently being experienced by the Faculty of Medicine. It is an agreement between the faculty and the Ontario Ministry of Health, the clinicians' association, and three local hospitals, which converts four current sources of funding into one envelope.

This pool of funds will be guaranteed for three years against changes in the Ontario Health Insurance Plan budget.

The proposed plan was approved by the Senate Budget Review Committee, which was chaired by Raymond de Souza.

De Souza described the AFP as "an extraordinary breakthrough in financing."

Dean of Medicine Dr. Duncan Sinclair proudly referred to the plan as "a precedent-setting approach."

Sinclair said, "the problem of expenditures that are constant and a flow of revenue that is diminishing is common among North American medical schools. The constraints of the health care system are not unique to Queen's."

The Medical School's primary objectives of education, research and clinical service will remain the same with the passage of the AFP.

Besides the AFP, the Senate discussed the proposed policy of zero-tolerance of harassment and discrimination at Ontario universities. The policy framework is expected to cover not only harassment, discrimination and sexual harassment, but also the concept of a negative learning environment or climate.

Dr. Gerald Morris, the head of biology, wondered about the implications of singling out the effects of a negative academic environment in the policy framework. As an example, he questioned the results of teaching the theory of evolution to creationist students.

The policy framework also raised the issue of university autonomy versus the government's power. Principal David Smith declared, "Queen's is independent because of our vigilance," although he admitted, "the government holds enormous financial power."

The Senate voted that the university's Human Rights Office will send the government a description of current harassment and discrimination policies and education programs at Queen's.

The provincial government's Policy Framework on Harassment and Discrimination has created controversy at other Ontario universities. However, students at Queen's have been less concerned.

In February, Principal Smith made a statement to the Senate expressing his concerns that "the demand for a harassment-free environment may inhibit the free exchange of ideas and the debate that are essential to the intellectual vitality of a university."

The Senate ended by agreeing that free speech cannot be inhibited, but any anti-harassment or discrimination policies are essentially positive.

Grant of Dideri 547-Pool

Assembly Report

BY JASON BENNETT

Last week's Alma Mater Society Assembly witnessed almost eight full hours of lively debate on key student issues ranging from resolutions on the upcoming spring referendum to the Educating Students on Substances honoraria fiasco.

ESOS ERROR EXPOSED

Approximately five of the eight hours spent in the McLaughlin Room consisted of heated debate on the Educating Students on Substances issue, which pitted program Director Meisha Hunter against the AMS Executive.

The source of the problem lies in an AMS decision over the summer to reduce the total payment to the director from about $3,000 to $1,400. In the end, Hunter was able to make up the difference by receiving $1,500 from the Work Bursary Program, but not without a great deal of uncertainty and confusion.

Hunter requested restitution in the amount of $1,400 in "unpaid" salary as director of the program and $500 for what she called, "the anxiety, financial uncertainty, and frustration which the AMS Council... has caused me."

Unable to find an informal resolution through the Internal Affairs Commission, Hunter decided to bring the matter to Assembly.

The body decided to make the AMS Executive repay Work Bursary $1,500, leaving Hunter's personal damages restitution in the hands of an independent arbitrator whose decision will be binding.

The prolonged debate, which consisted of a series of negotiations and proposed resolutions, was highly emotional, particularly for Hunter. A recess was required at one point when Hunter was unable to continue answering a question.

Details on the appointment of an arbitrator were not determined—it is unclear who will be selected, from which faculty or school the arbitrator will be drawn, when arbitration is to begin and conclude, and who, if anyone, will pay for it.

Law School Society representative Mike Henry, questioning the AMS's hiring practices, asked, "does the AMS generally hire persons under deliberately vague terms?"

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Representative Mike Asseltine declared that "Meisha Hunter was given a raw deal."

In a similar vein ASUS Representative Michael Carnegie drew into question "the ability of the AMS to remedy wrongs for which it is directly responsible."

Despite these accusations, Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson insisted that "there was absolutely no malicious intent involved whatsoever." Minerson added that "it is unfortunate that the ESOS program and all of Ms. Hunter's hard work will be remembered for this [misunderstanding]."

WHERE ARE THE WHAT'S NEXTS?

Eric Jabal, AMS media services director, questioned the Main Campus Residents' Council as to the whereabouts of 350 copies of the "What's Next" student planner which he provided to the MCRS, and the money which should have been forwarded to the AMS upon their sale.

Jabal said that he had received only $150, representing the sale of just 60 copies of the agenda book. The MCRS was given 700 copies of "What's Next" to sell on consignment, Jabal said, and cannot account for the missing texts or the missing money.

MCRS President Warren Flannery responded by saying, "negotiations are ongoing and a speedy resolution is sought by the MCRS too."

ART REQUEST OENIO

Organizers of the student-operated art gallery planned for Stauffer Library requested that a question be added to the spring referendum asking students to approve a mandatory (non-opt-outable) $1.50 student interest fee for next year.

However, The Student Art Gallery Club's request for a mandatory fee was rejected by Assembly. The group now has the option of seeking 600 signatures to add the question in the form they desire.

Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin, echoing the sentiments of other Assembly members, insisted that the group would "have much more success with an opt-outable question on the referendum."

PASTA, STEAKS and GOURMET PIZZA

OUZERI
PASTA & STEAKS

Excellent Food
Reasonable Prices
Excellent Service

OPENING INTRODUCTORY GIFT CERTIFICATE

$5.00 Gift Certificate on two or more entrees 1 coupon per table

Good until April 30, 1994

250 Ontario St.
546-2824
Beside Minos Restaurant

EDUCATION OFFICER

Nevin warned that "any type of mandatory student-interest fee would be considerably unpopular among students" and that the group should "proceed cautiously" if they want any money from students at all.

VIDS TO CLOSE ON APRIL FOOL'S DAY

The financially troubled Vids in the Hall video rental store in the John Deutsch University Centre will close for business as of April 1st. The announcement was made to Assembly by the AMS Board of Directors Chair Grant Hughes.

Unable to comment on possible implications, Faculty of Education representative Caroline Jones announced a $2 million shortfall in funding for the faculty for this year. She stated that students are awaiting further information from the administration.

OF NOTE...

Next year's AMS will be somewhat slimmer in its middle management. Grant Hughes said the AMS would hire two rather than three service directors next year.

BioSciences Complex construction to begin next year

BY JASON BENNETT

A new biological sciences complex to be located at Arch and Deacon streets will begin construction as early as the summer of 1995, says Dr. Tom Williams, vice-principal (operations and university relations).

The construction of the long-awaited complex will occur in phases over a three-year period. The cost of the building is projected to be around $34 million, with funding coming from the university, the City of Kingston, government, and industry.

Because the complex is being erected in phases, no interference with regular instruction is anticipated. Earl Hall will undergo some restructuring, but will remain significantly intact. "Essentially," explained Williams, "we're wrapping a new building around an old building."

The Toronto firm of Shore, Tilbe, Irwin & Partners won the open design competition sponsored by the university. "The design is sensitive to the quickly changing world of science education," said Chief Architect Stanford Downey, "but also sensitive to the needs of both students and the community."

Features of the complex include a 500-seat lecture theatre, a state-of-the-art nuclear magnetic resonator, and an open service type area and meeting place similar to that in Mackintosh-Corry Hall.

Williams promised that "the BioSciences Complex will attract students of all faculties, but will particularly service those in the university's south-east section who are without a central gathering place."

"Essentially, we're wrapping a new building around an old building."
-Dr. Tom Williams, VP (operations and university relations)

The complex will be integrated into the existing campus security system, but will also boast wide corridors, excellent lighting, and large windows in all labs, offices, and hallways.

In addition to safety design, Williams stressed that "architectural continuity was a major concern of the selection committee. The new building will be very much in keeping with the spirit and tradition of the Queen's campus."

Liaison committee to be phased out

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

Officer John Morand said the City doesn't want to lose the voice of students.

The new five or six "omnibus committees" will be strictly policy-making bodies, with only Council members sitting on them.

"There's no use having committees just to have committees," Morand said.

Under the new system, students will be able to petition Council directly, Morand said. "We are going to maintain the [Kingston-Queen's Liaison Committee] under a different guise," he added.

For Nevin, the loss of the liaison committee means that students will be "disembodied as a group." She accused the university administration of working against student interests by supporting the proposal.

Nevin said Tom Morrow, executive assistant to Vice-Principal Williams, was in favour of phasing out the committee. "He spoke to eliminate it. He was doing his job [because the administration] can get what they need done elsewhere," she said.

"The students and the university are working against each other—[the administration] should've been more sensitive to our position on the committee," Nevin said.

However, Morrow said he did not support the elimination of the committee. "I have not and am not an advocate of that committee going away. I'm surprised that someone would say that I'm not in support of it. I don't know where [Nevin] heard that. She did not hear it from me."

Morrow described the committee as "a key communication vehicle that needs to exist. I feel strongly that the committee should be there."

He also stressed that he objects strongly to the proposal, "and we will continue to," he added. "They [Council] seem to have decided unilaterally that [the committee] is going to go away," Morrow said.

Both Williams and Morrow said Queen's could establish its own linking committee. Neill feels that students will be asked to sit on task-force committees that will focus on a single issue.

"It wouldn't be a successful committee unless it included students and members of the community," Neill said.

"I have a guarded optimism that once we've gone through some growing pains, [the restructuring] will make us more accountable to the community," said Neill. "The one concern I do have, is who sets the agenda for the task forces," he added.

Williams said that because one channel of communication has been lost, "students are clearly going to have to develop other ways, but students have far more political power than they realize."

Nevin suggested that "next year's [AMS] executive is going to have to make sure that someone is [at City Hall], fighting to get our voices heard."

You could Win one of five $1,000 grand prizes

IN THE Kraft Dinner CAMPUS CONNECTION Recipe Contest.

CALL 1-800-26-KRAFT

AND

GIVE a recipe! You might be a grand prize winner!

"The first 300 qualifying recipe entrants will receive a FREE case of New KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese!"

There will be one winner selected for each of these 5 categories:

1. Best Mealtime Recipe
2. Best Snacktime Recipe
3. Best Recipe (by an individual)
4. Best Recipe (by a group)
5. "Healthiest" Recipe

Remember, delicious, easy-to-make recipes and creative recordings get extra marks!

To save time while studying I make my delicious "Speedy Tuna Dinner". While the KD's cooking I put 1 cup of frozen peas in a colander. Then I put the boiling water from the noodles over the peas to thaw. Add in 1 can of tuna, the peas & some Italian seasonings to your KD and voilà! Try it with new White Cheddar too!

Ima Keener - Noodle U

Joe Koal - Cheddar College

Making "Jammin' Joe's Chili Beef Dinner" takes no time. I cook 1/2 lb. of ground beef in a frying pan and add it to a pot of KD along with 1 hotter the better! Try that new Kraft Cheese & Tomato flavour for extra tomato taste!

5. Each of the first 300 eligible entrants will receive 1 case (24 packages) of KRAFT White Cheddar Macaroni & Cheese with an approximate retail value of $24.00. One grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best recipe selected in each of the 5 categories.
6. Selected recipe entrants and winners of the early bird prizes will be required to sign a standard declaration and release form to confirm compliance with the official rules and regulations, and acceptance of the prize as awarded. This contest is only open to residents of Canada who are currently enrolled in a recognized Canadian university, college or other post-secondary educational institution. Employees of KGFC, its affiliated companies, advertising and promotional agencies, and the independent judging organization, and all persons residing in their respective households, are ineligible.
7. All decisions of the judges are final. The chances of winning will depend on the number of eligible entries and the quality of recipes received. This contest is subject to all applicable federal, provincial and municipal laws. Only one grand prize per person or group will be awarded.
8. All recorded entries become the property of KGFC, 95 Mainfield Drive, Don Mills, Ontario, M3B 3L6, and no correspondence will be entered into except with the selected finalists, who will be notified by mail or telephone. By entering this contest, entrants consent to the use of photographs and/or recipes, without compensation, in future publicity and/or publication carried out by KGFC in connection with the contest.
9. KGFC, with the consent of the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux (Quebec), reserves the right to cancel or suspend this contest in the event of any printing or administrative error. Quebec residents may submit any litigation respecting the conduct of this contest and the awarding of any prizes to the Régie des alcools, des courses et des jeux.

CALL and GET a recipe!
Listen to what other students are making with KRAFT DINNER!
1-800-26-KRAFT

Registered Trade-mark of Kraft General Foods Canada Inc.

SUMMER SESSION 1994

A selection of day and evening courses in arts, social sciences, science, and computer science, at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

itv courses in Metro Ottawa on cable channel 53 or at a distance by videocassette.

Specialized Summer Schools in Criminal Justice and Social Policy, and Political Economy.

For a copy of the 1994 Summer Supplement, write to the School of Continuing Education, Room 302, Robertson Hall, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1S 5B6.

Telephone: (613) 788-3500

Philips reacts to Brock proposal

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

program and those who paid the higher fee.

"You won't need experience, you'll just need money. If you were good enough to get in by regular standards, it wouldn't be an issue," he said.

Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips called the project "appalling," and questioned how "two different classes that experience the same educational program can pay entirely different fees."

"How can they justify people buying their way in? Will they compromise academic standards for financial clout?" she asked. Dobson said that such factors were reviewed in the six months before the project was proposed, and that the administration is convinced that academic standards will be maintained.

He said that having students in the same program pay different fees is nothing new, since international students at the school already pay a higher fee.

The decision to implement the project took many by surprise, as the motion had already been defeated by members of the Faculty of Education and by the Senate.

It was then brought to the Board of Trustees who voted in favour of the project by a 10-7 vote, Mathieu said. The proposal was not even on the meeting agenda, and was presented as "other business."

Mathieu said he did not "understand why the Board of Trustees would override the two other bodies," and he imagined that "they will have to reconsider because of the attention the proposal has been getting."

With files from The Globe and Mail.

WORK IN BRITAIN THIS SUMMER

For more information, please contact:

TRAVEL CUTS
The Travel Company Of The Canadian Federation of Students
Call toll free: 1-800-667-CUTS (2887)

SHOW THIS COUPON FOR FREE POOL
PAY FOR ONLY HALF THE TIME YOU PLAY AT THE QCLUB (2nd FLOOR JDUC)

* VALID FROM MARCH 11th TO MARCH 18th, 1994 * ONE COUPON PER VISIT

Editorial

Ward system hurts students

Once again the City of Kingston has clearly illustrated its attitude toward Queen's students.

And once again they have made it clear to us that, as citizens — in the democratic sense of the word, we are second-class.

Last summer, Queen's professor Frank Collom was commissioned by the City of Kingston to draw up a report designed to streamline City Hall's operations. Among other things, his report recommended that the City restructure its ward system.

In the revamped system, which was just approved by the Ontario Municipal Board, the City of Kingston gains three wards and loses four councillors, resulting in a one-ward, one-councillor system.

Seems fair? Look again.

This is more than a question of fairness. This is a question of representative democracy; more accurately, a look at its decline.

The smallest of the ten wards will have 3,456 eligible voters. The largest of the ten wards will have 8,620 eligible voters. Not surprisingly, the largest ward is ours.

All Sydenham ward residents should be upset for at least one reason. If you live in any other ward, for numerical reasons alone your voice means more.

The one councillor responsible to Sydenham ward is responsible to more than twice as many voters as the councillor for Kingscourt, the smallest ward. Twice as many!

In a representative democracy there is something clearly wrong with this picture.

In the Whig-Standard, Ontario Municipal Board member Ted Yao described Sydenham as a "historic ward whose numbers are distorted by students who rarely vote."

On this basis he sided with the city and voted to approve the new ward system, which was just approved by the OMB. (It is interesting to note that former Kingston Mayor Helen Cooper is now in the Chair of the OMB.)

Because students rarely vote, students deserve to receive less of a voice in our municipal system? We at The Journal did not know and were surprised to discover that that's the way representative democracies work.

Sydenham ward is inhabited by 80 per cent students and 20 per cent residents.

Thus, if motivated, students will have the power to swing a vote. This has some Sydenham residents running scared.

The Whig-Standard, in citing some of the complaints made by critics of the new system, said "Sydenham residents run a greater risk of electing a student." They are worried that with the majority of student voters in Sydenham ward, their interests will be subverted to student concerns.

Not likely. First of all, when have student concerns been recognized with sincerity in our City Hall? Sad as it is, when it comes to municipal issues, the real political activists in this city are the permanent residents. Permanent residents are able to more easily mobilize to have their concerns addressed in the political arena.

Students, because of the transient nature of our population, are not afforded this "luxury." However, it is exactly this transient nature that is used against students.

Most students do not vote in municipal elections, but that does not mean our vote should mean any less. Just because we live here for three to five or six years does not mean our vote should mean any less. And when we do vote, we vote not just for a student (if a student is running), but for the candidate who best represents our concerns.

Having a concentrated electorate may, at first glance, seem like an advantage. However, the disparity in ward size clearly puts student concerns at a disadvantage. A smaller ward would result in substantial student representation in at least two wards — thereby (potentially) increasing student input at City Hall, calming permanent resident concerns, and equalizing the voting system.

Another factor of the Collom report calls for the dissolution of the City of Kingston-Queen's University Liaison Committee, the only committee at City Hall that a student sits on.

Although the committee has been criticized for its lack of productivity, its dissolution (gradual as it may be) far from results in a more productive situation. Students would end up with nothing.

Sydenham might be a historic ward. Definitely it represents communities within communities. Under this new system, Sydenham residents will be forced to compete for access to the political system.

A population based ward system will not solve all of Kingston's problems. But neither will reducing the electoral power of 8,620 people. By reducing the voice of all citizens in Sydenham, the City of Kingston is doing a great disservice not just to students but to a number of other communities as well.

Jeff Gray wants all possible editorial board and business office keepers to have their applications in on Monday by 4:30 p.m. If you don't have one yet, pick one up today at The Journal house at 272 Earl Street. Experience is not required!

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Sally MacWhirter

PUBLICATIONS MANAGER
David Pavao

NEWS EDITOR
Jeff Gray

PRODUCTION MANAGER
Colin Ho

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Douglas MacGregor

ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Rob Furse

FEATURES EDITOR
Alison Massmann

OPINIONS EDITOR
Karen Hall

SPORTS EDITOR
Joel Sutherland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Joey deVilla

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
Marka Glickman

MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR
Joey deVilla

LITERARY LAPSES EDITOR
Megan Nichols

ASSISTANT NEWS

Brad Elder
Brock Martland
Lori Thorkelson

ASSISTANT PRODUCTION
Adrienne Down

ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT
Ryan P. Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens

ASSISTANT SPORTS
Justin McKellar

ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY
Derek Yarnell

ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSES
Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Ritchie

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT
Gabriele King

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Andrew Nielsen

CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER
Alex Harner

SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Flora Macaulay

ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Stuart Kedwell

HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER
David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 11, 1994 • Issue 35 • Volume 121

The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents © 1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of The Journal.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ.

Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Fax: 613-545-6278
Internet e-mail: journal@qucqn.queensu.ca

Circulation 10,000
Issue 36 will be published on Friday, March 18, 1994.

CONTRIBUTORS

Tricia Bauman, Jason Bennett, Jill Boyd, Jenn Brayton, Jaime Maris deCastelli, Lisa Chen-Wing, Dave Coleman, Ron Connane, Brent Davis, Frank Dixon, Brian Durmo, Clare Fielding, Heather Katherine Grace, Elizabeth Ireland, Yodit Roche Johnson, Bryan Lambere, David Leach, Johnathan Leigh, Jane Mundell, Chris Price, Tara Roy, Sean Saraka, Katie Triggs, Sharon Wilson, Chris Zsbel.

ONE DAY AT "ANIMAL RESEARCH, INC. ..."

Tricolour: not worth the wait

The Tricolour yearbook had it's problems this year. There were suggestions of internal conflict and the arrival date was continually extended. Certainly with an extra six full months, the Tricolour would astound us all, we thought.

Well, not quite. The editor-in-chief of the yearbook used his back page wisely and asked Queen's students to be the judge of all his hard work.

Egged on by his claim of being "overqualified," we at The Journal decided to take him up on the offer. Aesthetically, the yearbook is far from visually inspiring. But we were prepared to look beyond the all-blue facade, for you can't judge a book by its cover. Except maybe in this case.

The lay-out and font selection in the early pages makes reading the articles extremely laborious. One should not get eye-strain while flipping through their yearbook.

Upon reading some of the articles, one is often reminded of the popular "chase your own adventure" novels as readers are asked to search for the remainder of stories hidden elsewhere in the book. This adventure even includes deja vu, as one article involving swimming was deemed important enough to be included twice.

To the credit of the editorial staff at the Tricolour, they have admirably included sections devoted to homosexual issues, racial issues and issues involving women. Unfortunately, the topic of sex, pornography and erotica seems to have had a greater influence in the creation of the yearbook. Robert Yee claims to have included such topics to illustrate diversity on campus—how the preoccupation with sex illustrates that, we are not sure.

If the yearbook is supposed to represent the campus's diversity, then why the myriad Merry Christmases? Not to be overly politically correct, but kids, can you say "hyponotical?"

The editorial staff felt it necessary to offer their opinion on this very topic of political correctness—how it is often taken too far but is justified by the "free speech" claim. Critical of those who get on their "high horses whenever the opportunity presents itself," the editorial staff should follow their own advice, and dismount.

It also appears that Mr. Yee used his editorial space to continually mention the fact that his old house mates owe him money. While this is obviously a concern for him, it seems that the university yearbook is not the place to immortalize personal domestic disputes.

Having struggled through the events section of the yearbook, one is relieved of the confusing collage design and is presented with orderly rows of pictures. But if you think your work is done—think again.

The names do not correspond with the graduate pictures, which forces one to count down the names in order to match them up with the proper picture. It is unfortunate that the editorial staff chose the Queen's University Tricolour yearbook as a personal forum. The poor lay-out is definitely annoying. But if you look on the bright side, the 1992-93 Tricolour is the first audience participation yearbook Queen's has ever had.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

GORDON: SAFE?

DEAR EDITOR,
I am a first year student living in Gordon-Brockington House who, until recently, felt comfortable and secure in residence. Unfortunately, three incidents have occurred in the past few weeks which have jeopardized the safety of many female residents.

During the week just before and after Reading Week, an unwanted and unknown male was caught looking at a female in the women's showers. It was only after the second incident had occurred that signs were posted in the residence to officially announce the nature of the events which had been happening. It was at this time which the third incident was reported, since the female had been apprehensive about reporting it before. The signs were posted on Mar. 1 and a meeting with the students to discuss the issue was not held until Mar. 6. The purpose of the meeting was to decide whether a lock system or a code system should be installed in the wash-room doors, either of which would take a minimum of ten days to implement. At this time, I asked the Brockington Residence Coordinator what was going to be done in the mean time to ensure the safety of many frightened females. I was extremely disappointed and angry to be told that nothing was going to be done. The only piece of advice we were given was to shower in groups, something which is not always easy to do. Once classes begin at 8:30 a.m., there is hardly anyone left on the floor to go to the shower with.

Although the installation of locks will increase the safety of the female residents, what are we supposed to do until they are put in? I do not think the residence administration truly understands the fear and anxiety that many females have about these incidents. This is our home, a place where everyone should feel comfortable and secure. Instead, many females and males are concerned and apprehensive about the blatant invasion of privacy that females have experienced in the showers. It is my understanding that one of the mandates of all residences is to ensure a safe and secure environment. This is one mandate which the administration is not adequately fulfilling. No one should feel nervous and scared to do something as private as taking a shower. It seems interesting to me that during times when it is feared that the students will be rowdy or cause damage, residence officials will bring in student constables without a second thought. But now that a real issue of safety is affecting numerous people, little action is being taken. After the third incident of this kind, the administration should have implemented a plan to ensure the security of its female residents. I realize that something like student constables may be financially impossible, therefore some sort of volunteer system to watch the female washrooms should have been developed until the permanent plans were completed. Unless some sort of action is taken before the locks are installed, then many females will be living in this residence in a state of fear and anxiety, something which no one should feel in their own home. —KRISTEN KORHONEN, ARTSCI '97 shared by over 340 people? Perhaps if people had been alerted, the second occurrence, two weeks later, might not have occurred. After the second occurrence, it was a day before residents were informed about it, and six days before a key system on the wash-room doors was proposed. The problem? For the six days after the second incident and for the 10 days before the locks go in, the women have been and will remain in fear of their security in the showers. No action has been taken to improve the security there in the interim. There are women who are so scared that they grab their razors if they hear a noise in another part of the bathroom. No one should have to be that afraid in their own home! But again nothing is being done about it.

The biggest failure of the residence system was the safety audit of residences performed in Orientation Week. What did this accomplish? The residents were made to fear their home, then reassured that their concerns would be acted on. The residents pointed out many areas of concern, including the discomfort they felt in the showers. Enough people were concerned about the showers that Residence Life considered the suggestion of putting locks on the door to the shower room, then they tabled the idea. The lighting on Leonard Field is the only improvement that has been seen in the works for over a year. The residence administration has performed poorly in their response to this incident. Perhaps it's time to review not only the procedures for handling crises, but also the people who create and administer those policies. —CRAIG JONES, GORDON HOUSE PRESIDENT

RES ADMIN FAILS STUDENTS

THE EDITOR,

A recent series of incidents in Brockington and Gordon House residences has left many women there feeling scared and threatened, and most of the men fearing for the safety of their close friends. The events comprised of at least three separate occurrences of an unwanted male being present in the women's wash-room, and in two of those incidents he was in the shower area looking at the women. As a male, I can't imagine the terror of the experience, or the fear most women now have when they go to the showers. I can only worry about the comfort of my friends and be angry at the way the residence system has failed them. There have been at least three actions, or rather inactions, on the part of the Residence Life Office that have led to the crisis situation which now exists. The first reported sighting of a male in the shower area of the women's washroom occurred about a week before reading week. The only people who were aware of it were people on the girl's floor and Residence Life. Gordon and Brockington Houses share the same key and it has been proven to be easily accessible to non-residents. Why wouldn't residents have been informed that a pervert is wandering around a building

TRACK DISPUTE CONTINUES

THE EDITOR,

Anyone reading the recent letters and articles in The Queen's Journal by Messrs. Joyce, Lund and Dixon must wonder why Dr. Gavin Reid and the other senior (Athletics) administrators have allowed this dispute to fester for 11 months without a satisfactory resolution in sight. This matter has now become a source of public embarrassment to the alumni, students, administration and friends of the Univer-

talking

If you could be any super hero, which would you be and why?

"The Greatest American Hero because he had nice curly hair and a cool theme song." TRACEY SWORD, ARTS '97

"Wyllie Coyote. Lifetime supply of ACME products." HENK KUCHLEIN, ARTS '94

"Mighty Mouse because good things come in small packages." SAVANNAH BEATTIE, ARTS '95

"Beavis and Butthead. Uhhh. Uhhh." WAYNE LIEPMANN, ARTS '95
MAX LINCOLN, ARTS '95

sity. Mr. Rolf Lund (Director, Athletics and Recreation) is supporting Ms. Melody Torcolacci, head track and field coach, in a conflict with Mr. David Scott Thomas. In his short association with the University, Mr. Scott Thomas has achieved remarkable success in coaching both cross country and middle distance runners.

So far no one has explained why Mr. Scott Thomas was rehired to coach the cross country teams but was not rehired to coach the middle distance runners. Nor has it been explained why the head coach has changed her mind three times since last April. In the summer, the middle distance athletes were told they could train with Mr. Scott

Thomas and compete for the University. In September, they were told that if they trained with Mr. Scott Thomas, they could NOT run for the University. Then in November, they were told they could train with Mr. Scott Thomas and run for the University, but that he would not be allowed to attend the track meets to coach them. Meanwhile, a new middle distance coach, hired by the Administration, has become the unfortunate victim in this whole affair. At least 30 middle distance runners have opted to continue training with Mr. Scott Thomas and compete for QUACK [Queen's University Athletic Club Kingston], because of

OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

Real Live Slacker

WHY WE NEED "90210" FOLKS IN REAL LIFE

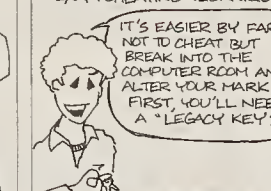

① BECAUSE BRANDON WILL SAVE US

② WITH DAVID BRINGING CRYSTAL METH TO CFCF, THEIR SHOWS BECOME MORE INTERESTING...

② REMEMBER THE LAST SEASON, KIDS?

③ STEVE CAN SHOW THE LAW FROSH HIS NO-LOSE EXAM CHEATING TECHNIQUE...

③ SORRY 'BOUT THE 'TOONS BEING ROUGH THIS WEEK - I'VE GOT THE FLU!

④ AND WE NEED DONNA TO ADD A LITTLE HUMANITY TO OUR SCIENCE LECTURES...

④

BY JOEY DEVILLA

OPEN FORUM

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9
the Administration's inconsistency.

Mr. Lund does himself a disservice by inferring that athletes who run for a club do not have team spirit. This dispute, which is entirely at the administrative level, is inflicting stress on all the athletes involved. Furthermore, there is likely to be long-term damage to the Queen's track program and future recruitment as a result of adverse publicity in high schools and track clubs.

I urge Mr. Lund to consult with all the athletes, to review his coaching options, and to make his future plans known now, not in April or later when current students are heavily involved in exams and future students may have already decided to go elsewhere.

—JIM KENWARD, OTTAWA

HERITAGE EXPOSED

THE EDITOR,

The increasing presence of the Heritage Front on University campuses across the country is indeed cause for alarm. While racism and homophobia are a constant factor in the everyday lives of students, faculty and staff, the Heritage Front presents a distinct and disturbing brand of hatred that must not remain unchallenged in our university communities. It is crucial that student leaders across the country declare their solidarity in confronting the Heritage Front, and preventing their ideas from spreading.

While Heritage Front propaganda and literature (ab)uses trendy and catchy phrases like "white pride" to promote their cause, they neglect to mention the cost of achieving their goals. The price of "white pride" is ultimately paid in swastikas on synagogues, gay bashing, and oppression of people of colour. This price is intolerably high in our society. The Heritage Front must be exposed for what it really is, a white supremacist hate group.

In the face of such a challenge we must reaffirm our support for those who are committed to anti-racist, anti-homophobic, and anti-heretosexualist work. For it is these people who will be at the front of the fight against hate groups, and will be the first members of our communities to be targeted and intimidated by the Heritage Front. We must support their efforts, join their ranks, and encourage others to take a unified stance against the hatred and intolerance of the Heritage Front.

As student leaders, it is our responsibility to utilize the resources at our disposal to confront racism and homophobia on our campus. Let us begin by committing to the following declaration of solidarity: We are committed to the fight against racism and homophobia as part of the larger struggle for social justice in our society. There is no place for groups like the Heritage Front in our communities, and we resolve to confront and expose their racist and homophobic views.

—TODD MINERSON, AMS VP
(UNIVERSITY AFFAIRS) WITH THE SUPPORT OF 10 OTHER UNIVERSITY STUDENT GOVERNMENTS.

Sexual assault: when it's someone you trust

In becoming more aware of personal cases of sexual assault here at Queen's, I have always considered myself fortunate to have remained in the company of a genuine and trustworthy group of male friends. There are only a couple that I would deem among my closest, and one of them recently destroyed that friendship by sexually assaulting me while I was asleep. All of the literature and awareness I have encountered could not have prepared me for what he has put me through.

We, my housemates and I, met him in residence in first year and have maintained a close friendship ever since. If someone had accused him of sexual assault just one week prior, I would have been the first to stand behind him but now it is suddenly different because he did it to me. There was never a question or inclination of any romantic involvement between us: he spoke of a girl he was interested in back home, and I have had one boyfriend for the majority of my attendance at Queen's. In knowing this, there should have been no question in his mind that I would consider his actions to be a gross betrayal of trust.

This occurred after a Saturday night of playing pool and drinking, followed by socializing at his apartment with mutual friends. I first fell asleep on his couch, then he woke me up and told me to sleep in his room because it was very late. He walked with me into his room, pulled the covers over me and then left closing the door behind him. From knowing all of his housemates from the same residence in first year, and from previously spending many essay-filled, exam-ridden days and nights at their place, I felt completely comfortable with absolutely no doubts of my safety or well-being. I awoke with my buttocks undone and his hand under my bra. I was stunned with disbelief and panicked. Horrified by what had happened, I attempted to roll over on my side to collect my thoughts and grasp the situation. Within seconds he proceeded to lightly turn me over on my back and lower my arm below my breasts. At this moment I was fully conscious and aware of what he was doing, desperately thinking of an escape. These seconds felt like hours. I was so distressed that I couldn't open my eyes, it was almost too unbearable to view what he was doing. This was when he undid another button and proceeded to kiss my chest once, then my neck, and the corner of my mouth. I finally seized that as an opportunity to pretend I had just been startled and woke up. I needed to find a non-confrontational moment so that I could act as though nothing had happened.

How could he think that what he was doing was acceptable? The way his hand trembled assured me that he knew it was wrong, perhaps he thought he wouldn't get caught. All I could do was look away from him, ask for the time, and casually give an excuse for why I had to leave so early. I never imagined someone could intimidate me to the point where I was afraid to speak. He never physically threatened me, but then again, he was relying on the fact that I was still asleep. I felt as though I should have something at him to show how angry I was/am. All I wanted was to get out of there as fast as I possibly could without talking or facing him. I used to characterize myself as being a very definite and outspoken person, and would be prepared to voice my opinion at any time for any reason, but nothing could have made me more speechless than experiencing a close friend violate and degrade me. It took close to 10 hours for me to disclose this assault to my closest friends. I rationalized and denied its severity, as most victims do. I don't really know why I doubted myself, I can only say that the thought of what happened sickened me and it was simply easier not to deal with it.

By taking advantage of me in the worst possible manner, he instantly destroyed a friendship I valued so highly. How could I have known that he was capable of such abnormal behaviour after three years of what I thought was kindness and sincerity? He was one of the most diplomatic and considerate individuals I have met here. Never once did I hear him speak crudely about women, not even in jest. When I entered the bathroom, four of my buttons were undone and I was only conscious for one of them. I am still unaware of how much time had passed from the moment he initiated the assault to when I woke up, but it absolutely disgusts me that he perversely attacked me in my vulnerable state of unconsciousness. There were no signs, misconceptions, or miscommunications, this was a completely unwarranted and heartless act.

When confronted by my housemate about his unacceptable behaviour, he calmly denied any knowledge of this occurrence without becoming defensive, as people often do when they are falsely accused. When it was suggested to him that, because he infringed upon my rights, he should now accept the responsibility to vacate any premises in which we are both present, he did not refuse nor argue.

This is not all the retribution I seek. This article is especially intended for him, and for my own peace of mind. I know he does not yet realize the severity of his actions—sexual assault is a criminal offense. I should never have been compromised regardless of whether he was at my apartment or I at his. This is my way of illustrating how hurt, angry and disgusted I am, because nothing will ever rectify this. I would like to ask him how it must feel to go home and visit his mother and sister, especially knowing his younger sister will be going away to University in September, and the odds of her being subjected to a similar horror increases with every unreported assault.

I find it appalling and ludicrous that I should consider myself "lucky" for being able to leave before anything else happened, but what's more absurd is that this behaviour even exists.

OPEN FORUM

many times, listened to friends talk about their sexual assaults; seen the shows, read the literature; had the parental lecture about safety and knows the fear of walking home by herself after dark. Yet, she did not fully understand the helplessness that a sexual assault victim feels until it actually happened to her. Is there no hope?

I'm lucky enough never to have been the victim of sexual assault, however, I think I'm beginning to fully comprehend the helplessness, the anger, the guilt of sexual assault victims. Perhaps if the attacker had known the complete effects of his deed, he never would have betrayed my friend's trust. Maybe radical acts like guerrilla theatre are necessary to bring the real horror of violence against women and sexual assault issues into a debate that has often failed to make a difference in the past.

When confronted by my housemate about his unacceptable behaviour, he calmly denied any knowledge of this occurrence without becoming defensive, as people often do when they are falsely accused. When it was suggested to him that, because he infringed upon my rights, he should now accept the responsibility to vacate any premises in which we are both present, he did not refuse nor argue.

This is not all the retribution I seek. This article is especially intended for him, and for my own peace of mind. I know he does not yet realize the severity of his actions—sexual assault is a criminal offense. I should never have been compromised regardless of whether he was at my apartment or I at his. This is my way of illustrating how hurt, angry and disgusted I am, because nothing will ever rectify this. I would like to ask him how it must feel to go home and visit his mother and sister, especially knowing his younger sister will be going away to University in September, and the odds of her being subjected to a similar horror increases with every unreported assault.

I find it appalling and ludicrous that I should consider myself "lucky" for being able to leave before anything else happened, but what's more absurd is that this behaviour even exists.

many times, listened to friends talk about their sexual assaults; seen the shows, read the literature; had the parental lecture about safety and knows the fear of walking home by herself after dark. Yet, she did not fully understand the helplessness that a sexual assault victim feels until it actually happened to her. Is there no hope?

I'm lucky enough never to have been the victim of sexual assault, however, I think I'm beginning to fully comprehend the helplessness, the anger, the guilt of sexual assault victims. Perhaps if the attacker had known the complete effects of his deed, he never would have betrayed my friend's trust. Maybe radical acts like guerrilla theatre are necessary to bring the real horror of violence against women and sexual assault issues into a debate that has often failed to make a difference in the past.

SEXUAL ASSAULT & SURFACE

THE EDITOR,

In my first year at Queen's University, I had the opportunity to meet a vast number of students from all over the country. The men and women that I became close to became an integral part of my life at Queen's. This was the first real opportunity I had to develop close friendships with males, as I attended an all female high school. I feel that this experience was very actualizing for me, as I was able to better comprehend the nature and character of these men, and thus acquire a new perspective on friendships, relationships and emotions. One of these males in particular became a close friend of mine.

At the same time, he also became close friends with some of my other female friends. Though our relationship was strictly platonic, I felt very close and comfortable with him. I remember thinking to myself, wow, I am really lucky. This guy is understanding, sensitive, trustworthy, and reliable. I feel safe with him when I am out at a bar, and know I can count on him. I respected the fact that he was not a sexist individual. These qualities initiated a deep friendship that remained with me through second year and third year at Queen's.

One might be sympathetic to this male individual. Why does Surface print such crap about males? Surely this attack on the male population is unwarranted?

WOMEN DO NOT BE FOOLED!!! This male individual sexually assaulted a mutual friend of ours, my housemate, last weekend. The details of this incident are unequivocally clear. My housemate stayed over at our male friend's apartment after going out that evening. This was not out of the ordinary as both she and I have done several times in the past. She did not want to go home alone. She woke up to him fondling her breasts and kissing her. This is sexual assault. This violation was totally unwarranted. It undermined the trust in the friendship and has left my friend with emotional scars that will never fully heal.

This, and other similar accounts of sexual assault illustrate the distorted perception that some males have of women. It emphasizes the vulnerability that women experience as a result of male violence. The pain and anger my friend experienced (and is still experiencing) is indescribably horrific, and yet there are no clear cut means of retribution for her and other sexual assault victims. We, as a humanitarian society must strongly address this issue and recognize the importance of such strong voices as Surface magazine in this struggle. We must recognize the reality of this problem and attempt to understand the far reaching ramifications it has for females and the rest of society.

I think a basic but important step to trying to deal with the massive problem of sexual assault is for everyone, especially men, to accept that it happens (even between "friends") and understand its effect on the victims. My friend has discussed it

Ed. Note: The names of the previous letter-writers have been withheld out of respect for the victim.

Do nothing from selfish ambition or conceit, but in humility regard others as better than yourselves. Let each of you look not to your own interests, but to the interests of others. Let the same mind be in you that was in Christ Jesus.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians 2:3-5

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Bonfield (11:00).

SEXUAL ASSAULT & GUERRILLA THEATRE

THE EDITOR,

After reading the articles in The Journal regarding the "guerrilla theatre" at the model United Nations, I was struck by the fact that rather than an in depth discussion about the issue of violence against women, the letters focused on the disruption of the event and the distress of participants. While these articles appeared a while ago, something has happened since then that has forced me to respond. A friend of mine was sexually assaulted by another friend.

After a night of drinking, a female friend was persuaded to stay overnight at a mutual male friend's house rather than risk taking a cab home by herself. Later, she awoke to find the buttons to her shirt undone and the male friend fondling her breasts. In the split second it took for her to decide what to do, she pretended to still be asleep. She then got up and tied her boots at the end of the bed while giving an excuse for her departure. It was 9:20 a.m.

At midnight she decided she had no choice but to tell me and two other good friends what had happened. In discussing what had happened she expressed disbelief in how she had reacted. Why hadn't she confronted him? In prior discussions regarding sexual assault she'd always expressed that she would yell and fight, instead she had tried to avoid what had happened. She said things like: "I just froze; I just couldn't believe that he was doing it; now I understand why women don't always scream stop," nothing could have prepared me for this.

I think a basic but important step to trying to deal with the massive problem of sexual assault is for everyone, especially men, to accept that it happens (even between "friends") and understand its effect on the victims. My friend has discussed it

ASUS wants you...
is Hiring for Committee Chairs and Members for the following committees
Prison Visitations Heart & Stroke THEME Speakers
ASKUS Kids 4 Kids Balloon-o-Grams Environmental
Undergraduate Review Elections Team Childcare Buddies Artsfest
Mosaic MindFind Social Future Link March Break
Committee Chairs applications are due on March 25th and Members applications are due on March 31st.

Surface needs an Editor	Levanna Designs is looking for Director Business Manager and Advertising/Marketing Reps Sales Reps
Applications are due on March 28th. Editor Selection Meeting on April 4th 5:30pm	Due on March 21st Due on March 28th

"To Bring Into Public View" "Clothes to Cover Your ASUS"

All applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University. For more information, call 545-6278.

Get Involved!!!

QUEEN'S GRAD CLUB ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING MARCH 23, 1994 7:00 PM refreshments served

ELECTION OF NEW BOARD MEMBERS

Please submit agenda items to QGC office by March 12, 1994. Financial report and Agenda available March 12, 1994. Nomination forms for Board Positions can be picked up at QGC office. This form requires 5 signatures from club members and the nominee. Completed forms are to be returned to the club prior to the start of the AGM to the attention of the C.R.O.

162 Barrie Street 546-3427

FEATURES

Approaching equality

♀ Tuesday, March 9 was International Women's Day ♀ The following Feature is intended to provide a few interesting and enlightening facts about the status of women ♀ Most of the information we as Queen's students receive focuses on the issues which concern young, North American university women ♀ International Women's Day provides an opportunity for us to broaden our horizons and explore the lives of other women: those who have shaped our history and those in other parts of the world ♀

Feel like we've made too much progress in the past thirty years? Don't worry, here are some 'signs of the times' to keep you honest.

♀
NOW BE A DEAR AND FIX ME A MARTINI...

"Keeping house and caring for the kids fills a woman's day—and more. But what if she has to earn a living too? Your wife will never have to face this double duty if you protect yourself."

—1963 ad for Travelers Insurance

"I can bring home the bacon, fry it up in a pan. And never, never let you forget you're a man."

—1978 ad for Enjoli perfume

"My mother was convinced the centre of the world was 36 Maplewood Drive. Her idea of a wonderful time was Sunday dinner. She bought UNICEF cards, but what really mattered were the Girl Scouts...I'm beginning to think my mother really knew what she was doing."

—Recent ad for Good Housekeeping magazine

Women and the World

In June 1993, women's rights were finally classified as human rights by the World Conference on Human Rights in Austria. The Conference passed a declaration stating that "the human rights of women and of the girl-child are an inalienable, integral, and indivisible part of 'universal human rights.'" The document will now be considered by the United Nations General Assembly.

But the simple declaration of these rights in an international forum does not guarantee that they will be upheld and that women's situations internationally will magically improve. The problems which women face throughout the world are diverse and vary according to region.

In particular, efforts to promote development in the Third World have been devised without much regard to the differential impact of development projects on women. Concerns were raised at the meeting of the Commonwealth Ministers for Women's Affairs in July 1993 about the detrimental effects of World Bank and International Monetary Fund policies on women. Specifically, IMF development policy dictates the imposition of user fees on health care, education and social programs when countries are receiving IMF aid. This severely limits the ability of women to care for themselves and their children. Proposals by women's groups that exceptions to this policy be made for children under five and pregnant or lactating women were rejected by the IMF.

If you are interested in obtaining more information on the status of women internationally, Match International Centre, based in Ottawa, is an invaluable resource. It is a non-governmental organization which focuses on ending violence against women, and on gender and development issues.

WOMEN'S GREATEST CHALLENGES

As presented to the Commonwealth Ministers Responsible for Women's Affairs, July 1993, Cyprus

Asia — poverty

The Caribbean — the impact of structural change programs

Africa — HIV and AIDS

Canada and the UK — violence against women, equal opportunity for men and women, treatment of refugees

The Pacific Rim — violence against women, participation in the political process

A vote of her own

Last year, nine million Canadian women were eligible to vote in the federal election. 475 female candidates ran for election — a record 22 per cent of the total candidates running.

This accessibility to the political arena has not always existed for women in Canada. To whom do we owe the ability to contribute to politics which we enjoy, in varying degrees, today?

Nellie McClung launched the successful campaign for the vote for women in 1916 in Manitoba. By 1918, this right had been recognized in Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Ontario and Nova Scotia.

The campaign for the federal franchise was partially successful during the First World War when the government granted the vote to female members of the armed forces and female relatives of soldiers, secure in the knowledge that these women would be most likely to support the government's continued involvement in the war. The full federal franchise was finally granted to women in 1920.

Louise McKinney, winner of a seat in the Alberta legislature in 1917, was the first woman in the British Commonwealth to hold such an office. Agnes MacPhail was the first woman elected to the House of Commons in 1921.

You can be my role model

High school history classes have always provided role models, but more often than not, these role models have been men. Most of us know about Sir John A. Macdonald, Martin Luther King, Wolfe and Montcalm, but we have been provided with far fewer female role models. Those women in history that we do know about have been mythologized and caricatured as weak and ill-suited for positions of authority and influence. The situation is getting better, but it's always nice to learn a bit more about the women who have made and continue to make history.

MARIAN ANDERSON

As a woman of colour born at the turn of the century, Marian Anderson faced the double burden of race and sex discrimination. This burden was especially intense in her chosen profession as a contralto singer and performer, and forced her to temporarily abandon hopes of performing in the United States during her early career until she was accepted by the American public.

MARIA MONTESSORI

As a pioneer of childhood pedagogy, Montessori was the first woman in Italy to be granted an M.D. degree. The Montessori educational method was one of the first to advocate a child-centred approach to learning in which children initiated their own educational endeavours.

EMMA GOLDMAN

This prominent anarchist and lifelong social agitator was born and raised in a Jewish ghetto in Russia but was forced to flee to the United States as a teenager. Her exposure in the United States to anarchist and socialist philosophies prompted her to become an active advocate for change in the status of women in relation to marriage, child-rearing and sexual fulfillment. Her pronouncements on birth control and other controversial issues led to repeated imprisonment and eventual deportation.

MARY MCLEOD BETHUNE

A woman of many talents and accomplishments, Bethune established a girl's vocational school in the United States with no budget and expanded it into a fully accredited four-year college. She was a pioneer of black social and political organizations, a participant in the organization of the United Nations, and also served as an advisor to Franklin Roosevelt.

LITERARY LAPSES

The Kiss

Passion lips press,
savour,
explore,
release and trickle down,
following intricate patterns of the moment of leaves lifting drifting away of sandy sandy beaches salt ocean spray, Pray of lifting stones and letting go of light drip drops on windowpanes of tearing down a grassy hill of smacking closed a duck's bill of pressure

.....of the currents,
.....the undertow.
So basic, always unseen,
forceful,
unescapable.

Katie Triggs

Equinox

These are the melting days when the sun laps up lazy snow paths and shines anticipation upon our white washed faces.

These are mellow days rainy weekends cobalt blue—when we stretch out our afternoons and lie on rocks
flat-backed and upside down along a silent Lake Ontario.

These are avoidance days when only change is certain:
where the sky and lake connect streaks of white space hang like my uncertainty and yet we have found freedom on the edge of this new season.

These are the days quickly melting away—meaning we will only find when we look back.

Heather Katherine Grace

Moonsun

You feel your spine undulate
With the waves of candle flame.
Your mind, poised and relaxed,
Shifts to a cup of porcelain
To welcome the silky flow
Of rich burgundy warmth.

The overflow
Warms up the march of your blood,
Melts your id
Between your knees and your heart.
The scent of the melting wax
Fills your ribs with vaporous clouds
Changing, many-faced,
Flowing as discarded masks.
And as you wonder
"How does the Moon feel like
When she makes love to the Sun"
You also ask
"Can he see right through my skin
Or does he only see his light
Reflecting upon my face?"

Jaime Maria de Castellvi

Lapse of Uncertainty

In a foggy, desolate, rested section of my mind
I sometimes wonder what kind of time
It would take to remove the uncertainty from my mind.

Wondering, thinking, breathing, slowly time dwindles on
I have no regrets
In fact I'm fond
Of the special moments my uncertain life has brought

Chilled, restless, in a wondrous daze
I feel so much pain
I speak of it so little to me it lies behind an uncertain wall of craze

Floating (now) an endless thought into tomorrow
I want it so much
I can almost feel its touch
Begging me to follow, or lead, lead into tomorrow

I cannot find that uncertain place that place called tomorrow
if I could I would
And in the houses of life would hang ... my face.

Brian Durno

A Sunrise

My hair was in my eyes again and she was paisley-topped, blue-eyed, and laughing for no reason. I looked at myself in the club's mirrored walls a little too often, keeping my eyebrows raised like a plastic wax James Dean mannequin, trying to look cool.

The smoke stung my eyes, reminding me of the dark blue carpet in my grandparents'
Scarborough basement after dinner at Christmas and I felt too old for stockings, Santa Claus, and stories about growing up on a farm in the twenties that I'd heard before.
This blonde girl with tired eyes looked wrong;
smoking made her seem younger, not older.
She held it gracefully, though, putting it between her frosty lipstick lips, to suck and then blow smoke rings above my head.

Did she know how this looked? Her lips curled, her tongue slightly visible, this phallic symbol on fire between her fingers, hypnotizing me with its grey ethereal trail?

We talked of nothing for a while. Tinny speakers conveyed lame retro-seventies rock tunes. A yawn. She was talking, talking, her lips were moving, she laughed and punched my arm, bringing her white plastic cup to her mouth. What were we saying? Who was she?

Neither of us knew, and grabbing my arm, her hand was cold, wet, small. We sat by the broken karaoke machine. She spilled beer on me, but didn't notice.

Why was I here? What did I want from life? Is this it? Is the world made up only of beer and cars and school and loneliness and sex and perfume and bad haircuts? Does it really matter? Does it matter whether or not we continue to act out our boring roles, the whole world revolving listlessly like an American sitcom?

We danced, her smoke-alcohol-wet-hair-
Eternity-leather stench almost making me sick.
Close. Closer. Drawing circles on my back. A strobe light, hockey on a big screen TV, dizziness, a song I didn't recognize, it all swam and suddenly her tongue was like sandpaper.

Outside, outside in the rain by the neon sign, I try a cigarette that burns my throat, making my eyes water as she messes my hair up like a child. Running, running running to her blue car, she strokes my leg to the rhythm of the windshield wipers, New Order on her tape deck as she peels out of the parking lot, out of this bedroom suburb, into the dark pounding rain, beyond the streetlights, she turns the key and undoes her seatbelt in the cold, as the windows mist, our breathing and the rain battering the car roof are the only sounds, and they are deafening.

I awaken uncomfortable and damp as the first pink light of dawn scratches at the fogged windscreen.

JBG

Brazil makes a good paperweight

Once had a friend who used to throw books around. That is, he would throw books he didn't enjoy — he respected other books in the way all good bibliophiles should. I'd visit his basement apartment on weekends to see a large pile of books strewn at the far side of the room below desks, and sometimes cracks, in the dry wall. I even witnessed the act once while we were sitting reading on a Saturday afternoon. Djuna Barnes's Nightwood suddenly fell across the room into the wall, after which it collected dust at the baseboard until he moved out several months later.

I could never understand why he would do such a thing — what would cause such violent revulsion toward a book? Even when I wasn't enjoying a novel I'd stick it out, hoping that it would get better, and sometimes even enjoying the challenge of sticking through to the end of a difficult text. When I questioned him about it, he told me that one day I'd understand. He was right, and the book that made me understand was John Updike's Brazil.

Unfortunately, since I had agreed to review the book, I wasn't able to leave it away from me with great force. I had to content myself with using it as a coaster, and I must thank Alfred Knopf Publishing for printing it with such a wonderfully porous cover which sucked up spilled coffee quite nicely in the two weeks it took me to read this relatively short book.

Seeing as I stuck it out to the bitter end, I'll fill you in. For those of you who are fans of Updike's Rabbit novels, or have read any of his other books set in the U.S., his sixteenth novel will seem like a bit of a departure from his previous work. Set in South America between 1966 and 1988, Brazil is the story of two lovers, Isabel and Tristao, and their fairy-tale adventures as they grow to maturity.

Basically a retelling of the Tristan and Isolde myth, Brazil lacks any of the subtlety and mystery of the original tale. Like the original story, Tristao and Isabel are "star-crossed lovers" — mem-

Brazil
John Updike
Knopf
$30.00
260 pgs.

injecting the occasional Spanish or Portuguese word in italics to give local flavour.

Even the sex is dull and — believe it or not — seems dated, stuck in that same late sixties, early seventies type of description that characterized Philip Roth's Portnoy's Complaint. Not the gritty, almost vulgar sex of Miller or Burroughs, nor the more poetic, lyrical eroticism of Nabokov or Mishima, Updike's sex is voyeuristic detailing, punctuated with ridiculous euphemisms for sexual organs, such as Tristao's ubiquitous "yam."

The inclusion of sex in this ancient story doesn't add any romance to the tale. In fact, the whole novel seems set in a cynical, anti-romantic mode. Tristao beats Isabel; they both are sexually unfaithful to each other; Isabel becomes a prostitute at several points in the novel, giving birth to many children — none of which are Tristao's.

It is perhaps fitting that the lovers can have no symbol of their love, for the whole novel is itself stilette. Scenes which should be sorrowful, such as the abduction of their children by natives; tense, such as the escape through the jungles of Brazil, filled with reptiles and carnivorous fish; or joyous, such as their reunions after long absences from each other, are merely mundane and would fail to move even the most sensitive readers.

There are many more problems with Brazil, beginning with cultural appropriation and ending with misogyny, but Updike's novel isn't worth any intellectual discussion. If the moral of his fairy tale is that for every gain there is a loss, all the reader has gained from her thirty dollar loss is a shotput, a coaster, or some kindling.

STEVE CAIN WONDERS WHAT DECLENSION "YOUR 'UMBLE 'TOONIST" IS.

A review copy of Brazil was provided courtesy of Printed Passage Books.

LIFE AFTER GOD

by Douglas Coupland

Author of Generation X and Shampoo Planet

A "revealing road trip... a rich and painstruck new collection." —Esquire

Now available in hardcover from Pocket Books® and on cassette from Simon & Schuster Audio®, featuring a dramatic reading by the author

*Reprints used under license from Perennial Publishing (Simon & Schuster, Inc.)

NOW IN STOCK DISPERN

at the Campus Bookstore

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS
DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS?
THEN GET THE ANSWERS

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

IF YOU CAN'T SEE IT,
YOU CAN'T READ IT.

Put your future in focus with regular vision care.

The growth industries of the '90s are largely information based. Careers today require high levels of literacy and visual skills.

Call today to receive your FREE information package: 1 800 268-3968 ext. 361

CIBAVision
The Best in Sight

Vision Awareness Week, March 6 - 12.

Expand the horizon of your success in business with Humber's

One-year Post-Graduate Programs in Marketing Management

Canadian Securities Profile Information Systems Profile

- Unique program offering the accredited Canadian Securities course and Canadian Securities certificate.
- Only post-graduate program sponsored by the Canadian Securities Institute in eastern Canada.
- A program offering a combination of marketing, Canadian securities and financial planning training.
- The only post-graduate program that combines information systems and marketing training.
- Unique program provides the practical training to meet the requirements of the information systems industry.
- Provides entry into an industry with almost unlimited growth potential.

To qualify, you need a three-year university degree, college diploma, or five years related experience. For Information Systems you also need basic computer literacy.

Call (416) 675-5000, or 1-800-268-4867, for information

Delivering World Class Business Education

May the Force be with you

The Truce at Bakura
Kathy Tyers
Bantam Spectra
$26.95
331 pgs.

A LONG TIME AGO in a galaxy far, far away...

Continuing the tradition of the Star Wars legacy, The Truce at Bakura is an excellent book. I say this as a Star Wars purist and as someone who considers the original Star Wars movie to be absolutely the finest movie ever produced. Kathy Tyers probably would agree with the above statement. She dedicates her novel to John Williams, the man who composed the classic Star Wars soundtrack.

The primary source of conflict in this novel is not the Empire. This fact alone makes The Truce at Bakura an interesting read for anyone familiar with the rest of the Star Wars stories, such as Splinter of the Mind's Eye or the recently released Timothy Zahn trilogy about the resurrection of the Empire by the last Imperial Grand Admiral, Thrawn. Unlike Zahn's trilogy, this novel is very tightly written. The trilogy's biggest flaw was that the original story seemed to have been expanded simply to fill three books. As a stand-alone novel, The Truce at Bakura neatly sidesteps this problem.

The plot of this novel revolves around the invasion of the known galaxy by a race of reptilian aliens called the Ssi-Ruuk. The old emperor Palpatine made contact with these aliens after discovering their unique and horrifying technology of "entechnment," which involves the separation of the Force spirit of an individual from their physical being, and the imprisonment of this spirit in machines and droids as an energy source. This aspect of the novel lends an eerie, spectral feeling to the book, which is profoundly disturbing at times. Bluescale, the leader of the Ssi-Ruuk, gives Darth Vader a run for his money as an evil presence. Bluescale is worse in a way, for there can be no redemption of the Ssi-Ruuk, whose contempt for humanity — except as a power source for enteched equipment — is absolute.

When the ex-Rebels, now the New Republic government, learn of the Ssi-Ruuk from the Imperial garrison at Bakura, they feel obliged to assist in this farthest flung corner of the galaxy. Bakura itself is of little consequence, but the ongoing battle with the remnants of the Empire requires that the new government use every advantage it can. The opportunity to turn Bakura away from the Empire cannot be ignored by the New Republic.

The Star Wars movies did not convey the scope of the Empire's fleet and operations other than the battle with the Rebellion. Even without its head, the Imperial dragon still possesses many dangerous claws. The Imperial Governor of Bakura, Nereus, proves to be one of these claws when he plays the New Republic's representatives against the Ssi-Ruuk for his own gain.

One fascinating aspect of this novel is the developing relationship between Luke Skywalker and the young Bakuran senator, Gaeriel. Tyers manages to convey the "star-crossed" nature of their love. This romantic theme helps combat the evil atmosphere created by the presence of the Ssi-Ruuk and Nereus. Another positive element is Dev, the Ssi-Ruuk's human slave who leads the evil reptiles to the Force-strong Luke, but remembers his humanity through his exposure to the young Jedi.

All of the classic Star Wars elements are present: engaging characters, massive space battles, impossible love, clearly defined good and evil, and — of course — the Force.

The situation is peculiar; there is a brief, unstable truce between the fledgling New Republic and one of the nastier Imperial governments to combat a thoroughly evil new race from outside the known galaxy. Luke finds love on the fringes of the galaxy, and an excellent new story is created. As with the rest of the Star Wars saga, there is a comforting sensation at the back of the reader's mind that comes from knowing that good will triumph, no matter how desperate the situation looks, or how clever and malicious the villains are. Although Tyers takes us as close as possible to the feeling that the protagonists might not survive, she always leaves a thread of hope to cling to until the resolution of the plot, which does bring a few cathartic moments with it in the best tradition of tragedy.

Although this novel is not about to placed in the canon alongside Shakespeare or Dickens, it is a darn good read. It continues and expands upon George Lucas's original series, and it must rate as one of the best of such attempts. Tyers deserves praise for her work.

ANDREW NELSON, THE JOURNAL'S ADS MANAGER, HAS NOTICED THAT ON DARK NIGHTS HIS CAR LOOKS LIKE THE COCKPIT OF AN X-WING FIGHTER.

GSS
GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

Nominations are still open for the position of PRESIDENT

This nomination period will close on March 18th

Catch the Leads at JJ's

Only at JJ's

Ms. Turtle Mr. Cappuccino

To be consummated at JJ's

Only $4.95

OPEN Mon - Fri : 11 am - 12 am
Sat : 12 pm - 12 am
Sun : 4:30 pm - 11 pm
409 Johnson Street at University Tel # : 547 - 3771

JJ's Bistrot Bar
We inspire eating!

ATTENTION:
UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

Make tracks to career opportunities
Put your diploma or degree to work for you

POST GRADUATE STUDIES AT GEORGIAN COLLEGE

Communicative Disorders Assistant
(Orillia Campus) - 12 months, 490-hour field practicum
Career possibilities for graduates include assistants to Speech Language Pathologists and Audiologists in schools, daycare centres, hospitals, nursing homes and treatment centres. Courses include augmentative communication, amplification systems and management and intervention techniques.

Research Analyst
(Barrie Campus) - 8 months, field practicum
Courses include research methodology, survey design and analysis, statistics, computer data analysis, demography, legal and ethical issues and research communications. Graduates may consider careers in social policy and planning, education, opinion polling, marketing and media research.

Therapeutic Recreation
(Orillia Campus) - 12 months, 16 week internship
Career opportunities exist in areas working with seniors, law offenders, and persons with developmental, physical or psychiatric impairments. Supporting courses include leisure education, counselling, assessment, adapted programming and leadership.

I would like more information and an application for:
 Therapeutic Recreation Research Analyst Communicative Disorders Assistant

Georgian College has an excellent track record in placing graduates in related employment. Call (705) 722-5166 or mail the coupon at right.

Name: _____
Address: _____ (apt., street) (city) (prov.)
Phone: () _____
(postal code)

Mail to: Marketing & Communications
Georgian College
One Georgian Drive, Barrie, Ontario L4N 1A9

Georgian College

OPEN FORUM
on the

ASUS
Anti-Discrimination Committee

To discuss ANY QUESTIONS or COMMENTS regarding the make-up and running of this new ASUS Committee.

Monday, March 14
Wednesday, March 16
Friday, March 18

LOWER VICTORIA HALL
at 5:30

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service available.

(613) 644-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBD

Turn your education into a Profession

with Humber's

Human Resource Management program

for University Graduates

Improve your opportunities for interesting and rewarding employment by joining Humber's Human Resource Management program.

- Program is only one year in length (starting September)
- You will receive practical experience in a workplace field practice.
- You must have a University Degree or a College Diploma to qualify.
- Successful completion will lead to professional designation (CHRP) from the Human Resources Professionals Association of Ontario (HRPAO).

call (416) 675-5000 today

Timothy Findley read from a current 'work-in-progress' tentatively entitled Songs at KCVI on Wednesday.

BRENT DAVIS

Deadlines, deadlines, deadlines!

The deadline for the LITERARY LAPSES SHORT STORY CONTEST is MARCH 22. FORSAKE ALL ELSE AND SUBMIT AN ENTRY!

STORIES should be UNDER 2,000 words AND should be SUBMITTED TO THE JOURNAL, 272 EARL STREET.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

Life After God

new short stories by
Douglas Coupland
author of Generation X

hardcover $20.00
now available!!

By now, you've probably realized there's more to life than school. And that a job is only as good as the career it builds. We can help. We can give you the skills and financial knowledge to become an accounting professional: a Certified General Accountant. Our CGA program of studies can lead to better opportunities in business, government and public practice. If you're ready to make even more of yourself, call (416) 322-6520, extensions 228, 225 or 217, or toll free 1-800-668-1454, or write to us at 240 Eglinton Avenue East, Toronto M4P 1K8.

We're accounting for the future in Ontario

The Kingston Chapter of the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario invites you to an information session on Monday, October 25, Donald Gordon Centre, Queen's University, Union & Sir John A. Macdonald, Kingston. CGA representatives will be available from 5 to 7 pm to provide you with an overview of the CGA program of studies and to answer your questions. For more information, contact Evelyn Maizen, CGA, at 545-3925 (w) or 549-7625 (h).

Help Wanted

Who's Where/What's Next Publications is seeking Queen's Students to complete survey

Qualifications:

- Queen's student
- Ability to think critically
- Possess or believe to have possessed 1993-1994 Who's Where telephone directory containing a survey in the back
- Penpersonship

Requirements:

- Fill out Who's Where/What's Next survey
- Put name and phone number on the survey
- Drop off at InfoBank in J.D.U.C. on or before March 12, 1994

Benefits:

- Surveys will be randomly selected to receive...

1st prize $50.00 gift certificate toward a batch of beer at 2nd prize $30.00 gift certificate for dinner at

GREGOS

GRILL & WINE BAR

Serving Daily from 11:00 am to closing
Kingston's Only Authentic Greek Cuisine
167 Princess St. 542-2288

3rd prize 1 table of free pool from 9:00pm to close at

Draw will be held March, 16 1994

Elegance BY TWILIGHT

PHOTOS: CHRIS PRICE
GRAPHICS: COLIN AND DAVE

THESE PHOTOS AND MANY MORE ARE AVAILABLE THROUGH THE JOURNAL PHOTO SERVICE. IF YOU SAW OUR PHOTOGRAPHER TAKE YOUR PICTURE, COME BY AND CHECK IT OUT!

Hiring Schedule

Applications Due: Today at AMS office

Alfie's Manager	QSC Chief Constable
Quiet Pub Manager	Hoods & Gowns Coordinator
Entrepreneurial Centre Mgr.	Tricolour Express Manager
P&CC Manager	Walkhome Coordinator
QEA Manager	All Deputy Commissioners
Tricolour Yearbook Editor-in-Chief	Who's Where/What's Next Editors

Applications Due: March 18

Alfie's Assistant Manager	Entrepreneurial Centre Asst. Mgr.
Quiet Pub Assistant Manager	Walkhome Assistant Coordinator
P&CC Assistant Managers

Applications Due: March 25

Walkhome Day Coordinators
QEA Assistant Managers
Constable Group Leaders

Applications Due: March 30

AMS Committee Members
AMS Service Staff

Interview Times will be posted outside the AMS office

SPORTS

Medals for track team at provincials, next stop Edmonton

BY BRYAN LAMBERT

The Queen's University track and field team returned home from the OUA/OWIAA Championships this past weekend with three medals, 26 personal bests, and nine individuals packing their bags for the CIAU Championships in Edmonton.

Steve Fruitman continued his dominance of the men's shot put by bringing home the gold medal and title of OUA champion. Steve's first throw of the day (14.30m) was good enough to win the competition and send Steve (currently ranked second in Canada) into the CI's. Teammate and fellow shot putter Sarah Leonard (last year's CIAU bronze medalist) had a solid competition winning the silver medal with a throw of 12.25m. Sarah enters the CI's in fifth spot and could sneak a medal with a p.b. (personal best).

Lesley Morrison kept her medal streak alive at OW's with a bronze medal effort of 1.7m. Morrison, last year's CIAU gold medalist, is ranked third in the country and is looking to grab a medal in Edmonton.

The men's 4x400m relay team of Dan Coderre, Steve Dewan, Jeff Kalbfleisch and Derek Hackshaw ran a heartbreaking race to miss qualifying for the CIAU Championships by five hundredths of a second. The men's 4x200m team of Keith Joiner, Remko Noteboom, Bryan Lambert and Jeff Kalbfleisch had the best race of their season finishing fourth in a time of 1:33.13.

Both the women's 4x200m and 4x400m relay teams finished fifth in OWIAA competition. The 4x200m team of Amanda Pardy, Lesley Hughes, Leslie Bruce and Mary Pullen brought the baton across the line in 1:44.58. Bruce, Hughes and Pullen later combined with rookie Sarah McClennan to run 4:03.73. Both women's teams are off to the CIAU's this weekend and with clean hand-offs should p.b. and challenge for a spot in the finals.

On the distance side, Sharon Shew ran a p.b. in the women's 3000m and finished fifth in a time of 10:36.54. Avi Goldfarb ran personal bests in the 1500m (4:23.22) and the 4x800m (2:13) while Jeff McAvoy (4:24.68) and Andrew Stuart (4:22.65) also each ran a 1500m p.b.

High jumper Darren Dugan also qualified for the CIAU Championships as he sailed over the bar at 2.02m on his first attempt, securing a seat on the plane to Edmonton.

Outstanding female rookie of the meet was Sharon Shew for her solid 3000m race, while outstanding male honours were shared by Kevin Robertson, who ran a solid p.b. in the men's 60m hurdles and made the semifinal in a time of 9.25 seconds. This time ranks Kevin in sixth position of all-time for a Queen's athlete, and Dan Coderre, who, running with a stress fracture for the last part of the season, led off the men's 4x400m relay with a solid 51.30 personal best time.

Veteran of the meet honours went to Leslie Bruce for her outstanding 60m (7.92) p.b., 300m (41.13) p.b. and solid 4x200 and 4x400 relay splits. Steve Fruitman won male honours for winning the OUA gold medal in the men's shot put.

With the OUA/OWIAA Championships over 9 athletes now head to the CIAU Championships in Edmonton. Amanda Pardy, Sarah McClennan, Leslie Bruce, Mary Pullen, Sarah Leonard, Lesley Morrison, Lesley Hughes, Steve Fruitman, and Darren Dugan will wear the Queen's uniform this weekend. The team would like to express its gratitude to team trainer Scottie Krivan for the endless hours and commitment to the Queen's Track and Field program. Where would we all be without Scottie's taping magic?

Team captain Geoff Stewart stretches over the high-jump bar.

STEVE FRUITMAN

Queen's loses two tough ones at OW hoops finals

BY FRANK DIXON

A solid season ended at home for the women's basketball Gaels last weekend when they lost their first two games of the OWIAA finals. Queen's won the OW consolation title last year, but could not duplicate this because they were plagued by injuries.

WESTERN 72, GAELS 59

This Friday night game against Canada's fourth-ranked team attracted the largest-ever crowd to watch a women's basketball game at Queen's—800 fans. It featured Ontario's top two scorers—Western's Michelle Vesprini (22.4 ppg) and Vicki Wilson of Queen's (21.8 ppg). Vesprini, OW West MVP, hit a game-high 28 points. She caused havoc with baseline drives and finished chances with powerful moves to the hoop. Wilson, a three-time OWIAA All-Star who was named Queen's first-ever basketball All-Canadian last night, hit for 16 points and grabbed eight rebounds, although she was stymied by Mustang double teams in the low post.

Queen's point guard Jaylene Morrison had a good playmaking game, but Western's zone defense largely shut down her scoring attempts. With forward Stephanie Jamieson playing with a broken finger, Western was able to leave her virtually unguarded and concentrate on containing Wilson.

Graduating Gael Tanya McIntyre put on a tremendous performance with 19 points, hitting on outside shots and baseline drives. Gael Jenny Laughton, who averaged 15 ppg and led the league with a 56 per cent field goal percentage, yet somehow missed an OW All-Star selection, hit a team-high 20 points on 9-for-13 shooting. Shoot more, Jenny!

Western got strong games from league All-Star forward Lori Bartolotta (17 points) and point guard Casey Winegard (eight rebounds).

Gaels' head coach Dave Wilson was disappointed, yet emphasized the positives. "Everybody put everything they had into the game. Because of our injuries, we just didn't have enough horses late when we got fatigued and they pulled away," he said.

GAELS CONTINUED ON PAGE 22

Jenny Laughton (#12) goes for the stuff.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

Intramural banquet promises good food and great times

BY ROB CAMP

What better way to wrap up another fun-filled year of intramurals, than with all your friends at the intramural banquet, to be held in the intimate Skylight Dining Room at 7 p.m., March 30. Relive the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat with our year-end slide show. Be there for the announcement of all the major award winners and the final intramural standings. The men's race is very tight between PHE and the Meds/Rehab units, while the women's race is still up in the air.

Nominations are being accepted now for those athletes that you feel deserve special recognition. Pick up the nomination sheets from the bulletin boards in the PEC. Don't let that team leader go unrecognized!

The Edwards Trophy is awarded annually to the male who has made an outstanding contribution to the men's program. The equivalent to the Edward's Trophy in BEWS, the PHESA Award, is the top individual honour given in the women's program.

In honour of the WIC participant who has demonstrated outstanding skill and athletic ability, the ASUS Award will be presented. The Rehab '86 Sportsmanship Award is awarded to the WIC participant who best displays qualities of enthusiasm, leadership and fairness throughout the year. For the co-ed participants, the Bewic Cup is presented to the male and female intramuralist who have demonstrated that they are outstanding contributors to the spirit of the BEWIC program. Finally, a new addition to awards night, unofficially named the Rob Award, is a refereeing/convening award given to the outstanding contributor over the course of the year.

Tickets for this gala event are available from your unit sticks as well as the wicket at the PEC. The price of the tickets will be $9.00, which includes your pasta buffet, good times and free cheese at the wine and cheese. Did I say wine and cheese? Don't forget to attend the pre-banquet festivities at the QP from 6-7 p.m.! This night promises to be one to remember!

FREE STUFF

Drop in to pick up your free merchandise from MarketSource. These three days only!

March 14, 15 and 16th

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

Gael hoops

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21
BROCK 59, QUEEN'S 53

In this consolation side game, Queen's led by two points at halftime, but down the stretch Brock's greater depth allowed them to overcome that lead and put the game away.

The Badgers were led by fine performances from three players. Point guard Wendie Nutt was hot from the outside with 16 points, forward Nancy Schuster hit 15 points and grabbed 16 of her team's 33 rebounds, and post Stacey Robertson added 15 points.

Morrison got untracked with 18 points, matching her career high, and was effective from a playmaking standpoint. Vicki Wilson hit 15 points and pulled down ten boards.

OWIAA president Janean Sargeant of Queen's, who led the organizational effort, was beaming after the busy weekend. "We got a lot of help from student volunteers," she said. "The special events like clinics for high school players, hot shots, the long shot and prizes for the crowd really boosted the interest." The tournament also featured involvement from private-sector sponsors on a scale never before seen at Queen's.

TORONTO 61, LAURENTIAN 34

For most spectators, it was among the most unbelievable events they had ever seen. The Laurentian Lady Vees, ranked second in the country, actually lost a basketball game, which in itself is major news. But the shocker was Laurentian dropping the OW gold medal game by a whopping 27 points to the number three ranked Toronto Lady Blues.

Laurentian's worst loss to a Canadian rival in 20 years snapped the Lady Vees' streak of four straight OW titles, but could not prevent Laurentian from qualifying for the CIAU championship for the 20th straight season. Only an earthquake could do that. Toronto won its first OW crown since 1989 and qualified for the CI's.

The Lady Blues' win was built by a suffocating defense and clever coaching by OW East Coach-of-the-Year Michele Belanger. Toronto shut down Laurentian's potent post game, consistently out-hustled Laurentian for loose balls and rebounds, and shot 50 per cent from the floor, compared to an abysmal 22 per cent for the Lady Vees.

Laurentian had only nine healthy players, compared to Toronto's 12, following an injury and the early-season quitting of two of last year's starters. Toronto insisted on a physical game, and this led to a lot of fouls which Laurentian wasn't able to spread out effectively. The Lady Vees' All-Star post players Joy McNichol and Dianne Norman both quickly got into serious foul trouble.

Power forward Justine Ellison of Toronto won tournament MVP honours, scoring a game-high 18 points in the final match. Coach Belanger was jubilant. "Everything worked for us today," she said. "But there's still one more gold medal to win."

Belanger was referring to this weekend's CI championships in Calgary. The Lady Blues enter as the number two seed behind Winnipeg, which is currently riding a North American record 70-game winning streak. If Toronto plays like they did against Laurentian, they have an excellent chance of ending that streak.

HOCKEY POOL TOP 10

1	Cherowen	176
2	Patieuse	161
3	Foogie	160
4	Farrab	159
5	Grizzly	159
6	190Barry	158
7	Jeffer	155
8	W.A.F.C.	152
9	Habchick	149
10	Number 1	147

Field hockey wins beautiful bronze

BY JILL BOYD

The valiant team members and their hard earned hardware.

The Queen's indoor field hockey team travelled to York University this weekend to compete in the OWIAA finals. Having finished strongly in third position at the ranking tournament three weeks before, the Gaels were psyched for a big weekend of intense and competitive hockey.

The tournament was set up in a round robin format, well-suited for the Gaels' consistent and strong style of play. This format also ensured that the tournament would not be decided on a stroke-off, something which has haunted the Gaels, particularly veteran Jill Boyd, for the past four seasons (not that she's been counting).

The Gaels' first game of the weekend was against the York Yeowomen early Saturday morning. Although the Gaels played extremely well, they could not stop the York hot-shots, who managed to slip four goals into the net. Although disappointed with the loss, the Gaels were happy with the level of play they achieved, knowing it would put them in good stead against the teams left to play.

The following game was against the Guelph Gryphons. Although determined to have a strong start, and spurred on by a beautiful goal by Leslie Burrows, the Gaels finished the first half down 2-1. The Gaels battled back, however, with an inspired second half. This half was highlighted by goalie Jen Purdy's tremendous saves, and a flurry of three magnificent reverse-stick goals by Usha Kakaria — whose status as carded athlete was revealed with this well-deserved hat trick.

The game's final score was

4-2 Queen's!
The last game of the day was against Western. The Gaels entered this game with a certain amount of determined trepidation, having suffered a history of ugly losses to the Mustangs. Indeed, though the Gaels clearly dominated the pace of the game, not to mention the entire court and every ball, they had difficulty in establishing a concrete lead, and at the end of the first half the game was tied 0-0.

After an inspiring second half talk, the Gaels came out in full force, only to have Western quickly score. Undaunted by the possible horrific repercussions of a Mustang victory, the Gaels fiercely battled back with a beautiful goal by Leslie Burrows. Indeed, Burrows proved her skill as a scoring demon with a textbook shot off a short corner in the dying seconds of the game to win it for the Gaels.

With a highly successful day of two huge wins and one tiny loss in their pockets, the team set out to the finals banquet, while disco queens Laila Brown and Jill Boyd set off on the long drive back to Kingston to attend their formal. Both would like to thank coach Bev Koski for allowing them to go.

Come Sunday morning, however, it was back to field hockey, as the Gaels faced an intense match-up with CIAU champions, the U of T Blues. In possibly the best game to have ever graced the York gym, the Gaels valiantly fought against the Blues for a final score of 5-4, U of T. Although the game was close to being a historical tie, the Gaels were more than pleased with their tremendous play and graciously accepted the loss.

COURTESY OF THE FIELD HOCKEY TEAM

Goals were scored by Shauna MacDonald, Laura Farres, Usha Kakaria, and Leslie Burrows, and about ten close calls go to Julia Barsz who set the rest of us up. Thus, the final game of the weekend against the Waterloo Warriors proved also to be the game for the bronze medal. Although intense as always, the Gaels had difficulty establishing a lead over the Warriors. The first goal of the game was scored late second half by Jill Boyd off a short corner to give the Gaels a temporary lead. Waterloo, however, pulled their goalie to give them a one-woman advantage over the Gaels and played as if possessed — finally scoring in the last minutes of play to end the game with a 1-1 tie.

Although disappointed with a tie, the Gaels were not really dismayed as their goal differential of minus-2 absolutely rocked Waterloo's of minus-3, and they were awarded the bronze medal accordingly. Please insert a big Calgary YEE-HAW! here.

Among the weekend's highlights were Laura Farres' being awarded Best Defensive Player of the Tournament (What do you mean she's not from Kingston!), Leslie Burrows and Usha Kakaria both scoring four goals apiece, Jill Boyd being named to the Second All-Star Team, a bench which kicked butt, and allowing your three old-fogey graduating players to leave with a gorgeous medal around their necks. Thanks and Congrats!

Queen's sailors make waves

BY THE QUEEN'S SAILING TEAM

(Arts '95), Lars Leckie (Sci '96) and Leanne Son Hing (Arts '94), all of whom competed in the A division, and Mike Kalin (Sci '97), Christophe Credico (Sci '95), and Heather Spurling (Arts '97), who all competed in the B division, drove 10 hours with their coach, Ian Eskritt, to Maryland for the Queen's' sailors placed second among B schools in Virginia on Feb 19, 20. They were beaten only by ODU, a school ranked third in the US.

event. A total of 28 races were sailed in flying juniors, which are 14 foot two-person boats. Queen's finished second over-all, edged out by Old Dominion University from Norfolk, Virginia, the third-ranked team in the United States.

In cold, windy conditions, the team battled hypothermia, temporary blindness, breakdowns, and the wrath of Chesapeake Bay to stand solidly in fifth place after one day of racing. The next day presented milder, tactically challenging conditions.

After chipping ice from the boats, the team had a spectacular day and surged past Princeton, King's Point, and New York Maritime — all nationally ranked in the United States top 20.

This result, one of the best in the team's short history, confirms Queen's position as a force to be reckoned with in U.S. intercollegiate sailing. Special thanks to Ian for his nonjudgmental analysis and words of wisdom.

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994 GRADUATES

1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750 REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY FROM GENERAL MOTORS.

Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO CERTAIN VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY SEVERAL DEALERS. THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

THINKING OF TEACHING?

The University of British Columbia invites applications to its teacher education programs for September 1994.

All programs lead to both:

- the B.C. Professional Teaching Certificate
- the U.B.C. Bachelor of Education degree

All programs feature:

- a full term of teaching practice
- effective communications skills
- classroom management strategies
- providing for students with special needs

Secondary teaching applicants with 4-year Bachelor's degrees and strength in one or two teaching subjects enter a 12-month program.

Middle school (Grades 6-8) teaching applicants with 4-year Bachelor's degrees and strength in English, social studies or science may enter a 12-month program.

Elementary teaching applicants with acceptable 4-year degrees may enter a 12-month program.

Elementary teaching applicants with three or more years of appropriate university credit may enter a 2-year program.

Information and applications now available from:

Teacher Education Office
Faculty of Education
The University of British Columbia
2125 Main Mall
Vancouver, B.C. V6T 1Z4
Phone: (604) 922-5242 or 4612 (messages 24 hours) Fax: (604) 922-8227

9th ANNIVERSARY SALE

MINIMUM $10 OFF ALL SANDALS

MERRELL

BIRKENSTOCK®

JUST DO IT

Air Deschütz

SALE END MARCH 20th

RUNNERS' CHOICE
THE SERIOUS CHOICE FOR ATHLETIC FOOTWEAR
260 PRINCESS STREET 542-2410

NEED CASH? MIND FIND NEEDS TUTORS

PAYS $9.00/HR!!!!

Subsidized Tutoring brought to you by your Faculty and the AMS. To pick up forms, go to the Infobank or your Society Office or call:

545-6000 Ext 5300

Remember: All payroll sheets must be handed to the AMS

THINK YOU'RE HOT???
PROVE IT!!!

JDOC
VIDEO GAMES TOURNAMENT

HOW TO ENTER:

- Play any game as many times as you want and try to get the high score.
- Register your high score with the QCLUB attendant immediately (2nd floor Games Room JDOC). They will verify it. THIS IS IMPORTANT!!!
- High scores must be registered by midnight, Friday, April 1st.
- Top scorer for each game will qualify for the final championship round on Sat., April 2nd, 3:00pm.
- Two games will be picked at random for the final championship round - combined top scores will determine finishing places.
- Qualifying rounds are from Fri., March 11th to Fri, April 1st. Final rounds held on Sat, April 2nd, 3:00.

PRIZES:

- FIRST - $150.00
- SECOND - $100.00
- THIRD - $50.00

AMS
ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

will be held March 15th
in the McLaughlin
Room at 7:00pm.

All AMS members should come out and exercise their vote!

Teacher Train in Australia

Dr. Joseph Relich
Director of Course Development
University of Western Sydney

will conduct an information session on post-graduate qualifications in Education that will allow you to teach in Ontario on Wednesday, March 16 from 12:30 - 1:30 p.m.

Sterling Room A

Interested candidates should bring transcripts (final or interim) as Dr. Relich will remain for interviews after the presentation.

Further information may be obtained by contacting

Career Counselling Office

or

K.O.M. Consultants
P.O. Box 60524
Mountain Plaza Postal Outlet
Hamilton, ON
L9C 7N7

Telephone or Facsimile 905 318 8200

AMS SPRING REFERENDUM
UPDATE

Nomination packages are available at the front desk of the AMS Office.

Nomination signatures and referendum questions must be submitted to the AMS front desk by 9:00am on Monday, March 14th if they are to appear on the referendum ballot.

There will be a meeting for all groups running a question on the ballot at 5:30pm on Monday, March 14th in the AMS boardroom. Attendance is mandatory.

If you have any questions, please contact Darren Littlejohn at the International Office of the AMS or call 547-1507

ENTERTAINMENT

BUFFALO TOM
THE PALLADIUM
BY SIAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS

Last Friday, March 4, was a double-whammy of a day with the stunning news of John Candy's death and Kurt Cobain's overdose. It also happened to be the date Buffalo Tom came to "rock" Toronto's Palladium. However, as jinxed as the day may have been, the Tommers came out above it all to play an amazing show.

Before going onstage, the trio of Buffalo Tom—Bill Janowitz (vocalist and guitarist), Chris Colbourn (bassist and vocal backing) and Tom McGinnis (the very shy drummer)—took some time for a press conference to answer an assortment of questions about Tonya and Nancy, touring in Japan, the alterna-label and J Mascis (of Dinosaur Jr.)...

So how much part did you have in the Tonya Harding case?

Chris: Oooh! A lot of people thought we were involved with that Nancy Kerrigan, but, uh, it's not true... we're from that area, but we're far more supportive of Tonya Harding.

Bill: We can't comment without our lawyers. (Laughs.)

If you take a look at the progression from all four of your albums the sounds seem to be getting more refined, quieter and less distorted. What has led you to this?

Bill: I think it's sort of a natural progression. We don't really sit down and consciously map out where we're going with each record. I think it's just a product of our influences, and that coupled with being given more reach in the studio and the kind of songs we write. The three of us bringing in all this baggage [which]... adds up to what the record is. But we're not the kind of band that says, "ok this kind of thing is really popular, or that kind of thing, we wanna do this." It's a more natural kind of thing. A lot of the records that we grew up with had a lot of depth to the production while not being "over-produced" and sort of that's what we're going for.

What bands do you listen to on the bus right now?

Chris: We got some great Miles Davis, jazz hits from the '50s, some soundtrack stuff...

Bill: Have you heard of Vic Tressler? He's really good... I would recommend his stuff.

Chris: Then the normal—Srones, Van Morrison—the staples, that kind of stuff.

How does your song-writing process come together?

Bill: We don't get together as the three of us. We kind of give each other tapes, Chris and I usually write the stuff, and just pick the songs we want to work on. They're very skeletal songs, some fragments, some words... we let each other do our own thing. Then we rehearse. It takes a while to get it—we don't really arrange very well, so we have to get together to cut the edges off. We'll get away from a basic live sound, and I think that's true about us. We find that we could do a basic live Buffalo Tom record—like our first two records—we could have made that record forever, and a lot of bands do that. And lots of times those are the best records, but then at a certain point you start to realize that you've got a lot more control, you can do a lot more with it... to make a different sound.

Are you sounding exactly the way you want to right now?

Bill: It's like anything else, there's a point where you have this vision in your head, and then when you bring in other people, producers and the studio, it becomes your moods, but you're there for every step of the process, so you see where it's going. But it's always interesting to go back and listen to the original demo... It's pretty different from A to where it actually goes.

Chris: Things become defined, also... Even though we may be big fans of The Fall or Joy Division, it doesn't mean that you have the license to do a spoken-word song. I think that there is a certain idea of a Buffalo Tom song now, and that becomes a definition and then you have certain boundaries. We really fit into a traditional folk/rock thing, and that really goes back a long time.

Do you guys find a big difference between touring in Canada and the States? What's your impression of Canada?

Chris: Donuts! The donut capital of the world. (Laughs.)

Bill: Where we go doesn't seem that far different from most of the cities in the States. We don't really get past the border cities, and then there's Montreal, and that's the difference.

How do you feel about the type of air-play you're receiving?

Buffalo Tom is (from left) Chris Colbourn, Bill Janowitz and Tom McGinnis

Where the Buffalo roam

Bill: In the States it's getting kind of weird, we're starting to get Top-40 airplay...

Bands like us [are getting played] next to [artists like] Mariah Carey now. That's really cool, that's like how it was when we were growing up, in the early '70s, where you turn on the AM radio and it would be everything, like Gordon Lightfoot and Elton John and Sister Sledge. And that was great, that's sort of what we're more about than anybody like The Replacements or Husker Du, who are more directed.

Why did you decide to pursue a music career?

Chris: Well, we got kicked out of school. (Laughs.) For us, being in a rock band is that fantasy job you have—like being a professional golfer—you don't think of it as really possible to make a career out of it when you start. You know, you get some friends together, play some parties, and you don't think it's going to go that far, but it kind of snowballed.

Bill: And it's more like a job than people think it is... I studied English in school because I didn't want to be a salesman, study business—that would be the worst thing. But what we're doing is so much like (changes tone), "Oh, hi, nice to meet you, please play our record, this is what we have to offer your station." It's so much a sales rep. It's more of that stuff than actually getting out on stage and playing. It's sad, actually. (Laughs.) It is work.

Why has the British press had such an overwhelming response to you?

Chris: We've always gone over there, right from the start. Our main music label, Beggar's Banquet, is based in London. Our first tour ever was in Europe, not the U.S., so it gave us an understanding... it was at an era when they were really welcoming American guitar bands, and we were produced by J Mascis, of course, and that really did help a huge amount. And then later, that trust became really troublesome—so it's funny, it works both ways for us. But that's been one of the really great things about playing in the last few years: travelling in Europe, Australia and Japan. That's one of the cool things that I've done. Until recently our following has been actually bigger than a lot of the places in the U.S.

On your Japanese tour as well?

Bill: Japan's a different thing for us. It was our first time over there, and our records had kind of shoddy distribution, a little shaky. But in the end it was a good thing. We played three shows in Tokyo, two shows with The Lemonheads and one on our own. You know, great for our first time someplace. When people think of Japan they think of just mania, and there is that element of it. By our second show, instead of just coming up to The Lemonheads people started coming up to us, and it's way different from over here—taking pictures, autographing everything.

How about the "alternative" label—does that drive you insane you like it does other bands?

Bill: (Laughs) What is that? It's just sooo silly—it's just a marketing term, really. I don't know if it hurts us, if it probably helps us a bit. My little brother will only buy something—and everything—if it's labelled "alternative"—The Spin Doctors, Alice In Chains—anything that's "alternative." Which is hard for us to think of The Spin Doctors as being "alternative," not to put the band down or anything—it just sounds like your basic rock n' roll.

How did No Alternative come about and how did it affect you as a band?

Chris: That's interesting. We had been asked to do that project during Birdbrain...so we had always agreed to do this, then they got the project together last year. And they said they had Nirvana, Smashing Pumpkins, and all this thing... and we asked if they still wanted us to do it, and they said "aw, of course!" (Laughs.) We want to do things to help out. Um, I think we get somewhat overshadowed by a lot of those big bands—I never remember any reviews that mention our songs, but that's okay. Our first priority was to get involved more for the effort than really trying to be part of the alternative club. We've never really quite fit with that crowd, we've definitely shared some audiences, but I think we lean a little towards the club sound.

Queen's Journal: How it was to work with J Mascis? Is there any possibility that you would work with him again, and if so, would you want to?

Chris: Never! That hasted?! (Laughs.) J is really unusual because he's got a really unusual personality than a lot of people (Laughs).

Q: Is he still based in Amherst, Massachusetts, and living with his parents?

Chris: Actually, he's moved to New York... I think it got to a point where we needed someone to help with our first record—we didn't know anyone that had ever made a record—and there's J, from school, this guy that we'd seen around. So it was really good to have someone who had not only made a record, but also who right away was telling me, "Don't listen to the engineers, you can play your bass out of the guitar, if you want—don't listen to these guys tell you what to do." And they always do tell you what to do, that's been my experience ever since I've gone to those places. So it was really good early advice, we didn't have a lot of experience or any real direction. So it was good advice.

Q: So it was good advice at the time, but you don't see yourselves working with him in the future?

Bill: Yeah, well, I don't know. We may work with him again. There was a point when we sort of outgrew that situation—it's a matter of doing things a couple of times before you want to do something new, anyway. We got used to the studio. But now, J's really learning more. He's really going to become a real producer someday. It will probably be his main thing at some point. He might even get out of performance—I don't know I'm really just guessing. But, I think he's really seriously producing—he really knows a lot more. We're still friends with him, but we don't see him that often. A lot of people we came up with in Boston we see in the oddest places, you know, wherever we cross paths.

Overall, it was a great night. Opening bands were Toronto's own The Benders (watch out for them to put on a good show in Kingston later on in April), and a very loud, but lacking st johnny (a new guitar band from Connecticut signed to Thurston Moore's label). Buffalo Tom put on an amazingly energetic performance, playing roughly a 15 song set, with one encore (although there was enough demand for two, if not three). If you ever have the opportunity to see the band, don't pass it up—Buffalo Tom is one of the best live bands I've seen in a long time. Incidentally, rumour has it that the band, while in Toronto, taped an episode of Casualty (a classic Y-TV show about teen rock band trying to make it big—on Thursdays at 8:00 pm) playing a back-up, no name band in a bar scene. Watch for it (watch the show anyway, it's cheesy, yet somehow addictive). Also, listen to CFRG's Ascension, tonight from 9-10 pm. on CFRG, 101.9 FM for the replay of this interview (and for extra fun, why not read along?).

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

beck • bjork • cypress hill • ministry • redd kross • white zombie • kmfdm • adorable • nine inch nails • soundgarden • house of pain • front 242 • nirvana • L7 • sisters of mercy • dinosaur jr. • juliana hatfield • jane's addiction • breeders • tool • beastie boys • radiohead • the smiths • quicksand • rage against the machine • the pixies • therapy?

Sure, you could go to another pub...loser!
clark hall pub • the unfknblvbl alternative

next week
 I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

MONDAY: NO TALENT NIGHT
 TUESDAY: BATTLE OF THE BANDS III
 WEDNESDAY: QUEEN'S PLAYERS
 THURSDAY: THE MAHONES CD RELEASE
 FRIDAY: QUEEN'S PLAYERS
 SATURDAY: DJ JOHNNY O

eat THE QP! today only: "the day everyone will be toking about" lunch

GRATEFUL DEAD DAY
 Live Band 4-8pm: KUBWA BWANA Dead, Phish, Allman Bros Bootlegs hats for sale & most original tie dye wins prize

Sunday at the Quiet Pub

8PM "THE POWER OF ONE"

at the QP!

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

Fat Spider: a ten-legged groove machine.

PHOTOS BY CHRIS PRICE

Battle of the Bands: Round Two

FAT SPIDER, PLAID DADDYS, AND BOOB TUBES ALFIE'S
 BY SEAN SARAKA AND RON CUNNANE

After the pure majesty of last year's battle of the sonic wills, this year's crop of musical debutantes has a lot to live up to. The second round of the Battle of the Bands 1994 was an eclectic ride through yesteryear with Styx driving and the Fall Guy riding shotgun. A sparsely attended affair, the contest had a festive mood nonetheless, and when Fat Spider took the stage as the first combatants it was obvious to one and all that it was going to be a big night full of big hair.

The Plaid Daddies rock Celtic style.

The Spiders' set began with a promising foray into country rock a la AC/DC. Showcasing complex arrangements and a strong rhythm section that just wouldn't quit, these groove happy funk-pups are the next Hawkwind waiting to happen. After a strong opening, the band settled into a comfortable though repetitive groove somewhere between Lynard Skynard, Black Sabbath, and Van Morrison. Set highlight, "Pyramid," saw the band reinterpreting "Stairway to Heaven" as a southern jam.

Unfortunately it seemed that at times the sheer virtuosity of the musicianship overwhelmed the songwriting. These classic rock kids obviously have so much fun turning everything into an endless jam that too often any chord progression will do. It also didn't help that the singer displayed the presence of Stephen Hawking reciting Keats. Despite impressive chops, they lacked advertising hooks, and left these reviewers restless.

After a brief intermission, the Plaid Daddys took the stage to deliver their own special brand of neo-celtic folk. Mixing in fiddle, mandolin, accordion and mouth organ, the Plaids went mad over a selection of originals and traditional covers. Lead singer Brendan "Plaid" Daddy's vocalizing was much improved over previous recordings, but often the tasty traditional elements of the Plaid Daddys' sound got lost in the mix.

Ultimately, the Plaid Daddys succeeded best with over-heated classics like "South Australia" and "Johnny McGurk" that drove the crowd to dance. The machine gun drums and martial prowess on songs like these brought a bit of Dublin to the trenches of Gallipoli. But some of the their more sensitive material lacked the drive to sustain the day. Given a little more heavy ammu-nitition, there's no doubt that these crazed Celts could have cleared the battlefield.

It was still anyone's ballgame when underdogs The Boob Tubes hopped the fence and entered the playground looking like backwater muscle toughs without the axle grease. Obviously unaccustomed to taking band names literally (Inbreds?...hmmm) the crowd was unprepared for the maelstrom of pop-culture terrorism that ensued in the form of TV theme songs and nothing but TV theme songs. In short, The Boob Tubes took the bar by force. Within seconds mass confusion was replaced by the Stockholm syndrome on a macro-level. Held hostage and loving it, the crowd was alternately bludgeoned and caressed with perfect covers of Magnum P.I., The Brady Bunch, WKRP, Dukes of Hazard, Barney Miller and many more.

Like B.F. Skinner with a Ray Gun, the band conducted this Pavlovian orgy with aplomb. Though the crowd was very loud, a residual resistance to such an overt attempt at Orwellian mind control and generational button pressing may account for the near empty dance floor. These reviewers fully expected the theme from Wonder Woman to turn Alfie's into one big orgasmic cyclotron of fun. Srrll, many people did clap very loudly, and well they should. Like Mona's facelift halfway through Who's the Boss' multi-year run, this performance was a watershed event in the annals of the banal but beautiful.

Clearly the Boob Tubes' valiant attempt at consciousness-raising was hardly destined for victory. Unfortunately the Plaid Daddys' reliance on covers, though a natural choice for any celtic band, left an opening for judges faced with the task of comparing apples to oranges. In the

The Boob Tubes win the crowd with recycled T.V. tunes.

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entree and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.
 Valid until April 30th, 1994
531-0600
 Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
 OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
 11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

FRI March 11
 Inbreds
 SAT March 12
 Weatherman
 Groovetube
 THURS March 17
 ST. Patrick's Day Bash

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan
 76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) Tel: 544-1966

ARMY SURPLUS STORE
 109 PRINCESS ST
 NEXT TO GOLDEN ROOSTER

TIME TO THINK ABOUT TREE PLANTING
SPRING INTO SPRING

AT THE ARMY SURPLUS STORE
 YOUR HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL TREE PLANTING NEEDS

- ☐ SLEEPING BAGS
- ☐ INSECT NETS
- ☐ BOOTS
- ☐ RAINWEAR
- ☐ GLOVES
- ☐ WORK PANTS
- ☐ BACK PACKS
- ☐ TENTS

AIR MATTRESS, BUG REPELLENT, FLASHLIGHTS, COMPASS, KNIVES, CAPS, UNDERWEAR
 MON/TUES/WED 9AM - 8PM
 THURS/FRI 9AM - 9PM
 SAT 9AM - 6PM
 SUN 12PM - 5PM
 546-0305

A movie to gripe about

WHAT'S EATING GILBERT GRAPE
DIRECTED BY LASSE HALLSTROM
CAPITOL THEATRE
BY CHRIS ZABEL

The transition from generally derided hit teen TV-show glory to justifiable big-screen success is a sticky business. Jason Priestly's Calendar Girl didn't generate a great deal of enthusiasm even among Beverly hardcores, and I can't think of many good reasons for seeing Buffy the Vampire Slayer other than getting to see Luke Perry in two different hairstyles (with bangs and slicked back). Still, even though 21 Jumpstreet is largely unjustifiable to people who aren't into the whole TV thing, Johnny Depp has emerged into a respectable movie career.

The reason he has succeeded where most have failed is that he has engineered his career with care. While the cast of Beverly Hills seem to be jumping at whatever bones are thrown their way, Depp has picked and chosen his way into a stardom which can be admired in full consciousness. Cry Baby might have seemed like "Grease III," but it was still super-cool, and Edward Scissorhands has got to make anyone's top-three greatest high-school-movies ever (quibbling with The Breakfast Club and Heathers could go on indefinitely). I don't mean to let down, only Benny and Joon wasn't a better idea than it probably looked like a better idea on the storyboard than on the screen. It must be admitted that one can perhaps over-think the whole sell-out issue and go a little too far trying to avoid it.

Continuing this eccentric movement, What's Eating Gilbert Grape does a good job of missing most of neurotic-teen-movie conventions, but forgets to have anything interesting to say.

Gilbert (Depp) lives in a pinprick on the map of Iowa where, after his father hung himself in the basement, he is pretty much in charge of the family. His mother isn't much help as her 500 pounds of flesh are nearly immobile and haven't been outside the house in seven years. Also complicating Gilbert's life is his retarded brother Arnie (Leonardo DiCaprio, who snuck an Oscar nod with the role) who he is pretty much in charge of. We can soon piece together that the thing eating Gilbert is a somewhat heightened and unusually explainable version of adolescent frustration; because of his obligation to his family, he has no life of his own.

The problem here is that this character manifests himself only in blank staring and non-dialogue. Johnny movies are outstanding because his characters have always been enigmatic and unique; here he is an unquotable non-presence. And, matters are only worsened when Becky (Juliette Lewis) rolls onto the scene in a big silver camper to wake Gilbert out of his stupor by "teaching him how to live." This is where the movie crosses from boring to unbearable.

Lewis was fine as a pseudo-intellectual in Husbands and Wives because that was the joke, but here she isn't supposed to be funny. Her disgustingly sincere explanations of how she "isn't into externals" and how she loves the sky because "it's so limitless" are jarringly nauseating. She's been finding her way into laudable movies recently, but if she doesn't figure out how to delimit pretensions subtly (the key to all fine movies), she's going to find herself making action/adventure flicks with Judd Nelson. This movie's crimes against palatable eccentricity just become more and more atrocious until you couldn't recommend it to anyone other than those who simply want the satisfaction of knowing that they've seen all of Johnny Depp's movies.

Also present in this distraction from seeing Reality Bites again is Crispin Glover—the super-disturbed hero condemned to perpetual bit-partdom. Crispin has fallen (with Steve Buscemi) into the sub-sub-category of actors who are obviously cool and talented, but are of a particularly uncastable variety. Unless Crispin has a script written for him, he usually isn't appropriate for more than thirty seconds or so: which is about what he gets here as an apprentice undertaker who hangs around the diner with Gilbert. Few people who have heard of his album or have held a signed edition of Oak Mot, will question his right to more substantial parts.

What's Eating Gilbert Grape? Nothing worth making a movie about. I gather it was a pretty good novel first, so I suppose interested parties should be referred to the less readily consumable version. Still, whatever sins Johnny has committed here, he isn't playing the multi-million game, and he certainly deserves several more chances.

A movie for the Johnny Depp try hards.

An epic performance

Queen's Drama shows that the gods must be crazy

THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN
WRITTEN BY BERTOLT BRECHT
DIRECTED BY TIM FORT QUEEN'S DRAMA
BY DAVID LEACH

Exiled from his home in Germany, Bertolt Brecht was writing his play The Good Woman of Setzuan as World War Two began to unfold—the second time in his life that the lamps of Europe were turned off to plunge the civilization of which he was so critical into catastrophic war. Still, despite his despair at Europe's determination to transform itself into a bloody hecatomb again, Brecht believed that art could stand in opposition to the follies of humanity, that, in his own words, "the playwright's admonitory voice would be audible in the theatres of various great cities, warning that if you sup with the devil, you need a long spoon."

One of the great virtues of Brecht's "epic theatre" is that it often presents itself in the outward trappings of a medieval morality play, while withholding any easy morals. Brecht wanted his audiences to resolve the ethical dilemmas on their own, to engage their rational faculties, to avoid the facile empathy or easy catharsis of traditional drama. So no two productions of his plays are bound to be the same if they are to confront their specific historical contexts and differing audiences. "Only performance," Brecht said of The Good Woman, "can decide between possible variations."

To this end Queen's Drama has done an insightful and witty job of jazzing up The Good Woman for the audiences of 1994.

The theme of the play, at its most basic, deals with the conflict between ideal justice and social necessity. Three gods descend upon the city of Setzuan searching for a thoroughly good person. What they find is the penniless Shen Te ("Divine Virtue"), yet another prostitute with a heart of gold, on whom they bestow 1000 silver pieces so that she may better prove her goodness.

However, greedy neighbours, thieving relatives, and a heartless landlady soon beset the well-meaning Shen Te. She seems destined to return to the penury from which she has just risen until she adopts the fedora-wearing guise of a fictitious male cousin, Shui Ta ("Flood Tide"), who is heartless enough to say "No" to the many demands put upon Shen Te. The drama continues in this Jekyll and Hyde fashion, alternating between the much-loved philanthropist Shen Te and the much-reviled slave-driver Shui Ta, until they are finally revealed to be the same person.

Brecht is a master of ironic juxtaposition and dramatic playfulness, and director Tim Fort brings these aspects out sharply, breaking down not only the notorious fourth wall between the actors and audience, but also the line between play and not-play. The first half "begins" as various actors milling with the arriving audience, selling "squid" to the newcomers, ascend the stage and continue milling about up there. The second half opens with the audience being asked to play Name the Gods, in an atmosphere that is one part T.V. game show and another part gospel sing-a-long.

Fort gets solid performances from all of his cast. Stephanie Baptist as Shen Te/Shui Ta unearths the many complexities within this character struggling against all odds to be "good." Dan Williams, as Shen Te's devious lover, comes across with hormone-heavy overacting a la Keanu Reeves, remarkably appropriate to the melodrama of his role. And Suresh John's performance as Wong the Water-seller moves from Puckish humour to the hypnotizing rage of his solo song then back again with equal deftness.

James Sandefur's elaborate set design is used well, while Anthony Bastianon's original score skillfully manipulates the mood of the scenes, and both come together best in the many comic interludes and choreographed songs such as the grimly funny "Song of the Eighth Elephant." When the play lapses, it's after these entertaining and energetic segments, as the cast seems almost reluctant to return to the mere words and actions of the play itself.

But the momentum always picks up again, rushing towards the grand finale in which the three shrinking divinities, who are actually marionettes of Elvis, Howdy Doody, and a joint-smoking Jerry Rubin, ascend into the heavens above the audience while the cast sings the Hallelujah chorus from Handel's Messiah—undoubtedly one of the more surreal moments in Queen's theatre history!

If we must have a simple moral drawn from this impressive production, it's not the darkly ironic chant of "We will lead good lives in the name of Brecht" that the cast offers us, but rather the belief that both within the ethically grey world of The Good Woman and our own puzzling modern society, the gods must surely be crazy.

This Saturday & Sunday, get 50¢ off any movie from our foreign/educational section. And don't forget $1 movies every Monday, Tuesday, & Wednesday from

VIDS IN THE HALL

Open every day from 3-11pm in JDUC

Roots®

CHUKA BOOT
NEWS STYLES LADIES $115.00

DEEP LUG RUBBER OUTSOLE • BUILT-IN WEIGHT RELIEF
STEEL SHANK, PADDED ARCH SUPPORT CAMBREL SOCK LINING.

Pay No Tax!
SALE PRICE $89.99
* (Some exclusions may apply)
24 Princess Street 546-7668

Amsterdam for breakfast,
Paris for lunch,
Milan for dinner.

A European Railpass can help you get the most out of your trip to Europe. There are passes to suit every budget and itinerary, and we issue them on the spot. To find out more, contact TRAVEL CUTS today!

Here are a couple of samples of the many European railpasses available:
Youth Flexipass
Any 5 days in 2 months $344
Any 10 days in 2 months $538
Youth Europass
3 countries, 5 days in 2 months $268
4 countries, 8 days in 2 months $382

TRAVEL CUTS
1-800-667-2887
(THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)
The Travel Company of The Canadian Federation of Students
CFS CFE
CFC
CFC

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

Air conditioning

AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect.
Priced Right!

SmartLease
$189
per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates
$750
bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird Le Coupe on a 36 month lease for $189 per month (excluding tax, license, title, and dealer fees). A minimum down payment of $1,499 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Freight, taxes, license, insurance and fees not included. Offers apply to 1994 lease or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade-in may be necessary. Dealer may require for qualified rental customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post-secondary institution during the period September 1, 1993 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

Hey Beaver!

HASKELL AND THE CLEAVERS INDEPENDENT
BY DARYL WHETTER

It began as something rolled and passed in the dim lights of The Shot, an ever changing lineup filled with a loose mixture of jazz.

After nearly three years since their inception, Kingston's Haskell and the Cleavers have released their debut indie. The self-titled disc (hey it's a great name) offers 12 jazz classics featuring the voice of Andy Poole and brimming with the talent of a five piece band.

In the mainstream world of Rolling Stone and The Globe and Mail, the dry, abrasive voices of the likes of William Burroughs, Leonard Cohen or Tom Waits are invariable and repeatedly described as sounding like "whisky." In that case, I can only compare Poole's voice to a single malt scotch, a warm smoothness with which you could fill a tumbler after tumbler. The smoothness is uniform, as in the highs and lows of Rodgers/Hart's "Where or When," or the vocal gear shifting of Cole Porter's "You Do Something To Me." On the disc's only duet, "Bye Bye Blackbird," the reservoirs of sweetness in Poole's voice come through the juxtaposition with the slightly tinier, slightly bent voice of guest Sam Pinciro. Another tumbler please.

This isn't to say that Poole's voice completely upstages the disc. The lilting keys of Paul "Daddy" Chabot and the polymorphous trombone of Murray "Wink" Wilson not only drive the songs, they threaten to drive away with them. Wink swings his trombone through robust to raunchy, with some beautiful mute work. And Doug Rooks' waltzing bass is adorable in the bridge of the "When You're Smilin'/Pennies From Heaven" medley.

For those of you who would slam the Haskell's for giving us 40 year old music, I have two responses to this charge of Harry Connick Jr.-ism. First and foremost, it's jazz. It's improvisational and interpretive. They're never the same songs again. See them live and then we'll talk. And secondly, if it sounds good, listen to it, I haven't gone blind yet.

Not only is this disc great music, it's also a great reminder to inhale the Haskell's live and improvising. Copies of the disc are available at most of the downtown record shops as well as the Kingston Brew Pub.

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF WEDNESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Reality Bites 7:10 9:25
The Chase 7:15 9:20
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:45
Schindler's List 8:00
In the Name of the Father 6:45 9:35
Greedy 7:00 9:35

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
On Deadly Ground 7:15 9:35
The Snapper 6:55 9:35
Angie 6:45 9:30
What's Eating Gilbert Grape 6:50 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30
The Gelayay 9:25
Blork Check 7:05 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)

Friday & Saturday
Le Sexe des Etalies 7:00
Orlando 9:00
Sunday and Monday
Orlando 7:00
Le Sexe des Etalies 9:00
Tuesday
Into the West 2:00 & 7:00
Orlando 9:00
Wednesday
The Secret Garden 2:00
Neria 7:00
The Wedding Banquet 9:40
Thursday
Ordinary Magic 2:00
Afrique, Je Te Plumerai & These Hands 7:00
The Wedding Banquet 9:40

CLUBS

FRIDAY
The Toucan: The Inbreds
Duke's: Michael George and the Jive
The Quiet Pub: Groful Dead Tribute Night
Ben's Pub: The Undesirables

SATURDAY
The Toucan: Wetherman Graoavelube
Ben's Pub: The Undesirables
Duke's: Gaudibirds

TUESDAY

Alfie's: Battle of the Bonds: Los Seomonsters, Seven, Thorax
Stages: Colin James with David Go Go

WEDNESDAY
The Shot/Haskell and the Cleavers
THURSDAY
Ben's: Ion Jamieson
The Toucan: The Mahones
Grad Club: St. Patrick's Day Celebration with Paddytown Fling at 8pm

PERFORMANCES

GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess St. (546-5698)
The Ontario Ballet Theatre presents Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp.
Mar. 13 at 12 p.m.
Tickets are $8 at the Grand Theatre Box Office.

THEATRE

THEOLOGICAL HALL
Queen's Drama presents Bertolt Brecht's The Good Woman of Setzvon.
Mar. 8-13 at 8 p.m. in Convocation Hall
Tickets: $8 (adult) and $6 (students/seniors) and are available at the Drama Department Desk, Theological Hall.
For more info.: 545-2104

DOMINO THEATRE & THEATRE 5
370 King St. West (634-2602)
Domino Theatre presents Henrik Ibsen's Ghosts
Mar. 11-12 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $8 at the Grand Theatre or at the door.

Theatre 5 presents Peter Fullon's Losing Patients
March 17-19

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess St. (546-5698)
La Bouche Theatre presents Speaking in Tongues.
Mar. 17-18 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $7 at the door.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent
(545-2190)

SPECIAL EVENTS:
Mar. 13 from 1:30 4:30 p.m.

Free Drop in Studio Program for Families:
Children are invited to dress up and pose against painted backdrops to create living pictures based on paintings in the galleries. Parents are welcome to photograph the results.

OPENING EXHIBITIONS...

Mar. 13
Shayne Dark: Hunting the Ego. Meet the artist at the opening reception from 2-4 p.m.

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Long Collection of African Art through Apr. 3

The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism through Apr. 28

To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinson through May 8

The Ethics of Making: The farming rayons of John Heward

EDWARD DAY GALLERY
253 Ontario Street (547-0774)
through April 2

North American premiere of mixed media works on canvas by Alexander Ivanovitch Sigov.

WARNING!
Exposure to Buddy Waisname and the Other Fellers may produce fits of laughter!

Newfoundland's Favourite musical/comedy trio

BUDDY WAISNAME AND THE OTHER FELLERS

"If laughter is the best medicine, Buddy Waisname and the Other Fellers are the miracle cure of the '90s"
- Grand Falls Advertiser
"... a unique melding of traditional and folk music, shot right up the middle with the zaniest humor this side of Monty Python"
- Sunday Times Express

Friday, March 18, 8 P.M.
Grand Theatre
Kingston
53D-2D5D
Tickets $17.50 incl. GST
Reserved Seating
Also appearing Mar. 19 - Centennial S.S. Auction, Belleville. Tickets at Briar Patch, Century Place (988-9896) or SAM the Record Man, Downtown Belleville & Ouinte
Mail. Info: Jim Ford & Associates Inc. (416) 483-0663

Are Your Seminars Superb?

Are Your Classes Classic?

Is Your Professor Perfect?

If so nominate this OUTSTANDING Individual for the ASUS Teaching Excellence Award

Nominations are due on March 25th

Applications can be picked up at the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Office at 183 University or at the AMS Infobank, JDUC. For more info call 545-6278.

Recognize Excellence

PREREGISTRATION FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

ATTENTION ALL ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS AND STUDENTS TAKING ARTS AND SCIENCE ELECTIVES

Students wishing to take Arts and Science courses in the 1994-95 academic year must submit their PREREGISTRATION requests through QCARD beginning 14 March 1994. Information concerning preregistration can be picked up beginning 7 March at the following sites:

- Faculty of Arts and Science:
Mackintosh-Corry Hall, Rooms F100 and F200
Departmental Offices
- Across campus:
Douglas Library (reference desk)
Education Library - West Campus, McArthur Hall
INFOBANK - John Deutsch University Centre
Registrar's Office - Richardson Hall, Room 103
Victoria Hall - Residence Desk
- Other Faculty Offices:
School of Business - Dunning Hall, Room 120
Applied Science - Ellis Hall, Room 101
School of Nursing - Catarqui Building
School of Rehabilitation Therapy - Louise D. Acton Building, Room 202

It is the student's responsibility to pick up the information, READ contents carefully and follow preregistration directions and procedures.

*QCARD is a computerized information system which allows you to record Arts & Science preregistration requests, view your marks, change your address, etc.

Tonight & Saturday Ladies and Gentlemen!
Mesdams et Messieurs!

Every Thursday
DIPSOMANIA!
The Party

AJ's is proud to present ...

THE LOWEST OF THE LOW

Come Early! Cheap 7:30-9:30! with guests U.I.C.

HANGAR

RESTAURANT & BAR

Every Sunday WILD BLUES YONDER! NO COVER! 2 FOR 1 CHICKEN!

Coming Soon! BOURBON • ROAD APPLES
BARSTOOL PROPHETS

EVERY MONDAY
20¢ WINGS
YIPPEE!

SHARPEN UP!
N.T.M TRIVIA
Tuesday nights
Come down and
Challenge the Bar!
Starts at 8:30pm

I'm Too Young to Graduate!!!!

Committee applications for the Arts & Science Graduation Formal will be available beginning March 14.

Positions Available:

1 Contender	2 Publicity
2 Operations	1 Secretary
4 Decorations	2 Fund Raising
1 Food and Wine/Entertainment

For more information or to pick up an application, please stop by the Arts & Science Undergraduate Office at 183 University or call 545-6278.

WHAT'S UP?

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

Pick up what's up forms at the AMS office Level 350C. Submission for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm

MARCH

This Week

Friday, March 11

The first ARTSOCI '97 Semi Formal is tonight 8 pm at Portsmith Harbour. Tickets are $7 and are on sale today at Mac Corry and at the door. Buses leave Mac Corry parking lot and West Campus from 7:30 to 9:00 and return from the Portnorth between 12-1:30.

The Queen's Association for Baha Studies is presenting the second of a three-part discussion series on Healing Racism, entitled: The Struggles for Native People in this Society at 32 Queen's Crescent (between Ban Righ Hall and Stirling Hall) at 5:30 pm. All members of the Queen's community are welcome to attend.

Saturday, March 12

Annual Culture Night by the African and Caribbean Students' Association, Grant Hall at 6:30 pm. Pick up tickets at I.C. or at the door.

Monday, March 14

Come to an Education panel discussion on affordability, accessibility, accountability and action. 8 pm at the McLaughin Room, JDUC. Various students and community organizations will be in attendance. If you care about your education, be there. Brought to you by the AMS.

QPID presents the second speaker in its speaker series. Reena Kokveja will discuss "Women in Development" at 7 pm in Stirling C.

Thursday, March 17

St. Patrick's Day Tri-Pub Smoker! Buy your tickets to the best parties in town. On sale in Mac Corry Mon-Wed 11-2 pm. Tri Pub T-shirts will also be available.

Feature

The QCSA-QSEAC Graduation Banquet will be held on March 26 at Mino's Village Restaurant. Tickets will be on sale in Mac Corry beginning March 17. For more info, contact Jean 547-9918 or Ray 549-2595.

Queen's Medical Outreach presents the annual Health For All auction to raise funds to help defray the cost of sending a volunteer team of medical, nursing, and rehabilitation therapy students to Guyana, South America. The auction, featuring goods and services donated by Kingston and area retailers, will be held from 3:00-7:00 P.M. Friday March 18, 1994, in the Lower Ceilidh, JDUC, preceded by an item showing at 12:30. Come out and get some great bargains and help support Queen's Medical Outreach!

The Queen's Collegium Musicum directed by Dr. Olgo E. Malyskko presents Music from the Fourteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries, Sunday March 20 at 4:00 pm at St. James Church. Admission is $6 for adult and $3 for students and seniors.

Enjoy original compositions by Queen's School of Music students and faculty at a New Music Concert Tuesday March 22 at 1 pm in Room 120 of Harrison-LeCoinne Hall. Admission is Free.

Join the Queen's Choral Ensemble directed by Mark Sirett with William Madox, organ, Wednesday March 23 at 8 pm in St. George Cathedral for music by Handel, Palestrina, and Thompson, Kodaly's Laudes Organi and Spirituals. Tickets are $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors and are available at the door.

The final speaker in QPID's speaker series will be Chris Beaman, with a showing of the film "Ancient Futures", at 7 pm on Wednesday March 23 in Stirling B.

The Queen's Percussion Ensemble, directed by Greg Runions presents an exciting Free concert of Contemporary Music Friday March 25 at 3 pm in Room 120 of Harrison-LeCoinne Hall. Enjoy works by Steve Reich, Edgar Varise, Thomas Gauger, Elliot Del Borgia and others.

Enjoy Tradition and Big Band Music with the Queen's Jazz Ensemble directed by Greg Runions, Monday March 28 at 8 pm in Grant Hall. Tickets are $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors and are available at the door.

The school of Music presents the Queen's Wind Ensemble directed by Gordon Craig and the Queen's Percussion Ensemble directed by Greg Runions, Tuesday March 29 at 8 pm in Grant Hall. Tickets are available at the door. $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors.

Feature

The QCSA-QSEAC Graduation Banquet will be held on March 26 at Mino's Village Restaurant. Tickets will be on sale in Mac Corry beginning March 17. For more info, contact Jean 547-9918 or Ray 549-2595.

Queen's Medical Outreach presents the annual Health For All auction to raise funds to help defray the cost of sending a volunteer team of medical, nursing, and rehabilitation therapy students to Guyana, South America. The auction, featuring goods and services donated by Kingston and area retailers, will be held from 3:00-7:00 P.M. Friday March 18, 1994, in the Lower Ceilidh, JDUC, preceded by an item showing at 12:30. Come out and get some great bargains and help support Queen's Medical Outreach!

The Queen's Collegium Musicum directed by Dr. Olgo E. Malyskko presents Music from the Fourteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries, Sunday March 20 at 4:00 pm at St. James Church. Admission is $6 for adult and $3 for students and seniors.

Enjoy original compositions by Queen's School of Music students and faculty at a New Music Concert Tuesday March 22 at 1 pm in Room 120 of Harrison-LeCoinne Hall. Admission is Free.

Join the Queen's Choral Ensemble directed by Mark Sirett with William Madox, organ, Wednesday March 23 at 8 pm in St. George Cathedral for music by Handel, Palestrina, and Thompson, Kodaly's Laudes Organi and Spirituals. Tickets are $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors and are available at the door.

The final speaker in QPID's speaker series will be Chris Beaman, with a showing of the film "Ancient Futures", at 7 pm on Wednesday March 23 in Stirling B.

The Queen's Percussion Ensemble, directed by Greg Runions presents an exciting Free concert of Contemporary Music Friday March 25 at 3 pm in Room 120 of Harrison-LeCoinne Hall. Enjoy works by Steve Reich, Edgar Varise, Thomas Gauger, Elliot Del Borgia and others.

Enjoy Tradition and Big Band Music with the Queen's Jazz Ensemble directed by Greg Runions, Monday March 28 at 8 pm in Grant Hall. Tickets are $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors and are available at the door.

The school of Music presents the Queen's Wind Ensemble directed by Gordon Craig and the Queen's Percussion Ensemble directed by Greg Runions, Tuesday March 29 at 8 pm in Grant Hall. Tickets are available at the door. $6 for adult and $3 for students/seniors.

CLASSIFIEDS

Classified ads are $5.00 for students, $8.50 for non-students, and free for Lost & Found. Submissions are due Tuesday at 2 p.m. for publication in the Friday issue. Please submit ads in person at 272 Earl Street. Call 545-2800 for more information.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

NORTHPORT POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware dinnersets and wedding registrations. Contact us at 1 476-4918 to make an appointment.

LOOKING TO VOLUNTEER in the health care field? Meet local health agency representatives at the Community Health Resources Fair - sponsored by Student Health, Thursday March 17, 1994 in the JIOC 10 - 3 p.m.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

LESBIAN AND GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2960 - staffed Monday - Friday 7 - 9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, a recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

FINAL EXAMS ARE ONLY ONE MONTH AWAY. Come and discuss health with us at FOR THE HEALTH OF IT - a display of 25 local health agencies. Thursday March 17, 1994, 10 - 3 p.m. in the JIOC.

HEALTHY EATING CONCERNS? Call the CONFIDENTIAL HEALTHLINE, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Monday - Thursday 6 - 9 p.m. 545-6000 ext. 4444. Leave messages anytime.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House 51 Queen's Crescent. Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-IN Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome.

COMMUNITY HEALTH RESOURCES FAIR. Meet the health resource people on and off campus. Thursday March 17, 1994 10 - 3 p.m. in the JIOC. Come on out just FOR THE HEALTH OF IT!

INTERESTED in promoting healthy attitudes to food, weight and body image? Consider volunteering with the PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM.

COPIING with academic life can be a challenge. PEER HEALTH OUTREACH helps. Maybe you can too. SEX in the 90's is a risky proposition. Promoting healthy decision making is one of the outreach opportunities available through PEER HEALTH OUTREACH.

WANT to know more about PEER HEALTH OUTREACH? Call the HEALTH LINE 545-6000 ext. 4444 Monday through Thursday from 6 - 9:00 p.m. and talk to a current Peer Health Educator.

PEER HEALTH OUTREACH PROGRAM - volunteer applications are available at Student Health or Infolink. Due by March 10. For more information call Diane Nolling, Health Educator 545-6712.

THE CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM is a safe place for people who are at risk from excessive alcohol consumption staffed by student volunteers working with an experienced Detox supervisor. Volunteer applications for the Campus Observation Room are available at Student Health Service, Residence Life Office and Infolink. For more information call Diane Nolling 545-6712.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

QUEEN'S ASTRONOMY CLUB presents Dr. Martin Duncan discussing chaos and the stability of the solar system. Stirling A March 13, 1994 at 8:30 pm. Free admission. General meeting at 8:00 pm.

ARTS '97 PARTY OF THE YEAR Mystery Read Trip?? Friday March 18. Bring a friend and party till you drop. Only $10 - Wear your coveralls. Tickets sold in Leonard Cate.

??? MYSTERY ROAD TRIP ??? Art-Sci '97 Mystery Road Trip, Friday, March 18. Watch for details. Where oh where, has my little trash gone?

HEY! ART-SCI '97! Listen up. SEMI-FORMAL FRIDAY, MARCH 11, $7. Bring a date. Bring a friend. Bring yourself.

EURAIL PASSES Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available - Oort detail. Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your study group. Good rooms, photocopying facilities and easel available! Call Julia at 545-2958 or drop by the Student Affairs Centre (The Grey House).

THE GREY HOUSE, at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, The Queen's Women's Centre, and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY BASH!!! Buy your tickets Mon - Wed, 11 - 2 p.m. Mac-Corry for the 2nd annual TRI-PUB smoker. Allies, O.P. and the Grad Club are the place to be Thursday March 17th.

SELF DEFENCE FOR WOMEN. Learn simple and effective self defence techniques in case of a threatening situation. Queen's Wado Kai Karate Club is bringing a 5th degree black belt for a seminar TOMORROW and SUNDAY. Register TODAY at Mac-Corry across from the Hill or call 549-7754.

QUICK, ACCURATE WORDPROCESSING of documents: theses, resumes, reports, research documents, letters. Excellent quality on laser printer. Most often 24-hour service. Call after 6 p.m. Audrey: 548-7378.

DO THE DANCE FOR HEART... Light aerobics on Sunday, March 13. Pick up a pledge form at the Infolink, Core, or PEC and bring to Ross Gym at 1 p.m.

DRINK GREEN beer and buy green condoms - celebrate St. Patty's Day in style! Condoms and goodies on sale March 17th in the JIOC and Mac-Corry.

RUN IN THE TRICOLOUR MILE on Sunday March 20th! 94 and win "big" prizes. Starts at 1:00 p.m. at Queen's Phys. Ed. Centre. Register in Mac-Corry March 14 - 18, $3.00.

WHAT'S THE BEST way to celebrate St. Patty's Day? Have sex, of course!! Pick up some festive green condoms at the JIOC and Mac-Corry on March 17th.

LSAT-MCAT GRE intensive three day seminars. Systematic approach to proven test-taking strategies. Expert instructors. Simulated exam. Free repeat policy. Full money back guarantee. Seminar fee $195. OXFORD SEMINARS 531-9016.

WANT TO SUBLET your room? Find out how not to get burned! Free information from Town/Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

ARE YOU A LOVER not a leprechaun? Then pick up some lovely green condoms and goodies at JDUC and Mac-Corry on St. Patty's Day.

UTILITIES EXTRAY! You need to arrange in advance a contract with the Public Utilities Commission or no water, gas or electricity for you! Call the PUC at 546-1187 for information.

THE LANDLORD is to pay the tenant 6% interest annually on the last month's rent. Every bit counts!! If you want information call Queen's Town/Gown Liaison office at 545-6745.

COME OUT TO THE QUEEN'S WRITERS GUILD. At the Grad Club on Wednesdays, nine pm.

HELP WANTED

EXPANDING photofinishing is hiring staff for a new store in Kingston. Full and part time positions starting in March. Apply with resume: 1 HR Photoworks, 107 Princess St.

WANTED

TWO HOUSEMATES NEEDED for other great house on other corner of Earl and Aberdeen, the yellow one with the yard you cut across on your way to class. Call 544-3154 anytime. It's close, em.

MALES 18 PLUS needed for Psych 500 questionnaire on heterosexual dating and sexual behaviour. Paid $6.00 for 30 minutes. Call 545-6552, leave first name and phone number for "Lori's Study".

FEMALE WANTED to live at Earl and Allred (close to campus), big house, small room, small rent, great people. Call 547-9359.

ROOMATE WANTED: excellent location, spacious bedrooms. To live with 2 females. Please call Sue or Amy at 545-0675.

WANTED TO BUY Commerce '96 jacket, size 44-48. Must be in good condition. You name the price - will pay reasonable amount. Call John Grant at 548-3895.

FOUR THIRD YEAR GUYS looking for two more housemates to live at a very nice location (Brock and University), next year. Give us a call at 549-6936.

HOUSEMATE WANTED Five 95's looking for one female, non-smoker to share CHEAP, fully-equipped, close to campus house. Call today 547-2406.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

STUDENT CLASS AIRFARES, budget charters, custom long haul airfares. Odyssey Travel offers a huge range of airfare options. For help with your travel plans call 549-3553.

FOR SALE: Single size males bed with futon mattress. Great for small room since it has 3 drawers built in for extra storage. Excellent condition. Available now or May 1st. $200. Call Tracey at 531-3088.

HEY FROSH! Need furniture for next year? Get it from me cheap! Bed, 2 desks, chest of drawers, bookshelf etc. Call Simon at 545-1016.

SPIN THAT WHEEL The total stereo system for sale. Amp, tuner, 2 tape decks, 2 turntables, mixer, equalizer and speakers. No ghetto home is complete without tunes! Call Simon at 545-1016.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 6 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Science '44 Co-Op at 544-4505. Everyone welcome to apply.

SIX PERSON HOUSE for rent, corner of Albert and Johnson. $1440 per month. Call 548-7127 for details.

FOUR OR FIVE BEDROOM house at 263 Earl Street, Earl and Division, $1253 per month. Close to campus. Available May 1st. Lease required. Call 542-5964.

4 BEDROOM, University area, large energy-efficient rooms, modern, clean, appliances, laundry, photocopyer, very low utilities, summer subletters available. $275 per room plus utilities. Only one unit left. Call 549-3069.

TWO 6 BEDROOM houses for rent. Both in great condition. Located at 122 Montiel Street and 430 Union Street. Must be seen. Call Kathy at 546-1817 if interested.

SUMMER SUBLET: Starting May 1st - up to 5 bedrooms available - 2 full baths - July furnished - washer/dryer - 5 minute walk to campus/downtown - $160 per month negotiable. Call 547-0946.

3 BEDROOM APARTMENT: Close to downtown and campus, fully carpeted, dishwasher, central air/heat, laundry, security building, loft bedroom with own bedroom. A Great place to call home! For info call Maggie, Beth or Kerry at 547-8050.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to Infolink or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: Silver and Gold Chain link Seiko watch. Lost Tuesday between JDUC and Chemistry building. Engraving on back (IMF 93). Sentimental value. Reward offered. Call 549-7959.

LOST: In Mac-Corry: a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Blue Varsity 1992-93 rugby jacket on Friday, March 4th at A.J.'s. Contained cork key chain. Reward. No questions asked. Please call 542-2010.

BORROWED: Burgundy "Supercycle" from 176 University Ave. Victim of an Affies crowd, Friday February 25th. 10 years old, brakes completely useless and stuck in 1st gear, but extreme sentimental value. No questions - understanding owner. Please phone 542-2010.

LOST: at the ArtSci '94 formal: a Pentax zoom 105-R camera. If you have it please, please, please call 542-2455.

LOST: '96 Commerce jacket (46 chest) at Cocamo's on Friday March 4th. If you know someone who found one that night, or who took the wrong jacket, call me. Reward - you name it, you got it! Rob 531-3554.

LOST: Heart-shaped gold locket on Saturday February 12th. Extreme sentimental value - engraving on the back. Reward offered. Please call Elizabeth at 545-0005.

LOST: Blue '94 leather jacket. January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Man's Seiko watch at Leonard Caleleria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orvil at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Allies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: A Fendi watch near Victoria Park before the new year. Call and describe it to me and I'll yours! 531-0399.

FOUND: Kettle Creek pencil case with a calculator inside, in Mac-Corry before reading week. To claim call Jocelyn at 531-4350.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch, Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: At A.J.'s, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '98 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9135.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queens Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

FOUND: A small brown leather change purse in Mac-Corry, Wednesday March 2nd. Call Laila at 547-5758.

PERSONALS

TO ALL BALDING PEOPLE: Fear not, less the day pass ye by!

ROCKIN' RON, Hope you enjoyed dinner. Too bad it's in the sink. P.S. Hope your ride home in the cruiser was memorable. LV, gc

SUSOUHANNA: "That's not fair!" Kwicheerbelliachian. I (readme) think we should even the score. Thanks for finding NY. Have you seen the sun? Luw Lackawanna

PHIL: Slay the hell out of my closet.

SARAH FROM FREDERICTON: I truly regret not introducing myself at the Montreal train station. If you can, please write me at Westlens: Jeff Jardine, 34 Oxford St., W., London, Ontario N6H 1R3.

AMANDA AND CHERYL: Though there are surely many famous people with their birthdays this Saturday, I know none other than ya'll. Don't forget to check your horoscope! Have a great dinner with your parents and don't get your dad too sauced.

LUCY: The movie was good, the formal was better, what's next? How about a blue Caracuo in Caracus? Ah, maybe just another movie, I'll even show a little cut!

HAPPY B-DAY CHERYL AND AMANDA!! You know we only tolerate your incoherent babbling because of your stunning beauty. Oh yeah and your car. Luv the Earl St. Boys.

HEY YOU 100A DIVISIONERS: Save yourselves! Better yet, just save me. Call me until we go to Jamaica!!! Our-asses Love, Rose the one and only H-male rabbit.

VANESSA: We hit the Apple (both of them?), we hit those Bulbato, can't wait to hit the Pavement! Keep your eyes on the road, cos it's rising up to meet us. Chestachesta chesta-SIAN.

I Like the entertainment section, dammit. It's the meat and potatoes of The Journal!!!!

HAVE YOU SEEN MY PEN? My pen! Where's my pen? Did you take my pen? Somebody took my pen!

THE QUEEN'S SAILING TEAM is having a SMOKER at A.J.'s TONIGHT! Before 9:30, proceeds will go to the team, so even if you never go to the meetings, show up early for Lowest of the Low and support the team! The good roll-tackers and left-of-skin canoe victims will be congregating at Tommy's beforehand... come if you dare!

DAVE FAVIO PAVIO: Since you quit smoking, you've been grumpy and violent. But don't think this means we want the old Dave back. In fact, we think that the more cranberry tea you drink, the sexier you become. In short, we love you and we think you should start eating salad. THE WOMEN OF THE JOURNAL.

JEFF AND ALISON: We at The Journal would like to express our sincerest regret at the news of your unfortunate wipe-out on the dance floor the other night at the Arts and Science Formal. We also regret our inability to give this unprecedented event the front page coverage it deserves. Instead, your news has been relegated to the corner of the Classified section. Oh well.

Want a chance to win $1,000? Why not enter the KRAFT Dinner recipe contest? Call 1-800-26-KRAFT for details or see the full page ad appearing in this newspaper!

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely

Experienced Electrologists

Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call
542-5595

MISC

Who's the most evil of them all? Mmm...Sydney!

FOX WEDNESDAY
PRIME TIME:
TWO HOURS, ONE SHOW.
by Chris Shulgan

Nicks and scrapes may scar our scalps, but nemes will never hurt us.

Hipster Doofus by Jenn Brayton Sigourney and Me

"Fucking dyke" is probably the most common epithet screamed at me as I walk around Kingston. What is it that provokes such hostility and occasional violence? To put it simply, it's my hair, or rather, the lack of it. You see, I am a woman that shaves my head.

The most common stereotype that women with very short hair confront is the assumption that they are lesbian. Yes, some short-haired women are lesbians. But some long haired women are also lesbians and some short haired women are straight. The point is, regardless of the stereotype, a woman who shaves her head is not necessarily a lesbian. Hair length is no indicator of sexual orientation.

So why do some women shave their heads then? The reasons are as numerous and as varied as there are women who shave their heads:

"I like it;" "To piss off my parents;" "curiosity;" "It's easier to take care of;" "I like Sinead O'Connor;" "no fussing in the morning with trying to style it;" "no more bed head"

But there are also some more commonly shared reasons for women to remove their mops. For some, the reasons are political: a woman who shaves her hair is a direct challenge to our cultural notion of beauty. Women are expected to have longer hair - it is seen as appropriate for their gender. Shorter hair is becoming more acceptable for women, but only if it is carefully styled and still viewed as "feminine". To head shave, to remove all of one's hair, or leaving it clipped short, becomes a rejection of our cultural standards of female beauty. For other women, the choice to head shave is shaped by lifestyle needs. The time regularly spent managing one's hair is significantly reduced when there is no hair remaining. The decision to head shave permits one to have their lifestyle dictate their hair length instead of having their hair determine their lifestyle. This past winter, when I did have some hair, I found I needed to spend more time getting ready in the morning and after work-outs because my hair needed to be dried and styled. Having no hair eliminates bedhead, bad hair days, and all those other events that mean more time is spent making your hair presentable.

Economics can also play a factor in determining hair length. At most hair salons, there is a different price for women and men's hair cuts, with women's cuts being usually more expensive. The logic underlying the cost is that women require more time to have their hair styled, because their hair is longer. I'm tired of being told at hair salons "We'll only charge you 10 dollars because you have a men's cut." Excuse me, but I'm a woman, and you're cutting a woman's hair (but I don't want to pay $30 for you to operate clippers for two minutes).

To any woman contemplating shaving their head, a brief note about some of the disadvantages and advantages. In a practical sense, having little or no hair is a positive because it is cost efficient and easy to manage. On the down side, it does take quite a while to grow out, and a long period of that "in-between stage" is common. The social stereotypes about women with short hair can result in some unpleasantly harsh treatment by your fellow human beings. At its root though, head shaving is about control: control of one's image, control of one's lifestyle, control of cost. To take the step and cut off your hair is scary and thrilling. But a final caution; something about very short hair also encourages people to run their hands over your head. If you are head shy or don't like being touched, this may be intimidating (wear large hats). Then again, you'll never know if you don't try....

Jenn Brayton's hair, after a long, extended battle to remain firmly planted on her head, has once again been defeated by the ruthless force of the Clippers.

This is going to change your life, blow your mind, and then, once all that's done, knock your socks off. Listen — Beverly Hills 90210 and Melrose Place are the same show. Give me a break — of course not. One's on the tube at eight, one's on at nine. Different actors, too. But in a different sense, the two shows are the same, with the same characters featured at different points in their lives. Melrose Place is 90210 after everyone has graduated. Each character in either show has a "twin" in its sister show. Here are the twin pairings:

Dylan/Amanda:

Amanda has money, an absentee convict father, and owns Melrose Place. Dylan has money, an absentee (dead) convict father, and owns the Peach Pit. Both own their respective show's hang-outs. Different, though, because Dylan is a philanthropist, and Amanda is, ahem, the opposite.

Steve/Jake:

Neither one too bright. Both get in scrapes not exactly as a result of their own actions (Jake and the FBI, Steve and the John Sears mess). However, the consequences of Jake's actions are much more serious than Steve's.

David/Dr. Michael:

Both have or had substance abuse problems. In the spirit of the dichotomy, David gets out of his simply through the help of his friends, while Michael must kill his girlfriend before he gets reformed.

So tortured, so poetic, so streetwise...so Dylan!

Matt/Danna:

Both are oddballs in their own shows — Donna the sole virgin in a show of hypersexed students, Matt the sole gay character. Both are sweetly naive, and inherently good.

Brandon/Billy:

Both are moral guys who occasionally let their sex drives get the better of them — Brandon recently with Kelly, Billy with Amanda. Both ambitious guys with goals in mind and the means to achieve them.

Andrea/Jo:

Both the least attractive of their show's casts. Dichotomy pops up in their dealings with men. Andrea has a small problem that in nine months will become a big problem. She gets married to her sensitive '90's male and problem solved. Jo gets kidnapped by her con-man of a boyfriend, and gets charged with murder.

Brenda/Sydney:

Ill-temper is their main resemblance. However, Sydney is insanely crabby, to the extent that she should start logging some hours with Dr. Freud. An argument could be made for Sydney as Emily, but she's not a main character.

Kelly/Jane:

The two winners in their fight against Brenda/Sydney for desired male (Dylan, Dr. Michael). Also, both are blonde.

You could make a case for other pairings, like Amanda and Lucinda (both older, career women), or Jane and Donna (both willing to see good in others easily). There are sometimes glaring differences between the two shows. For the most part, on 90210, the good characters are almost angelic while the bad characters (Brenda) still have good points. On Melrose, good people are just OK, while the bad border on psychotic (Sydney).

So the two shows are not exactly the same show. Think of them like they're on different sides of "the force" from Star Wars, or two sides of the same coin. 90210 is essentially good. All plot twists turn out OK in Beverly Hills. David flushes the drugs just in time, Steve doesn't get expelled for hazing, and Brenda doesn't even marry Stuart. The tone of Melrose is darker. Plot twists end badly — Michael's doctor girlfriend dies, Jo's new boyfriend turns out to be a drug smuggler. On Melrose Place, every silver lining invariably has a worse cloud in it somewhere. 90210's happy ending is Melrose's disaster. But why this dichotomy?

All of us, as well as the residents of 90210, are students. As students, our present life is pretty darn good. We don't have to deal with mortgages or unemployment or dirty diapers. However, we and the residents of Fox television on Wednesdays are all members of the same generation. Whatever catchy buzzword is the media's favourite of the week, slackers, Xers, whatever you want to call us, we're all supposed to be pretty warty of Life After School. Recent movies like Reality Bites and Slacker don't exactly discourage our views.

Melrose Place is Beverly Hills 90210 after everyone graduates. The "dark side" characters and endings of Melrose Place reflect our generation's pessimism about the future. We expect our future to be more demanding, less forgiving, and generally more like hell than our present, so the show that we see as our future is more demanding and less forgiving than the present. It'll be cool to see where the upcoming Models, Inc. fits into the puzzle next fall.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 18, 1994 • ISSUE 36 • VOLUME 121

Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group 549-3553 549-3561

Have your say...
Come to The Journal's Open Editorial Board Meeting on Tuesday, March 23 at Clark Hall Pub at 5:30. All welcome!

Surface may face hate charges ASUS seeks legal advice in wake of police investigation

BY JEFF GRAY

SURFACE DISCUSSED AT ASUS ASSEMBLY
Story on page 7

It would appear that the ever-controversial Surface newspaper has garnered a new readership—a readership that includes the Kingston City Police, the Kingston Crown attorney's office and The Globe and Mail.

Kingston Police Staff Sergeant Bill Doxtator said police, acting on a citizen's complaint, have been conducting an investigation into Surface since mid-February.

They have sent their findings, which include the February issue of the paper, to the Crown attorney's office for guidance as to whether charges can be laid.

Also, police are investigating material that has recently been distributed throughout Queen's campus by the Heritage Front.

Doxtator said charges could be laid—against Surface or the Heritage Front—under section 318 of the Criminal Code for advocating genocide, or section 319, for inciting public hatred.

This past Monday night, a Journal reporter was asked to leave the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Core while ASUS met in secret to discuss Surface.

ASUS is the publisher of Surface, although a student referendum ended funding for the paper in October. Students will vote on a proposal for opt-outable funding later this month.

ASUS President Jenn Steeves refused to comment on why the meeting was held in secret, and remained tight-lipped on the ASUS position on the Surface situation.

She said only that ASUS has consulted a lawyer, and has been advised not to comment.

In the aftermath of a front-page article which appeared in last Friday's Globe, major media outlets in both Canada and the United States have run stories on the troubled Arts and Science paper.

Principal David Smith responded to the article in a letter to the editor published in The Globe and Mail, outlining the university's mechanisms for dealing with racism, and reaffirming the university's commitment to freedom of speech.

And campaigning starts today for the March 29-30 referendum on a $2 opt-outable fee for Surface, a proposal that Yes-side Chair Dera Nevin says will put power back in the hands of students, who will be able to decide each year whether or not they support the paper.

Despite all the attention, and the threat of criminal charges, the content of the upcoming issue of Surface won't be affected, according to Surface Editor Junipero Lagtapon.

Lagtapon did say he sees his current situation as "precarious," and acknowledged that funding for his paper's next issue, expected sometime before the end of term, is still "up in the air."

He said he has sought legal counsel as well, and has been told his chances of being charged are about "fifty-fifty."

"We're not planning a media blitz or anything," Lagtapon said. He also said he wasn't sure what punishment he might incur if charged and convicted. But he was sure any charges laid would be against him, or Surface's writers, and not ASUS or the AMS.

Nicoleine Ambe performs her heart out on Culture Night on Saturday at Grant Hall.

YODIT ROCHE JOHNSON

inside The Journal

LOCK-OUT OR WALK-OUT?

Tensions around the cafeteria labour dispute rise as students and Marriott workers anticipate a breakdown in negotiations. Full-time staff were in a legal strike position as of Thursday. Part-timers could be in a legal strike position by mid-April. —For story, see page 3.

TALKING TOXINS

What do cars, feminine hygiene products and melting snow have in common? They are all toxic. —For more, see Features on page 14.

FEELING GREEN?

If you celebrated St-Pat's Day at Albie's last night, you may remember local Irish-folk pukers the Mahones jiggling up a storm. Get intimate and interactive with K-Town's "Next Big Thing" in an interview with ruthless Entertainment Editor Rob Furse on page 27.

YOU ARE BEING WATCHED

Misc takes a look at technology's assault on your privacy, and how government and big business know a lot more about your life than you may want them to. —See pages 34 and 35.

"Tuition fees are going to go up. I can only say that I hope funding for students also goes up."
—Queen's Mature Students' Association Representative Jack Troughton, speaking at an open forum on tuition hikes Monday night. Story on page 4.

Queen's charged for PCB mishandling

BY BRAD ELDER

On May 2, Queen's is scheduled to go to court to face charges involving a violation of environmental protection laws.

The charges, which were filed by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment, stem from an April '93 investigation into the handling and disposal of waste material containing polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at the Grant Timmins chemical storage facility.

PCBs are compounds that are persistent and longlasting in the environment, and consist of breakdown products which, as they deteriorate, are capable of causing cancer in organisms.

Penny Stewart, an investigator with the Investigation and Enforcement branch of the Ministry of Environment, said that Queen's has been charged with the offence of receiving PCB waste at a waste-storage facility which is not licensed for PCB waste disposal.

In addition, Stewart said, Queen's faces the charge of illegally disposing of PCB waste to a haulage company that does not have a license to transport PCB waste. Both infractions are violations of section 362 of ministry regulations.

John Milligan, the director of Occupational Health and Safety at Queen's, said the waste-transfer station is owned by Queen's, and is used to handle waste chemicals from teaching and research.

Milligan said that he could not comment on the merits of the case.

Monica Heine, a lawyer with the firm that will be representing Queen's, Cunningham Swan, told The Journal that as far as punishment for infractions like this go, "the sky's the limit."

Ex-Kingston mayor Helen Cooper overcame sexism, paternalism

BY CARINA BLOFIELD

Last Thursday, former Kingston mayor Helen Cooper spoke of her experiences as a woman in politics to a small gathering in Ban Rich Hall.

One of only two women to graduate with a science degree in the Queen's class of 1968, Cooper discussed her struggle against sexism, paternalism and authoritarian management throughout her career in politics.

"There was the suggestion that women couldn't handle this role because they relied on emotion rather than reason. Yet it was always the women who were analytical and forthright, and always the men who screamed and blasted insults," Cooper told the gathering.

First as a municipal councillor, then as mayor, and now as chair of the Ontario Municipal Board, Cooper said she has maintained an interactive style of management that she believes produces the best results.

"I have the best track record of any mayor who has ever served in Kingston, more staff commitment than anyone else. And I did not get things done by shouting at people," Cooper said.

"Everyone had to adjust to the fact that I was not going to go down the corridors yelling. I endured constant criticism that I was not a leader, but I remain unrepentant," she said.

"We are brought up with the Tom Cruises of the world, waiting for a knight in shining armour to come and save us," Cooper said, adding that in times of recession and insecurity, people are especially prone to reverting to traditional solutions. Cooper said her staff were often terrified of taking responsibility, since they were used to the authoritarian management of her predecessors. However, she found her "collegial management style" far more effective.

"I want to believe in a world where we can treat each other as decent human beings. I am going to continue pursuing the right way of leadership," Cooper said.

Of the hundreds of municipal councillors in Kingston over the past century and a half, there have only been 13 women. However, Cooper said there is a "universal recognition these were in every case the single best municipal councillors who have ever served this city. They were, and are,

COOPER CONTINUED ON PAGE 7.

BURGER KING $1.69 WHOPPER ALL THE TIME

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by customer. Valid only at participating Burger King Restaurants.

Offer expires March 27/94
WIN a trip to Disney World with the Toronto Maple Leafs. Details at Burger King.

MONDAY
20¢ WINGS

TUESDAY!
N.T.N TRIVIA

Saturday, March 19th

ORIENTATION ORGANIZERS SMOKER!

Every Thursday
DIPSOMANIA!
The Party

TONIGHT! ARTS '96 SMOKER! COME EARLY!

Tonight!

THE BARSTOOL with special guests
PROPHETS Easy Access

Come Early! Cheap 7:30-9:30!

Saturday!

THE TOM with guests Boag
BARLOW BAND

Come Early! Same Deal!

Coming Soon!

BOURBON • ROAD APPLES SUMMER!

Every Sunday

WILD BLUES YONDER! NO COVER!

ASUS wants you...

is looking for Committee Chairs and Members for the following committees:
Prison Visitation Heart & Stroke THEME Speakers
ASKUS Kids 4 Kids Balloon-o-Grams Environmental
Undergraduate Review Elections Team Childcare Buddies Artsfest
Mosaic MindFind Social Future Link March Break
 Committee Chairs applications are due on March 25th and Members applications are due on March 31st.

Surface

needs an

Editor

Applications are due on March 28th.
Editor Selection Meeting on April 4th 5:30pm

"To Bring Into Public View"

Levanna Designs

is looking for

Director Business Manager Due on March 21st
and Advertising/Marketing Reps
Sales Reps Due on March 28th

"Clothes to Cover Your ASUS"

All applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University. For more information, call 545-6278.

Get Involved!!!

Future of food services uncertain

Strike or lock-out could be imminent

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER AND DENNIS PAO

Boxes of food and supplies are piling up in the storeroom at Leonard Cafeteria in anticipation of a strike or lock-out.

Contract negotiations between Marriott full-time workers and management reached a stalemate yesterday when management put forward their final offer, leaving the workers in a legal strike position.

And students and Marriott workers are worried. Marriott management has been instructed against commenting on the situation.

Jim Fougere, Marriott General Manager, is the spokesperson for Marriott on campus. Only he is allowed to discuss the contract negotiations or any other aspect of the situation. Fougere was unavailable for comment.

Full-time staff will vote on the management package Monday evening.

Jackie Kemp, who checks identification at Leonard Cafeteria, said that among other things the offer contained a one per cent across the board pay raise over two years, no seniority rights over the summer, and what amounts to two weeks holidays for seven months of work.

"They didn't give us anything. All they did was take things away," she said.

"All we asked for was guaranteed hours and a pension or an RSP program... We know the economy is tight. We didn't try to bleed anybody dry," Kemp said.

Before pay equity legislation was passed, the full-time staff worked 40 hours a week. Soon after, their hours were reduced to 37.5 hours a week — the amount of hours they want guaranteed for the academic year only.

"Guaranteed hours... That's not asking for money because it's what we already have," Kemp said.

Kemp empathized with management frustrations over part-time staff demands.

"I can see [Fougere] getting mad at the part-time situation.

Even I think they're being unreasonable," she said.

"Nobody wants to strike, nobody wants to lose their homes. But nobody wants to get shit on either," she said.

Kemp has worked at the cafeteria for 24 years. "After 24 years, wouldn't you think you were a part of something," she asked.

Clark Craig, chief steward of all the cafeterias, called the management's contract offer "unacceptable," adding that job security is a "big, big issue."

He said that if a strike or lock-out occurs, Marriott management is either "going to have to close one of the halls down... or close their cash transactions."

He said Marriott management has stockpiled enough food that they are prepared for a strike or lock-out.

Erin Dearie, vice-president (operations) of the Main Campus Residents' Council, said Marriott will continue to serve food in the event of a strike.

"Marriott has to provide food. They're trying to renew their contract and refunds wouldn't look good on their record," said Dearie.

Dearie said those Marriott chefs who are not part of the same unions as full and part-time workers will continue to prepare food.

John Dennie, who has worked at Leonard off and on for 20 years, said he is not happy with what was offered but he is happy to have a job.

"[The Marriott management] are in the same position the union is in — they will not be held at gunpoint like anyone else," he said.

"I see this contract negotiation turning into a Bruce Dodds side-show," he said, adding that Dodds is creating dissent in the union. Dodds is a part-time union representative who has been quoted in The Journal recently.

He said the situation has been exacerbated by the state of the economy, the fact the food services contract is up for contract, and management's work-week cut from 40 to 37.5 hours a week which he described as having created tension amongst the Storeroom houses stockpiled food at Leonard Caf.

BRENT DAVIS

FOOD DRIVE FEEDS HUNGRY

The AMS Hidden Hunger Committee's food drive last week collected 1,541 non-perishable food items from the student housing area, as well as $267 in student donations. The food donation's worth was estimated at $2,500—and Committee Chair Mike Hammer expressed his gratitude to the Queen's community for its generosity.

CELEBRATE HOLI FESTIVAL

The Queen's Indian Students Association will be hosting a somoza and chai smoker to celebrate the festival of Holi. The event will take place on Saturday, March 26, at 8 p.m., in Kingston Hall's Red Room. Tickets will be $4 for members and $5 for non-members. For information and tickets, call Govind at 531-4472.

SOUTH-ASIANS IN CANADA

A panel discussion on what it means to be a South-Asian in Canada will take place on March 23, at 7 p.m. in the International Centre. The Queen's Indian Students Association, which is holding the panel discussion, will also have its Annual General Meeting and executive elections, starting at 6:30 p.m. at the same spot.

Man found dead in parking lot

A 75-year-old man, believed to be a part-time Queen's student, was found dead of natural causes in a cat in the Mac-Corry parking lot. Kingston Police responded to a call at around noon on Tuesday from a student who found the man slumped over the steering wheel of a car.

Kingston Police Staff Sergeant Bill Doxtator said the man died of natural causes, and that his name has not been released.

Queen's-City liaison committee to survive, unofficially

Group to continue without City Hall's sanctioning

BY TARA ROY

They may not get free coffee or official endorsement, but the Kingston-Queen's Liaison Committee will continue to meet, despite a city restructuring proposal to phase the group out.

Members of the committee say the fight for survival has been successful, as the group will continue even without the approval of City Council.

According to Sydenham Ward Councillor Jim Neill, a letter written by the committee to the mayor and Council states that the committee "has been treated as a committee of Council, but it has always operated on its own, and will continue to do so."

Because the group was never officially a committee of Council, the members felt that Council had no right to disband it.

"We felt that [the committee] was a communications body that superseded the jurisdiction of City Council," said Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin.

The issue of the future status of the committee was brought up at its last meeting on March 10. Tom Morrow, who represents the office of Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams, suggested that the letter be sent. "I'm not sure how

City Hall will react," said Morrow, "but [the committee's] status is not changing."

According to Nevin, a solid "re-commitment" to the committee was made by Queen's administration, the AMS, St. Lawrence College students and administration, as well as the Landlords' Association. These groups were soon followed by the two councillors who sit on the committee.

The renewed committee will no longer have support staff from City Hall to take minutes, nor will it be supplied with coffee when it meets. Instead, the minutes and the agenda will be a responsibility of one of the committee members.

As for the location of meetings, Councillor Neill said, "I'm pretty sure it would continue to meet at City Hall."

Nevin was happy with the results of the fight, saying, "I don't think there needs to be any more lobbying by students. The committee is staying and that's great."

She added that the committee, although it will not be recognized officially, will still have a significant effect on Council.

According to Nevin, "[the committee] is a really good forum for us to tell the councillors what we'd like them to do for us—we'll be able to voice our concerns to the councillors, who will bring them back to Council and have them put on the agenda."

"We've got our foot in the door, which is the most important thing," she added.

Regarding the position taken by Queen's administration, Nevin admitted that she may have been mistaken when she initially interpreted Morrow's actions. "It's completely possible that I was completely misreading Mr. Morrow," she said.

"I don't think the administration is doing a double-turn. I'm going to let bygones be bygones," Nevin added.

The recent creation of a new AMS Municipal Affairs Commissioner has coincided with the massive changes at City Hall. Nevin called the situation "a beautiful opportunity." She is happy that the AMS is committing resources to this important issue.

Nevin is positive about the future of a student voice at City Hall. "I'm very optimistic, because all these groups are thinking together," she said.

EUROPE CANADA ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance - Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399	"Bare Bones"
London	from 379	Round World	from 2399
Rome	from 629	via South Pacific
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch
and Dinner Specials
7 days a week
Take-out service
available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

EXPANSION SALE!

North Ridge is Growing again!
We're in our fifth year, and, celebrating with some great spring specials. Gear up at low, expansion sale prices!

NORTH RIDGE WILDERNESS
80 Queen Street 546-4757

Tuition freeze advocated at student meeting

AMS and students under fire for inaction on tuition front

BY SHELEEE FITZGERALD

Representatives from various campus groups gathered in the McLaughlin Room of the John Deutsch University Centre Monday night to voice concerns over the Ontario government's impending tuition hikes.

For two hours students attacked the government's proposals, bemoaned student passivity, and outlined strategies to fight back.

And the Alma Mater Society was the target of criticism for its position on tuition increases.

While the government has not yet announced the exact amount of tuition fee increases, a heavy hike is feared. A hefty increase could present an unwelcome burden for many students already struggling to meet education costs, and raise questions of future accessibility to Ontario universities.

Greg Waters, representing the International Socialists, argued that "tuition increases proposed by the NDP represent a major barrier to post-secondary education, particularly to women, people of colour, aboriginal students, and working people in general."

Waters said that the Ontario government's message is clear: "if you've got the money you can come to the front of the line, if not too bad."

Concern was also raised over the loss of talent Ontario universities could expect as a direct result of heavy tuition hikes.

Melinda Musgrave of the Graduate Students' Society suggested, "we're going to lose a lot of valuable people in a lot of valuable areas because they won't be able to afford to study here."

"As students we can put our voice forward and accept that some increases will happen, but the rate and timing of these increases is far too unrealistic," she said.

Funding was the primary concern of the Queen's Mature Students' Association. Representative Jack Troughton complained that the present funding system is geared toward people coming directly out of high school who often have parental support.

"This," Troughton argued, "is not reflective of the changing reality."

"Tuition fees are going to go up," acknowledged Troughton. "I can only say that I hope funding for students also goes up."

Some representatives argued for the freezing or outright elimination of tuition fees.

The International Socialists advocated a tuition freeze in order to break down barriers to post-secondary education.

Meanwhile, Jason Hunt, provincial chairperson of the Canadian Federation of Students, introduced an even more far reaching goal—that of zero-tuition.

Hunt explained that the CFS believes access to publicly-funded institutions has to be guaranteed, and that the only way to guarantee access is to eliminate fees.

"Education is a good investment," argued Hunt. "It returns four dollars for every dollar invested, and there are clear and obvious benefits in society to having an educated population."

AMS President Katherine Philips took the floor next, stating that the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance and the CFS are too far apart.

"A dichotomy has been created that doesn't have to be there, and the question should be, 'how are we going to find common ground and mobilize?'" Philips said.

Sean Purdy of the International Socialists immediately criticized the AMS and other groups for their lack of aggression in responding to tuition hikes.

"All they've done is written a letter saying they don't like the increases. To me, that's really giving up the game before it has started," he said.

Purdy charged that "the AMS has done little since last fall, and tuition increases were hardly an issue in the AMS election."

Hunt agreed, saying post-secondary education is no longer a luxury but a necessity, and charging that students haven't been doing as much as they should to fight for education.

Philips responded to the criticism by saying that the AMS and OUSA have been battling effectively at the administrative level, and that a petition would be put out next week to articulate students' feelings to the government. But some said they feel this is only a token gesture.

Musgrave said, "this meeting is too little, too late. Something should have been done a long time ago. At this point it's like taking a stab in the dark."

The International Socialists feel this is merely the beginning of a long-term battle that will continue over the next three years.

"The strategy of sitting down, accepting increases, and hoping for the best is an extremely ineffective strategy," said Waters. "We have two strategies open to us: negotiation and an active fight back from below."

As part of the latter strategy, the International Socialists are organizing a picket of the March 24 Senate meeting at Queen's.

Purdy suggested, "we can win fighting back, we can lose fighting back, but it's better to try than to do nothing."

Corrections

In last week's Alma Mater Society Assembly Report, it was falsely reported that Vids in the Hall would close April 1st. The store will close April 31st. The Journal regrets the error. Also in last week's Assembly Report, it was falsely reported that an arbitrator would decide what the AMS would pay to Meisha Hunter for personal damages. The Journal regrets the error.

Is the printed word dead? Find out.

The Journal is still accepting applications for the following positions:

Production Manager • Ads Manager • Sales Representative • Sports Editor and Assistant • Graphics Editor and Assistant

If you're interested, come by The Journal house and ask Jeff or Gabe for an application form. Applications must be in by Wednesday, March 23. Call 545-2800 if you have any questions.

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE ADMISSION TO FOURTH YEAR HONOURS

All students intending to enter fourth year of an honours program in September 1994 must apply for admission. Applications can be picked up and submitted in the Department of your concentration.

Only students who will have completed fourteen courses at the end of the current academic session need apply at this time. Students who will have completed the required fourteen courses at the end of Spring or Summer term should make application at that time.

Faculty of Education suffers severe budget cuts

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

How do you cope when your allowance gets cut by almost a million dollars? That's the question the Faculty of Education is asking itself after a recently-announced budget proposal suggested that the faculty could lose as much as a million dollars in funding next year.

Since the faculty's current annual budget is $8 million, this cut could amount to about a 12.5 per cent reduction in funding.

"The faculty is scrambling to deal with this budget proposal, because it affects everyone right across the board," said Allan K. Paine, the co-president of the Education Students' Society.

Associate Dean of Education Dr. Ruth Rees described the situation as "a triple whammy." Besides the funding cuts, many education professors are encouraged to take early retirement because of their teachers' pensions, she said.

In addition, the Faculty of Education is undergoing regular faculty cuts, and now Additional Qualification (AQ) courses are no longer being financed by the government. AQ courses are offered to practising teachers for professional development and include such courses as special education.

"This type of funding loss would be crippling in other departments, however Education just has to deal with it," said Paine.

Rees suggested that there are two ways to deal with budget cuts. "We can lower salaries or we can lower the operational costs of day-to-day activities, or we can do both."

The financial belt-tightening for the Faculty of Education could have numerous consequences. Among the possibilities are increased class sizes, a smaller number of course options, forcing professors to retire early, switching to four-day work weeks, and eventually installing significant program changes.

Paine said the budgets cut are "totally due to the Social Contract, and the primary result is going to have a prohibitive effect on AQ courses."

However, Rees disagreed with blaming the Ontario government for the loss of funding for AQ courses. She noted that the AQ courses are offered to practising teachers who are already out in the workforce and earning money.

"No other profession in Ontario has the government pay for their professional development. The Ministry of Education and Training has stopped funding these courses and I don't have a problem with that," said Rees.

Paine did admit that because AQ courses have been cancelled at most other Ontario universities, Queen's can benefit by picking up the slack. Rees agreed, noting that teachers who once looked to schools like York for AQ courses will now approach Queen's, and enrolment in AQ courses here could go up.

Rees referred to the price of AQ courses for teachers as "the cost of remaining current." She also verified that research by Education professors will not be affected by the budget cuts because financing is from external sources and therefore separate from the operational budget.

Rees said that by discontinuing funding for teachers' professional development, the Rae government has stopped favouring certain professions.

Art gallery seeks funding

BY MEGAN EASTON

Canada's first student-run art gallery has secured its place in the new Stauffer Library, but funding for its operation is still uncertain.

The Queen's Student Art Gallery Club (QSAGC) will be seeking approval of a student-interest fee for the new Union Gallery in this month's referendum. Between $30,000 and $50,000 per year is needed to run the gallery.

However, according to QSAGC President Lynda Turner, even if QSAGC's bid for financial backing is successful, the club will have to arrange for interim funding since campus groups do not receive student-interest fees until the fall.

The club has approached the Alma Mater Society and the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society regarding funds, but no final budgetary decisions have been made.

QSAGC members are currently negotiating the issue of financial support with university administration. Turner said her club needs to establish "a line of accountability" so that the administration "will feel secure that not only are the monies being spent properly, but that the gallery is being run properly and professionally."

The initial funding for the new facility came in 1990 from the AMS Capital Allocation Committee.

Although the gallery is to be run on a volunteer basis by Queen's students, QSAGC plans to hire a permanent full-time gallery coordinator and part-time staff to oversee planning and administration.

The student-interest fee would partially cover the cost of maintaining these employees, as well as some daily operating expenses.

Turner said the gallery manager would have direct links with the student volunteers, and would be accountable to a board of directors that will have substantial student representation. Aside from having the skills to serve as both a director and curator, Turner said, "it would be really nice if the manager could be a graduate from the BFA [Bachelor of Fine Arts] program."

However, she stressed that the Union Gallery will not cater only to students and faculty from the BFA. She said the gallery will be "a forum for mutual support and exchange of information" between the BFA and the Music, Drama, Film, and Art History departments.

"That's what we're looking forward to," she said, "getting all the different faculties within the arts to participate in the gallery." QSAGC is still in the process of establishing links with these groups.

Exhibits will include a variety of work from current BFA students, alumni, Kingston artists, and fine arts students from other universities.

"The student gallery will facilitate and increase cooperation and communication among groups on campus and within the Kingston community," Turner said.

In the past, the BFA program only had access to temporary accommodations like the Red Room in Kingston Hall. These bi-annual shows were restricted to BFA art, Turner said, and did not have the advantage of professional lighting, construction specifically suited to a gallery, and a permanent coordinator.

"We're hiring somebody with technical experience who knows how to do shows ... and that way the students will learn," she said.

QSAGC has been working to increase its profile on campus, and inform more students about the yet-to-be-opened Union Gallery. In February, the club had an awareness week that included distribution of information pamphlets on the gallery and a final Red Room show. QSAGC also made presentations at meetings of both the AMS and ASUS.

On March 25 & 26, 1994,
Come out to the Policy Studies Building Conference Room for the

NATIONAL QEC

QUEEN'S ENTREPRENEURS' COMPETITION

9:00am - 4:00pm

Sponsors to date:

In praise of the merits of ethical vegetarianism

BY MIKE MOSS

"May all be fed, healed, and loved."

That was the message of animal rights activist and author John Robbins at Kingston Collegiate Vocational Institute Sunday, as he shared his vision of ethical vegetarianism with his audience.

Robbins, once heir to the Baskin Robbins ice cream empire worth an estimated $170 million, is now the president of EarthSave Foundation, author of Diet for a New America and Diet for a New World.

He gave up his claim on the inheritance, he said, to pursue his vision of an ethical lifestyle.

Robbins began his speech by firing off a battery of questions like, "how many people know an animal?" and "how many people think the environment is suffering under human activities?" He then elaborated on the global situation with statistics. A greater percentage of the human race than ever before goes to bed hungry, he said, while at no time has there been a greater percentage of the human race that is overweight.

In California, he said, 90 per cent of fifth-grade girls are on diets.

Robbins suggested that a large part of the world's economic disparity can be attributed to grain being cycled through animals to support the meat industry.

He said the cost of producing meat that, on the global scale, is available to only an upper-class minority, is equal to the cost of feeding a vegetarian society.

Robbins said he was not prepared to stomach the suffering of "other human beings no different than myself." Society as a whole ought to stop thinking about food as a commodity in the marketplace and substitute that notion with the concept of food as a basic human need, he said.

Robbins criticized traditional western values. In the western world, he said, "the point is to acquire material things, a big pile of junk." He said that when one thinks of power what comes to mind is "to dominate, to control nature, to inhibit." His personal idea of success, he said, is "to respect and nurture life."

Robbins accused the meat industry of imposing "concentration camp-like conditions" on animals. He told the audience that calves are confined to "tiny stalls" that make movement impossible.

Chickens, he said, live in coops with artificial lights that shine 23 to 24 hours a day, "forcing chickens beyond their natural breeding capacities."

Robbins said the meat industry does not want these conditions publicized. "They're the ones who don't want you to see this. They want to spare the children. So restaurants like McDonald's tell them that hamburgers grow in hamburger patches. A lot of money and a lot of thought went into this."

Robbins said that the targeting of children as a market should be labelled as child abuse.

Robbins was pleased to point out that in the United States beef consumption has dropped from 74 pounds per person per year in 1987 to the present amount of 60 pounds per person per year.

He singled out some of history's great ethical vegetarians such as Plato, Tolstoy, Shaw, Gandhi, and Einstein. Robbins, himself a vegetarian, once lived for ten years on an island off the coast of British Columbia. He built a log cabin and lived on an annual stipend of $500 dollars.

More than once, Robbins mentioned the health advantages of a non-meat diet. He said vegetarians were less likely to succumb to many diseases.

Robbins himself said that when he dies, it will be of natural causes. "When people ask me what I'm going to die of I say, 'just life.' It's like an apple. It ripens and then it falls off the tree."

WOMEN IN ENGINEERING

Film profiles women in Sunrayce

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

The documentary Chasing the Sun had its premier screening last Friday evening before a packed audience in the Policy Studies Building. The focus of the film is to inspire more young people, especially women, to pursue careers in science.

Created by the Imago Film Group, Chasing the Sun is an engaging and unique film which documents the 1993 cross-country solar vehicle race, Sunrayce, from its start in Arlington, Texas to its finish 1,760 kilometres away in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The film, along with its particular emphasis on the role of women in Sunrayce '93, also has a Queen's connection. For the real centre of attention is the Queen's engineering solar team, especially Lisa Chin-a-Young and her teammates.

Through brief interview clips, moving graphics, music and race footage, Chasing the Sun provides the message to young people, particularly women, that science is not only fun, but provides a world of opportunity.

As an educational tool, Chasing the Sun is an important and inspiring film. In a field where approximately six per cent of professional engineers are women, the film provides much-needed role models for young women considering careers in science and engineering.

Throughout the film, women who participated in Sunrayce '93 as vehicle designers, builders, drivers or race officials offer advice, personal anecdotes and personal encouragement aimed at young women.

Dr. Vicki Remenda, assistant professor in the department of Geological Sciences and representative of the Kingston chapter of Women in Science and Engineering, called Chasing the Sun "a perfect vehicle to promote and encourage females to pursue careers in science and engineering."

"The issue of female role models is very important, so we can attract more females to careers in science and engineering and so that we don't let a female Albert Einstein slip by."

"Women make up 52 per cent of our country and are an important resource. The issue of female role models is very important, so we can attract more females to careers in science and engineering and so that we don't let a female Albert Einstein slip by," she said.

Grant Freeman, project manager of the Queen's University Solar Vehicle Project (Sunquest), was one of the 2,000 students involved in Sunrayce '93 and was thoroughly impressed by the film.

"I have found to my delight that the film has surpassed all of my expectations," Freeman said. "[Imago Film Group] correlated our project and all of our goals with the film and promoted women in engineering as a positive aspect. It's a really good film."

Heli Tuomi, researcher, field producer and co-producer of Chasing the Sun said she hopes the film will serve as an educational resource "to inspire more women to consider careers in science and engineering."

Although approximately 10 other film crews, including PBS, covered Sunrayce '93, Tuomi commented that Chasing the Sun generated strong interest from the public and participants of the race because of its unique focus on women.

Steve McNamee, producer of Chasing the Sun, originally came up with the idea for a film on the solar car race in his first year as a film student at Queen's. But it was not until he met up with Heli Tuomi, Michael Souther and Jason Webber, fellow partners in Imago Film Group, that the focus of their prospective documentary became women in Sunrayce.

"We were talking about something beyond just the race itself. Because there is still a lack of promotion of women in engineering, that became our main focus," McNamee said.

Imago Film Group hopes Chasing the Sun will be used as an educational tool in both elementary and high schools as well as being shown on educational networks such as TV Ontario to encourage interest in science and engineering.

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750* REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY FROM GENERAL MOTORS.

Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SAVON VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS. THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

LET'S WING IT FOOD & FLICKS
573 PRINCESS ST
549-1842

FREE MOVIE RENTAL (min $10.00 order)
FREE CITY DELIVERY (min $10.00 order)
15% DISCOUNT ON TAKE-OUTS

$1.00 OFF Any order of wings or ribs with this coupon
EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

FREE 1/2 lb of Wings With Any Order 2 lb or more with this coupon
EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

NEW DALLAS WINGS HOT! HOT! HOT! A REAL WINNER!*

ASUS defeats change to Surface editor selection policy

BY TANIS ROBINSON

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Assembly met last Thursday, and defeated a motion raised by member Michael Carnegie that would allow the editor for Surface.

The debate over Carnegie's motion at Assembly Thursday was intense, as his proposed change would have meant that the ASUS-Surface Relations Committee, comprising five ASUS members and five Surface staff, would vote on the new editor.

The motion stated that "in the case of a tie the deciding vote will be granted to the outgoing Surface editor in recognition of Surface editor autonomy." Currently, voting privileges to choose the editor are extended only to those who have contributed to at least two issues. Assembly passed a motion to lower this minimum number of issues from four to two, as there have only been three issues this year.

In his opening statement, Carnegie said, "I'm not trying to control the paper. That is not my intent. What I'm trying to do is to develop right from the word 'go' communication and cooperation between the paper and ASUS."

Carnegie warned that "when the hammer falls, it falls on us, [and so] ASUS should be able to stop problems before they begin." He also argued that because of the small size of the newspaper, there is "the potential for that cliquish atmosphere."

Carnegie argued that since only contributors can vote for the editor, and the editor in turn decides what is printed, the system excludes people who may want to get involved but are not of the "in" crowd.

"That's exclusive," he said. "It is not encouraging participation. The more people we have there the better."

ASUS Communications Commissioner Drake Carlyle said he was opposed to the motion. "I cannot see how anyone could not get involved in Surface... I think the people who vote should be the people who really care about it."

Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin—who is also the chair of the Yes-side for an upcoming referendum on opt-outable funding for Surface—was in the gallery "as an interested student" and to make an impassioned speech against the proposal.

"How can you grant the freedom of speech to yourselves if you are not willing to grant that to someone else?" she asked. "Everyone around this table is elected. You're asking for your own legitimacy as an elected member to be curtailed."

She proposed instead a policy that each issue of Surface be required to have 10 or 15 per cent new content. If that rule was violated, the editor could be removed.

Although this solution would have no effect this year, the mechanism would automatically open up next year, she said.

She concluded with the challenge that members "vote for the motion if you want to undermine your own authority."

Another interested student, A'amer Ather, also urged members to turn down the motion. "The aim of Surface is to shock, disturb... and educate," he said. "We are co-opting and neutering Surface."

After all the debate, Carnegie joked in his summation that he was feeling very lonely—other than a few opening remarks by Senator and ASUS President-elect Andrew Boggs, who seconded the motion, no other Assembly member spoke in support of Carnegie. Even Boggs voted against it.

"In the real world," Carnegie said, the choice of editors "involves those who own the papers."

Raise your voice... Come to The Journal's open Editorial Board meeting at Clark Hall Pub Tuesday at 5:30. All welcome, and you only need I.D. if you intend to purchase alcohol.

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

- Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes
- Air conditioning
- AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance

With your choice of two ways to take off.

SmartLease

$189 per month over 36 months* THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US! Or special offer for graduates

$750 bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

PONTIAC Performance TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month equipped as described. A minimum down payment of $1,493 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Through $595. Excludes insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer order or trade may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qualified retail customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post-secondary institution during the period September 1, 1993 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Some changes may apply. See Dealer for details.

Cooper to lead OMB as her next challenge

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

ideologically very committed and very strong."

However, Cooper said that "for many people, the concept of a woman as mayor in Kingston was difficult to accept."

When asked about the rewards of being in politics, Cooper said there was satisfaction in knowing incremental change was taking place in the right direction.

As a member of the Ontario Municipal Board, she said she plans to keep on fighting for change. "At 47 years of age, I know what I am going to do, wherever I do it."

WANT TO GET INVOLVED?

THE FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE IS LOOKING FOR INTERESTED STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES FOR THE FOLLOWING FACULTY COMMITTEES:

Admissions (3 positions)
Academics Orientation Committee (3 positions)
Nomination Committee (4 positions)
Curriculum Committee (6 position)
Procedures Committee (3 positions)

Applications are due March 25th.
Information is available at 183 University Ave.
or call 545-6278

Roots

ROOTS GIVES YOU A SPRING BREAK....

34 Princess Street, Kingston
546 - 7668

*Not A Commerce Student?
Are You Interested in Taking Commerce Courses Next Year?*

HERE'S HOW

A certain number of commerce courses are open to undergraduate students in other faculties; however the space in these courses is limited. In order to most equitably allocate these spaces to students, the School of Business uses a balloting system for preregistration.

To preregister for any commerce course, you must complete a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot. Preliminary timetables will be available with the ballots; however, courses, sections and slots are subject to change without notice.

Applied Science students may pick up ballots from their discipline offices, and students from all other faculties may pick up ballots in the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120.)

All completed ballots must be returned to the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120) by 4:00 p.m., Monday, March 28.

Forms will be processed according to the priorities assigned by your faculty; graduating students generally receive priority over all other students. You cannot ballot for courses for which you do not have prerequisites. If you are successful in the balloting procedure, your commerce course(s) will be pre-printed on your registration form in September.

ATTENTION ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS

You cannot pre-register or ballot for commerce courses on an Arts and Science preregistration form. You must use a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot.

QUESTIONS?

Please see Mrs. Moss, Undergraduate Office, School of Business
(Dunning Hall, Room 120)

Hiring Schedule

Applications Due: Today at AMS office

Alfie's Assistant Manager	Entrepreneurial Centre Mgr. - Extended
Quiet Pub Assistant Manager	Entrepreneurial Centre Asst. Mgr.
P&CC Assistant Managers	Walkhome Assistant Coordinator
Deputy Chief Constable

Applications Due: March 25

Walkhome Day Coordinators
QEA Assistant Managers
Constable Group Leaders

Applications Due: March 30

AMS Committee Members
AMS Service Staff

Applications Due: April 7

All Studio Q: 3 executive positions - Technical Producer, Chief Administrator Co-ordinator, Business Manager
All Staff

Interview times will be posted outside the AMS office

OPINIONS

Surface goes Global

Thanks to The Globe and Mail, what was once a Queen's debate is now a matter of continental public knowledge.

Queen's students often marvel at the degree to which Queen's remains so insulated from the outside world. But now, after the rest of the world pried the lid off of our cloistered, politically-charged environment, some of us are wishing they hadn't.

The Surface debate has been going on for years at Queen's, and try as they might, reporters from any news organization are going to have difficulties discussing Surface fairly and accurately. For without a historical understanding of the issues and events that led the debate to the climax at which it now resides, categorization and wholesale delineation is virtually inevitable.

Given the current backlash against political correctness in the dominant media, it is not surprising Surface became front-page material.

What does seem surprising, is the fact that the article did not address the freedom of speech or freedom of the press aspects that are inherent in the debate.

Last summer, after the University of British Columbia student government declared The Ulysses' constitution null and void and took over the paper, The Globe and Mail dedicated an editorial to defending the paper's freedom and condemning the actions of the student government.

Last week, The Globe defended freedom of expression everywhere when it condemned some British Columbia bookstores for refusing to sell William Gairdner's books. The author argued that, regardless of political stripe, such discrimination should not be suffered by any author.

What did The Globe say in defense of Surface? Whatever it was, we didn't hear it.

This doesn't come as a surprise to many. But the inconsistency of it makes one question whether The Globe believes in freedom of the press, expression and speech, or freedom for the status quo.

Has public scrutiny forced us to look at ourselves with a more objective eye?

Perhaps it has. But it is reassuring to discover that public pressure has not swayed our beliefs about Surface and all that it stands for.

The charge that some material in Surface constitutes hate literature is rife with difficulties. In the media package sent to The Journal (and the rest of the world) by the Heritage Front, they include a poem from the most recent Surface issue with the lines "For I have killed a white man/And I want to kill more" as an example of hate literature.

On this basis, the Heritage Front could bring oodles of poems, novels, biographies and other pieces of literature, famous and obscure, up on hate charges.

What they did not know, because Surface didn't tell them, is that the poem was written long ago by a civil rights activist. This seems to put a different spin on it, but it shouldn't.

Can it be said that literature can be differentiated in the sense that it is for enjoyment, while something like Surface exists on a different plane because of its political agenda? Can writing ever be separated from its political agenda? It is not up to us or the Heritage Front or The Globe and Mail or a government agency to decide the intent in which literature of any kind is composed.

Professor Roberta Hamilton's arguments, that Surface hurls the strategy of the dominant groups back at them and that Surface's content must be understood in context, seem to hold less weight outside the Queen's environment. The idea some Surface articles are not just blatant anger but are in fact rhetorical in nature is beyond (or simply rejected by) some—especially those who have responded to her beliefs with rape and death threats.

Perhaps the greatest shock for Queen's was not the article, but Principal Smith's response. More accurately, the speed with which front-page coverage of a Queen's issue elicited a response from Principal Smith sets some Queen's students and staff spinning.

Our usually unresponsive principal leapt into action—Superhero Smith, defender of Queen's reputation against radical (read: threatening) political tendencies.

One of the scariest elements of this attention is the legitimizing effect it is having for the Heritage Front. Media attention spawned by press releases sent by the Heritage Front confirms suspicions that mainstream media are more easily accessed by those that fight for and not against the status quo.

Maybe by the time next week or next month rolls around, the rest of Canada, the United States and whoever else was watching won't care anymore. But for those few who do care, for those who are watching us as future citizens and policy makers in this country, let us show them not intolerance, close-mindedness and an unwillingness to see and understand the experiences of others. Queen's, we hope, stands for much more than that.

Brock's indecent proposal

Can't quite make the grade to get into teachers' college? No problem at Brock University, just write a cheque.

The Faculty of Education at Brock has come up with a plan to increase its market share. Though present government funding only allows for 350 students, its plans to introduce 50 new spots, each with a tuition price-tag of $10,000.

The proposal, which was approved by Brock's Board of Trustees, has been met with condemnation from the Minister of Education Dave Cooke, who has threatened to cut funding to eliminate any gains Brock may receive from the program.

Brock calls its program a response to the market, an attempt to repatriate the Canadian students, who, unable to find a spot in Canadian schools, go south of the border to obtain their degree in education.

The Brock proposal raises questions on the privatization of education. Chief among these is accessibility. While Brock discusses charging 50 students the full cost of their education, student groups still consider student loans and financial aid inadequate to deal with pending tuition hikes.

If such a shortage of spots in education programs in Ontario exists, then Brock is alleviating the problem only for those wealthy enough to afford the full tuition, disregarding the principle of accessible education.

If students can't meet the admissions standards yet can pay a higher fee to gain a spot, it creates a two-tiered system of education. Admission standards are bound to suffer, especially when it is not clear how far the standards will have to fall in order to find 50 students who are able to pay $10,000. Will there be two classes of students in the faculty—those who made the admission standards, and those who didn't but could afford to pay a higher price?

In its defence, Brock points to the higher tuition fees that international students pay at universities across Canada. This, however, is not a fitting comparison. International students pay a higher tuition because they do not contribute to education through taxes. The Brock proposal amounts to an auctioning off of extra spots to the highest bidder.

The privatization trend has captured the attention of professional faculties such as the accounting program at the University of Calgary and the Queen's MBA program. But this trend must be approached by other areas of education with a great deal of caution.

The privatization of the MBA program at Queen's is of a distinctly different nature than Brock's education plan. In the MBA program, most students are professionals, with their tuition paid by their employer. The chances of a school board searching out prospective teachers to offer them a free education, however, are slim. The income-contingent loan offers that accompany the MBA plan are absent from the Brock plan.

With flexible admission standards and the possibility of a diminished quality of education, it seems unlikely that Brock could institute such a plan without tarnishing its reputation.

With our own faculty of education facing budget cuts, let's hope that Queen's doesn't follow Brock's example and instead commits itself to providing accessible education.

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Chris Ritchie
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER
Alex Harrier
SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Fiona Macauby
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE
Stuart Kedwell
HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER
David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 18, 1994 • Issue 36 • Volume 121
The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in the Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal.
The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smiths Falls.
Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of the Journal is available online through Queen's InIQ.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728
Internet e-mail: journal@ucqn.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue 37 will be published on Friday, March 25, 1994.

CONTRIBUTORS

Arl Berger, Carin Blodfeld, Dave Coleman, Lisa Chen-Wing, J.Chivers, Brent Davis, Craig Davison, Christian DeBruin, Dave DeClou, Frank Dixon, Megan Easton, Shelley Fitzgerald, Elizabeth Ireland, Yodit Roche Johnson, James Kost, Kristen Kunnas, Bryan Lambert, Jonathan Leigh, Catherine Lipsa, Mike Moss, Michelle Pellegin, Chris Price, Tania Robinson, F.Serg, Chris Shulgan

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

TRACK: SIT DOWN AND TALK

THE EDITOR,

Since Jan. 18, 1994, there have been no less than two articles and four opinion letters published in the Queen's Journal regarding the year-long dispute between various members of the Queen's Track and Field community.

The issues involved have been stated and restated, as both QUACK Athletics and the Queen's Athletic Administration have presented their "facts." As Queen's Track and Field athletes, we would rather see these energies directed toward the resolution of the problem, as opposed to rebuttal.

The situation has been mired in miscommunications and personal differences, neither of which can be addressed without direct communication. A solution can only be reached if all parties sit down and talk to each other.

To further the solution-seeking process, a group of concerned athletes, representing both QUACK Athletics and Queen's Track and Field, have formed a committee whose mission is to foster positive change through which the entire Queen's Track and Field program can gain the most benefit. Also, a formal review of the situation is to be scheduled for the near future, in order to facilitate its resolution.

Every athlete, every coach, and the program as a whole have been hurt by this past year's events. We need to stop rubbing salt in old wounds and begin the healing of Queen's Track and Field. Now that the season has ended, it is time to work toward a viable solution which satisfies all parties concerned. It is our sincerest hope that next year all Track and Field athletes at this university can compete together as Golden Gaels.

—GEOFF STEWART,
TRACK TEAM CAPTAIN, AND STEVE FRUITMAN

HEY YOU!

Yeah you. Came join us at The Journal Open Editorial Board Meeting, 5:30 p.m. next Tuesday at Clark Hall Pub.

REACTION TO HEBRON: PART II

THE EDITOR,

It's unfortunate that many Queen's students are unfamiliar with the history and politics of Israel, because they are then forced to accept at face value such one-sided and misleading commentaries as the letter published in Feb. 15's Journal, "Reaction to Hebron Massacre." Aside from the fact that the letter was not actually about the Hebron Massacre itself, but that the attack was used as an excuse to vent anger concerning the State of Israel in general; and aside from the fact that the Queen's Journal—a university newspaper which deals mainly with campus affairs—is hardly an appropriate forum in which to discuss the political issues and radical religious groups of the Middle East; many of the "facts" of the letter are just plain wrong.

The issue at hand is of religious claims to land. Period. And whether or not Mr. Odex wishes to hear an argument about extremism, he is sorely mistaken if he does not believe them to be at the root of the increasing number of traumatic situations in Israel. Palestine no longer officially exists precisely because of extremist ideologies. "Occupied Palestine" is the state of Israel, created by the United Nations in 1948. The state came about only after the United Nations presented its partition plan regarding Palestine, allowing for Muslims and Jews to live side by side (each group with its own claim to approximately half of the already tiny country); but the Arabs flat-out rejected any such compromise.

Extremist religious nationalism called for an Islamic State in all of Palestine. Similarly, radical right-wing Jewish movements today (such as the one to which Dr. Goldstein belonged) believe in creating a Jewish presence in the entire biblical Land of Israel. There is no space here to begin explanations as to why Israel is seen as the Jewish homeland—to describe how the Jews lived in that land since the beginning of time, yet faced continuous exiles by the ruling empires which moved in. And how this dot of a country, surrounded by Arab lands, is the one place that Jews are fully accepted today. Strong religious ties to the land are prevalent in both religions, for better or for worse. The "so-called peace process" is a positive step towards coexistence in a land cherished by these two religions. Furthermore, I beg to differ that the agreement is being carried out "according to the Israeli conditions," as Israel seems to be sacrificing much (eg. releasing hundreds of convicted criminals, moving towards the removal of Jewish settlers from their homes etc...) and gaining little in the name of "peace." The PLO, however (an organization which was once responsible for such terrorist activities as the murder of Israelis at the 1972 Olympics), has already initiated its own army, which will move into the West Bank and Gaza with the (hopefully imminent) withdrawal of Israeli troops—contrary to the writer's belief that the PLO will be merely responsible for "collecting garbage." By no means do I intend to undermine the repulsive and deranged act committed at the Hebron Mosque. But it must be understood that Dr. Goldstein's actions were not representative of Israel's position with respect to the Palestinian population. Possibly the only people who support the Massacre are the (mainly American) Kach militants, who are swiftly being dealt with by the Israeli government. I felt it my responsibility, as a Jew who has lived in Israel, and who wholeheartedly grieves for the recent events in Hebron, to clarify what I believe to be the mainstream Israeli position concerning the letter in question. I only wish that such extremist-type animosity didn't have to surface at a Canadian university. I wonder if there can ever be a true peace...?

—VERONICA SYRTASH,
ARTS '94

HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE AND EDUCATIONAL EVENTS

THE EDITOR,

The Human Rights Office would like to take this opportunity to reiterate its commitment to securing the rights of traditionally disadvantaged groups on Queen's campus, especially in the areas of discrimination and harassment based on sex, sexual orientation and race.

The Office has been working

talking

Where are you likely to be when people read this?

"Asleep at one of the tables in the reserve room."
—JENN LEWIS, ARTS '95

"At Ritual"
—CHRISTINE MATTHEWS, REHAB '97

"Tuning my guitar."
—JOSE DULATAS, ARTS '94

"Checking out my photo in The Journal."
—JIM WILSON MSC '95

PHOTOS BY BRENT DAVIS

consistently with concerned individuals and groups to address concerns of fear, misrepresentation and education resulting from the unexpected disparaging opinions that Imam Jamil Al-Amin presented on Jan. 15, 1994, including those that were homophobic, sexist and racist. The Office also recognizes that the opinions presented by this speaker are not shared or endorsed by all Muslims. The Office is currently taking steps to ensure that the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and the Queen's Code of Conduct are clearly reflected in our funding of future educational events. This involves the development of a policy regarding the Human Rights Office's funding of externally sponsored speakers. Since there are several ways that we could approach this issue, input from members of the university community would be most appreciated. Please feel free to address any of your ideas and concerns to Chris Veldhoven, the Anti-Homophobia and Anti-Heterosexism Coordinator, and Donna Wallen, the Anti-Racism Co-ordinator, at the Human Rights Office, first floor of the Old Medical Building, 545-6886. —IRENE BUJARA, DIRECTOR, HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Real Live Slacker

What do we do?

What do we do for the guy who was picking through the ashtray outside Mac-Corry? from behind he could have been a student dressed in jeans, plaid shirt hanging, jacket over. But it was 7 a.m. And besides students don't pick through ashtrays at least not ashtrays outside Mac-Corry. No, he looked like them but wasn't or is it the other way around?

Why, we're doing something for him - we're educating and being educated. Our great white leader says so, nationally HE says we're making the world a better place. Gosh we're even fighting for harmonious race relations by stamping on some "extremists" who just happen also to be anti-racist students. Funny, "extremism" used to be reserved for people who threatened FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION not those who have to struggle against all comers just to grasp its edges, those hard, forbidding KEEP-OUT edges. But I forget my place I must genuflect before the altar of freedom of expression lest its CORE VALUE be found in the ashtray outside Mac-Corry.

—BEV BAINES
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR, FACULTY OF LAW, QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

Eds. Note: This is a response to several issues, but mainly to Principal David Smith's letter to the Editor published in the Globe and Mail on March 15, 1994.

"Bear one another's burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ. For if those who are nothing think they are something, they deceive themselves." You must test your own work, and if you honestly feel it to be good, you may be pleased; but you must not compare it with your neighbour's success or failure, and so be provoked to either jealousy or self-pride.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians 6:2-4

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the NRSV and the Clarendon Bible (adapted), with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrifield (11:00).

No need for gays and lesbians to join Surface's protests

Surface has again gleefully grabbed the headlines with its angry diatribe against the world. But as a member of a minority for whom they purport to speak, I can truthfully say that their confrontational message has not helped me in dealing with being gay, nor helped others in accepting it. In fact, I believe that their wails of victimization have created an atmosphere of distrust and fostered exclusion, not inclusion.

I am now a graduate of Queen's. I survived the homophobic campus atmosphere and continue to survive in society at large. I need to beam back a ray of hope to those gay men and women who are more like me than the Surface editorial board: out to enjoy life, not to ram political correctness down the throats of the world. I personally believe that my energy is better expended by trying to change the way people think by showing them that your average "gay" person is just your average person. On that line, I empower the gays and lesbians currently at Queen's to just be out of the closet, be in the closet, but just begin the process of becoming comfortable with who you are. And rest assured that in order to live a fulfilling gay life, you need not participate in Surface's protest of the week.

My contribution to Queen's this year has taken the form of a donation of books to Douglas Library. I have sent books that would have helped me during my years at Queen's. Books like "Now that you know," a beginners guide to being open with people you care about. I am sure that many of these titles are already available at the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Centre in the Grey House. The double-up is unfortunate, but when I was at Queen's I never would have gone there, no matter how supportive the staff. I encourage you to read in the privacy and anonymity of the library, to become informed about your orientation, and when you are ready, to become an example of an average gay or lesbian member of society. You will find, as I did, that the "gay community" is not just those with private stools at Robert's Club Vogue. The community is everywhere and touches everyone. One day you will find where in it you belong; whether as a card-carrying member of the Leatherette Lesbians of Listowel, or as the neighbour in Etobicoke who shovel the driveway for the people next door.

To those who are where I was a few short years ago, relax... set some goals to focus how you might deal with this issue on your own time. And one day you will experience the liberation and happiness of telling someone very close to you that you are gay and that you are content with being gay — as I did with my 58 year-old mother yesterday.

—PAUL RAE, COMM '88

I'm Too Young to Graduate!!!!

Committee applications for the Arts & Science Graduation Formal will be available beginning March 14.

Positions Available:

- 1 Convener
- 2 Publicity
- 2 Operations
- 1 Secretary
- 4 Decorations
- 2 Fund Raising
- 1 Food and Wine/Entertainment

For more information or to pick up an application, please stop by the Arts & Science Undergraduate Office at 183 University or call 545-6278.

OPEN FORUM

In response to the article, "Romance in Academia," I would like to offer my opinion of changing life on Queen's Campus — having been a student here from 1982 to 1986 and then again from 1991 to present day.

In the early 80s, (as many will argue is still the case today) Queen's used to be a hotbed of sexism, racism, and practically any other "ism" that you could name. Much of the offending behaviour was done in "jest" — as was certainly the case in the fall of 1982 when young engineering frosh stood outside of Victoria Hall — both males and females alike, shouting "show your tits" to the bewildered, traumatized, but non-retaliating, exclusively female population inside. Of course, with frosh week came the "shout-outs," and the famous "animals": wild frosh of both sexes who arrived at one assembly stark naked loudly rejoicing in their new-found freedom from the loincloth. Our voices had practically worn themselves out by the evening when the young mistress of ceremonies left the stage crying, after the crowd demanded that she shut up, stop talking, and "jump up and down." Heterosexual dating practices of the period were predictable, given this general atmosphere on campus. Males could be very aggressive and rude without reproach, and the females could either deal with it, pretend the offenses were done in jest, or simply be silent, and hope that the young men would somehow be different when experienced in a one on one situation.

The "rules" for what was "sexually correct" barely existed, outside of the definitions offered by law (which, at the time, were much different than today) and at the same time, heterosexual courtship was a going concern at Queen's. Times have certainly changed since 1982.

To the author of "Romance in Academia," I do sympathize. You waste space on the your discussion of the pros and cons and immanent failures of "the bar scene." The "bar-scene" experience recanted in your tales is common to 90 per cent of all young Queen's students I've known, both past and present. Bars are not good places to meet perspective true loves and life-long mates. Just ask anybody's mom.

But your argument about "political correctness," or more succinctly, "sexual correctness," is poignant. You ask if "the rules of sexual correctness have hampered the interpersonal relations between men and women who wish to meet each other." The answer, in these profoundly, absurdly politically correct days at Queen's, is "yes, they have." To the point of comic tragedy, I'm afraid. The reasons for the tragedy are two-fold and ominous: what we see we cannot change, and what we can change, we do not always like to admit to having seen.

What we cannot change is that while we're in university, it's not cool to like anyone too much. Not only do we simply not have time to date because of our studies, but the hard truth is that our choice of mate will likely be determined by that person's ability to provide in the future. To provide emotionally, hopefully. To provide materially, definitely. So we're all better off doing our work for the time being, and forgetting about the mushy stuff of relationships till some money and security comes our way. When the money comes, and only then, will we take a good look at the person(s) doing the providing.

Sexual Correctness at Queen's

And as is the case with many couples today, by the time we have acquired a level of material satisfaction, we may find that we are so busy that we simply forget to look!

To this already grim prescription for "happiness," add the mind-numbing notions of political-correctness quoted in "Romance in Academia" — so prevalent at Queen's today. If we do anything which might be interpreted as an affront to someone's dignity, then we're doing some serious harassing! Notions of political correctness don't exactly tell us how to act in fledgling relationships with our admired members of the opposite sex. But according to the highly sanctified, politically correct definition of heterosexual campus courtship at Queen's, there is no room for potential injury by "any sexual remarks ... or conduct which interferes with an individual's dignity." Even for a woman, this definition covers a huge range of activity — all of which could implicate her in a terrible plot to affront her favourite's dignity!

But wait! You need some more freedom to "operate," you say — to make your "point" known to the hub of your universe and the focus of your adoration! You can't help it — you adore him! You would be good for him! You know it. You just have to get to know the person. And he would get to know you, too. And then he would feel the same way about you. Of course you know it. You want to pursue that person, because like a pleasant dream, there's something there that makes you want to know more. Why did you happen to choose him? And why now? Are you seeing what's truly there, or are you fooling yourself into believing that he is, in some way, perfect for you? If you're ever going to find out, then you need to get everything right the first time: the first looks, the introductions, the exchange of casual information in spite of your non-casual intentions. God, you love that feeling of excitement. It doesn't come very often, but when it does, you're going to feel it, if it's the last thing you do.

And in the process, you question your looks, your personality, your general attractiveness. You might spare yourself the dignity to ask, "Exactly what is the point, anyways? What exactly do I want from that person?" And if you're human at all, the answer is "Just a little warmth — some recognition of my existence, and if things go well, then we'll go from there."

What we can change in this situation is increasingly awkward scenario is what we least like to acknowledge. Thanks to the day's economic reality, and the sledgehammer of the politically correct against our most humble spirits, these modest and compassionate aspirations are now just pure nonsense. Just ask yourself this simple question, and you'll understand heterosexual campus courtship at Queen's today: Are you or are you not the ultimate provider?

If yes, then go and get that special someone with all you've got. They won't be offended. Believe me. They might even thank you for getting them out of here in time, before they forgot what it was like to yearn for a person like you. If not, then shame on you, and forget about dating, for at least a couple of more years. You've probably spent too much time away from your school work to read this article, already.

—ALAN KERRY PAYNE,
BED. 5

POSITION AVAILABLE FOR:

EDUCATING STUDENTS ON SUBSTANCES DIRECTOR

This is a position that involves experience in health promotions, specifically drug and alcohol awareness. Involves referrals and counselling.

Please contact Jane Shantz for more information.

Applications are available at the AMS Office TODAY!

Applications due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00 pm

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS, FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

FEATURES

Pollution solutions

The automobile is one of the leading polluters in North America. From the toxic gases that are spewed from the tail pipe to the thousands of square kilometres of land buried under pavement, the car is destroying both the environment and human life.

Cars release a dazzling array of pollutants. The major ones are carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, nitrogen oxides and volatile organic compounds (VOCs). VOCs have a wide range of detrimental effects on humans and other animals, including the fact that they are carcinogenic. Carbon monoxide also adversely affects humans by bonding to haemoglobin in the blood and preventing the proper distribution of oxygen to and removal of carbon dioxide from the body.

Cars, however, have no problem removing carbon dioxide and do so in great quantities. Carbon dioxide is a well known greenhouse gas and the largest single culprit in global warming. Nitrogen oxides are responsible for a seemingly endless list of sins which are damaging to both individuals and the environment. They damage individual health by depressing the immune system. The have an even greater impact on the environment: they form acid rain, suppress vegetation growth, and contribute to the formation of ground level ozone. For every one hundred kilometres you drive an average car 128 grams of ozone is produced!

While emitting all those toxins the car is driving over asphalt and pavement. This is land that has been permanently altered for the worse. In the average Canadian city up to 42 per cent of the land is devoted to the motor vehicle. In fact the average car requires 4000 square feet of asphalt. All this asphalt adversely alters drainage patterns by preventing water from soaking into the ground. As a consequence rivers swell beyond their capacity and increased flooding results. As well this asphalt is often placed over top of prime agricultural land, destroying a valuable resource.

Ontario has special reason to pay attention to these problems as it is one of most car dependent areas in the world. The per capita consumption of transportation fuel is more than double that of the United Kingdom! Canada has twelve million cars on the road which is one of the highest ratios of car ownership in the world. Clearly the problems with the use of cars should be a major concern for all Ontarians.

Next time you're at the corner of University and Union take a deep breath of the chemical soup and then when you want to drive a block or two to the corner store, think again and leave the car at home. The walk will do both you and the environment good.

TAKE ACTION

This week (March 20th to 26th) the Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG) Kingston's Green Spaces Group has organized a "Don't Drive to Campus Week." When most people hear about it, their first question is not about the week but about OPIRG.

OPIRG Kingston is a student run and funded group engaged in research, education and action on environmental and social justice issues. It employs one staff member and has a board of directors to develop policy and organize the group as a whole. What OPIRG does is as varied as the volunteers involved in it, who come from most faculties, including Commerce, Arts and Science,

Alternatives to the mainstream

Although corporations' sanitary products have been monopolizing the market for ages, there has recently been concern from women, about exactly what they have been putting into their bodies. In light of the fact that companies such as Johnson and Johnson Inc. (O.B. tampons, Sure and Natulal and Stayfree Pads), Smith and Nephew Inc. (private label tampons), and Playtex Ltd. have refused to answer questions regarding the ingredients in their feminine hygiene products, women are taking action to find out for themselves.

Ann Montgomery, who has done considerable research on the topic, spoke to the OPIRG women's collective earlier this year. She has researched sanitary products and has found that they have adverse effects on both the environment and on women's bodies. Montgomery noted during her visit that environmental and health risks result from both the process of making sanitary products as well as from their ultimate disposal.

All menstrual products are chlorine bleached for purely aesthetic reasons (who really needs a bright white tampon or pad?), and it is during this process that organochlorine chemicals are produced. One particularly toxic by-product that is produced is called dioxin, which is a known cancer causing chemical.

Dioxins also pollute our environment—they leach into our groundwater and are also passed into our air through incineration.

Although the level of dioxin found in sanitary products is said to be below the stated risk level, scientists in Sweden have linked dioxin residue in tampons to uterine cancer.

These facts about feminine hygiene products may cause disbelief, and a lot of people might assume that there must be some laws and regulations in place to restrict which tampons get on the market. The facts are that the Food and Drug Administration in the United States has not measured the level of dioxin in menstrual products, and Health and Welfare Canada only regulates the absorbency of a tampon, not its contents.

Through independent research it has been found that tampons contain elements such as magnesium, boron, aluminum, copper, and titanium; organic compounds such as waxes, acids, amines and alcohols; and some unnecessary chemicals that are labelled 'fragrance.'

As well, each time you increase the absorbency level of your tampon it is speculated that for each additional gram of fluid absorbed there is a 37 per cent increase in the chances of Toxic Shock Syndrome occurring.

Toxic Shock Syndrome (TSS) is recognizable because of the flu-like symptoms it produces: vomiting, diarrhea, nausea, a painless sunburn-like rash, sore throat and a fever. These symptoms are often mistaken for the flu, but are distinguishable because they are accompanied by peeling skin, especially on the hands and feet. In addition, serious cases of TSS are also accompanied by a failure of at least one major system (i.e. kidney, respiratory, nervous).

The mortality rate for TSS is 3.8 to 8 per cent. Three to fifteen menstruating women in every 100,000 contract the syndrome.

However, until 1980, very little medical attention had been given to the syndrome. In fact, doctors did not recognize it as a distinct illness: women with TSS were admitted to hospital, the TSS went undiagnosed and many women became very ill or died.

TSS occurs when tampons come into contact with the Staphylococcus aureus virus, a virus which exists naturally in healthy vaginas. The tampon provides a 'breeding ground' for this virus, and the virus then releases a toxin called TSS Toxin 1. The TSS toxin can also develop when using a contraceptive sponge, a menstrual sponge, or a diaphragm.

Since 1980, awareness about TSS has increased substantially, but many women still do not know the risks associated with wearing tampons. All tampon boxes come with a warning about the risks, and an insert explaining how TSS can be contracted. However, this insert, required by law by Health and Welfare Canada, has been criticized by Ann Montgomery for underplaying the risks of TSS. She also criticizes the government and tampon manufacturers for making statements such as "a woman has a greater chance of getting hit by a car than dying of TSS," which she characterizes as "ultra condescending."

Montgomery recommends that women be cautious when using tampons. If you begin to feel sick while wearing a tampon, it's best to remove it immediately. If symptoms escalate to include high blood pressure and dehydration, hospitalize yourself—because TSS progresses very rapidly, it is important to receive medical care as soon as possible.

How to make your own pad

 THE ENVELOPE ***

- 1 Cut flannel into 8" squares
- 2 Use nylon for the waterproof backing. Pin onto flannel & sew down edges with about 1/4" hem
- 3 Sew the 'rough' velcro onto the nylon

 THE INSERT ***

- 4 Fold the sides in. Stitch both the ends, reinforce w/ zig-zag stitch trim
- 5 Fold 7x12 piece of flannel in 1/2, and then in third in the opposite direction. Insert into the envelope. Attach to underwear using velcro.

FOR MORE INFO. CONTACT OPIRG KINGSTON

Dropping Acid

Acid rain may have dropped out of the public eye, but it continues to fall from our skies. Of particular concern at this time of year is the acidic spring run-off.

Recent research has focussed on intermittent "acid shocks", in which the acidity of rivers and lakes drastically increase. For Canada, the most significant acid shocks are in the early spring.

During winter acidity collects in snow and ice, to be released suddenly during the spring thaw.

A report based on research in Ontario's Algonquin Park, a large lake-dominated provincial park northwest of Kingston, stated that "even if a lake is not permanently acidified, it—or the top metre or two—may be temporarily overwhelmed in the early spring when highly acidic snow melts and suddenly flows into the lake."

Because of this seasonal phenomenon, the persistent effects of acid rain may be masked. Summer acidity may be normal (with a pH level of 5.6 or above) but the "damage is already done by the rapid spring run-off of acid snow," notes the Algonquin study.

pH is the standard scientific measure of acidity in liquids. As mentioned, lakes with a pH level of 5.6 and above are considered normal. When a lake has a pH of 5.0, adverse biological effects set in, and at 4.5 and below a lake is considered "dead".

PHOTO BY DEREK YARNELL

TRANSPORT

Buses are one possible alternative, but far from the only one. Car pooling is another. By filling a car with four people the pollution per person is cut by almost seventy-five percent, and the fuel bill is cut by an equal amount! Of course with spring coming, why not get out and bike, walk, rollerblade, cartwheel or whatever person powered form of transport takes your fancy. Apart from being the cheapest, and many would argue most enjoyable, mode of travel it also provides exercise. Many people take time to exercise anyway, so why not combine it with getting to campus?

Ideally, everyone will take this week to find an alternate form of transport and leave their car at home. It will benefit both the environment and you! If you are interested in getting involved with the Green Spaces Group or any aspect of OPIRG, or would just like more information you, can drop by the third floor of the Grey House where the OPIRG office is staffed Monday through Thursday afternoons.

Craig Davison is a member of the OPIRG Green Spaces Group.

This poses a dual problem for aquatic life. Many creatures live in shallow areas, thus the highly acidic surface level can cause significant damage. Also, fish spawn in shallow areas, so that the acid shock can wipe out an entire spawning bed.

With rain 40 to 400 times more acidic than in the past, the Algonquin researchers noted "most fish would die from acid shock if we put them in a bucket of rainwater."

Not all lakes are equally likely to become acidified. Scientists have formed five classification levels, ranging from already acidified (such as some in the Adirondack Mountains of New York State, approximately 250 kilometres south-east of Kingston), to high acid insensitivity.

The key to the acidic resistance of certain lakes is their mineral and nutrient content. Lakes with high nutrient content are said to have a large "buffer zone," which enables the lakes to counteract the sudden inflow of acidity in times of run-off. Lakes with limestone and calcium carbonate floors are alkaline, giving them high resistance, or a large buffer zone.

Queen's geography and climatology professor Dr. Harry McCaughey said that lakes in the Kingston area are largely buffered. "Acid rain is a problem primarily in the Canadian Shield and in Eastern North America," he said. McCaughey noted that acid shock may have some impact in the Kingston area, but that the fast release of acidic water caused by the spring run-off would get flushed out quickly in alkaline lakes.

menstrual pads. The pattern is easy to follow (you can contact the OPIRG office for more information) and the pads are washed by a simple combination of warm water and vinegar. The only negative aspect of cotton pads is that the cotton crop is a major pesticide user in North America. Hopefully organically grown cotton will soon be more available.

Another alternative is using a menstrual sponge. Although TSS can still occur, and pollutants in the water are also a risk, the sponge does reduce dioxin exposure and does not contribute to bulk waste. To ensure cleanliness of your sponge, simply pick out any bits of sand or coral that may be present, and boil the sponge in water for 30 seconds. The sponge is inserted like a tampon, and you can feel when it is full and needs changing. Then all it takes is extracting the sponge, rinsing it out, and reinserting it. The sponge should be re-boiled at the end of each cycle.

TSS is not the only health problem associated with tampons. The drying action of tampons can cause tiny cuts in the vagina—tampons absorb 65 per cent menstrual blood and 35 per cent vaginal mucus. The "petal-soft" tips of plastic applicators also tear the vaginal lining and the applicators, which our sewage system is unable to handle, end up on beaches after rainstorms. Moreover, disposable sanitary products such as pads are overflowing from our already full landfill sites.

So, what all this information is telling us is that it is high time to consider some alternatives to dangerous products that we have been conditioned to use. Since we can't not menstruate, there are various choices, from the mild to the more extreme, that we as women can make to ensure safety for both ourselves and for the environment.

There are alternatives to mainstream menstrual products. Two companies, Natracare and Terrafemme (whose products can be found at Tara's health food store) make tampons that are rayon-free to avoid chlorine bleaching at all stages of manufacturing. Pads as well are made from non-chlorine bleached pulp fluff. Both these methods avoid any exposure to dioxin.

These products, however, do not solve the problem that disposable pads and tampons add to landfill waste, so many women have begun to make their own cloth

Some researchers have questioned whether the acidity of lakes is increasing. Others have noted positive effects from tougher government legislation on emissions. The Algonquin researchers, however, were careful to qualify their support of government action: "If governments were to relax current pollution standards our rain and snow could quickly become more acidic than they already are."

Some remedial strategies have been adopted, the most common of these being the addition of alkaline materials (which counteract the effect of acid rain) to lakes and streams. In his book Going Sour, the Science and Politics of Acid Rain, Roy Gould noted that limestone has been successfully added in various regions of high acidity. Sweden, for example, spends 13 million dollars annually on its liming program.

Liming, however, has its short-comings. The theory of liming is to balance the increased acidity with an equal amount of alkaline, so as to maintain a healthy pH. Alchemy on such a grand scale can be difficult to gauge accurately, and ironically scientists can harm a lake with a sudden surge of alkalinity. Gould describes liming at best as a "stopgap measure" that deals with only a fraction of the acid deposition problem.

Dr. Ronald Hall, a limnologist with the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has noticed that "following a rainstorm the pH may go down one full unit", and has measured pH levels as low as 4.0 in central Ontario streams.

While scientists have a shortage of concrete proofs for their theories, they feel certain acid pulses, rather than a gradual drop in average pH over a number of years, are having adverse effects on Ontario's fresh water.

Dave Coleman, in addition to being the savioug of the Features Section, is also a guy who doesn't need a press pass to get in anywhere.

Considering the amounts of dioxins we put into our bodies and the environment, and the amount of disposable feminine hygiene products we use each month, women need to start considering alternatives. Whether it be calling companies to complain about chlorine compounds in their products, or simply switching to a safer company or product, it is time to get out there and do something. Plus, menstruation is a great conversational topic, and potluck pad-making parties are a lot of fun!

Ari Berger is a member of the OPIRG Women's Collective and a second-year psychology major.

Some researchers have questioned whether the acidity of lakes is increasing. Others have noted positive effects from tougher government legislation on emissions. The Algonquin researchers, however, were careful to qualify their support of government action: "If governments were to relax current pollution standards our rain and snow could quickly become more acidic than they already are."

Some remedial strategies have been adopted, the most common of these being the addition of alkaline materials (which counteract the effect of acid rain) to lakes and streams. In his book Going Sour, the Science and Politics of Acid Rain, Roy Gould noted that limestone has been successfully added in various regions of high acidity. Sweden, for example, spends 13 million dollars annually on its liming program.

Liming, however, has its short-comings. The theory of liming is to balance the increased acidity with an equal amount of alkaline, so as to maintain a healthy pH. Alchemy on such a grand scale can be difficult to gauge accurately, and ironically scientists can harm a lake with a sudden surge of alkalinity. Gould describes liming at best as a "stopgap measure" that deals with only a fraction of the acid deposition problem.

Dr. Ronald Hall, a limnologist with the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has noticed that "following a rainstorm the pH may go down one full unit", and has measured pH levels as low as 4.0 in central Ontario streams.

While scientists have a shortage of concrete proofs for their theories, they feel certain acid pulses, rather than a gradual drop in average pH over a number of years, are having adverse effects on Ontario's fresh water.

Dave Coleman, in addition to being the savioug of the Features Section, is also a guy who doesn't need a press pass to get in anywhere.

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE FOR COMMITTEE MEMBERS:

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMISSION

- OUSA Awareness
- Special Needs
- OSAP/Student Awards
- Employment Issues
- Teaching Issues
- Mindfind
- Academic Grievance Procedures
- Open Door/No Commitment Committee on Academic Issues
- Vote Education Campaign

EDUCATION COMMISSION

- Committee on Development Issues
- Authors Series
- December 6
- Hidden Hunger
- Human Rights and Social Responsibility
- International Student Issues
- Mature Student Issues
- Queen's Environmental Action Group
- Racism and Ethnic Discrimination
- Speaker's Series
- Women's Issues

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES

- Charity Ball
- Undergrad Games
- Welcome Back Week
- Special Projects
- Coffee House
- Kaleidoscope
- Grand Events
- United Way
- Model United Nations
- Model Parliament
- Advertising Committee

*JUST A REMINDER - COMMITTEE CHAIR APPLICATIONS DUE TODAY AT THE AMS OFFICE AT 4:00 PM APPLICATIONS FOR COMMITTEE MEMBERS AVAILABLE TODAY!! APPLICATIONS DUE: MARCH 25, 1994 AT 4:00PM

APPLICATIONS AVAILABLE FOR SERVICE STAFF OF:

- Alfies
- The Quiet Pub
- Publishing & Copy Centre
- Queen's Entertainment Agency
- Queen's Student Constables
- Studio Q
- Tricolour Yearbook
- Walkhome

Applications Available TODAY!! at the AMS Office
Applications Due: March 30, 1994 at 4:00 pm AMS office

APPLICATIONS AVAILABLE FOR:

- Walkhome Day Coordinators
- Constable Group Leaders
- QEA Assistant Managers

Applications Available Today at the AMS Office
Applications Due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS office

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

WHAT'S UP?

Pick up What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JSUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5 p.m.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

MARCH

Fill Us In

Recently, we have been given a sense that there is some confusion with respect to when people should be applying for various AMS and related services positions. As a result, we would like to take this opportunity to fill you in.

To find out about the various positions available with the AMS, please consult the job descriptions posted outside the Commission offices or go in and talk to the people involved with the various Commissions and Services.

Applications deadlines are as follows:

- Committee Chairs and Service Assistants March 18th
- Walkhome Day Coordinators, Constable Group Leaders, and QEA Managers (Assistants) March 25th
- Committee Members and Services Staff April 11th

Applications for Alfie's, the QP, Constables, Walkhome, the Kaleidoscope interests you, seize this opportunity to get involved! There are hundreds of possibilities awaiting you at the AMS... it will only take one visit to realize what they are. Hope to see you soon!

Feature

- The Macedonian Club is looking for members! Join today and your life will never be the same. Call Cary at 531-0354.

What's Up

This Week

Friday, March 18

- The Queen's South East Asian Club will be holding a General Meeting and a Movie Night in the John Orr Room (JDUC) at 7:00 p.m.. Free admission for members.
- The Queen's Association for Bahai Studies is presenting the third of a three-part discussion series on Healing Racism, entitled: The Individual's Role Within a Global Perspective, at 32 Queen's Crescent (between Ban Righ Hall and Sterling Hall) at 5:30 p.m. All members of the Queen's community are welcomed to attend.

Sunday, March 20

- An open invitation to all people of good will who, through countless generations have expressed their vision and for which, from age to age, the sacred scriptures of mankind have held promise: the establishment of world peace. During the second Baha'i World Congress, it was evident how all efforts towards this end can take place with the confidence that world peace is not only possible, but inevitable.

- Run in the Tricolour Mile, starts at 2:00 p.m. at the P.E.C., register in Mac-Corry on March 14 - 18, between 11:00 - 1:00 for $3.- Proceeds to Kingston Preschool Centre.

- The Performing Arts Office is pleased to present the Colorado String Quartet at 2:30 p.m. in Grant Hall. The programme for this performance spans the rich repertoire written for this ensemble from the 18th to the 20th century - Mozart's Quartet in C Major Dissonance, Mendelssohn's Quartet in F minor and Shostakovitch's Quartet in A Flat major. All tickets of the originally scheduled Feb. 12 date will be honoured for this performance. For further info, please contact the Performance Arts Office, 545-2557.

Wednesday, March 23

- The Queen's Indian Student's Association will be holding its Annual General Body Meeting at 6:30 p.m. in the International Centre. Guest speaker, Deen Karim will share his views on the issue of South Asian Identity in Canada. Everyone is encouraged to attend.

Thursday, March 24

- If you don't like the cookies Come out to the Grand Events Fimo & Bake Sale. Help us support the seniors at Rideau Crest Home. Join us at Mac-Corry.

Upcoming

- The QCSA-QSEAC Graduation Semi-Formal will be held on Saturday, March 26 at Minos Village Restaurant. Tickets will be on sale from March 17-24 at MacCorry and at the Meal lines in Upper & Lower Banrigh and Leonard. Transportation will be provided. For more info., contact Jean 547-9918 or Ray 549-2595

- A fascinating musical experience will be offered by violinist Andrew Dawes and An Die Musik on Friday 25 March at 8 p.m. in Grant Hall, University Ave. exploring music of significance in the lives and works of painters, Helen Frankenthaler, David Hockney, Robert Motherwell and Kenneth Noland. The programme for this performance is Beethoven's Quartet for piano 7 Strings in E Flat, Mozart's Quartets in F major and E Flat major, Schubert's Trio in B Flat and Mozart's arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E Minor. For further information please contact the Performing Arts Office, 545-2557.

- "Chai and Samosa Smoker" Brought to you by the Queen's Indian Students Association on March 26 at 8 p.m. in the Red Room at Kingston Hall. For tickets, call Aovind at 531-4472. $4.00 for members, $5.00 for non-members. Ticket price includes refreshments!!!

- The Queen's French Centre presents "Cyrano de Bergerac" by Jean-Paul Rappeneau (1990) with Gérard Depardieu Wednesday March 30 at 7 pm at Dupuis Hall. Admission Free. For info., 545-2534.

What's Up

LITERARY LAPSES

For Coffee

One of the most brilliant men I know was born in a Donut Shop in a town much like Windsor. Right down on the cold floor, I'm told, his poor mother did her thing as men in green ball caps looked.

It was years later, by the Dairy Queen, as the boy sat over his awkward knees in the sun, on the warm curb, that he came up with the story—the Donut Shop and all the men in green hats

And then, it is said, a bottle cap that lay like a stone in the pavement caught the sun and sent it flying back at itself.

When it pierces a hole in the sky we will interpret the new star wisely and take off our green caps for coffee.

Kevin Bowers

Mind of an Assassin, in Prison

Sometimes I dream of all the things that I have done and of all of the people that I have killed and I wake up in a cold sweat, shaking sometimes screaming, fall asleep again then wake up and smoke.

The bedsheets are on the floor. They are dusty and form horrendous shadows on the walls. Tonight from the street the sound of gunplay. The stench of cordite and smoke is maddening. With arms wrapped about my knees I am crying, though not loudly.

Because of the illness the nights are longer and I hear too much. On some nights I hear the prisoners in the cells, in the dungeons of the police station screaming. On that rare night I might hear a man beg for his life and then for a quick death and then the dim lights and the wretched howl until, in time, it all starts again. If it is a woman I do not listen. Some people are animals.

Sandro Pasquali

Death of the Philosopher

The Artist below is screaming thrashing her way to the surface raggedly filling starved lungs with her first gasp demands Who the fuck do you think you are pushing me under like that? Don't you ever do that again I tell her I had to She would have destroyed us She was too dangerous. Eyes sharp, hair dripping She just looks at me planning her next painting.

Ariel

my bloody valentine

you call this love?

i was never so happy as you once made me when i caught starlight in bare hands and lingered on the shore of eyes the colour of the southern sea but now you have stripped from me the rags of those rash and precious promises: just what good was my flesh to you when all your desire was to flay it still feeling from my bones?

i am lost like a rat in the maze of your mercy i cannot find the heart of it, pinioned by pain: perhaps yet you will reach through iron nails piercing my darkness so i can see your bleeding arms embracing me

G.E. Goulden

Carmina...

Our short story contest closes on March 22. Submit your entries to 272 Earl St. Winners will receive gift certificates from Printed Passage Books.

Award-winning Canadian novelist Nino Ricci visited Queen's last week.

Ricci is the author of Lives of the Saints, which captured the Governor General's Award for Fiction in 1991.

Nino Ricci visits Queen's

The novel tells the story of Vittorio Innocente, a young boy who lives through turbulent domestic events in a small village in rural Italy. Ricci's most recent novel, In a Glass House, continues the story of Vittorio, chronicling his adolescence as an immigrant in Southern Ontario. Vittorio's life will also be the subject of a third novel, completing the trilogy.

Speaking before a small crowd of about thirty people in Grant Hall, Ricci read from his two novels and answered questions from the audience. He dispelled the idea that his novels are autobiographical. Referring to the events in Lives of the Saints, he said, "I never lived in a small village in Italy ... [and] as far as I know, my mother never had an affair."

However, Ricci did concede that some events were analogous to his life, though not in obvious ways. Of the two novels, he said that there was much more similarity between his life and the storyline in In a Glass House.

Asked whether he feels a need, as a Canadian writer, to deal with Canada in his works, Ricci answered, "not especially. My fourth book won't even mention Canada. Canada won't even exist ... It's not a matter of obligation." He suggested that having Canada appear in his novels is only logical, given that he was born and raised in the country. "If you're born in Canada, grow up in Canada, and you never write a single word about Canada, that would be sort of odd."

In a similar vein, Ricci does not feel a responsibility to write about Italian-Canadians. "I'm not a spokesperson for a group ... If I do write about it, it's from my personal experience ... it's somehow important to me."

In terms of his own reading, Ricci said he has worked his way "through all the big names" in literature, finding the classics "very helpful."

"For me, what was most valuable was to get an overview of literary history," he said. He also cited Daniel Richler's suggestion to "just read lots of books," and see if something's been done before.

While he does look into historical texts when writing, Ricci said these sources are employed "to back up what I had an intuitive sense of." He uses history "to flesh it out, rather than starting with the research. It's never a very systematic thing—it's usually haphazard."

Ricci offered a glimpse into the plot of the novel which will complete the Vittorio Innocente trilogy. "It picks up where the second one leaves off," he said. The novel will deal with Vittorio's adult years, and tackle his troublesome relationship with his half-sister. The forthcoming book will also return to Italy.

Asked what advice he could offer aspiring writers, Ricci suggested that they "persist ... That's usually what distinguishes someone who does it and someone who doesn't."

"If you have that will, that's one of the most essential things." → BROCK MARTLAND ASPIRES TO BE JUST LIKE THAT SIMEY YET ETHICAL STUDENT JOURNALIST ON BEVERLY HILLS 90210.

Nino Ricci

Printed Passage Books Ltd

Manufacturing Consent Noam Chomsky and the Media

edited by M. Ackbar
paperback $19.99

comes complete with
Philosopher "All-Star" Trading Cards

Printed Passage Books
50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS
HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

Looking For The Competitive Edge?

For little more than the cost of a term at home you could

Study Abroad!

Queen's International Study Centre,
Herstmonceux Castle

Are you a second, third or fourth year student wondering what lies beyond graduation? Want to make your university degree more marketable?

Don't Miss This Opportunity!

$6800 (includes tuition, fees, room, board and field trips)

- Learn about the EEC, GATT and other international agreements which affect your future.
- Study art, languages and cultures of selected European countries. Visit their galleries, monuments, and theatres for a first hand look.
- Experience first hand the history and social fabric of Great Britain that only living in a country can teach.

AND

Earn Queen's credits toward your degree

International Study Centre, Herstmonceux Castle, East Sussex, England

This program, concentrating on European Area Studies,
may make the difference for you!

Want To Know More?

To find out more or to obtain an application package see our representative in:

Mackintosh-Corry
Student Street

Monday to Friday until the end of March
or call 545-2815

An die Musik

The Painter's Music
The Musician's Art

Playing Music by:

BEETHOVEN - Quartet for Piano & strings in Eb Major

SCHUBERT - Trio for violin, viola & cello in F Major

MOZART - Quartet for oboe & strings in F Major

BACH - Fugue in F Minor for violin, viola & cell

Composers who inspired contemporary artists
Helen Frankenthaler, David Hockney, Ken Noland
and Robert Motherwell

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

FRIDAY 25 MARCH 8PM GRANT HALL

$20 Adult / $8 Children (all prices plus GST)

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

BUSKING OUT!

busk v.intr. to perform for voluntary donations usually in the street or in subways ... or in the JDUC!
(Concise Oxford Dictionary)

Spring is busking out all over the JDUC next week, March 21-25!

Take a break and celebrate spring with Queen's own buskers.

Performance schedules posted daily.

Performers will be asked to donate proceeds to Sexual Assault Crisis Centre and the AMS United Way Committee.

Prizes for best performances based on audience balloting.

PART-TIME POSITION AVAILABLE AT THE AMS

Hoods and Gowns Coordinator

Responsible for overseeing the operations of the Hoods and Gowns service for Queen's Convocation in May and October

Applications are available at the AMS and are due Friday, March 25 at 12:00p.m. For more information contact Stephanie Taylor or Neil Livingston at the AMS.

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

TUESDAY

Battle of the Bands (finals)

WEDNESDAY

Bucking Madness

THURSDAY

Skitzomania

FRI & SAT

Bucking Madness 'til 9:30 and dance until 3:00am

178 Ontario Street

544-6885

SPORTS

Queen's track at CIAU's, the proud and hopeful

BY BRYAN LAMBERT

The Queen's University track & field team returned late Sunday evening from the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union's Track & Field Championships in Edmonton, Alberta. The team recorded numerous personal bests (p.b.) with three of seven women setting p.b.'s and three more set seasonal bests. Both relay teams set seasonal bests and one of the two men attending set a personal best.

The meet began on Friday March 11 with Lesley Morrison competing in the women's high jump. An otherwise fabulous season came to an end as the defending CIAU champion went out at 1.63m to finish in eighth place.

Steve Fruitman went into the competition ranked third in the country and put the heat on the other competitors with an opening round throw of 14.4m. Steve would have come home with a medal had three other competitors not had huge personal bests at the meet.

The women's 4x200m relay team of Amanda Parry, Lesley Hughes, Leslie Bruce and Mary Pullen ran their fastest time of year (1:44.25) to finish ninth and ran the second fastest time ever for a Queen's women's 4x200m relay team.

The next morning, Sarah Leonard took to the field in search of a medal in the women's shot put. Sarah, last year's bronze medalist, threw a strong 12.66m throw to finish fifth. The level of women's shot put competition has certainly improved over the past year as Sarah's throw would have won the bronze at last year's CIs.

Darren Dugan then took to the air in the men's high jump clearing the bar at 2.03m to record a p.b. by 1cm and finishing fifth. Darren is now the number two all-time high jumper for Queen's and the third year PHE student is slowly closing in on the Queen's record of 2.11m.

The women's 4x400m relay team of Bruce, Pullen, Lesley Hughes and rookie Sarah McClellan ran a quick race to finish 11th in a seasonal best time of 4:01.28. The women maintained their national ranking in the event while improving their time by over two seconds.

Outstanding performances of the meet honours went to Lesley

Hughes for her best races of the year in the 4x200m (25.72) and 4x400m (59.46) and Darren Dugan for his outstanding effort in the men's high jump.

The athletes attending CIAU's represented Queen's in an exceptional fashion. The women finished 15th out of 22 teams, and the men 15th out of 25 teams. Great job gang! Next year look out Max Bell Center, University of Manitoba, here we come!

The Queen's track & field team would like to thank the Queen's Athletics Administration for funding those athletes who qualified for CI's enabling them to go to the meet. The Queen's presence was felt in a most positive manner. Once again, those Queen's athletes who qualified for and attended CIAU's proved that they belonged there. Queen's University can and should be proud of its track and field athletes.

Queen's track and field has endured a long hard season with little respect but have consistently worn the tricolour with pride! Whatever the future may hold for Queen's track & field, the current team can hold its head high and be proud of all of their achievements for the 1993-1994 season.

Vicki shoots the lights out

BY FRANK DIXON

Vicki Wilson (Con-Ed '94) was named the first-ever basketball CIAU All-Canadian from Queen's last week. With 875 career league points, she is already far and away the all-time leading woman scorer in school history, and is now taking aim at Mike Scotten's men's record mark of 1,146 career points in league play. But that's only part of the story — add in her 1,127 points in tournament games, and the grand total is an amazing 2,002!

Her Queen's single-game record is 44 points, one more than Dave Smart's Queen's men's record. Her 374 career rebounds trails only Scotten's 608, achieved in 17 more games. When it comes to shooting free throws, she's second all-time at Queen's, with a conversion rate of 79.4 per cent, trailing only Derek Swinnard's 82.4, but Swinnard had nearly 200 fewer attempts. Compare that to Shaquille O'Neal's 53 per cent, and remember that it's the same ball and the same distance for women! Recently, yours truly had a chance to talk some Queen's hoops with Vicki.

Queen's Journal: "So, how does it feel to be Queen's first basketball All-Canadian?"

Vicki Wilson: "Pretty neat!"

QJ: "How has your game grown during your four years here at Queen's?"

VW: "It's mainly been learning to do a lot of little things really well, like being in the right spot for the rebound when it comes down, and learning how to play against different kinds of defenses."

QJ: "I guess your style could be described as a top-echelon fitness post player, where you often leave the defender puzzled as well as beaten."

VW: "For me, it's a lot more fun playing that way! But at times, I wish I could play with a bit more power."

QJ: "How have you enjoyed playing for head coach Dave Wilson?"

VW: "Dave has just been tremendous. He's really concerned about his players as individuals, and how we're doing with keeping our school, basketball, and personal lives in balance. We have meetings all the time."

QJ: "How have you been able to keep everything together, playing a sport with a six-month season where you're travelling and playing almost every weekend, including over the holidays and reading week?"

VW: "Well, you know you're Vicki Wilson (15) goes for the layup in action from last season.

DAVID DELCLOO

going away, so you have to get stuff done earlier. If I wasn't playing, I'd probably leave everything until the last minute!"

QJ: "I know this season was satisfying from a personal standpoint, but it must have been tough because the team had so many injuries, and that stuff happened in a year when Queen's really had a chance to do something on a national level if everyone had been healthy."

VW: "It was very disappointing. One setback seemed to follow after another. But we kept chipping away and still wound up with a pretty good season in the strongest division in the country."

QJ: "That you did. Queen's beat Canisius, its first-ever NCAA Division I school, this year. Women's basketball is starting to get a higher profile, what with the CIAU women's final broadcast nationally by TSN, Sports Illustrated doing articles on the women's game, and CNN broadcasting women's scores."

VW: "I think the standard of play is rising, and the best Canadian schools seem to be closer to the strong American schools, far more so than the men."

QJ: "Would you say Queen's has a women's team where the starters have complemented each other's skills?"

VW: "Definitely. Having different types of threats helps each of us individually."

QJ: "What memory will you take away from your years playing basketball at Queen's?"

VW: "Meeting friends that will last a long time. Our team is really close. I think the style of coaching has really helped to develop that."

QJ: "Now for the question every Queen's basketball fan wants answered. Will you return next year for your fifth and final season?"

VW: "Right now I'm really not sure." If Vicki does return next season, if she stays healthy, and averages 22.7 points per game in league play, she will become both the all-time leading scorer in Ontario women's play, and will surpass Mike Scotten and become the all-time leading scorer at Queen's! That's not out of the question, since she averaged 21.8 ppg this season.

Thinking of Studying or Working in Japan?

The International Centre presents a session on Living, Working and Studying in Japan by Trevor Daughney, Allyson Latta & Wayne Myles

Date: Wednesday, March 23, 1994
Time: 12:00 - 1:30 pm
Place: Oak Room, JDUC

- No advance registration necessary
- Bring a bag lunch
- Opportunity to ask questions

Everyone Welcome!

The Student Awards Office

will be closed from 8:30 to 1:30 on Tuesday March 29th, as the staff will be participating in Professional Development. We apologize for any inconvenience.

Queen's University School of Music (directed by Mark Sirett)

Queen's Choral Ensemble with William Maddox, organ

Music by Handel, Palestrina, and Thompson, Kodaly's Laudes Organi plus Spirituals.

Wednesday, March 23, 1994 - 8:00 p.m. St. George's Cathedral

Admission: $6 regular; $3 students/seniors

BIG COUNTRY.

SMALL PRICES.

TRAVEL CUTS STUDENT CLASS AIRFARES WILL GET YOU EAST TO WEST... FOR LESS, WHETHER YOU ARE FLYING ONE WAY OR ROUND TRIP.

TRAVEL CUTS
1-800-667-2887
(THAT'S 1-800-667-CUTS!)

Another March madness

By JOEL SUTHERLAND

It is rather unfortunate that the road to the final four is already under way by press time—obviously The Journal does not have enough clout to move the tournament back a day. By now all the pools are complete, the bettors are anxious and the bookies are in hot-tubs cavorting with UNLV players (UNLV is not, surprise, in this year's tourney).

With this particular tournament, there has been, in the past, some degree of inaccuracy in determining the final four (last year was an exception) and the elite eight; the fact of the matter is that there always have been, and always will be, upsets. This year the picture is not so clear as, say, the year when Augmon and Johnson led the Runnin' Rebels to victory.

The question that everyone is asking is whether or not UNC has what it takes to repeat. Eric Montross has proven his leadership skills and UNC will win the East by beating (sequentially): #16 Liberty, #9 Boston College (yes, that is an upset victory for B.C. over Washington St. in the first round), #5 Indiana (the Hoosiers will cruise past #4 Temple in the second round—Bob Knight will prove to be too cunning for John Chaney (no relation to either Calbert or Lon)) and their final prey, #6 Nebraska. Nebraska should upset #3 Florida and demolish #10 George Washington (who, in turn, will upset #2 Connecticut in the second round—G.W. has always proved to be a strong force in the NCAA tourney).

Where there is an East, there is usually a West; the question being, is this division up for grabs? The top four seeds are Missouri, Arizona, Louisville and Syracuse, thus the easy answer is yes. However, what about #8 Cincinnati and #5 California? Can they play a role in the outcome of this mosh-pit-esque West? Undeniably.

The Arizona Wildcats should win the West, but the route will be full of sleet and snow. On the top side of the draw, #1 ranked Missouri will get to the third round by annihilating Cincinnati (not the team it was in the last four years) where they will lose to California (Cal. will upset Syracuse—the Orangemen are good but are not as hungry as Kidd, and the match is in Los Angeles, about 5,000 km from Syracuse).

This leaves us with a California/Arizona matchup, with the Wildcats coming out on top. Arizona earned their spot by beating #16 Loyola (Md.) in the first round, #10 New Mexico (Virginia's #7 ranking is a little inflated so N. Mex. will upset them in the first round), and #3 Louisville (Louis. gets as far as the third by thrashing #6 Minnesota in the second).

On towards the Midwest, the place where the Weber-less Michigan Fabs can potentially seal the deal for themselves this year. The only factor is whether or not Jalen Rose is hungry enough. Michigan will win this one, upsetting #2 Arkansas (sorry Bill, park's closed) in the elite eight, #1 Mass. in the sweet sixteen (Mass. will destroy Maryland in the second round), #6 Texas in the second round and #14 Pepperdine in the first.

Arkansas will beat #5 UCLA (who in turn upsets #4 Oklahoma State in the second) in the sweet sixteen, #8 Illinois in the second and #16 N.C. A&T in the first.

This leaves us with the South-east. Kentucky, ah yes, Kentucky. Kansas will be victims of rabid Kentucky in the elite eight while Duke (beating #10 Seton Hall in the second round) shall fall in the regionals. Prior to these matchups, Kentucky will beat #6 Marquette and #14 Tennessee State.

Kansas' road is a little bumpier. They have to face #1 Purdue in the sweet sixteen, and #5 Wake Forest in the second round. Purdue (26-4) and Kansas (25-7) are excellent teams, however, it is surprising that Purdue got to be ranked numero uno this year. Regardless, Purdue and Alabama will meet in the second round with Purdue being victorious.

UNC vs. Kentucky and Arizona vs. Michigan, what a final four this is (providing all my picks are correct, highly unlikely in this age of unsurety). The final UNC against Arizona game makes the crystal ball very blurry, as it's clear, the only thing coherent is "Tar Heels." With this in mind, change all your bets and start a new pool.

Kozan drafted by CFL's green 'Riders

Could rejoin Elberg for hometown reunion

By FRANK DIXON

A boyhood dream came true for Regina's Paul Kozan two weekends ago when he was picked in the sixth round of the Canadian Football League's annual draft of Canadians by his hometown Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Kozan (Arts '94) is a four-year veteran running back with the Queen's Golden Gaels, and a key member of the school's 1992 Vanier Cup national champions. "The Vanier Cup is the special highlight from my playing career here," Kozan said. "This is pretty exciting, too. I've always been a 'Rider fan. If I make the team, I'll at least have a place to stay. With the league's new teams in the U.S., I could get a chance to travel all over to play."

The CFL has added three expansion teams, Las Vegas, Baltimore, and Shreveport for the 1994 season, joining the eight long-time Canadian teams and last year's entry, Sacramento, to form a 12-team league.

The Roughriders have invited the 6', 200 lb. Kozan to their June training camp to try out for the fullback position, which should be an ideal showcase for his superlative blocking skills. Playing fullback also could involve a few rushes and receptions per game. The two-time OJIFC All-Star sees special teams as his niche to make the team, at least as a rookie. "Special teams are where you can show your fire," Kozan said.

If Kozan makes the 'Riders, he would join a large group of former Gaels who have made the professional ranks. Some of the biggest names are Mike Schad (lineman, Philadelphia Eagles), Jock Climie (slotback, Ottawa Rough Riders), Ron Stewart (halfback, Ottawa), Jim Young (receiver, B.C. Lions), and Bob Howes (lineman, Edmonton Eskimos). Stewart and Young are both CFL Hall-of-Famers.

Kozan was chosen by the

Paul Kozan CHRIS PRICE

HOCKEY	POOL	RESULTS
1	Chetowen	176
2	Patieuse	161
3	Foogie	160
4	Farrar	159
5	Grizzly	159
6	190 Barry	158
7	Jeffer	155
8	W.A.F.C.	152
9	Habchick	149
10	Number 1	147

Gaels bury badgers and ground gryphons in tournament win

By THE QUEEN'S WOMEN'S SOCCER TEAM

The Queen's women's soccer team finished off their short but spiffy indoor season last weekend with a trip to St. Catharines to compete in a tournament at Brock University. Leaving Kingston early Friday evening, they arrived at Rancho Jameson in Toronto to be greeted with mounds of spaghetti and overindulgent hospitality. The team continued on to St. Catharines the next morning for their first game against Brock University. The match was characterized by numerous shots on the Brock keeper and some pretty passing plays around confused Brock players, who at times seemed as mentally alert as their stuffed badger mascot in the trophy case. The two goals scored for Queen's were recorded by Kristin Lawlor—the second being a stellar low shot to the corner—and the shutout was claimed by the keeper Daisy (currently living under the alias of Dawn Dell'Agnese). Final score: Queen's 2, Brock 0.

The second game of the day was against East division rivals York, and proved to be a much more competitive one. Keepers for both sides were tested often, and Martha Hall notched the first goal for Queen's. York, however, battled back to score two of their own. Fortunately, Kristin Lawlor also scored a pair, giving Queen's a 3-2 win.

The last game of the day matched the Gaels against Guelph, a strong and skilled team that was determined to take two points from the contest. Queen's was equally determined, and the action was fast and furious. Daisy the keeper was called upon to make several great saves, showing why she belongs on the Ontario provincial team. In the end, Guelph had to settle for a 0-0 draw, and Queen's remained undefeated.

The team then left St. Catharines for Oakville and overtook the Hall residence for the night. As the utility bill will show, no one could accuse the women's soccer team of a tendency to uncleanliness, at least not this time. An early start saw the team on the road by 8:10 the next morning for the first game of the day against Waterloo. A mishap during the pregame warm-up had Daisy the keeper inadvertently put the back of her head between a booming shot and the net. It was decided that Daisy could not play after she kept trying to punch the annoying little birds flying round her head in the stomach. Sarita Kennedy was put between the pipes, and Waterloo's offensive threat was nullified with the help of Sharon's lucky spit and tight marking by the Gaels. Queen's made much of their numerous chances to score with Martha Hall scoring two goals and Sharon Jameson and Deb Cancian each recording one. Queen's took the game 4-1.

Daisy had returned to the Queen's bench at halftime, happy to announce the diagnosis of a mild concussion, and declared herself fit to play the next game, a semifinal match with Brock. Queen's soon realized that Brock had come to play. The Badgers beat Queen's to many balls and didn't hesitate to shoot, but Daisy kept the Gaels in the game. Martha Hall scored the first goal of the game, but Brock quickly matched it. Things looked bad for Queen's when a penalty in the last two minutes left them a player short. Brock thought they had the game on a shot that eluded Daisy and dribbled towards the goal line, but Martha Hall came out of nowhere to make a sliding save. Regulation time ended in a 1-1 tie and the game went into sudden death overtime. Brock soon lost their man advantage, and after beating two defenders Martha Hall ended the game with a goal for Queen's.

The Gaels were due to meet Guelph in the finals, and Sarita Kennedy donned the gloves in place of the woody Daisy. With only three subs and a novice keeper, the Gaels held off Guelph's relentless attack with suffocating defence and more of Sharon's lucky spit. It looked like the game would go into overtime until Kristin Lawlor scored a goal in the last five minutes and Shannon Gadbois put the game away with a lethal shot just under the crossbar. Queen's held on for the gold medal.

Congratulations to Martha Hall and Shannon Gadbois, who were named to the tournament all-star team. Special mention goes to Jen Sivilotti and Andrea Uszkay, for tireless running and aggressive marking. Many thanks to Mrs. Jameson, Sharon, and Martha for their hospitality, to Shannon and Dave for coaching and driving and to trainers Jen and Sharon.

Applications are now available for:

QSCSG COORDINATORS

PUBLIC RELATIONS Internal PUBLIC RELATIONS External

Term of office is May 1, 1994 - April 30, 1995. Information regarding these jobs and applications are available at the AMS or QSCSG Offices.

Applications Due: Friday, March 25, 1994, 5:00pm, at the AMS Office. Please contact Jane Shantz at the AMS Office for more details -- 545-2725.

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS AND FRANCOPHONES.

CAMERA KINGSTON

ONE HOUR PHOTO VIDEO ELECTRONICS

FREE
2nd set of prints
With
1 hour processing
Valid until the end of March

114 Princess St.
549-3747

Bath & Gardiners Rds.
384-3747

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entree and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

FRIDAY
Days of View
SATURDAY
Box Meat Revolution
MONDAY
Incity Dream
THURSDAY
P.F. SHOW

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan
76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) Tel: 544-1966

Order your custom made Queen's Graduation Ring during this special two day event and get a FREE "TIMEZUP" WATCH!! Purchase your Jostens' Grad ring before TIMEZUP!

 CAMPUS BOOKSTORE
545-2955

MARCH 22 & 23
10:00 A.M. - 5:00 P.M.

Offer valid while watch quantities last.

JOSTENS CANADA LTD.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE FOR:

Chairs and Members
Childcare Committee
Accessibility Task Force

Applications available TODAY at the AMS Office.

Applications due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS Office for chairs.
Applications for members due March 30, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS Office.

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

S.T.A.R.
Student Team On Alumni Relations
is now accepting applications for
Committee Chairs

- 2 Cake Service
- 2 Alumni Kids
- 2 Alumni Weekend
- 2 Career Buddy
- 2 Creative and New Ideas
- 2 Senior Alumni
- 1 Guess Whose Coming to Dinner
- 1 Photography
- 1 Send-off
- 1 Parent Orientation Day
- 2 Future Alumni

Applications Due March 25th at 4:00pm

Applications for COMMITTEE MEMBERS due March 28th at 4:00 pm

Applications are available & accepted at the AMS and Alumni Affairs office! Phone the S.T.A.R. Office for more information. 545-2060

Are Your Seminars Superb?

Are Your Classes Classic?

Is Your Professor Perfect?

If so nominate this OUTSTANDING Individual for the ASUS Teaching Excellence Award

Nominations are due on March 25th

Applications can be picked up at the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Office at 183 University or at the AMS Infobank, JDUC.
For more info call 545-6278.

Recognize Excellence

TUESDAY MARCH 22nd

BATTLE OF THE BANDS

8p.m. FINAL 8p.m.

WEDNESDAY MARCH 23RD

8 p.m. THE SIDEMEN 8 p.m.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE IN COMMUNICATIONS AND THE "NEW" MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION:

COMMUNICATIONS

Deputy Opts and Information
Infobank
Infoservices
Open Forums
AMS/Assembly Press Releases
Communication Liaison

Deputy Public Relations
Media Liaison
Public Education Campaigns
Fill us in Committee
Queen's Enquirer Committee
High School Liaison Committee
AMS Recruiting
AMS Communication Strategies
Faculty Training Sessions

Deputy Programmes and Events
Student Team on Alumni Relations
Orientation Roundtable
Alumni Weekend Committee

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION

Deputy Research and Education
Housing Issues Committee
Community Development Committee
Campus Masterplan
Policy and Position Papers
Housing Issues Task Force Implementation

Deputy Programmes and Events
Street Captains
Housecheck Programme
Bike Right
Large-item Garbage Pick-up
Exchange Centre
Operation Safeguard

APPLICATIONS available TODAY at the AMS Office!

Communications Commissioner Applications
Due: March 21, 1994 at 12:00pm

Municipal Affairs Commissioner Applications
Due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00pm

Deputy Applications Due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS office
Chair Applications Due: March 30, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS

Committee Member Applications: April 1, 1994 at 4:00pm at the AMS

QUEEN'S GRAD CLUB ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING MARCH 23, 1994 7:00 PM refreshments served ELECTION OF NEW BOARD MEMBERS

Please submit agenda items to QGC office by March 12, 1994. Financial report and Agenda available March 12, 1994. Nomination forms for Board Positions can be picked up at QGC office. This form requires 5 signatures from club members and the nominee. Completed forms are to be returned to the club prior to the start of the AGM to the attention of the C.R.O.

162 Barrie Street 546-3427

The A.M.S. Annual General Meeting took place Tuesday, March 15, 1994 at 7 pm in the McLaughlin Room. Although seventy-four members of the Alma Mater Society attended, we did not have the required quorum of one hundred members. This shall constitute due notice of the lack of quorum as per section 9.01.08 of the AMS Constitution.

For more information please contact the Internal Affairs Commission at 545-2725, ext 4815.

THE COLORADO STRING QUARTET

- * First 'First Prize' winners the Banff International String Quartet Competition
- * 1983 Naumburg Chamber Music Award
- * Founders, Soundfest Chamber Music Festival

Programme

Mozart - Quartet in C Major, K. 465
Mendelssohn - Quartet in F minor, op. 80
Shostakovich - Quartet in A-flat Major, Op. 118 (No.10)

ONLY $7 QUEEN'S STUDENT !!!
(plus GST)

Sunday 20 March 2:30 PM Grant Hall

$20 / $8 (Child) plus GST
Visa & Mastercard accepted

Tickets: Queen's Box Office, JDUC
Union & University 545-2558

.....Finally, An efficient apartment!

Your own washer & dryer, microwave & central vac in a sound-proofed building.

- Plus
- 5 bedrooms for $1415.
 - 1 1/2 baths
 - gas fireplace
 - 2-storeys
 - skylights
 - deck with barbecue
 - very low utilities

And
It's close to the beer store,
John's Deli & a copy shop.
9 minute walk to the corner of University & Union.

One month's free rent!

Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000!

ENTERTAINMENT

Meet The Mahones

AN INTERVIEW WITH FINNAN MCCONNELL
BY ROB FURSE

Finnan and his best friend, Mr. Beer, just hangin' out.

CHRIS PRICE

In the grandest of rock n' roll traditions, The Mahones were formed on St. Patrick's Day, 1990, to do a one-off show at the Toucan.

According to legend, lead singer Finnan McConnell, who was already involved in another band, The Reckoning, grabbed an old Irish song book, a few friends and celebrated the day doing traditional Irish folk songs. Now, four years later, The Reckoning are gone, but The Mahones live on. Finnan, otherwise known as Finny, is the only original member left. The rest of the band is now composed of Owen Warnica (bass), Ger O'Sullivan (mandolin, vocals), Andy Brown (tin whistle, accordion) and Mauro Sepe (drummer).

Having established a solid following in Kingston, the band has also played to sold-out shows through word of mouth alone, in New York City, San Francisco, Boston and New Orleans. The Mahones have also now signed with Kinetic Records and have released their major label debut, Draggin' the Days, on this St. Patrick's Day at House of Sounds. Following the record release, the band played The Toucan in the afternoon, and Alfie's in the evening.

This past Tuesday at The Shot I had a chance to talk with Finny and get an overview of Kingston's hottest band since The Tragically Hip (hey, man, what about those Inbreds?). Of course, no chat with any of The Mahones is complete without a pint or two, and what was meant to be a quick and precise journalistic mission was corrupted into an all-consuming night of drunken debauchery. What follows is the coherent and printable portion of the evening. All I can say is: Homework be damned! Cheers to The Mahones!

The Queen's Journal: When did The Reckoning get overshadowed by The Mahones?
Finnan McConnell: There's a good question. Probably about a year and half ago. The Mahones have been busy all of last year, and about half a year before that.

QJ: How long were the Reckoning together for?

FM: Since 1989. It was just supposed to be a complete underground thing, as a retaliation to all the Queen's bands that were going around at the time.

QJ: When did you sign with Kinetic Records and how were you discovered?

FM: First of all we signed on January 11th. We'd been talking to them since last summer, and we'd been talking to some indie labels. But basically these guys had money, they owned music manufacturing so they could make albums, they had distribution and they had a professional record exec boss, who was at Atlantic for ten years. So it was all a real professional organization. And our friend Steve Jordan was there.

QJ: What are your expectations for Draggin' the Days?

FM: Gold—(50 000 sales in Canada) People think we will have a gold record. I mean Lowest of the Low sold 30 000 off the truck, and they'll probably triple that with the new album. We'll sell lots right away; people have been waiting for this record for a long time. We sold 1000 demo tapes and we stopped selling them.

QJ: What led you to start playing traditional Irish music?

FM: Well I'm Irish. I grew up in an Irish pub. I lived above

QJ: Why do you think The Mahones are so popular with the public?

FM: Well number one, it's the live show. We didn't release any music until last fall and we were selling out shows in Toronto and Ottawa. People just like it, it's different. We're basically the only guys doing this. We're Irish punk with edge, with a bit of folk.

QJ: How do the Mahones write songs?

FM: Well at the moment, Gerry and I have written them all. I think in the future we'll be writing more as a band. We write them at home and bring them in and the band plays them—usually right on stage. The first time we played "Draggin' the Days" was a Clark Hall, and the band had never heard it. It was like "follow me and just start strumming."

QJ: Do you find that playing traditional Irish music restricts your creativity?

FM: Yeah, I do a bit, but you'll hear new songs on the album where you can see we've gone outside the circle. We're stretching the bounds now, which is making it interesting for us guys you know. We're starting to use a lot of distortion and go to the boundaries of the sound.

QJ: How do you feel about the current Kingston music scene?

FM: To be quite honest, there really isn't one right now. There aren't any bands in this town, really. The Shermans broke up. The Stonecutters broke up. The Inbreds are still going. The Seamonsters are in limbo. So it doesn't leave much. I guess there are a lot of bands you and I don't know about, that we'll see at the Live Music Lovers Concert. Kingston is a good place to nurture a band, it's not tough as Toronto would be, and you're geographically perfect for Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto and New York. I think it's a good place to start a band.

QJ: Do you feel you've been supported by Kingston?

FM: On and off. I got a bit of snub from the alternative crowd when I stopped playing with the Reckoning, which was painfully obvious because nobody came to my gigs any more. But it was a new crowd for the Mahones and it was bigger.

QJ: Is it an older crowd?

FM: We get mainly a student crowd. We get from children to old people. I think people just like to let their hair down. You can be Dr. Jekyll at our shows and we don't care. Get all drunk and jump on stage, we're not going to have a roadie kick you off stage. Whereas J Mascis might have you thrown off.

QJ: How do you feel about The Tragically Hip?

FM: Well I went to school with the guys in the Hip. A couple of us used to play in a band together. I have all four of their albums; I think they're great. I wish they were bigger in the States, but I think that's not their problem. I think it's their record company, cause they're massive in Canada and they tour Europe and Australia.

QJ: Who in the Hip did you go to school with?

FM: All of them except Johnny [the drummer], because he was younger than us. But we all went to school at KCVI.

QJ: It says in your bio that The Mahones generally match their audience drink for drink. Is that true and do you think anyone in the band has a drinking problem?

FM: No, there's no problem there [laughs]. I mean we don't get up in the morning and crack a bottle of vodka, but at every gig we play, the beer is free. I can drink 10 pints, easy. We have beer companies sponsoring us, but we always give it away to all our friends.

QJ: Who are the band's role models?

FM: We love Shane McGowan from The Pogues, he's one of our Homework be damned! Cheers to The Mahones!

"Billy Death" (vocalist/guitarist) and "Harry Hollywood" (drums) of Los Seamonsters.

The battle rages on: Round III

THORAX, SEVEN AND LOS SEAMONSTERS ALFIE'S BY CATHERINE LIPA

Thorax, Seven and Los Seamonsters, the final three bands to compete in the 1994 Battle of the Bands semi-finals, finally had the opportunity to strut their stuff this past Tuesday night. Actually quite well-attended, this Battle of the Bands was successful largely due to the relative popularity of all three contenders.

Thorax started the night off on an interesting note. The trio screamed metal, in everything from their wardrobe, to their actions, to their songs. Certainly this performance was the most theatrically entertaining of the night. Their set was strung together by transitions in which the vocalist and bassist and/or the guitarist read from their little black books.

The story they told read something like the Book of Genesis, only of the Thorax variety, following a warrior to his death at which point he descends into Hades and there finds out exactly what Thorax is. At the end of this story, two purple (some religious connotation intended, perhaps?) candles were dramatically lit.

Musically, their sound is quite dense and their performance was tight. "Motor Machine" is the band's tried-and-true metal song, complete with silly lyrics with references to sex and Satan. The vocalist, as another reviewer once pointed out, sounds like a lawnmower most of the time. This effect adds to the music that is Thorax.

This is a fun band—as the Thorax fans in attendance seemed to know—a few danced while other gently banged their heads in the back row and others just screamed a whole lot. At first

Thorax may come across as the next Spinal Tap but on closer inspection, it is obvious that these guys are serious about their metal. And it is the entire culture of metal with which they are fascinated. At this point, it seemed possible that Thorax could become the victors of this semi-final round.

After the Thorax performance, Seven's set sounded very flat and empty. Perhaps this stemmed from their decision to begin their set with one of their mellow, melancholy tracks. However, the addition of a second guitar for "The Tune" did not improve the richness of their sound.

This four-piece band took a more generic approach, falling somewhere in the now-mainstream alternative/grunge sound, as evidenced by the bassist's Tool t-shirt. Perhaps evidence of Seven's still-developing musical mastership, there were times when it sounded as though the drummer was not keeping an entirely consistent time.

In terms of performance, Seven had no stage presence. The lead guitarist stood away from the rest of the band on stage left, in his own world, contributing to the feeling that the band was not really a cohesive whole. They simply didn't seem to be enjoying their own music and show.

Despite all of this, the audience seemed to show slightly more appreciation for Seven than for Thorax. Perhaps this was the additional drinking that went on between the two sets, but in the end, Seven's mundane, highly derivative sound lost their chance for victory.

Last, but certainly not least, to take the stage were Los Seamonsters. From the first note of their first song of the night, "Only a Car," their perky sound automatically changed the atmosphere of Alfie's into one where everyone could finally enjoy themselves. Their sound proved to be not only more "power-poppy" and "The Wedge-ish" than their competitors, but also ultimately more commercially viable. The trio's set was tight, full of songs which displayed the great underlying rhythms associated with the band.

Los Seamonsters' longevity and popularity encouraged the most audience participation of the night. This was probably a large factor in the battle's outcome. Even the band members seemed thoroughly entertained by the dancers' antics, and for the audience, it was certainly almost as fun to watch the dancers as it was to watch the band.

There's something about Los Seamonsters that, even though they aren't that active on stage, allows them to exude a certain powerful stage presence that the other two bands did not quite achieve. This is probably due in part to the fact that Los Seamonsters looked like they were actually enjoying playing their music to an appreciative audience.

Although Los Seamonsters jokingly billed one of their last songs of the evening, "Look Ma, No Talent," as the "apropos song of the night," they proved this not to be the case. For, in the end, Los Seamonsters were judged to be the victors of the night's battle. They continue to the Battle of the Bands final competition next Tuesday at Alfie's to take on the winners of the first two semi-final rounds, Yellowbelly and Fat Spider.

That crazy "Harry" of Los Seamonsters, uh, drumming.

Going to war with the Democrats

THE WAR ROOM DIRECTED BY DA. PENNEBAKER AND CHRIS HEGEDUS PRINCESS COURT CINEMA BY JONATHAN LEIGH

It has been said by some in the business (politics, that is) that only three per-cent of the population cares about the political process. Of that rather disappointing share of the masses, a small fraction actually participates in anything like a political campaign, whether it be an interest group or full fledged political party.

These numbers would suggest that the makers of The War Room were working from a deficit in terms of an audience that would actually sit and watch ninety minutes of film behind the scenes of the 1992 Clinton presidential campaign. The result, however, is an exciting, well-paced depiction of winning backroom politics in the nineties, and not only entertains the expected audience of political junkies, but also captures the imagination of those of us who simply like a good story.

The War Room spends ten minutes nipping at the heels of James Carville, Clinton's campaign manager, and George Stephanopolous, the campaign's communication director. Dubbed the Ragin' Cajun, Carville is a hired gun who sets his sights first on the Democratic New Hampshire primary and then on President George Bush. Wearing a war room staff shirt with the words "Carville speed killed Bush" on the back, Carville is known for spewing inspirational expletives to volunteers. In his own words, the entire campaign boils down to one simple issue: "It's the economy, stupid."

Carville is very entertaining to watch, whether it be in a two hour discussion on sign colours at the Democratic National Convention in New York, or plotting mayhem around the board room. While at first he may come off as a "hick from the sticks" (a moniker he readily accepts), the political savvy and street smarts of this native son from the south quickly show through.

The quick wit of the fiery Cajun is balanced on the other side by 31 year old George Stephanopolous, the campaign's master spin doctor. With boyish looks and disarming charm, this Rhodes scholar, who comes to work dressed in denim from head to toe, looks like a college kid who doesn't want to grow up working in the eye of a political storm. Unlike Carville, Stephanopolous never seems to break a sweat, and maintains a quiet confidence throughout the campaign.

With the motto of "let-them-spin, we-will-win," Stephanopolous occupies the dream job of any political junkie, and can be seen as a role model for those who turn politics into more than just a hobby. Carville PLEASE SEE D-DAY PAGE 30

Carville and Stephanopolous fire the A-Bomb at Bush.

Drawing the line at fine art

IN TO THE FLUID CONSTRUCTION AGNES ETHERINGTON ART GALLERY BY MICHAEL MOSS

What can you do about David Rabinowitch? The sculptures of In To the Fluid Sheet Construction are for the most part fragile, transient, and rarely conserved in anything but photography. So what the Agnes does is collect 26 of his drawings and put them on display as extra insight into his creative formula. And though one has every right to get enthused about this somewhat personal exhibit, the reasons for doing so are few. Offhand, I can't think of any.

The fact is they're boring. I highly doubt the artist foresaw seeing them in a gallery, and if he did, then he probably chuckled at the thought. An average drawing consists of a few hasty lines which supposedly suggest "penetrating motion" or "made things sufficiently unto themselves." This is nonsense. The finished works themselves are exceptional forms: they are smooth, natural, and elegant. The drawings, on the other hand, are almost inexplicable. Obviously, they contain a greater value due to the impermanence of the artistic product itself, but that is not grounds for veneration.

Still, the fact is they show the artist at work, in the throes of inspiration, grasping with cosmic stuff. Whatever the case, they do possess some inherent worth, sort of like bear scat for wilderness goers. For instance, they make a fine artistic catalogue of the different pencils, pens, and what-nots he employed in his series of studies.

I suppose my sense of disappointment is comparable, though to a lesser degree, to one time when I saw a travelling exhibit of Picassos. There was this cardboard cut-out of a vaguely male form, the big deal being that he cut out a penis to give it a three-dimensional erection. Anyway, I thought to myself, "I'm sure God forgives you Pablo." I think it's now in Chicago. But the point herein is not visual beauty or artistic incompleteness. No, it's all a matter of sincerity. This is certainly not a character assault on the artist, far be it from that, but just a question to those who patronize this exhibit. Can you draw the line somewhere? Do you feel a commitment to protect it's (the scribbles) merit against unbelievers?

Mind you, checking out the photographs is worth the while. Barring aside silly quotes from the artist like, "a work stands between the clarity of life and the simplicity of death," the Agnes has dug deeply and mined out a presentable small-gallery exhibit that was justifiably left unhypped. Drawing exhibits are quite often exciting, bordering on racy. Everyone likes to see the initial prefiguration of a drawing. Even when the drawing is its own end result, it still commands a power that finished work in other media lacks. This appeal is bound up with the personal stamp that only a drawing seems to convey. This appeal is altogether lost in Rabinowitch's doodles, for whatever it's worth.

Dart to the Heart

BRUCE COCKBURN DART TO THE HEART TRUE NORTH BY JAMES KEAST

One key to music expression is to create an art that will last beyond the confines of the time in which it is created, while simultaneously reflecting that time. The Rolling Stones' Exile On Main St. is a classic not only because it speaks for its time, but because it resonates beyond it.

The one hit wonders of the world, the artists destined for the bargain bins and K-Tel collections (or Jane Mundell's radio show) are the ones who, while they may have reflected their own time, fail to resonate beyond it.

It is the obligation of the rock critic to try and stand at a vantage point fixed in time, and to try to look into the future. Many a person has cringed at having panned the White Album, or dismissed Pearl Jam as another grunge band ready to crawl back into the garage and into obscurity.

The tools that one employs in this project are multifaceted: knowledge of the artist's career, general knowledge of music, and keen listening skills. But the one thing that the critic has to do is stand at this temporal vantage point and gaze into the future. Does this album speak for this time? But more importantly, does it speak to something greater, something beyond this time?

A career as long lasting as Bruce Cockburn's (it has spanned 25 years) is sure to undergo significant change and transformation. Each album is a new evolutionary step, a move in a different direction, a music created in a different context.

Interestingly, the directions that Bruce Cockburn has been taking lately are antithetical to the work he is most noted for, and harken back to his earlier career as a folk singer/songwriter.

Cockburn is known most prominently as a political musician—the one who did "If I Had a Rocket Launcher" and sings about the rain forests, acid rain, death squads and the death of capitalism. But in truth, his political work is a fraction of his musical career, and his most recent work, Dart to the Heart, is in fact a collection of love songs.

Cockburn's strengths as a songwriter have always been in two distinct areas. On one hand, his lyrics are often poetically beautiful, full of stirring imagery and spectacularly human insight. On the other hand, he is an excellent music writer, able to string together a beautiful melody, counterpoint it with some interlarding rhythms, and flesh it out with diverse instrumentation.

Duh, you might say. Music and words, and you're saying he's good at both of them. Well, good thing.

But I would argue that the strengths of Bob Dylan and Leonard Cohen lay in their lyrics, not their music. The opposite would be true for Sting or Peter Gabriel. That's not to say that these artists are not competent, even good at the other skills, but their strengths lie in one or the other direction.

However, Cockburn's competence in both is also his downfall, because on this latest album, he doesn't always succeed in merging those two elements. Too often beautiful instrumentation is accompanied by clunky lyric writing, a trap that Cockburn has fallen into in the past when his political agenda has dominated his music. (After all, what rhymes with Nicaragua?)

The presence of beautiful instrumentation on a number of tunes makes its absence on ours notable. Stupid lyrics stand out even more glaringly: Could be the famine/Could be the feast/Could be the pusher/Could be the priest/Always ourselves we love the least/That's the burden of the angel-beast is not the worst thing he has written, it just stands out when it's the chorus and is repeated four times.

But the beautiful and sublime moments on this album far outshine some minor glitches. For the most part, these come with a merging of interesting music and excellent lyrics—and a touch of truth. If anyone told me they were not touched by "Someone I Used to Love" I would have to question their humanity.

Although competently backed by able musicianship on this album, it is a Bruce Cockburn-album, not a band album. It's strengths are his, and blame for its weaknesses must fall on his shoulders as well.

As for its place in history, its sense of timelessness... I really don't know. I'm a Cockburn fan, and I am really in love with the bulk of this material. It's as strong as anything he's done, but the weaknesses are often glaring. It's a good solid album with a timeless theme, and some really pleasing elements. Whether people are going to put it on in five years and say "That's so 1994." I really can't say.

Mellow Gold

BECK MELLOW GOLD GEFEN BY CHRIS SHULGAN

Beck is the guy who sings the current bar/club/college station hit, "Loser." It seems like anybody who plays the song overplays it, but it's still great, a kind of Johnny Cash-type spoken rap over a catchy blues sample. Beck already has an EP out, also called "Loser." His Mellow Gold, came out on

"Jerk" and "Beercan" are backed by hip hop dance beats.

But Beck is more than an anti-Beastie Boy. His songs are barren, some just utilizing his voice and a distorted guitar. The Beasties' songs are made to listen to when you're with a bunch of friends, drinking before the bars or sweaty on the dance floor, filled with the adrenalin of the weekend, forgetting your day-to-day troubles. Beck's songs are about a guy overwhelmed with day-to-day troubles, about a lousy low-life kid doin' nothing for himself.

His songs are nightmare lullabies, the kind Hunter S.

Thompson would sing to his kids, if he had kids. If he could sing. One of them, "Sweet Sunshine," even starts with a sample from a music box. They describe the bleak, spiritual wasteland of a world with shopping malls coming out of the walls and too much white trash. Beck is a broke musician battling against the whisky stained buck toothed back woods creep(s) in a world where everyone's out to get you ("Motherfucker"). And he escapes not by playing the Beastie Boys but by doing pretty well every kind of booze and illicit drug imaginable.

Mellow Gold is not what the person who has only heard "Loser" might expect of Beck. A better comparison than above would be Bob Dylan combined with Sonic Youth.

Mellow Gold is a depressing album that sometimes assails the ear with synthesizer produced distortion. But it is through the distortion that the point of the album is made. Beck paints a vivid portrait of the troubles in the life of a musician before he makes it big. He does this with exceptional writing throughout, and a few songs that border on greatness.

The album gets a lot less depressing when you realize that with it, Beck has beaten his truck drivin' neighbours downstairs and the rest, and actually made it.

Hopefully, he'll listen to his own advice and pay no mind to others, to continue to give the finger to the rock and roll singer, and not let success rob him of his material.

Need some extra cash?
Be the scribe for ASUS Assembly
for 1994/95.

To be the ASUS Scribe, you must EITHER:

- a) HAVE A PORTABLE laptop COMPUTER
- OR
- b) KNOW SHORTHAND

For more information, please stop by the CORE at 183 University or call 545-6278. Those interested should contact ASUS before March 23rd.

DAILEY TRAVEL AGENCY

DEPARTURES

- April 1- May 8 Paris from $509.00+tax
- May 17 Amsterdam from $509.00+tax
- May 17 Frankfurt from $519.00+tax
- April 29 London/Manchester from $459.00+tax
- May 3 Dublin from $459.00+tax

* Prices change depending on return Youth 16-21 $60 reduction

PLEASE CALL DAILEY TRAVEL 307-ALFRED STREET, 544-5755

ASUS

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

March 24th, 1994

- All members of the Society:
- i) may be present at any Society Annual Meeting;
 - ii) may speak to any motion under consideration;
 - iii) may move or second motions;
 - iv) may exercise their voting privileges on any motion.

to be held in rm 201, Kingston Hall at 7:00pm

All Undergraduate Arts & Science students are encouraged to attend!

READ ME! QMT

Do you feel nostalgic? Do you miss the music of the '50's? If you do, then make sure you catch the Queen's Musical Theatre's performance of Leader of the Pack. Featuring such renowned songs as "Do Wah Diddy," "Chapel of Love," and

"Why Do Lovers Break Each Others' Hearts," Leader of the Pack follows the life of songwriter Ellie Greenwich from the '50's to the '80's and gives a behind-the-scenes look at the politics of composing for artists like Darlene Love and Tina Turner. With a cast of 25, and a band of 11, the show promises to be as enjoyable (and undoubtedly less controversial) than QMT's last show, Kismet. Performances are at Duncan McArthur Auditorium, West Campus on March 18 and 19 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 (Students and Seniors) and $7 (Adults) and are available at the Queen's Box Office and at the door.

RADIO DIAZE
CFRC-FM 101.9 / cable 90.9 is YOUR campus-community alternative in Kingston! Tune in for a live interview with Furnaceface on Heated Edges, today at 4 p.m.!

CFRC'S TOP TEN FOR THE WEEK OF MARCH 6-13

IC	LC	ARTIST	RECORD
1	2	Various	Soundtrack: Reality Bites
2	—	Flop	The Great Valediction
3	—	Morrissey	The More You Ignore Me, The Closer I Get
4	12	Pavement	Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain
5	1	*The Rose Chronicles	Shiver
6	3	*An April March	Impatiens
7	—	Yo La Tengo	From A to Motel 6
8	4	Buffalo Tom	I'm Allowed
9	26	Shonen Knife	Rock Animals
10	16	*The Smugglers	Party...Party...Party...Pauper!

* denotes Canadian artist/content

Only at JJ's

Catch the Leas at JJ's

The "Philly Melt"
Served with a Mountain of fries!

Only $ 4.95

OPEN Mon - Fri : 11 am - 12 am
Sat : 12 pm - 12 am
Sun : 4:30 pm - 11 pm
409 Johnson Street at University Tel # : 547-3771

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

Queen's University School of Music presents a concert by the

COLLEGIUM MUSICUM
Directed by Dr. Olga E. Malyshko

Performing Music from the Fourteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries.
Works by Machaut, Josquin, Willaert, Arcadelt, Sermisy, Dowland, Pilkington, and Morley.

Sunday, March 20, 1994 - 4:00 p.m.
St. James Church, Kingston
Admission: $6 regular, $3 students/seniors

Take a Break at Gregory's Restaurant

Gourmet Burger, fries, salad and a 12 oz upper Canadian premium Beverage, only $5.95 with this coupon

Monday - Saturday 11.30 am - 6 pm

Club VIP Kingston members receive 10% discount on dinner entrées after 6 pm

56 Queen St at King Downtown 547-5645

D-day

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28

admires his spin doctor, saying "That little Greek is creative." Underneath the relaxed shell, however, Stephanopolous maintains a tough inner core, threatening wavering democrats of permanent political unemployment if they don't come on side in a hurry. But even as he's driving people into submission, Stephanopolous does so with his trademark charm, first swaying, and then coercing the person on the other end of the line to accept his wisdom.

Perhaps the best part of the movie is watching Stephanopolous turn from calm, cool, collective communicator, to a guy who looks like he just won the World Series. The audience soon finds itself caught up in an animated cellular phone conversation between Clinton and Stephanopolous, and then overcome with his contagious energy when he starts jumping up and down. It is this kind of episode which gives this movie the pace and energy needed to keep people watching what is otherwise a simple documentary.

The fact that the film-making husband and wife team of D.A. Pennebaker and Chris Hegedus have produced a quality political documentary is not surprising. Previous works by Pennebaker include such masterpieces as Monterey Pop and Don't Look Back. What is surprising is that the film has been successful in attracting such a diverse audience not normally predisposed to watching a political documentary.

With the rest of the war room and a diverse group of outsiders as its supporting cast, The War Room offers something new around every corner, providing insights into unknown events of the most watched presidential campaign in history. The film is valuable purely for this instructional reason, but it ends up going far beyond its political veneer.

The result is a story which gets the reader caught up in the 10 month campaign, regardless of political stripe, and the lives of the people who guide us through it. People who prayed for a Bush rebirth will find themselves cheering for the little Greek and the fiery Cajun, not for what they believe, but for how they make us believe it.

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely

Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
Reality Bites 7:10 9:25
The Chase 7:15 9:20
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40
Schindler's List 8:00
In the Name of the Father 9:20
Greedy 7:00 9:35
Guarding Tess 9:35
Lighting Jack 7:10 9:30

CAPITOL THEATRE
223 Princess St. ($46-$395)
On Deadly Ground 7:15 9:35
The Snapper 6:55 9:35
Angie 6:45 9:30
What's Eating Gilbert Grape 6:50 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
My Father the Hero 7:10 9:30
The Getaway 9:25
Blank Check 7:05 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. ($46-FILM)
Friday & Saturday
The War Room 7:00
House of Angels 9:00
Sunday and Monday
House of Angels 7:00
The War Room 9:20
Tuesday
Barako 7:00
The Legend of the Overfiend 9:00
Wednesday
Wittgenstein 7:00
Barako 9:00
Thursday
Wittgenstein 7:00
The Legend of the Overfiend 9:00

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF WEDNESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS.

CLUBS

FRIDAY
ALFIE's at 1:30 p.m. come chat w/ Scott Reeves (Ryan McNeil of the greatest soap ever—Y&R)
Clark Hall Pub: Freebie Friday—trivia/giveaway for tapes and CDs
The Toucan: Days of You Duke's: Raw Like Sushi
AJ's Hangar: The Barstool Prophets (w/guests Easy Access)
The Wellington: Andrew McDonald and Craig Jones
Ben's Pub: Ian Peterson

SATURDAY
The Toucan: Box Meal Revolution
Duke's: The Committee Band
AJ's Hangar: The Tom Barlow Band (w/Baag)
The Wellington: Gerry O'Kone

SUNDAY
The Wellington: jazz in the afternoon, Kingston Folk Club in the evening
AJ's Hangar: Wild Blues Yander

MONDAY
The Toucan: Incity Dreams
The Wellington: Blue Mondays

TUESDAY
Alfie's: BATTLE OF THE BANDS FINALS (Yellowbelly, Fat Spider & Los Seasmongers)
The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers Stages: The California Playmates

WEDNESDAY
Alfie's: The Sidemen

THURSDAY

The Toucan: PF Record Show
Grad Club: Georgetown Fry, Grant Heckman and Bob Robertson

SPECIAL EVENTS

Y&R's Scott Reeves (that sexy hunka luv, Ryan McNeil) will be appearing at 1:30 p.m. TODAY!!!

PERFORMANCES

MCARTHUR AUDITORIUM, West Campus
Queen's Musical Theatre presents Leader of the Pack: The Ellie Greenwich Musical.
Mar. 18-9 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $5 (Students/Seniors) and $7 (Adults) and are available at the Queen's Box Office and at the door.

THEATRE

THEATRE 5
370 King St. West (634-2602)
Peter Fulton's Losing Patients
Mar. 17-19 at 8 p.m.
Tickets at the door.

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess St. ($46-$698)

Lo Bauche Theatre presents Speaking In Tongues.

Mar. 17-18 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $7 at the door.

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
University Ave. & Queen's Crescent ($45-2190)

SPECIAL EVENTS:

Mar. 20
Free Drop in Studio Program for Families (1:30-4:30 p.m.). Children are invited to dress up and pose against painted backdrops to create living pictures based on paintings in the galleries. Parents are welcome to photograph the results.

OPENING EXHIBITIONS...

Mar. 20
Cherly Fagurare: 5 Fraserwood Ave., Apt #2

Mar. 24
Canadian: Pressed Glass Goblets

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections From the Long Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through Apr. 17
Shayne Dork: Hunting the Ego

through Apr. 28
To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinson

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The farming royons of John Heward

EDWARD DAY GALLERY
233 Ontario Street (547-0774)
through April 2
North American premiere of mixed media works on canvas by Alexander Ivanovitch Sigov.

TAYLOR PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIOS
149 Brack St.
through Mar. 31
Boundaries: A Photographic Exhibition by Michael Wieranski

The following positions are now available in the Internal Affairs Commission for the 94-95 academic year:

- Deputy Operations; 2 Clubs Managers; Chief Returning Officer; Deputy Returning Officer; Judicial Committee Chair (currently in second year law); Deputy Chair (currently in first year law); Judicial Committee Members; Judicial Committee Clerk; Chief Prosecutor (currently in second year law); 2 Deputy Prosecutors (currently in first or second year law); Prosecutors Clerk.

Applications are available now at the AMS Office and are due at 4:00pm on March 25, 1994. For more information please contact Dean Campbell in the Internal Affairs Office. 545-2725.

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

Every Thursday Friday & Saturday

Buck $ Lite Nite All Night Long

Doors Open At 8:00pm

Uncle Buck's

KINGSTON'S NEWEST WATERING HOLE

178-A ONTARIO STREET, KINGSTON • 549-1496

ME, PUNK, and TECHNO

Rambles on
Greil Marcus concluded in his ground-breaking work Lipstick Traces that "any good punk song can sound like the greatest thing you ever heard. When it doesn't, that will mean that the story has taken its next turn." The question is, has the story changed? Why have old punks like The Orb and more importantly John Lydon moved away from a human element in modern music to start relying on machines?

To try to arrive at some type of conclusion, I attended the rave at Alfie's two weeks ago to get a grasp on techno music and rave culture. Despite not being a fan of either, I was pleasantly surprised and enjoyed myself. Inspace Productions featuring DJ's Ozono, Sascha, Sugar Kane and Mix-master Craigatronic put on an impressive electronic musical display including post-psych-edelic images on the view screen, astral projections on the dance floor and the occasional burst of dry-ice induced smoke.

The musical selections varied from '80's and '90's house,

Trance, Ambient or "intelligent" techno, Breakbeat (Hardcore-U.K.) and Hardcore. The music for the most part was very atmospheric and melodic yet aggressive at the same time. It's true that they didn't have all the aesthetics of a "real" rave, but at least water wasn't $5.00 a glass. My only sadistic complaint was that the audience was only exposed to a small dose of Hardcore Techno which at times combines punk beats and reaching a nasty 160 beats-per-minute. This would have really shaken up the status quo—if you're gonna hit 'em, hit 'em hard.

As early as 1978, members of the British punk movement had been experimenting with techno. A compilation album entitled Fast Product/Mutant Pop had on it two songs recorded on a Sony 2-track tape by a couple of people with a synthesizer. They called themselves The Human League, and their songs were as cold and monotonous as punk was sweaty and unpredictable. This inspired a whole new group of bands, including Joy Division, to show that keyboards can be done. The other effects that The Human League's revolution had led to the explosion of synth-pop bands like Depeche Mode, with their rejection of "filthy" in favour of "slick" music and fashion styles. The explosion of synth-pop, the popularization of reggae, advent of ska, and Afro-American rap all had their direct influences on black house and cyberpunk, which when blended, make up contemporary techno music and dance culture.

Besides this historical evolution, techno resembles punk aesthetics in its independent "Do It Yourself" ethic with its construction and marketing techniques and nihilism in the emphasis on dance. This emphasis on dance at a rave adds a sexually provocative element, and at its best, is decidedly un-Caucasian. In a recent issue of Spin Magazine, "intelligent" techno artist Moby was quoted as saying: "A disco record threatens a white guy 'cause it makes you want to dance, to be vulnerable." Moreover, techno and dance music is more racially inclusive than punk ever was including artists, DJs and musical styles from Afro-Caribbean, Hispanic, Asian and Caucasian groups—whereas, punk for the most part, was a phenomena of the white Western world.

Recently, Britain's KLF decided to purchase an extravagantly priced piece of art for around one million dollars. In a comment on the spectacle economy that we live in, the band proceeded to paste on the object the same amount of currency that the band paid for the so-called art and abandoned it in a field for ravenous music journalists to pick at. This, combined with the bands sarcastic promise to not release another single until world peace is established proves that there is room for social criticism in the seemingly bland world of techno and dance music. Despite this, does a song like "Justified and Ancient" even come close to matching the energy, anger and scathing social critiques of the Sex Pistols' "Holidays in the Sun." The Clash's "White Riot" or the Dicks' "I Hate the Rich?"

Because of this, the story has not changed. I'm convinced that techno is more than the latest sub-culture fad but I'm still cynical of raves standing the test of time.

Techno, like late '60's psychedelic rock's evolution from Western folk-protest music, is a sexual, hedonistic and highly creative evolution of punk. I have no doubt that the increased popularity of techno and raves represent disillusionment with society and stagnant musical forms, but it is a protest of form rather than substance. To further elaborate on this point, Moby was also quoted in the Spin article as saying: "I find some woman singing. You make me feel so good, a million times more intellectually satisfying than an Elvis Costello song." Well I don't know... oh the torment... uhhh, I think I'll take Costello.

I tend to see the rave phenomena as a temporary, but genuine, reaction in the context of our '60's nostalgic dominated culture. I am sick and tired of this obsession people have with the 1960's—I'd rather attend some apolitical and apathetic phenomena than burn some incense and watch Woodstock for the umpteenth time. Well... it might not be all that bad, at least I'd still get to see Sha-Na-Na again.

So trash that Baby-Boom. Burn your Birkenstocks, South American hats, tie-dye and smirk at anyone who maintains that Jerry Garcia didn't lose weight, but gave birth to the Christ child instead and raved down... to hit the ground.

Christian DeBruijn is a candidate for next year's Entertainment Editor and swears that he will never own a tie-dyed t-shirt.

Interested in Scientific and Technological Solutions to Environmental Problems?

Get involved with the Queen's Engineering and Science Environmental Coalition!

QESEC Executive positions are open for 94/95

- Head Coordinator
- Fundraising Coordinator
- Speaker Coordinator
- Public Relations Director
- Local Project Group Coordinator
- National Project Group Coordinator
- International Project Group Coordinator

Application and position descriptions are available in the EngSoc. Lounge and are due at 12pm Thursday, March 24 in the Engineering Society, Second Floor, Clark Hall

Everyone is Invited to Apply!

POSITION AVAILABLE FOR: EDUCATING STUDENTS ON SUBSTANCES DIRECTOR

This is a position that involves experience in health promotions, specifically drug and alcohol awareness. Involves referrals and counselling.

Please contact Jane Shantz for more information.

Applications are available at the AMS Office TODAY!

Applications due: March 25, 1994 at 4:00 pm

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOFF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

NORTHPORT POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware dinnerware and wedding registrations. Contact us at 1 476-4918 to make an appointment.

DO YOU NEED documents typed fast? We will pick up and deliver! Quality printing. We'll even give you a photocopy free! Only $1.15 per page. Call now! 634-2349.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

CONVOCATING THIS SPRING? Why not get your customized Queen's diploma frame? Immediately following convocation you can have your new diploma framed while-u-wait! Located in Ross Gym right next to your gown rental, it's very convenient! Looks great and keeps your diploma safe! Available only through the Department of Alumni Affairs, call Dawn at 545-2060 for more details! Check out the displays in Mac-Cory and Douglas Library March 29 and 30th.

LESBIAN AND GAY INFORMATION LINE 545-2360 - staffed Monday - Friday 7 - 9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, a recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

YOU PAY UTILITIES and you're moving out? Don't forget to close your account with the PUC or you'll be paying for the next tenant! Call the PUC at 546-1167.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House 51 Queen's Crescent, Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-INS Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2960 for information. All welcome.

THE CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM is a safe place for people who are at risk from excessive alcohol consumption staffed by student volunteers working with an experienced Detox supervisor. Volunteer applications for the Campus Observation Room are available at Student Health Service, Residence Life Office and Infobank. For more information call Diane Notling 545-6712.

BEFORE ENTERING requests on OCard for any ENGL or WRIT courses, students currently on campus must come to the Department of English for academic advising at the times listed in STEPS TO PRE-REGISTRATION.

??? MYSTERY ROAD TRIP ??? Art-Sci '97 Mystery Road Trip, Friday, March 18. Watch for details. Where on where, has my little frog gone?

EURAIL PASSES Prices have increased for 1994 but we still have a limited supply of 1993 stock available - Don't delay! Call Odyssey Travel at 549-3553.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your study group. Good rooms, photocopying facilities and easel available! Call Julia at 545-2958 or drop by the Student Affairs Centre (The Grey House).

THE GREY HOUSE, at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, The Queen's Women's Centre, and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

RUN IN THE TRICOLOUR MILE on Sunday March 20th/94 and win "big" prizes. Starts at 1:00 p.m. at Queen's Phys. Ed. Centre. Register in Mac-Cory March 14 - 18, 83.00.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Intensive three day seminars. Systematic approach to proven test-taking strategies. Expert instructors. Simulated exam. Free repeat policy. Full money back guarantee. Seminar fee $195. OXFORD SEMINARS 531-9016.

BUYING A GIFT? Or treating yourself? Great stuff at the Kitchen Sink! Student Entrepreneurial Centre. It's worth the trip to the JDUCCI Beside the TD bank machines.

ARE YOU THINKING of applying to be either financial or public relations coordinator of the Queen's Student and Community Services Group? Yes? Great! Drop by the Grey House or call 545-2958 for more information.

"FIGHTING RACISM AND ANTI-SEMITISM" work-

CLASSIFIEDS

Classified ads are $5.00 for students, $8.50 for non-students, and free for Lost & Found. Submissions are due Tuesday at 2 p.m. for publication in the Friday issue. Please submit ads in person at 272 Earl Street. Call 545-2800 for more information.

WANTED: A Sarah McLaughlin ticket for April 1st concert. Please call Jen at 547-9036.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

TAXED SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

STUDENT CLASS AIRFARES: budget charters, custom long haul airfares. Odyssey Travel offers a huge range of airfare options. For help with your travel plans call 549-3553.

FOR SALE: ScanDesign bed, chest of drawers, lamp etc. Mnt condition. Perfect for a small ghetto room. Call Dave P at 544-8336.

3 BEDROOM APARTMENT: Close to downtown and campus, dishwasher, central air and heat, laundry, security building, lot bedroom with own bathroom. Reasonable rent for such a great place. For info call Maggie, Beth or Kerry at 547-8050.

FUTONS, FUTONS, FUTONS 6" and 8" futons, A and L frames. Incredible moving day special. Call University Futon Outlet at 531-9111.

FOR SALE: Furniture, desk, dressers, wardrobes, all in excellent condition and very cheap. Call Krista at 547-9326.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Science '44 Co-Op at 544-4506. Everyone welcome to apply.

SUMMER SUBLET: Starting May 1st - up to 5 bedrooms available - 2 full baths - fully furnished - washer/dryer - 5 minute walk to campus/downtown - $150 per month negotiable. Call 547-0946.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedrooms, washer and dryer, skylights, dishwasher, microwave, very low utilities and gas (freeplace, $14.15). Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000, located at 205 Colborne St.

BARRIE (AT UNION) 2 bedroom basement apartment with 2 bathrooms, carpeted and parking space $725 plus lights - heat supplied, May 1st. Please call David Fairbairn at 546-3171 office, or 542-6368 home.

3 SUPPER YEAR girls looking for a guy or girl to share cozy, comfortable, close to campus house. 2 bathrooms, good-sized bedrooms, parking. Call 546-5348.

REDUCED SUMMER RENT! Great house at Earl and Toronto needs two housemates to share with two others and a cat. Available May 1st. Rent $250. Call Julie at 547-3105.

LARGE 6 BEDROOM HOUSE, close to campus and recently renovated, 2 bathrooms, 2 fridges, dishwasher, etc. Cheap rent, reasonable PUC. Call Rick at 544-3333 or leave a message at 546-1122.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: Silver and Gold Chain link Seiko watch. Lost Tuesday between JDUCC and Chemistry building. Engraving on back (JMF 93). Sentimental value. Reward offered. Call 549-7959.

LOST: In Mac-Cory, a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Blue Varsity 1992 - 93 rugby jacket on Friday, March 4th at A.J.'s. contained cork key chain. Reward. No questions asked. Please call 542-2010.

BORROWED: Burgundy "Supercycle" from 176 University Ave. Victim of after Alfies crowd, Friday February 25th. 10 years old, brakes completely useless and stuck in 1st gear, but extreme sentimental value. No questions - understanding owner. Please phone 542-2010.

LOST: at the ArtSci '94 formal: a Pentax zoom 105-R camera. If you have it please, please, please call 542-2455.

LOST: '96 Commerce jacket (46 chest) at Cocoma's on Friday March 4th. If you know someone who found one that night, or who took the wrong jacket, call me. Reward - you name it, you got it! Rob 531-3564.

LOST: Heart-shaped gold locket on Saturday February 12th. Extreme sentimental value - engraving

WANTED: A Sarah McLaughlin ticket for April 1st concert. Please call Jen at 547-9036.

COMPUTER TYPING SERVICE, $1.50 double spaced page, $2.50 single spaced page. Local pick up and delivery available. Call Pam's place at 633-1573 after 5:00 p.m. or leave a message.

IF YOU LEAVE THE PLACE clean and in good condition when you move out you won't be charged cleaning and repairs. Find out more: Queen's Town-Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

"HUNGRY FOR GOD!" Experience unique pilgrimage, prayer and miraculous healing (always) through Our Lady of Marmora Apparition Site, located - Greensides Farm, Hwy #7, 2 miles east of Marmora, Ontario at Radio Tower, Saturday March 26th, from 1:00 p.m. For more information call 613 472-2560.

LSAT/MCAT/GRE - Why is it that with so many opportunities for training, you still don't have any choice? - 1 800 567-PREP.

STUDENTS - TEACH ENGLISH OVERSEAS - Teach conversational English year round, short term or for summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Korea. Excellent pay. No experience or qualifications needed. For details and how you can apply pick up our free brochure at INFOBANK lower JDUCC or send self-addressed stamped envelope to Asia Facts (OJ), P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

EATING DISORDERS Know someone with a problem? Want to help? FRIENDS FOR HEALTH is an informational/support group for friends offered by Student Health Outreach. The next meeting is March 22nd, 7 - 8 p.m. at the Ban Righ Centre, 32 Queen's Crescent.

BROKE? Want to make some easy money? If you have something to sell, we have the location! The Kitchen Sink - Student Entrepreneurial Centre. Call now 545-2725.

MOVING MEANS packing means boxes. Start your collection today! Get practical tips to make your move smoothly! Call Town - Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

CAN'T SLEEP? Call the CONFIDENTIAL HEALTHLINE a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon. - Thurs. 6 - 9 p.m. 545-6000 ext. 4444. Leave message anytime.

CONVOCATING THIS SPRING? Why not get your customized Queen's diploma frame? Immediately following convocation you can have your new diploma framed while-u-wait! Located in Ross Gym right next to your gown rental, it's very convenient! Looks great and keeps your diploma safe! Available only through the Department of Alumni Affairs, call Dawn at 545-2060 for more details! Check out the displays in Mac-Cory and Douglas Library March 29 and 30th.

HELP WANTED

EXPANDING photofinishing firm is hiring staff for a new store in Kingston. Full and part time positions starting in March. Apply with resume: 1 HR Photoworks, 107 Princess St.

TREEPLANTERS! Bugbusters treeplanting Co. is looking for people to plant in B.C. this spring. Low camp costs, experienced foreman, experienced planters preferred. Call David Jeterles at 416 924-9127.

WANTED

TWO HOUSEMATES NEEDED for other great house on other corner of Earl and Aberdeen, the yellow one with the yard you cut across on your way to class. Call 544-3154 anytime. It's close, em.

FEMALE WANTED to live at Earl and Alfred (close to campus) big house, small room, small rent, great people. Call 547-9369.

WANTED TO BUY Commerce '96 jacket, size 44-46. Must be in good condition. You name the price - will pay reasonable amount. Call John Grant at 548-3835.

2 FEMALE HOUSEMATES NEEDED! To share four bedroom house with two upper year females. Clean, quiet, parking available; very close to campus; rent $265 per month, non-smokers please. Call 531-0974.

I WANT YOU Sarah McLaughlin tickets! I will pay $60.00 for 2 tickets to April 1 concert. If you'd rather make 20 bucks than go. Please call 531-3137.

WANTED: Ride to Belleville (Loyalist College) with someone taking Socy 335Y this spring, classes beginning May 02, 1994. Help with fuel costs. Call Joyce at 546-1632.

on the back. Reward offered. Please call Elizabeth at 546-0005.

LOST: Blue Phe '94 feather jacket. January 27th at Silver Saddle. Contained keys and gloves. Name your price reward. Phone 531-3043.

LOST: Man's Seko watch at Leonard Cafeteria on Saturday January 29th. Please phone Orvil at 546-0581.

LOST: Gold Monet watch at Alfies, Friday, January 21st. Extreme sentimental value. Reward. No questions asked. Phone Andrea at 547-8243.

LOST: Silver ID bracelet somewhere near Vic Hall parking lot. If found please leave at Vic desk. Reward offered.

LOST: Reward offered. Ring lost on March 12th (Saturday night) on University Ave around Earl St., intersection. Gold band with inlaid etched silver. Star of David jeweller's mark on inside. Extreme sentimental value (my grandmother's wedding band). Please return it to me if found, I miss it very much. 541-1040.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on December 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: A Fendi watch near Victoria Park before the new year. Call and describe it to me and I yours! 531-0399.

FOUND: Kettle Creek pencil case with a calculator inside, in Mac-Cory before reading week. To claim call Joeeyan at 531-4350.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: A.I.J.'s, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '96 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and Wiffiam. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys, car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

FOUND: A small brown leather change purse in Mac-Cory, Wednesday March 2nd. Call Laia at 546-6756.

FOUND: Jacket at A.J.S Friday March 4th. Please call 542-2010 to identify.

FOUND: At A.J.S Friday night a watch. Call and describe it to me and it's yours. 531-4987.

FOUND: Ladies gold watch at corner of Bagot and Earl. Call 549-2695 to identify.

PERSONALS

TO THE BAY lingene guy. 21 lucky shamrocks out to you! Hope it was memorable! Buffalo! Love the girls that love you most.

PHIL: Maybe you should respond to a personal.

ROCK STAR: 1/2 of a year - still in grade 8? - Groupee

P. K. INTERRUPTUS: Do you find irony to be ironic? TO THE KNIGHT, Please go on. The Maiden.

FREE DRINKS: Young male MBA with high earning potential seeks your interlectual female date for MBA formal, Saturday, March 19th. Respond ASAP. Call Steve at 547-0288.

TO THE GOOD kissing woman I met at Alfies last Saturday. Sorry your friend didn't approve! Interested in coffee at Q.P. Friday at 4:30 p.m. See you there. Younger Mech Eng.

DAVE AND TURK: What the... Who the...? My God man, it's alive!

WHITEFISH: Thank-you for reaching out and holding my hand. There's nothing to be afraid of - honesty! You grab the arrowheads, I'll chop the wood and we'll relax in front of the fire: shoeless of course. luv (sp?) Coosawatchie the snowponer

CHRISTINA B: Thanks again for the hospitality THANKS BABE for your undying patience. LUFÉ, Mish

TO ALL SEAFARERS: Stay out of the wind lest ye lose thy hair.

MISHA! love ya I love ya, I love ya, I love ya, baby I love ya. Suburban P.

Hey Maggie! I hope you are feeling better soon There is only a few more weeks of hell before you get out of here. Don't worry, about a thing, cause every little thing gonna be alright! Take it easy, Love from a very good friend.

CONGRATULATIONS to DAVE BEACH, VANESSA VANCLIFF, OAVE PAVEO (BRAD SIMPSON) CHRIS RITCHIE. It's going to be a great year!!!

FROM 1984 TO 1994: INFORMATION, TECHNOLOGY, & PRIVACY

When 1984 came and went, skeptics were poking fun at the terrifying vision of George Orwell's 1984 as way off the mark. Look, they said, we've got colour TV, microwaves and Disneyland, this isn't a police state at all.

Despite these candy-coated facades, we have indeed progressed much further towards a surveillance society than many of us like to recognize. Fuelled by technological advancements which make keeping tabs on people increasingly effortless, our privacy has been whittled away by governments and corporations alike.

The notion of privacy has had a long and colourful history of debate. Marx wrote on the surveillance of workers in the workplace as an extension of the class struggle. In 1791, Jeremy Bentham created the panopticon, a prison where the guards could see in the cells but the prisoners couldn't tell if they were being observed, thus modifying their behaviour. In the panopticon, Bentham saw "a great new invented instrument of government" and hoped to profit from its construction.

From a practical standpoint, modern society has come to regard privacy as fundamental to the individual. We close the blinds at night and don't let people know all our personal details. We would consider it an invasion of privacy if someone were to research our lives and confront us with some deed from the past. We consider it equally an invasion for a salesman to show up at our door offering us his brand of breakfast cereal because his research shows we purchase less food than the average shopper.

But new technologies have been challenging these accepted notions of what is private and what is public. Databases accumulate information on our spending patterns and the formerly private venues of the mail system and the telephone are subject to a barrage of commercial solicitations. In his book The Electronic Eye, Dr. Lyon states, "Precise details of our personal lives are collected, stored, retrieved and processed every day within huge computer databases belonging to big corporations and government departments. This is the 'Surveillance society.'"

GOVERNMENTS

Historically, governments have been the big patrons of data accumulation for purposes of defence and to exercise control over their citizens. The Domesday Book in England was started by the Norman conquerors in 1086 to harness the wealth of the country. The practice of the census goes all the way back to biblical times, with the book of Numbers. As far as the governments and organizations in our lives are concerned, we are merely a S.I.N. number, a driver's licence number, a bank account number, a student number, and telephone number. With these collections of digits, anyone can find out virtually everything about you, and governments have access to all this information at the press of a key.

"Imagine you heard that in a certain country, where the population was twenty-six million, the central government operated 2,220 databases, containing an average of twenty files on each citizen. The names of ten percent of that population are contained in the national police computer." These words open a chapter in Dr. Lyon's text, and the country to which he is referring is Canada.

The fact that the government holds so much information on us can be very intimidating. On a disk somewhere is a history of our income, credit record, a history of our employment, family information, information on our possessions, our criminal record, and in some cases, records of our political activity. Now that this information has been collected and compiled, it is unlikely that the government will ever give up control of information concerning its citizens.

In general, this information remains hidden away for use by government officials. The rationale behind cross-linking databases is that it prevents people from abusing the social benefits of the state. If the welfare database in Kingston is cross-linked with the corresponding database in Ottawa, people will be prevented from cheating the system and collecting benefits in both cities simultaneously. However, the collection of information about citizens is taking place without the consent of the individual. Information we consider private is no longer in our control.

What is to stop governments from selling very confidential information about its citizens to private consortiums? We may think of this as a future threat, but the reality is that these practices are already taking place.

The government of Ontario will give all the information you filled out on your driver's licence application to anyone who asks, for a five dollar fee. In 1992, the Ministry of Transportation made $14.5 million dollars selling this information to private groups.

Recent changes to the Canadian Privacy act give Canadians the right to request the information about them being held by government agencies like CSIS (Canadian Security and Intelligence Service). However, it is a lengthy process involving contacting all the separate agencies, and filling out request forms for the data file. After going to all the trouble, you may find that if an investigation is being done on you, your file will be missing documents, with only a note stating that some material is missing.

CORPORATIONS

In this capitalist society, it is not surprising to find that information has become a hot commodity. Companies pay millions of dollars a year to find out intimate details about our lives, from what kind of toilet paper we use to our marital status. Companies like Infomarr and the American billion-dollar corporation Dun and Bradstreet buy lists of names from other companies and merge them until they have accumulated a large database with all sorts of information about people in them. In the U.K., a direct mail company named CCN has a database comparable with the Police National Computer, with details of over 43,000,000 people.

Many of you have had the junk mail experience. But how many of you know that your data image is a commodity that is exchanged and sold between multiple corporations? I had the advantage of actually being able to track information about myself from a simple mistake. When I was a young lad, I sent in a registration card to a software company for a game I had bought. Soon enough, I got a message from the company thanking "Derer Walker" for sending my card in, but this was not the only message I was to receive. From that point on, "Derer" started receiving mail solicitations from all sorts of computer companies and computer magazines. In fact, though it was more than ten years ago that I sent that fateful registration card in, mail for "Derer" showed up at my door two weeks ago.

Advances in computer technology have allowed companies to keep tabs on consumers like they never have before. And with people eager to pay substantial sums for lists of names and associated data, there are lots of people selling what they know about us. Some of the worst culprits play a much bigger role in our lives than we would like to think.

Banks, telephone companies (Especially Ma Bell), and credit card companies have been capitalizing on their customers for years. Banks reap the profits from selling information on how and where we spend our money from our instant teller traces. Gimicks like the A&P Supersaver Card and debit cards also serve to track our spending practices.

I have wondered why every spring I receive a 'graduating student car discount' flyer sent to me personally in the mail. It seems that somebody at Queen's is capitalizing on the fact that companies consider students to be a very lucrative market — without our knowledge or permission.

COMMUNICATION

There are other ways in which technology has eroded our privacy that have to do with the ways in which we communicate. Several months ago we published an article about the implications of the new Call Display phones being pushed by Bell Canada. We theorized that the new phones would change the nature of telephone communication. This is because someone's phone number can give out a wealth of information about that person. Various news teams have tried the experiment wherein they give an investigator a phone number and see how much information can be accumulated in a set period of time. When this experiment was conducted several years ago by a news team in Ottawa, the researcher was able to find out in several hours the person's name, where he lived, his income, how much of a mortgage he had on his house, his marital status and all the equivalent information about his wife. This was all from a simple phone number! Don't forget to get Call Block installed for free and to dial *67 before making a phone call if you wish your phone number to remain private.

Electronic mail is fast becoming one of the most important methods of communication between people in distant locales. But E-mail is one of the least private methods of communication we have. Because of the nature of network communications, private E-mail can be monitored by outside entities with the correct security accesses. Further, as an E-mail message is transferred across the country, copies of it can be dumped on connecting computers and abandoned there. Generally, those copies are inaccessible, but if someone is very keen and has the know-how, those messages can be accessed and removed without anyone knowing (because as far as the computer is concerned, the message has been sent and doesn't exist anymore.) Some corporations filter their E-mail. If you work for company X on a secret project code-named "Chicago", and you try to send some of the specifications to a friend at a local university by E-mail, you might get into some hot water with your bosses. Chances are that the company X mail computer scans outgoing mail for key phrases like "secret project specifications" or "Chicago" and will catch the references in your E-mail. Encrypting your message with a password is no good either. The computer will detect that the message is encrypted and report it as well. It is also rumoured on the 'net that the U.S. government randomly monitors E-mail traffic looking for key phrases like "president" and "assassinate".

Of course, there are also the banes of every privacy-watcher, cordless and cellular telephones. Both are incredibly easy to monitor and are essentially considered public communication. An interesting trend arises in the fact that the owners of cellular and cordless phones prefer convenience over privacy. As we obtain more devices of "convenience" like cellular phones and bank cards, we may find it increasingly difficult to operate without them: it will become virtually impossible to operate as a private individual in a public society.

What would Orwell think of SuperSaver cards and Call Display?

OF NOTE: A public lecture is being given today entitled Electronic Mail: Privacy and Security by Ann Cavourkian, Assistant Commissioner, Information and Privacy Commission, Ontario. She will be speaking from 2:30 to 4:00 pm in Mac-Corry room B201. All are welcome. The talk is being sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Computing and Communications Services.

BURGER KING

$1.69

 WHOPPER ALL THE TIME

Offer expires March 27/94

WIN a trip to Disney World with the Toronto Maple Leafs. Details at Burger King.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King® Restaurants.

MISC.

Little Brother watches back...

HITTING HOME

Here at Queen's privacy is also an issue for many people. The Who's Where telephone directory, while being useful to those interested in keeping in touch with friends, has the potential to be used in a variety of malicious ways. Though the directory is supposed to be possessed only by members of the Queen's community, they have been known to fall into other hands keen to capitalize on a list of student phone numbers and addresses. Last year, a significant number of Who's Where's were stolen from the offices in which they were locked. It is not all improbable that some of those directories found their way into the hands of local merchants. From these merchants, the information can spread to a variety of consumer databases across Canada and the United States.

Within the community itself, being listed in the directory is problematic. If you are listed in the Who's Where, it's best to not have a strong, vocal opinion on campus. It is very easy, and has been done before, for someone to pick up the phone and call in a death threat, or to go to your house and throw something through the window — all they have to do is look you up in the directory.

Soapbox, an on-line discussion system, is a heavily-used forum for the relatively free expression of ideas. What many people do not realize is that their names can be easily derived from their user IDs, which are automatically tagged with whatever they post to a discussion. This evaporates their anonymity and leaves them open for attack on both electronic and non-electronic fronts from people with whom they have had conflicts in Soapbox. Further, people do not realize that it is virtually impossible to send an anonymous E-mail message and that with your user ID, it is relatively easy for anyone, anywhere in the electronic world to find out your name and the faculty you're in. As well, E-mail messages that a user deletes are not necessarily removed, they may remain on that user's account or elsewhere indefinitely. In the computer world there is no direct equivalent to paper-shredding.

THE FUTURE

What is problematic about all forms of personal information accumulation is that once that information leaves our homes, we lose control of it. Once we are entered into these great databases, we will never get deleted. And if our data image has been entered incorrectly by sloppy human data entry personnel, our record contains errors we will never know about or be able to fix. Unfortunately for those who find this a frightening thought, it can only get worse. The future has the potential to be both more convenient and less private. We will have more freedom to do the things we want, but everything we do will be carefully tracked and exploited commercially.

In an interactive television age (which is already a reality in some places) where the television is your computer, videophone and interactive TV. In all in one, you decide to watch the stereo sales station and call up the specs on that new Fantabulous TX-3000. You soon start to receive glossy flyers in the mail and a salesman starts to call you to try to make a deal. You finally cave into the salesman, but in order to make the purchase you will have to use your credit card. This card also contains all your banking information, your health and dental records, your criminal record and so on — all on a wafer-thin microchip sealed inside the card. If you have had problems paying off your credit before, this will pop up automatically before the sale goes through, and the salesman may tell you to get lost and go back to polishing his steers.

There are many other implications of existing technology. We may not need to carry cards after all, as using various biometric scanning devices, we will be our own identity cards. Passing through customs will be a breeze: the scanner will scan your retina or take a voice print and positively identify that you are who you say you are. Companies may use these technologies to monitor the working patterns of their employees. By monitoring your heart rate, your location in the building and the number of keystrokes you enter a minute, your employer will be sure to get the most out of your working day.

The information age is already here, and there seems to be little anyone can do to stop its momentum. Perhaps Orwell would have been more terrified of the world that we are creating than he was of his own vision of a totalitarian surveillance state. Perhaps he would have charged a vacation to Tahiti.

Derek Walker is obviously some kind of criminal, being this concerned about privacy.

THE ELECTRONIC EYE:

The Rise of Surveillance Society
by David Lyon

The Electronic Eye served as a source and an inspiration for this article. It is an excellent book for those interested in the theory and practice of surveillance in an information society and is sure to become an essential text in the field. Dr. Lyon, as well as other members of the Sociology Department here at Queen's and Studies in Communication and Information Technology (SCIT) compose an active community of researchers and theorists in this area. They are a resource not to be neglected.

AMS SPRING REFERENDUM

Come out and Meet the Groups proposing questions in this spring's referendum. Each organization will make a short presentation followed by an informal question and answer period.

Tuesday, March 22nd - 2:00pm
JDUIC - LOWER CEILIDH
COME OUT AND HAVE YOUR OPINIONS HEARD

INVENTORY CLEARANCE

The last sale of the school year
March 21st to March 25th

Clothing	Regular	Sale
Boseball Shirts	49.95/64.95	15.00
Lettermon Crews	46.95	39.00
Hoods	49.95	19.00
Rugger Shirts	54.95	39.00
Jockets	94.95	9.00
T-Shirts (Jonnex)	28.95	10.00
T-Shirts (Roll-up sleeve)	21.95	9.00
T-Shirts White Ironweight	18.95	9.00
Lorgely Literory T-Shirts	19.95	9.00
Sweatshirts (Fruit of the Loom)	16.95	9.00
Special Crews	46.95	25.00
Hoods	49.95	75.00
Golf Shirts	24.95	15.00
Golf Sweaters	38.95	20.00
Shorts - Colhoun	17.95	5.00
Red and White
Hots	17.95/25.95	15.00
Children Sweatshirts		3.00
Ponts		3.00

Misc.	Sale
All Sportswear	20% off
All Giftware	30% off
Computer Disks
5 1/4" DD	Box of 10 4.25
5 1/4" HD	Box of 10 6.50

- > Doors open at 9 am Monday
- > Sorry, no advanced viewing or layaways
- > First come, first served
- > Seconds only while supplies last
- > Seconds sales are not returnable

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clark Hall
 Weekdays 9 to 1
 Saturday 10 to 1

Remember Colour Night in black and white

Photos available of The Journal. Call us at 545-2800.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 1994 • ISSUE 37 • VOLUME 121

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 Specialists for the University Community
 185 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
 General Travel Long Haul Group
 549-3553 549-3561

Cooke serves up tuition hikes

Fees to go up 21 per cent over two years

By LORI THORLAKSON

Be prepared to pay 10 per cent more for your courses next year. Ontario Education Minister Dave Cooke announced Wednesday that tuition will increase by $202 in 1994-95 and $223 in 1995-96, bringing Queen's tuition for a full-time Arts and Science student to $2,228 next year and $2,451 the year after.

This represents a 10 per cent increase each year.

Although tuition is going up, provincial funding for colleges and universities will be maintained at current levels.

In a statement to the legislature, Cooke said the tuition increase is "aimed at assisting colleges and universities to make additional spaces available and protecting the quality of post-secondary education."

Due to the Ontario government's social contract, tuition increases will go directly to programs and not to salary increases, Cooke said.

Cooke said the Ontario Student Assistance Program will cover the increase in tuition. OSAP loan forgiveness levels will increase from $5,570 to $6,000.

Cooke called for universities to restructure to "find more efficient ways to operate."

"All those affected—especially students—should be involved in this process," he said.

ess," he said.

In addition, Cooke announced a freeze in ancillary fees, compulsory fees for services that students pay in addition to tuition. According to AMS President Katherine Philips, the only good news in the ministry's announcement was the freeze in ancillary fees, which means that Queen's students won't face additional fees such as the student assistance levy introduced last summer. The levy is currently costing students $10 per half course, to a maximum of $100.

Philips was critical of the tuition increase.

"I think that students are going to pay more for their education but they are going to get the same, if not worse, in quality. What's worse, no fundamental changes were made to student aid," she said.

Philips said the increase in the OSAP loan forgiveness level will only leave students with a larger debt to pay back.

The Council of Ontario Universities, an advocacy group representing 20 post-secondary institution administrations, welcomed the increase.

"Although the tuition fee increase is not as significant as we would have like, it is an encouraging first step in the right direction," said COU President Peter George.

The Council called for a 50 per cent increase earlier this year.

THE KINGSTON TRIO?

Spring is in the air... thawing out from a long, cold winter. Coming out of hibernation on Barrie Street?

MARIKA GLICKMAN

inside

The Journal

REFERENDUM FEVER

Spring has sprung, and the spring referendum is upon us. On March 29-30, students will vote to decide whether or not Surface will stay afloat next year through the help of an opt-outable student interest fee.

—For story, see page 3. For more referendum coverage, see pages 4 and 9.

GAELS HONOURED

The Colour Night gala was held at the Ambassador Tuesday night, honouring Queen's star athletes, and celebrating a year which saw eight conference banners captured.

—For story, see page 20.

THE FINAL BATTLE

The Battle of the Bands wound down to a final contest between Fat Spider, Los Seamonsters and Yellowbelly last Tuesday.

—To find out who won, see page 27.

A MOVING EXPERIENCE

Packing up and moving out? This week's feature offers tips from the Town-Gown Liaison Office on how to make your move a bit smoother—from cleaning your house to packing so your breakables remain unbroken.

—For feature, see page 15.

"All us engineers aren't heathens... a lot of engineers won't use it... They should have the option to opt-out." —'94-'95 Engineering Society President Matt Fenwick, speaking in favour of opt-outable fees for a student art gallery.

CFRC autonomy questioned

By BROCK MARTLAND

The editorial autonomy of CFRC has come into question because of apparent limits on the station's coverage of Marriott labour negotiations.

Marriott, which provides food services on campus, is currently involved in negotiations with its workers.

Queen's University issued a statement on March 3 which read, in part, "because Queen's is not a party to these negotiations, the university will not comment or interfere in the free collective bargaining process between Marriott and its employees."

CFRC, officially a department of the university, was one of many groups to receive this statement. Station manager Maureen Plunkett explained that the station must follow the university's guidelines.

But Carrie Rathwell, CFRC's news director, suggested, "it's really dicey when the university starts trying to adjust how to cover things with the press."

Rathwell said she must balance these feelings with the fact that "they control our pursestrings... [and] we need the funding."

Much of the debate has centred around Bruce Dodds, the chair of Marriott's part-time workers' union.

Dodds said, "I know nothing except that I've been told by various sources that I'm not speaking any more" on the radio.

Dodds alleged that university administrators "simply don't want CFRC to do any more stuff on the Marriott workers." Dodds said that because Queen's is the employer, their "claims to neutrality are preposterous."

Because reporting on Dodds must now be cleared with CFRC's management, some feel that the university has infringed on the freedom of CFRC's news department.

News reporter Vishal Kapur said, "the administration is using its influence to cut back on the information, especially through CFRC."

Asked whether the university had acted to interfere with CFRC's reporting, Director of Public Relations Dick Bowman said, "but we haven't interfered. There was never any intention of interfering."

And Plunkett maintained that in terms of its broadcasting, CFRC has "a very large amount of freedom."

She said that nobody from administration has contacted her specifically about the situation, and characterized the decision as more a matter of newsroom policy than one of censorship.

Jerome Poon-Ting, CFRC's program assistant, said, "the basic facts we can say. But anything more speculative than that, it could be construed as having an effect on the negotiating process."

Striving for employment equity at Queen's

By CARINA BLOFIELD

Figures from the latest Faculty Appointment Update show an increase in the number of women hired in all faculties at Queen's University over the past ten years, and a substantial jump in the number of tenure-track appointments for women.

In a time of staff downsizing, the overall percentage of female faculty has risen a percentage point in the last year, to 20.6 per cent from 19.6 per cent in 1992/93.

The most significant increases have taken place in tenure-track appointments for women. Tenure-track appointments are those in which the professor is considered for tenure after six years.

Since 1984, the cross-faculty average of tenure track appointments for women has risen from 21 per cent to 47 per cent in 1993/94.

The percentage of women appointed tenure last year remains low at 13 per cent, but as a shift of professors occurs from tenure-track to tenure, the gap between the two figures will even out.

Principal David Smith said that Queen's commitment to greater employment equity does not stem from government regulations, but from the common goal to "hire the best people and create a faculty body roughly reflective of the student body."

Principal Smith pointed to two programs at Queen's aimed at increasing the representation of women on faculty. If a man is recommended for a faculty position, Smith said, documentation must be provided of which women applied, and why they were not recommended.

"I have certainly sent back files that did not have sufficient explanation of the choice made," Smith said.

The other relevant practice, according to Smith, is the Queen's National Scholarship Program. "This program ensures special additional appointments in different faculties, and helps increase the proportion of women on staff," he said.

Smith said Queen's has focused on creating a "congenial environment for women

EQUITY CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

TRICOLOUR EXPRESS

THE EASTER BUNNY ARRIVES EARLY ON THE TRICOLOUR!

COME AND GET YOUR EASTER TREAT

Departure: THURSDAY, MARCH 31	West Campus	Victoria Hall	JDUC	PRICE GST Incl.	Drop-offs
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:15	$20	Oshawa, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal
MONTREAL	2:50	3:00	3:10	$25	Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	$16	Kanata, Pinecrest, Carling & Kirkwood, Bus Terminal

Return:
SUNDAY,
APRIL 3

TORONTO	8:00pm	One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza
MONTREAL	5:45pm	Bus Terminal
OTTAWA	8:00pm	Bus Terminal

TICKETS AT QUEEN'S BOX OFFICE	CALL 545-2558
NO EXCHANGES NO REFUNDS	HAVE A HAPPY EASTER

The TONIGHT! ARTS '95 SMOKER

Bourbon Tabernacle Choir

with guests

The Philosopher Kings

Hey! Come Early! Cheap Jag 7:30-9:30!

SATURDAY, March 26th C.I.Z. PRESENTS

ROAD APPLES

Best of the Hip!

Come Early! Beat the Line! Cheapamundo! 7:30-9:30

AJ'S HANGAR RESTAURANT & BAR

Every MONDAY

20¢ WINGS

Every TUESDAY

PLAY TRIVIA and win glass mugs that we have left over from St. Patrick's Day!

THURSDAY!

DIPSO! Yippee! Yahoo!

COMING SOON!

Live Music Lovers Weekend - Sun., March 27th. PIG NIGHT! Summertime Dipso! The ever popular Much, much more!

Students to vote on funding for Surface

BY SHELLEE FITZGERALD

Within days the future of the conflict-ridden Surface newspaper may be determined. Students will return to the polls and vote on whether they wish to have funding for the publication subject to individual opt-out.

The vote is not on whether Surface will get funding, only on whether students should have the right to decide individually.

The referendum, scheduled for March 29-30, represents the second time this academic year that the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society has asked students to vote on Surface.

Last October the No side of the Surface debate enjoyed a victory when referendum results revealed that 55.6 per cent of voters voted to discontinue funding the controversial paper.

With October's results declared non-binding, however, a proposal (subject to approval by referendum) was introduced by ASUS to make Surface funding opt-outable.

The latest proposal has many in the Yes camp hopeful that a $2 opt-out fee will satisfy students and encourage them to vote to keep Surface alive.

In an interview with The Journal, chair of the Yes campaign Dera Nevin said she is guardedly optimistic about the upcoming referendum. "I'm hopeful, but it will take a lot of work to get a victory," she said.

Nevin explained that the thrust behind the Yes campaign is that the vote will empower students. "With opt-outs students will have the right to vote each year and have a say as to whether they want to support the paper," she said.

When asked how a heavy opt-out of the Surface fee would affect the paper, Nevin responded that the potential for heavy opt-outs has been taken into account.

"We've budgeted for 57 per cent of people opting out," stated Nevin. She explained that this figure is roughly based on the number of students who voted against the paper last October. This also explains the jump in the Surface fee from $0.59 (this year) to the proposed $2 fee.

Nevin went on to say that in light of the opt-outs, Surface would have to take measures to solicit external advertising to meet its operational costs.

To resolve any confusion over next week's referendum, Nevin stressed that the vote is strictly about funding. "This is not about editorial content, it is an issue of funding. The campaign stopped being about content a long time ago," she said.

When asked what the Yes side has planned in the event of another No victory, Nevin replied that it would depend on ASUS and what steps it will want to take.

An open forum has been scheduled for Monday March 21 (11:30-1:00 pm) in Kingston Hall's Red Room. All interested are encouraged to attend.

Spring training: Bruce Dodds, part-time Marriott workers union representative, practices for a possible strike.

Grey House harassed

As well, Lipinska said she found a Heritage Front "white pride" poster tacked underneath an article about the Heritage Front which she had posted the day before.

Lipinska reported the incidents to campus security, and wrote a memo to various members of the university community, including Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams, advising them of the situation.

Lipinska said the Grey House occasionally receives homophobic phone messages on its voice-mail, and that the messages increase when gay and lesbian issues are receiving press on campus.

And that group, the Student Housing Authority, is raising eyebrows, especially at the Alma Mater Society.

The SHA, like the Constables and QSL, will be the subject of a referendum question on March 29-30.

Headed by Mike O'Connor, the SHA wants to establish an opt-outable $2.16 student-interest fee to provide a housing listing service which could, in the words of O'Connor, "tell students what they really want to know" about student housing.

O'Connor believes that AMS and City Hall fail to address the most pressing housing issues to students in a diligent manner.

"The SHA could improve the quality of life for students," O'Connor remarked. "Nothing is being done to effectively correct the situation for Queen's students."

Yet Taz Pirmohamed, 1994-95 AMS president, disagrees. She said that the newly created Municipal Affairs Commission has the potential to provide services which would directly address students' concerns about housing issues.

AMS critical of housing group

Student Housing Authority seeks funding on referendum ballot

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS

While recognizable groups like Student Constables and Queen's Students for Literacy will be pursuing student funding in the upcoming referendum, one little-known group has also thrown itself into the fold.

And because the SHA is an independent group, the issue of the SHA's accountability is a concern for some students.

Pirmohamed said she is concerned about whether the SHA would provide services accessible to all Queen's students with a high degree of student participation at the administrative and management levels.

She commented that when the AMS looked at the SHA's referendum question, "we didn't even know if the SHA was based on the Queen's campus. There was no information on this group and too many unknowns with this issue."

At the AMS Assembly a week ago yesterday, members were surprised to see the referendum question before them without knowing who was behind the proposal.

O'Connor did not attend the Assembly meeting. Pirmohamed said she hopes the controversy "will send a signal out to students to have the initiative to question the intent of the SHA referendum question."

"The onus is on both the AMS and the student body," she said. Dera Nevin, the AMS Communications Commissioner who's been active on municipal issues, said she is also concerned about the SHA's accountability. "It's certainly a concern; specifically whether the SHA will provide the services they say they will."

Yet O'Connor insists that the SHA would be perfectly willing to provide detailed financial statements and information to the AMS.

"This year the AMS passed a cool little resolution where they decide everyone's status," he said. "AMS services are all non-opt-outable, but the council in its wisdom has decided that the SHA's referendum question will be opt-outable."

He said the $2.16 student-interest fee is based on the worst opt-out rates possible that could feasibly finance the labour costs of SHA surveys, the costs of making SHA information available on campus computers, and ideally to provide an accessible terminal in the Housing Office.

Although aware of the Municipal Affairs Commission, O'Connor said he believes "it is useful to have an individual organization at arm's length from the AMS."

Pirmohamed commented that this summer the AMS will actively be looking at student-interest referendum policies, "to close loopholes without obstructing the rights of groups to have questions on the referendum."

IN

WORDS OR LESS

GUERRILLA THEATRE REVIEW

The dramatic guerrilla theatre incident, in which a Model United Nations committee was disrupted with a lack of progress on women's issues, will be the subject of a meeting today. "Guerrilla Theatre Take II: Behind Closed Doors" will take place tonight at 7:30 in the Lower Cellidh of the John Deutsch University Centre. The original participants will elaborate on the Model UN protest.

VOLUNTEERS NIGHT

Kingston's Volunteer Appreciation Night will be on April 20, from 7-8:30 p.m. at the Memorial Hall in Kingston City Hall. In 1993, 30,000 volunteers in Greater Kingston contributed about 6 million hours of their time -- at minimum wage this would be $42 million dollars of labour! The appreciation night will include Kingston dignitaries and media, speaker Sandy Cotton, musical entertainment, door prizes, displays, and refreshments. Everyone involved in volunteering of any kind is welcome to attend.

OUSA defeated in U of T referendum

BY JEFF GRAY

University of Toronto full-time undergraduate students have just said no to the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance.

OUSA was defeated in a hotly contested referendum last week, 1,548 votes to 977.

Merry-LN Unan, U of T's Student Administrative Council External Commissioner, said she was disappointed with the result, and with the poor turnout.

Unan said the student government took an impartial stance on the referendum to "let the students decide."

Anti-OUSA forces on campus were extremely well organized, Unan said.

A broad coalition of student groups at U of T, calling themselves the No to OUSA Working Group, formed to fight against OUSA when a referendum was first called in October. The vote was postponed until this month.

Andrea Calver, of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group-Toronto, was very active in the campaign against OUSA.

Calver said OUSA was "unable to defend their... inherently contradictory policies." Her group opposed OUSA because of its stance on tuition increases and student aid, Calver said.

Queen's students voted in favour of a 95-cent OUSA student interest fee last October. OUSA is a student lobbying organization founded two years ago by the student governments of Queen's, Brock, Laurier, Western, Waterloo and U of T. University of Toronto full-time students withdrew their membership in October, pending a referendum on the issue.

Queen's Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips was not thrilled with the loss.

"Unfortunately, students at U of T have received constant information that OUSA wants tuition hikes. That misperception was hard to fight in the referendum campaign," Philips said.

In OUSA's first policy paper, called Students for Change, OUSA called for tuition hikes of 30 per cent, as long as they could be matched dollar for dollar with government funding.

McDougall reflects on Canada's role in global climate

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

Adding to a growing list of ex-Tory cabinet ministers to visit Queen's, former External Affairs Minister Barbara McDougall paid a visit to campus on Wednesday.

In an address focusing on the demise of the "new world order," McDougall spoke of Canada's role in a world which has taken a radically different turn since the relief experienced at the end of the Cold War.

A modest audience assembled in the Policy Studies building heard McDougall's views on the current state of Canadian involvement in international affairs.

Describing the period since the fall of the Berlin Wall as "sobering," she underlined the new difficulties faced in a world where leaders no longer speak in terms of "them and us," but now refer to "all of us." She also emphasized the added pressure upon organizations such as the United Nations and Canada's opportunity to become a force on the international stage.

McDougall described the "current global context" as a "world of brutality and viciousness... impractical historic problems, and inescapable dilemmas." Still, she went on to say that it "remains a world of hope, because there are things that happen that are happy surprises, and not all unhappy surprises."

On the issue of peacekeeping, McDougall encouraged a continuation of Canadian involvement in the field, applauding the success of operations in places like Cambodia, Cyprus, and the former Yugoslavia. Cautioning against being too quick to cut our commitments, McDougall wondered aloud if we are really doing more than our share. "I'm not sure that's true," she said.

Putting the $4 billion (U.S.) cost to the UN in perspective, McDougall said peacekeeping missions have "saved an untold number of lives, prevented untold amounts of damage to property and the environment."

"But it is not excessive," she continued, "in a global economy of something like 22 trillion U.S. dollars" when one considers the financial alternatives of anarchy and war.

Speaking on Prime Minister Jean Chretien's decision not to press China on the issue of human rights, McDougall accused the prime minister of belittling Canada's influence, saying it was more a question of "figuring out how to have influence."

She attacked Chretien for displaying a lack of principle when imposing economic sanctions on Haiti, while ducking the issue in the case of China, she said. "What kind of an attitude is that?"

In regard to Russia, McDougall stressed the need to support Boris Yeltsin, as the democratically elected president. She called him "the basket where you have to put your eggs," and described the alternatives as "dangerous."

In a private address to campus Tories later in the evening, McDougall encouraged members to keep the faith. Citing a long history of being a national party, she saw the rebuilding process as an opportunity to renew the party with complete freedom, without the pressure of a media spotlight.

BRENT DAVIS

Spring referendum gives Queen's students say

BY SHARON WILSON

With the annual Alma Mater Society spring referendum approaching, AMS Returning Officer Darren Littlejohn hopes students will take a strong interest in where their student fees will go.

This unlucky camper found himself sleeping off the Commerce Formal on Johnson Street. With housemates like that...

BRENT DAVIS

On March 29-30, a host of groups across campus will be appealing to Queen's students for student interest fees to support various services.

In order to ensure those requesting money from student interest fees are accountable for their spending, Littlejohn said the AMS has introduced a new policy this year that will require applicants to submit a budget to the business administration of the AMS detailing their proposed spending.

QUEEN'S STUDENT ART GALLERY CLUB

The Queen's Student Art Gallery Club is seeking approval of a mandatory (non-opt-outable) $1.50 student interest fee which President Lynda Turner said will be used to staff the Gallery.

Supporters of Union Gallery have mounted a referendum campaign, distributing a list of the top ten reasons students should support Union Gallery, and collecting the names of students who plan to vote yes.

QUEEN'S STUDENTS FOR LITERACY

Another group on campus, Queen's Students for Literacy, is requesting a 50-cent student fee (subject to individual opt-out) to allow the group to expand in the upcoming year.

Co-chair Alex Cole-Hamilton said the money will be used to aid in the continuation of the children's program, including a new children's library.

In addition, Co-chair Monique Jilesen said there are a number of administrative costs the group incurs including taxi fees to the prisons and collect phone calls from inmates to the program.

STUDENT CONSTABLES

The Student Constables are requesting that a student interest fee of 50 cents no longer be subject to individual opt-out. Head Constable Sue Cameron said the money would go towards helping the constables maintain a reduced charge-out rate. With a lower charge-out rate, Cameron said, smaller groups on campus will have better access to the services of Student Constables for their events.

STUDIO Q

Studio Q is seeking a 25-cent increase to their current $1 student interest fee. Stephanie Wilson, the 1994-1995 executive producer of the student-run television program, said the money would be used to replace some aging equipment.

Wilson said a student-market survey indicated that the quality of sound and lighting are not always up to par. She would like to enhance the technical quality of the program.

QUEEN'S SAILING TEAM

The Queen's Sailing Team is asking for the establishment of a 35-cent student-interest fee (subject to opt-out) to support the various competitions and maintaining the operation of the boats.

Currently, the sailing team is not recognized as a varsity sport and has 60 members, 15 of whom compete regularly.

Sailing team member Lars Leckie said the team is a valuable service for Queen's students to support because it provides, to anyone who is interested, the opportunity to learn to sail. Qualified sailing instructors teach sailing on weekends as well as one day during the week.

In addition, Leckie said the team has a bright future, standing in eighth place out of 44 teams in its region.

STUDENT HOUSING AUTHORITY

Queen's student Mike O'Connor will be asking for a $2.16 opt-outable student-interest fee to establish the "Student Housing Authority."

O'Connor said the AMS has done "less than a diligent job in addressing, what are in my opinion, fundamental issues" about student housing.

In an attempt to provide students with an information service, the new Student Housing Authority would gather information about individual houses including a documented history of such things as insect problems, land inadequacies and the average cost of public utilities, O'Connor said.

Although the initial student-interest fee of $2.16 is quite high, O'Connor said that it is due to start-up costs and added that the fee would drop to approximately 85-cent once the Housing Authority was well established.

AMS calls for housing improvements

BY TARA ROY

The Alma Mater Society Housing Task Force soundly condemned the Phase II by-law proposal and outlined students' housing needs in its final report.

The report, which AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin said is intended to give City Hall "a firm understanding of what the students want," is expected to be approved at the March 31 Assembly and incorporated into the AMS policy manual.

The report outlines 11 recommendations which cover almost all aspects of life in the student housing area, from safety, property standards, infrastructure and municipal zoning by-laws to composting and garbage treatment.

Chief among these issues is the City's Phase II housing proposal, which states that students use property differently than other citizens do, and would re-zone property in the student housing area for student use only.

The AMS has been fighting this proposal, which they say discriminates against students. Task Force Chairperson Greg Speirs called the zoning proposal "ethically and morally repugnant."

"It's almost impossible to elaborate on how ridiculous this is. Eventually we'll have different sections of the city for lawyers, plumbers and so on," said Speirs.

Assembly has approved spending $10,000 on legal fees should a case before the Ontario Municipal Board be necessary. Both Nevin and Speirs are hopeful that the matter can be settled through negotiation.

"If there's a way we can resolve this another way, I'm all for it," said Nevin. "But if a case before the OMB is what it takes for people to realize, 'hey, there is something happening here' -- that's what we're going to do," she added.

Speirs said if a legal case is necessary, the allocated $10,000 won't be enough. "That's peanuts compared to what it's going to cost for a full-blown case," he said.

The report says a separate land use category based on a person's occupation is "in bad faith and therefore should be eliminated."

The report also states that the proposal is in opposition to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Human Rights Code.

Nevin questions how by-laws such as those in Phase II would be enforced.

"If they do have people enforcing it, why haven't they made this kind of commitment to raising property standards?" she asked.

According to Speirs, the Task Force is also looking for a "solid commitment from the city with regards to property standards," he said. "We want to be treated the same way as everyone else -- we want only one type of citizen, and no second class citizens," he added.

The report also proposes an alternative to Phase II, developed by Queen's law student Mark Osbaldeston.

This proposal would acknowledge that the student area has special needs, and by-laws pertaining only to that area could be passed. These laws would apply to all the people living in the area, not just students.

"It would prevent City Hall from enacting ludicrous by-laws," said Speirs. The AMS plan "works for both sides -- I feel that City Hall is very receptive to it," she said.

Representatives from the AMS met with city officials this week to discuss the report.

Other recommendations in the report include better relations with police, and educational programs on how students can protect themselves, their property and their rights.

Chair of Jewish Studies established

BY ALISON MASEMANN

The department of religious studies at Queen's has established a Chair of Jewish Studies and will be offering students the opportunity to pursue a minor in Jewish Studies in the 1994-95 school year.

Professor Reena Zeidman, the newly-appointed Chair of Jewish Studies, said that even though the Jewish Studies program is still quite small compared to other universities, "it is very good because it is very centred in biblical interpretation and analysis."

Zeidman said that the creation of the Chair was the result of a fundraising campaign which was initiated approximately six years ago by a donation by Irwin and Regina Rosen of Kingston, in conjunction with the university and the Theological College.

Zeidman expects her work and the creation of the minor program to provide greater guidance for those students who are interested in studying Judaism and Jewish history.

"Whereas before Jewish studies was just interdisciplinary and scattered, what I'm trying to do is put it into a framework," Zeidman said.

Silvia Lulka, Co-president of Queen's Hillel, affirmed the need for a Jewish Studies Program at Queen's. She said that she thought the program would attract more Jewish students to Queen's and might create support for the Jewish students already attending the university.

"Maybe this can help in developing other similar programs at Queen's...like a native studies program, which is something that hasn't traditionally been offered but should be," Lulka said.

The new minor program allows students to take up to five and a half credits toward a Bachelor of Arts with a minor concentration in Jewish Studies.

Zeidman emphasized that "most students come in without a heavy background" in Judaism, adding that she herself developed a lot of her interest in the subject while in University.

The program includes an introductory course entitled Jewish Faith and Life, as well as upper-year courses such as Jewish Biblical Commentary, Topics in Jewish Mysticism, and Judaism in the Time of Jesus.

Zeidman is hopeful that the program will expand to include Yiddish language courses, and she expects that students will be able to pursue a medal in Jewish Studies within three years.

Zeidman, who received her PhD from the University of Toronto, emphasized that students in Jewish studies courses are not predominantly Jewish, and said, "the program is structured so that everybody is equal when they walk into the classroom."

She said the Jewish Studies program not only tries to encourage "a lot of exploration of the primary sources" of Judaism, but also emphasizes the role of Judaism in the world today.

"You don't want to teach it like a dead religion, which is the way it's always been taught," she said.

YIANNAKIS RESTAURANT

NOW OPEN

394 Princess Street (beside Stages)
Where Friends Meet Friends
 Dine in the Grecian Garden of our Restaurant.

We offer you the best Quality of the present for the low price of the past.
 Specializing in Steamed smoked meat Montreal style, Souvlaki, Gyros, Brochettes, Mousaka, Pasticho, Lamb chops, Pasta, and Sea food.

SPECIAL OFFER TO ALL QUEEN'S STUDENTS
For Reservations Call 544-8044

20% DISCOUNT ON THE WHOLE DINNER MENU from 5 pm to 11 pm with this coupon Valid March 28 to April 3 Show coupon to server before ordering	20% DISCOUNT ON THE WHOLE DINNER MENU from 5 pm to 11 pm with this coupon Valid March 28 to April 3 Show coupon to server before ordering
---	---

BY BROCK MARTLAND

AMS ASSEMBLY REPORT

Ensnared in the comfortable Policy Studies Conference Room, last Thursday's Alma Mater Society Assembly was the first to feature the new executive at the helm.

REFERENDUM QUESTIONS DEBATED

Assembly discussed a referendum question about funding the Student Art Gallery (to be located in Stauffer Library) with a $1.50 student-interest fee. Debate centred around whether the referendum question should ask for opt-outable or mandatory funding.

Prefacing his remarks with, "all us engineers aren't heathens," Engineering Society President Matt Fenwick suggested that "a lot of engineers won't use it... They should have the option to opt out."

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Representative Shane Rahemtulla said, "I personally can't support something which I don't believe the majority of students will make use of."

This line of argument was countered by 1994-95 Media and Services Director Fiona Macaulay, who drew a parallel between the art gallery and Walkhome, "a valuable service on campus" which adds to the university despite the fact that "50 per cent of students won't use it by virtue of being men."

In the same vein, new Internal Affairs Commissioner Dean Campbell said, "there's a lot of things on campus I will never see or use... the gallery will benefit the community as a whole, whether or not you're standing in the middle of it."

AMS Vice-President (Operations) Kevin Rex suggested that the AMS should support the Queen's Student Art Gallery Club's willingness to risk not getting any student funding with a mandatory funding question. Voting determined that the question will ask students for mandatory funding.

MYSTERIOUS HOUSING QUESTION

A referendum question asking for a student-interest fee of $2.16 to be established for "the Student Housing Authority" drew surprised responses.

1993-94 Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin, who has been active on the student housing front at City Hall this year, told expectant Assembly members, "I have nothing to do with this."

Kevin Rex admitted, "we're not the CIA... While this is very creative, it's actually sort of dangerous." Rex suggested the AMS use resources to campaign against the question.

Assembly checked if it could officially take a stance against the question, but found it could not.

COMPUTER PURCHASE APPROVED

At the AMS's Annual General Meeting (held Tuesday), a computer purchase of about $30,000 was approved. A similar proposal to purchase new equipment for AMS offices was defeated by Assembly in first term.

AMS COUNCIL RATIFIED

Assembly ratified the following 1994-95 commissioners and directors: Campus Activities, Paul Lemieux; Internal Affairs, Dean Campbell; Education, A'Amir Ather; Academic Affairs, Keith McArthur; Service Director, Neil Livingston; Media and Services Director, Fiona Macaulay.

The commissioners for Communications and Municipal Affairs (a new position) have yet to be chosen.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS ELECTED

Assembly members voted on the membership of the AMS Board of Directors, and elected Karen Kilcullen, Dera Nevin, Amein Punjani, Ace Smith, and Nick Whalen for the 1994-95 Board. Kevin Rex asked Nevin to withdraw her application because it was submitted late, but it was allowed because current Chair of the Board of Directors Grant Hughes had already approved it.

OF NOTE

Assembly unanimously passed a motion condemning the Heritage Front.

The AMS Housing Issues Task Force Report was presented by committee chair Greg Speers, and accepted for first reading. Its recommendations will be voted on at the next Assembly.

Assembly approved the constitution of the First-Year Not-in-Residence Students (FYNIRS) club.

Equity

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

faculty" and has made this a priority in the past and for the future.

Jane Knox, faculty advisor on employment equity, said that in the field of employment equity, "over the past twenty years Queen's has improved more rapidly than other universities in the country. We must look at the figures in the particular context of where other universities are at."

The current figures, according to Knox, reflect "progress in a context where we have quite a ways to go. We may be doing better than others, but we should not sit back on our heels and congratulate ourselves."

"Diversity in academia," Knox said, "is a fundamental contributor to the quality of the academic environment."

Knox emphasized the difficult nature of a commitment such as employment equity. "No one wants to lower their standards in order to hire minorities... the solution is a greater pool of applicants so that outstanding candidates represent the previously disadvantaged groups."

Unlike Principal Smith, Knox pointed to the presence of strong government guidelines Queen's must adhere to. "All government-funded institutions must make active strides towards diversity in the workplace," Knox said.

Queen's has its second Federal Contractor's Review coming up, and the university must demonstrate the progress it has made towards equity.

When asked about the future of hiring practices at Queen's, Knox said that Principal-Elect William Leggett "has a reputation for being committed to equity."

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely

Experienced Electrolytologists

Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call
542-5595

Queen's Jazz Ensemble

(directed by Greg Runions)

Monday, March 28, 1994 - 8:00 p.m.
Grant Hall

Queen's Wind Ensemble
(directed by Gordon Craig)

Queen's Percussion Ensemble
(directed by Greg Runions)

Tuesday, March 29, 1994 - 8:00 p.m.
Grant Hall

Admission: $6 regular; $3 students/seniors

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45

Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

The CANADIAN COLLEGE of

NATUROPATHIC MEDICINE

There is a bright future for you in naturopathic medicine.

CCNM offers a four-year, full-time program leading to a Doctor of Naturopathic Medicine (N.D.) Diploma.

Prerequisites include three years of university studies (or equivalent), including biology, general chemistry and organic chemistry.

The Canadian College of Naturopathic Medicine
60 Berl Avenue, Etobicoke, Ontario M8Y 3C7

Admissions: (416) 251-5261 Ext. 23
Application Deadline: March 31, 1994

LET'S WING IT FOOD & FLICKS

573 PRINCESS ST

549-1842

FREE MOVIE RENTAL (min $10.00 order)
FREE CITY DELIVERY (min $10.00 order)
15% DISCOUNT ON TAKE-OUTS

$1.00 OFF

Any order of wings or ribs

with this coupon

EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

FREE

1/2 lb of Wings With Any Order 2 lb or more

with this coupon

EXPIRES MAY 1, 1994

* NEW DALLAS WINGS - HOT! HOT! HOT! A REAL WINNER!

SENATE BOOKSTORE COMMITTEE

OPEN MEETING

Tuesday, April 5, 1994

4:00 p.m.

McLaughlin Room, John Deutsch University Centre

All are invited to an open meeting of the Senate Bookstore Committee to comment on the services provided by the Bookstore, offer suggestions and to discuss any problems being experienced.

If you are unable to attend but have suggestions for the Committee, please write to the committee c/o the Senate Office before 01 April '94.

GOING TO EUROPE THIS SUMMER?

GET THE BASIC NECESSITIES AT TRAVEL CUTS BY APRIL 15TH

AND WE'LL THROW IN A COUPLE OF FRILLS

The best deals to Europe this summer are available exclusively from Travel CUTS.

Student Class[®] air fares are your ticket to maximum savings and flexibility. Bon Voyage[®] travel insurance - designed specifically for students - is comprehensive yet inexpensive. Eurailpass, flexipass, the new Europass, point-to-point and country passes - we have them all, our agents will help you choose, then issue them on the spot!

Book all three: flight, insurance and rail pass by April 15th and we'll throw in a free LET'S GO EUROPE plus a night at The Pink Palace in Corfu, Greece.

TRAVEL CUTS VOYAGES CAMPUS

Telephone Reservation Centre 1-800-667-CUTS (2887)

Get a free copy of the latest travellers' "Bible": a guide to eating, sleeping and getting around Europe

the pink Palace CORFU/GREECE

Get a free night including breakfast and dinner at the world's loveliest youth resort

*Certain restrictions may apply, offer available while supplies last or while it lasts. Availability at our sites. Conditions vary in British Columbia.

Some of this country's most creative minds are in Canada's insurance industry.

They're the kinds of minds that know creativity goes far beyond art, literature or making movies. If you're like that, why not consider a career with Canada's property/casualty, or general insurance industry? The industry offers a wide variety of career choices for creative minds. Accountants yes, but also systems analysts, lawyers, managers, loss prevention engineers, investment specialists, investigators, marine underwriters, aviation adjusters and many more. The choice is yours.

General insurance is also an industry that encourages you to acquire its own levels of professionalism. As a Fellow or Associate of The Insurance Institute of Canada, you would join an educated, experienced and ethical group of professionals equipped to pursue successful careers at the local, provincial, national or even international level.

Choice, challenge, satisfaction and security. They are just some of the rewards you'll enjoy through a creative career in the property/casualty insurance industry.

For more information, look for your local Insurance Institute in the white pages or, contact Les Dandridge, B.A., A.I.C., at The Insurance Institute of Canada, 18 King Street East, 6th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5C 1C4 (416) 362-8586 FAX (416) 362-1126.

Canada's Insurance Professionals
The Graduates of The Insurance Institute of Canada.

APPLICATIONS DUE TODAY:

ESOS Director
 QSCSG Co-ordinators
 Childcare Committee Chair
 Accessibility Taskforce Chair
 Municipal Affairs Commissioner
 Communications Deputies
 Municipal Affairs Deputies
 All Internal Affairs Positions
 All Academic Affairs Chairs
 Chairs for Coffee House, Charity Ball, Advertising

MARCH 30 4pm

Childcare Committee Members
 Accessibility Task Force Members
 Municipal Affairs Chairs
 Communications Commission Chairs
 Academic Affairs Committee Members
 Campus Activities Committee Members

MARCH 31 4pm

Communications Commission Members
 Municipal Affairs Commission Members
 Tricolour Yearbook Staff
 QEA Stage Hands
 * All service staff applications: Alfies, QP, P&CC, Walkhome Staff, Student Constables
 1 Student-at-Large for the Student Health Board
 2 Students-at-Large for the AMS Capital Allocations Committee

* Please Note: This date is correct

Spring Referendum

The following pieces were submitted by the various campus groups seeking student funding in the upcoming referendum.

DO YOU AGREE THAT THE QUEEN'S STUDENT CONSTABLES STUDENT INTEREST FEE OF $0.50 CENTS SHOULD NO LONGER BE SUBJECT TO INDIVIDUAL OPT-OUT?

The Queen's Student Constable system employs students, who work with their peers, to ensure that all Queen's events run safely and smoothly.

The present charge-out rate for the employment of Student Constables at events is $8.85/hour per constable + GST. This charge-out rate was decided due to the overwhelming support the Constable system received in the October referendum for the establishment of a 50 cent opt-outable fee. The charge-out was lowered to ensure that certain individuals and groups who could otherwise not afford the necessary Constables for their events would be able to organize safe events for students.

However, the Queen's Student Constable system presently faces severe financial constraints. With a charge-out rate of $8.85/hour, the system will be incurring a substantial loss in the 1993-94 operational year. Considering that the system is working to maintain this lower charge-out rate, losses are likely to increase in the future. The AMS cannot subsidize our losses year after year as the AMS Corporation's by-laws state that a service may be terminated if it is deemed financially inviable.

In order to ensure that the system does not incur a huge loss every year, the Constable system must find an alternate means of funding. We feel we must pose this referendum question to ask students whether or not they will support a non opt-outable student interest fee to secure funds for the Constable system—a fee that will augment the quality of life at Queen's in allowing the constables the means to provide safety and security to all members of the Queen's community.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STUDENT INTEREST FEE OF $0.35 PER YEAR SUBJECT TO INDIVIDUAL OPT-OUT TO FUND THE QUEEN'S SAILING TEAM?

When asked to sign a petition supporting a $0.35 opt-outable fee for the Queen's Sailing Team, a discouraging number of people seemed surprised to learn that Queen's even had a sailing team. Actually, the team has been sailing successfully for a year and a half, competing against teams in the eastern United States. In our first season we were ranked last in our area and have now moved to 8th out of 44 schools, thanks to spectacular results this past fall. The team itself is divided into two sections; the racing division consists of experienced sailors, some of whom also compete at the national and international level. The second division gives less experienced or beginner sailors the chance to practice weekly, and to participate in our annual regatta.

Up to now the team has been practicing in boats generously supplied by Kingston Yacht Club, at the boats are suffering from the wear and tear of extended use from their summer program. Funding would allow us to purchase our own fleet which would make practices more effective and enable us to host regattas. These boats would not only benefit the elite sailors but any Queen's student wanting to learn to sail since the Sailing Team offers instruction and coaching to sailors of all calibers.

We hope you will support us on the ballot in the AMS referendum and join us in the fall.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STUDENT INTEREST FEE OF $0.50 PER YEAR, SUBJECT TO INDIVIDUAL OPT-OUT, TO FUND QUEEN'S STUDENTS FOR LITERACY? THIS FEE WILL BE USED TO MAINTAIN AND EXPAND QUEEN'S STUDENTS FOR LITERACY.

As you read this article, remember that 10,000 Kingstonians can't look at your surroundings and you'll realize how much you depend on your reading skills each day. Imagine a day without that skill. Without the ability to read medicine instructions, a bus schedule, advertisements, warning labels etc., your self esteem, ability to get work, and basic everyday tasks would suffer. 4.5 Million Canadians face these struggles everyday.

Frontier College: Queen's Students for Literacy is a volunteer based organization whose purpose is threefold: to address individual learning needs, to raise awareness to literacy issues in both the Queen's and larger Kingston communities, and to provide training and support for our volunteers.

The two programs we are currently running are the PriQon Literacy Initiative and a children's program called Read for Fun! We currently have over 100 volunteers from both Queen's and the community and we hope to be able to expand the program next year. We would also like to bring more speakers like Rubin "Hurricane" Carter who spoke at Grant Hall this past February. You can help make a difference! Vote "yes!" to a 50 cents opt-outable student interest fee in the up-coming referendum. Give the gift of literacy!

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A $2.16 STUDENT INTEREST FEE, SUBJECT TO INDIVIDUAL OPT-OUT, TO FUND THE STUDENT HOUSING AUTHORITY?

So the ghetto is going to hell, what do you do? First you eliminate torching the place and just starting over, which is reactionary. Then you call the AMS Communications Commissioner, who is the world's authority on Kingston Municipal Affairs and Housing Issues. She tells you what need to do—namely to document the problem systematically. Fortunately, this simply means proving what every student already knows: there are rats in the kitchens and holes in the floors. If it's raining, some tenants can have a shower in the living room, too. That shower is only slightly colder than the one you have if you're the last one up in the morning. And the poor people who live in back rooms can count the icicles on their ceilings. Rent control ceilings aren't universally respected by the landlords. And some landlords figure it's OK to hire security services to intimidate and peep in windows. Etc. Etc.

Here's the plan: this summer and next, we want to do a house by house survey of the places we live in. We're going to tell you what Queen's Accommodation Listing Service has never bothered to. Like exactly how much rent is the landlord legally entitled to charge on the lease you're about to sign.

Then we start tapping shoulders downtown. City Hall is going to start enforcing its Property Standards Bylaws or we're going to file a complaint with the Ontario Municipal Board. The little scam where everybody waits until the complaining students just move away stops now.

A little over two bucks this September, ninety five cents in subsequent years. Vote yes for you, vote yes for the Class of '98. It's important.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STUDENT INTEREST FEE OF $1.50 PER YEAR TO FUND THE NEW UNION GALLERY? THE PURPOSE OF THIS FEE IS TO ENRICH THE CULTURAL CLIMATE AT QUEEN'S BY ESTABLISHING THE FIRST STUDENT-RUN GALLERY IN CANADA.

Through students' generosity to the Queen's Challenge, we have raised $340,000 for construction of the new student art gallery. Located in the new Stauffer Library, Union Gallery will open this fall.

Union Gallery is a student-run, student space. It will feature cultural events from various departments, including: music ensembles, drama presentations, poetry readings, inter-departmental and inter-university collaborations, the ArtsFest all-faculty art competition, and Bachelor of Fine Art student and Alumni exhibitions.

We are asking you to contribute only $1.50—less than 20 cents a month for a school year. Voting "yes" to this student activity fee ensures free admission to Union Gallery for all students and visitors, professional management of this highly visible student art gallery and a permanent space on campus to promote Queen's arts and culture.

Our biggest challenge now is finding permanent funding to operate the gallery on a day-to-day basis. It would be impossible to manage the workload using only volunteers. We will require a gallery manager for 20 hours per week, and a part-time employee to oversee the gallery in the administrative capacity. Our paid staff would: maintain continuity and accountability between Queen's administration and students, develop and implement gallery/procedures, organize inter-departmental programs and other gallery exhibitions, instruct volunteers and others interested in curating and gallery management, and finally, enable the gallery to be open and accessible for a greater number of hours.

The BFA students have already showed their dedication to this cause by collecting over 1,700 signatures supporting this referendum question.

Please ... vote "YES" on March 29-30 to the Queen's Student Art Gallery Club's question. Your support is greatly appreciated. Thank you!

DO YOU AGREE WITH AN INCREASE IN THE STUDENT INTEREST FEE FROM $1.00 TO $1.25, AN INCREASE OF $0.25, FOR STUDIO Q, QUEEN'S STUDENT TELEVISION? THE PURPOSE OF THIS INCREASE IS TO IMPROVE THE TECHNICAL QUALITY OF THE PROGRAMME.

Studio Q, Queen's Student Television, is a completely student-run weekly television program. Our half hour show offers a mix of news and entertainment aimed specifically at Queen's students. Studio Q also offers many students the chance to gain invaluable "hands-on" experience in television production and broadcast journalism.

While Studio Q has come a long way from its first shows five years ago, the program is still in desperate need of more modernized technical equipment. In a market research survey conducted this year by our marketing team, students complained most about the poor sound and lighting quality of some shows. An added twenty-five cents from each student could help Studio Q to replace aging microphones, headphones and lights. Newer equipment means improved technical quality and a better, more professional media service for you.

Your financial support is crucial to the continued improvement of Studio Q as a media source at Queen's. Twenty-five cents will not even buy you a coffee these days, but it will buy you quality student programming that will keep you informed and entertained. Vote YES for Studio Q and you are only giving up the price of a phonecall.

When You Book One Of These Contiki Holidays From Travel CUTS!

On a Contiki Tour you spend more time having fun, because we take care of all the details that can make travelling a chore

And now when you book either of Contiki's Ultimate European or European Adventurer tours from Travel CUTS you get return airfare to London included absolutely free! Don't miss this fabulous value! Drop by Travel CUTS today!

THE ULTIMATE EUROPEAN
 Visit 15 Countries in 50 days!
 From $69/day. Including flight and most meals.

THE EUROPEAN ADVENTURER
 Visit 11 Countries in 37 days!
 From $78/day. Including flight and most meals.

Your nearest TRAVEL CUTS nearest VOYAGES CAMPUS

Tel: 1-800-667-CUTS (2887)
 Ont. Reg. #04227336

TRAVEL CUTS VOYAGES CAMPUS
 for 18-35's
 The Travel Company of the Canadian Federation of Students

* Certain restrictions apply. Flight must be booked in conjunction with selected Contiki tours. Full details available from Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus, Toronto, Montreal. Halifax departures only. Winnipeg - $150, Calgary, Edmonton, Saskatoon, Vancouver - $175, Victoria - $245.

GSS ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

Thursday, March 31st
7:00 pm
Wallace Hall, J.D.U.C.

All GRADUATE STUDENTS CAN SPEAK AND VOTE AT THIS MEETING.
Copies of the agenda and proxy forms ARE AVAILABLE AT THE GSS OFFICE, ROOM 021 J.D.U.C.

Bless those who persecute you; bless and do not curse them. Rejoice with those who rejoice, weep with those who weep. Live in harmony with one another; do not be haughty, but associate with the lowly; do not claim to be wiser than you are. Do not repay anyone evil for evil, but take thought for what is noble in the sight of all. If it is possible, so far as it depends on you, live peaceably with all. Beloved, never avenge yourselves, but leave room for the wrath of God; for it is written, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, says the Lord."

St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans 12:14-19

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

EUROPE CANADA ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance - Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World "Bare Bones"	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399
London	from 379	Round World via South Pacific	from 2399
Rome	from 629
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

The JDUC Program Committee's Small Grants Fund supports student organizations or clubs and university departments or associations in holding community events in the JDUC.

Applications are now being accepted, until April 30, for spring/summer session events and, for the early birds among you, September '94 events.

Guidelines and the applications forms available in the JDUC general office.

Princess Towers

AFFORDABLE DOWNTOWN LOCATIONS:

- BACHELORS, 1, 2, 3, 4, & 8 BEDROOM UNITS
- SOME HAVE BALCONIES
- HEAT & HYDRO INCLUDED
- PARKING EXTRA
- CON LAUNDRY & CABLE TV AVAILABLE IN BUILDING
- NEAR BUS & LARGE GROCERY STORE
- WE PROVIDE GROUP DISCOUNTS AND SHORT TERM LEASES

PRINCESS TOWERS
401 Princess Street
Kingston, Ontario
K7L 5C9
613-544-1642

ASUS wants you...

is looking for Committee Chairs and Members for the following committees

- Prison Visitations Heart & Stroke THEME Speakers
ASKUS Kids 4 Kids Balloon-o-Grams AIDS AWARENESS Bike Right
Undergraduate Review Elections Team Childcare Buddies Environmental Mosaic MindFind Social Future Link March Break Artsfest
 Committee Chairs applications are due TODAY and Members applications are due on March 31st.

Surface
needs an
Editor

Applications are due on March 28th.
Editor Selection Meeting on April 4th 5:30pm

"To Bring Into Public View"

Levanna Designs
is looking for

Director Business Manager Due TODAY
and Advertising/Marketing Reps
Sales Reps Due on March 28th

"Clothes to Cover Your ASUS"

All applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University. For more information, call 545-6278.

Get Involved!!!

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

FRIDAY March 25
Fishtales
SATURDAY March 26
Freeway Band
THURSDAY March 30
Mugworts
opening:
Hellbillies

- PUB GRUB
- IRISH PINTS
- SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan
76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) TEL: 544-1966

Chicken & Ribs

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"

Buy one entree and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.

Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

TOP 10 12 REASONS TO USE

- 1 Price
Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus has built its reputation on having the best price possible for their student clients. If you find a cheaper price with anyone else please tell us and we will try to match or beat it. Always check with us for the best deals.
- 2 We are Student Owned
Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus is the travel company of the Canadian Federation of Students. By making us your travel company you are helping develop and provide services for students across the country.
- 3 Convenient Locations
Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus has 35 offices located from coast to coast. For a complete list of offices and to find the one closest to you see below.
- 4 The Student Traveller
Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus is the only travel company that publishes a full colour travel magazine especially for students. The Student Traveller comes out twice a year and is available on most campuses or from any Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus office.
- 5 "Student Class" Fares
Another Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus exclusive. These special fares available to anywhere in Canada, Europe and around the world, feature maximum flexibility including advance bookings and nominal change fees at prices below youth stand by.
- 6 Bon Voyage Insurance
Specially designed for student travellers, comprehensive yet inexpensive.
- 7 One Stop Shopping
From flights to travel books, from insurance to hostel cards, from the International Student Identity Card (ISIC) to backpacks, Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus has it all. We issue railpasses on the spot and if we don't have it, we'll tell you where to get it!
- 8 Knowledgeable Staff
No doesn't know student travel, but we do! Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus staff have been there, done that, and bought the t-shirt. Our staff are student aged and can relate to your travel needs better than anyone.
- 9 Product Selection
We have the largest selection of student travel opportunities in the country. We are constantly looking for and developing special student travel products to meet the demands of our clients.
- 10 International Network
We have over 600 affiliated student travel companies around the world to help you once you are "on the road". When you leave Canada, Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus goes with you.
- 11 20 Years Experience
For over 20 years we have provided quality travel products to over 1.5 million students saving them millions of dollars.
- 12 SWAP
The Student Work Abroad Programme is available exclusively from Travel CUTS/Voyages Campus and offers the opportunity of a "working holiday" to any of nine countries. SWAP is the ideal option if money is tight when the travel bug bites.

TRAVEL CUTS VOYAGES CAMPUS

Telephone Reservation Centre
1-800-667-CUTS (2887)

Ont. Reg. #04227338

The Travel Company of the Canadian Federation of Students

Opinion

Manson...what an Axl

When Guns 'n Roses released their album Lies, few people paid attention to the homophobic, racist and misogynistic nature of the lyrics. "One in a Million" in particular was heavily laden with blatantly racist sentiments, and for this song GRN was kicked off the roster of an AIDS benefit concert.

The undiscerning consumer eye, however, simply ignored or quickly forgot the offensive nature and rushed out to buy the next album.

And now, in what appears to be an attempt to bring tastefulness to some sort of mainstream rock pinnacle, Guns 'n Roses lead singer Axl Rose proudly displays Charlie Manson's face on the front of his body in concert and more noticeably in his video "Estranged."

At the end of their latest album, The Spaghetti Incident?,

Guns 'n Roses buried a song written by none other than the crazed Manson himself. Why the song was buried is not for us to decipher.

The fact the song was even there would have received little attention had not the younger sister of one of Charlie Manson's victims spoken up about it.

And while the issue of royalties has been resolved such that none go to Manson himself, (with GRN professing to have been concerned from the beginning as to where the royalties would go), other issues remain.

While they do not promote Charlie Manson financially, they are promoting the legend. Why is Guns 'n Roses knowingly glorifying a convicted murderer to a relatively young and impressionable audience?

Whether they ask for the attention or not, and we can reasonably assume they do, bands like GRN are idolized by young people worldwide.

Some singers and bands choose not to ignore this reality.

Guns 'n Roses is not the first band to record a song written by Charlie Manson, (the Lemmonheads recorded a Manson song as well). But there is a certain musical irony as far as Manson is concerned.

Manson is himself a failed musician. When he told his women-murderers to leave something "witchy" behind (after they did their killings), they left the words Heiter Skelter. And in doing so they left The Beatles shrouded in suspicion.

Like Manson, (date we risk a comparison), The Beatles challenged existing social stratifications. Axl Rose, according to our entertainment experts, is doing the same thing. It's his image to be anti-establishment. Some, however, might argue his image is decidedly status quo (racist, sexist and homophobic).

Whatever it purports to represent, image in a media dominated age is of utmost importance. When the Sex Pistols wore swastikas on their arms, they claimed they were protesting the fact that England had become a fascist state.

When people wore pictures of Nelson Mandela on their shirts, they were protesting white South Africa and Mandela's imprisonment.

So what is Axl Rose protesting? A few weeks ago, a new ABC news program interviewed the women who killed for Manson.

At the end of the interview, one of the women explained her decision to do a public interview.

She said that recently she had been receiving letters from young people saying that what she did was "all right," that Manson was a good person to follow. She wanted these people to know that he is the last person to follow.

In an age where neonazism is gaining popularity at alarming rates and through subtle and deceptive means, (look at the Queen's student who believes the Heritage Front is not a neonazi organization), consumers should carefully scrutinize the messages they often passively intake.

Whether or not Guns 'n Roses can be considered artists is itself debatable. But, regardless, artists' role in society is to force the rest of us to question values and social situations and structures.

In a roundabout way, Guns 'n Roses has done that. We discussed their decisions and what the implications are. But how many teenagers sit around debating Manson and the ethical issues involved in glorifying a brainwashing murderer?

Axl Rose's audience is a generation away from the Manson murders. Many do not know how many deaths Manson is responsible for, and some of those who do think it's "all right." They don't know he shouldn't become a folk hero.

It would be presumptuous to assume that just because they are popular, Guns 'n Roses should only sing a message for the public good. It is also not up to the artist to anticipate all possible interpretations of the message.

To hold the artist responsible would lead to widespread censorship, and historically the first groups to be censored are gays, lesbians, bisexuals and others who fight for minority rights.

As a society, it is our responsibility to actively listen to lyrics and analyze images as they are sold to us, and seek to inform those who are not equipped to make analytical decisions. Beyond that we can and should do no more.

Heterosexist formalities

You've planned everything. The limousine has been booked, dinner reservations have been made, and the flowers have been ordered. The formal committee has been working for months. What you hope to be the best night of your university life should go off without a hitch.

But somewhere in the planning, something has been repeatedly overlooked. Tradition has it that you take a date, a date of the opposite sex. As a result, university formalities here at Queen's are guilty of heterosexism. While the pressure to take a date to the formal remains powerful, more and more people are opting out of the scramble to find a date and deciding that "going stag" isn't so bad.

However, the likelihood that a same sex couple would feel welcome at their university formal is slim to nil. In an atmosphere of tolerance, acceptance and understanding, why does this outdated tradition continue?

In the past, formal themes at Queen's have been accused of racism and have subsequently been altered or changed altogether. Why have criticisms of heterosexism been dismissed or not mentioned at all?

Many students may not think twice about the expectation and pressure to go to the formal with a date of the opposite sex. Others will dismiss the charge of heterosexism as an over-reaction, suggesting that the formal is recreational and should be free from criticism.

But the fact remains that the atmosphere at formals does not create a safe or comfortable space for same-sex couples. This is your university formal and you should not be made to feel uncomfortable.

APR 94

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

QUESTIONS ABOUT STUDENT HOUSING AUTHORITY

THE EDITOR.

On Mar. 29, and 30 students will once again go to the referendum polls to have their say on a variety of issues and groups on campus. This year the "Student Housing Authority" is asking for $2.16 from each student for the establishment of a data base on each house in the Student Housing Area. The 1994-95 Alma Mater Society Council, as per the new referendum policy, has classified this fee as opt-outable. I would like to provide students with some information on this "group," so that they will know what they are voting for. This "group" has little to do with either housing or authority.

This "group" came up with the idea of forming the Student Housing Authority in early Jan. through indirect consultation with me. At that time I was researching the best framework in which to address questions of housing and municipal relations. The group in question asked me whether or not it would be practical to start a Tenants' Association.

Further research indicated a Tenants' Association may not be a viable alternative at Queen's at this time. However, several weeks ago I was once again approached by the "group" in question, asking whether or not I would be willing to endorse the "Student Housing Authority." The proposal placed in front of me was no longer for a Tenants' Association, but rather for a data base to compile information on each house in the Student Housing Area—only one small component of the original plan. Students who had paid the fee would be eligible to receive information on a variety of attributes on any house in question. They could collect this information from the "Student Housing Authority"—presumably the organizer's home. The information would be stored on computer—one purchased through student fees, and also presumably, in the organizer's home—and printed when necessary on a laser printer, of course, stored in the organizer's home.

While the idea of compiling information on every house in the Student Housing Area might be a good idea, here is some information: the "Student Housing Authority" may wish to consider before beginning the project. A variety of other student and local organizations have been trying to do something like this for years, but have not been successful for a variety of economic, legal, or political reasons. Membership within a registered Tenants' Association will cost the organizers money, something they haven't factored into their budget; they have also not included funds for any legal fees they might incur as a result of collecting this information (not all of the information they want to collect is available for public access, and if they do include it, they could get sued). Within the political climate, this organization could be misconstrued as a challenge to landlords and not as a useful service with a focus on community development.

I also have some questions: How responsible is it of the organizers to keep equipment bought with student monies in their homes? What if it gets stolen (they don't have insurance within the budget—is the AMS to pay for this with student fees)? Will the "group" have regular office hours? Will I feel safe going to this house? Is it wheelchair accessible? Where is the organizer's job description? Will provincial or federal taxes need to be paid for these activities (check again!)?

These questions, among others, will need to be answered before I as a Queen's student vote for this proposal. Furthermore, I am not convinced they are initiating this question for the right reasons, nor that they have the expertise or incentive to deliver on their promises.

DERA NEVIN
ARTS '94
(If you want more information, contact the AMS Internal Affairs Commission or Chief Returning Officer.)

ALUMNI SPEAK OUT ON SURFACE

THE EDITOR.

Regarding the recent Globe and Mail story on Surface (The Globe and Mail, Mar. 11, 1994, "Student tabloid fights hate with 'hate'"), as a group of recent Queen's graduates, we are most concerned that the story did not fairly present the role of Surface in the Queen's community.

We appreciate the controversy which has emerged from time to time as a result of the occasional vehemence with which Surface communicated its rage against racism (and sexism and homophobia). We watched Surface evolve from a literary magazine 6 years ago into its present form. This evolution occurred mainly because people (particularly people of colour) in the Queen's community did not have a voice elsewhere.

A primary purpose of any quality university education is learning to question and to challenge the status quo. During our years at Queen's, Surface was the only student publication to do this consistently, thoughtfully, and thoroughly. While fighting racism with vehement anger may not be peaceful or even productive, it does not appear to be threatening or marginalizing the white mainstream of Queen's University.

Lastly, the Globe and Mail article was noteworthy for what it chose not to include. Specifically, the article did not relate Surface to the recognized racist events which have occurred at Queen's in recent years. We doubt that these incidents are any more or less plentiful at Queen's than any other university. However, it seems irresponsible to report on Surface without recognising whereon its rage is founded.

G. BASANTA, BAH '90, SPEAKER, AMS ASSEMBLY
K. ELDER, BAH '93, CHAIR, LA, MCCALLUM, BAH '91, CHAIR, AMS ALUMNI WEEKEND COMMITTEE
C.L. RUTHERFORD, BAH '93, EDITOR, TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK
L. WEBER, BA/BPE '87, MBA '93, CHAIR, AMS BOARD OF DIRECTORS

FIGHT OPPRESSION, NOT SURFACE

THE EDITOR.

As a former writer for Surface, I am disgusted by the ongoing attacks against the publication by members of the Queen's community and newspapers like The Globe and Mail. The reference to Surface as "anti-white rhetoric" is completely unfounded and illustrates the lack of education and talking How can you tell it's Spring?

H E A D S

"The birds are chirping and people are laughing." PETER ROSS ARTS '96
"People are on the roofs in the Ghetto again." CHRIS CHAN ARTS '96

"Small rowboats floating down University." MICHAEL WISE ARTS '94
"Because it's getting warmer." STEPHANIE WILSON ARTS '95
"Because it's getting warmer." JEREMY BLACKBURN BETH SHEPHERD PARENT-CHILD RESOURCE CENTRE
PHOTOS: BRENT DAVIS

understanding about the need for voices which challenge us.

I am a white, heterosexual male and while I don't separate myself from mainstream privilege and ignorance, I find it ironic that those who wage such aggressive campaigns against alternative publications constantly accuse them of "hate" and so-called "reverse racism." The backlash only illustrates and reinforces the need for alternative voices to be heard.

Once again, right-wing thinkers (predominantly male, white, heterosexual, and upper-class) are trying to define the parameters in which working people, women, gays and lesbians, people of colour, and Natives can speak or act. To the conservative, challenges to their privilege should be "nice" or "non-threatening," and anger and distaste are only productive as long as they (conservative) are not implicated.

Surface only proves one consistent assertion against those who are discriminated against. That is, the majority of people will only take notice of rampant racism, sexism, and homophobia when aggressive and militant words or actions are utilized.

If the majority of people in Canada spent one-tenth of their energy fighting oppression rather than fighting those who feel oppressed, publications like Surface wouldn't be needed. Until that time comes, however, I throw my full and undivided support behind the staff of Surface.

CHRIS SHERIDAN ARTS '92

EDITORIAL BOARD EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Sarah MacWhirter PUBLICATIONS MANAGER: David Pavao NEWS EDITOR: Jeff Gray PRODUCTION MANAGER: Colin Ho EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR: Douglas MacGregor ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR: Rob Furse FEATURES EDITOR: Allison Masemann			OPINIONS EDITOR: Karen Hall SPORTS EDITOR: Joel Sutherland GRAPHICS EDITOR: Joey deVilla PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR: Marika Glickman MISC/BACKPAGE EDITOR: Joey deVilla LITERARY LAPSSES EDITOR: Megan Nichols			ASSISTANT NEWS: Brad CF Elder, Brock Martland, Lori Thorlakson ASSISTANT PRODUCTION: Adrienne Down ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT: Ryan P. Chen, Sian Beddoe-Stephens ASSISTANT SPORTS: Justin McKellar ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY: Derek Yarnell ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSSES: Tim Mitchell
BUSINESS STAFF BUSINESS MANAGER: Chris Ritchie ADVERTISING MANAGER: Andrew Nielsen CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER: Alex Hamer SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Fiona Macaulay ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Stuart Kodwell HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER: David Pavao			THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL Friday, March 25, 1994 • Issue 37 • Volume 121 The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8 Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728 Internet e-mail: journal@qucdn.queensu.ca Circulation: 10,000 Issue 38 will be published on Thursday, March 31, 1994.

Real Live Slacker

I was tooling around JDUC, when the Studio Q crew was asking their question of the week, which was "What can you do with an Arts degree?" I thought for a moment and remembered this story a friend had told me about getting this greeting card with a pathetic plea written inside that essentially said "Yes, I'm a twerp, but I deserve to live." I'm gonna open up a greeting card company with cool cards!

Haw 'bout a card that says "Look, you're nice, but..."

Hey, mom, I'm pregnant!

Just kidding, I only failed 2 courses.

Just keep it in perspective.

Look out, HALLMARK!

Look man, I said I was sorry.

You never used that finger anyway.

With our new focus on preventive medicine, we tend to blame patients for their own woes ("Lung cancer, eh? Shouldn't have smoked, eh?"). I throw a day when we replace "Get Well Soon" cards with these...

THIS CARD'S A BURNING SENSATION!

Hey gonorrhoea boy... Maybe you'll wear a condom next time!

THANKS TO TROUBLE

BY JOEY DEVILLA

RAINBOW DAY GOALS: AWARENESS & EDUCATION

We, the members of LGBIC (Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Issues Committee) would like to inform you that on Wednesday, March 30, we will be handing out rainbow ribbons on campus for Rainbow Day. In the past, the rainbow flag has been a symbol of pride for the queer community and our committee wishes to make the ribbon available to all individuals who support the lesbian, gay and bisexual community. People who wear this ribbon show that they are allies in our fight against heterosexist attitudes and ideologies. It is also important to note that we do not wish to separate the rainbow ribbon from its symbolic past and the struggles that the queer community has faced, and will face. The main goal of LGBIC is to educate students on queer issues and we feel that this ribbon may be a step in achieving this goal.

Important things you should know about the rainbow ribbon are that you do not have to be lesbian, gay or bisexual to wear the ribbon, and that even if you do not feel comfortable activating for lesbian, gay and bisexual rights, we ask that you educate yourselves. Get a book, ask a member of LGBIC or someone you know who would be a good source of information, take a stand against heterosexist attitudes and help to alleviate gay-bashing (verbal or physical) practices.

In order to help you to educate yourselves, we have included some definitions of words that may have appeared in this article.

1. ALLY: a self-identified heterosexual who actively works to promote and support the needs of lesbians, gays and bisexuals.
2. HETEROSEXISM: the continual promotion by institutions of the superiority of heterosexuality and the simultaneous subordination of homosexuality. Heterosexism is the assumption that everyone is heterosexual unless known otherwise. Statistics say one in 10 are lesbian, gay or bisexual. Hint hint...I'm sure that you have more than 10 friends!

3. COMPULSORY HETEROSEXUAL SOCIETY: a community in which one's membership demands the taking on of the identity and behaviour of a heterosexual. This involves a complex system which rewards heterosexuality and punishes same sexuality.

4. MONOSEXISM: the belief that people are either homosexual or heterosexual; that bisexuality does not exist, or that bisexuality is only a transition point for people coming out as homosexual; therefore, not a legitimate permanent social/political identity.

Rainbow ribbons will be handed out by our "waving ribbon" teams and will be available at the Alma Mater Society Education Commission on a permanent basis. If you would like a copy of the history of the rainbow flag, it can be obtained in the education office or in a back issue of the Queen's Journal (Nov. 26, 1993) as well. ON MARCH 30, 1994 PLEASE SHOW SUPPORT FOR YOUR LESBIAN, GAY AND BISEXUAL FRIENDS.

Does Employment Equity = Reverse Discrimination?

One of the ways minority groups and women have been discriminated against in Canada is in the area of employment. To remedy this, employment equity (EE) programs were created. It is important to note that these programs do not address the discrimination experienced by all minority groups (lesbians, gays, bisexuals and non-visible ethnic minorities for instance). The groups that are identified, called "designated groups" are: Aboriginal people, people with disabilities, members of visible minorities and women.

What is EE anyway? Since the term "affirmative action" was equated by some with so-called "reverse discrimination," in 1984 Judge Abella recommended that "EE" stand for measures to eliminate discriminatory employment barriers and practices.

Some believe that EE programs will hire unqualified people because there are not enough qualified designated group members (DGMs). However, two researchers, Leck and Saunders, found that the claim of unavailability was a factor that "cannot explain the results of our research; the percentages of designated group members required for organizations to hire representatively examined in this study were adjusted by regional and occupational availability." (Leck and Saunders "Hiring Women: The Effects of Canada's Employment Equity Act." Canadian Public Policy 18:2 (1992), page 217.)

Even if we acknowledge that there are many qualified candidates which are DGMs, some worry that candidates who are DGMs will be chosen over those who are not DGMs because of a quota system. The fact is, however, that EE programs are about goals and timetables, not strict hiring quotas. The employer is the one who sets the goals and timetables and they are based on an examination of what works best for his/her workplace. Quotas, on the other hand, are imposed from outside the organization and require that an inflexible number be met.

Another claim often made is that EE programs really amount to "reverse discrimination." In reality, however, EE is about eliminating discrimination in employment. In general, EE promotes hiring practices that help ensure that employees are hired strictly because of their qualifications. There is one measure, called targeted hiring, which is used in extreme cases to accelerate the goals of EE. Although it is used very rarely and is perfectly legal (see s. 15 (2) of the Charter), it has received a considerable amount of attention in the press. Indeed, on Nov. 11, 1993, an article titled "Ontario Barring White Applicants for Senior Positions" ran in The Globe and Mail. Targeting for this job occurred because all of the designated groups were severely under-represented in Management Board senior ranks and especially in 46 directors' positions. The important

OPEN FORUM

REACTION TO THE HEBRON MASSACRE: PART THREE

THE EDITOR,

In Mar. 14's Journal, I wrote regarding the latest Israeli massacre of dozens of Palestinians in Hebron, and I mentioned some facts concerning the Palestinian-Israeli conflict in general, and the Jewish settlement movement in particular. In her reply of March 18, Veronica Syrtash (VS) tried very hard to mislead the readers about the contents of my letter and the whole issue; a typical attitude of Israel apologists.

Firstly, VS mentioned that many facts of my letter "are just plain wrong," implying that she was about to respond to them. However, none of these facts were dealt with. My letter was about the responsibility of the Israeli government and army for initiating and funding the Jewish settlement movement, and training and arming the settlers. It was about the massacres which take place on a daily basis on the streets of occupied Palestine. It was about millions of Palestinians who are living in refugee camps while any Jew can "immigrate" and settle in their occupied homeland. It was not about building an Islamic state in Palestine, as VS implied.

Secondly, VS implied that the current negotiations between Israel and the PLO are aiming at the Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza, which is not true. These negotiations deal with two specific areas (less than two per cent of the total area of occupied Palestine) where the Israeli army will be "redeployed" and the PLO will be given the responsibility of preventing the Palestinian people from resisting the Israeli occupation.

Thirdly, it would be interesting to go over some phrases VS used in her letter.

Referring to Palestinians who were and are still being jailed because of their resistance to the Israeli occupation, VS called them "convicted criminals." Well, according to the UN resolutions the West Bank and Gaza are occupied by Israel, and International Laws guarantee for those under occupation the right to resist, including by arms. Therefore, you cannot compare any Palestinian group resisting the Israeli occupation (however distorted its views might be) with the Jewish settlers nor to mention their so-called extremists, and then say that radicals exist in both sides so let's forget about it. While referring to the Israeli "sacrifices" for peace, VS mentioned that Israel is "moving towards the removal of Jewish settlers from their homes." The "homes" of these settlers were and are still being built on lands illegally confiscated from its Palestinian owners. Also, the above (if it comes true) does not include the 120,000 settlers or more, it only deals with a few tens of them. VS also mentioned that those who support the Hebron massacre "are swiftly dealt with by the Israeli government." Well, Palestinian homes are blown-up by official (Israeli) court orders, even for stone-throwing charges. I wonder how many Israeli "homes" were blown up by the Israeli government, including that of the murderer himself? This same government orders its soldiers NEVER to shoot at settlers, even if they are carrying out massacres against the Palestinians (see The Globe and Mail, March 18).

Finally, realising that Israel as an artificial state cannot survive without the continuous Western flow of support, and that today's students are tomorrow's leaders, it was not surprising for VS to promote the idea that The Journal is not the right place to discuss the Middle East politics. RAEED ODEH PH.D. ENG.

As always, start early—now! Everyone in the household should be involved in emptying and cleaning the place before you move out. Even if only one person is moving out, it's a good idea to have a spring cleaning (because cleaning once a year for three years is an easier job than once at the end of the three years).

Empty the fridge, freezer and cupboards of perished or point-less goods—the fish fingers from '91, the half empty jar of maraschino cherries from 2nd year (recycle the jar!), and so on. Are there any non-perishables that you don't want? Get them to the Food Bank!

To begin your cleaning project, you'll need a bucket, mop with clean mop head, clean rags, probably a scrub brush, "green" cleaner, a vacuum with attachments, probably oven cleaner, and toilet bowl cleaner. If you need to borrow some equipment, talk to a neighbour.

Vacuum dust off curtain rods, window sills, rads, baseboards, etc. Sweep or vacuum up all loose dirt from the floor; if you don't do this, the stuff turns to mud when you try to wash the floor. Mix up a bucket of hot water and Murphy's Oil Soap. This is easy to find, and is an environmentally sound choice, but if you're desperate, use a less green alternative like Spic and Span. They wring out a cloth and swipe window sills, rads, baseboards, etc. This process doesn't actually take that long, and all the while consider what a well-rounded person this experience makes you.

Once all fixtures are done, wash the floor. When using water, wring the cloth or mop well—you don't want to be moving a small lake around on the floor. Yes, washing a floor on your hands and knees does produce cleaner results.

BATHROOMS
The bathroom is the black hole of any ghetto house, so fortify yourself before you tackle this task. Get rid of all loose dirt or dust first. Empty out shelves and the medicine cabinet. Are you throwing out medicines? Empty the contents into the toilet and flush them to avoid their ingestion by anyone who doesn't need them (pets, small children).

Cleaners like Comet or Ajax do scotch surfaces, whereas washing or baking soda are both very effective and environmentally friendly. Wet the tile or porcelain, scrub with soda on a sponge, and then rinse. Clean every surface. Do the toilet second to last and follow the instructions on the toilet bowl cleanser because it's very corrosive. Wash the floor last of all with your Murphy's mixture.

KITCHEN
Empty and wipe out cupboards, shelves, etc. first. Dust the windows, rads, and other surfaces with soap and water. Empty the freezer and fridge of everything. Defrost the freezer—usually this means turning the fridge off, leaving the door open and putting a metal bowl of hot water on a metal shelf. Keep replacing the water as it cools. Leave trays and bins in place; when the ice in the freezer melts the water collects in the trays and bins. Empty these before they overflow. Defrost while you're studying or cleaning elsewhere.

Do not cry "Call me Ishmael!" and attack ice with a knife, screwdriver, or other implement in an attempt to hurry the process. You may pierce and ruin the liner,

FEATURES

Movin' On Out

Moving is not as simple as loading your stuff into the U-Haul and driving away. Then again, while a fair bit of work, it doesn't have to be overwhelming. And there are a number of ways to make it easier and more efficient. This week's Feature is an effort to provide you with the information and helpful hints you need to move out of your house with a minimum of hassle. While some of this information may seem self-evident, if you've never cleaned an oven or packed a moving truck, keep reading!

First, there are a number of steps you should take in the last few weeks of school which will make the transition easier. Keep a checklist of these tasks—between getting caught up in spring fever, exams and end-of-year partying, these are the things which are going to fall through the cracks.

On the last day of April, it is not uncommon to see students hurling after a long night of partying, boxes being hurled off balconies, and incoming and outgoing tenants hurling epithets at one another. In order to avoid the last scenario, when no other agreement has been made between you, the landlord and the incoming tenants, you and your housemates should aim to be out of your dwelling by noon on the last day of the lease.

If you pay utilities (water, electricity, gas) arrange with the PUC (546-1187, 116 Princess Street) to close your account effective the last day of your lease. You can also transfer your account to a new address. Let your subletters know that they are responsible for signing on for their own utilities and that they should do this in advance of moving in.

Arrange now to cancel any subscriptions and forward your mail (this can be done for a fee through the Post Office). Close or transfer your oil, cable, and phone accounts.

Don't leave behind anything for which your household is responsible, including furniture, curtains, garbage, wrecked bikes, and so on.

Unfortunately, you can no longer leave large items for city pickup; however, at the end of April and early May there is no fee for disposing of them at the Laidlaw transfer station, located on Dalton Avenue off Division Street (phone 542-7474). The trick is to get the stuff there—ask to your landlord, who may be willing to help, and talk to your neighbours to see if you can bribe them to take your load to the station with them.

The tenants—you and your housemates—are obligated to leave the premises clean and repaired of any and all damage they or their guests have caused. Sweep and wash floors and baseboards, vacuum carpets, clean the oven and range, clean out the fridge, empty out cupboards, clear the attic/basement/closets/shed of all your stuff. Package garbage and recyclables neatly and make sure they are properly disposed of. Your landlord may be willing to lend you use of a vacuum cleaner if you don't have one already. Repair (properly) any damage you, your household, or your guests have caused. Nail holes, broken windows, burn marks, chipped paint, holes in walls, and other unnaturally induced damages are your responsibility. The landlord can take you to court for damage you have caused, even if you've tried to repair it but did so improperly.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act, the landlord is obliged to pay you six per cent interest on the security deposit (last month's rent) you gave her/him when you signed the lease. A gentle reminder can be in the form of a polite letter to the landlord letting him or her know who to make the cheque out to and the address to send the cheque as of May 1. The landlord cannot keep the money to offset damages or repairs.

Cleaning House

ter, wring the cloth or mop well—you don't want to be moving a small lake around on the floor. Yes, washing a floor on your hands and knees does produce cleaner results.

BATHROOMS
The bathroom is the black hole of any ghetto house, so fortify yourself before you tackle this task. Get rid of all loose dirt or dust first. Empty out shelves and the medicine cabinet. Are you throwing out medicines? Empty the contents into the toilet and flush them to avoid their ingestion by anyone who doesn't need them (pets, small children).

Cleaners like Comet or Ajax do scotch surfaces, whereas washing or baking soda are both very effective and environmentally friendly. Wet the tile or porcelain, scrub with soda on a sponge, and then rinse. Clean every surface. Do the toilet second to last and follow the instructions on the toilet bowl cleanser because it's very corrosive. Wash the floor last of all with your Murphy's mixture.

KITCHEN
Empty and wipe out cupboards, shelves, etc. first. Dust the windows, rads, and other surfaces with soap and water. Empty the freezer and fridge of everything. Defrost the freezer—usually this means turning the fridge off, leaving the door open and putting a metal bowl of hot water on a metal shelf. Keep replacing the water as it cools. Leave trays and bins in place; when the ice in the freezer melts the water collects in the trays and bins. Empty these before they overflow. Defrost while you're studying or cleaning elsewhere.

Do not cry "Call me Ishmael!" and attack ice with a knife, screwdriver, or other implement in an attempt to hurry the process. You may pierce and ruin the liner, which ruins the fridge or freezer, the replacement of which will ruin you financially.

Once defrosted, wipe out the entire fridge, and restart it.

The next major appliance to clean is the oven, and this is conceivably the most revolting job you will have to do. Make sure oven elements are cold before cleaning. If the elements (the concentric ring things) can be removed, remove them and set aside. Remove the drip pans and chrome rings housed under the elements and clean these in hot, soapy water (let them soak for a while).

Follow the instructions on the oven cleanser. Generally, take out the racks and spray all surfaces (but not the oven heating elements) and, usually, don't spray the racks unless they are really dirty. Oven cleanser is highly corrosive and the fumes are very noxious. Spray only the inside, close the oven door and stay out of the room for as long as the instructions indicate.

Cleaning all the goo out of the oven is messy. And all the mess is corrosive, too. Use gloves and wear pants and a long-sleeved shirt that you don't like any more. Protect your work area with newspapers, and use newspapers to wipe out the oven as well. Once the goo is gone, rinse the inside of the oven with a damp rag. Congratulate yourself on a job well done and argue, deservingly, that you've done more than your fair share towards cleaning the house.

While this undoubtedly does not document the entire range of nauseating cleaning jobs you will encounter when moving out, it is a start. Remember, if you start the ball rolling by leaving incoming tenants with a clean house, the idea of house maintenance may actually catch on in the ghetto, and you may be lucky enough to move into a house which is equally as clean.

Invest in a roll of packing tape. Re-seal box bottoms before filling and securely seal tops when finished. Overfilled boxes don't stack well; underfilled boxes collapse if others are stacked on top. Either way, breakables live up to their name.

Use newspaper, towels, or other soft cloth to cushion breakable stuff. Use packing material to keep the load from shifting in your vehicle. Use newspaper only on surfaces that can be cleaned like glass and glazed dishware.

Mark boxes clearly, whether with "Fragile, This Side Up," "Bob's room," or "Kitchen stuff." If you forget this important step, have fun with the mystery box: what was this before it smashed? whose was it? why is it here now?

Invest in a roll of packing tape. Re-seal box bottoms before filling and securely seal tops when finished. Overfilled boxes don't stack well; underfilled boxes collapse if others are stacked on top. Either way, breakables live up to their name.

Use newspaper, towels, or other soft cloth to cushion breakable stuff. Use packing material to keep the load from shifting in your vehicle. Use newspaper only on surfaces that can be cleaned like glass and glazed dishware.

Mark boxes clearly, whether with "Fragile, This Side Up," "Bob's room," or "Kitchen stuff." If you forget this important step, have fun with the mystery box: what was this before it smashed? whose was it? why is it here now?

While this undoubtedly does not document the entire range of nauseating cleaning jobs you will encounter when moving out, it is a start. Remember, if you start the ball rolling by leaving incoming tenants with a clean house, the idea of house maintenance may actually catch on in the ghetto, and you may be lucky enough to move into a house which is equally as clean.

Use newspaper, towels, or other soft cloth to cushion breakable stuff. Use packing material to keep the load from shifting in your vehicle. Use newspaper only on surfaces that can be cleaned like glass and glazed dishware.

Mark boxes clearly, whether with "Fragile, This Side Up," "Bob's room," or "Kitchen stuff." If you forget this important step, have fun with the mystery box: what was this before it smashed? whose was it? why is it here now?

While this undoubtedly does not document the entire range of nauseating cleaning jobs you will encounter when moving out, it is a start. Remember, if you start the ball rolling by leaving incoming tenants with a clean house, the idea of house maintenance may actually catch on in the ghetto, and you may be lucky enough to move into a house which is equally as clean.

Use newspaper, towels, or other soft cloth to cushion breakable stuff. Use packing material to keep the load from shifting in your vehicle. Use newspaper only on surfaces that can be cleaned like glass and glazed dishware.

Mark boxes clearly, whether with "Fragile, This Side Up," "Bob's room," or "Kitchen stuff." If you forget this important step, have fun with the mystery box: what was this before it smashed? whose was it? why is it here now?

Packing it in

Start collecting strong, clean boxes of different sizes (small and medium-sized are best). Contact corner stores and hookstores to find out when their next delivery is expected and if you can pick up some boxes on that day.

Invest in a roll of packing tape. Re-seal box bottoms before filling and securely seal tops when finished. Overfilled boxes don't stack well; underfilled boxes collapse if others are stacked on top. Either way, breakables live up to their name.

Use newspaper, towels, or other soft cloth to cushion breakable stuff. Use packing material to keep the load from shifting in your vehicle. Use newspaper only on surfaces that can be cleaned like glass and glazed dishware.

Mark boxes clearly, whether with "Fragile, This Side Up," "Bob's room," or "Kitchen stuff." If you forget this important step, have fun with the mystery box: what was this before it smashed? whose was it? why is it here now?

While this undoubtedly does not document the entire range of nauseating cleaning jobs you will encounter when moving out, it is a start. Remember, if you start the ball rolling by leaving incoming tenants with a clean house, the idea of house maintenance may actually catch on in the ghetto, and you may be lucky enough to move into a house which is equally as clean.

can't fit them in the van. If you can lift, the bottom holds, boxes.

Don't use your Blue Box—it is to stay with the house!

Garbage bags are the last and louisiest resort. They tear, they shift in the truck, they have no support, and every year someone mistakenly puts a garbage bag of "good stuff" at the curb, and drives a bag of household waste to somewhere like Ottawa. There's already enough waste in Ottawa.

Vacuum carpets before you roll them up—as tightly as reasonable—for moving. Secure them with cord or tape.

Get a start on your packing now. Use a five-minute (ha!) study break to pack up stuff you won't be needing between now and when you move.

In sorting through your possessions, identify things you don't want or just don't use. It may have a bit of wear and tear, but could someone else use it? There are many people and places that would welcome used furniture, clothing, pots, pans, household goods, curtains, etc. Find a new home for your stuff!

Thanks to Nancy Tatham from the Town-Gown Liaison Office for writing this week's Feature. If you have any questions about the moving process, feel free to contact the office at 545-6745.

LITERARY LAPSES

Amon at Dawn

Her voice,
ripe peaches, abou-surra oranges, melodies
and all good things to you brings.
Misty, lazy, breezy mornings on the Nile, greet her arrival with reverence and religious absorption.
serene and mysterious like Amon,
she extends a henna-ed hand,
to her loving subjects!

Gamal Gulaid

I wonder who you think you are golden mythic ray of light fire for me to read by for you to shine in my eyes burn holes in my retinas or set flames to my eyebrows.
Whichever comes first.

Court jester with your bedroom smile inhaling a harmonica or a cigarette or singing
that song that you wrote with my name in it
with verses that cannot rhyme

Your room smells like candle wax and pages of sheet music

a Margaret Atwood novel about a woman who will not eat that you will not read has been placed on top of your stereo

where you know I will see it.

I know you don't know when my birthday is or my parents' first names or that my cat just died or that my brother lives in Vancouver and he just turned twenty-three.

Biblical dust
blankets the television and your computer screen
I know you know
that I will not clean up after you.

I know you know
the words that I do not have to speak

but wish I were able to.

Kim Downey

The Popcorn War

When the time-bomb fell,
the books were scattered,
the clocks had all stopped ticking,
and the vacuum cleaner
had fallen drunkenly
among the ashes.
That was the day we ate popcorn together and pretended we didn't exist.
We were closest, when we acted like fools.

Adrienne Munro

Blackbird and Darkstar

I guess then it was just a SCREW, loose in my head,
rattling loose.
I always knew, why did I forget to tell myself?
Sure, take it out on me,
while I let you in and in is far,
so far.
Sceptical, my mom asks me, "Does free love exist?"
I guess so ... I say,
for me anyway.
For him it may have just been hate or revenge or nothing or even love ... not for me, for another -- lurking, in the thick mist of pain aft red eye rain.
It was probably just that 3 letter word, that seems to wrap itself round me like a million lettered word.
At the time and place, it may have been different.
It felt like heaven was shooting, streaming showers of silver stars through my hair and breast
...all the rest
...the Best, Ever.
Like Blackbird singing in the dead of night.
but never again,
it can't fit in,
to this time and place.
Even though I really like you, I've got some sorting out to do.
I've got to learn to protect myself too.
Men are dangerous.
Free love is expensive.
I still can't decide if it's worth it.

Katie Triggs

Carmina...

Cynicism into faith

In Generation X, one of Douglas Coupland's characters says that it's not healthy to live life as a succession of isolated little cool moments. Either our lives become stories, or there's just no way to get through them. When we see our lives as stories, we see them as having a point, a direction, perhaps even a moral. But as a character in Life After God observes, when we can't figure out what our particular story is we feel lost somehow.

Life After God is a collection of eight short stories, each one about someone who has become lost. The title of this book suggests that what these characters have in common is that they are part of "the first generation raised without God," but the opening story of Life After God provides an even more apt epi-

• Life After God • Pocket Books •
$20.00 • 360 teeny pgs •

The stories in this collection do not stand in contrast to each other. All involve a different Coupland-like narrator: always a single West Coast man in his early thirties. The themes of the stories have similarly subtle borders. "My Hotel Year," "Things That Fly," and "Gettysburg" are all about being unloved when you have love to give. "Patty Hears" and "1,000 Years (Life After God)" are both about remembering the past through the present. Specific plots prove to be unimportant in Life After God. Throughout the book, Coupland is writing about loss, memory and reevaluation. He is writing about mysterious lumps; the mental illness of friends; the actual death of loved ones — all of life's painful gifts. He is also writing about life's small points of beauty, such as birds: What act of goodness did we as humans once commit to deserve such kindness from God?

In this book, Coupland has set aside his earlier MTV intensity. The blurb on the cover jacket suggests that Coupland has "unplugged" from his previous style." This claim is more true than the too-clever phrasing would have led me to believe. Coupland describes Life After God as "an exercise in reduction." He even asks that the reader remove the book's neon jacket before beginning, so that no one will forget that this "oddly retro" object is a book — "no CD ROM; no headphones." Although Coupland has not abandoned his talent for memorable and moving images, the attitudes which characterized Generation X and Shampoo Planet are muted. The narrator of "1000 Years" muses that just maybe it is [the] small silent moments which are the true story-making events of our lives. Another character seems to speak for Coupland: I'm trying to escape from ironic hell: Cynicism into faith; randomness into clarity; worry into devotion. He then adds, clarity would be so much easier if there weren't so many cheesy celebrities around. It is naive, I suppose, to regard every story written in the first person as autobiographical. Nonetheless, Life After God makes the distance between author and character fade. Coupland wrote these stories as small books for his friends, some time after the release of Shampoo Planet. He has said that in Life After God, "I'm creating and giving vent to different personas, or sort of sub-Dougs that live inside me." The stories are stirringly personal, almost confessional. Now thirty-two years old, Coupland writes in Life After God that beyond a certain age, sincerity ceases to feel pornographic. Perhaps describing Life After God as a collection of short stories is misleading. Somerset Maugham certainly would not have known what to make of this book. Coupland has divided each story into chapters that are often only two or three paragraphs long. Every few pages, he offers a simple line drawing that somehow relates to the text. This book reads like a journal that has been allowed to grow. Always unconventional, Coupland has made a treasure of a book.

→ TIM MITCHELL DID SUCH A PEERLESS JOB AS LITERARY LAPSES ASSISTANT THAT THEY'RE RETIRING THE POSITION.

A review copy of Coupland's book was provided courtesy of Printed Passage Books.

5 minutes before bed

a look at what Queen's reads

SARAH MACWHIRTER
JOURNAL EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
1993-1994

Just Finished

Anna Karenina
Leo Tolstoy

"I spent all year reading it. Tolstoy captures in words experiences that everybody recognizes, but can never articulate."

A Favourite

Tuck Everlasting
Natalie Babbitt

"It's about a little girl who meets a family that has discovered the secret of eternal life. This sounds so corny, but I liked it because it's heartwarming. It's a good story. When you're a kid you want to read something that can take you into your own imaginary world. There's so much potential with someone who's alive forever. There are so many other potential stories in this one for your own imagination."

JEFF GRAY
JOURNAL EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
1994-95

Just Finished

Kicking Tomorrow
Daniel Richler

"Drugs and teenage rebellion. This book was a little annoying, but it had its moments."

A Favourite

National Audubon Society's Handguide to North American Mammals

"Fascinating reading. You can track little squirrels. You can tell different types of squirrel shit. I read the whole thing because I went on a trip to Algonquin Park last summer, and I wanted to be able to tell if there was a bear in the area. I realized after reading the book that you don't need a book to tell that a bear's around."

Composition

There are hands that sculpt me at night.

They are large and warm, and in the blind of the dark they cup my hipbones and guide my dreams (works-in-progress). Their deft fingers mold my skin, leaving their hot prints; branding me for their own. The sinews of my neck are carved by these hands, clenching, plying vulnerable thin; waiting for me to be born, slipping over and over over my body, oblivious in sleep.

The hands lick away my sac; like a mare's tongue on her foal, weak and bleary with birth, they coax me awake, hoping that their myriad tongues and patient probings will give me breath.

Diana C.

Short Grain Contest

Grain magazine is having a creative writing contest! There are two categories: (1) Postcard story: A work of narrative fiction in 500 words or less. (2) Prose Poem: A lyric poem written as a prose paragraph(s) in 500 words or less.

The entry fee is $20, but that gets you a four-issue (one year) subscription to Grain.

First prize is $250; second prize is $150; third prize is $100. All winning entries will be published.

Send entries to Short Grain Contest, Box 1154, Regina SK, S4P 3B4 by April 30th, 1994.

Printed Passage Books Ltd
Manufacturing Consent
Noam Chomsky and the Media

edited by M. Ackbar
paperback $19.99

comes complete with
Philosopher "All-Star" Trading Cards

Printed Passage Books
50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

WORK, WORK, WORK, QPI, WORK, WORK, BEER, WORK, WORK, WORK, WORK, LOTSA BEER, WORK, WORK, SUNDAY NIGHT MOVIES, WORK, WORK, WORK, WORK, THE QPI, WORK, GREAT FOOD, WORK, WORK, WORK, QPI, WORK, WORK, LIVE ENTERTAINMENT FRIDAY AFTERNOON - 4PM, WORK

READ BETWEEN THE LINES

'CAUSE ALL WORK AND NO PLAY MAKES YOU A...

RELAX ON A COUCH, WORK, WORK, WORK, THE QP, WORK, HOT SPECIAL, WORK, WORK, WORK, 3 OZ. DRINKS, WORK, TUESDAY TRIVIA, WORK, WORK, RICHARD GOGUEN & TODD McRAE - LIVE TODAY!, WORK, WORK, THE QP ROCKS!, WORK, WORK, WORK, CONVERSATION PLACE, WORK, WORK, MOOSEHEAD, WORK, WORK, ..PUT IT ALL OFF AT THE QPI!

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

upcoming events

MARCH 28TH

THE DIRTY BIRDS

APRIL 4TH
QUEEN'S JAZZ ENSEMBLE

APRIL 5th DJ JENN
ALTERNATIVE NIGHT

THIS WEEKEND AT CLARK

Friday Afternoon
Ritual

with the Simpsons and DJ Archie

FUBAR
FRIDAY NIGHT

with DJ Liso

PSYCHO PSATURDAY

featuring the band

EASY ACCESS

with DJ Joey doing the between-set tunes

AND DDN'T FDRGET THIS MDNDAY'S J-SECTIDN SMDKER WITH J-ALUMNUS DJ JDEY AND TUESDAY'S SCIENCE 96 SUMMER SMDKER WITH DJ RYAN AND SCAVENGER HUNT JUDGING

clark hall pub
unfknblvbl.!

Colour Night

Remember Colour Night in Black and White! Photographs available through The Journal Photo Service.

Photography by Sheldon Bradshaw

1994

An die Musik
The Painter's Music
The Musician's Art

Playing Music by:

BEETHOVEN - Quartet for Piano & strings in Eb Major

SCHUBERT - Trio for violin, viola & cello in F Major

MOZART - Quartet for oboe & strings in F Major

BACH - Fugue in F Minor for violin, viola & cello

Composers who inspired contemporary artists
Helen Frankenthaler, David Hockney, Ken Noland
and Robert Motherwell

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

FRIDAY 25 MARCH 8PM GRANT HALL
$20 Adult / $8 Children (all prices plus GST)

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

there will be an
Open Forum
regarding Surface
on

Monday, March 28th at 11:30

at
The Red Room, Kingston Hall

The Referendum Question that all Arts & Science students are eligible to vote on, is as follows:

Do you agree to a $2.00 opt-outable fee for the ASUS newspaper, Surface, to be added to the present Arts & Science Undergraduate Society student interest fee.

The Referendum will take place on March 29th and 30th, in conjunction with the AMS Referendum.

Looking For The Competitive Edge?

For little more than the cost of a term at home you could

Study Abroad!

Queen's International Study
Centre,

Herstmonceux Castle

Are you a second, third or fourth year student wondering what lies beyond graduation? Want to make your university degree more marketable?

Don't Miss This Opportunity!

$6800 (includes tuition, fees, room, board and field trips)

- Learn about the EEC, GATT and other international agreements which affect your future.
- Study art, languages and cultures of selected European countries. Visit their galleries, monuments, and theatres for a first hand look.
- Experience first hand the history and social fabric of Great Britain that only living in a country can teach.

AND

Earn Queen's credits toward your degree

International Study Centre, Herstmonceux Castle, East Sussex, England

This program, concentrating on European Area Studies,
may make the difference for you!

Want To Know More?

To find out more or to obtain an application package see our representative in:

Mackintosh-Corry
Student Street

Monday to Friday until the end of March
or call 545-2815

MOVING IN MAY?

Don't know what to do with the stuff you've collected over the year? Leaving a couch behind? If you can't give it away or trade it, don't abandon in! Here's what to do with it ...

LARGE ARTICLES (ie. furniture, appliances, etc.)
can be disposed of at no charge at the Laidlaw Transfer Station, 398 Dalton Avenue at the these dates:

April 25 - May 21, 1994

Manday - Friday, 8am-4pm

Saturday, 8am-3pm

HAZARDOUS WASTES (batteries, paint, oil propane cylinders for BBQs) can be dropped off at these times at no charge:

Every Thursday 9am-3pm

Secand Saturday of each month.

You are responsible for arranging transportation for your items to the transfer station. Pair up with a friend, and book your vehicle early.

The City of Kingston and the AMS support and encourage the concept of REUSE.

Contact the City of Kingston at 542-7474 or the Communications Commission at 545-2732 for more information.

RAINBOW DAY

Be an Ally - show your support for your LESBIAN GAY AND BISEXUAL FRIENDS!

Wear a Rainbow Ribbon!

Coming March 30th to Mac-Corry and the JDUC - also Watch for our Roving Ribbon Teams!

Brought to you by the members of LGBIC - the Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Issues Committee

The following positions are now available in the Internal Affairs Commission for the 94-95 academic year:

Deputy Operations; 2 Clubs Managers; Chief Returning Officer; Deputy Returning Officer; Judicial Committee Chair (currently in second year law); Deputy Chair (currently in first year law); Judicial Committee Members; Judicial Committee Clerk; Chief Prosecutor (currently in second year law); 2 Deputy Prosecutors (currently in first or second year law); Prosecutors Clerk.

Applications are available now at the AMS Office and are due at 4:00pm on March 25, 1994. For more information please contact Dean Campbell in the Internal Affairs Office. 545-2725.

THE AMS ENCOURAGES APPLICATIONS FROM PEOPLE OF COLOUR, PERSONS WITH A DISABILITY, INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS, FIRST NATIONS PEOPLE, WOMEN, LESBIANS, GAYS, BISEXUALS, FINANCIALLY CHALLENGED PERSONS, MATURE STUDENTS, AND FRANCOPHONES.

INTERVIEWS WILL BE POSTED BY 6PM, FRIDAY, MARCH 25

HEY CLUBS!

Be sure to have your applications in for:

① SPACE ALLOCATION WITHIN THE JDUC

- those who have space now or want space next year

② RE-RATIFICATION OF EXISTING CLUBS

All applications are available at the AMS Office and are due by April 8, 1994 at 4:00 pm.

Please feel free to contact Dean Campbell at the Internal Affairs Office (ext. 4815) if you have any questions.

Not A Commerce Student?

Are You Interested in Taking Commerce Courses Next Year?

HERE'S HOW

A certain number of commerce courses are open to undergraduate students in other faculties; however the space in these courses is limited. In order to most equitably allocate these spaces to students, the School of Business uses a balloting system for preregistration.

To preregister for any commerce course, you must complete a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot. Preliminary timetables will be available with the ballots; however, courses, sections and slots are subject to change without notice.

Applied Science students may pick up ballots from their discipline offices, and students from all other faculties may pick up ballots in the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120.)

All completed ballots must be returned to the Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120) by 4:00 p.m., Monday, March 28.

Forms will be processed according to the priorities assigned by your faculty; graduating students generally receive priority over all other students. You cannot ballot for courses for which you do not have prerequisites. If you are successful in the balloting procedure, your commerce course(s) will be pre-printed on your registration form in September.

ATTENTION ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS

You cannot pre-register or ballot for commerce courses on an Arts and Science preregistration form. You must use a School of Business Pre-Registration Ballot.

QUESTIONS?

Please see Mrs. Moss, Undergraduate Office, School of Business (Dunning Hall, Room 120)

WHAT'S UP?

Pick up What's Up forms at the AMS office. Lower JSUC. Submission for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brings it to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

MARCH

ONE MORE What's Up to go!

This Week

Friday, March 25

• ARTS/SCI '96 Smoker. The last bash, just for the hell of it smoker. Door open at 8. Tonight at Girby's.

• The Queen's Association for Baha'i Studies has invited Mr. Mehran Nakhjavani, an internationally-renowned economist from McGill University, to speak to a general audience on the subject. Internationalization of Our World Economy: Can it prevent the extremes of wealth and poverty? at Dupuis Hall, 7:30 pm.

• A fascinating musical experience will be offered by violinist Andrew Dawes and An Die Musik at 8 p.m. in Grant Hall, University Ave. exploring music of significance in the lives and works of painters, Helen Frankenthaler, David Hockney, Robert Motherwell and Kenneth Noland. The programme for this performance is Beethoven's Quartet for piano 7 Strings in E Flat, Mozart's Quartets in F major and E Flat major, Schubert's Trio in B Flat and Mozart's arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in F Minor.

For further information please contact the Performing Arts Office, 545-2557.

Saturday, March 26

• The QCSA-QSEAC Graduation Semi-formal will be held at Mino's Village Restaurant. Come out and have a blast before Finals! Transportation will be provided. "For dance only" tickets, contact Ray 549-2595.

• "Chai and Samosa Smoker" Brought to you by the Queen's Indian Students Association on March 26 at 8 p.m. in the Red Room at Kingston Hall. For tickets, call Aovind at 531-4472. $4.00 for members, $5.00 for non-members. Ticket price includes refreshments!!!

Tuesday, March 29

• "Voices On Violence": Public forum on the decisions to release incarcerated repeat, dangerous and sexual offenders.

Dunning Auditorium, 7 pm. Panel members: National Parole Board, Correctional Service of Canada, Peter Milliken (Liberal M.P.) Keynote Address by Mrs. Priscilla DeVilliers, Executive Director of CAUEAT.

Wednesday, March 30

• The Queen's French Centre presents "Cyrano de Bergerac" by Jean-Paul Rappeneau (1990) with Gerard Depardieu Wednesday March 30 at 7 pm at Dupuis Hall. Admission Free. For info., 545-2534.

Thursday, March 31

• OPIRG - Kingston presents a workshop on Alternative Communities. Individuals who are involved with communes and co-ops will discuss their types of communities 3rd floor Common Room at the JDUC. For more information, please call 549-0066.

Fill Us In

One of the questions we have been asked through the Fill Us In forms is "what is the Infobank and what can it do for me?". We thought that this week we would give you a short spotlight.... The Infobank is a service run by the AMS communications commission to act as a permanent information resource centre. Located in the Lower Ceiling of the JDUC, the Infobank is open weekdays from 9 until 5. A group of trained, friendly volunteers are always happy to answer any questions regarding Queen's life. If they don't know the answer they will know where to find it. Many people are also not aware that the Infobank is the location of the Queen's Lost and Found. From building locations, to where to get help, to upcoming events, the Infobank provides a font of useful information. Drop by anytime to ask questions or to pick up any of the pamphlets they provide regarding Queen's and Kingston events and services!

Feature

Mass: 3 pm, Easter Vigil-Saturday: 8 pm, Sunday Mass: 11 am. Note: Stations of the Cross on Good Friday will be at Newman House, 192 Frontenac St. at 7:30 pm. Everyone Welcome!!

• Now accepting applications from those interested in volunteering this summer at the Birth Control Centre. Applications can be picked up at the Birth Control Centre, 51 Queen's Cres. (next to Vic Hall)

• Queen's Catholic Chaplaincy invites you to attend the Easter Weekend Services. Services will be held in Dunning Auditorium. Holy Thursday Mass: 8 pm, Good Friday

AMS SPRING REFERNDUM POLLING STATIONS

STATION	TUES. MARCH 29	WED. MARCH 30
Mac-Corry	10:00-7:00	10:00-7:00
Ellis	11:00-4:00	11:00-4:00
Stirling	11:00-4:00	-----
Dunning	11:00-3:00	11:00-3:00
Phys. Ed Centre	10:00-5:00	10:00-5:00
Kingston	-----	11:00-3:00
West Campus	10:00-6:30	10:00-6:30
Douglas	10:00-7:00	10:00-7:00
Botterell	-----	10:00-4:00
Ban Righ	4:30-6:30	4:30-6:30
Leonard	4:30-6:30	4:30-6:30
Brockington	4:30-6:30	4:30-6:30
Macdonald	10:00-4:00	-----
Jeffery	-----	10:00-4:00
Humphrey	10:00-4:00	-----
JDUC	10:00-4:00	10:00-4:00
Ontario	11:00-4:00	-----
Walter Light	-----	11:00-4:00

COME OUT AND EXCERCISE YOUR VOTE

ENTERTAINMENT

Apocalypse Now:

The Final Battle

FAT SPIDER, LOS SEAMONSTERS, AND YELLOWBELLY
ALFIE'S
BY ASH BAKER

Last Tuesday Alfie played host to the final installment of that annual festival of good music and bad clothes, The QEA's Battle Of The Bands. The bat was slow to fill up, but by about 10 o'clock there were a goodly number of people there, all keen to see the three finalists vie for fabulous prizes and undying adoration.

The first band on were Fat Spider, sounding like they haven't listened to the radio since 1976. Their set consisted mostly of variations on a rather hackneyed the lead guitarist. What was announced as "a slower song" ended up sounding a bit like The Tragically Hip—a welcome change from the endless funk-rock.

The lead vocals were clear and strong, though the singer's stage manner reminded this reviewer a bit of Billy Crystal, as Miracle Max, fronting a rock band. The guitarists were both extremely competent, although the solos could have been a bit more fluid and less planned. The rhythm section was good too: the bassist put out a solid, funky groove, and the drumming was inventive and tight. If there can be any criticism of Fat Spider's musicianship, it is that everything sounded a little too rehearsed. The studios,

Some simpler changes and a bit more improvisation would have done wonders for the band's sound.

Next on were Los Seamonsters, playing what they describe as "guitar pop." Los Seamonsters is a simple band playing simple songs, that seem to be influenced in about equal measure by the Ramones, Buddy Holly, The Asexuals, and Pet Shop Boys. They are a stripped-down three-piece band with simple, straightforward bass, competent, unflashy drumming, and lots of open chords on the guitar. Having recently misplaced their bassist, Mike O'Neill from The Inbreds filled in for the night. Not having known the songs for long, he had words for choruses and some bass passages written on sheets of paper at his feet, beside the set-list—it was really rather endearing to see him look studiously down whenever he sang a chorus. These simple ingredients and Mike's relative unfamiliarity with the songs might have spelled disaster, but Los Seamonsters turned in a fine set. The big, crisp tone of Mike's bass is a perfect foil for Billy Death's guitar, and Harry Hollywood's drumming (though unspectacular) compliments the songs ideally.

The songs were short, punchy and simple, with good melodies and fine playing. Although only a trio (or perhaps because of it), the sound seemed the biggest of any of the night's bands, and the mix was perfect. Good, basic, danceable pop songs, fine melodies and the occasional novel feature (on "Only A Car" the bass got closer to the chordal work Mike does with The Inbreds, and the second last song had some nice chorused guitar and <gasp> a solo) gave the set something for everyone. In addition, Billy's somewhat Gord Downie-esque stage manner, and the band's openness and honesty seemed to reach the audience. By the end of the set about 20 people were dancing, and good vibes were everywhere.

Yellowbelly gives us a glimpse of Armageddon DEREK YARNELL

By this point, though the "good music" side of the equation had been adequately filled, the "bad clothes" part was sadly lacking. All this changed with the gradual entrance of Yellowbelly. After some frantic gesturing at the DJ, a sort of Teutonic Rap-dance record started playing. Yellowbelly's drummer came on stage, dressed like, well, a geek, with about twenty-two pens in his breast pocket, and horn-rimmed glasses held together with tape in the middle. He started haranguing the mildly bewildered crowd over the noise of the record, then went behind the drum kit and started playing along with it (very well, too). Then the rest of the band trickled on. They were sensibly dressed, but the drummer more than evened the score. An interesting entrance, by any standards.

Yellowbelly play what they describe as "apocalyptic rock," and they play it quite well. Unfortunately, they left this reviewer somewhat unimpressed. The guitars were too low in the mix, and what could be heard emerged as more fuzz and distortion than anything else. Yellowbelly's vocals were weak, and were overpowered by the rhythm section. The songs are simple, but don't seem to differ much, and they lack the strong melodies that simple changes need to be successful. The time changes in some songs were just too jarring to be successful.

On the whole, Yellowbelly is rather a curate's egg—parts of it are excellent. The drummer, aside from being very funny and having the strongest stage presence in the band (even behind his kit), is excellent, and his work was uniformly great, if a little loud. The bassist was good too, and the rhythm section seem very tight. There were some tasty, if stock, guitar solos, and some good slap bass. There was even a trombone solo by the polymathic drummer. Occasionally, a song would begin with the two women in the band singing together, to a gentle guitar accompaniment—it made a nice change from the usual din. The band's style, though not easy on the ear, and certainly not to some tastes, is their own. The Alfie's crowd certainly liked Yellowbelly—the dance-floor, if not actually packed, was certainly full, and the cheers were the loudest of those for any band.

In the end, the judging panel of A&R people and DJs gave the nod to Yellowbelly over Los Seamonsters and Fat Spider. Yellowbelly now join their PF labelmates, The Inbreds, amongst the hallowed ranks of winners of the Battle of the Bands.

Fat Spider is up in arms during the final battle DEREK YARNELL

theme: a chattering, funky, bass-driven verse, giving way to a more conventional rock chorus, with lots of time and key changes throughout. The songs were complex and skillfully arranged, but, frankly, sounded uninspired. There was very little variation from the set pattern, and that pattern was a somewhat pedestrian one.

That aside, however, it must be said that Fat Spider are formidable musicians. Almost all the songs had lightning time changes which were always executed with flawless fluidity. Songs would flow into each other without any pause, and the changes were always immaculate. There were nice touches throughout—a harmonic solo, some good harmony guitar leads, unexpected backbeat drum fills, a bit of slap bass, some jittery solo grandstanding from carefully planned solos and the changes that had clearly been rehearsed until the band knew them backwards, conspired to remove a good deal of spontaneity from the performance.

Billy Death of Los Seamonsters kisses the mic DEREK YARNELL

JUNKHOUSE
STRAYS
EPIC/SONY MUSIC

Hailing from the Hammer (that's Hamilton for the vernacularly challenged), Junkhouse have already achieved a degree of renown with their lead single "Out of My Head." Blessed with a repetitively simple but catchy riff, the easiest way to remember this song is by the video which prominently features the unsavoury appearance of the band members as they drive aimlessly around the countryside and (wow, what a novel concept) blow up a car at the end of their video (actually, they reverse the film and implode said car: same difference.)

The rest of Strays is based around the same urban-edged blues-based lyrics and riffing of "Out of My Head." Yet, it is too easy to simply label Junkhouse as a "working-class" rock band. At various stages Junkhouse show a willingness to experiment musically, employing wah-wah guitar, weaving harmonies, including some from Lisa Germano, and once paring the instrumentation down to just an acoustic guitar. The band's strength lies in its lyrics; its songs are full of religious imagery, erudite references and probing self-examination. On "Gimme the Love," lead singer (and main song-writer) Tom Wilson sings: Gimme Beckett and Dylan Thomas/Gimme books and gimme promise. While "Praying For the Rain" takes what could be the simple farmer's lament a

My main criticism against Junkhouse is that despite their occasional musical experimentation, they essentially have only one type of song; and there is only so far you can take gritty driving rhythms. Junkhouse's sound certainly reflects the city of their origin, but perhaps its time these boys put the hammer to Hamilton.

Rob Furse
Rating B-

SOUNDGARDEN
SUPERUNKNOWN
A&M

Lumped in with the Seattle grunge scene, Soundgarden would, till now, have been more aptly thought of as a metal band, their dense, riff heavy music having more in common with Black Sabbath than the vocally driven music of Nirvana or Pearl Jam.

These metal leanings were particularly evident on 1992's Badmotorfinger, which successfully pushed the limits of commercial acceptability with uncompromising singles such as "Jesus Christ Pose" and "Rusty Cage."

With their latest release, Superunknown, Soundgarden combines the intensity of Badmotorfinger with a new melodic sensibility.

The lead single "Spoonman" gives a good indication of what this album has to offer as a whole. Infused with a relentlessly driving riff, "Spoonman" strays from the deliberate discord of "Jesus Christ Pose" and delivers something new for the band: an almost hummable tune.

THERE'S A RIOT GOIN' ON...

"My Wave," also falls into the category of "ear candy" as Chris Cornell offers us a juicy chorus layered on top of Kim Thayil's circular guitar groove.

Lyrical, Superunknown is given to moments of introspection, but retains Soundgarden's outspoken social conscious.

Instead of questioning the motives and actions of society, "Fell on Black Days" examines the possibility if a personal apocalypse: Whatsoever I have feared has / come to life...How would I know! that this could be / my fate.

The track, "Superunknown," contains the leitmotif for Soundgarden, both lyrically and musically. Raw with minor key resonances, the song asks us to strip away the pretensions we all use to protect ourselves and face our reality: Get yourself afraid / Get yourself alone / Get yourself contained / Get yourself controlled. Expanding on the concept of "Jesus Christ Pose" which attacks the use of martyrdom for political purposes. Chris Cornell now asks us to deal honestly with the possibilities and limitations of life in the superunknown.

A belief in facing the truth is a simple concept on which to base a personal ethos, a band, or even an album. But simple as it may be, how many of us have yet to accomplish this?

Rob Furse
Rating A

THE MAHONES
DRAGGIN' THE DAYS
KINETIC RECORDS

There are times perhaps, when one feels like saving the world; for this we have a glut of music—Bruce Cockburn, R.E.M. etc. etc. Some days, however, one's time may be best spent enjoying the company of others and a beverage or two. To aid in creating an atmosphere best suited to this frivolity, The Mahones', first major label release, Draggin' the Days, is a perfect musical choice. Whether your ancestors hail from Ireland or parts elsewhere, this Kingston band knows how to put a spring in the heaviest of steps.

I may be one of the few people who haven't seen The Mahones live—no fault of theirs—but I hear that their live shows are everything those of an Irish band should be: loud energetic, and soured. The group has done an admirable job of capturing that energy onto the album, especially considering it is their first effort. Their sound is clean and pure as is befitting instruments like the mandolin and whistle—no need for a stack of Marshall amps here.

By the time I finished my first listen to Draggin' the Days, I was dying for a pint, which is the major side-effect of listening to Irish music. Of course, if the music doesn't influence your thirst, the lyrics certainly will. The joys and floor-grasping consequences of drink are finely documented on this album. Not surprisingly, the small crunches, this only belied their enthusiasm and vigor. The second movement was the highlight of this quartet, as the four some furnished the melodramatic style with potent contrasts between a dark silky mood and a rhythmically punctuated liveliness. The third movement was sentimental, simple, and beautiful, but not cloying; then the long colours and rounded cadences of this Adagio led into the string-crossing squiggles and tearing climaxes of the last movement.

All throughout the concert, the quartet demonstrated how visually interesting a quartet can be, with dramatic body language. As well, the use of silences was thrilling and powerful, which is a remarkable feat for a group that builds its career on sound! There were admittedly a few problems with cleanliness from the violins and grainy moments of tone in the Mozart, but the audience was too dazzled by the musical sculpture and sheer eloquence of the prize-winning Colorado Quartet to be critical.

Shirley MacLaine gets some special protection from Nicolas Cage.

most obvious parallel is to that of The Pogues. Well, duh—both band's names come from the same naughty Gaelic phrase. I expect The Mahones welcome the comparison anyway.

Like Shane MacGowan, ex-lead singer of The Pogues, The Mahones' Fintan McConnell is credited with most of Draggin' the Days songs. The rest of The Mahones: Andrew Brown (whistles and accordion) Ger O'Sullivan (mandolin and guitars), Mauto Sepe (drums) and Owen Warnica (bass and harmonical) all play their instruments with skill and dexterity. "Mahones Medley" illustrates this to a high degree, as I found it terribly difficult to sit still long enough to write this while the album was playing.

There is also a Pogue-ish feel on Mahones' tunes like "Back Home," a simple love song that reminds me of the MacGowan-penned "The Broad Majestic Shannon," off 1988's If I Should Fall From the Grace of God. Draggin' the Days lead track, "A Drunken Night in Dublin," also proves how close these two bands can be.

Still, The Mahones have developed their own sound beyond your basic jigs and reels: the title track is a good example of the marrying of traditional instruments with a North American feel. As is "Star of the County Down"—an old tune with just a bit of distorted guitar. "London" is perfectly placed for that inevitable time of night when the whisky bores a hole in your heart and you feel like turning to the stranger beside you and confessing your undying friendship—just before losing consciousness.

In the end, if you've a few extra quid in your pocket, I strongly advise you to pick up Draggin' the Days; not only to support a well-deserving local band, but to keep the spirit of Celtic music alive in a time when over-produced mainstream sludge pervades our eardrums.

Bill Hunt
Rating A

COLORADO STRING QUARTET
GRANT HALL
BY FIONA VANCE

Quartet on the rampage

After being subjected to the trials of the MBA Formal, the proud yellow walls of Grant Hall were relieved to soak up the sounds of the Colorado String Quartet, who appeared Sunday afternoon to a full house with a charismatic and polished performance.

This all-female quartet—Julie Rosenfeld and Deborah Redding on violins, Francesca Martin Sulos on viola, Diane Chaplin on cello—treated us to one of their 100 annual concerts in a program of Mozart, Shostakovich, and Mendelssohn. They are one of the truly tuned ensembles of the decade, one blended unit instead of four soloists.

As Julie Rosenfeld has remarked, "string quartets let each person sound the way they want to in solo passages and then come back and blend in with the group" (Strad magazine). Balancing individual expression with the oneness of ensemble music is tricky, but the Colorado Quartet turned balance into one of their most remarkable features among many.

From the opening pulses of the lone cello in the Mozart "Dissonance" Quartet K. 465 to the triumphant roll of Mendelssohn's Quartet in F minor, Op. 80, the performance was exciting and fervent. Mozart was miles ahead of his time, and he toyed with dissonance in this mesmerizing quartet long before dissonance was popular. The cellist began the quartet with a look of pain, eyes closed, and the other three musicians swiftly followed cue and supported the intensity in sublime development.

In the second movement, an Andante cantabile, the quartet in involving the passing of the motif around the instruments was seamless; and the final movement's slithering minor sections provided an artful transition into gorgeous tones of the cello in the first movement leaped into the violent strokes and passionate attacks of the second Allegro furioso, increasing my own breathing rate, even as a listener.

In the third movement, a passacaglia, the cello repeats the theme eleven times, while the others weave and harmonize, before the first violin takes over. Through creepy unisons and plaintive non-vibrato streams in the last movements beneath the first violin's romping pizzicato, the quartet achieved amazing effectiveness of sonority in the Shostakovich.

The second half of this brilliant and very high-calibre concert took the shape of Mendelssohn's F-minor Quartet, beginning dramatically in the opening movement with flamboyant accents sprouting into a marvellous melody. Though the players became a little too zealous for their instruments, resulting in a few

Tess Shouldn't be Guarded

GUARDING TESS
DIRECTED BY HUGH WILSON
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX
BY GREG SMITH

She likes the opera, he likes Mr. Ed. She breaks the rules, he's a control freak. She's old and eccentric, he's young and straight-laced. Tess and Douglas are the prototypical odd couple, whose oddness, unfortunately, is overwhelmed by a dullness that makes Guarding Tess a difficult film to endure.

It's too bad, because Guarding Tess certainly has all the right parts. Nicholas Cage is the special agent in charge: Douglas Chesnic, who has just been coaxed into returning to "the worst assignment there is in the service." That assignment is guarding widowed ex-First Lady Tess Carlisle, played by Shirley MacLaine. Agent Dougie wants to regain control over his roguish protector, who plays by her own rules and just wants to be left alone to reminisce about her glory years in the White House. Expecting rockets and fireworks? Try blanks and duds.

Watching Guarding Tess unfold is a practice in patience. Amid inexplicable stretches of nothing, plotlines are phantoms that suddenly appear, and then disappear just as quickly. Tess has an inoperable brain tumour, but it's only hinted at twice, then dropped. A Presidential visit becomes the film's focus, and is half-heartedly built-up, until a fax arrives cancelling the event and any interest in this drag-ass story. The mandatory kidnapping of Tess (as if it wasn't going to happen) in the film's final minutes seems to have been tacked on out of duty. Something had to happen.

Even the formidable leads lack their usual vitality. The quirky Cage, who proved he could handle comedy in Honey-moon in Vegas, struggles through 98 cold and laughless minutes, perhaps because his facial expression, a mixture of stress and arrogance, barely changes the entire film. Cage is obviously more attuned to characters who are wild at heart. MacLaine fares slightly better, well-cast as the sharp-tongued Tess, though held back by a spattering and repetitive script.

Those weaknesses in the script manifest themselves in the form of desperation, burying many of the comic and dramatic moments in artificiality. As Douglas leaves to find Tess, he is confronted by her choked-up secretary, who mourns, "She hired me...when others wouldn't." The scene is played for tears, and it may have worked, if it weren't for the fact that the secretary was basically a non-entity prior to this scene. Lacking just motivation, the film anxiously gropes for sentiment.

Moments intended to be humorous have such clumsy setups that they fizzle long before the punchline—if there even is one. Take a scene in a grocery store, where two of Tess's secret agents do a price check on baby peas via walkie-talkie. The joke(?), so drawn-out and dull, ends when Tess impatiently walks away from one of the agents. "We've lost interest in baby peas," says the agent. At least someone can spot a dead joke.

When the humour does come, it tends to be unintentional. Seeing Shirley MacLaine sporting Bono-style, bug-eyed sunglasses (the song "Numb" mysteriously sprang to mind) was mildly amusing. So was the sight of David Graf (Tackleberry of Police Academy fame) practising his shot in a firing range. Yet, in tune with the rest of the film, Graf's character is flat, memorable and soda cracker bland. In Guarding Tess, even Tackleberry can't pull the trigger.

Shirley MacLaine gets some special protection from Nicolas Cage.

SHOULD QUEEN'S JOIN THE IVY LEAGUE?

Decide for yourself, as the JDUC Program Committee and the Queen's Debating Union present...

GREAT DEBATES

This house believes that Queen's should become a private institution.

At the conclusion of the debate, the House will entertain (and encourage!) speeches from the floor.

Wednesday, March 30, 8:00pm
Wallace Hall

NOTICE from THE STUDENT AWARDS OFFICE

LETTERS OF PERMISSION

If you are attending another University on a letter of permission for the Spring/Summer sessions, your OSAP application and your letter of permission MUST BE SUBMITTED TO THE AWARDS OFFICE AT QUEEN'S.

GRADUATING?

If you negotiated a CANADA STUDENT LOAN this year, then interest will be charged on the money you borrowed on the first day of the month after you leave Queen's.

NOT RETURNING IN SEPTEMBER?

If you do not return to Queen's in September, please ensure that the bank knows your current address. You will need to set up a repayment plan with your bank in October.

FUNDING FOR SPRING/SUMMER COURSES

OSAP applications and extension sheets are available in the Awards Office.

FUNDING FOR FALL/WINTER '94

94/95 OSAP applications are being mailed to your permanent address. After completing the pre-printed form, please bring it to the Awards Office. We will check it and forward it to the Ministry for you.

$$$ EMERGENCY $$$

If you encounter an emergency requiring financial assistance, or if you want to discuss your finances, please contact the Awards Office.

Live Music Weekend

The organizers of Kingston's largest charity event are pleased to announce that Live Music Lovers' Weekend will take place this weekend, March 26-27, at several downtown locations. The 1994 L.M.L.W. features the best in Kingston area Rock, Folk, Country, Jazz, Classical, Concert, High School, Choral and Children's musicians, both to assist local charitable agencies and to promote the many-faceted Kingston music scene. All proceeds from the event will be divided between the United Way and the Partners in Mission Food Bank. (Last year's event raised over $19,000 and 1200 items of food!).

One of the most popular bandstands, the Rock Bandstands, will be located at AJ's Hangar and Stages Nightclub—in the "hub." Organizers tackled the task of selecting 30 bands from a list of nearly 70 bands that applied to take part in the event. The schedule of bands reflects the quality and diversity of the K-town rock n' roll scene, which even includes a few dance/party bands. Various Queen's student bands will also be represented at the event, including The Inbreds.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26

BANDSTAND	LOCATION
Folk Bandstand 1 (Small Groups & Solos)	Holiday Inn - "The Slip" 1 Princess St.
Folk Bandstand 2 (Larger Groups)	The Wellington Pub 207 Wellington St.
Country Bandstand	The Silver Saddle Saloon Howard Johnson Hotel 237 Ontario St.
Jazz Bandstand	The Cocamo 178 Ontario St.
Classical Bandstand (Saturday Only)	The Grand Theatre 218 Princess St.
Highschool Bandstand (Saturday Only)	K.C.V.I. 235 Frontenac St.
Children's Bandstand (Saturday Only)	Theatre 5 370 King St. West
Choral Bandstand (Saturday Only)	First Baptist Church 110 Sydenham St.

Concert schedule

SUNDAY, MARCH 27

BANDSTAND	LOCATION
Folk Bandstand 1 (Small Groups & Solos)	Holiday Inn - "The Slip" 1 Princess St.
Folk Bandstand 2 (Larger Group)	The Wellington Pub 207 Wellington St.
Country Bandstand	The Silver Saddle Saloon Howard Johnson Hotel 237 Ontario St.
Jazz Bandstand	The Cocamo 178 Ontario St.
Rock Bandstand 1 (Sunday Only)	AJ's Hangar 393 Princess St.
Rock Bandstand 2 (Sunday Only)	Stages Nightclub 390 Princess St.

RADIO DAZE

Stay tuned to CFRC for a busy week of programming:

* Ask your sexual health and birth control questions on the Birth Control Centre Call-In, Monday night from 10-11 pm.

TOP 35

TCLC	Artist	Record	Label
1 3	Morrisey	The More You Ignore Me, I Closer I Get	Sire
2 24	ch	Betti-Cola	Mint
3 5*	The Rose Chronicles	Shiver	Netwerk
4 --	Frente!	Labour of Love	Mammoth
5 --	The Lowest of the Low	Hallucigenia	LSD
LOUD ROCK
1 4	Dio	Strange Highways	Reprise
FOLK/BLUES
1 2	Rawlins Cross	Reel 'N' Roll	Ground Swell
RAP
1 1	Gang Starr	Mass Appeal	Chrysalis
DANCE/SOUL/AMBIENT
1 2	Various Artists	Mondo Techno 1,0	Control Music
WORLDBEAT
1 1	Various Artists	X Marks The Spot	Caroline
JAZZ
1 4	McCoy Tyner Big Band	Journey	Birdology

A few moments of rapture

THE SECRET RAPTURE DIRECTED BY HOWARD DAVIES THE PRINCESS COURT CINEMA BY OWIN LAMBECK

On the surface, the British film The Secret Rapture is a very small and unassuming little picture. There are few characters, the plot moves slowly, and the music never swells dramatically in the Hollywood fashion we've become accustomed to. What makes this film enjoyable is seeing all of these constraints transcended by the remarkable performance of Juliet Stevenson. Although she has only appeared in five films (most notably Truly, Madly, Deeply) she had extensive television and theatrical success, and she delivers a subtle and engaging performance in this film. In fact, all of the actors are excellent in their supporting roles, and it is the believable interaction of complex characters that is the greatest asset of the movie.

Stevenson plays Isobel, who along with her sister Marion (Penelope Wilton) is faced with the task of dealing with Katherine, their recently deceased father's young alcoholic widow. Katherine, played by Joanne Whalley-Kilmer (whose film credits include The Singing Detective and Scandal) is excellent as the manipulative foil to the kind and generous Isobel. Katherine soon causes disruption in both Isobel's business and in her relationship with her lover, Patrick (Neil Pearson).

These three characters make up the core of the film's plot, which regrettably is somewhat weak. The conflicts are too simplistic and poorly defined, and as the film moves towards its conclusion, the characters become less realistic and more melodramatic. The central crisis in the film comes from Katherine convincing Patrick to betray Isobel's wishes and support an expansion of their mutually owned design firm. Making matters more complicated, the investors are none other than Isobel's sister Marion and her husband. This ill fated business deal starts the lives of the three main characters to begin unravelling.

However, at this point the film picks up some steam, becoming somewhat of a psychological thriller, with adultery, guns and a violent assault driving the plot towards its surprising conclusion. This change in mood is not without its cost, however, and the film's charm seems to wear thin once the plot thickens. The film seems to change genre halfway through, and what starts as a simple movie about the trials and tribulations of family commitments tries to become dark and suspenseful. Midway through the film, we are more interested in what is going on with Isobel emotionally, and, in adding formula plot devices, screenwriter David Hare proves that more is less.

Besides great performances and a weak script, the film offers sporadically excellent cinematography and a bold visual style. This is impressive, considering that the film was adapted from a stage play and is the feature film debut of director Howard Davies. Scenes such as Katherine ripping up all the feather pillows in the bedroom or even simple shots of cars on the freeway are filmed in an extremely visually pleasing way with high angles and flowing motion within a static frame. The film is also full of misty landscapes and beautiful cinematography. In this area too, however, the film sometimes seems to be lacking. For every amazing crane shot of two walking figures becoming lost in the landscape, there is an interior scene that is annoyingly dark. Or when a promising shot of Isobel riding down an open wire elevator being pursued by person on stairs that spiral around her begins, it is cut off much too quickly.

While flaws in both form and content of the film are abundant, the acting alone definitely makes it worthwhile, especially since good female leading roles remain all too rare in films. While the story is somewhat draggy yet melodramatic, the emotion and conflicts of the characters are vivid. Howard Davies is not an experienced film director, but he does have a considerable amount of credits. He manages to get a lot out of all of his actors, with Stevenson being, by far, the most noteworthy. While The Secret Rapture may not be as polished as many films, it delivers superior performances of passion and sincerity.

Isobel and Katherine share a rare moment of forgiveness in The Secret Rapture.

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes

Air conditioning

AM/FM stereo cassette

Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance

With your choice of two ways to take off.

SmartLease

$189

per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates

$750

bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

PONTIAC Performance TEAM

*Offers apply to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36-month lease for $189 per month (excluding tax, license, title, and dealer fees). A minimum down payment of $1,293 and $300 security deposit is required. Some mileage conditions apply. Freight $595. License, insurance and taxes not included. Offers apply to 1994 new or demonstrator models. Dealer price or lease may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offers apply to qualified credit customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they graduated or will graduate from a recognized post secondary institution during the period September 1, 1991 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Home charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

S. T. A. R.

Student Team on Alumni Relations

is now accepting applications for

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

JOIN ONE OF OUR MANY GREAT COMMITTEES!

Cake Service, Alumni Kids, Alumni Weekend, Career Buddy, Creative & New Ideas, Guess Whose Coming to Dinner, Senior Alumni, Photography, Send-offs, Parent Orientation Day, or Future Alumni.

Applications Due March 28th at 4:00 p.m.

Applications available and accepted at the AMS or Alumni Affairs Office. Phone the S.T.A.R. office for more information! (545-2060)

Queen's Bands: The Tradition Continues

A new documentary by Victor G. Catano celebrating the proud history of the Queen's University Marching Bands will have its world-premiere on Tuesday, March 29 at the Quiet Pub at 7 p.m.

The video, entitled Queen's Bands: The Tradition Continues, is the production of Queen's 4th year film student and proud Band-member, Victor Catano. The 25 minute video is a journey through the years of the Bands' spirit. Spiced with both archival and modern footage, the video brings together interviews from people as diverse as pipers from 1938 up to a present day drum major. The video serves as a fundraiser for the newly formed Queen's Bands Booster Club. The Booster Club is an alumni organization designed to give the bands financial support.

The Quiet Pub screening is open to the public. Admission is $2 and all proceeds go towards the Bands Booster Club. Get to the QB early for a pre-screening reception, followed by a discussion with the director.

Rock the Vote.

• Referendum • March 29 - 30 • It's your money •

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750
REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR
AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY
FROM GENERAL MOTORS.
Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SEVERAL VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY SEVERAL DEALERS.
THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF WEDNESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON 824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
In the Name of the Father 7:10 9:30
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40
Schindler's List 8:00
Guarding Tess 7:05 9:20
Lighting Jack 7:10 9:35
Monkey Trouble 7:15 9:25

CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Naked Gun 33 7:10 9:30
Angie 6:50 9:15
What's Eating Gilbert Grape 6:55 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
The Ref 7:15 9:35
French Cabaret 6:45 9:10

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (546-FILM)

FRIDAY
Secret Rapture 7:00
The Remains of the Day 9:00
Saturday, Sunday & Monday
The Remains of the Day 6:45
Secret Rapture 9:30
TUESDAY
Secret Rapture 7:00
The Remains of the Day 9:00
Wednesday
The Remains of the Day 6:45
Secret Rapture 9:30
Thursday
El Cid 7:00

CLUBS

FRIDAY
The Toucan: Fishholes
Duke's: Committee Band
AJ's Hangar: Bourbon Tabernacle Choir (guests Philosopher Kings)
Ben's Pub: Ross Boulter
The Wellington: Mike O'Kelly
Quiet Pub: Richard Goguen and Todd McRae/afternoon
SATURDAY
The Toucan: Freeway Band
Duke's: Boog and the Braveyard Whips

AJ's Hangar: Road Apples (best of The Trocically Hip)
Clark Hall Pub: Easy Access
Ben's Pub: Ross Boulter
The Wellington: Folk Venue (Music Lovers' Weekend)

SUNDAY
Stages: Rock bandstand—Live Music Lovers' Weekend
AJ's Hangar: Rock bandstand—Music Lovers' Weekend
The Wellington: jazz (afternoon); Kingston Folk Club (evening)

TUESDAY
Stages: David Go Go with Blues Revue
WEDNESDAY
The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers

THURSDAY
The Toucan: The Mugworts
Ben's Pub: The Undesirables
Duke's: General Dirt Jones

PERFORMANCES

HARRISON-LECRAINE HALL, Room 120
The Queen's Percussion Ensemble presents a free concert of contemporary music.
Mar. 25 at 3 pm.

CLUBS

GRANT HALL
The Performing Arts Office presents The Painter's Music, The Musician's Art, featuring Andrew Dawes (violin) and An Die Musik.
Mar. 25 at 8 pm.
The Queen's Jazz Ensemble presents a program of Traditional and Contemporary Big Band Music, featuring the works of Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Bob Florence and Rob McConnell.
Mar. 28 at 8 pm.
Tickets are $6 (Adults) and $3 (Students and Seniors)

—100—
Check out the Real Thing at Jj's!
6 oz Deluxe Burger
Served with a Mountain of fries!
only $ 4.95
* Catch the Leafs at Jj's*
409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547-3771 We inspire eating!

Final Performance of the Year !!
Queen's Symphony Orchestra
(directed by Duane Bates)
&
Queen's Chamber Singers
(directed by Peter Allen)
Featuring soloist Ireneus Zuk
Tuesday, April 5, 1994 - 8:00 p.m.
St. George's Cathedral
Admission: $6 regular; $3 students/seniors

The Queen's Wind Ensemble and the Queen's Percussion Ensemble.
Mar. 29 at 8 pm.
Tickets are $6 (Adult) and $3 (Students and Seniors)

The Kingston Symphony Association presents Masterworks VIII, featuring the world premiere of John Burge's That We may not Lose Loss (based on the poetry of Margaret Avison) and Mozart's Requiem K.626.
Mar. 27 at 2:30 pm.

THEATRE

THE BABY GRAND THEATRE 218 Princess St. (546-5698)
French Cabaret Night
Mar. 25-26

GALLERIES

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190)

SPECIAL EVENTS

Mar. 27
BFA graduate Cheryl Pagurek will talk about her exhibition 5 Froserwood Avenue, Apt #2 from 2:00-2:30 pm. A public reception will follow until 5:00 pm.

Gallery Association Art Rental and Soles Gallery: Spring Show. All new original art for rent or purchase. Light refreshments will be available. From 1:30-4:30.

CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS...

through Mar. 30
Mother and Child: Selections from the Lang Collection of African Art

through Apr. 3
The Pointers' Art: Masterworks of Modernism

through Apr. 17
Shayne Dark: Hunting the Ego

through Apr. 28
To the Fluid Sheet Construction: Working Drawings by David Rob inowitch

through May 8
The Ethics of Making: The farming royans of John Heward

through June 5
Canadian Press Glass Goblets: selections from the permanent collection

through June 12
Cheryl Pagurek: 5 Froserwood Ave., Apt #2

EDWARD DAY GALLERY 253 Ontario Street (547-0774)
through April 2
North American premiere of mixed media works on canvases by Alexander Ivanovich Sigov.

TAYLOR PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIOS 149 Brack St.
through Mar. 31
Boundaries: A Photographic Exhibition by Michael Wiercinski

A glimpse of East Indian cinema

It's bad enough that we are rarely, if ever, represented in the mainstream media in North America, despite the large numbers of Indians residing in all the major cities. What's worse is that viewing Indian-related programming and production requires a dependence on imports, traditionally from India, but increasingly from the U.K. as well. In England, Hanif Kureishi's screenplays have been translated into successful film and video releases (at least on the alternative film scene): My Beautiful Laundrette, Samie and Rosie Get Laid, and most recently the ITV (Channel 4, U.K.) production of The Buddha of Suburbia (boasting a soundtrack by David Bowie!).

Gurinder Chadha has committed herself to servicing the South Asian community in Britain, with such films as A Nice Arrangement and I'm British But. Both of these works focus on contemporary issues affecting (first and second generation) Indian youths in Britain. Her most recent work, a full-length feature receiving international praise on the festival circuit, is called Bhaji On The Beach. Bridging the generation gap is admittedly one of her Chadha's goals when representing the Indian community in her films. Bhaji's central cast includes daughters in its narrative about a South Asian's women's shelter whose reluctant patrons go on a day trip to the beach. Although 'getting away from it all' is the goal, it is a task not easily accomplished, as husbands and boyfriends chase after the adventurous women.

Finally, here is a film that picks characters directly from my own experience (and that of many other Indo-Canadians as well, I suspect): grandmothers who still covet prehistoric Indian values, husbands who are domineering and abusive, women and men who choose to date inter-racially, guys (my age) who choose punches over dialogue, girls experiencing their first kiss, etc. The best part is that it's not the white-wash version Indian culture often presented by the media in North America. Chadha takes pride in using authentic Punjabi (and Hindi) language, music and themes in relating to the audience both her experiences and those of people she knows only too well. Both the good and the bad aspects of culture and religion are openly displayed, allowing for a full appreciation of how Indians have integrated themselves in British society.

With its success at home and abroad, Bhaji has now moved to commercial cinematic release—but good luck in locating it in culturally-diverse Kingston! Another film to come out of England recently was Wild West, a rarity as far as Indian cultural representations go. Set in Southall—an Indian and Pakistani populated suburb of London. The comedy follows the adventures of a group of young South Asian musicians on their quest for country music fame and fortune. In the tradition of The Commitments, Wild West keeps a distinctively Indian flavour by contrasting The Honky Tonk Cowboys' Western musical lifestyle with their home life, curvy and kebabs notwithstanding. Naveen Andrews (who also stars as Karim in Kureishi's Buddha) appears opposite the recent Queen's graduate, Sarita Choudhury (from Mississippi Masala), whose vocal ability—she actually sings her own songs—carries The Honky Tonk Cowboys to the brink of commercial success.

Now, I'm not exactly saying that this film reflects reality. You would be hard-pressed to find a country music band whose members hailed from anywhere other than the Southwest. But the film succeeds in portraying a side of Indian culture that is in sharp contrast to the traditional icons shown by the media: the exotic clothes, unique customs and divine cuisine being the most common. Using country music as an extended metaphor for the Westernization of diasporic Indian youth. Wild West appeals to the reality of our experiences in Canada as much as in the U.K. The difference, of course, is that Canada does not make these kinds of films. (Masala is an exception, but also a reaffirmation in that it was not well received by Indian audiences, here or abroad.)

So where do we fit into all of this? Alas, there are some efforts being made by Indo-Canadians to follow in Britain footsteps. The Burning Season, which premiered last year at the Montreal Film Festival, is a Canada-India co-production that has received mixed reviews at best. The film is about a young Indo-Canadian mother who runs away to India to be with her lover. In Vancouver and Toronto, the predominantly Indian audiences left the screening somewhat disappointed, both at the filmmakers for making a flawed film, and at the Indian community for not producing something more representative of itself. Although Season had Vancouver-based Amarjeet Rattan at the helm, it was Canadian novice director Harvey Crossland who navigated the narrative and thereby controlled the fate of the film. As mentioned earlier, "white-wash" was a term frequently tossed around when describing Season's failure to address Indian issues with veracity.

Canadian audiences did, however, seem to appreciate a glimpse into a culture they had seldom witnessed. Day-to-day, most Canadians are witness to only a surface portrayal of Indian cultural values and traditions; this film seemed to be a display for that audience, with excellent visuals shot in picturesque rural Indian settings. Cinematographer Vic Sarin deserves full credit for the film's aesthetic appeal, its strongest point.

Despite boasting Om Puri as a co-star, the best performance was that given by Ayub Khan Din, who previously starred in Sammie and Rosie Get Laid. It is unfortunate that Din had to turn down an offer to appear in The Return of the Pink Panther in order to star in Season.

The next time this country invests $2.1 million in an Indo-Canadian production we can only hope the filmmakers have learned from their British peers. In England, South Asians appear in game shows, on soap operas, as TV anchors and reporters, even in TV commercials! Why are we so invisible in Canada?

Pete Leekha is a fourth year film major.

If you're convocating this spring...
JUST FRAME IT!

- Beautiful customized Queen's diploma frames
- Framed "While-U-Wait," immediately after convocation
- Located in Ross Gym, next to Convocation gown rental
- Only $52 plus tax!

Available only through the Department of Alumni Affairs
For details, call 545-2060 and ask for Dawn

CLASSIFIEDS

Classified ads are $5.00 for students, $6.50 for non-students, and free for Lost & Found. Submissions are due Tuesday at 2 p.m. for publication in the Friday issue. Please submit ads in person at 272 Earl Street, Call 545-2800 for more information.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BURROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

NORTHPORT POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware vessels and wedding registries. Contact us at 1476-4918 to make an appointment.

DO YOU NEED documents typed fast? We will pick up and deliver! Quality printing. We'll even give you a photocopy free! Only $1.15 per page. Call now! 634-2349.

QUICK, ACCURATE WORDPROCESSING of documents: theses, resumes, reports, research documents, letters. Excellent quality on laser printer. Most often 24-hour service. Call after 6 p.m. Audrey: 548-7378.

MASTERING THE LSAT - Everything you need to know about the LSAT, but didn't know you should ask! - 1 800 567-4PEP.

UTILITIES EXTRA? You need to arrange in advance a contract with the Public Utilities Commission or no water, gas or electricity for you! Call the PUO at 548-1187 for information.

DO YOU NEED documents typed fast? We will pick up and deliver! Quality printing. We'll even give you a photocopy free! Only $1.15 per page. Call now! 634-2349.

SEXUAL HEALTH QUIZES? Call the CONFIDENTIAL HEALTHLINE, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Monday - Thursday 6-9 p.m. 545-6000 ext. 4444. Leave messages anytime.

THE LANOLINO to pay the rental 6% interest annually on the last month's rent. Every bit counts! If you want information call Queen's Town-Gown Liaison office at 545-6745.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES! 5 cents single-sided, fax included. The Grey House 51 Queen's Crescent, Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change.

LESBIAN AND GAY ASSOCIATION SOCIAL DROP-IN Thursdays, 8 - 9:30 p.m., Student Affairs Centre (51 Queen's Crescent). Meet other members of the Lesbian, gay and bisexual communities. Call 545-2950 for information. All welcome.

BDDK FREE SPACE for your study group. Good rooms, photocopying facilities and eases available! Call Julia at 545-2958 or drop by the Student Affairs Centre (The Grey House).

THE GREY HOUSE, at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, The Queen's Women's Centre, and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Intensive three day seminars. Systematic approach to proven test-taking strategies. Expert instructors. Simulated exam. Free preal policy. Full money back guarantee. Seminar fee $195. OXFORD SEMINARS 531-9016.

COMPUTER TYPING SERVICE, $1.50 double spaced page, $2.50 single spaced page. Local pick up and delivery available. Call Pam's Place at 353-1573 after 5:00 p.m. or leave a message.

IF YOU LEAVE THE PLACE clean and in good condition when you move out you won't be charged cleaning and repairs. Find out more: Queen's Town - Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

STUDENTS - TEACH ENGLISH OVERSEAS - Teach conversational English year round, short term or for summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Korea. Excellent pay. No experience or qualifications needed. For details and how you can apply pick up our free brochure at INFOANK, lower JDUCC or send self-addressed stamped envelope to Asia FACS (OJ), P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

MOVING MEANS packing means boxes. Start your collection today! Get practical tips to make your move smoothly! Call Town - Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

1993 TRICOLLOUR YEARBOOKS ARE IN! Pick yours up now, room 050, JDUCC. Check the hours posted on the door. Watch for evening distribution hours! 1993 TRICOLLOUR YEARBOOKS ARE IN!

PUBLIC LECTURE "Aging in a Broader Context", Queen's Gerontology Project presents David Fogel, Ph.D. Professor Economics, U. of T. Wednesday March 30th, 7:30 p.m. in Policy Studies, Room 202. Supported by Empire Financial Group. All welcome.

GIVE THE GIFT of literacy... Please vote YES to a 50 cent opt-outable student fee in support of Queen's Students for Literacy.

BEEN TO URBANA '93? Don't forget the last follow up prayer group pot luck today at 4:30. This is the last "Check up" until next year. Hope to see you there!

HELP WANTED

TREEPLANTERS! Bugbusters Treeplanting Co. is looking for people to plant in B.C. this spring. Low camp costs, experienced foreman. Experienced planters preferred. Call David Jelleneas at 416 924-9127.

STAYING IN KINGSTON THIS SUMMER? Become a volunteer with the Birth Control Centre. Applications available at the infobank (lower JDUCC) and the BCC office, 51 Queen's Crescent. Call 545-2950.

JOB HUNTING? PAINTERS NEEDED for College Pro franchises in Ottawa! Experience preferred. Call Max Edwards at 547-1164.

$25 FOR ABOUT an hour of your time! Volunteers needed for focus group. Results used for a major packaged food company's marketing campaign. Results completely confidential. We are Queen's Commerce students seeking students 17 - 25. Must be familiar with herbal tea. Refreshments provided. Call Cori at 531-0364.

EARN $6,326.00 THIS SUMMER by selling only one water filter each day. Great part-time work. Be your own boss... hire your own sales people for even bigger profits! Contact: Water Purify Systems (est. 1982), 5312 Walker's Line, R.R. #2 Milton, Ontario, L9T 2X6, (905) 336-7950.

WANTED

WANTED: Ride to Belleville (Loyalist College) with someone taking Socky 335V this spring, classes beginning May 02, 1994. Help with fuel costs. Call Joyce at 546-1632.

FOUR GIRLS seek fifth to share house, non-smoker, gas heating, 5 minutes from campus, on bus route, close to downtown, sinks in bedrooms, 1 1/2 baths, VCR, $280 per month. Call 531-9035.

HOUSEMATES WANTED 4 guys looking for 2 housemates to live in a big, affordable house right behind the PHE CENTRE. Please call 531-7831 or drop by 81 Clergy St.

WANTED - Three 4th year girls looking for one person to share house with. William and Division. Washer and dryer. Call 531-9836.

WANTED - Someone to time-share a residence room for 1994/95. I need it January - April. Excellent opportunity for education students or those going to the castle. Call 542-8332.

TRUSTWORTHY mature graduate student seeks summer sublet. Furnished. $150.00 or less. Will take good care of your possessions. References available. Call Ivd at 542-5784.

HOUSEMATES WANTED - Rooms available. Excellent location reasonable rent! Call now 542-8285.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

DESK AND DRESSER FOR SALE: Vancouver-bound! I need to unload this furniture! Both pieces in excellent condition. Asking $100.00 for desk & $50.00 for dresser. Call 542-7983 anytime!

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE INS AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolha outdoorwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

BENCH AND WEIGHTS - MSP bench - incline, decline, squat rack, storage rack. Weights - 300 lb. silver olympic cast iron plates with bar, plus 110 lb. dumbbells with swivel lock collars. Separate or together. Best offer. Call Derek at 544-4829.

LOST. MY MINO! Buy my stuff cheap! Office desk, $80.00; 7-part monster stereo system: 5425.00! Huge couch with matching chair! Call Simon at 545-1016.

BOARD GAMES: Capital Punishment, Public Assistance and Kilo $20.00 each. Autographed Script of Diverse Court $20.00, encyclopedia on Recreational Drugs $30.00, three issues of Hi-Times magazine $20.00 each. Call 548-7702 after 5:00 p.m.

FOR SALE: Furniture, 2 desks, 2 dressers, bookcases, wardrobe. All in excellent, brand new condition and very cheap. Call Krista at 547-9926.

FUTONS! FUTONS! FUTONS! Incredible moving day special! 6' and 8' FUTONS! A and L frames at discount prices. Call 531-9111, University Futon Outlet.

FOR SALE: Matching loveseat, chair, beige, good condition. $100. Call 549-6526.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal. Fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Science '44 Co-Op at 544-4506. Everyone welcome to apply.

3 BEDROOM APARTMENT: Close to downtown and campus, includes dishwasher, central air/hvac, laundry facilities, wall to wall carpet, very clean, security building. Apartment features a lot bedroom with own bathroom. Reasonable rent for this great place. For info, call Maggie, Beth or Kerry at 547-8050.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedrooms, washer and dryer, sly-lights, dishwasher, microwave, very low utilities and gas fireplace. $1415. Call Doug Joyce at 546-2000, located at 205 Coburne St.

BARRIE (AT UNION) 2 bedroom basement apartment with 2 bathrooms, carpeted and parking space $725 plus lights, heat and laundry. 12 month lease. Available May 1, 1994. $343.00 per month, possible negotiable. Please call David at 544-3932.

LARGE 6 BEDROOM HOUSE, close to campus and recently renovated, 2 bathrooms, 2 lindges, dishwasher, etc. Cheap rent, reasonable P.U.C. Call Rick at 544-3333 or leave a message at 546-1122.

1 BEDROOM available in top floor of newly renovated Triplex. Two upper-year males looking for roommate. Located near Victoria Park. 10 minute walk from campus, parking and laundry. 12 month lease. Available May 1, 1994. $343.00 per month, possible negotiable. Please call David at 544-3932.

SUMMER SUBLET - spacious 2 bedroom apartment - across from A&P - washer, dryer - 322 Brock St - Leave message at 545-9624.

GHETTO HOUSE for 6 Available May 1st. Backyard, patio, laundry, parking, two baths. Great location at 555 Johnson. $1590.00 negotiable. Phone 545-3898 now!

SHARED ACCOMMODATION - West end Toronto. Female to share 2 bedroom, 2 bathroom condo. Laundry, dishwasher, air conditioned, pool, cable TV, parking, bus stop. $475 inclusive. Female, non-smoker. Call Stephanie at 416 762-0700 after 6 p.m.

ONE MONTH FREE 5 bedroom apartment, 2 floors, washer and dryer, skylights, dishwasher, 1 1/2 baths, very low utilities and gas fireplace. 9 minutes to campus, $1415.00 per month. Call Doug at 546-2000.

SIX BEDROOM HOUSE 265 Albert Street. Dishwasher, large backyard, garage and large driveway. High efficiency forced air gas furnace. Washer and dryer in basement. Available May 1st, rent $1820.00 plus. Call 549-8391.

FIVE BEDROOM HOUSE 34 Ellice Street. Large living room, large dining room, eat-in kitchen, laundry, high efficiency gas furnace, parking. 15 minute walk to Queen's. Available May 1st, rent $1300.00 plus. Call 549-8391.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: On Tuesday January 11th in the Phys Ed Centre - 2 silver rings and a necklace. One is my high school ring. Please return to infobank or call Chanda at 544-1649.

LOST: Silver and Gold Chain link Seiko watch. Lost Tuesday between JDUCC and Chemistry building. Engraving on back (JMF 93). Sentimental value. Reward offered. Call 549-7969.

LOST: In Mac-Corry, a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Blue Varsity 1992 - 93 rugby jacket on Friday, March 4th at A.J.'s. contained cork key chain. Reward. No questions asked. Please call 542-2010.

BORROWED: Burgundy "Supercycle" from 176 University Ave. Victim of after Allis crowd, Friday February 25th. 10 years old, brakes completely useless and stuck in 1st gear, but extreme sentimental value. No questions - understanding owner. Please phone 542-2010.

LOST: at the ArtsCI '94 formal: a Pentax zoom 105-R camera. If you have it please, please, please call 542-2455.

LOST: '95 Cemerace jacket (46 chest) at Cocamo's on Friday March 4th. If you know someone who found one that night, or who took the wrong jacket, call me. Reward - you name it, you got it! Rob 531-3554.

LOST: Silver ID bracelet somewhere near Vic Hall parking lot. If found please leave at Vic desk. Reward offered.

LOST: Reward offered. Ring lost on March 12th (Saturday night) on University Ave around Earl St., intersection. Gold band with initial etched silver. Star of David jeweller's mark on inside. Extreme sentimental value (my grandfather's wedding band). Please return it to me if found, I miss it very much. 541-1040.

FOUND: A roll of undeveloped film, 24 exposure colour. Found on sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall on October 6th. To claim please contact The Journal at 545-2800.

FOUND: A Fendi watch near Victoria Park before the new year. Call and describe it to me and it yours! 531-0399.

FOUND: Kettle Creek pencil case with a calculator inside, in Mac-Corry before reading week. To claim call Jocelyn at 531-4350.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th, Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 545-5873 (home).

FOUND: At A.J.'s, Friday January 14th 3/4 length blue jacket with keys. Call 547-4216.

FOUND: '95 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safely deposit, university, found on Queen's Cres, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

FOUND: A small brown leather change purse in Mac-Corry, Wednesday March 2nd. Call Laila at 547-6766.

FOUND: Jacket at A.J.'s Friday March 4th. Please call 542-2010 to identify.

FOUND: At A.J.'s Friday night a watch. Call and describe it to me and it's yours. 531-4987.

FOUND: Ladies gold watch at corner of Bagot and Earl. Call 549-2635 to identify.

FOUND: A pair of sunglasses if you have lost them please call 539-2584.

PERSONALS
SNOWSHOE, it's not uncommon for someone, particularly if he is all unconfident of shy, who has very strong feelings for someone, to find it pretty difficult to clearly express to that other individual the particularly strong feelings he might have in regards to the individual to whom he is trying to express them. Um...never mind. Life, the Universe and I. BETTY: You can be my pall. You can call me Al. Let's pick a strange place to make some wine, and then go swimming. Hey - when you gonna love you as much as I do - Al. ARRY: Sorry 'bout the interruption, but we had to check out your smile. You're way cool even though you stick R's in every word - Whiteshoes.

WENCH! What is the most important day of the year? Now you have 364 more days to figure out what we are getting you next year! Deal with it. Love Stogee et al.

ROB: Happy belated B-Day! Love BB. P.S. I remember what "H" means. Impressive huh?!

ATTENTION: 94 Grads who were in Weldon: Wally Reunion, Friday March 25th - Allies - Spread the word!

TO THE YOUNG MACH: Eng. mail at Allies. Where were you last Friday from 4:30 - 5:00 p.m.? Definitely not at the Q.P. Call me at 545-0336. From: The Top Confidential Pool Player.

JENN STEEVES, Congratulations on winning the Triool-or Award. You truly deserve it. It's been a great year and one we won't forget. Thanks for the memories. ASUS Council!

PROWSTER! Can you believe it's been a year since the A&P trauma, the lettuce incident and the ongoing city hall bell? Thanks for making it such a wonderful 12 months, MWL. Love always, Mac-Corry girl. P.S. No amnesty would be complete without a re-enactment of that fateful night at the QP: See you there!

MEMO FROM THE HOTEL OO: Sleep until noon every day, drink from other people's glasses, and hand out your business card at lunerals. Hotel do the OP Saturday 6:00

HEY SNAG, I've come to the realization that the problem is simply that YOU didn't get a personal last week? Hugs and kisses, the holder of the whip.

"FUNNYMAN": Thanks for everything P.K., you're great to wake up beside, not cranky or mean. Your bed friend, Bruce "Ox" Balfantine.

PJ BARKLEY: Don't wear a hat so much, it hides your eyes.

ANDRE N & ANDREW T: Get off your asses and do the hockey article. The Boss.

PETER WILLIS: What is like to wake up beside a hairy chest anyways? You're-so-bummed-a.

B: How bout we stretch tomorrow morning, then crawl back into the wig wam? Wa-wa-wa-wa Love C.

OAVE: Hold on to sanity for just a little bit longer - two weeks! Then...pins on the patio, barbecue dinners, relaxation, and more rudeness than you ever thought possible - Your Two Co-Editors, (Gotta like the sound of that, eh?)

Pop culture never had it so good!

Your attention please: do not go to Europe to "find yourself." You will find many things in Europe, such as the fact the Europeans know sod-all about things that we in the civilized world take for granted (ice cubes, air conditioning, mixed drinks, driving and bathing, to name a few). You will find the locals rude, the buildings decrepit and the drivers homicidal — it's just like Kingston! Europe is too close, too similar to North America. — to quote P.J. O'Rourke, sucks.

Real hipsters know Japan is the place to be. It's fun, it's wild, it's so un-North American, and people there like it when you speak English and will even pay your wheelbarrows of cash to teach it to them. Here are a few survival and amusement tricks drawn from Japanese friends, my own travels and the Bluffer's Guide to Japan.

• Asians generally look younger than "round-eyes", but you can actually become the life of the party in Japan by playing age-guessing games, which seem to be popular. The trick is going by the height of the person whose age you're guessing. There has been a dramatic change in Japanese people's height in the last forty to fifty years, thanks to the introduction of high-protein foods such as hamburger and fortified instant noodles into the Nipponese diet. Height will vary with the amount of these foods eaten during puberty. The following is a handy chart for your use:

If their height is:	4'10" to 5'4"	Guess their age to be:	50 and older
	5'4" to 5'8"		30 to 50
	5'8" to 5'10"		20 to 30
	5'10" to 6'0"		16 to 20
	over 6'		under 16

• Here in North America, it is perfectly acceptable for people to call each other "scumbag" on TV (Married with Children). This is unheard of in Japan, where the word shit in movies often gets translated as syappari, which means nevertheless. The point is that propellerheaded behaviour is not the norm. Even inanimate objects are accorded polite behaviour; rice is go-han (honourable rice), tea is o-cha (honourable tea) and the porcelain bus is o-toire (yes, honourable toilet, it's true). As we have "the honest truth" and "little white lies," the Japanese have these things formalized as bonne — the truth in your heart — and tatamae, which is what you say to someone's face. Tatamae is saying "I'll consider it" when you really want to say "Go blow, propellerhead."

• Under no circumstances should you blow your nose in a restaurant. This is a faux pas of the highest degree, which you'll know you've committed when everyone in the room turns to look at you, flashing a beaming smile. This is the polite way to say "You screwed up, propellerhead." (Remember when George Bush's barfing incident?)

• Shin-jin-rui is the Japanese term for Generation X, although their slackers have more ambition. Youth gangs who speed in their cars are bosozoku.

• Beware of the "exotic" spice called aji-no-moto. It's just MSG.

• In English, you can chat just by using only the words dude, yeah, awesome, uh-huh and shit. In Alabama, whole-day-long conversations can be constructed using only the lines "Dat's right," "You right about dat," and "Ah heard dat." You can do the same in Japan by saying:
Soft des' neh — "Dat's right", "Dat's a good question", "uh-huh", "yeah"
Muzukashi des' neh — "Hmm, that's a toughie...", "Gee, I dunno".
Deske/red(d)ma — "...but," as in "You're a nice person...but." It is used to end a sentence you had no intention of completing, since the point has already come across.

• You've probably been asked "So, you go to Queen's, eh? Do you know so-and-so?" In Japan, you might be asked something similar, like "Have you been to this place?" You can actually bluff and say "Yes". Tell them you saw one of these local sights:
a) the shrine called something-something-jingu on a hillside
b) a fancy temple called something-something-ji that you had to get to by an hour's hike along a winding mountain footpath
c) friendly villagers who offered you tea, cakes and umbrellas, offering to take you to people who've never seen a real live gaijin (foreigner) before

Tell 'em you stayed at a friend's house, which was near a small shop with coke and cigarette vending machines outside, not far from the main road and round the corner from a temple whose name you forget. You will never be wrong.

• The Japanese are like the British in their non-committal way of conversing:
If they say yes, they actually mean no.
If they say perhaps, they probably mean yes.
If they say no, they are not Japanese, but probably a prankish Filipino slacker playing with your mind.

Joey deVilia is a single, handsome available Asian dude and holds the title of sekkusu no sensei. E-mail him at 3JMD2 for the translation.

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

Niagara Falls Brewing

Until recently, most microbreweries in Ontario were primarily local concerns. Upper Canada and Sleeman sold their products across the province, but Conner's couldn't be found east of Kingston; Hart products ventured only as far west as Belleville. Wellington County and Creemore Springs were essentially limited to the area around the Golden Horseshoe. However, things have begun to change. You can now find Conner's in Ottawa, and Hart in Pickering, and newly arrived in Kingston are the beers of the Niagara Falls Brewing Company.

Niagara Falls Brewing is located in the heart of Ontario's winemaking district. A local Italian family with a history of winemaking decided that a microbrewery would be a good venture, and the brewery was born. Niagara Falls Brewing is among the province's most adventurous breweries. Among their offerings are beers that are made nowhere else in the province, and several novel twists on established styles.

Niagara's flagship and most famous beer is their Eisbock. First brewed in 1989, four years before Labatt claimed to have "invented ice brewing," Eisbock, as a style, is actually at least a century old. The story goes that a particularly feckless apprentice at a Bavarian brewery left a hoghead of bock (a strong, rich, malty, winter beer) out in the cold by accident, and that the beer actually froze in the barrel. After whipping the apprentice, the brewer, hoping that something of the barrel could be saved, removed the ice from the barrel, and discovered that what was left was even more wonderful than it had been before, unusually strong and delicious. What had happened, of course, is that the water froze before the alcohol, and when it was removed, the alcohol and the flavour were concentrated a little.

It is in this tradition that the Niagara Eisbock comes. It is fermented naturally, with a lager yeast, to about 6.5 per cent alcohol by volume, and then frozen, to concentrate and smooth the flavours, and (though this is not the main goal) to raise the alcohol. The result is a peachy-orange beer of 8 per cent alcohol by volume, with a warm, malty, and faintly fruity nose, and a delicate, sweetish, intricate, malty and fruity body. It is an excellent dessert beer, and a fine aperitif. Like a wine the "malting" is different every year, and each year's bottling gets a different label, with a different scene from the Niagara region. The Eisbock is available only in a 75 cl (750 ml) bottle, although it is sometimes possible to find it on draught.

Another Niagara specialty which is gaining respect is their Maple Wheat. The idea of brewing with maple syrup is a very old one, but for some reason it is fiddishly difficult to make a maple beer that is even remotely palatable, and very few even try. Such concoctions usually end up cloyingly sweet, and "a waste of both beer and maple syrup," to quote Ian Bowering. However, Niagara have succeeded. They use a wheat wort as the base, add a small amount of maple syrup, and then ferment with a champagne yeast to 8.5 per cent alcohol by volume. The wine yeast has the effect of converting almost all the residual sugars into alcohol, leaving a strong beer that has plenty of maple flavour, but very little sugar. Maple Wheat has a strong maple nose and a sweetish, malty start, proceeding to some ethyl and wheat rartness (especially when cold) and a smoky, maple finish. The maple is not a sweet flavour, but it certainly gives that impression. Again this is a

A FINAL REPORT FROM THE ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMISSION ...

TUITION HIKES. WHAT'S GOING ON?

After delaying the decision since November, Ontario's NDP government finally announced an increase in tuition of 10% per year for a two year period. For the last several years, our tuition has risen at a rate of 7% per year. Further, this past year Queen's imposed a compulsory levy due to government cutbacks combined with the Social Contract. The government has made it more difficult for students to mobilize and organize themselves to respond effectively because of the academic demands at this time of year.

In addition to the tuition fee hike, the government increased the OSAP loan forgiveness level from $5,570 to $6,000. Therefore, the OSAP debt burden of students in extreme financial need will rise by $430 per year. Moreover, there is no mention of any concrete plans to revamp the inadequate OSAP system. The government also announced a freeze on the level of mandatory fees imposed by universities. This policy is a small step forward because it requires the administration to work with students to find a solution.

WHAT CAN WE AS STUDENTS DO?

Queen's University undergraduate students are represented at the provincial level by the Ontario Undergraduate Students Alliance (OUSA). OUSA has allied with the Ontario Community Colleges Student Parliamentary Association (OCCSPA) to oppose the recent tuition hikes. We demand ACCESSIBILITY through an improved student aid program and an expansion of the Ontario Special Bursary Program; ACCOUNTABILITY to students in the governance of the university; and the means to a QUALITY EDUCATION. The government's announcement does not adequately meet these concerns.

OUSA has released a statement to be used for a petition which will be circulating on campuses across Ontario. The statement reads:

AS MEMBERS OF THE ONTARIO UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT ALLIANCE (OUSA), WE THE UNDERSIGNED OPPOSE THE TREND OF INCREASING TUITION WHILE LOWERING THE GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO UNIVERSITIES IN ONTARIO. STUDENTS ARE BEING FORCED TO PAY MORE FOR AN EDUCATION OF DWINDLING QUALITY AND ARE NOT PROVIDED WITH AN ADEQUATE PROGRAM OF STUDENT AID. THE NDP GOVERNMENT IS NEGLECTING THE IMPORTANCE OF INVESTING IN CANADA'S FUTURE. WE DEMAND CHANGE NOW!!

As students we need to take the time to send a clear message to the provincial government that this tuition increase is unfair. There are petitions available in the AMS office. Please take the time to pick up and circulate a petition TODAY. We need the help of every student at Queen's.

UNDERFUNDING AND YOU

Underfunding to Ontario universities is one of the main factors responsible for the declining quality in post-secondary education. The lack of funding affects universities' ability to function adequately while providing a high quality of education. Faculty salaries, faculty-student ratios, building maintenance, lab equipment, and classroom space are all areas which feel the effects of underfunding. Ultimately the lack of funding is felt by students. The quality of education which students receive decreases because of classroom overcrowding, cancelled courses, loss of faculty, and deteriorating lab equipment. Many specific examples of how underfunding has effected various departments here at Queen's are outlined below:

School of Music

-Queen's is the only school/faculty of music in Canada to be without a recital hall because the planned third story addition can not be built with the lack of funding it has received.

Department of Political Studies

-Since the mid 1970's the number of full time staff has remained constant while undergraduate enrolment has more than doubled and graduate enrolment has increased by 400%. Furthermore, four professors are retiring this summer and will not be replaced.

Department of Biology

-The termination of 4 contractual instructor positions resulting in a lack of student teaching resources and a loss of lab and demonstrator coordination. All this is occurring at a time when enrolment in biology has skyrocketed while funding to courses has decreased.

Department of Economics

-The loss of 3 academic positions with no hiring of faculty as replacements.

Department of Drama

-Overcrowding of classes has forced limited enrolment in a department which has traditionally never turned people away.

These examples are intended to illustrate that underfunding affects every institution in Ontario including Queen's. Underfunding is detrimental to the quality of education and affects students and faculty in every faculty and department.

Classes end Friday
Apr. 8
Good Luck
on Exams!

THE QUEEN'S
JOURNAL
Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1994 • ISSUE 38 • VOLUME 121

ODYSSEY
TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group
549-3553 549-3561

Protestors target racism

300 rally against Heritage Front, storm Richardson Hall

By LORI THORLAKSON

Over 300 students marched in protest against the Heritage Front Wednesday morning, calling for Principal David Smith to publicly denounce the white supremacist organization.

The demonstration, the largest on campus this year, culminated in a public statement by Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams.

Heritage Front posters first appeared on Queen's campus Feb. 3.

Both Queen's and local high school students rallied on the steps of Richardson Hall before storming the building and marching into the office of Williams.

The demonstration was organized by the Alma Mater Society, the Queen's Anti-Racist Coalition, and the International Socialists.

The protestors rallied outside Richardson Hall at 11 am, attracting on-lookers until the crowd swelled to 300. Marching to Summerfield, organizers attempted to get Smith to address the crowd.

However, Smith was at a budget-planning meeting with faculty deans.

In a letter to AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson, Smith expressed his regrets for missing the demonstration, and declared his support for the group.

"I fully share the commitment of the AMS to work for the elimination of racism and hatred from this campus. Neo-Nazis and other hate groups have no business at Queen's," he wrote.

At noon the protest moved back to Richardson Hall, and into the office of Williams. The vice principal spoke to protest organizers and then delivered a statement to the waiting crowd outside.

Williams first pointed out that he attended the rally earlier in the morning, telling protestors "I wouldn't have done that if I didn't believe in what you were doing."

"The Kingston community must be aware that Nazis, racism, and hatred are not welcomed here," Williams said. However, "the university has to preserve rights of individuals, but also certain values such as freedom of speech," he added.

The crowd responded by shouting, "no free speech for Nazis!"

The best way to fight the Heritage Front is to expose what they stand for, Williams said.

The Heritage Front are "masters at skirting the edge of the law," Williams said, and there is nothing the university can do to legally bar the group from campus.

Williams told the organizers he would leave it to them to arrange a date to meet with administration.

Ravi Jain, the coordinator for the AMS Committee Against Racism and Ethnic Discrimination, said that in a March 15 letter to The Globe and Mail, Smith made it appear as if racism was under control at Queen's, a "very misleading and insulting impression."

Jain said he would like Smith to make a public statement on further action he is willing to take against racism at Queen's.

Later, in an interview with The Journal, Williams said that the failure to mention recent Heritage Front activity on campus in the March 15 letter to The Globe was an "unintentional oversight."

"It was intended to be a statement supporting freedom of speech—that Surface is tolerated as long as it does not do anything illegal."

Williams was reluctant to commit the administration to action, saying, "action should come as statements from as wide across the community as possible, by showing unity across the campus."

"I was proud of the students, of what they did today," Williams said.

"The way you fight despicable beliefs is through exchange of information and discrediting of false information. The rally today is the first step," he said.

Minerson criticized the administration for framing the issue in terms of freedom of speech. "For those affected, it is purely about homophobia, racism, sexism, or anti-semitism," he said.

Although encouraged by Williams's statement, Minerson said, "it shouldn't take a rally of 400 people to make that statement. If they had made that statement 50 days ago it would have been better."

Surface survives

Surface newspaper will be funded by student interest fees next year.

Referendum results announced last night show that 62.9 per cent of Arts and Science students voted in favour of opt-outable funding for the newspaper.

In September, Arts and Science students will individually decide whether to give $2 to Surface.

inside

The Journal

LITERARY ENDOWMENT

While Alfred Bader considers making a donation of priceless artwork to Queen's, another Queen's alumnus has made a valuable contribution of his own. Former commerce student Paul Rae recently donated several books on homosexuality to Douglas Library in an effort to influence what he perceives as a homophobic atmosphere on campus. —Story on page 5

HITTING THE PAVEMENT

Slacker icons, Pavement, passed through Toronto this past Friday, quashing the dreams of full discourse for our two intrepid Journal reporters. Despite the confusion of the night, they survived the ordeal, and offer a tale of intrigue and trickery. —Story on page 24

DRUMROLL PLEASE ...

After scrutinizing almost 30 scintillating short story submissions to the 2nd annual Queen's Journal short story contest, a panel of hand-picked, scholarly judges picked its favourite. And the winner is ... —Short story on page 17

"The [wording of the] question would have made the Student Housing Authority a loose cannon." —Mike O'Connor, commenting on why he withdrew his referendum question.

Protestors at Summerhill yesterday call for university action against the Heritage Front. —DEREK YARNELL

Boss selection committee bungles interviews

"Degradation" interviews kill ComSoc's frosh week committee

By DAVE COLEMAN

The Commerce Orientation Committee has been disbanded because "boss" candidates for Commerce frosh week were asked to perform acts with sexual overtones during their interviews.

"Several interviews were conducted with questions of an inappropriate nature," said Commerce Society President John Wilkin. "[The Orientation Committee] recognized the questions were inappropriate, and they took responsibility immediately," Wilkin stated.

At least one Boss candidate complained of harassment in the interview process. (A boss is the Commerce equivalent of a gael or Free—a leader of a frosh group in Orientation Week).

A Commerce '97 student, requesting anonymity, said the committee "made me squiggle like a sperm on the floor." The student stated, "some girls were asked to fake an orgasm or act out a child birth." But, the student added, "the interview process is meant to be degrading."

BOSS CONTINUED ON PAGE 7

Bader considers art gift

By BRAD ELDER

The king of the castle may be bestowing another gift on his beloved Queen's.

Alfred Bader, the distinguished Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate a rare and valuable art collection to his alma mater.

But right now, Queen's lacks the proper facility to house this private collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art focusing on Rembrandt and his circle.

Dr. David McTavish, the head of Queen's art department and director at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre on campus, explained that because many works in the collection are done on wooden panels, the paintings require very consistent temperature and humidity control.

"We would have a professional obligation to provide a suitable accommodation for the collection," McTavish commented. He added that while the Art Centre does have temperature and humidity controls in place, they lack the consistency needed to house such a priceless collection.

According to an article in The Whig Standard, Harvard University, another of Bader's alma maters, is also vying for the donation.

But while Harvard does have the proper facilities to house the collection, McTavish downplayed the competitive nature of the situation.

"It would be true to say that [Bader] would very much like [the collection] to come to Queen's," he said, noting that "a gift like this would make a bigger difference at Queen's."

The collection is reportedly worth $40 million, but according to McTavish, "it's almost impossible to put a value figure on a gift like this."

In fact, he called the push to acquire the collection "a project of national importance."

McTavish added that with Queen's initiating a PhD program in art history next

GOONATION CONTINUED ON PAGE 4

THIS IS IT!
YOUR LAST WEEKEND TO SAVE BIG MONEY ON THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS
THEN IT'S OVER FOR ANOTHER YEAR!!!

TRICOLOUR		APRIL 8 - 10
	WEST CAMPUS	VIC HALL	JDUC	DROP-OFF POINTS	PRICE
TORONTO	1:55	2:05	2:15	Oshawa, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal	$20
MONTREAL	2:50	3:00	3:10	Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal	$25
OTTAWA	5:35	5:45	5:55	Kanata, Pinecrest, Carling & Kirkwood, Bus Terminal	$16
Sunday Evening Returns:		PICK-UP POINTS
TORONTO	8:00pm	One block west of Union Station near City Bank Plaza
MONTREAL	5:45pm	Bus Terminal
OTTAWA	8:00pm	Bus Terminal

THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS WOULD LIKE TO THANK EVERYBODY THAT TRAVELLED WITH US
THIS YEAR AND WISH YOU GOOD LUCK ON EXAMS!

Spring Fever.

(it's time to pick-up!)

An application that is!
The Journal is still accepting applicants for the following positions:

- Graphics Editor
- Sales Representative
- Ads Manager
- Creative Staff Manager
- Production Manager

Pick-up your application at 272 Earl Street before Monday @ 4:30 - that's when they are due!

Tonite!

Dipsomania!

Kick off the long weekend at the best party in town! Cheeeeeeeap all nite long!

Fri. April 1st

First time at A.J.s!
Come party with

Moist

come early! Superlite 7:30-9:30!

Sat. April 2nd

Little Betty
Plaid Daddies

CD Release party for Plaid Daddies

Every Tues.

N.T.N. Trivia Challenge!
All-u-can-eat Spaghetti only $2.99!

Sunday

The best of the blues with

Wild Blues Yonder

No cover! Frog open!
2 for 1 chicken dinners!
Sleep in on Monday!

Mon. April 4th

20¢ wings!
N.C.A.A. Final!
2 Big Screens

with Volume!

Coming Soon!

Pig Night! Big Sugar!
New Menu! Summertime!

AMS council gears up for 1994-'95

BY JONATHAN LEIGH

The new Alma Mater Society council met for the first time on Monday, with new commissioners and service directors spelling out their priorities for 1994-1995.

Next year's AMS will have two services directors instead of the current three. The directors will be called "Services Director" and "Media and Services Director."

New Services Director Neil Livingstone will also focus on attracting Queen's students to their AMS services such as the campus bars.

Livingstone said the AMS will focus not on "competing with the downtown bars, but growing on what strengths we have."

Furthermore, he wants to "increase the accountability and professionalism in hiring and services as a whole."

Fiona Macaulay will serve as next year's Media and Services Director. With experience at The Journal, Studio Q, and Arts Fest, Macaulay's aim is to improve the professionalism of the media services on campus.

One area of concern for her is what she sees as a chronic under-utilization of services by Queen's students. "I'd like to increase awareness of the services, because right now I think a lot of them are under-used," she said.

Nancy Hyndman, a former orientation leader and Welcome Back '94 Week chair, hopes that the entire executive uses her Communications Commission to increase student involvement in all areas of the AMS. In addition to bringing light to the dark corridors of the AMS offices, Hyndman wants to "see a greater sense of humour ... and a unified group" involved in the student government.

Clowns to the left of me, jokers to the right... From the left: (front) A'Amer Ather, Dean Campbell, (middle) Keith McArthur, Taz Pirmohamed, Jane Shantz, Paul Lemieux, (back) Fiona Macaulay, Neil Livingstone, Kevin Rex, and Nancy Hyndman.

TRICIA BAUMAN

Dean Campbell, the new Internal Affairs commissioner, will use his experience as an AMS Judicial Committee clerk as he seeks to streamline non-academic disciplinary procedures with the AMS.

And with new equipment coming in for the new year, Campbell said he has made it his mission to modernize AMS services and give students access to AMS information through the various computer networks.

Keith McArthur now fills the role of Academic Affairs commissioner, moving up from the position of deputy commissioner.

McArthur said that the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance will be a major focus of his commission, and promised that OUSA will be active in the upcoming provincial election.

Employment issues will also be a priority for McArthur, who wants to make sure that "people are not only receiving education, but also the skills they need to survive in the workforce."

New Campus Activities Commissioner Paul Lemieux said he is committed to ensuring that students are made aware of all events on campus.

One of Campus Activities' new ideas is the AMS First Committee, which Lemieux says will target first-year students in an effort to get them more involved.

He is also seeking to change alcohol policies which exclude under-aged first-year students from social events in and around campus. A first-year formal is also in the works, Lemieux said.

A'Amer Ather, newly appointed education commissioner, is thankful the AMS executive "took a chance" on him in lieu of experience on Queen's campus. Ather wants to "increase the presence and relevance of the AMS to the lives of students."

The newly created position of Municipal Affairs commissioner has yet to be filled.

SPRING POW WOW

The Katarokwi Native Friendship Centre of Kingston will be hosting its second annual traditional Pow Wow on the weekend of June 4-5, and you're invited. The weekend will offer an opportunity to celebrate, share, and renew the culture and traditions of aboriginal people. The sacredness of life and the relationship between humans and the land will be commemorated through the drum and the songs sung at the Pow Wow.

Everyone is invited to attend, and enjoy traditional singing, drumming, dancing, feasting, and sharing. The event promises to be a wonderful chance for both natives and non-natives to come together for fun and learning. For information about the event, please contact Randy Cadue at 548-7094.

bell hooks

TO SPEAK ON CAMPUS

Feminist author bell hooks will be speaking at Grant Hall on Wednesday, April 6 at 8 p.m. A well-known American author and lecturer, hooks speaks prominently on issues of race and gender.

Housing Authority question withdrawn

BY BROCK MANTLAND

Politically attuned students voting in the Alma Mater Society's spring referendum over the last two days may have noticed that the most controversial question was mysteriously absent.

The question, asking voters to establish a $2.16 opt-outable student interest fee for the Student Housing Authority, sparked criticism from some AMS members, on the basis that the group is not part of the AMS and therefore not accountable for its money.

But the man behind the SHA, Mike O'Connor, said he withdrew the question on Friday not because of political pressure, but rather because of the "drastic" changes made to his original referendum question.

O'Connor said that the question which was set to appear—a standard question with no description about the SHA—was not the question that he, and 600 other students, signed to support. That original question included a description of the SHA, and promised that all information would go to the AMS.

Consequently, O'Connor said, "it was a no-win situation." Even if students had supported the SHA on the vaguely-worded question, he said, the question would have left the group without any clear mandate or accountability—a situation he considered intolerable. "The question would have made the SHA a loose cannon," O'Connor said. "It was never my intention to introduce a loose cannon."

O'Connor criticized the AMS for "rewording the question drastically."

"In my opinion they were definitely not empowered to reword it the way they did," he said. O'Connor suggested that the AMS had the right to decide whether the funding should be mandatory or opt-outable, but not the right to overhaul the question.

But AMS Chief Returning Officer Darren Littlejohn said, "the only thing that really was changed [was that] we removed the section that referred directly to the AMS."

Since the SHA lacks official capacity with the "AMS," Littlejohn said, it would have been improper to include the question's reference to the AMS.

Asked to speculate what caused O'Connor to drop the question, Littlejohn said, "I think it was the editorial scrutiny from the Queen's Journal." He added, "procedurally, I don't think anything unfair was done to him. His reasons were more personal."

O'Connor maintained, "I came up with this idea in good faith ... my ideas were misinterpreted to make it look like I was some sort of con-artist."

Mother of murder victim criticizes criminal justice system

BY MICHELLE PELLEGRIN

Priscilla de Villiers brought the story of her daughter Nina's murder to an audience of 200 in Dinning Auditorium Tuesday night, arguing for an overhaul of the criminal justice system.

De Villiers was speaking at a forum on violent crime sponsored by Canadians Against Violence Everywhere Advocating its Termination (CAVEAT), a lobby group started by de Villiers in 1992.

A panel which included de Villiers, a representative of Corrections Canada and a spokesperson from the National Parole Board, discussed penal reform.

De Villiers told a stunned audience the story of her daughter Nina's 1991 abduction and murder, which has made national headlines and has spurred debate about Canada's justice system.

According to de Villiers, her daughter Nina was lured off a jogging path in Burlington by a killer who pretended to be injured and asked for her help.

She was held for eight hours at gun point, threatened, sexually assaulted, and then murdered, de Villiers said.

Her killer, who later committed suicide while being chased by police, had been out on bail with a long history of violent behaviour.

De Villiers said our society is not protected by its justice system. "How many people are we going to sacrifice before we look at what has gone on in the past," asked de Villiers. "We can look at the past and take precautions."

Both of Nina's parents became active in the fight to make changes to Canada's criminal justice system after her murder.

De Villiers said, "there is more interest taken in a road traffic accident" than a violent crime.

A petition calling for a restructuring of the Canadian justice system, circulated by CAVEAT, has been signed by 2.5 million Canadians so far.

At the forum, Corrections Canada's Assistant Deputy Commissioner, Tom Epp, addressed de Villiers's concerns.

Epp said de Villiers' message was sobering, and admitted that Corrections Canada makes mistakes.

"Our performance is measured by our failures," said Epp, "not our successes."

"Offenders of the law have the same rights as everyone else with the exception that they are locked up," said Epp.

National Parole Board Representative Carol Sparling said that in Ontario, violent offenders sentenced to under two years can apply for unsupervised parole after serving two-thirds of their sentence.

BRENT DAVIS

Street Captains planned

AMS launches ghetto liaison program for next year
BY MICHELLE PELLEGRIN

A need to create a greater sense of community in the student housing area is the main motive for the Alma Mater Society's Street Captain plan, proposed for the 1994-95 academic year.

"Lots of people don't know their neighbours," said AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin.

Under the program, a group of volunteers would agree to serve as a liaison between their block in the ghetto and the AMS.

Students living in the ghetto often don't know about events run by the AMS and other campus organizations, Nevin said. She thinks this program would eventually solve that problem.

Nevin likes the program because it will be "simple, cheap, and effective," operating at a very low cost to the AMS.

Besides arranging social events, the program will provide Street Captains with CPR and first aid training.

Nevin said the proposal is under development and hopes it will be a priority on the incoming commissioner's agenda.

Street captain programs are presently in place at other universities across Ontario, including the University of Western Ontario. Nevin would like the program to focus on building a sense of community in the student area rather than emphasize security like the Western program.

"Knowing who your neighbours are will naturally increase the security of student housing," said Nevin.

Lisa Rothschild of the Communication Commission said that for the program to be successful, "it is important that students and campus groups are aware and take advantage of it."

Rothschild said students in the ghetto often feel isolated, and the program would make them feel more "included with what is happening around campus."

Nevin said the program has been in a "constant state of development since September." Polls and questionnaires, which have been taken in Mackintosh-Corry, residences, and at various clubs, have met with a positive response.

"Students are obviously interested," she said.

To lower the cost to students, Nevin said the AMS is seeking outside grants, but holds little hope since the financial situation of many community programs is limited.

The program is expected to start next year, concentrating on the immediate area of student housing.

Donation

CONTINUED FROM ONE
September, a major collection such as this would be important in attracting quality students and professors.

The priority of the Art department at this point, McTavish said, is to find funding to expand and renovate the Art Centre so that it could house Bader's collection.

This endeavour is nothing new, as the federal and provincial government conducted a major feasibility study in 1991 to determine the centre's potential for growth.

Both governments have advised the art centre to apply for capital funding under the government's infrastructure program.

Groups need municipal backing to apply for funding from the infrastructure program, and Tuesday night, Kingston town council voted to sponsor the art centre's application.

In addition, the art department is currently campaigning to generate funding from both the public and private sectors. McTavish said the university is "lobbying the government, making certain that elected officials and bureaucrats know about the importance of this project for the whole nation."

And Queen's, proceeding as though the funding will go through, is currently in the process of finding an architect. In the meantime, McTavish said, "we're keeping our fingers crossed."

McTavish had high praise for Bader, saying that this donation would be typical of his generosity. "Long before the Baders made the gift of Herstromceux, they had been very good friends of the Art Centre," he said.

Bader has already given the art department an endowment for conservation of works of art, endowed a chair of baroque art at Queen's, and donated money toward the perspective building which would house his collection.

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS
HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

SMALL BUSINESS ONTARIO

START A VENTURE
CREATE YOUR OWN JOB

BE YOUR OWN BOSS

As a student you'll probably be looking for a job next summer. You might be thinking about starting your own business but don't know how to get it off the ground.

The Ontario government has a program that can help you. It's called "Student Venture". And it offers Ontario students wishing to own and operate summer businesses a start-up loan of up to $3,000 interest free.

Applications and brochures can be picked up at your local Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Business Self-help Offices and at your guidance or placement office.

Or you can call us on our Youth Hotline at 1-800-387-0777

We can give you all of the details.

STUDENT VENTURE

Contributing to future successes by building business skills today.

Student Venture is a program sponsored by the Government of Ontario, in cooperation with the Royal Bank of Canada, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and local participating Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade.

Information disponible en français.

Gay literature donated to Douglas library

BY ELIZABETH IRELAND

Queen's alumnus Paul Rae recently decided to donate several books on homosexuality to Douglas Library, in an attempt to alter the atmosphere of what he calls a "homophobic" campus.

The books include such titles as Becoming A Man, Lesbian Coming Out Stories and Now That You Know. They deal primarily with personal accounts of individuals struggling with their sexuality or coming out of the closet.

In a letter that appeared in the Queen's Journal on March 18, Rae—who graduated from Commerce in 1988—wrote, "I have sent books that would have helped me during my years at Queen's."

There are currently 71 entries to be found under the search heading "homosexual" at Douglas Library. Unfortunately, many of them have titles such as Homosexual Desire In Shakespeare's England or Sexual Deviations In The Criminal Law.

Dianne Cook, the coordinator of the collection development at Douglas Library, described the donations as "very worthwhile material that we would not have been apt to buy simply because of budget problems."

"Many people are dealing with their sexuality at the university age and it helps to read what others have gone through. Years ago we might have picked up these titles for the same reasons as our donor, but now our budget prevents it," said Cook.

"The new titles fall more under the 'popular' category," said Cook. "Our other books are quite scholarly or medically related."

Julia Lipinska, a board member of the Lesbian and Gay Association of Kingston, said, "I'm glad he donated books on this topic and he made good choices. It is great to have as many copies of this material as possible on campus."

However, Lipinska did take issue with one part of Rae's letter, in which he wrote that he hoped the anonymity of Douglas Library would be more appealing for students dealing with their sexuality than the Grey House.

Lipinska criticized Rae's attitude toward the Grey House, saying, "I disagree with him perpetuating the belief that the Grey House is 'the Gay House', when it has other functions. He seems to be discouraging people from using the service of the LGA, which is unfortunate."

Lipinska stressed that the LGA is composed of concerned people who represent every stage of the coming-out process. "Rae's attitude seems to foster isolation, which is a big problem for gays and lesbians. Nobody is going to be forced to come out of the closet by the LGA," she said.

Lipinska said, "at least he is not denying there are problems at Queen's, and it is excellent he expressed the liberating feeling of coming out of the closet in his letter."

And Rae is content that his donation will fill a gap at Queen's. He reasoned, "I need to beam back a ray of hope to... gay men and women."

The books are currently catalogued and easily available at Douglas Library.

Marriott strike still a possibility

BY MEGAN EASTON

Marriott part-time workers may soon join the full-timers in a legal strike position, according to union representative Bruce Dodds.

Part-time employees will take part in a mediation session with Marriott management during the week of April 11-15. If these talks fail, the workers will be in a strike or lockout situation.

"We'll be working to conclude a deal," Dodds said. "We want one very badly. But there's no question that if the company is unwilling to grant pensions and job security to full-timers, and to grant equality to part-timers, there's going to be a confrontation."

When asked about what kind of meeting he anticipated with the part-timers, Marriott General Manager Jim Fougere said, "from the company's point of view we're continuing to negotiate in good faith with the part-time employees to attempt to arrive at a first contract, so that's the position we go into those meetings with."

On March 16, Marriott management presented a final offer to full-time workers. This package expired on March 23.

Dodds said full-time employees have "no interest in the package" as "it came nowhere close to addressing the issues that the full-timers have raised." The workers are asking for guaranteed hours, pensions, and benefits.

The university administration hired two consulting groups to investigate food operations, and one of the groups recommended waiting one year before signing a food contract in order to gauge staff and student needs.

Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams said the administration decided against this proposal. Instead, he said, the administration opted to follow the consultants' other suggestions, specifically to negotiate a new contract this year with a single company.

Dodds criticized this move, saying, "what students are looking at here is five years of the same, an approximate price tag of $60 million, very little say, and poor prospects all around."

Until the contract issue is resolved, all parties agree that a strike could still occur.

If it does, Fougere said food services will continue to be provided. He said a strike plan has been submitted to the university administration, but would not comment on the substance of this scheme.

"It is not our intention to have any significant portion of our food service interrupted whatsoever," Fougere said. "With very few exceptions, and they are minor ones, service will continue to be provided as it is today."

Erin Dearie, vice-president (operations) of the Main Campus Residents' Council, said Marriott management has spoken to all the residence dons about how food operations will continue in the event of a strike.

According to Dearie, the company received several letters from students expressing concern about the possible use of disposable dishes.

She said Marriott assured the dons that they will use regular plates and cutlery, and will distribute reusable plastic mugs to all students.

Canadian Union of Public Employees local 229, which represents the full and part-time workers, along with several campus groups, has formed a coalition—called "Gut Feeling"—aimed at reforming the university's food operations.

Dodds said food services' finances should be more open, since according to him, "here [at Queen's] the money around food is treated like the Manhattan Project." He added that the system should be accountable to a board of users.

Gut Feeling also seeks improvements in waste management and labour relations. Yesterday, Gut Feeling sponsored an open forum on food operations, featuring the president of the University of Guelph speaking on a university-run food system.

MARCH MADNESS

THE FINAL FOUR MEAL DEAL

4

FOOD TO DOUBLE DROOL OVER

LARGE
PIZZAS
ANY 1 ITEM

19.99

+TAX DELIVERY AVAILABLE

Little Caesars Pizza
When you make pizza this good, one just isn't enough.™

Downtown
544-1309

Township
384-3733

Which came first?

Growth of Dinner 547-POOL

S.T.A.R.

STUDENT TEAM ON ALUMNI RELATIONS HAS EXTENDED THE DUE DATE ON COMMITTEE CHAIR AND MEMBER APPLICATIONS! JUST FOR YOU!!!

- Parent Orientation Day
- Cake Service
- Creative and New Ideas
- Career Buddy Program
- Send-Off Committee
- Guess Who's Coming to Dinner
- Alumni Hosting Committee
- Future Alumni Committee
- Alumni Children Program
- Photography
- Senior Alumni Liaison

CHAIR APPLICATIONS DUE: MONDAY, APRIL 3, 1994 AT 4:00 PM AT THE AMS OR ALUMNI AFFAIRS OFFICE

MEMBER APPLICATIONS DUE: WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1994 AT 4:00 PM AT THE AMS OF ALUMNI AFFAIRS OFFICE

FOR MORE INFORMATION PHONE THE STAR OFFICE AT 545-2060

OPIRG monitors El Salvadoran elections

BY SARAH EDDY AND JODY SUGRUE

After witnessing the first democratic elections in El Salvador's history, OPIRG representative Michael Crumme is skeptical of how democratic the elections really were.

OPIRG, the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, recently sent volunteers to El Salvador to monitor that country's election process.

"It may have been a lot more democratic than the elections they've had in the past, but I wouldn't call it a fair vote by any stretch of the imagination," said Crumme. "There are concerns about irregularity in the way voters were being registered and about the continued violence of para-military groups."

Crumme described military "death squads", trained by the El Salvadoran government, which have targeted popular organizations in an attempt to derail the democratic process and intimidate coalition guerrilla groups.

He told The Journal that "in the past 14 years they'd killed thousands of people in what they call 'extra-judicial assassinations'. In other words, they've targeted anybody that they see as an obstacle. This includes... anybody who might be sympathetic to the [coalition of guerrilla groups led by the FMLN]."

He further added that several members of the coalition have been killed or have received death threats. Crumme said that "in the past year, 38 former FMLN members, some of them candidates in this election, have been assassinated. There have been investigations, but there have been no arrests."

According to Crumme, the unstable political environment hardly allows the elections to "reflect the political diversity of the country." He also explained that the involvement of the United States government has added to the instability.

"The U.S. has been too involved, they have spent millions of dollars a day to prop up the military and the government. The conflict [between the government and the FMLN] would not have gone on for as long or been as bloody if the U.S. had not been involved," he said.

OPIRG intends to send another monitoring team to El Salvador in May to perform a follow-up on the elections, the results of which have yet to be declared.

AMS creates new City Hall post

BY SYLVIA WARDEN

In light of recent student housing controversies, the Alma Mater Society has set its sights on Kingston City Hall and created a Municipal Affairs Commission.

The decision to create a position to deal specifically with the needs of students as a community and neighbourhood had been discussed for some time. The new commission will take over many of the duties which were previously the responsibility of the Communications Commissioner.

Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin said the commission will address a number of issues and concerns that in past years have not been addressed.

Nevin said that in the past the mandate of the Communications Commission was too broad to deal effectively with municipal concerns.

The decision by the AMS to recognize the importance of students' concerns as citizens of Kingston represents a strong political statement, according to Nevin. Additionally, she said, it means the AMS recognizes that the area surrounding the university is a community.

The mission statement of the newly created commission outlines four areas of jurisdiction:

- providing students with information on a broad range of housing and community information;
- lobbying the administration and the municipal and provincial governments on municipal affairs;
- providing students with specific services related to housing and neighbourhood development;
- working to consolidate the efforts of a variety of other organizations and committees within the AMS in providing a sense of neighbourhood.

Nevin said that like all commissions, the Municipal Affairs Commission will have "room for modifying [its] job to suit immediate needs."

In particular, the commission will be involved with the Housing and Policy Committee and will continue research of the Housing Area Task Force.

It will also deal with the implementation of the Street Captain program—an AMS scheme which will hire students to act as warddogs in the housing area—by September of 1994, and coordinate security visits to students' homes while they are away during major holidays.

The Municipal Affairs Commission will enjoy full status as a commission within the AMS. Nevin stated, with voting rights at Council and at AMS Assembly. The commission will also feature two deputy commissioners responsible for overseeing five sub-committees.

Boss interviews

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

The Senate Orientation Activities Review Board (SOARB) received the complaint and contacted the Commerce Society.

Wilkin said ComSoc met with the Orientation Committee on March 1, and the committee issued an official apology by the end of that week. ComSoc worked closely with SOARB, as it had a desire to deal with the incident "by the book," Wilkin said. The decision to dissolve the Orientation Committee was reached on March 11.

"To make the situation right, the Orientation Committee was disbanded. We focussed on creating understanding through discipline," Wilkin explained.

Although the original boss selections were preserved, further interviews were held in mid-March in the interest of fairness.

"Hopefully people feel the situation was handled properly," Wilkin said.

When asked to describe the offending elements of the interviews, Wilkin stated they included "questions of a personal nature completely inappropriate for an interview-type situation."

The comments made by another individual, on condition of anonymity, were equally guarded. "Basically it was a mistake, a misjudgment. The six people [the Orientation Committee] involved have paid a heavy price to show ComSoc is committed to positive change."

A letter of apology, written by Bobby Karabatos, Chair of the Commerce Orientation Committee, was issued to all boss candidates. "Unfortunately some of the questions used in the interviews were inappropriate," the letter reads, "because they were highly personal and, for many, embarrassing and degrading in impact."

Two faculty members, Rick Jackson, chair of the Undergraduate program, and Elaine McDougall, assistant chair of the Undergraduate program, were involved in the planning of the boss selections, but they were not present during the actual interviews.

Wilkin said Jackson and McDougall met with the committee on two occasions prior to the interviews to establish the criteria and format of the interviews. "They trusted the interviews would run smoothly," Wilkin said.

Ben Vaughan, Social Activities commissioner of the Commerce Society, has been named the acting coordinator of the frosh week activities. "I have inherited a great frosh week," Vaughan said. "It has been very well organized."

And Jason Boggs will be acting as Chief Boss for next year's frosh week, replacing Craig Petter, who was relieved of his position because of the manner in which the interviews were conducted.

REFERENDUM RESULTS

The following are the unofficial results of the AMS spring referendum:

GROUP	FEE	YES	NO	SPOILED
Union Gallery	$1.50	1839	767	1
Sailing Team	$0.35	1414	1220	9
Queen's Student Literacy	$0.50	2100	473	7
Studio Q	$0.25 increase	1514	1065	4
Fees for Student Constables are no longer optional.		1380	1196	9

-non-opt-outable

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45
&
Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch
and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service
available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

bell hooks

"Race and Gender:
The Future of Feminism"

Wednesday April 6th
8 pm

Grant Hall

Free Reception to Follow

Wheelchair accessible & ALS FM hearing devices available Free childcare available - drop-off beginning at 7:00 pm in the JDUC Parent Resource Centre

For more information call
545-2725 Ext. 4816

EUROPE CANADA
ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares, custom long haul fares

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance - Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 1029	Round World "Bare Bones"	from 1699
Sydney	from 1399
London	from 379	Round World via South Pacific	from 2399
Rome	from 629
Vancouver	from 329	Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess Street • 549-3553 General Travel
15 Montreal Street • 549-3561 Long Haul/Group Travel

6 UPSTAIRS BEDROOMS
LIVING ROOM, DINING ROOM, KITCHEN
BACK HALL & STORAGE
PARKING & GARAGE
303 FRONTENAC STREET
CALL MATT AT 546-9172
BOB AT 541-0979

MYLES ACRES

Party Facilities
Large Clubhouse
Hay Rides - BBQ - Full Meals
Outdoor Patio Licensed
For 3354 People
Fully Licensed Under L.L.B.O.

548-4170

ORIENTATION WEEK

THE PILOT HOUSE OF KINGSTON
A Friendly Neighbourhood Pub & Restaurant

featuring

Fish & Chips • Homemade Pies
Imported & Domestic Draught Beer

Sunday Specials for Students

265 King Street East at Johnson Street
Telephone 542-0222

High school students ponder a future at university

BY DAVE DOREY

An informal survey of Kingston-area high school students shows that many view a university education as their only plausible chance at getting a respectable job.

Laura Dineley, a student at Regiopolis-Notre Dame, said that universities offer a "higher standard of education." Many echoed her sentiments, saying that university is academically-oriented and overall a more professional institution than college.

Ernestown student Ben Mortimer feels that a college education, although it holds out the promise of securing a job quickly upon graduation, is not as promising from a financial standpoint.

"There isn't any money in it... university pays off in the end," he said.

Deciding which university to attend is a more pressing matter for some. Factors such as courses, campus, location, atmosphere and reputation can persuade each student in his or her choice.

For some, the choice is dictated by the field that they want to pursue. Some noted that college just doesn't offer the same, if any, facilities for those wishing to become a doctor or veterinarian, while conversely, universities may have little in the way of mechanical or technical programs.

Many say they aren't going to let money hinder their chances at an education. "I'm not going to make [cost] an inhibiting factor," said Dineley.

education but they don't support us money-wise," said Mortimer.

Kat Bujold, a grade 12 student, added, "they make it harder for people to go to university."

Views on how to make the university entry process better were varied.

Mike Murray, an OAC student at Regiopolis said, "I think they should do a standardized test like the Americans."

Some felt that interviews and portfolios could be used to better assess a potential student. "Good grades doesn't necessarily mean that you'll be an asset to the university," said Bujold.

Others feel that more skill-oriented courses should be offered, and some wanted to see courses that were more specialized to suit each student's needs.

Having Queen's close by allows for some Kingston students to live at home and avoid extra costs. Others simply want to escape Kingston and pursue an education elsewhere.

Graduating high school students must submit their marks to Ontario universities by April 16, choosing three Ontario schools of their choice.

*"They want us to get a higher education but they don't support us money-wise."
—High school student Ben Mortimer on government support for universities.*

Few students interviewed were aware of tuition hikes brought down by Ontario Minister of Education David Cooke. But many suggested that the Ontario Student Assistance Plan, the government-run program which offers loans to post-secondary students, is generous.

Students aware of the hikes criticized the government. "They want us to get a higher

STUDENTS PROTEST TUITION FEE INCREASES

Students protested the announcement of tuition hikes last week. BRENT DAVIS

GRAND OPENING APRIL 1ST

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK

GO-KARTS

NORTH OF 401 OFF DIVISION ON MACADOO LANE

KINGSTON GO-KARTS 547-6300

TWO FREE LAPS WITH THIS COUPON

EARN IT. SPEND IT. ENJOY IT.

Don't expect to be home early driving a new Volkswagen Golf. The optional 10-year/160,000 km powertrain warranty and starting price of $12,295* will give you other ideas. With its MacPherson strut independent front suspension, you'll want to take the long way, the highway, and perhaps a road with lots of sharp curves. But make sure there's a passing lane so you can fully appreciate the low-end torque of the motor-tuned engine and track correcting rear axle. Maybe you shouldn't go home. Go visit friends in another province. And when you finally park your car in bed just as the sun's coming up, the anti-theft alarm system will ensure that your Golf gets a good day's sleep. Actually, it only settles down because you have to. Or do you?

GOLF ENGINEERED FOR LIFE.

Pricing is based on MSRP for 2-door CL model with a 1.8 litre engine and 5-speed manual transmission. Options, freight, dealer prep and taxes extra. Dealer may sell for less. GTI model shown priced at $16,795.

Editorial

O P I N I O N

Administrating silence

Student input on decisions that have a great impact on student life has been a source of contention for Queen's students for many years past.

And while student access to decision-making committees has improved over the last few years, the sense of frustration remains.

The administration's response to the food services contract renewal and the Marriott contract negotiations has left some students wondering just how committed to student involvement the administration is. But the issue does not begin with lack of student involvement.

The issue begins with what appears to be a basic dislike on the part of the administration for open communication with students and groups on campus.

The administration has gone so far as to issue a statement on March 3 which said Queen's would not comment or interfere in the bargaining process between Marriott and its employees — as Queen's is not a party to these negotiations.

Queen's may not be party to these negotiations, but Queen's is definitely interested in the outcome. One of the line items in Queen's operating budget, for a total of $1.7 million, covers the salaries and benefits of full and part-time Marriott cafeteria workers. Also, a $450,000 line item is included to pay Marriott for managing the food services.

Throughout these debates, it has been difficult to separate the contract negotiations from the renewal of the food services contract. But one characteristic is common to both and that is the administration's unwillingness to comment.

Given that Queen's pays Marriott to pay the cafeteria workers, it seems that Queen's administration is in a position to comment on the negotiations.

A broader question poses itself. Why does the administration refuse to get involved on any public level in anything negative about Marriott?

Does Queen's stand to gain more from Marriott than just a couple of line items about worker's salaries and benefits and the management of food services?

If Queen's administration were more cooperative we would be left with a little more than just speculation.

The lack of interest in commenting on these issues reached its highest point when the March 3 statement was interpreted by Maureen Plunkett, an employee of the university, to have direct implications for CFRC news policy.

When CFRC received the statement, Plunkett interpreted the statement to mean that CFRC must follow the university's guidelines as a matter not of censorship but of newsroom policy. She insisted that she was not contacted by the administration specifically about the situation.

In a climate where open discussion and free opinion is discouraged, is it really necessary she be contacted specifically?

And while Plunkett says her position on the administration and Marriott is not one of censorship, why is it that three CFRC reporters feel the university is infringing upon editorial autonomy.

The fact of the matter is, the university controls CFRC's purse-strings. If CFRC ventures from anything more speculative than the basic facts, an automatic disciplinary system is already in place.

It is always dangerous to freedom of expression, speech, and the free flow of information when editorial autonomy is limited either implicitly or explicitly by financial concerns — especially when financial control is used in a coercive manner. Whether or not this is the case with CFRC remains to be seen.

By attempting to remain neutral, the university automatically reveals the fact it is not neutral. As an employer, the university runs the risk that by commenting, whatever is said could become precedent for its own employees.

However, as far as Marriott is concerned, it seems that everyone — except a handful of unionized workers — is afraid to speak publicly.

A Leonard Cafeteria manager threatened to throw a Journal reporter out of the cafeteria. The Journal was told that unless reporters had a meal plan or had paid for a meal, we were not to conduct interviews except by prearrangement through the Main Campus Residents' Council Food Committee. And this order was issued by Bruce Griffiths of Residence and Food Operations.

The climate of fear surrounding public debate of Marriott is disquieting.

As more questions are asked about Marriott, more questions remain unanswered. Questions about waste management, recycling, possible replacement workers and other allegations branch from the original issues raised, conjuring up an image of Marriott at Queen's that would silence any administration.

To restore trust and faith in the negotiations of both the contract renewal and employee contract negotiations, the administration must foster more open lines of communication.

The first step toward this goal is allowing CFRC the freedom to meet their editorial mandate — which definitely should not include pandering to administrative concerns.

The gloom and the glory

The Gloom

Surface is not the only target of backlash here at Queen's. On March 8, the Grey House received two misogynist phone calls. While the nature of the phone calls is not unique to the Grey House, the incident illustrates the growing intolerance on campus. Such actions must be condemned as cowardly reaction to the growing recognition of traditionally marginalized groups.

Concerns arose regarding loop-holes in the student-interest-fee referendum policies of the Alma Mater Society when the independently organized Student Housing Authority managed to get its plea for student funding on this week's referendum ballot. (The student responsible removed the question at the last minute). When AMS Assembly reviewed the fee request, they were unaware of the group's origins, accountability or financial structure. In the future, the AMS must demand more information to ensure the legitimacy of organizations requesting student funding.

Apathy persists among Queen's students despite recent events which suggest the contrary. The AMS Annual General Meeting, scheduled for March 15 and the ASUS Annual General Meeting, scheduled for March 24, both failed to reach official quorum. This lack of student interest not only made the meetings futile, but also illustrated non-excusable student apathy.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

the university's willingness to step outside traditional educational curriculae. The development of a Jewish Studies program is not only beneficial to those interested in Judaism, but it may also foreshadow further course development. The creation of departments in Middle Eastern and Islamic studies or Native Studies, for example, would establish Queen's as a truly modern university.

Queen's has been successful in steps towards employment equity. Since 1984, the cross-faculty average of tenure track appointments for women has risen from 21 per cent to 47 per cent in 1993-94. While employment equity is far from secure at Queen's and gender equality requires considerably more effort, these recent figures are encouraging nonetheless.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

Artists, both established and struggling, have entered into the foreground of the Queen's landscape. The movement toward the creation of an art gallery specifically designed to showcase student artwork is long overdue. Queen's students should be congratulated for financially supporting this artistic endeavour. And while student artists are hopeful for the creation of a forum to show their work, the entire art community is excited over the prospect of Queen's acquiring a priceless collection of seventeenth-century Dutch art. Alfred Bader, the Queen's alumnus who donated the Herstonceux Castle to Queen's last year, may donate the rare collection to his alma mater. Queen's must first establish the proper facilities to house the works, but their acquisition would further the international recognition of Queen's.

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

SUBTLE COERCION: STUDENT - PROF RELATIONSHIPS

THE EDITOR,

I would like to respond to the comments made by Katherine Philips in the March 1 edition of the Queen's Journal. The comments which I am referring to are those surrounding the student-professor relationship debates that are currently taking place at Carleton University. The remarks that were made by Philips display an extreme insensitivity and lack of understanding about the issue. I would like to point out that student-teacher relationships hold great potential to become manipulative and coercive and this should not be an issue that Queen's University should take lightly.

In The Journal, on March 1, Philips stated that student-professor relationships are not "something that can be mandated at all by the University." Philips supports this claim by saying that "it's pretty much a free world." What Philips neglects to account for is that in an academic environment the relationship between a student and a professor is not "free" at all. As Carleton University Students' Association's Director of Services, Theresa Cowan, points out in the same article: "this type of social activity creates a haven for harassment and coercion." Cowan emphasizes that professors "hold positions of power" and this power makes it very difficult for student-teacher relationships to be equal.

I think Philips' laissez-faire attitude is symptomatic of a larger problem in society. People, generally, only see these types of relationships as problematic if some form of blatant sexual or physical harassment transpires. The problem is frequently seen as an individual sickness, instead of a larger systemic problem. I have been involved in a student-teacher relationship that I found became quite manipulative, even though nothing physical or sexual ever transpired. Basically, the professor and I became friends and began to spend more and more time together outside of the university setting. Even though this relationship may have begun innocently enough, as the professor began to make more and more demands of me I felt increasingly powerless. In other words, I felt that I could not say no to him because I would risk doing badly in his course and lose the respect of someone whom I admired. In addition, all the lines became blurred (for example, was I a student? a friend? or something else?) and in the long run I felt that it was impossible to maintain a working relationship with this professor and I felt forced to drop out of his course.

I have heard a few stories from other students that resemble mine. Again, the power dynamic involved in these relationships makes it very easy for them to become manipulative and coercive. I think we need to recognize that harassment can take place in very subtle forms and we must think about implementing steps that can help us avoid these unfortunate incidents. Presently, Queen's "has conflict of interest guidelines which allow for evaluations to be carried out by a third party." Unfortunately, "conflict of interest guidelines do not work if the parties involved are not interested in calling attention to their relationship," (from another article in the March 1 Journal entitled "Sex, Profs and Students"). From the students that I have talked to, and from my own experience, the conflict of interest guidelines are not enough. Especially in instances where the harassment is subtle and, perhaps, not even intentional, there is a need for more alternatives for students.

I do not have any flawless ideas about the way these relationships could be regulated in such a way that students and teachers could continue to have effective working relationships while, at the same time, avoid abuses of power. However, I do believe that this is not an issue that Queen's University should be so quick to discredit. I also believe that the accommodations currently in place at Queen's are inadequate. At the very least, I know it would be helpful to have had access to some information about the potential these relationships hold to become manipulative and coercive. For now, I must say that Philips' extremely neglectful attitude has the potential to lead to many more harmful and disastrous situations.—ARTS '95, NAME WITHHELD

A REALLY, REALLY BAD NIGHT OUT AT AJ'S HANGAR

THE EDITOR,

I am writing to you out of frustration with the staff and management of AJ's Hangar. Since they started their famous "Dipsomania" on Thursdays, and started bringing in some notable bands, they have been "packing the place" far over capacity almost every night. This has obviously contributed to neglect and mistreatment of their customers. This past weekend alone, there were a number of incidents that have convinced me never to set foot in AJ's again.

On Saturday afternoon, my friends and I bought tickets for "Road Apples" that night. We were unsure of their policy on entry because of inconsistencies in the past, so we called AJ's around 7:30 to find out what time we should arrive (we did not want to stand in line). They said that they had been stamping people for about 45 minutes and we should get there right away because there was now a small line (which we would have to stand in even though we had tickets). We quickly ran down to AJ's to find out that they had lied to us. They had not stamped anyone, and they refused to stamp us until 9:00. We then came back just after nine to find out that it did not matter that we had a ticket, we still had to get to the end of a very long line. Throughout the rest of the evening, the staff at AJ's had little control over their customers because people were getting passed through the crowd, pushed to the ground and getting hurt.

My experience at the coat check was the final incident of the night that upset and angered me. After giving the coat check attendant my ticket, he arrived back without my jacket and said that my coat was missing. I explained to him what my jacket looked like and they finally found it. The other attendant held it up in front of me, rummaged through my pockets, and said that they would not give my jacket back until I paid them another dollar. I told them that I had already paid a dollar when I handed them my coat at the beginning of the evening, but they refused to believe me. How is it possible that

talking

What are your plans for the summer?

H E A R D S

"Catch some rays."
—MARYANN SELIGA,
ENG '97

"Drive Dickie Dee Ice Cream trucks."
—SEAN FAIRFIELD, COMM '94

"Belfast (boyfriend from Ireland) is coming to town."
—KAREN ENGLE, ARTS '96

"Not a job in sight."
—JODY ALDCORN, ARTS '94,
DAVID BAAR, PH.D. ECON

PHOTOS BY BRENT DAVIS

they have my coat, I have a ticket, and I didn't pay for it? Next, the attendant shouted mild profanities at me, told me he was sick of me, and threw my jacket right in my face. I was completely stunned at the incident because I truly believed that I had said nothing wrong. They were obviously a very unorganized group of people and took it out on a random customer.

It seems to me that the staff at AJ's think that it does not matter how they treat their customers, because they will keep coming back for their great deals and the great bands. Perhaps people will realize that AJ's does not have the best deals anymore and will not give AJ's the pleasure of their business (especially if they are treated in the same manner as I was treated). Only when AJ's decides to treat Queen's students as valued customers, rather than as cattle, will I return.

—ELISE MACPHERSON,
ARTS '95

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Real Live Slacker

ENTREPRENEUR
WITH SUMMER JOB MARKET PROSPECTS AS BLEAK AS THEY ARE, STUDENTS SHOULD APPLY THEIR FIELDS OF STUDY AND GO INTO BUSINESS FOR THEMSELVES...

WILL DECONSTRUCT FOR FOOD
PHILOSOPHY MAJOR, EH?

SILK-SCREENED T-SHIRTS CAN BE A GOOD VENTURE IF YOU KNOW YOUR TARGET MARKET...

PERSONALIZED T-SHIRTS FOR QUEEN'S STUDENTS

I ONLY NEED TO STOCK FIVE NAMES!
Heather Rob
Chris Jenn
Dave

CONSULTING IS A GREAT FIELD — OPEN A CONSULTING FIRM THAT HELPS CLIENTS DEAL WITH LIFE!

COST-BENEFIT ANALYSIS INDICATES YOU SHOULD JUST PHOTOGRAPH THE ASSIGNMENT SOLUTIONS...

PROJECTIONS STATE THAT YOU SHOULDN'T TELL YOUR PARENTS.
I SAY YOU GET HIM DRUNK

ME? I'M GOING TO START MY OWN CHILDREN'S TV SHOW!!!

OKAY, KIDS! IF YOU SEND UNCLE JOEY ALL THOSE COLOURED SLIPS OF PAPER FROM YOUR MOM AN' DAD'S WALLETS, I'LL SEND YOU A POSTCARD FROM TAHITI!

EDITORIAL BOARD EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Furse FEATURES EDITOR Allison Masemann	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey DeVilla PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Markka Glickman MISC/BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey DeVilla LITERARY LAPSUS EDITOR Megan Nichols	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder SPORTS EDITOR Brock Martland Lori Thorlakson ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Adrienne Down ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT Ryan P. Chen ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSUS Justin McKellar ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yarnell ASSISTANT LITERARY LAPSUS Tim Mitchell	BUSINESS STAFF BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Hamer SALES REPRESENTATIVE Fiona Macaulay ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE Stuart Kedwell HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao	THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL Thursday, March 31, 1994 • Issue 38 • Volume 121 The Queen's Journal, founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The cost of the Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8 Telephone: 613-545-2800 Fax: 613-545-6728 Internet: e-mail: journal@queens.queensu.ca Circulation 10,000 Issue 39 will be published on Thursday, April 7, 1994.
--	---	---	--	---

CONTRIBUTORS
Joanne Chivers, Dave Coleman, Ron Cunnane, Brent Davis, Christian DeBruijn, Frank Dixon, David Dorey, Sarah Eddy, Dandy Jokelos, Tara Lynn Keats, Jonathan Leigh, Michelle Pelletier, Sue Riedl, Sean Saraka, Fran Sergi, Denny Silverthorne, Sylvia Warden, Darryl Whetter

Culpability for political inaction of citizens under a government committing or supporting large scale violations of human rights is directly proportionate to the degree of political freedom those citizens possess. Under very repressive governments where the cost of dissidence is extremely high, say in Guatemala or China, an unwillingness to speak openly against government policy is understandable and excusable, the more so as these costs often extend to the dissenter's family and associates. While we greatly admire those courageous and really heroic individuals who voluntarily incur such costs (often amounting to imprisonment, torture, and death) for reasons of conscience, it would be absurd to presume to criticize on moral grounds those incapable of ignoring the bludgeon that is poised above their heads.

By the same formula, however, in relatively free societies where the cost of dissent is much lower and comparatively minimal, in western democracies for example, every citizen is to some extent implicated in every government crime he/she fails to oppose. Thus when Noam Chomsky described the genocide in East Timor as "the most obscene abandonment of world moral order since the Holocaust," he was referring, not merely to the Indonesian atrocities themselves—there have been others equally horrific—but also and primarily to the support of western nations and, by extension, to the failure of the citizens of those nations to condemn this support. Chomsky's remark should occasion us in Canada some very serious reflection as our government has been among the most complicitous in these atrocities. Before looking at the nature and extent of this complicity, however, a few words on the tragedy in East Timor itself are perhaps in order.

Indonesia, under President Suharto, invaded East Timor on Dec. 7, 1975, in direct contravention of international law,

Canada, East Timor and the New World Order and immediately began massacring the population. It is estimated that within six weeks 100,000 people were murdered. In the 19 years that have followed, at least 250,000 Timorese (more than one third of the original population) have been killed, "a death rate at least double that in Pol Pot's killing fields," to quote Dave Todd. Indonesian forces have employed rape, torture, imprisonment, starvation, and murder on a vast scale in their abortive attempts to crush the indomitable spirit of this valiant and fiercely independent people. In a harrowing documentary by British journalist Max Stahl entitled "In Cold Blood," (aired on CBC in 1992) the narrator tells of whole villages being destroyed, of children having their brains smashed out against grave stones, of the infirm and elderly burned alive in their homes, of pregnant women having their stomachs slashed open, of people chained together in large numbers, laid out on the road and crushed beneath tractors, and other abominations equally horrible to relate. A more recent film by Mr. Stahl on the aftermath of the 1991 massacre in Dili (the central theme of the earlier film) describes how those shot but not killed in that atrocity were rounded up and taken to a hospital where they either were strangled to death, had their skulls crushed with boulders, were run over by military trucks, were poisoned, or were administered some equally effective memory purge. The exact death toll of this particular incident is unknown but is certainly in the hundreds.

And these are only a few of the countless crimes against humanity committed by Indonesian forces in their war of extermination against the almost completely defenceless citizens of East Timor in the past two decades. We stand aghast before such horrors and naturally, if naively, ask how they can occur. In a post-Holocaust world, a world where human rights are enshrined in international conventions and treaties, signed and purportedly enforced by the most powerful governments on earth, by governments capable of bringing a country the size of Indonesia to its knees in a matter of weeks, by those same governments, moreover, which are most vociferous in proclaiming their commitment to these documents and to the principles on which they are based, how, we ask, can genocide be allowed to occur? Answer: because these same governments are busy supporting and profiting from it. So much for the new world order. Consider Canada's behaviour (which, incidentally, almost exactly parallels that of the US) in this regard.

Canada abstained from the first UN resolution condemning the massacres and calling on Indonesia to withdraw from East Timor, voted against a similar resolution in 1980, consistently voted against all succeeding resolutions, and even, according to Parliamentarians for East Timor, a London based, non-partisan organization, actively lobbied to have the issue removed from the UN agenda. Fully cognizant of the situation in East Timor, Canada has also sold extensive military equipment to Indonesia throughout its occupation, including ammunition, military vehicles, transport planes, and helicopter engines. The Department of External Affairs even hosted an arms bazaar in the capital in 1984. However, as if these policies were insufficient tokens of Canada's commitment to human rights, we also made Indonesia the second largest recipient of our foreign aid.

The justifications offered by the Department of External Affairs for these policies range from the irrelevant: "we could not support the extreme tone of that [UN] resolution," to the Orwellian: "it is the line of action most likely to increase Indonesia's willingness to allow access to East Timor by international humanitarian organizations," and seem to reflect the embarrassment in which they were drawn up. Fortunately, the real incentives are not too difficult to discern. To quote Adam Zachary: "Indonesia is a key player in the Pacific Rim trade strategy...Canada enjoys more than a three to one trade advantage with Indonesia exchanging over $290 million in exports and about $70 million in imports...Canadian officials are hardly eager to jeopardize harmonious political and trading relations by rebuking Indonesia in the United Nations."

So, on one side of the scale we place our commitment to international law, to the UN charter, to human rights, to democracy, to liberty, in fact, to the principles and ideals which are at the heart of any civilization worthy of the name, together with the unutterable misery caused by 20 years of Indonesian atrocities, the 250,000 or so corpses they have created, and the continuing suffering of the people of East Timor, and on the other side we place a small percentage of Canada's economic interests. What sea-

EAST TIMOR CONTINUED ON PAGE 11

ABERFAN

In 1966, an awful disaster took place at Aberfan, South Wales. A part of a huge coal slag gave way and buried a school killing hundreds of children. A Methodist minister working with the bereaved families was asked by a B.B.C. interviewer, "What did you say to them?" The minister replied, "I reminded them of the Resurrection."

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the New Revised Standard Version of 1989, with funding in part from St. John's Parsonage (8.00, 9.15, 11.00) and St. Mark's Barrifield (11.00).

Are you a deserving member of the Arts & Science Undergraduate Society, who, through examples of action in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities, have made a noteworthy contribution to the Queen's community?

then you deserve the...

The ASUS Award

nominations are due on April 5th at 5:30 at the Arts & Science CORE, 183 University Ave. For more information call 545-6278. Interview times will be posted.

East Timor continued

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 10

sioned pragmatist in Ottawa could hesitate, knowing that in international politics a half-ounce of interest outweighs a metric tonne of principle and human misery? What we as citizens in whose name these policies are being implemented—for that is what democracy means—should consider very seriously is how comfortable we feel being made parties to this insane pragmatism and its consequences. It may have been possible to evade this question in the past as irresponsible media have chosen to withhold the issue from public scrutiny, but no longer. The continuous and untiring efforts of such dedicated and conscientious activists as Elaine Briere in Canada, Arnold Kohen in the US, Max Stahl in England, and many others who are actually committed to the democratic ideals we all profess, have brought the facts of the East Timor tragedy to light. By failing to act upon this knowledge we further implicate ourselves in Indonesian crimes since inaction is crucial to our country's continuing complicity in them.

Of course, we may wilfully choose not to face these unpleasant facts, to leave the unfortunate Timorese to their fate with a shrug of the shoulders, a few pious reflections on the nature of man, etc, and return to our favourite diversions. We may "insulate ourselves from this grim reality," in Chomsky's words. "By so doing," he continues, "we sink to a level of cowardice and moral depravity that has few counterparts in the modern world, and we also help to fan the flames that will lead to a conflagration that will, very possibly, engulf us as well."

—BROOKS KINO
GRAD. STUDIES, PHILOSOPHY

OPEN FORUM PROPERTY STANDARDS AND YOU

THE EDITOR,

It was with great surprise that I read that the AMS Communications Commission is "the world's authority on Kingston Municipal Affairs and Housing Issues" in the Spring Referendum article written by the Student Housing Authority. As this year's Communications Commissioner I would like to respond to several misconceptions about Property Standards procedures and the role of the AMS in enforcing property standards.

I read with amusement that were any student to call me with a question about enforcing property standards in their rental property, I would "tell them" what need to do [sic]—namely to document the problem systematically. The article then engages in a lengthy discourse aimed not so much at helping students to deal with any problem they may have, but rather, to "simply...proving what every student already knows" about the state of repair of many properties in the student housing area.

Property Standards enforcement currently works on a complaint-based system. This means that if you want that broken toilet or crumbling wall fixed you have to go to the Property Standards Department because it is unlikely that they will come to you. The procedure is actually quite complicated, and perhaps intimidating at first glance. Here is what to do. If there is some aspect of your rental accommodation that you think requires the attention of property standards, the health unit, or the fire department, you can call the Communications Commission, Queen's Legal Aid, or the Town Gown Office to confirm that your problem should be their problem. You can also, however, go straight to the Property Standards Department. Their office is listed in the Municipal Blue Pages.

Complaints are filed under many categories, but you should be aware that a basic division is Inside (the unit) and Outside (the unit). Most students are more familiar with the Outside Variety: these are the ones many of us receive to mow the lawn or remove the sofa from the front porch. Property Standards will periodically send its officers around to issue work orders for the outside kind, internal ones they can't file until you invite them into your home.

What I recommend students do before they file a work order is to call their landlord, perhaps the problem can be rectified before it goes through the Property Standards Department. However, if your landlord is unavailable (or uncooperative), file the complaint. If the situation is one that can be addressed by Property Standards, they will issue a Work Order to your landlord or the property manager. This is an Order to Work and your landlord must comply by law. Where the system sometimes breaks down is that many students are nomadic and move before the problem has been addressed; the landlord then defers the work order because no one is complaining (the Property Standards Office works on a complaint-based system, see above).

While this whole process may seem a little convoluted, it can get the work you need done. One thing students should do is ask outgoing tenants if anything needs attention. If a complaint hasn't already been filed, file one right away. If the landlord tries to defer the problem until you move away, tell the people moving in about your complaint and get them to follow up on it. Leave the work order taped to the fridge. You could also invite Property Standards, the Fire Department or the Health Unit to do a general inspection of your house when you move in.

The Student Housing Authority claimed that after it compiles its data base "we start tapping shoulders downtown City Hall is going to start enforcing its Property Standards Bylaws or we're going to file a complaint with the Ontario Municipal Board." There's a problem with this idea. While I agree that some kind of collective action should be taken, this one isn't it, for the very simple reason that the OMB has nothing to do with Property Standards. The Ministry of the Attorney General states the OMB is "an independent administrative tribunal which hears applications/appeals on municipal and planning issues." Issues that this body addresses include zoning, subdivision plans, official plan, land compensation under the Expropriations Act, and municipal capital expenditures and debentures (Municipal Act). Action that would be taken by the AMS with regards to the Planning Department would be of a civil nature and unless we could demonstrate damages of one kind or another, we may not be too successful through this route. Rather we should seek to simplify the complaints process and educate the student body to use it quickly and effectively. The AMS is not a police body, it is a student government and a resource for students.

The last point I would like to make is that in an area as large and diverse as the Student Housing Area, no serious action can take place without widespread support. There will be no substantial changes made to the area—even in spite of a referendum question—until students take it upon themselves to care about the neighbourhood they live in. I hope one day to return as an Alumni and see that this change has taken place. Until it does, I would invite any student that has a complaint or concern about the enforcement of property standards in their rental units to call me. I can be reached at the AMS office at 545-2732, or by e-mail at amscomm@qedc.

ORA NEVIN, ARTS 94 AND AMS COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSIONER

ASUS wants you...

is looking for Committee Chairs and Members for the following committees

Prison Visitation's Heart & Stroke
ASKUS Kids 4 Kids Balloon-o-Grams Childcare
 Undergraduate Review Elections Team March Break
Mosaic MindFind Social Future Link
Speakers Environmental Artsfest Bike Right
THEME Buddies AIDS AWARENESS

Committee Chair applications are due TODAY and Members applications are due on April 8th. All applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University. For more information, call 545-6278.

Get Involved!!!

APPLICATIONS HAVE BEEN EXTENDED FOR:

Education Commission

- Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Issues Committee
- Women's Issues
- Queen's Environmental Action Group
- Author's Committee
- Speaker's Committee
- Human Rights and Social Responsibility
- Hidden Hunger
- AMS Committee on Developmental Issues

APPLICATION FOR CHAIRS DUE: MARCH 31, 1994 AT 4:00PM AT THE AMS OFFICE COMMITTEE MEMBER APPLICATIONS DUE: APRIL 5, 1994 AT 4:00 PM AT THE AMS OFFICE

Communications Commission

- Communications Strategic Planning
- Events Committee
- Public Relations Committee
- Advertising Committee :
- Press Committee
- High School Liaison

APPLICATIONS FOR CHAIRS DUE: APRIL 3, 1994 AT 4:00 PM AT THE AMS OFFICE
 APPLICATIONS FOR COMMITTEE MEMBERS DUE: APRIL 5, 1994 AT 4:00 PM AT THE AMS OFFICE

Campus Activities Commission / Academic Affairs Commission

APPLICATIONS FOR COMMITTEE MEMBERS DUE TODAY!!!! MARCH 31, 1994 AT 4:00PM AT THE AMS OFFICE

Municipal Affairs Commission

APPLICATIONS EXTENDED UNTIL TODAY, Thursday, March 31th, 1994 at 4:00pm for:
 Deputy Research and Education
 Deputy Programmes and Events

APPLICATIONS FOR THE FOLLOWING POSITIONS ARE STILL BEING ACCEPTED:

- Housing Issues Committee
- Community Development Committee
- Campus Masterplan
- Policy and Position Papers
- Housing Issues Task Force Implementation
- Street Captains
- Housecheck Programme
- Bike Right
- Large-Item garbage pick-up
- Exchange Centre
- Operation Safeguard

CHAIR APPLICATIONS DUE: APRIL 3, 1994 - 4:00PM AT THE AMS OFFICE
 COMMITTEE MEMBER APPLICATIONS DUE: APRIL 5, 1994 - 4:00PM AT THE AMS OFFICE

FEATURES

One woman's take on Generation X

Are you irate about being turned into a target market?

I read Generation X about two years ago and since then, I've spent a lot of time thinking and talking about the book and our generation. The following are just a couple of reflections about some things that have been on my mind since.

'Generation X' has become the definitive label for those of us under 30, the generation following the baby boomers.

The term 'Generation X' acquired its present cachet after Douglas Coupland's book, Generation X, was published to great it is like to face the future that we do.

The 'Gen X' phenomenon originates in our generation's real experiences and feelings about the world. We face a very different future than our parents could ever have dreamed of: we are the first North American generation in hundreds of years that will not surpass the previous one in wealth and standard of living. The likelihood of us owning a home of our own is very slim. Real wages have dropped below 1970 levels. Federal and provincial generation, but I argue that those generalizations are very different than the ones the boomers, the media, and advertising make.

I see the Boomers condemning us because we are not what they were. The students of the 1960's made great changes in our society, challenging the status quo and reshaping the social world, and that is not to be denied or to be denigrated. To expect the very same of us, however, is ridiculous. Rather than 60s-era idealists, we are realists. We have inherited the results of the Boomers' adventures: we are faced with problems they never dreamed of, issues that didn't even show up in the science-fiction of 1969.

My intent here is not to whine, not to emphasize how hard-done-by we are as a generation, nor to gripe about losing the genetic lottery and being born 20 years too late for free love, idealism, social protest, acid trips, and seeing Jimi Hendrix live. I would have loved to have been an American hippie in Haight-Ashbury or been involved in the Paris student protests in 1968, but as fate would have it, I am a Canadian born in 1973. It's just not the same, and there's nothing to be done about it but deal.

One issue in particular stands out for me, as a Queen's student, as representing the unique perspective of Generation X: the deficit(s) and the accompanying massive cuts to social spending.

Our elders gripe and whine about the cuts, about their five per cent rollbacks or about losing a few days of work due to the social contract. Deal with it! The deficit is crippling, there is not enough money to go around, and we all have to take responsibility for the consequences. The only thing is that most of us weren't around yet when the orgy of social spending that created the deficit happened, and the Boomers at least got something out of it.

I think that Queen's students are pretty realistic about the whole situation. We realize that Canada as a country cannot keep operating like it has, and I think that we are willing to work with what we have and consider ourselves lucky to have it.

For example, people have categorized Queen's students as apathetic and indifferent about tuition increases. We have not taken to the streets and voiced our opposition to both tuition increases and the declining quality of undergraduate education. The question is, does such protest do any good?

The Rae government is going to cut regardless of protest—any protest short of tens of thousands of students will not affect anything. Perhaps I am cynical but I think we are being realistic: we will take our ten per cent a year increase, be thankful it wasn't 50 per cent, and work a few more hours at our seven-dollar-an-hour McJobs over the summer.

Some may call this apathetic, but you could just as easily call it pragmatic. The future we face is highly uncertain but for one thing: it will be dominated by Boomers all our lives. All we can expect to do is cope with the way things are now, solve what problems we can, and deal with the rest as it comes.

Karen Hall has great housemates and likes to frolic on the beach in Jamaica (nudge, nudge, wink, wink).

So you think we're apathetic, do you?

DEREK YARNELL

Simply the FOR OUR SENIORS

Whoever heard of a 'Generation X' discount? Senior Citizen's discounts really, really bother me. Think about it. I'm sure everyone is aware that anyone 65 and older (and sometimes, 55 and older) can take advantage of 'seniors days,' usually around 15 per cent off of merchandise or services, simply by vir-ue of their age. So Mrs. Jane Doe, Freedom 55 client extraordinaire, can waltz out of her Acira and into Shoppers Drug Mart and claim 15 per cent off, regardless of her income, and we students get to scrape by on 10 grand a year and pay full price.

I know that for some seniors on tight budgets, such discounts can make a real difference...but for many others, they're a peck of turning 55 that is simply a marketing ploy. Can you imagine the Bay or Eaton's offering a 'Student Day,' offering 15 per cent off for all university and college students? Don't hold your breath—it's all demographics, and it's going to get worse.

acclaim in 1991. Coupland is an X'er, and his book was arguably the first to explore the generational personality of the baby boomers. Since Generation X was published, though, the X phenomenon has taken on a life of its own.

We, Generation X, are told by the media and by our elders that we are apathetic, uneducated, unmotivated, self-centred, selfish, indifferent, and dispassionate. We are stereotyped as uncaring slackers, cynical and disillusioned, unwilling to become involved in the causes that our elders deem to be worthy. As the 'MTV Generation,' we have also been criticized for our supposedly sound-bite-long attention spans, and our rampant materialism/consumerism.

The problem is that the Boomers don't know what they're talking about. They've got no idea what we as a generation are really like, and what is important to us. nor can they purport to understand what deficits are at record levels and, finally, there just aren't (m)any good jobs out there.

Is it any wonder that we are not exactly chomping at the bit to join the real world? The attitudes we are condemned for displaying are a natural reaction to the experiences of our daily lives. The problem with this categorization arise when Boomers turn it into a marketing ploy.

Boomer-dominated media and advertising have made 'Generation X' a target market with simple, easily identified characteristics. And though a few of those characteristics may be shared amongst most of us, we are a collection of individuals with radically different views. It is impossible to characterize us all as slackers, as apathetic, as uncaring, or as TV junkies, 'net surfers, or globe-trotting consumer-culture dominated global teens.

I don't deny that there are a few generalizations that can be made about us as a

WHAT'S UP?

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

Pick up Uthall's Up forms at the AMS office. Lower 50¢ Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

APRIL

All The Jazz presented by Queen's University Student Music Educators' Association -- an interesting and informative jazz workshop featuring Phil Nimmons. Saturday April 9th, 9am-3pm, Dunning Hall. $5 QUSME member, $10 non-member.

Queen's Catholic Chaplaincy invites you to attend the Easter Weekend Services. Services will be held in Dunning Aud. Holy Thursday Mass: 8 pm, Good Friday Mass: 3 pm, Easter Vigil -- Saturday: 8 pm, Sunday Mass: 11 am. Note: Stations of the Cross on Good Friday will be at Newman House, 192 Frontenac St. at 7:30 pm. Everyone welcome!!

Join the Macedonian Club today for future career opportunities! Call Cary at 531-0354.

Volunteering in this summer at the Birth Control Centre now accepting applications from those interested. Applications can be picked up at the INFOBANK (lower JDUC) or at the Birth Control Centre, 51 Queen's Cres. (next to Vic Hall)

LITERARY LAPSES

Mints and Candies

By Darryl Whetter

He'd known about his father's death for almost two hours and she was buying him a donut. She'd have let him eat her hand if he'd wanted to. He wouldn't even have had to ask.

He watched after her as she marched into the Tim Horton's. He thought the parking lot's cold pavement looked like the hide of a giant rhinoceros. But, of course, it had yellow stripes. She would want to know about all of this, she would listen to him without ever moving her eyes; he knew she would. Right now, his every thought would be considered essential. Right now, he knew there was no judgment. He would tell her everything and she would listen.

He wondered if the people who cleared the snow from the parking lot got free donuts. He thought that wouldn't be so bad, working before the sun came up with a double-chocolate and a hydraulic plough. But he also kept asking himself why he was thinking about these things. He kept asking, and he kept not answering.

From inside the car he could see the backs of balding heads, the blue, static moulds of geriatric hair, slowly saluting cigarettes, and the heels of idle workboots. A far-too-yellow poster in the window read, "You've Always Got Time for Tim Horton's." "I'll remember to tell that to my dad," he noted. He thought out each word slowly, with certainty. Or maybe he said them. He wasn't sure, the car seemed so empty.

Through the window he watched her paying at the counter. He wondered who had taught her to count. What numbers had she confused? He was extremely attentive; he had that slow, observational patience of a hangover. Everything seemed very close to him. Everything looked like it was just beyond his fingertips. He caught himself actually paying attention to all those people that were normally just extras in the shots of his life. He couldn't remember ever paying so much attention to anything. But once he started trying, he couldn't remember a lot of things.

Her re-entry into the car was announced by a slice of cold and an armful of smells: the coffee's buttery charcoal, the donut's dense sweetness, like over-ripe bananas, and the scratchy, dandelion smell of cigarette smoke written all over her like a signature.

With nervous, twice-cold fingers she gave him a fraction of a sour cream donut and set one travel mug full of hot chocolate between the seats. He thought that the mug was slightly too close to his arm, considerate, but encroaching. He didn't say anything though.

He was surprised that she'd even treated herself to a coffee; she looked embarrassed to be alive. He knew that she would nurse that coffee the entire three hundred kilometres, out of habit, not nervousness. Thinking that made him feel relieved and small at the same time. It was something that he knew, a crutch of familiarity. Her half-milk-half-coffee was something that he could place, but her bearing wasn't. Her wet brown eyes were perpetually flitting about, like tired birds with nowhere to land. She kept tucking her cried-in curls behind her ears, trying to hide them. Every movement was perfumed with indecisiveness. He wanted to ask her what was wrong, but then he'd remember. He couldn't believe that he could possibly be forgetting, but he felt like her sadness was something unfinished of his, tugging slightly at him.

All of their donuts smell the same, he thought. He was thinking that there was always an initial layer that obediently announced the flavour it was engineered to represent, and then there was a nauseating common denominator, a tenacious tank smell, hidden in them somewhere. Like rotten milk, or an old fridge. Or bile.

Two hours ago he couldn't keep his stomach inside of his body, now he was eating a donut. The bites that he got down felt like a new meal to him, like he hadn't eaten in days. Or maybe like he'd never eaten before.

When he arrived at what was once his home, his mother and maternal grandparents were trying tea and sandwiches. He shook his head in decline at the kaiser which his mother raised before him (for him?). The smell of her hand cream framed the smell of the sandwich. Amidst cheddar and dijon, he was taken back to locked bathrooms and furious teenage masturbation.

He couldn't eat again today, not on this day, not from this woman. All he could taste, all he would let himself taste, were the salty squirts inside his mouth as his molars pinched his cheek, tearing pieces away. It was a perversion of an acting technique designed to prevent timely laughter. He wasn't laughing, but then again he wasn't acting.

For how long would she offer sandwiches while he refused to offer tears? Would refusing this sandwich mean that it would be the last one offered? He knew, and had always known, that neither of them could ever suffer the embarrassment of effort. He looked at her and saw what wasn't said, that neither of them could stand the thought of getting caught trying. It was always clear that nobody lost this war, but it was impossible to know if anybody won (battles tallied with uneaten sandwiches and bare patches of cheek).

He'd lost his father and the neighbours kept bringing him date squares. They were one of those foods that he'd always just assumed he didn't like. They had a thick rooty aroma, like dirt or Earl Grey tea. And in fact they actually tasted like dirt, or Earl Grey tea, he thought, but he didn't mind so much. The Date Square Maidens always concluded their imposition on his time by asking if there was anything else he (or The Family) needed. "No," he always lied politely. He couldn't imagine that any of them had their eats to the ground of the local dope scene. His departure from that scene had been too long ago to try and renew old acquaintances. He wanted hash and they brought him apple pie.

Before the funeral she'd given him head and lifesavers (in the bathroom of his mother's house, between showers, with forced silence and whimpering gratitude). An entire pack of cherry lifesavers, what a wonderful thing not to have to search through the whole bunch of assorted, offering others away with feigned consideration. But when he got dressed, they didn't seem to fit properly in any of his pockets. He'd already opened the pack and now the paper wrapper and the tin wrapper and the wax wrapper were all fraying into uncooperating sediments. He couldn't get them covered properly, there was always something exposed. He'd put them in one pocket and just think of all the lint that would get magnetized to the top candy. He tried to just think

Short Story Contest

The response to The Queen's Journal's Second Annual Short Story Competition was overwhelming! With almost thirty stories submitted by twenty-two different contestants (strangely enough, the same number as last year), we certainly had an enjoyable and busy time reading them.

Sitting on the judging panel were five editorial board members: Sarah MacWhirter (Editor-in-Chief), Brock Martland (Assistant News Editor), Sian Beddoe-Stephens (Assistant Entertainment Editor), Megan Nichols (Literary Lapses Editor) and Tim Mitchell (Literary Lapses Assistant Editor), as well as one student-at-large -- Dave Coleman.

After much deliberation, we managed to narrow down the entries to seven. Judges ranked the stories, with a numerical value being assigned to each rank place. These values were then tallied up, giving us our two winners.

First Place -- Darryl Whetter
Second Place -- Mindy Hung
Both of our winners will be receiving gift certificates from Printed Passage Books. We would like to thank everyone for their very enjoyable entries.

of which pocket he'd prefer the lint of more, but his mind's tongue was uniformly repulsed. At the funeral he still kept shifting pockets. And he'd even came.

In the limousine, some of the ashtrays were full of the funeral home's never-ending supply of mints and candies, ammunition for coffee and cigarette halitosis. His mouth felt like an old, crumpled paper bag, but whenever he unwrapped a candy it always looked so alien, like something in the bottom of a test tube, he thought.

He was wedged in between his paternal grandparents. His long compacted legs were spread open so that he could fit in the back seat and his knees dangled over their little laps. She had lipstick on her teeth and nothing in her eyes. The ever-shrinking old man smelled like brandy and tears. Ontario Small Cask Brandy, found inside a shoe in a closet almost a dozen years ago by curious brothers. Now they would buy it for him whenever they were in town. Grandma would ask them to pick it up, the ambassadorial teetotaler in the marriage. It was always a modest mickey, never anything indicting. Today, its smell revealed what thin, little words could never do for a man who'd lost his only son. That smell more than any other, more than formaldehyde and more than dying flowers, made him want to cry.

The smell of the brandy (grains and cough-syrup) also reminded his ribs of the flask that was resting patiently against them (Wild Turkey -- Kentucky sipping bourbon). Smelling his grandfather and feeling his flask, he wondered if the death of a father, the death of a son, would be enough to put drinks between them. Up until now there'd been an unspoken denial of one another's drinking for the sake of decade-old caricatures. Up until now there'd been a lot of things.

Standing over a table of quarter sandwiches and wilted pickles, he thought that he'd figured out why there were never any entrees at funeral receptions. It wasn't because of convenience or cost or any of those practical things that live between deaths. It was because nobody wanted to insult the dead with a big, belt-loosening meal. He saw the little quarter sandwiches as fundamentally diplomatic; nobody dated flaunt the stamina of their digestive powers.

He investigated a butter tart that smelled like cardboard and molasses. He passed over sweaty cubes of orange cheese and a banana bar that smelled like wax paper. All the sandwiches had mysterious fillings that so resembled the texture of the bread that it looked as if they might not be fillings at all, just painted stripes.

He thought he wouldn't be showing off in front of his dad too much if he had one little triangle of peanut butter and honey. Pinching off the tip, he was washed over with an overwhelming smell of wet wool. He spat the bite out into his hand and threw the brown mess on the table. The smell still held him. He tried his fingers -- wet dog. He moved away from the table, but it wouldn't leave him. He smelled his jacket -- cheap incense maybe? The smell was always in his face, making him feel claustrophobic. He pushed towards the door. Mothballs? Grandma's mothballs?

The fresh air didn't wash it away. The smell still swam through the cold around his face. He was grateful for the supportive firmness of the cold under his thin shoes. The cold was blowing through his pants. The cold was blowing the wet warmth of his pants against the inside of his thighs.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

The Blue Afternoon

A Novel by William Boyd

Hardcover $27.99

OPEN A BOOK OPEN A MIND

Printed Passage Books

50 Princess Street

at the corner of Princess & King

Telephone: (613) 546-7650

FAX: (613) 546-5638

The WALKHOME SERVICE

will be open for the SPRING & SUMMER terms.

HOURS:
9pm - 2am
Monday to Saturday

WALK-HOME SERVICE
545-2662

IT WAS EITHER
CUSHION THE ENTIRE PLANET OR JUST YOUR FEET.

Air Max[®] for women & men

NEW SPRING MODELS ARE IN
RUNNERS' CHOICE
250 PRINCESS STREET • 542-2410

CLASS OF '94

DON'T LET CAREER OPPORTUNITIES PASS YOU BY!!!

KEEP IN THE KNOW

ENROLL IN THE GRADUATE REGISTRY SYSTEM

IT'S AS EASY AS 1-2-3

- 1) Beginning Tuesday, April 12 pick up your Graduate Registry form at Career Planning & Placement, St. Lawrence Building
- 2) Complete and return the form A.S.A.P.
- 3) Career Planning will match your qualifications against employment opportunities received then forward appropriate job descriptions directly to you. You decide whether or not to apply.

CUT ME OUT AND SAVE TILL APRIL 12!!!

SPORTS

'Off Colour' Night honours winners and participants

BY JOANNE CHIVERS
AND FRAN SERGI

After a year of sweat and determination, it was finally time for those pesky gym rats to shed their stinky sneakers, don semi-formal attire and party! Amidst a crowd of Intramural enthusiasts, chants and laughter filled the Skylight Dining Room at the Seventh Annual Intramural Banquet and Awards Ceremony.

Perennial BEWIC Sports Day rivals, Con-Ed and Loose Moose, were well represented as they relived their glory days. Many other faculties and independent teams also showed great spirit and made their presence known.

The highlight of the evening, contrary to popular belief, was not the sundae bar, but the presentation of major awards. Before announcing this year's award recipients, all those who have contributed to the success of the Intramural program through participation and/or organizational activities should be commended.

INDIVIDUAL AWARDS

The Edwards Trohy is awarded annually to the male who has made an outstanding contribution to the male's program. This year's recipient is a very deserving individual who has contributed countless hours to officiating on the courts, and sitting at the table for numerous committee meetings. Our congratulations are extended to Matt Murton of the Mining faculty. Equivalent to the BEWS Edward's Trophy is the PHESA Award, which is the top individual honour given in the women's program. Once again, we honour an individual who has been active in the program since she stepped foot on Queen's turf in her first year at the university (we hooked her early and managed to keep her!). Meredith Ash of the graduating Arts year was honoured for her outstanding contribution to the presentation of this award.

In honour of the WIC participant who has demonstrated outstanding skill and athletic ability, the ASUS Award was presented to Nancy Cox of Phys Ed. The Rehab '86 Sportsmanship Award was awarded to two deserving recipients — Joanne Chivers of Rehab and Jen Irving of Engineering — for displaying qualities of enthusiasm, leadership and fairness in Intramural play throughout the year.

For the co-ed participants, the BEWIC Cup is presented to the male and female intramuralists who have demonstrated that they are outstanding contributors to the spirit of the continually growing BEWIC program. This year's winners were Fran Sergi of Nursing and Kevin Meldrum of Arts '94.

UNIT AWARDS

After eight months of intense competition, the top three units for both participation and overall in the BEWS program were Meds/Rehab, Phys Ed, and Mining. On the WIC side, the top three units were Meds, Phys Ed and Engineering for both the Marion Ross and WIC Independent House Trophies. After the dust settled, the waves subsided and the ice was zambonied for the last time, Phys Ed emerged victorious for both titles in BEWS, while the Phys Ed women showed their male peers that they are equally dominant on the Intramural courts by taking both honours in WIC.

Congratulations to all winners and participants. Thanks for making this season a memorable one. See you all in the fall!

Intramural Society Awards: Many faculties acknowledge the participation and contribution of avid intramuralists by honouring them with Freshman and Upper Year Society Awards.

FRESHMAN AWARDS

Engineering Freshman BWS Contribution Award: Paul Malicki

Engineering Freshman WIC Contribution Award: Tammy Lynn Salway

Artsci '93 Award: Anita Ross
Dick Emmett Trophy (Arts): Robert Ree

Rehab Society Rookie of the Year Award: Bev Stiles

PHESA WIC Rookie of the Year Award: Jane Shearer

PHESA BEWS Rookie of the Year Award: Tim Davies

Aesculapian First Year Participation Awards: Hardy Schwartz/
Ken Thomas/Suzanne Ross

UPPER YEAR AWARDS

Arts & Science Cup: Todd Minerson

Artsci '91 Award: Toshia Bittenbinder/Heather Macdonnell

Ross Fraser Shield (Commerce Men): Chris Bent

Commerce Society WIC Award: Zoe Nutton

Randy Riel Shield (Phys Ed Men): Pete O'Grady

PHESA Shield of Athletic Merit: Lucie Fortier

Science '82 Award: Matt Murton/Kirsten Hodgson

Con-Ed Intramural Athletic Award: Dan Sloan/Heather Ironside

Helen Chan Award of Merit (Rehab): Jane Sinclair/Scott Fraser/MA Murray Award (Law): Lisa Gilviesy/Rich Wyruch

Queen's hosts International volleyball

BY DANDY JOKELOS

On Friday, April 8, Canada's National Volleyball Team will take on Russia in the Bartlett Gym at 8 p.m. This will be the final match of a six-city tour which begins Sunday April 3 at 3 p.m. at York University.

These two teams met in Alberta in February of 1993 for a similar six-match tour when Canada was in a "post-Olympic rebuilding phase" of its program. That event ended five matches to one in favour of the Russians. Canada is no longer rebuilding however. They now have an extremely talented and very physical team, which includes three Ontario natives: Steve Smith, a St. Catharines native and University of Waterloo grad; Mike "Chip" Chaloupka, a perennial crowd pleaser out of McMaster; and 18 year old Ontario team standout Paul Dnerden of London, who went to the Olympic program directly out of Oakridge high school. They will all be part of the action when Canada sets out to put the Red and White on the International Volleyball map. Canada proved that they are well past the rebuilding stage when they recently qualified for the 1994 World Championships, and are using this tour to prepare for this premier event.

What better way to start your end of classes celebration than in a packed house of Canada supporters? So get out your red and white, bring your Canadian flag and your noise makers and come on out!

Tickets are available in advance at the Queen's Physical Education Centre Information Wickets between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays, at a cost of $8 for general admission or $7 for Queen's students and groups of 10 or more. Tickets are $8 at the door, but the last time Queen's hosted an event of this nature it sold out. This event is selling quickly as well so plan ahead and get your tickets NOW.

For more information on the venue call 545-2500 or 545-6286.

Sailors could tack after Referendum

BY FRANK DIXON

Yesterday, students completed spring Referendum voting on the question of granting the Queen's Sailing Club a $0.35 interest fee, subject to individual opt-out, for the 1994-95 academic year. Although the voting result was unavailable at press time, the Sailing Club is hopeful of passage, so that it can begin to develop plans for next year's competitive schedule, and for new boats to train recruits. If the club is successful, it would end years of difficulties in securing adequate funding for its operations.

The Sailing Club is a registered club with the Alma Mater Society. According to club president John Curtis (Law '95 -- one of Canada's top sailors), the club focuses jointly on competitive sailing and on instruction for its members. Although its competitive sailing team uses the Queen's affiliation when it travels to regattas to compete against other (primarily American) universities, the team is not one of 40 Golden Gaels varsity teams which represent Queen's in Ontario conference sports and Canadian national competition.

Queen's currently fields more varsity teams than any other Canadian school. Golden Gaels teams receive funding administered by the University Council on Athletics (UCA), while the Sailing Club does not, according to Curtis. The UCA administers athletics funding, which consists primarily of the compulsory Student Interest Athletics fee, and the university-sponsored Athletics Fund. Some varsity teams, such as football, also receive substantial money from their alumni.

Curtis explained that the Sailing Club tried to obtain funding as a Recreational Services Sports Club through UCA, but was unsuccessful over a period of several years. "UCA didn't do anything for us," Curtis said. "The relationship went nowhere."

Sailing Club coach Ian Eskritt (B.Ed '94) said that UCA's failure to assist the club may have resulted from a combination of tight Athletics budgets and sailing's lack of recognition as a CIAU sport.

Queen's Athletic Director Rolf Lund, a UCA member who oversees the 29 Recreational Services Sports Clubs, was unfortunately out of town on business, and was unavailable for comment on Curtis' and Eskritt's statements.

Inter-university Coordinator Bill Sparrow, also a UCA member, said that Athletics is currently in the midst of reorganizing its Sports Clubs into two designations, Recreational and Competitive, to better serve their respective needs, but could not provide details.

Sparrow had no official comment on the validity of Sailing's attempt to obtain funding through the Referendum. "I can't touch that one," he said. "I just heard about it the other day. It's a political hot potato over here."

After their failure with UCA, sailors sought and received designation as an AMS Club in 1993. According to Curtis, the club has received small AMS Club grants of $50 during each of the last two academic years. Recently, the club decided to pursue funding through the Referendum, after learning that La-crosse, another AMS Club which competes in a manner similar to Sailing, had been successful in obtaining a $0.20 interest fee, subject to individual opt-out, in the 1988 spring Referendum.

Although Sailing's Referendum approach is unusual for a sports group, incoming AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner Dean Campbell said there was

SAILING CONTINUED ON PAGE 21

Queen's Sailing team out at sea, and paying their own way.

PHOTO COURTESY OF QUEEN'S SAILING TEAM

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

THURSDAY Muguorits with Hellbillies
FRIDAY Yellowbelly
SATURDAY Nothingheads

• PUB GRUB
• IRISH PINTS
• SUNDAY: $1.99 BREAKFAST 12pm - 5pm

Toucan

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S) TEL: 544-1966

FUTON-ASTIC PRICES

LOWEST PRICES GUARANTEED

(see details below)

LOWEST PRICE GUARANTEE
We guarantee the lowest price for any Futon and Frame Set or you get the FUTON COVER FREE! (Reg. price - $79.99).

1993 INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE

Hundreds of Futons and Frames to be cleared at the lowest possible price.
— NO REASONABLE OFFER REFUSED! —

futon frame outlet

Complete Line of Futons & Frames • Contemporary Furniture • Book Shelves
• Designer Removable, Washable Coverings • 100% Cotton & High Density Foam Core Futons
• Quality • Discount Prices • Phone Orders

282 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 547-3387

Because we're Vids in the Hole (oops, that should read "Hall") we're still offering all movies for a dollar every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. So come on in and rent a cheap flick (or a fine drama) from Vids in the Hall, open every day from 3-11pm in JDUC.

VIDS IN THE HALL

VIDS IN THE HALL

VIDS IN THE HALL

VIDS IN THE HALL

VIDS IN THE HALL

SPORTS

Three-peat after me

BY FRANK DIXON

What do the Toronto Blue Jays do for an encore? Well, what about becoming the first wild-card team to win the World Series? It will be their third straight title. That's what this scribe's crystal ball reveals for the 1994 baseball season, due to start Sunday night in the first year of realignment into three divisions for the American and National Leagues.

If Canada's team winning their third straight World Series isn't enough of a main course to upset American stomachs, try this for dessert: The Montreal Expos will also qualify for the post-season as a wild-card team, but their inexperience and shaky infield defense will hurt them in the first playoff round.

YOUNGSTERS GET CHANCES

Compared to last year, Toronto made very few changes in the off-season. The Jays didn't try to re-sign over-rated left fielder Rickey Henderson, whom they obtained in a late-season trade for phenom pitcher Steve Karsay which they will regret for years. Rookie Carlos Delgado, a 21-year-old catcher by trade, has seemingly won the battle for the left field job. Delgado's bat (.303, 25 HR, 102 RBI at Double-A, where he won league MVP honours) allowed him to lead the spring Jays in total bases, and gave him the edge over Canadian Rob Butler and rookie Robert Perez.

Star shortstop Tony Fernandez vetoed a one-year deal with the Jays for a sum believed to be in excess of $3 million. Fernandez was seeking a long-term contract, but wound up the biggest loser of the off-season when he had to sign a minor-league deal with Cincinnati for $500,000. Bad move, Tony!

To fill his shortstop spot, Toronto will go with veteran banjo-hitting, slick-fielding Dick Schofield and 21-year-old hot prospect Alex Gonzalez, who hit a solid .289 with 52 extra-base hits at Double-A last year.

Jays' fans held their collective breath when All-Star second baseman Roberto Alomar broke his leg playing winter ball in his native Puerto Rico prior to Christmas. But it seems Alomar (.326, 93 RBI, 55 SB, three straight Gold Gloves) has recovered enough to open the season.

Joe Carter, who last fall became just the second player to end a World Series with a home run, broke his right thumb last week when hit by a pitch, but the fracture doesn't seem serious. Indeed, Carter, who leads baseball with 893 RBIs in the last eight years, could even return for Opening Day at SkyDome on Monday against the White Sox in a rematch of last year's ALCS.

WARD, COX HURTING

Injuries to standout closer Duane Ward and setup reliever Danny Cox have Jayophiles most concerned these days. Ward, who had a league-high 45 saves and a stunning 97 strikeouts in 72 innings last season, has been bothered by bicep tendinitis and hasn't thrown a pitch in anger this spring. Although he is recovering, Ward may have to open the season on the disabled list. If he's out for an extended period, Toronto could easily finish in third place or worse. Cox, who held the Jays' staff together early last season, underwent arthroscopic shoulder surgery last week, and is gone until at least the mid-July All-Star break. Cox's unavailability and Ward's difficulties have created a major change in the Jays' plans, forcing enigmatic starter Todd Stottlemyre into the bullpen. That piece of strategy by Toronto manager Cito Gaston could work out brilliantly, since the talented Stottlemyre never reached his potential as a starter, and might find the focus required for short relief more to his liking.

Stottlemyre's place in the rotation will likely be filled by 25-year-old Scott Brow, who saw some mixed results action with the varsity last season. Brow will join Juan Guzman (40-11 lifetime, and 5-0 in ALCS games), ALCS MVP Dave Stewart, Pat Hentgen (19-9 last year in his second season), and lefthander Al Leiter (9-6) to round out a decent rotation.

Guzman, whose incredible stuff includes a 97 mph fastball and a 92 mph slider, must improve his control (AL record 26 wild pitches last season) to reach his potential of 20 wins. Although Stewart is 37 years old, his forkball is still one of the best. Hentgen prospered with his good fastball and excellent curve, and has to approach last year's performance. Leiter must stay healthy and contribute at least 10 wins. Lefties in the bullpen include the reliable Tony Castillo and free-agent acquisition Greg Cadaret.

IMPOSING LINEUP RETURNS

Toronto has more ways to win games than any other AL team. They can beat you with speed, defense, power, or pitching. Centre fielder Devon White, with five Gold Gloves, has the best defensive range in the majors. World Series MVP Paul Molitor, the 37-year-old designated hitter, is improving with age after hitting .332 last year with 111 RBI. First baseman John Olerud flirted with 400 into August last year, finished with a league-leading .363 with 107 RBI, and happily signed a new contract through 1997. Although trade rumours have swirled around catcher Pat Borders, he returns to his ironman's role which has seen him lead the league in games caught the last two years. Third baseman Ed Sprague is a solid hitter who keeps improving defensively.

Gaston doesn't use his hench much, but when he does, he can turn to versatile Darnell Coles, comfortable in the outfield or at third base. Backup catcher Randy Knorr has shown surprising power in limited action, and could play more this season.

Cito Gaston still hasn't won a Manager-of-the-Year award, despite two World Series wins and four division titles in five years. Since Gaston took over in May 1989, his teams have finished a grand total of two games out of first place (that was in 1990 when the Red Sox won the division). He hasn't earned many admirers for his strategic genius, but Gaston's greatest strength is his people management skills. Gaston turned Devon White's career around by believing in him. As the World Series-winning manager, Cito gets to pick the All-Star Game reserves again, so look for him to select a boatload of Jays in July.

This will be Pat Gillick's last season as general manager of the Jays. Gillick has become feared throughout baseball for his masterful late-season moves, which

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS? THEN GET THE ANSWERS

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

Number 1 P.E.I. Potatoes + Quebec Cheddar Cheese Curd = A Platter of JJ's Famous Quebec City Style Poutine

only $3.95

* Catch the Leafs at Jj's *

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

409 Johnson Street at University Tele # : 547-3771

SPORTS

Dix's Pix for '94

- AL EAST
- Baltimore 93-69. Orioles spent big bucks, want to collect.
 - Toronto 91-71*. Injured Jays start slowly, finish strongly.
 - New York 86-76. Yankees' bullpen too untested to challenge.
 - Detroit 85-77. Tigers' weak pitching offsets powerful offense.
 - Boston 83-79. Red Sox's power shortage stymies good pitching.
- NL WEST
- San Francisco 96-66. Giants are a virtual lock for division.
 - Los Angeles 85-77. Respectable pitching allows Dodgers chance.
 - Colorado 75-87. Amazing fans gave Rockies cash to improve club.
 - San Diego 57-105. Laughable Padres are basically a Triple-A team.
 - Wild Card team under new playoff format.
- NL CENTRAL
- Atlanta 100-62. Despite injuries, Braves still best in majors.
 - Montreal 91-71*. Youthful Expos will develop during season.
 - Philadelphia 89-73. Too many Phillies had career years in 1993.
 - New York 68-94. Mets have improved from terrible to mediocre.
 - Florida 65-97. Marlins didn't spend to build team over winter.
- AL WEST
- Texas 85-77. Canseco's return overcomes Rangers' shaky pitching.

Go Jays go

Continued from page 20

incredible fan support has allowed them to maintain the ability to pay stratospheric contracts to deserving players.

Realignment, which has brought about three divisions and four playoff teams in each league, will if anything make it easier for Toronto to qualify for the post-season out of the American League East, which has once again turned into baseball's strongest division. You can throw a blanket over the division, but fans of the Yankees, Tigers, and Red Sox will be crying in their beer again in 1994.

HOCKEY POOL RESULTS

1	Chetowen	176
2	Patience	161
3	Foogie	160
4	Farrar	159
5	Grizzly	159
6	190Barry	158
7	Jeffer	155
8	W.A.F.C.	152
9	Habchick	149
10	Number 1	147
11	Yo Yo Ma	137
12	Aliens	136
13	Good Luck	134
14	Leaflets	131
15	Senile	131

SPORTS

Sailing: two key points

Continued from page 19

nothing to prevent them from trying this route. Campbell explained that under current AMS policy, "any group which collects 600 signatures has the right to put their question on the Referendum."

There are two key points raised by Sailing's appeal for funding through a dedicated, opt-outable student interest fee. First: If the question passes, what is there to stop any Athletics group, be it a Competitive Club, a Recreational Club, or even a varsity team, from bypassing UCA, following the same avenue and asking for levies from students? At this point, apparently nothing.

Second: There is some potential for a double dip, should groups use the Referendum to top up their funding, over and above anything they get from UCA.

The Sailing team should be congratulated on their recent results which saw them place eighth out of 44 schools in their region. This performance has helped to build the good reputation of Queen's. Elite Queen's sailors have been paying the lion's share of their costs, which according to Eskritt, "have run on the order of $60-80 per weekend. The Club has also raised some money through our alumni."

According to both Sparrow and Curtis, sailing groups have been competing sporadically under the Queen's name throughout at least the past 15 years, with the periodicity probably explained more by funding difficulties than lack of interest or talent. Sailing may be seen as an elitist sport by many people, but that argument could be extended to virtually any sport nowadays. Have you checked out the price of hockey equipment recently? Sailing adds to the wondrous variety of activities available here, and it is this diversity which makes Queen's such a special place.

Because of the recession, budgets for athletics at Queen's and elsewhere are tight. The route followed by Sailing could be a viable alternative for sports groups, perhaps even varsity teams, who believe they cannot secure sufficient funding through UCA.

But it should be kept in mind that total Student Interest fees have been climbing steadily for years, and now total over $380. Opt-outs for any particular cause can potentially vary wildly from year to year. It is possible that opt-outs could fluctuate according to a team's performance, which is somewhat unfair. Even if Sailing wins their case, it could be problematic to rely on opt-outable fees to plan their activities. However, it would at least be an improvement over the present situation.

DO IT NOW!

ABSOLUTELY! NO DOWN PAYMENT NO INTEREST NO PAYMENT AT ALL TILL '95*

INCREDIBLE DOOR BUSTER
- 45.00 Value
- 22 only
$14.99

A.N.S.I. and SNELL approved "Headwinds" Bike Helmet
$14.99

MORE GREAT BIKE ACCESSORIES

- CATEYE REFLECTOR KIT $2
- NORCO FLASHING TAIL LIGHT $14.99
- AJUMBI U-LOCK $29.99
- CATEYE BLACK HALOGEN HEADLIGHT $18.99
- HUFFY YOUTHS ULTRA-LITE HELMET $15
- CATEYE "MIGHTY II" CYCLE COMPUTER $19.99
- LEADER SPRINT HELMET $23.99
- NORCO REAR CARRIER RACK $26.40
- RALEIGH "QUANTUM" $269.99
- MIYATA "ELEVATION 150" $399.99
- MIYATA "ELEVATION 200" $449.99

NISHIKI "BARBARIAN" on a suspension equipped bike!
- Shimano Altus A-10 "Rapid Fire Plus" shifters
- Full chromoly frameset
- Front fork suspension
- 21 speeds
- Reg. $649.00
$499

NISHIKI "NAVAJO" $299.99
- 18 speed S.I.S. shifters
- Shimano Tourney

NISHIKI "FRESSE" HYBRID $329.99
- 11 speed Shimano S.I.S. shifters
- aluminum rims

NISHIKI "ROCKHOUND" $579.99
- 1993 model
- 21 speed Altus A-10 "rapid fire plus"
- chromoly frame

NISHIKI "RUSHWACKER" $950.00
- Dualtrak suspension
- STX Shimano gear
- Chromoly frame

KONA "HAHANNA" $549.99
- mountain cross bike
- chromoly frame
- Nimble, easy rolling

CANNONDALE V500 $1375
- all aluminum frame
- front suspension
- "flip shift"
- unbelievable strength to weight ratio

Get Yours Today! Canada's Sports Action Card!

Now Available at Many SOURCE FOR SPORTS Stores Across Canada
Just Ask A SOURCE FOR SPORTS PROFESSIONAL

SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 Princess St. - 120 Stores, Coast to Coast - 542-2892

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
121 PRINCESS ST. - 542-2892

SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 Princess St. - 120 Stores, Coast to Coast - 542-2892

APPLICATIONS DUE TODAY:

Communications Commission Members
Municipal Affairs Commission Members

Tricolour Yearbook Staff
QEA Service Staff

* All service staff applications: Alfies, QP, P&CC, Walkhome Staff, Constables

1 Student-at-Large for the Student Health Board

2 Students-at-Large for the AMS Capital Allocations Committee

* Please Note: This date is correct

TUESDAY APRIL 5

USED BOOK SERVICE MANAGER

FRIDAY APRIL 8

FIRST COMMITTEE CHAIR

ENTERTAINMENT

Live Music Lover's Weekend

Although part of a coverband, this guy is playing for real. BRENT DAVIS

BOAG AND THE BRAVEYARD WHIPS, VOLUME SEVEN, YELLOWBELLY, LOS SEAMONSTERS, AND THE INBREDS STAGES BY DENNY SILVERTHORNE

The scene was Stages Night club. The event was the Live Music Lovers Weekend, featuring local bands playing for the United Way. And the feature of the evening was the drum kit, which reared a good six feet above the rest of the stage, a pedestal for the Gods, if only they could adjust to the severe climate of the upper atmosphere and still concentrate on their drumming.

The first band to take the stage was Boag and the Braveyard Whips, who warmed up the sparse crowd with their own brand of "Roadhouse Soul." Their set was divided between originals and covers, including a great version of Percy Sledge's "The Way You Do the Things You Do," as well as Nat Clark's "Comes from the Heart," the former with guest vocals by Eva

MUGWORTS, THE HELLBILLIES, GAUDI BIRDS AND FAT SPIDER AJ'S HANGAR/STAGES BY CHRISTIAN DE BRUIJN

Why do people flock to see cover bands? The popularity of Road Apples is just something I'll never understand. What's the originality in forming a band based solely on covering The Hart, who later performed an original which featured her stunning vocals and harmonica skills. Lead singer Boag was entertaining to watch but the show was stolen by guitarist Stuart Johnson's deep-knee-bend playing style and flanged guitar work. Drummer Steve Wall, the first to scale to the apex of the Mountain Of Drums was equal to the task, and blazed a steady rhythm throughout the set. Boag were quite entertaining and, despite an overabundance of songs about trains, were a good opener to the evening.

Volume were next onstage, serving up their usual grunge and keyboard mix to the slowly building crowd at Stages. Shortly after taking the stage, singer Mike List warned that he was a little under the weather and that mucous might unexpectedly fly out of his mouth and/or nose, but we were not so lucky. The band highlighted mostly their own songs including "Minnesota," which featured a good rockin' climax, and "Cover." Both were catchy Tragically Hip? It's like moving to Montreal and starting a Doughboys cover band called "Happy Accidents."

If Live Music Lover's Weekend is about "real" live bands, then the organizers shouldn't have included Four Real, a Boston cover band, and Delicate Sounds of Thunder, a so-called tribute to Pink Floyd. First, it's an insult, tunes that were hampered by Mike's annoying screams throughout, although I'm sure his ill health was the problem. The highlight of the set was their cover of The Sons of Freedom's "Mona Lisa" which showcased drummer Andrew Pirie's excellent drumming, and proved that he was clearly up to the challenge of the Space Drums.

A dark thunder cloud next descended upon Stages with the entrance of Kingston's gloomiest band Seven, whose song "Summer" is, somewhat ironically, the most depressing song ever written about those glorious dog days. These guys definitely would not get along well with The Beach Boys! This does not mean to say that they don't rock in their own way, as they did on "Walk Away" with its fabulously moody intermediary lull. Seven's influences are not too hard to spot as their sound reflects those of Alice in Chains, Tool and Black Sabbath. Their best song was the Sabbath-like closer with its chorus of, "Every day I hate you more and more," which showcased the guitar work of Nick Crowe and the drumming of Matt Hickman: another man to conquer that impressive drum set.

The winners of 1994 QEA Battle of the Bands, Yellowbelly, were next onstage opening with back to back rockers "Best Friend" and "Hanging Garden," tunes which highlight their heavy, melodic sound and their two female singers, Pary Ewaschuk and second, it's an excuse for being lazy. By including these bands they are exploring and making a mockery of artists who put the time and effort into creating something that is an original product. The announcers at the festival would often make a gasp at bands who play "all original music."

Well, it shouldn't be any other way.

Cover bands, along with the surge in popularity of "classic rock" and "oldies" radio stations in the late '80's, if taken to its logical extreme, will result in the death of modern pop-music. This is something that should never happen. What is this obsession that people have with this yearning for the past and for repetitiveness? Security? Stability? You know things were so much better back then... yeah, right! This is my world and not my parents'. I'll put my hands in my pockets and wait for the day to come.

At AJ's, The Mugworts were the first band on my list and surprised me by putting on a great, energetic set. My only complaint is that those wacky Caspers weren't up and doing their woo-

Susie Robertson. Never far from the limelight, drummer Mike Millar's drumming was again excellent, although he seemed to be thrown off a little by the altitude and didn't express himself through his drum microphones as often as he usually does. The great sound at Stages allowed Yellowbelly to really shine, especially on their fabulous cover of The 360's "1970," which brought some dancers onto the dancefloor, and on their own "Sour." Always entertaining, this member of the PF Records family successfully transferred their garage rock sound to the big stage, without losing their punk rock charm.

Another quintessential PF band—Los Seamonsters—took to the stage next, and at first it appeared that the upper atmosphere might conquer drummer Harry Hollywood as he dropped his drumstick during the opener "Only A Car." Not to fear though, as Harry again turned in his inspired backbeat to songs such as "Apathetically Inclined," the new video song "Spill," and "Four Fingers." The highlights of their set were the full out rockers "6 Million Dollar Man," and "L.M.O.B.," featuring itinerant bassist Mike Lookinland who can do it all, i.e. play bass, sing and chew gum at the same time.

Los Seamonsters were the first band to fill the dance floor with "Hurry," and it was apparent that they were not only a crowd favourite but also tickled the fancy of the lighting technicians, who allowed Los Seamonsters to truly shine. Those underwater fellows ended their set with "AGD," featuring its catchy chorus: "I did my best and that was all that I could do, but lead singer Billy Deah interrupted the proceedings to announce that this would sadly be Mike Lookinland's last performance before he heads back to the NASCAR circuit.

The final band, The Inbreds, Kingston's only power duo, opened with their 'hit', "Prince," and appeased any worries that they could not fill the larger venue of Stages with their full sound. Moving quickly through songs such as "He Never," "Matterhorn," and "Tell the Truth," Mike O'Neill and Dave Ulrich were as entertaining as always, and surprisingly, Mike capably filled the large stage that was open to him alone. Bassist/finger Mike was decked out in funky blue flares whose swish-swoosh sound filled our the chorus during the new single, "Noah's Cage." When asked about the height of the drums, Dave commented that he had not been that high up since he won Triumph tickets in grade school which were also in the nosebleeds. Once again, The Inbreds proved why they have become a favourite of college radio across Canada by entertaining the crowd and the dancers with their melodic pop music, showing off their professionalism while still retaining a fun atmosphere onstage and in the audience. These guys clearly know how to have fun onstage and their infectious attitude quickly infiltrates any crowd.

In closing, the Live Music Lovers Weekend was a great success, and any misleading rumours that The Tragically Hip might play were unnecessary since the lineup of bands for the entire festival was more than excellent.

Mike O'Neill wonders how his partner is doing on cloud nine. BRENT DAVIS

Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews whoops it up at AJ's. BRENT DAVIS

Arrested development

NAKED GUN 33 1/3
DIRECTED BY PETER SEGAL
CAPITOL THEATRE
BY TARA LYNN KEATS

As I watch the nth person get hit by a Mac truck or fall down a spiral staircase, I ask myself, "Why am I laughing?" Why are the people sitting around me laughing? Why do we, collectively as human beings, continue to see these films?

What I was referring to as "these films" are the silly slapstick movies that are made by any combination of David Zucker, Jerry Zucker and Jim Abrahams as writer, director or producer. This canon of work includes such cinematic gems as Airplane, Top Secret, and of course, all of the instalments in the Naked Gun series. Anyone who's spent more than four hours anywhere in North America has seen at least two of these infamous films.

Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult is no exception to the tried and true formula. Leslie Nielsen returns once again as Lt. Frank Drebin, the bumbling "Police Squad" agent who somehow, and usually by pure accident, manages to get the bad guy and the girl. Also returning are Drebin's equally incompetent sidekicks, Capt. Ed Hocken (George Kennedy) and Nordberg (O.J. Simpson). Priscilla Presley returns as Frank Drebin's wife, Jane Spencer-Drebin, who has somehow worked her way up from secretary to lawyer since the first Naked Gun.

This time around, the bad guy is Rocco, an "internationally famous hombist-terrorist" played by Fred Ward. Filling out the roster for Rocco's team are his Ma Barker-esque mother and his nurse girlfriend, Playboy centre-fold/Guess girl Anna Nicole Smith. The plot follows Drebin's asinine efforts to expose Rocco's latest and most devastating plan—the bombing of the 66th annual Oscar Award ceremonies! Oh, Hollywood, how self important thou art.

Now, to answer my initial question. I don't think we pay good money to see "these films" because of their great plot-lines. Nor do we attend because we expect to witness some earth-shattering acting. I mean, I don't think that Anna Nicole Smith was hired because she was expected to snag an Oscar. I also sincerely doubt that it's because of the eye-popping special effects that we keep going back for more—who couldn't tell that it was actually a stuffed dummy that was catapulted out the window and not really Priscilla Presley?

No, the real reason we continue to subject ourselves to the Naked Gun's brand of shtick is because we love the way these films make fun of us and consumer society. Naked Gun 33 1/3 is particularly clever in sending up such bastions of pop culture as Phil Donahue, Jurassic Park, camcorders, and Beavis and Butthead. The film is full of all the usual sight gags and one-liners.

The opening sequence is a great parody of the train station scene in The Untouchables. Drebin and his gang must nab a dangerous crime boss while trying to safely get an army of baby carriages over a flight of stairs. Needless to say, babies go flying everywhere (it's alright, I'm pretty sure they were just dummies, too) and everyone from the Pope to a group of "disgruntled postal workers" gets involved.

This third instalment of the "Police Squad" legacy caricatures such '90's issues as deadbeat dads and the violence and rioting in L.A., which lend the film modernity and vitality. Yet, Naked Gun 33 1/3 is stuck somewhere in the early '80's in terms of its representation of women. There are several gratuitous close-ups of women's breasts, and there is one particularly tasteless scene in which Drebin is in a supermarket and accidentally squeezes a woman's breast, having mistaken it for a melon. There also wasn't a single shot of Anna Nicole Smith which didn't expose her cleavage. I found these instances very odd, like weird throwbacks to an era when it was still considered funny to objectify women.

All in all, Naked Gun 33 1/3 is well, a Naked Gun movie. There are some great highlights, like watching Leslie Nielsen try to dance on stage at the Oscars. The story, however, is pretty banal and the funny parts are often few and far between. The most humorous parts reside in the little details, such as the newspaper headline which reads: "Dyslexia

Oh no! Not another sequel!

Found For Cure!" and the faux films nominated for the Oscar awards, such as Spike Lee's X2: The Merchandising.

The movie is short—only an hour and a half—as it should be.

For die hard fans, 33 1/3 is more or less what you expect from a Naked Gun film, but nothing more. For those who want the most for their money, this flick is a renter.

Band bites dog

PAVEMENT
THE PALLADIUM
BY RON CUNNANE
AND SEAN SARAKA

I've got a lot of things to do
A lot of places to go
I've got a lot of good reviews coming my way
And I'm afraid to say this isn't one of them

"Box Elder"
Despite all the buzz surrounding 1992's Slanted and Enchanted (Matador), Pavement remained the most overlooked and underrated new band in America. Hopelessly catchy and cool, "Summer Babe (Winter Version)" was the hit that never was. Critics couldn't resist proselytizing over Slanted and Enchanted as the definitive slacker manifesto, but Pavement's over-the-top talent came off as just too clever. Despite their strong, innovative songwriting and meaningful lyrics, the band was dismissed as smartass kids and tricksters.

Pavement

The California bliss kids are back now with a new album, Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain (Matador). Previously, Pavement's songwriting buried all influences and past reference points, but the new songs veer dangerously towards identification with friendlier guitar bands like The Pixies and bypass nouveau-beat lyrics in favour of coherence. The new approach is responsible for spectacular failures ("Shoot the Plane Down"), mediocrity ("Newark Wilder," "Heaven is a Truck"), and brilliant successes ("Cut Your Hair," "Silence Kit," "Fillmore Jive"). Everyone loves to love Crooked Rain despite some flaws, but what about the old Pavement that made their tapes in your basement while the cool kids played Jenga upstairs? When the media machine rolled into Toronto last Friday, your intrepid Journal reporters mobilized to meet the chimeric head on.

Like a troop of sardonic postmodern Boy Rangers, Pavement have turned cultural knot-tying into a minor art form. In the process, they have lured a generation of critics and erstwhile armchair deconstructionists into a morass of meaning and unmeaning that no human heart can endure. Friday night was no exception. Wearing their influences like faded merit badges, SM Malkmus et al. held a Kidcore campout, complete with happy sing-alongs and obscure rituals of initiation that promised access to the inner circle but ended with the prospect of more fascinating assassinations and the discomfort of knowing you still haven't broken the code.

Opening bands Slow Loris and Codeine had the unenviable task of running interference for the Uherclique, playing twister in the book suppository while the real gunmen hid behind the grassy knoll preparing the cross-fire. In light of the grand swindle that soon followed, it becomes clear that they were set up to take the fall; well intentioned patsy's in the masterplan of Demolition Plot J-7. Slow Loris played their part with heart, but their incompressible set did more to confuse than enlighten. This was precisely the plan.

Codeine, whose mind-numbingly repetitive trance-like "songs" rarely emerged from carbonite freeze, make sense only as part of a Stalinist interrogation, the type used by the Chinese in Korea to exact false confessions from hapless G.I.'s. The sonic equivalent of sodium pentothal, their role was to break down the mental defences of the kids, rendering them susceptible to Pavement's will-bending clamour.

Steve Malkmus, Spital Stairs and the boys took the stage to a wailing litany of cheers and spontaneous confessions. With mind-control guitars and thought-sapping percussion the "band" proceeded to blithely rewrite the past—fully two thirds of their measly 45-minute set were comprised of tracks off Crooked Rain and entirely new material. Fans cheers died down as the plot became manifest. Despite their plaintive cries, the band would give no quarter, they had hrough their own nefarious set of jacks, and we all had to play.

It was at a press conference only hours before that new drummer Steve West had smiled a wide, shit-eating grin, hands folded across his chest, and announced reassuringly to the assembled team of crack journalists: "We would NEVER try to change history." But he is, after all, the new drummer. Has anyone seen

PAVEMENT CONTINUED ON PAGE 28

Pavement from left to right: Bob Nastanovich, Mark Ibold, Steve West, Scott Kanberg, Stephen Malkmus.

Their aim is true

Sammy Hagar and Richard Marx ply more product

RICHARD MARX PAID VACATION
EMI RECORDS
SAMMY HAGAR UNBOXED
GEPHEN/MCA
BY ROB FURSE

Sammy Hagar may take offense at being compared to lightweight popster Richard Marx; Hagar is after all now the lead singer of one Van Halen: one of the bigger and cooler bands on the planet. But oh how soon they forget. Unboxed offers a look back on Hagar's decade plus solo recording career and shows him to have been a prime purveyor of quintessential sycophantic radio slop. The song titles alone tell the story: "Your Love is Driving Me Crazy," "Two Sides of Love" and "I Can't Drive 55" all point to just the kind of mainstream rock n' roll AOR fodder the masses hanker for. Except there was one flaw in Hagar's plan: he just couldn't buy a hit single. Despite a litany of wailing guitar solos and cheese — ball choruses Hagar has never had a top 10 hit in his solo career.

Not heavy metal and not pop, somehow Sammy boy managed to exist on the periphery of commercial viability while consistently stepping outside the bounds of artistic integrity. If not for the overblown ego of David Lee Roth, Hagar would probably still be bitching about the success of Van Halen (as I heard him do in an interview prior to his joining Van Halen) while he languished in the hinterland of pop music.

To Hagar's credit he does have a good voice and charisma by the boatload. Combine this with his rock n' roll poster boy hair and suppose we can forgive him for his past sins. Even if he opens up a song with the line: Headbangers in leather. Richard Marx, on the other hand, while certainly no lyrical genius, has one important advantage over Hagar: he can write truly catchy pop tunes. Having already sold 15 million albums worldwide, it seems Marx can't produce anything but top 10 hits. The most successful of Marx's three previous albums was 1989's Repeat Offender which spawned "Satisfaction," a suitably catchy mega-hit you may remember.

Nevertheless, Marx's prowess with a pop hook may be the only difference between these two artists, as Marx, like Hagar, fancies himself a true "artiste." In writing the lyrics for this album he confesses, "the cliché police were out in full force." In any event, when Richard sings: There in my darkest hour somehow you knew what I felt / And just in the nick of time you saved me from myself, any notions of artistic grandeur are quickly dispelled.

The music of Paid Vacation is of the usual listener friendly sort, but is a level below Marx's previous efforts. But even this decline is predictable as Marx shifts into the "pump out more generic hits" mode of his career, knowing full well he does not need to produce his best material anymore to sell records.

What I admire most about both these artists is the way they stick by their guns and don't compromise their music. As Sammy Hagar recounts his career he recalls, "I stayed true to where my heart was." While Richard Marx confesses, "I've got to do what I believe I should do. That way no matter what happens, I sleep with both eyes closed every night." Well, listen to either one of these records and you'll probably have both eyes closed as well.

WWWNN

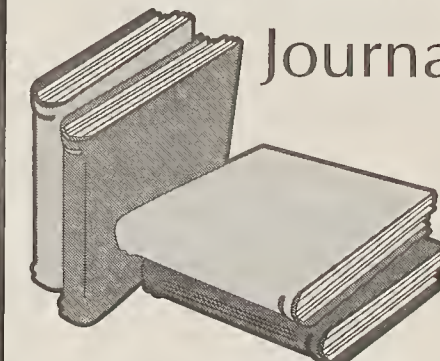

We tried to give you an extra day of holidays ... but the administration wouldn't let us.

CLASSES GO UNTIL FRIDAY, APRIL 8

The Mother of all Books!

Remember the past year with your very own Bound Journal

For more information please call Gabe A.S.A.P at the Queen's Journal ~ 545-2800

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

is now accepting applications for its next three entering classes.
(April 1994, September 1994, January 1995)

General requirements at time of entry include:

- Approx. 2-3 years of college in a life or health science degree program.
- A minimum G.P.A. of 2.5. A more competitive G.P.A. is favored.
- A personal interest in a career as a primary care physician.

Northwestern offers:

- A professional school of 500 students with student faculty ratio of 12:1.
- A well-rounded education in Basic and Clinical Sciences, Diagnosis, X-ray, and Chiropractic.
- Full accreditation by North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the Council on Chiropractic Education.

Call: 1-800-888-4777 or Write: Director of Admissions
2501 West 84th Street, Minneapolis, MN 55431

Pinocchio's
Chicken
& Ribs

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"
Buy one entree and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price
to all students.
Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600
Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street
(formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

TIRED OF NO PRIVACY?

5 BEDROOMS AND 5 BATHROOMS

LIVING ROOM, KITCHEN, DEN,
PARKING AND GARAGE INCLUDED.

CONVENIENT LOCATION ON CLERGY STREET

CALL MATT AT 546-9172
CALL BOB AT 541-0979

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF TUESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS

MOVIES	CLUBS	THEATRE
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON 824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442) The Paper 7:00 9:45 Clifford 7:10 9:20 In the Name of the Father 9:30 Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40 Schindler's List 8:00 Guarding Tess 7:15 9:25 Lighting Jack 7:05 Monkey Trouble 7:15 9:25 CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. (546-5395) Naked Gun 33 1/3 7:10 9:30 Angie 6:50 9:25 Gilbert Grape 6:55 9:25 Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20 The Ref 7:15 9:35 The Piano 6:45 9:10 Philadelphia 6:35 9:20 The Mighty Ducks II 6:55 9:15 PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (546-FILM) Thursday El Cid 7:00 Friday Red Rock West 7:00 Forever My Concubine 9:00 Saturday & Sunday Forever My Concubine 6:45 Red Rock West 9:40 Monday Red Rock West 7:00 Forever My Concubine 9:00 Tuesday & Wednesday Wings of Desire 7:00 Slacker 9:30 Thursday Mystery Series 7:00 Small Pleasures 9:00	THURSDAY The Toucan: Mugworts Ben's Pub: The Undesirables FRIDAY The Toucan: Yellowbelly Duke's: The Goudibirds AJ's Hangar: Maist Ben's Pub: The Undesirables Quiet Pub: Groovin' High 4-8pm SATURDAY The Toucan: Jimmy George AJ's Hangar: Little Betty and Plaid Daddies Duke's: The Change The Wellington: Gerry O'Kane SUNDAY AJ's Hangar: Wild Blues Yander The Wellington: Jazz and Blues Jam 2-5 pm All Sweet Folk: Kingston Folk Club MONDAY AJ's Hangar: NCAA FINALS with Val-ume The Wellington: Blue Monday WEDNESDAY Alfie's: Lowest of the Low THURSDAY The Grad Club: The Billies The Toucan: All Good Children The Wellington: Room With A View	THE BABY GRAND THEATRE 218 Princess St. (546-5698) Threshold Theatre presents the workshop production, Fearful Symmetry , an original theatre piece which fuses the work of William Blake with Eugene O'Neill's Weld . Apr. 14-6, 22-4 at 8 p.m. (plus Sunday matinees at 2:30 p.m.) Tickets are $10 (pay-what-you-can for Sunday matinees) and are available at the door or in advance at the Grand Theatre Box Office.
GALLERIES AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE University Ave. & Queen's Crescent (545-2190) NOTA BENE: The Agnes will be closed tomorrow for Good Friday but will be open on Sunday, Apr. 3 from 1-5 p.m. SPECIAL EVENTS: Apr. 6 from 3-5 p.m. Meet Montreal artist John Heward and view his exhibition, The Ethics in the Making: the forming rays . OPENING EXHIBITIONS: Apr. 3 Face Masks from West Africa: Selections from the Lang Collection. Continues to Dec. 11 CONTINUING EXHIBITIONS: through Apr. 3 The Painters' Art: Masterworks of Modernism through Apr. 17 Shayne Dark: Hunting the Ego through Apr. 28 To the Fluid Shell Construction: Working Drawings by David Robinowitch through May 8 The Ethics of Making: The forming rays of John Heward through June 5 Condon Press Glass Gables: selections from the permanent collection through June 12 Cherly Pagurek: S Fraserwood Ave., Apt #2 EDWARD DAY GALLERY 253 Ontario Street (547-0774) through April 2 North American premiere of mixed media works on canvas by Alexander Ivanovich Sigav. TAYLOR PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIOS 149 Brock St. through Mar. 31 Boundaries: A Photographic Exhibition by Michael Wiercinski
PERFORMANCES ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, King St. East. The Queen's School of Music presents the Queen's Symphony and Queen's Chamber Singers in their final performance of the year. Performances include music by Bach, Mozart, Korssakoy, Beethoven & Britten. Apr. 5 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 (Adults) and $3 (Students and Seniors)

If you see him, please return him to his cage.

RADIO DAZE

CFRC 1D1.9 FM / Cable 9D.9
is YOUR campus-community alternative radio station!!

CHARTS FOR THE WEEK OF MARCH 21 TO 27, 1994
(* Denotes Canadian artist/content.)

TOP 10	IC	LC	ARTIST	RECORD
1	4		Frentel	Labour of Love
2	1		Morrissey	The More You Ignore Me, The Closer I Get
3	26		Picasso Trigger	Fire In The Hole
4			Fluf	Home Improvements
5	6		* An April March	Impatiens
6	14		Various	Soundtrack: Reality Bites
7	2		* cub	Betti-Cola
8	19		* Jole	Cut
9			* Modder Rose	Ponic On
1D	13		* The Smugglers	Party...Party...Party...Pooper!

RAP	ARTIST	RECORD
1	Beastie Boys	Some Old Bullshit
2	Da King & I	Tears (remix)
3	Out Kast	Player's Ball
4	Guru	No Time To Play
5	* Roscaiz	Really Livin'

FOLK/BLUES	ARTIST	RECORD
1	* Spirit of the West	Faithlift
2	John Lee Hooker	The Rising Sun Collection
3	John Hammond	Trouble No More
4	* Bruce Cockburn	Dart To The Helmet
5		Uncorked!

Cheetah attempts a comeback

MONKEY TROUBLE
DIRECTED BY FRANCO AMURRI
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON
BY SUE RIEDL

So there's this little girl who wants a dog and hates her little brother. But she's not allowed to get the dog or shoot her little brother, so she has to settle for a pick-pocketing monkey and a rolicking good time. But it's not all a barrel of laughs because Dodger, the monkey, has escaped from his cruel master, a thieving gypsy (Harvey Keitel). A movie about a monkey trying to escape from an abusive relationship, who would've thought it?

The excitement of Monkey Trouble consistently escalates: Dodger (that impl) pees on the floor in Eva's (Thora Birch) room and Harvey attempts to get his dialogue more stilted (Tarzan-esque) and to steal back his partner in crime. The plot culminates in a suspense filled chase through the park (a la Hitchcock) which concludes with a touching embrace between Eva and Dodger, who decides he'd rather live with the good white girl than the evil gypsy boy.

Through most of the film Eva's parents are too engrossed in their toddler, Jack, to pay attention to what their daughter is doing. They finally become a little concerned when they discover that she has a pile of stolen goods hidden in her knapsack, which she claims were taken by the monkey, who, by some miracle, has been living undetected in Eva's room. More amazing than the monkey going undetected in the apartment is the way Harvey's character runs, skateboards, AND rides a bike in pursuit of his lost pet, all the while clutching the cane he apparently relies on to walk.

Question: Why is Harvey Keitel in this film?
1. He wants to make his performance in The Piano look even more impressive.
2. Reservoir Dogs just wasn't man enough for him.
3. He thought he'd get to walk around naked with the monkey.

Whatever the reason, (he lost a bet?) he is suitably bad in this bad film. Admittedly, this is a film meant for a younger audience, fun for the whole family and that sort of thing, but the lack of plot and originality isn't what bothers me. What I find most annoying is the plethora of stereotypes that permeate the story. In fact, it almost became a game to see how many cliches I could spot. Let's see: there was the dishonest, colourfully attired gypsy, the Italian mobsters, the Japanese tourists (camera and broken English, too!), the confused Pakistani store owner (hey, is this The Simpsons?), and finally the upright, middle class, attractive-beyond-belief family—who happen to be white. Oh, but I can't forget to mention the positive black roles/cameos as school teachers and ALL the L.A. police officers. Hmhmhmhmhm.

Good ol' Dodger the monkey provides some of the film's finer acting/comedic moments when he falls out of trees onto people's heads or when he runs joyfully, in slow motion (a la Scorsese), to Eva's awaiting embrace. I can see how Keitel would feel comfortable starring opposite Dodger, for the monkey is yet another character who doesn't talk, but can express a thousand emotions through subtle facial nuances. Dodger's clothes are pretty hip and he provides a great product placement opportunity for Minute Maid as he sips a drink

Cunning and mischievous, yet sickeningly cute, he could provide Macaulay Culkin and Old Yeller with some stiff competition. If you like animal flicks, then this monkey is probably the only redemptive feature in this film.

As I said, this film is meant to cater to a younger audience and although the kids in the theatre seemed to enjoy Monkey Trouble, I have to wonder what kind of message movies like this are sending to their impressionable spectators. This film, in particular, reinforces stereotypes one would hope were becoming less prominent in cinema. I would think twice about taking the kiddies to this flick. Not only is it pretty flimsy entertainment, but the typecasting is completely unnecessary. After all, not ALL monkeys are pick-pockets.

This is one shocked monkey.

Some of this country's most creative minds are in Canada's insurance industry.

They're the kinds of minds that know creativity goes far beyond art, literature or making movies. If you're like that, why not consider a career with Canada's property/casualty, or general insurance industry? The industry offers a wide variety of career choices for creative minds. Accountants yes, but also systems analysts, lawyers, managers, loss prevention engineers, investment specialists, investigators, marine underwriters, aviation adjusters and many more. The choice is yours. General insurance is also an industry that encourages you to acquire its own levels of professionalism. As a Fellow or Associate of The Insurance Institute of Canada, you would join an educated, experienced and ethical group of professionals equipped to pursue successful careers at the local, provincial, national or even international level. Choice, challenge, satisfaction and security. They are just some of the rewards you'll enjoy through a creative career in the property/casualty insurance industry. For more information, look for your local Insurance Institute in the white pages or, contact Les Dandridge, B.A., A.I.I.C., at The Insurance Institute of Canada, 18 King Street East, 6th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5C 1C4 (416) 362-8586 FAX (416) 362-1126.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call
542-5595

Canada's Insurance Professionals
The Graduates of The Insurance Institute of Canada.

Alfie's

PUB

WE ARE LOOKING FOR DJs

APPLICATIONS AVAILABLE AT THE AMS OFFICE

DUE: APRIL 13th AT NOON

I'D RATHER DJ AT ALFIE'S

Looking for employment?
Want a challenge for next year?

MANAGER NEEDED FOR NEW AMS SERVICE

With the support of the Queen's Book Exchange, the AMS will be taking on the used book service for students.

A manager is needed to get this special service off the ground.

Job description and proposal are available in the AMS now. Applications deadline Tuesday, April 5

Visually Challenged at Queen's: Seeing is Believing?

Karoline is just like your typical first year student at Queen's: she lives in residence, she complains about the food, she attends her classes. The only difference is that Karoline is legally blind.

From the trivial to the imposing, Karoline must contend every day with problems associated with the reality of a world not geared to people with disabilities. But despite these intimidating challenges, Karoline has pursued both her academic and non-academic interests with enviable commitment.

Her day occasionally begins around three a.m. when her seeing-eye dog and room-mate Amber "erupts" after being disturbed by a noise, expecting food and attention. As Karoline explains, she's a young dog and still has a lot of spunk and energy. Often Amber, not Karoline, dictates the daily schedule.

While Amber does provide an essential service for Karoline, as a room-mate in a small residence room, she can sometimes be a pain to live with.

"Other people leave things on the floor — I can't do it because Amber would eat them. All the books are on the bookshelf even when I am doing an essay ... When I go outside in the winter the dog gets muddy ... this one is very hyper, very young, and likes to climb on the furniture."

As a sign to other residents that they're home, many of Karoline's floor-mates keep their doors open when they are in their room. Karoline can't do this as Amber would run away. Once Amber got out and went exploring, somehow winding up on a different floor. Needless to say, Amber and Karoline had a lot of difficulty finding each other. But even when Amber is safely under control, Karoline still has to deal with the loneliness that comes with the shut door. People assume that since her door is closed, she is either out or doesn't want to be disturbed, when much of the time she would like company.

With Amber to help Karoline to get to her classes and with the aid of volunteers who take notes for Karoline and then type them up, she is able to get the most out of her classes. She tries to attend as many as she can to soak up the lectures, though she remarks she doesn't get much use out of overheads.

Even the smallest assignment can become a gargantuan task for Karoline. Both in her room and in the Special Needs room at Douglas Library, there are devices which magnify the text on a page and place the image on a closed circuit television so that people with seeing disabilities can read the text. The only problem is that the process is very time consuming and Karoline finds it very tiring to read. After about 20 minutes of reading her eyes hurt from the strain and she must stop.

The only other option for her to get access to necessary documents is through a service which provides some of her texts on tape. However, this means that she must listen to the tape in its entirety, taking notes when she can. She cannot "skim" a chapter before a test or in preparation for an essay. She must also rewind and fast forward through the tape to find that elusive quotation when writing an essay.

"You can't say you're spending the whole night to do an essay — this is impossible." Karoline has been working on an essay for Women's Studies for two months now. Between not having all the necessary documents on tape and the problems associated with screening for information, essay writing is an extremely time consuming and difficult task, no matter how capable in the subject she might be.

"This presents problems because I'm a politics major, and politics majors have a lot of essays."

Despite the extra effort that she must put into her classes, Karoline still has time to devote to extra-curricular activities and friends.

She made her residence's House Council and will be a floor senior next year. She is on the Women's Studies DSC and the Women's Studies Steering Committee, which helps to decide the direction the department is taking and to examine hiring and other processes. Karoline is also a member of the Federal Liberal party, and may be representing the region at an organizational conference in Ottawa.

Walk a mile in someone's shoes if you want to understand them.

Though she doesn't have a particularly large group of casual friends, she feels that instead she has a small core of good friends. She comments jokingly that casual acquaintances are sometimes difficult for her because she recognizes people primarily by voice. Occasionally, she says, someone comes up and starts talking to her — obviously making visual recognition, but since she has only spoken to the person once or twice, she doesn't recognize their voice and must contend with either offending the person or keeping quiet.

Karoline does feel very isolated in some ways. In high school, she lacked a social life because, she feels, people didn't want the responsibility of taking care of her. Hence, the great social tradition of University — going for an evening out on the town — remains elusive for Karoline.

"People feel that they have to baby-sit me," she says. Unfortunately, it seems many people are still unwilling to give her the chance to be part of their social life.

Karoline's experiences at Queen's have been generally positive. She feels that the University has at least taken some steps to make itself and its facilities accessible to people with disabilities. She thinks that there are many individuals all over campus each making small efforts to help her and others with disabilities. But there are always the little things that can ruin a day and cause unpleasant situations.

When her residence was having their floor picture taken, the photographer didn't want Amber in the photograph. Karoline insisted, saying that Amber was just as much a resident as anyone else. Many buildings on campus, especially the hated ubiquitous mass of rooms and corridors called Mac-Corry, are less than friendly to people with disabilities. Virtually every time she goes into Mac-Corry, Karoline quips, she gets lost.

People are generally good with Amber, but many do not seem to understand the role of a guide dog. Karoline would like people to recognize that when a guide dog is in its harness, it's at work, and shouldn't be played with or petted. Often when this sort of activity is occurring, Karoline is completely unaware and assumes Amber is paying attention to what is happening around her and doing her job, when in fact she is distracted.

"There are times to play and times for work, and people must allow her to distinguish that too."

Karoline is happy with her choice to come to Queen's, though it has been a difficult journey to get here. Born and raised for the earlier years of her life in the Middle East, she wasn't allowed to go to school until she emigrated to Canada in December '86.

"To learn to speak took six months, but to learn to write ... I still haven't perfected it yet."

Someday, she would like to live in a larger city, and given this past winter, weather will be an important factor in her choice. She would like to pursue a career in politics or one in law — and would also like to have a family.

As our interview draws to a close, Karoline says that she has been in good spirits these past few months at Queen's, though, like everyone, she has her moody days.

"When I'm depressed I write poetry. I haven't written once since I got here — I haven't had the desire," she muses.

Derek Walker gets lost in Mac-Corry too ... often.

Karoline and Amber

photo by Tricia Bauman

ASUS

YEAR SOCIETIES

Your Year Societies raise money for your graduating year Formal. Here's where they are at:

'95	'96	'97
Start: $4,302.46	Start: $3,850.49	Start: $1,000.00
Actual: $12,655.21	Actual: $7,165.59	Finish: $3,197.70

Come out and support your Year Society's events to ensure that you help contribute to your Formal. The more money is raised, the less your Formal will cost!

MOVING IN MAY?

Don't know what to do with the stuff you've collected over the year? Leaving a couch behind? If you can't give it away or trade it, don't abandon it! Here's what to do with it ...

LARGE ARTICLES (ie. furniture, appliances, etc.) can be disposed of at no charge at the Laidlaw Transfer Station, 398 Dalton Avenue at the these dates:

April 25 - May 21, 1994
Monday - Friday, 8am-4pm
Saturday, 8am-3pm

HAZARDOUS WASTES (batteries, paint, oil propane cylinders for BBQs) can be dropped off at these times at no charge:

Every Thursday 9am-3pm
Second Saturday of each month.

You are responsible for arranging transportation for your items to the transfer station. Pair up with a friend, and book your vehicle early.

The City of Kingston and the AMS support and encourage the concept of REUSE

Last year when students moved, hundreds and hundreds of pounds of reusable and recyclable material was thrown away. These items included paper, food and clothing. This year the AMS will take these items off your hands, and give them to people who can use them.

Look for drop-off and collection bins in Residences, Mac-Corry and the JDUC

WEEK OF APRIL 25 - 29

OR

Wait for us to come to you! We'll be coming door to door on

Friday April 29 11am-2pm

to collect non-perishable food and unwanted clothing.

Contact the City of Kingston at 542-7474 or the Communications Commission at 545-2732 for more information.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 Specialists for the University Community
 186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
 General Travel Long Haul Group
 549-3553 549-3561

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994 • ISSUE 39 • VOLUME 121

TONIGHT!!!
 END OF CLASSES
ARTS '94
SMOKER
 BE THERE EARLY!
Stages
 THE #1 CAMPUS NIGHTCLUB!

AMS forced to draw up summer budget

BY BROCK MARTLAND

The new Alma Mater Society executive has been dealt a sharp rebuke for trying to go without a budget until September.

The AMS Assembly on March 31 saw students and Assembly members protest Vice-President (Operations) Kevin Rex's attempt to avoid passing a spring budget.

The meeting ended with a considerable majority, including all three executive members, voting to hold an emergency AMS Assembly on April 14 to pass a budget.

Rex suggested that past budgets "were not taken seriously" because AMS council members were new to their posts and did not have time to formulate comprehensive budgets.

If Assembly passed a budget now, Rex said, it would be "almost a replica of last year's budget" and would leave "three quarters of the budget ... completely up in the air."

Rex proposed that the AMS operate for the four summer months without a budget, and have any decisions ratified by Assembly in September, when a "comprehensive and cohesive budget" could also be passed.

Such a delay, Rex maintained, would not violate any AMS policies.

Blair Bertrand challenged Rex, arguing that "it's a fairly standard procedure to pass a budget before spending money."

Bertrand, the former Main Campus Residents' Council vice-president who narrowly lost the AMS presidency two months ago, said that passing a budget amounts to a vote of confidence for a new government.

Despite agreeing "that there have been many practical problems with passing a budget" now, Bertrand said, "we have no idea what could be spent" over the summer.

Bertrand said it is Assembly's duty to hold the AMS executive and council accountable. Otherwise, he said, "this Assembly is being turned into a rubber stamp."

Debate on the issue continued for about two hours, with most student representatives agreeing with Bertrand.

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Vice-President Heath Grant said he objected to "the notion that this budget would be a farce." The initial budget figures, he said, are estimates that ought to serve as rough guidelines for spending.

Grant called the budget plan "deplorable, irresponsible, and a very dangerous precedent of things to come."

Silvia Lulka, last year's AMS Orientation Committee chair, said that AMS spending over the summer on frosh week amounted to $70,000. She asked how the executive would deal with summer costs.

ASUS Representative Andrew Taylor said, "we need a little more than 'don't worry, just trust us.'"

But Engineering Society President Matt Fenwick said the budget is typically a quickly produced, three-page document which offers "no true accountability."

Fenwick said, "I'd like to congratulate this executive for disregarding the rhetoric and just using some common sense."

Rex argued that he acted in the interests of accountability. "I didn't want this Assembly to rubber stamp a garbage budget," he said.

"Put your faith in us as a council ... and we will guarantee a good, hardcore budget," Rex promised.

After lengthy debate, AMS President Taz Pirmohamed apologized and said, "this was a major decision, and it shouldn't have been made without the consent of this body."

Bertrand requested that Assembly approve a motion requiring an emergency meeting to consider a budget. His motion was successful, even winning the support of the three executive members.

International students lose OHIP coverage

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS AND BROCK MARTLAND

Life just became considerably rougher for international students in Ontario.

As of June 30, foreign students and workers in Ontario will no longer be eligible for health insurance coverage.

Along with Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, PEI and the Yukon Territories, Ontario is the latest province in Canada to eliminate medical coverage for foreign students.

International Student Advisor Susan Anderson said the removal of OHIP (Ontario Health Insurance Plan) assistance would lead to "hardship for a lot of people."

Anderson suggested that few Canadians realize that international students pay taxes. "The idea that they get something for nothing is false," she said. "Services are being withdrawn ... and they continue to pay taxes."

Besides taxation and cost-of-living expenses, international students are charged a higher tuition than Canadian citizens. For an undergraduate engineer, Anderson said, tuition is about $12,000.

Now, international students will have

INTEL CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

Queen's seeks campus food supplier

BY DAVE COLEMAN

Wanted: One (or two) management firms to provide food for a mid-size university. Must offer a good selection, and take out their own garbage.

Due to the labour dispute between Marriott and its full- and part-time workers, plus allegations of limited student input in the decision-making process, the contract negotiations have been dubbed by union representatives as hasty and unaccountable.

Bruce Dodds, union representative for local 229 which represents part-time food service workers on Queen's, said "the food service is not accountable to the constituency ... it should be accountable to a representative board, not just four or five administrators in Richardson or Victoria Hall."

Dodds has called on Queen's to utilize its option for a one-year extension of the existing contract, and thus slow the negotiation process down.

But Executive Assistant to the Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Morrow said it is unnecessary to extend Marriott's current contract. "There is a strong need for change in food services," Morrow said. "If we took the extension, changes would be delayed."

At the end of this month, Queen's will begin selecting the management for the residence meal plans and the retail service at the John Deusch University Centre and Mackintosh-Corry. The five-year contract is estimated to be worth close to $60 million.

Blair Bertrand, this year's vice-president (operations) of the Main Campus Residents' Council, feels the process has been open and accountable. "There has been substantial student input" since negotiations began in November, he said.

Two students, Bertrand and Alma Mater Society Service Director Jess Dutton, are members of the Food Services Review Management Committee which is managing the negotiations.

Having two students in a decision-making position has "substantially altered the way things are managed at Queen's," Bertrand said. "In my eyes it is a fairly open process."

Eight food management firms are in contention for the lucrative contract. Morrow promised, "we are looking at the range of experience" of the prospective bidders.

This means that we may well see "private branding" on campus, he explained. Private brands such as KFC, Harvey's, and Swiss Chalet are already present on other university campuses. Morrow said these private brands could be coordinated by the incumbent management firm.

Bertrand said the Review Management Committee is looking for a company that presents a flexible management style. "We don't want a company that is not responsive to [the Queen's community]," Bertrand said. "Long-term planning can happen while [the new management team]

CONTRACT CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

inside
 The Journal

SOUTH AFRICA VOTES
 As elections near in South Africa, Journal foreign correspondent Brett House looks into the hopes and fears surrounding the country's first dose of real democracy. Voters ponder "Vitamin ANC" and mastering the mechanics of casting a ballot.
 —See Features, page 18.

SARAH McLACHLAN
 Grant Hall serves as the sweaty venue for a first-rate show by sultry singer Sarah McLachlan, and opening band The Devils. The hall was an ideal site for her full, rich music.
 —Review on page 29.

SURFACE EVOLVES
 After winning last month's referendum question, Surface Editor-Elect Dera Nevin outlines changes in the paper's finances and content.
 —Story on page 3.

"Queen's has been slow to go green." —1993-'94 Main Campus Residents' Campus Vice-President Blair Bertrand, commenting on waste management at Queen's.

at the SLIP, HOLIDAY INN
ROBERT ATYEO

WEDNESDAY TO SATURDAY
APR. 6th TO APR. 9th

NEXT WEEK:
DOUG REANSBURY

Every Monday to Wednesday
The Ragtime Kidd - 5-8pm

DRAUGHT & DOZEN 60oz. PITCHER OF DRAUGHT & 12 WINGS - $14.50

1 PRINCESS STREET, KINGSTON 549-8400 EXT. 657

Arts & Sci '97
FINAL BLOWOUT
SMOKER

Friday, April 8th
Free Barbeque

BUCK $ LITE
NITE 'TIL 9:30

DOORS
OPEN
AT 5:30

17R Ontario Street 544-6885

CANADA ASIA EUROPE
ROUND THE WORLD

Student class fares, budget fares
custom long haul fares:

ODYSSEY offers a range of travel assistance - Hostel cards, ISIC cards, Railpasses, travel insurance, travel guides and much more.

Tokyo	from 999
Sydney	from 1499
London	from 379
Nairobi	from 1359
Rome	from 629
Bangkok	from 1159
Vancouver	from 329

Round World	from 1699
"Bare Bones" Round World	from 2399
via South Pacific Circle Asia	from 1599
via India Circle Pacific	from 2199

Spring and Summer flights fill quickly!

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

Help for hazardous housing on the way

New process fast-tracks property complaints

BY ANDREA HUNCAR

Sydenham Ward Councillor Don Rogers is proud of his city, at least most of it. "I don't take visitors into certain areas because it is embarrassing," he told a press conference Tuesday.

"I've heard many horror stories in the student core area ... Housing conditions are a major concern both to the students and residents," he said.

Rogers was at Queen's to introduce the new Request for Enhancement Forms (REF) which he hopes will help improve Kingston student residences. Along with Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin, Town-Gown Liaison Coordinator Nancy Tatham and Helen Finley, chairperson of the Sydenham Board of Tenants, Rogers unveiled the forms which are intended to speed up the process of property-standards enforcement.

On the forms, tenants can identify their problem—including pests, plumbing, heating or locks—and request notice from City Hall on what action was taken.

The forms will be available through the AMS, the Town Gown office, and various other sources. Rogers said he hopes that after the resident fills out the form and sends it to City Hall, there will be a response within 30 days.

The tenant must then give permission for a house inspector to enter his or her residence. Upon the discovery of justified cause, a notice will be sent to the landlord allowing a given number of days to rectify the situation.

In extenuating circumstances without resolution, "the city can take the landlord to court," said Rogers. "But that's not the intention."

Town-Gown's Finley said, "we're hopeful that this will help and we're certainly willing to cooperate in any way."

Added Nevin, "the form facilitates education ... it addresses the problem and allows someone else to help [the student] through it. It's a step in the right direction."

Rogers said the form is intended to be used as a last resort, after tenants have attempted to resolve the problem directly with their landlord.

Using the form is "a question of common sense [rather than] chasing down every loose flake of paint or a tiny crack in a window," Rogers said.

However, when landlords are "less than good," a REF form will be available for use by all Sydenham residents, he said.

Nevin said the REF procedure eliminates the "lengthy and involved" complaint procedures of the past, which were especially difficult for students who are busy and relatively new to the city.

Significantly, this latest step towards improving the quality of life in the Kingston community is geared towards the student. Rogers remarked that "students are temporary residents of Kingston and may not be familiar with their rights and responsibilities as tenants."

Tatham said, "a lot of people don't realize that you have to invite property standards [people] in." She recommended that students "discuss it with the landlord. Discuss it early on and if nothing is done, get some redress to the situation."

Surface editor-elect predicts changes

BY CARINA BLOFIELD

"The biggest threat to Surface is student apathy, not anger," said Surface Editor-Elect Dera Nevin about the newspaper's future at Queen's.

In an interview with The Journal, Nevin outlined the changes in content and financing taking place at the paper next year, commented on the paper's current situation, and spoke of the challenges facing her as editor. Nevin has held the position of Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner for the past year.

Surface won a two-dollar opt-outable student interest fee in last month's referendum and so its future depends on the number of students who choose to pay the two-dollar student interest fee in September.

Nevin predicted 57 per cent of students will opt out, leaving her with a budget for four issues. However, she plans to increase revenues through advertising.

Nevin said she hopes to change the content and editorial processes of Surface to better reflect the diversity on campus. Six editors, one of whom must be in first year, will solicit contributions and edit for the magazine.

Ten per cent of Surface content, Nevin promised, must be by first-time contributors in order to ensure diversity of material and opinion. Next year, Nevin pointed out, clear contribution guidelines, an e-mail address, and the chance to guest-edit should make Surface more open and accessible.

Nevin also spoke of extensive changes in the newspaper's layout. "I want a different look for every paper," she said. "The layout will be a surprise, so people will have to go look for Surface."

Nevin's plans include shifting to a magazine style, and soliciting cover art from fine arts students on campus.

According to Nevin, Surface has become too much of an "institution."

She said the newspaper "should be an activity, full of growth and change rather than stagnation. Surface is all about dynamism."

"The emotional feelings surrounding Surface are what make it relevant. The strong feelings associated with the magazine prove its importance," Nevin said.

When asked about the recent national attention Surface has received, Nevin said "it presents quite a spotlight. I hope it does not intimidate people, and stop them from contributing next year."

Because she has no staff at the moment, Nevin predicted extreme pressure for the first issue next fall, at which time editorial staff will be appointed.

Correction A story in the March 31 Journal referred to Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Tom Williams saying administration would be pursuing a food contract this year, rather than delaying the decision a year. The speaker in fact was not Williams, but his executive assistant, Tom Morrow. The Journal regrets the error.

Sarah McLachlan spends April Fool's in Grant Hall.

BRENT DAVIS

BETTER THAN MCJOBS?

Looking for a job this summer? The Ontario provincial government has announced it is creating 21,300 new jobs for students. The jobs range from starting your own business to saving the environment. If you are interested in the JobsOntario Summer Employment Programme, head on over to Career Planning and Placement or call toll-free at 1-800-387-0777 for more information.

CONFERENCE ON COMMUNITY ECONOMICS

You are invited to participate in a community forum entitled "Making Cents: A Conference on Community Economics," April 18-24. Sponsored by the Kingston Global Community Centre and CUSO Ontario, the forum will make use of workshops, open forums and panel discussions to uncover what options are being used locally and internationally to create healthy, self-reliant communities. For more information, please contact Glenn Stairs or Elizabeth Muggah of the Kingston Global Community Centre at 530-2105.

PROFS PRAISED

At tonight's Arts and Science Undergraduate Assembly, to be held in McLaughlin Room, Queen's professors will be recognized for teaching excellence. The professors were nominated by their students. This year's recipients are Omar Basabe, Charles Acland, Jeff Adams, Peter Bly, Piotr Dutkiewicz, Mary Morton, and John Pierce.

In the same vein, the Queen's Law Students Society has awarded its annual LSS Teaching Award to Professor William Flanagan. Flanagan, who teaches Property Law and Family Law, among other courses, was selected for his demonstrated excellence and commitment in teaching.

MEL HURTIQ SPEAKS

National Party leader Mel Hurtig will be speaking this Friday at the Sir John A. MacDonald Room in City Hall. NP members and the general public are invited. The speech will take place at 7 p.m.

USED BOOK SERVICE

The Alma Mater Society is now providing the used book service formerly run by the Queen's Christian Fellowship. The AMS wishes to announce that non-returning or graduating students will be able to hand their used texts in for resale. Information as to when and where will be available next week in the AMS office. Eighty per cent of the sale goes to the student donating the book, the rest goes to charity.

TRICIA BAUMAN

Municipal Affairs Commish chosen

BY MICHELLE PELLEGRIN

Queen's students have a new voice at City Hall.

Environmental chemistry student Jen Speer, who was appointed to the new position of Alma Mater Society municipal affairs commissioner, officially starts her job May 1.

Speer said she hopes to make students more aware and informed as next year's municipal elections approach, as well as increase communication with the landlords' association.

"I'm not scared of City Hall," Speer said. "We [the AMS] don't expect to make changes, just make them [the municipality] aware."

Speer is eager to make the voices of Queen's students heard in the Kingston community. "I'm really excited," she said.

Speer said she intends to spend much of her time next year at Kingston City Hall, relaying the needs and grievances of Queen's students.

She has hired two deputy-commissioners, Bart Nickelson and Elizabeth Harvey, to assist her next year.

The new position was created as the need for a full-time City Hall watchdog became apparent in the wake of the Phase II housing proposal dispute, which came to a head this year.

Current AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin said there was a great need for the position's creation. Nevin has been deeply involved in municipal issues this year.

The role of the municipal affairs commissioner will be to act as a liaison between the AMS and the municipality of Kingston.

1-800-667-CUTS

No chicken.
No fries.
No pizza.

Just the best deals on student travel delivered to your door.

TRAVEL CUTS

The travel company of the Canadian Federation of Students
Ont. Reg. #4227336

ATTENTION TREEPLANTERS

- Planting Bags
- Brushpro Spades
- Sacs & Carps
- Caulk Boots
- Hiking Boots
- Raingear

This Coupon Is Good For One Pair Of Wool Socks

Home of The Treeplanter's Barbeque
VIBERG BOOTS • 1255-4TH AVE.
PRINCE GEORGE, B.C.

TIRED OF NO PRIVACY?

5 BEDROOMS AND 5 BATHROOMS

LIVING ROOM, KITCHEN, DEN,
PARKING AND GARAGE INCLUDED.

CONVENIENT LOCATION ON CLERGY STREET

CALL MATT AT 546-9172
CALL BOB AT 541-0979

The Faculty of Arts and Science would like to thank all faculty, staff, and students who assisted us with our F200 Student Services Review by completing and returning our questionnaire.

We hope to have our review completed by the end of June with implementation of any changes for September 1994. Watch for us!

Pharmaceutical companies' influence in question

BY JANE MUNDELL

The program director of the medical school faculty at McMaster University has written a controversial paper regarding the extent to which pharmaceutical companies wield influence over medical residents. (Residents are students working as interns at hospitals.)

Dr. Gordon Guyatt has alleged that a drug-industry official threatened to withdraw funding to the university after it set out guidelines in 1991 for interaction between industry representatives and residents.

Drug companies currently sponsor research and education at schools of medicine as a means of funding the universities, while testing their new pharmaceuticals as well.

Guyatt's article was published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal. He said residents may be pressured to prescribe drugs that may be more expensive or even unnecessary.

A spokesperson for the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges (ACMC) said the contact between industry officials and residents varies within different schools and hospitals.

The particular policy of a school is most often based on conflict-of-interest guidelines developed by the ACMC, regarding issues such as surveillance, marketing and faculty participation, he said.

When asked about the influence of pharmaceutical companies at Queen's, Dr. Ronald Wigle, the associate dean of post-graduate medical education, said it "would take a few days to answer" the question, if he could answer it at all.

Wigle said Queen's has drug-company-sponsored research projects, such as clinical trials, but that it's "difficult to assess their influence" on the university.

While the university relies on private funding such as that provided by the drug industry, he said Queen's is "struggling with the problem of the ethical difficulty of accepting funds from companies that produce the medication doctors are responsible for prescribing."

Wigle suggested that funding should be kept "at arm's length from the product, [with] local people hav[ing] a complete say in the teaching, material and content."

He said he would prefer that the pharmaceutical association provide a pool of money that is not tied directly to a company or drug. The Medical Research Council could then sponsor specific projects rather than drugs, and "assess them on the merits of science," he said.

Wigle stated that this would be difficult to do because drug companies depend on the research conducted by the medical schools. "We don't want to stop the development of new drugs, but we mustn't let the business aspects influence the science," he said.

With files from The Globe and Mail.

AMS takes over used book exchange from QCF

BY SHARON WILSON

If you are looking for a good deal on your text books next fall, the Alma Mater Society-run used book sale will be the place to find them.

Previously run by the Queen's Christian Fellowship, the move to turn the book sale over to AMS operation was initiated last July by AMS President Katherine Philips.

Over the past few years the book sale has expanded, and incoming AMS Vice-President (Operations) Kevin Rex said the QCF had reached a point where they no longer felt comfortable running such a large operation.

After meeting with Philips, the QCF agreed to hand over the operation of the sale to the AMS, provided that the AMS follow the same QCF mandate. The mandate specifies that 80 per cent of the profits will go to the student selling the book, and the other 20 per cent towards charity.

The AMS has agreed to this deal, and will donate 20 per cent of surplus revenues to a charity which is yet to be named.

Philips said the charity will be selected according to the criteria of "immediate impact on life and health."

1994-95 AMS President Taz Pirmohamed said that non-returning and graduating students will be able to drop off books to the used book service some time toward the end of April. She urged interested students to check the AMS office next week for details.

Rex said the differences in the operation of the book sale will be minor. Next year, the event will run for three weeks instead of four days. As well, the AMS has plans for a second used book sale at the beginning of the winter term.

The major difference, according to Rex, will be the implementation of a year-round book store. Currently, the AMS has storage space in the basement of the John Deutsch University Centre that could accommodate any books not sold at the sale, he said.

Philips said money has already been approved to install a computer database of book holdings that students can access.

Although Rex said the location of the computer terminal has not yet been determined, he pointed to the AMS Infobank as one possibility.

According to Rex, the new system would allow students to access the computer during the school year and see if a book is in storage. If the book is available, the student would fill out a request form.

At the end of the day, the book store manager would collect the requests, locate the books and bring them up to the AMS office. Students could then retrieve the books and pay for them at the front AMS desk.

The AMS is in the process of taking applications for a book store manager and will begin conducting interviews at the end of the week.

Rex said that a big part of the manager's job will be coming up with creative ideas to ensure that the operation of the book store runs smoothly.

McMaster mourns tragic death of graduate student

BY JEFF GRAY

McMaster University is still reeling from the tragic death of graduate student Joan Heimbecker, 25, who was shot in her student residence last Wednesday night.

A memorial service for Heimbecker held in McMaster's convocation hall was attended by a standing-room-only crowd of over 600 students on McMaster's campus yesterday.

Additionally, Heimbecker's family attended funeral services in her hometown of Clifford, Ontario this week.

Heimbecker's ex-boyfriend, Rory Eldon Foreman, a nursing student at Kitchener's Conestoga College, is a suspect in the shooting.

McMaster spokesperson Sherry Cecil said McMaster students have been wearing green ribbons on campus in memory of Heimbecker.

Cecil said green was chosen, as opposed to white, because it was Heimbecker's favourite colour.

Last night, Mac students held a candlelight vigil, Cecil said, and today, students are staging a demonstration on campus to protest violence against women.

Cecil said a plaque in Heimbecker's honour is being added to the Nina de Villiers Memorial Gardens at McMaster, which are named for another McMaster student who died a victim of violence. de Villiers was murdered in Burlington in 1991.

Assembly Report

BY BROCK MARTLAND

The (supposedly) last Alma Mater Society Assembly for the term took place a week ago today, and produced a wealth of information for the last Assembly Report. Besides surprising debate about the lack of an AMS summer budget (see story on page one), the body discussed the Student Housing Authority referendum question and other issues.

REFERENDUM ISSUE ADDRESSED

Mike O'Connor, the student who sought funding for the Student Housing Authority in the recent spring referendum, appeared at Assembly and raised concerns about the AMS's treatment of his question.

O'Connor's original referendum question contained a detailed explanation of where SHA funding would be directed, but the AMS altered his question to a standard form, which excluded the description.

He said his original question "gives specific accountability for students for their student interest fees."

O'Connor said he felt "profoundly insulted" that AMS members considered his proposal "a personal job creation project."

Internal Affairs Commissioner Dean Campbell defended the decision to change the question, saying that the question included a reference to the AMS which could not stay, given that the SHA has "no direct or official relationship."

The intent of rewording, Campbell said, was "to make it very clear to the students what they were or were not supporting."

AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Jane Shantz said, "I'm very sorry that Mr. O'Connor felt that doors were slammed in his face."

WHAT'S-A-HAPPENIN'?

Assembly ratified the final '94-95 AMS Council positions. Nancy Hyndman will be Communications Commissioner, and Jen Speer will serve in the newly created Municipal Affairs post.

Commerce Society President John Wilkin announced that the Commerce Renewal Program (known as "CORE") was approved by 97 per cent of voting students in a recent referendum. The program will set up an opt-outable student interest fee of $50 for Commerce students to improve the School of Business.

AMS President Taz Pirmohamed urged students to pick up petition sheets in the AMS offices to protest recent tuition hikes by the Ontario government.

VP Shantz referred to the anti-racism protest, held last week on campus, as "a good, clear message to the Heritage Front." Various faculty societies have also passed statements condemning the Heritage Front, including the Engineering Society, the Law Students' Society, and Jean Royce Hall Council.

ASSEMBLED OUT-OF-CONTEXT QUOTES

Despite the ever-quotable Rector David Baar's absence, Assembly was treated to these lines, quoted here out of context:

"What am I, chopped liver?" — EngSoc President Matt Fenwick.

"I'm the evil Mike O'Connor." — Mike O'Connor.

"I felt the need to appear here one last time. Naked. Please stop laughing." — Brad Elder, Journal resident self-exhibitionist.

"My family is very strong in the Christian faith, and I guess I'm a deviant." — VP Jane Shantz.

"We're talking about a man who threw himself down a bowling alley." — Arts and Science Undergraduate Society President Andrew Boggs, on Tim "Cloverleaf" Wilson.

"I'm not exactly the sharpest crayon in the box." — ASUS's Boggs.

"No Ferraris, I assure you." — VP Kevin Rex, on allowing the AMS to monitor its own spending over the summer.

RESUME SPECIAL FOR THE MONTH OF APRIL

Come in and say...
I NEED A JOB

Our TYPESETTERS will TYPE & FORMAT your 2 PAGE RESUME for $20⁰⁰ (30% off!!!!)

Special Hours April 9 to 22:

Weekdays (10-4)
Weekends (12-4)

S H O T A R T

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THE FAT LADY SINGS

POOL PUB • THE SHOT • POOL PUB

Growth of Diner 547-Pool

SEPTEMBER, 1993

News of a sexual assault marred an otherwise successful first week at the beginning of the year. The Journal reported on a sexual assault which occurred at 4 a.m. on the Thursday morning of Orientation Week. The victim of the assault, a third-year Queen's student, wished to remain anonymous, but told the story of waking up to find a male intruder in her bedroom. "I couldn't feel more unsafe, I couldn't feel more vulnerable than I do now," she said.

While Orientation was a success on most fronts, the Transfer Student Orientation Week, or "trash week," was cancelled by the Senate Orientation Activity Review Board because of unsanctioned events and reports of alcohol consumption by members of the trash executive and trash leaders.

Mathematics professor Cedric Schubert, who was convicted in Dec. 1992 for sexually assaulting his step-daughter a decade ago, elected to exercise his right to take an extended leave of absence, a year of sabbatical in 1994, and retire.

On Sept. 10, the Vote Education campaign officially launched its non-partisan endeavour to canvas federal candidates in the Oct. 25 election to determine its position on post-secondary education in Canada.

Match-making in the '90s became a difficult proposition for Canadian law school graduates, as 35 per cent were unable to achieve matches with firms and government for articling positions in the Toronto match. Law Dean Don Carter blamed the problem on "the economy, plain and simple."

In the final issue of the month, The Journal reported that the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance had lost its largest member, the University of Toronto Student Administrative Council. Alma Mater Society President Katherine Phillips said the decision by U of T would not tarnish the reputation or credibility of OUSA.

OCTOBER

In October, student opt-outs skyrocketed as unprecedented numbers of students opted out of the Queen's Challenge, the Refugee Fund, the United Way, and others. AMS Deputy Commissioner (Internal Affairs for Operations) Chris Gilbert warned that "what is an (opt-out) cheque now, is less service later."

On Oct. 5, The Journal reported the resignation of Kingston Mayor Helen Cooper. Cooper left to chair the Ontario Municipal Board in Toronto, a lucrative $110,000 per year post.

An October Saturday night at Alfie's featured a chronic case of over-exposure, as several male patrons were asked to leave the bar after they were spotted at a table with their pants undone and their genitals exposed. The incident was complicated by reports of a female off-duty Queen's security officer being seated at the same table.

Queen's University announced the appointment of Dr. William Leggett as its future principal on Oct. 12. Leggett, 54, is a population biologist of international renown, and the current vice-principal (academics) at McGill. He will take over the reins from Principal David Smith next September.

On Oct. 13 and 14, Queen's said Yes to OUSA and No to Surface in the fall referendum. Arts and Science students delivered a mandate to discontinue funding Surface, as

NEWS

55.6 per cent voted against the paper in the ASUS referendum. Meanwhile, AMS President Katherine Phillips was thrilled at the OUSA referendum results, as Queen's students narrowly passed a 95-cent student interest fee to fund OUSA.

On Oct. 19, The Journal reported the sexual assault of a female Queen's student, which occurred in an alley between King Street East and the Toucan Pub. The victim of the sexual assault described her three male attackers as visibly drunk and as looking like someone you would see in your classes.

Results of the Vote Education campaign survey were returned, with only 28 candidates in Ontario filling out the survey personally. While some submitted official party answers, many did not respond at all, including Reform Party's Sean McAdam and Liberal incumbent Peter Milliken.

On Oct. 25, Peter Milliken was returned to the House of Commons, as Kingston and the islands voted in accordance with the rest of Ontario, decisively choosing the Liberals, who swept almost every seat in the province. Jean Chretien became the country's 20th prime minister.

Queen's witnessed its first homecoming street party in six years, as naked dancers, drunk alumni and students, and elated baseball fans emptied into University Avenue to celebrate the Toronto Blue Jays' second consecutive World Series victory.

Kingston City Mayor-Designate Ken Matthews was confronted by members of the Queen's and Kingston community at City Hall on Oct. 27, after he allegedly mocked legal action pursued by a disabled woman who had been sexually assaulted. The protestors demanded Matthews' resignation, but council voted to accept an apology from Matthews for the comments, which he maintained he never made. The vote was 8-7, with Matthews casting the deciding vote.

Sparks flew at the Oct. 28 AMS Assembly, as three AMS commissioners launched scathing attacks aimed primarily at the AMS executive. Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell, Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed and Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin blasted the AMS executive for being unsupportive and unresponsive, exhibiting inappropriate behaviour, and working at cross-purposes with their commissions.

On Oct. 29, The Journal reported on the tabling of a proposal to privatize Queen's Masters of Business Administration program and hike tuition for MBA students to $20,000 for a twelve-month degree. MBA Chairperson Ken Wong explained, "if we don't privatize, we're never going to be world class."

NOVEMBER

Marriott workers picketed Leonard Hall Cafeteria to protest the firing of one of Marriott's employees. Steve Hannah, a part-time dishwasher at Leonard, said he was fired for the fact that he hadn't shaved and his unsafe handling of dishes. Marriott union members accused Marriott of using intimidation tactics.

In early November, controversy swelled after a recent University Senate decision reduced the sentence of a male student who admitted to sexually assaulting an unconscious female student.

At an ASUS special general meeting held

Nov. 4, Arts and Science students defeated a motion to make the October Surface referendum result retroactively binding. The vote was 65-36.

AMS Board of Directors Chair Catherine Emmerson resigned at the AMS Annual Corporate Meeting on Nov. 11, citing a lack of open lines of communication and trust as one of the reasons for her decision. Emmerson also criticized AMS President Katherine Phillips for being unaware of her duties with the Board of Directors, and said she disagreed with the AMS restructuring plans and the decision not to budget for zero.

At the same meeting, Media Services Director Eric Jabal prompted protest from The Journal and at least one AMS Assembly member over comments he made relating to Journal autonomy. Jabal complained that "the AMS foot[s] the bill," but lacks control over what is printed. Journal editor-in-chief Sarah MacWhirter called his comments "a serious threat to the editorial autonomy of the paper."

The third annual Maclean's university rankings issue hit newstands in mid-November, with Queen's placing second in the medical/doctoral category behind McGill.

The Surface debate took a new twist in November, as ASUS executive opted to look into making Surface funding opt-outable, subject to approval by referendum in February. A previous motion to delete Surface from the ASUS constitution, which incited vehement opposition from Yes-side supporters, was removed from the table.

The newly-opened Parent Resource Centre was the subject of reproach in late November, as Queen's Mature Students Association representative Jack Troughton called the centre a token effort by the AMS. Troughton criticized the AMS for its unwillingness to pay for the trained individuals which would allow it to be a drop-off centre. Instead, parents must stay in the centre while their children are supervised by volunteers. AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson said there was no intention from the beginning for [the centre] to be a drop-off centre.

Meanwhile, the review and renegotiation of the campus food services contract now held by Marriott Foods continued without student representation on the decision-making committee. AMS President Phillips said that while the administration is giving students an advisory role in the process, it is insisting that students not be part of the final decision because the contract negotiation is a financial matter.

The whole country took notice when the Faculty Board of the School of Business voted unanimously in support of the proposal to privatize the master's of business administration program at Queen's—and hike tuition to $20,000. AMS President Phillips was leery of the decision, stating, "privatizing the MBA program might start us on a slippery slope toward privatizing other professional programs."

The (not so) Quiet Puh was ordered to close its doors at 11 p.m. for the remainder of 1993 as a result of noise complaints. Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Dr. Tom Williams ordered the early closing because of excessive noise affecting students living in the graduate residences above the QP.

Vids in the Hole? AMS Administrative Services Director Stephanie Taylor announced that the fledgling AMS-run video store is facing a deficit of approximately $53,000. As a result of the "grim numbers," the AMS Board of Directors Management Committee decided to reduce store hours and movie stock starting in the month of January.

JANUARY, 1994

Queen's Principal David C. Smith was appointed to the Order of Canada by the Governor General, becoming one of 52 new members to be presented with one of Canada's most prestigious awards.

Queen's students felt the sting of Social Contract legislation that called for five and a half unpaid days of leave for faculty, as some profs elected to cancel classes. In particular, the English department decided to support faculty who wanted to take two of their social contract days of leave on teaching days. Department Head Dr. George Logan called the issue "a no-win situation."

Former Black Panther leader Imam Jamil Al-Amin raised eyebrows on campus at a speech in Dunning Auditorium. Al-Amin, who is a Muslim community leader, made some controversial statements on homosexuality and religion, including his statement that "the man-made concepts have begun to produce en masse the worst in mankind... serial killers... rapists... drug abusers... child molesters... homosexuals."

Where's the 1992-93 yearbook? Mistakes, mishandling and miscommunication apparently led to yearbooks still not being available. Media Services Director Eric Jabal (under whose jurisdiction the yearbook falls) and 1993-94 yearbook Editor-in-Chief Karen Kilcullen blamed Robert Yee, who was the editor-in-chief for the '92-93 yearbook. "Basically he gave the publishers and the AMS the tunaround," said Kilcullen.

AMS Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson publicly apologized for his behaviour at Cloverleaf Lanes in Kingston, referring to his lack of bowling alley etiquette. Wilson called his actions "inappropriate and potentially harmful." The fact that an 800 pound pin sweeper almost crushed him subsequent to his nose dive into the pins lent credence to Wilson's observation that his actions were potentially harmful.

St. Lawrence College student Mark Scissons was sentenced to a three-month prison term and a year of probation for a gay-bashing assault of former Queen's Arts and Science student Peter T.oyer. After announcing a guilty verdict, Judge Paul Megginson called the incident "a vicious and senseless attack, motivated by hatred of homosexuals."

The AMS refused to pay a Yuk Yuk's comedian who broke his contract by making homophobic jokes during his Welcome Back Week performance. Comedian Wayne Fleming reportedly made a series of jokes about homosexuals which violated the AMS Mission Statement. Yuk Yuk's Head of Talent Ed Smeal defended Fleming's right to freedom of speech and charged that the politically correct movement had "gotten out of hand" at many universities.

FEBRUARY

This month, AMS Education Commissioner Clate Fielding received a flyer published by the Heritage Front—a white supremacist group—which announced the "great accomplishments of the [white] race." "I have no idea what to do," Fielding said. "This is the most blatant example of racism on campus."

Ironically, the flyer was received on the same day that the first edition of Surface not to be funded by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society hit the streets. The issue had an anti-racism theme, coinciding with Black History Month.

Rubin "Hurricane" Carter blew through

Queen's campus as part of Queen's Students for Literacy's awareness campaign. Carter, whose dream of being the world boxing champion was halted in 1966 when he was wrongfully convicted and imprisoned for murder, offered a stirring address to a packed Grant Hall. He spoke of the role that literacy had played in his struggle, and of "the awesome power of the written word."

Queen's student Brett House was awarded the prestigious Rhodes Scholarship, one of only two students in Ontario to receive the honour. House obtained his BA (Honours) in economics from Queen's, and plans to pursue an MA in economics at Oxford.

With only a week left before the AMS elections, allegations surfaced that AMS presidential candidate Jonathan Arnold had posted a computer printout picture of women in degrading positions on a roommate's door while living in residence in first year. Initially Arnold said that he could not recall the specifics of the incident; later, he said, "yes, I made a mistake. I regret what I did. But I have changed since then. I lacked education—that's why our campaign stresses education on these issues."

The team of Pirmohamed, Rex and Shantz captured victory in the AMS elections with 31.4 per cent of the vote. It was a close race, however, as Pirmohamed's team defeated the Bertrand team by a margin of only 75 votes. At the ensuing celebration party, Pirmohamed said, "I can't believe it. I'm so thrilled. We thought we lost it by just a hair."

Queen's student Bridget Kerr quit her job at AJ's Hangar, accusing management and staff of sexist behaviour. Kerr cited one particular instance in which male staff and management considered having a Nancy Kerrigan pinata as a promotional event during the Olympics. "They were thinking of giving out a hammer so people could bash her," Kerr said. AJ's management said that they had learned from the experience.

The Queen's Women's Centre was in turmoil as two factions emerged within its walls to dispute the direction that the centre should take. Centre veteran Mary Syrett referred to the insurgence of a new group of feminists as an attempt to "enact a hostile take-over." The new group, headed by Lauta McKay, disagreed with the Women Centre's collective having to adhere to an anti-potnography and pro-choice Basis of Unity.

The Coalition of Lesbian and Gay Rights in Ontario (CLGRO) criticized television station managers for homophobia when their three public service announcements (PSAs) received no air time. The PSAs were designed to raise awareness about the realities of same-sex couples in Ontario, but, according to CKWS Station Manager John Tucker, were rejected "due to content." CLGRO's Chris Veldhoven alleged that "station managers are homophobic themselves or are scared of the public backlash... it's part of systemic homophobia."

MARCH

Former Surface editor Shaheen Hirani was released on peace bond in Toronto, as charges against her of assault on a police officer were dropped. But Hirani contended that the peace bond, negotiated by her lawyers and the prosecution, was an attempt on the part of police to "escape accountability for their [own] actions," which she described as abusive. The charges stem from a run-in with police during a visit of then Prime Minister Kim Campbell at U of Toronto last July.

Over Reading Week, a computer and laser jet printer valued at over $7,500 were stolen from the second floor lounge of the Engineering Society in Clark Hall.

Proposed municipal electoral boundary changes had some Kingston residents up in arms, worried that students would have too much say at City Hall. Ironically, Communications

NEWS

Commissioner Dera Nevin said that the proposal was unfair to students, as it breached the principle of representation by population.

The Journal learned that police, acting on a citizen's complaint, had been conducting an investigation into Surface since mid-February. Their findings were sent to the Crown Attorney's office for guidance as to whether or not hate charges can be laid. Police were simultaneously investigating material which had recently been distributed through Queen's campus by the Heritage Front.

Boxes of food and supplies began piling up in the storeroom at Leonard Cafeteria in anticipation of a strike or lock out by Marriott workers. Contract negotiations between Marriott full-time workers and management reached a stalemate when management put forward their final offer, leaving the workers in a legal strike position. One Marriott worker said, "They didn't give us anything. All they did was take things away."

Negotiations between Marriott and full-time workers, who have been without a contract since last April, began last summer.

Death in the Hall. After only one year in operation, the decision was made to close the doors to Vids in the Hall forever. The motion to eliminate the ailing video service was passed at the AMS Board of Directors meeting when it was revealed that the best-case scenario for next year would entail a $15,000 loss.

Journal Assistant News Editor Brock Martland surprised AMS Assembly by showing up at Assembly wearing only ski gloves and his special Calgary Stampeder socks. He was later quoted as saying, "Gee, that was a silly thing to do. What a joker I am. Oh well, no worries. Ha Ha Ha, come to papa."

Ontario Education Minister Dave Cooke announced that tuition would increase by 21 per cent over the next two years. Meanwhile, provincial funding for colleges and universities will be maintained at current levels.

In response to the recent surfacing of Heritage Front literature on campus, the Alma Mater Society passed a unanimous resolution resolving "to confront and expose the racist and homophobic views espoused by the Heritage Front."

Over 300 hundred students marched in protest against the Heritage Front, calling for administration to publicly denounce the white supremacist organization. The demonstration started outside Richardson Hall and then moved to Summerville to attract the attention of Principal David Smith. Smith later wrote a letter to AMS VP (University Affairs) Todd Minerson to express his commitment to "the elimination of racism and hatred on campus."

Surface newspaper will be funded by student interest fees next year. Spring Referendum results showed that 62.9 per cent of the Arts and Science students voted in favour of opt-outable funding for the newspaper.

The Commerce Orientation Committee was disbanded because the "boss" candidates for Commerce frosh week were asked to perform acts with sexual overtones during their interviews.

THEY SAID IT....

"Everyone knows gays kiss like straight people, but if the gay rights group wants stock value, they're not going to use my TV station to achieve it." — Douglas Bassett, president and CEO of Baton Broadcasting, which owns CJOH-TV, speaking about his company's refusal to air gay rights public service announcements.

"The way you fight despicable beliefs is through exchange of information and discrediting of false information. The rally today is the first step." — Vice-Principal (Operations and University Relations) Dr. Tom Williams, on the Heritage Front protest that attracted more than 300 students.

"If Canadians aren't extremely careful, our future will be what the United States is today: grotesque disparities in wealth, enormous and burgeoning underclasses, and a lack of basic social services, not to mention a lack of compassion and a surplus of meanness of spirit." — Rubin "Hurricane" Carter

"I speak on what is right. I don't speak for the people, I speak for myself and I will get judged at the end by the polls." — Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews

"I am beginning to wonder whether the people elected to represent the student body are capable of doing so." — Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed on the AMS executive.

"I speak on what is right. I don't speak for the people, I speak for myself and I will get judged at the end by the polls." — Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews

"I speak on what is right. I don't speak for the people, I speak for myself and I will get judged at the end by the polls." — Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews

"I speak on what is right. I don't speak for the people, I speak for myself and I will get judged at the end by the polls." — Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews

"I speak on what is right. I don't speak for the people, I speak for myself and I will get judged at the end by the polls." — Kingston Mayor, Ken Matthews

Brod Elder was very glad when the Ontario government relaxed its laws on tole-dancing. Because he enjoys performing for an appreciative audience. Sometimes. Only on weekends. And only when it's Ministry.

Downtown
Copper Penny

COPPER PENNY is a very popular downtown restaurant for the whole family.

Large portions of food are served in a relaxing, clean and casual setting by our friendly staff.

Meals range from $4.50 to $8.25.

Enjoy Fettucinni Primavera, Sizzlin' Chicken and Ribs on a Skillet, Steaks, large Homemade Burgers and Sandwiches, or Homemade Cheesecakes, just to name a few.

Good luck on your exams!
We're always here to give you a break from your books!

549-4257
240 Princess Street

The winners are ...

Students, professors lauded for contributions

BY LORKY THORKILLSIN

Some of the most dedicated members of the Queen's community were honoured recently by the Alma Mater Society. The winners of the Tricolour Award, the AMS Letter Award and the Frank Knox Award for excellence in teaching were recognized for their contributions to the university.

TRICOLOUR AWARD

Four Queen's students received the Tricolour Award, the highest non-academic award at Queen's.

The recipients of the award are Bill Holder, coordinator of the Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG), Law Students' Society president and anti-racism activist Malini Moorhry, former Golden Words editor and Engineering Society vice-president (society affairs) Pete Sutton, and ASUS President Jenn Steeves.

AMS LETTER AWARD

The Alma Mater Society Letter Award recognizes outstanding contributions to the AMS and university, which might otherwise receive little recognition.

The recipients of the AMS Letter Award were Amina Ally, a tireless campus activist for peace, lesbian/gay/bisexual rights and anti-racism, Julia Lipinska, a founder of the AMS Lesbian Gay Bisexual Issues Committee and longtime volunteer for the Kingston Lesbian and Gay Association, and Silvia Lukka, who has worked with orientation week and Queen's Hillel.

FRANK KNOX TEACHING AWARD

The Frank Knox Teaching Award is a student-nominated award, the highest recognition one can receive for teaching at Queen's.

Dr. Rosemary Jolly of the department of English and Dr. Gerald Tulchinsky of the history department were this year's winners. Jolly teaches a second-year course in Commonwealth literature and a third year post-colonial theory course.

Int'l students denied OHIP

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

to finance their health insurance, an expense which could be particularly difficult for those with families.

Anderson referred to international students as "a convenient group of people [for the government] to isolate. There will not be a very big fuss about it."

Queen's International Students' Society Acting President

Petrovich Horton said removing OHIP coverage would mean that "a lot of international students will be discouraged from coming to Ontario."

Horton said that with other provinces continuing to offer health coverage and lower tuition rates for international students, it would be "harder and harder for international students to stay in Ontario."

For students without scholarships, Horton said, health insurance costs—which he estimated would be "at least $1,500 a year for coverage"—will be "a big financial problem for them. There's no way out."

The Deputy Chairman of the Canadian Federation of Students, (CFS), Jaimie McEvoy, referred to the province's decision as a "strange offering from an NDP government."

However, the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, of which Queen's is a member, has not commented, according to Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips.

The Council of Ontario Universities, a research, advocacy, and communications organization representing the interests of 20 post-secondary institutions in Ontario, slammed the NDP's OHIP policy for foreign students. Peter George, president of the COU, referred to the policy as a punishing action directed at foreign students. He said he hopes the Ministry of Health will reconsider their action.

"Foreign students have added immeasurably to the cultural mosaic of our campuses. These students act as ambassadors of goodwill for this province... The province of Ontario and our universities have a lot to lose by this action," said George.

Anderson said university and college groups—including CFS—petitioned the government to maintain OHIP coverage for international students. At Queen's, she said, most people lobbied the government directly, rather than through the AMS.

Anderson said the government has taken "a cavalier approach to international education." International students may be politically easy to isolate, she said, because they lack voting privileges and may be leaving Canada after their studies.

In terms of finding an alternative means of health coverage, Anderson said that international students might look towards a collective plan.

With Files from the Globe & Mail

Contract up in air

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

is here."

Bertrand emphasized improved waste management as a priority. "Queen's has been slow to go green," Bertrand said, adding that he hoped the consulting process will force the administration to take action. "It is an initiative that has to happen at the administrative level," Bertrand said.

Two contracts are being negotiated—the Marriott labour dispute, and the food services contract. Depending on how the labour dispute is settled, it may have a large effect on consumers.

Bertrand said the terms of the union, if met, could add somewhere between $250,000 and $500,000 to university operating costs. He suggested that "80 to 85 per cent of the meal plan is funded by residence fees." In a worst case scenario, this could mean an increase of $200 in the cost of a meal plan, according to Bertrand.

Morrow confirmed that any increase in labour costs will be passed on to the consumer, in both residences and retail outlets.

THANK Q'94

Photo by Bernard Clark

Graduating students in nine faculties said thanks to Queen's in 1994 with a gift to a project determined by students themselves. Congratulations on the fabulous results. Your support will be a tough act to follow for the Class of '95! Many thanks to all who participated!

COMMITMENT'94

FACULTY/SCHOOL	PROJECT	PERCENTAGE PARTICIPATION*	$ PLEDGED*
Nursing	Journals	96%	$7,250
Rehab	Clinical Learning Centre	91%	$6,975
PhysEd	Computer Lab	87%	$7,460
Applied Science	Engineering Society Expansion Fund	80%	$36,652
MBA	Facilities upgrade	78%	$8,045
Law	Law Building Fund	62%	$12,150
Arts & Science	Student bursary	61%	$77,270
Commerce (COMMITMENT'93)	Results unavailable as of press time
Medicine	Results unavailable as of press time

*Results as of March 29, 1994... and pledges are still being made!

For more information about the THANK Q or COMMITMENT graduating class giving programs, please contact the Department of Development at 545-2060 or your faculty representative.

Please return your signed letter of intent

Turn Pro.

By now, you've probably realized there's more to life than school. And that a job is only as good as the career it builds. We can help. We can give you the skills and financial knowledge to become an accounting professional: a Certified General Accountant. Our CGA program of studies can lead to better opportunities in business, government and public practice. If you're ready to make even more of yourself, call (416) 322-6520, extensions 228, 225 or 217, or toll free 1-800-668-1454, or write to us at 240 Eglinton Avenue East, Toronto M4P 1K8.

We're accounting for the future in Ontario

CGA Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

STUDENTS DO YOU HAVE QUESTIONS? THEN GET THE ANSWERS

GREGORY SCOTT
Immigration Specialist

221 King Street East, Kingston, Ontario K7L 3A7
Office: 548-4779 Residence: 545-1877

Also Offices in Toronto and Eastern Europe

Editorial

Top ten things I learned in university

We come to university to learn. This learning experience transcends anything we can get from a textbook or novel. While it is not "real life" education we receive in school, we do learn lessons which can make the difference in our future social adjustments. When considering what I have learned over the past four years, outside of academics, several things come to mind. If I may be so bold, I would like to share them with you.

10. More gets done when there is no spare time.

You can tell when exams and essays are starting to become due because there are always clean dishes and the living room is tidy. It's amazing the number of ways you can procrastinate when something is due the next day. After several years of university, the completion of an essay is less rewarding than clean laundry. If we ever get jobs, it will be important to remember to leave everything to the last minute, because only then will things get done.

9. Food quality decreases proportionately as quantity increases.

It's been a few years since I enjoyed "Steak Night" at Marriott, but I can still remember the taste. Since then, I have come to realize that food cooked in large quantities simply cannot taste good. You can't cook more than one box of Kraft Dinner at a time and you shouldn't eat anything that came out of a five gallon drum.

8. No matter how many hours of research you've done, someone has always done more.

It didn't take me very long to realize that someone knows more than me. Coming out of high-school with an "I'm better than you because I'm going to Queen's" attitude, I was rudely awakened in my first-year classes to the fact that I was stupid. Strangely enough, I found that everyone else had this feeling also. So when I go out into the world, I won't be spouting false facts, on the off chance that someone else, in fact, knows more than me.

7. T.V. shows get less interesting the more times you watch them.

Cheers, WKRP and the Rockford Files were all great shows the first time around. Over the last few years, I have had the pleasure of watching these shows numerous times and I have come to the unfortunate conclusion that they are now boring. So in fifteen years, I'll try and remember not to watch reruns of Seinfeld. But who am I trying to fool?

6. Your level of exhaustion is directly related to the task at hand.

Ever stay up all night only to find yourself falling asleep in class the next morning? This is understandable. What doesn't seem to add up is the fact that staying up all night doesn't prevent you from watching T.V. the next morning or going out drinking the next afternoon. What this means, of course, is that you shouldn't bother sleeping on weekends once you've joined the workforce. It may be the only time you'll really feel awake.

5. CNN has the power to rule the world.

I remember being glued to the T.V. watching the Gulf War in 1991, the William Kennedy Smith trial in 1992, the L.A. riots in 1993, and John and Lorena Bobbitt in 1994. CNN has the power to divert the Western world's attention towards the T.V. screen—who knows what they could do while our backs are turned.

4. It doesn't matter if you stay inside the lines.

You never forget the basics, but for those who did, it just doesn't matter. I'm referring to the creative requirement for graduation formal attendance. Construction hours are spent painting elaborate murals, but by the time you get to the formal, everything is blurry anyway. So what did I learn? Not to demand perfection if my audience is a bunch of drunk people.

3. University life automatically includes exercise.

Before I went off to Queen's, my parents suggested that I try and keep physically active—go to the gym, they said. After four years, I have come to realize that students naturally exercise. Handing in an essay on time often requires running. Carrying a stack of books or a case of beer constitutes weight lifting. Dancing at Alfie's constitutes high impact aerobics.

2. The second you put your boots away, it starts to snow.

Kingston weather is the strangest in the world, but it's not just the lake effect which makes it that way. A major contributing factor are the students that prematurely don shorts and oil-up their roller blades. These people jinx the spring—I'm convinced. So from now on, keep your boots on till June!

1. A university degree does not guarantee a job.

Enough said.

D. MacGregor

Many thanks to all 1993-'94 contributors —from The Journal staff

OPINIONS

OPEN FORUM

TERRIFIED ON RAINBOW DAY

THE EDITOR,
I had the dream again last night. In it he's staring at me. His eyes are cold, filled with hatred. I try to look away, but no matter where I turn his eyes are staring back. I cover my face with my hands, but his eyes still penetrate. They consume me. I force myself awake and cry.

The man in my dream is not a figment of my imagination. He is a real person, and knowing this is more terrifying than any nightmare could ever be. On Wednesday, March 30, as I handed out rainbow ribbons for the Rainbow Day campaign, I was really pleased at how many people responded positively. I ran out of ribbons more than once, and it was while I was returning to MacCorry to get some more that I came across this man. I asked him, as I had asked hundreds of people before, "Have you got your rainbow ribbon for Rainbow Day yet?" He stopped. Taking a step away from me, he pulled aside his jacket to reveal a sheathed knife on his belt. "I am a radical sort of homophobe," he said. "You'd better get away from me now!" I left, but not before I looked into his eyes. He stared at me as if I was the most disgusting piece of filth he'd ever seen. Of the whole experience, it is that look that I'll remember longest. That look scared me the most, even more than the knife on his belt.

Living as a heterosexual in a heterosexist society makes it easy for me to just wish this problem away. This isn't the kind of issue I have to face every day. It makes me really angry that many Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Queen's students will never be able to walk alone without fear. For them, this man with hatred in his heart and a knife within reach represents a great threat. The Lesbians, Gays and Bisexuals in our own community will have to face people like this daily unless attitudes change.

I can't let this go and say to myself, "He was just a freak. This was just an isolated incident. It wasn't personal." Because, for a lot of my close friends it is personal, and it won't go away. No longer can I stand by and tell myself that this type of thing doesn't happen at Queen's. I know first hand that it does.

I came to Queen's because I wanted to be a part of the school that had the highest quality students in Ontario. I wanted to be one of "Canada's Best." Now, I don't know what to think anymore. This man with a knife wasn't the only person who gave me a negative response. Many more people than I had expected chose not to wear ribbons, and many actually ran away giggling.

Please take some time today and consider what wearing a ribbon means to you. I know that mine means something different than I ever expected. Rainbow Day is over now but the issues and ideas that the rainbow ribbon represents are a part of our daily lives. Wear your rainbow ribbon in support of your Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual friends, and wear it with the hope that one day we won't need to wear ribbons at all.

—NAME WITHHELD
ARTS '97

SAFETY IN RESIDENCES: MAC, QUEEN'S

THE EDITOR,
When I went home to Hamilton for Easter this past weekend, I returned home to hear on the news that a woman had been murdered in her residence room by her ex-boyfriend. Joan Heinbecker was a graduate Phys. Ed. student at McMaster, and lived in a residence that was supposed to be locked at 9:00 pm at night. In spite of this, Rory Eldor Foreman found his way into the residence and killed her without anyone suspecting that he did not belong there. Men on the same floor of the co-ed residence didn't know anything had happened, and a student living in the basement became aware when the shots were heard.

When I heard all this, I was outraged, not only because of the blasé reaction of many people to the killing of 14 women in Montreal over four years ago, but because of the apparently blasé reaction of the MCRC and Residence Life to the security breaches in Gordon-Brockington House this year.

I was a house President in Victoria Hall last year, and had to call security to remove an ex-boyfriend of mine that I felt threatened by. Is it going to take a tragedy like that of Joan Heinbecker to push the need for changes? These changes need to occur not only in the security systems of campus residences, but with the realization of some men that once a relationship is severed a woman has the right to live without the harassment and fear that many former boyfriends bring.

This unfortunate incident also brought fear to me because I once met Rory Foreman. He attends nursing college in Waterloo with a man who physically and sexually attacked me. A man who still blames me for the incident, and who still instils fear in me because I am not certain that he is incapable of committing the same type of crime that his schoolmate did.

—MARY TRAVALE
ARTS '95

BUS DRIVER INSENSITIVE: "YOU LAZY LITTLE THING"

THE EDITOR,
On the night of Friday, March 18, 1994, I was returning from an evening trip with the Queen's Choral Ensemble. I was dropped off at West Campus at 11:15 p.m. and was planning to walk home. This is a 10-15 minute walk. As I was walking down Union Street, I noticed the Division bus approaching. A short ride on the bus for a few stops would bring me closer to home and decrease the amount of time I would have to spend walking alone in the dark, and be a safer option for me. As I got on the bus, I said to the driver that I would only be going one stop (although it actually turned out to be two). To my surprise, he replied, "You lazy little thing. The fresh air would do you good."

I was not sure if he was joking, since I thought he had seen the PAAL alarm I was carrying, but nonetheless I wanted to justify my actions, so I said, "Well, it is dark outside." He replied disapprovingly, mumbling under his breath.

Last semester a woman was sexually assaulted outside of Ban Righ Hall. She had been walking from Botterell Hall back to her residence at 9 p.m. on a Sunday night. This walk was the equivalent, literally, of two stops on the

talking HEADS

"Exams? What exams?"
NATALIE GARTER ARTS '96
STEPHANIE ROBINSON ARTS '96

"Finish all my Easter treats."
TARA BOLDEN ARTS '96

"Send away to Sweden for smart pills."
AARTI CHAWLA ARTS '95
JARED PATRICK ARTS '95

"Drink a lot of coffee and stay up late a lot of nights."
SALMIN CREEKS ARTS '97
KENDRA JELLEY CON ED '97

bus route. Had she been able to take the bus, she might have been able to avoid the area where she had been attacked. However, would she have been reluctant to take the bus if she knew she would have been treated as I was?

I find the behaviour of this bus driver appalling. I understand that he, being an older male, might not understand the fears of a young woman, walking alone at 11 p.m. on a Friday night. We complain about the intolerance of our male peers at the university, and yet we have neglected to educate the older adults of this community, who should be setting an example. This is the reason that I am writing this letter—to inform people such as this bus driver. I am proud to say that I take responsibility for my own safety. That someone's few ignorant comments would undermine my confidence and make me question whether I am too cautious angers me.

Still, as I got off the bus, I thanked the driver for taking me those two stops, trying hard to understand why he had said those things to me. I just wish I could have seen the same sensitivity, tolerance, and attempt to be understanding in him.

—JULIE LEUNG
ARTS '95

EDITORIAL BOARD
PRODUCTION MANAGER Colin Ho	OPINIONS EDITOR Karen Hall	ASSISTANT NEWS Brad Elder
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Sarah MacWhirter	SPORTS EDITOR Joel Sutherland	BRUCE HARDLAND
PUBLICATIONS MANAGER David Pavao	GRAPHICS EDITOR Joey deVilla	ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Adrienne Down
NEWS EDITOR Jeff Gray	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR Marika Glickman	ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT Ryan P. Chen
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Douglas MacGregor	MISC./BACKPAGE EDITOR Joey deVilla	Sian Beedoe-Stephens
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Rob Furse	LITERARY LAYERS EDITOR Megan Nichols	ASSISTANT SPORTS Justin McKellar
FEATURES EDITOR Alison Masernann		ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY Derek Yarnell
		ASSISTANT LITERARY LAYERS Tim Mitchell

BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Chris Ritchie	ADVERTISING MANAGER Andrew Nielsen
CREATIVE STAFF MANAGER Alex Hamer	SALES REPRESENTATIVE Fiona Macaulay
ASSISTANT SALES REPRESENTATIVE Suzanne Kedwell	HOUSE & SYSTEMS MANAGER David Pavao

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Thursday, April 7, 1994 • Issue 39 • Volume 121
The Queen's Journal founded in 1873, is published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Incorporated, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal editorial board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents ©1993-1994 by the Queen's Journal. All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Journal.
The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper using vegetable based inks by Performance Printing Limited, Smith Falls.
Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions available for $55.00+GST per academic year. The text of The Journal is available online through Queen's InfoQ
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston K7L 3H8
Telephone: 613-545-2800 Facsimile: 613-545-6728
Internet: e-mail: journal@quecn.queensu.ca
Circulation 10,000
Issue one of Volume 122 will be published in May, 1994.

Tricia Bauman, Carina Blofield, Kevin Bowers, Sheldon Bradshaw, Lisa Chen-Wing, Dave Coleman, Brent Davis, Dave Dorey, Richard Dubois, Heather Grace, Brett House, Andrea Huncar, Mindy Hung, Matthew King, Kristen Kunnas, Owen Minns, Michael Moss, Jane Mundell, Adrienne Munro, Andre Nowakowski, Michelle Pellegrin, Brendan Powell, Amanda Selfridge, Cameron Waldo, Brenda Willis, Sharon Wilson

Real Live Slacker

While looking about for summer jobs, I realized that what I most want to be is an inventor. I've come up with some nifty gizmos we could really use...

2. CALL DELAYING
This could really be done! With call delaying, the phone of the call receiver doesn't make a sound until the third ring, so you don't look like someone waiting anxiously by the phone for that special call from you-know-who...

3. MIME-SEEKING MISSILES
Just because.

4. SOCIAL TRICORDER
Just like Mr. Spock's doo-hickey, this little device, when pointed at a person, could do a quick background check. Handy for hiring people in sensitive positions, street survival in big cities, and of course, dating...

Have a safe and sordid summer! -Joey

BY JOEY DEVILLA

Anti-Semitism and the Heritage Front

The Heritage Front is not welcome on any campus. As a Jewish student at Queen's, I am gravely concerned by their appearance at my school. Queen's is home to many minorities, and everyone deserves to feel safe in their home. The Heritage Front is knocking on our door and we must not let them in. As a matter of fact, we should not even answer the door. Once the door is open, their hatred begins to seep in.

One poster. One person found one poster. Why should we worry about one poster? Soon enough there were more, and bookmarks too. Now do we worry? Or do we wait until they hold a meeting? Maybe we should wait until they kill someone? The Heritage Front is so contemptible that we should react to their mere presence. One poster may not seem like a terrible occurrence, but it means that someone believes enough in the insidious teachings of the Front to put it up. The Heritage Front has taken the first step in recruiting at Queen's. They will not retreat unless we show them exactly how unwelcome racist, Anti-Semitic groups like themselves are at Queen's.

The Heritage Front claims that their racist views are protected by freedom of opinion. But as Jean Paul Sartre wrote, a doctrine that is aimed directly at particular persons and seeks to suppress their rights or to exterminate them cannot be characterized as opinion. Anti-Semitism and racism do not fall within the category of ideas protected by the right of free opinion. By advocating the oppression and exploitation of those who are not of their colour, religion or race, the Heritage Front celebrates not the culture of humanity and great achievement, but the culture of domination. The Heritage Front exalts views which years ago led to the loss of millions of lives. The myth of the Aryan Race and the Jewish Conspiracy have long been exposed, as has Hitler's ability to distort historical fact. The Heritage Front follows in his footsteps, ignoring or appropriating any developments, advances or achievement of anyone who is not of their colour or religion. Their leader, Wolfgang Droege, has been known to take part in revisionist History, denying that the Holocaust ever happened.

Every person on campus, regardless of race, gender, colour and religion, should be apprehensive when any white supremacist group shows its face.

Freedom of opinions means an openness to different ideas. Queen's University supports freedom of opinion, keeping in mind that "university" has a connotation of "universal" education. A universe of experience Does not mean celebration of old Anti-Semitic, Anti-Black, or Anti-Woman sentiments. We have heard and dealt with these throughout our history, and we will not tolerate them. They are not welcome at any university, and especially not at Queen's. Anti-Semitic, racist literature promotes hatred.

Every person on campus, regardless of race, gender, colour and religion, should be apprehensive when any white supremacist group shows its face. No group who has ever been oppressed has seen it coming. During the Nazi regime, millions of Jews thought they were safe in their own country. They were wrong in assuming they would be protected, but so were Gypsies, Gays, Persons of Colour, Disabled Persons, and Political Dissenters. But few stood up for each other. Now we know what can happen if we do not take action. Anyone who believes neo-Nazi groups belong on campus, or for that matter anywhere in the world, is forgetting how and why 12 million people were brutally dehumanized and murdered.

Those of us at the rally last Wednesday made a statement together that there exists one kind of racism, which will not be tolerated by any of us. Anti-Semitism is Anti-Human, and is usually accompanied by other forms of prejudice and by generally illinformed and unenlightened views of society. We are many colours, many voices, many people, all fighting for the same cause.

—ANDREA LULKA
QUEEN'S HILLEL EDUCATION
CHAIR (HOLOCAUST ANTI-SEMITISM)

Eds. note: This is the text of Andrea Lulka's speech given at the press conference before the Anti-Racism rally last Wednesday. Ms. Lulka is the Chair of the Holocaust (anti-Semitism) Committee of Queen's Hill.

GOODBYE TO THE CLASS OF '94: SEE YOU AT HOMECOMING!!

THE EDITOR.

Well '94s, here it is! The time has finally come to remember, to reflect, to realize... it's almost over! That's right, in a few short weeks our graduating class will be turned away from all those lectures we were always late for because we will no longer be a part of it all.

I think that it's fair to say that there are two types of graduating '94s: those that are determined to make the most of every minute and those who just want it all to be over. But if we really think about it, it is safe to say that most '94s often feel a bit of both worlds. While our parents would like to think in leaving this fine establishment we will find success in life based on our academic achievements here, I think most of us would have to agree that there are many other experiences to which we now owe to our well-rounded personalities.

I think it all started way back in first year with those tasty, low-fat cafe meals that we all suffered through. Needless to say Kraft Dinner never tasted so good once we were established in our clean and cozy ghetto kitchens. Unfortunately, since we couldn't eat during first year, we had to sustain our growing, energetic bodies and minds somehow. We simply turned to a regular liquid diet! What a great way to survive! I mean come on, Purple Jesus must have

Vitamin C. As we moved on to second year, we had all that we needed; our jackets, our Frosh 15, and our bloated attitudes that we were the elite of North American society. At this point, we became exposed to those key aspects of education; studying, lectures and the library. Such phrases were usually only used when talking to our parents. How about those 8:30's! As soon as the alarm went off, you asked yourself the same question: "should I go???" But since your conscience was already up and brushing its teeth, you knew the guilt would be too much to bear at the end of the day. Besides, your other option was to turn to those assigned readings, where you spent more time counting the pages you had left to read than actually deciphering any of it. So, amidst further academic efforts to erase the memory of our first year marks, we fortunately had our weekends which started on Thursday. Alfie's was still a hit but those Frosh really got in the way. It's a good thing we didn't act like that in our first year!

OPEN FORUM CONTINUED ON PAGE 13

OPEN FORUM

Then, the next time we looked up we were in our third year. By this time, we realized that maybe a career would be nice some day and drinking became more of a way to cope. Things that we found excitingly dangerous in the last two years, suddenly seemed ludicrous and we found new ways to have fun. As stress became a new word in our unlimited vocabularies we soon became exposed to the full effects of all-nighters and caffeine overdoses. It was a good thing we always had all those relaxing lines to stand in to calm our nerves.

But then just when we were starting to find ourselves taking the student way of life for granted, we were in our last year. We were so close to growing up, but did we have what it took? Of course not! In fact, we suddenly found ourselves realizing that without Queen's what would we do? More importantly, who the hell were we going to go to the formal with???

So we worked hard, partied harder and lived for Beverly Hills and Melrose. Some of us looked into careers, others simply spent time rationalizing over the benefits of welfare subsidization. We tried to attend all the organized '94 events so we would not kick ourselves in 1995 for not going. We even wore our jackets once in a while, just so all those '97s knew who we were (and who they could never equal). And despite everything, we all knew we were going to miss Queen's even more than... all the lite nite's and Lino's Poutine in the world.

Well, that's about where we find ourselves today. The formal is but a blurry memory, finals are lurking around the corner, the new library is almost ready for our children to use, convocation is the next step and we will forever cherish the distant sound of bagpipes. So '94s... here's to us, the new faithful Queen's Alumni. And here's hoping that all those most anxious-to-graduate students were able to conjure a few memorable moments from our trip down memory lane. See you at Homecoming!!

—STACY KIMMETT
ARTS '94

STUDENT SURPRISED BY HER HOMOPHOBIC REACTION

THE EDITOR.

I don't really know where to begin. For anyone who knows me this would not come as a surprise. But, I feel like I have something to share with other people of the Queen's community. I suppose the point is that I really don't think that being educated and open minded will always lead to the "correct" reaction. You would think that after spending three years within the walls of academia that I would be able to deal quite well with personal issues of sexuality, racism etc. As I recently found out it doesn't work this way.

Let me begin by stating that I see myself as someone who is very educated on things such as sexism, racism and homophobia. I not only agree with the struggle that women, minorities and homosexuals are fighting for I openly argue for their causes.

However, this past weekend when I was forced to hear (from my mother—because she didn't want me to hear it from anyone else) that my younger brother (he just turned 21) thinks that he is bisexual I didn't deal with it very well. I remember laughing, with the rest of my class last year in my sexuality course when members of the LGA told their "coming out" stories because their parents seemed so uneducated about the entire thing by suggesting that it was probably just a phase they were going through or that they were just rebelling against society. I remember thinking about how insensitive these parents were being with their children.

But now, contrary to what I ever would have thought I am having those same reactions. I started to bawl when my mother first informed me and I often find myself crying. I think about it all the time and try to reason it out. I find myself thinking that it might just be a stage that he is going through or that maybe he thinks that he's bisexual because he has become friends with people at university who have imposed this type of thinking on him.

I really don't know how I am going to face my brother. Most people would describe us as very close. In fact, on our recent reading week vacation the customs officer at the airport thought that we were married—when we explained that we were brother and sister he looked at us in disbelief and claimed that brothers and sisters didn't act in this way. My brother and I keep in touch through e-mail and since my mother informed me of this bisexual issue I haven't been able to bring myself to write him.

The feeling inside me is horrible and I don't know if it is ever going to go away. I know that I should not be feeling this way or acting this way but it is as if I have no control over it. I constantly hear my mother's voice in my head saying "your brother thinks that he is bisexual." It makes me so sad. I feel so guilty because I am mad at my brother for making my mother and me deal with this and yet I know that I should really be there for him now when he needs my support.

I am constantly thinking of myself and how this is going to affect me. I feel like I am never going to have a normal life again. (I can hear my brother asking "what does normal mean?" and I know damn well that his point is perfectly valid.) I am trying to deal with this but I think that it is going to take a lot of time to sort out. When I look at the situation rationally it seems insane that after all the lectures that I have listened to on homophobia, all the seminars that I have participated in, and all the debates in which I have stood up for gay rights that I am reacting in this way. I still can't figure out if it is our educators who are failing us or if me and my insensitivity stand alone.

My mother's love for my brother is unconditional and she is currently doing everything that she can to help him through these difficult times.

—NAME WITHHELD

Celebrating the extraordinary talent of Ontario's top students in film, radio, and television

TVONTARIO TELEFEST 1994 Blood, Sweat, and Tape II

Students! Enter Telefest and give your career that initial boost by earning a highly respected award; raising your profile in the community, and giving your project valuable air time on tvo.

- All nominees will be profiled on tvo throughout the summer. Watch for our Summer Festival!
- The best overall productions in radio and in film and television will receive a newly created award named in honor of Jay Scott, film critic and host of tvo's award-winning Film International.
- This year's Telefest will be dedicated to raising awareness of AIDS. Because of the devastating effect this disease has had on our community, the Telefest awards party will be a fundraiser for an AIDS charity so we can all contribute in some small way to finding a cure.
- In 1995, we'll be introducing a new award for the best television, film, or radio production dealing with AIDS as its subject.

Remember, send your submissions before April 29, 1994. For more information on how to enter TVOntario's Telefest '94, contact your radio, television, film, communications, or media instructor.

MEDIA SPONSOR

tvo
TELEVISION that MATTERS.

Now it came to pass, as they went, that he entered into a certain village; and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house.

And she has a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, doth thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.

And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things:

But one thing is needful: that Mary has chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

St. Luke 10:38-42

Published for those who may have lost contact with their church, by the Broadcast Trust using the Authorized King James Version, with funds from St. John's Portsmouth (8:00, 9:15, 11:00) and St. Mark's Barrfield (11:00).

Alfie's PUB

WE ARE LOOKING FOR DJs

APPLICATIONS AVAILABLE AT THE AMS OFFICE

DUE: APRIL 13th AT NOON

I'D RATHER DJ AT ALFIE'S

These are the people in your neighbourhood...

Dig those funky PJ's Megan!

Bodies found on Lake Ontario.

Don't your mother ever tell you never to run with beer?

This could be January...it could be April. You never know.

Leonard lemmings line up for lunch.

You are getting...verrry...sleeepyy...

The casualties of war: it's tough in the trenches.

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy (REDRUM...REDRUM).

Another student without a car shops at A & P.

Procrastinating with the pigskin in the ghetto.

The girl with a magnetic head.

An Abusive Gay Relationship

Ask any gay man if he knows men who have been sexually assaulted or physically and emotionally abused, whether within the context of a relationship or not and you will usually receive a very flip 'no' or a very uncomfortable 'no'. Lately, however I am receiving very different responses from others as I have begun to talk about my own experiences with abuse within the context of a four-month-long relationship. To my surprise, three of my closest friends have been assaulted by those that they knew. It has been three months since the relationship has ended and my life has been altered immeasurably. I still have nightmares about him pressing himself into me and his body sweating against mine. I'm going through the painful process of discovering who I am and how I reached the point where I had such little respect for myself and hated myself so much that I stayed with the man and later wanted to die. In this process, I am learning that I am very creative, I'm great in the kitchen, pretty good with a sewing machine, and not a bad artist. But these are things that I am discovering and his abuse is not responsible for my self-discovery.

When I first met him, he was 'resolving' issues with a partner from years ago who felt like he had been sexually assaulted within the relationship. However my ex-partner convinced him that he had not asserted himself and that simply having sex with someone when that person did not want to, did not constitute assault. However, now I realize that this was how he retold the meeting to me and I'm quite sure it is not a perspective that I can trust.

Within our relationship, I convinced myself that I was responsible, I was letting it happen, I wasn't saying no. But I'm tired, let's just sleep, I have an early class, tears streaming down my face all mean

After a while I just pretended like I liked our "encounters" and would cry quietly beside him for the rest of the night which he didn't notice or if he did, he didn't care. The worst night for me was when he came to my house after drinking with friends and tapped on my bedroom window. I let him in and went back to bed, when he joined me he immediately began to touch and fondle me. I started to cry and pull away from him. He noticed how unresponsive and unwilling I was and he asked what was wrong, I didn't feel like I could explain or even understand myself so I mumbled "nothing" and he continued. To him that brief verbal denial of what I was expressing physically and what I was feeling mentally served as an invitation. After he ignored my attempts to say no previously, I blamed myself for not saying no more forcefully and I began to hate myself for allowing it to happen repeatedly. Eventually I came to the conclusion that I deserved what was happening to me. How did it reach this point? When the relationship began I didn't realize that I was already part of a pattern. He has generally gone for younger, less experienced, somewhat naive, and less assertive individuals. Within the first few weeks he had claimed my space, worn half my clothes, borrowed a large sum of money that I didn't have, determined our social agenda that didn't include my friends, and made my housemate feel like a guest in our own home. He would claim that I just didn't assert myself and I would agree, but he took advantage of the fact that I couldn't. I started to lose respect for myself and devalue myself and as I did, so did he. The worse he treated me or the colder he became the harder I tried to make everything better, losing further respect for myself and blaming myself for what was happening. Increasingly I became isolated from my friends, stopped doing school work and spent my time tending to his needs, doing and being whatever he wanted or whatever I thought he wanted.

He saw what was happening—how could he miss it, it had happened many times before. Another ex-partner had been to the point that I would later teach, but when he told me about this ex-partner I felt sorry for him and thought very little of the ex-partner.

Eventually he ended the relationship, but as with the ones in the past, not before I reached a point of total emotional dependency, lacking self-worth and self-respect, and filled with pain. I was torn between my instinctive self that saw what a bastard he was from the beginning and the damaging effects his behaviour was having on me, my emotional side that was dependent, wanting to continue the abuse in whatever future relationship he desired, full of self-blame and self-loathing, and my intellectual side that could explain this all to me. Because of this he would later suggest that I had sent him "mixed" messages. Is it any wonder considering the dependency created in our relationship?

Upon reaching the point where I couldn't continue to take out my anger on myself and those around me, I finally confronted him. He responded to me by saying that he had been co-operative, honest, and sensitive, and that my abuse as a child could be 'blamed' for what I was experiencing (certainly the conditioning I had received as a child had drawn me to him in the first place, but he exploited and benefited from my conditioning). He told me that confronting him was the most damaging thing that could be done in our relationship. Obviously, repeated rape and emotional abuse (undermining my self-image, my perceptions, my values and my beliefs) hadn't left him damaged.

Confronting him was, for me, a positive step towards recovering and regaining control in my life. At this stage in my recovery, my thoughts are finally directed towards my needs and I needed to write this. I hope that others who have been through this type of relationship, who are going through this type of relationship, or who have been emotionally, physically, or sexually assaulted will read this and realize that they aren't to blame, that they aren't worthless, that they aren't alone and that there are people who care and understand.

—NAME WITHHELD
Eds. Note: This experience is not representative of all lesbian, gay, or bisexual relationships.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

Fly the coupe!

PONTIAC SUNBIRD LE SPORT COUPE

- Standard 4-wheel anti-lock brakes
- Air conditioning
- AM/FM stereo cassette

- Plus much more • rear spoiler • power automatic door locks • tinted glass • reclining front bucket seats • 24-hour Roadside Assistance

With your choice of two ways to take off.

The Performance you expect. Priced Right!

SmartLease
$189
per month over 36 months*
THE FIRST PAYMENT'S ON US!
Or special offer for graduates

$750
bonus from your Pontiac Dealer

PONTIAC
Performance
TEAM

*Offer applies to the 1994 Pontiac Sunbird LE Coupe on a 36 month lease for $189 per month equipped as described. A minimum down payment of $1,499 and $300 security deposit is required. Some message conditions apply. For only $595. License, insurance and taxes not included. Offer applies to 1994 model or comparable models. Dealer order or trade-in may be necessary. Dealer may lease for less. Offer applies to qualified rental customers only. These offers may not be combined or used with any other offer. See Dealer for details. Available to any person who has proof that they purchased or will purchase from a recognized post secondary institution during the period September 1, 1993 through August 31, 1994. Graduate program may not be combined or used with any other offer. First month Smart Lease payment will be waived for qualified purchasers. Minimum down payment applies. Some charges may apply. See Dealer for details.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

Real Live Slacker

The year according to Joey...

GO FOR IT! JUST PUT YOUR BEST FOOT FORWARD AND ASK HER OUT. REMEMBER: THE WORST SHE CAN SAY IS "NO".

"THE WORST SHE CAN SAY IS 'NO'... YEAH!"

WOMEN GO IN GROUPS. I HAVE TO GO TO THE BATHROOM. YOU CAN'T! WE DON'T HAVE CLUTUM!

BACK THEN, WE COULD CLAIM 'FUNNELING AND WHIPPING' AS A CREDIT!

LATE! MOVE AWAY FROM ME LOSER, OR I'LL HAVE TO KILL YOU!

YOU KNOW, ONCE THERE WAS A TIME WHEN WE HAD THIS MARKET CORNERED.

OH! ANTI-FUSION!

OH! ANTI-RACIST!

OH! ANTI-INDIVIDUAL!

NO, AS A MATTER OF FACT, I THINK THAT USING DOGS FOR THIS PARTICULAR SEARCH IS A BAD IDEA...

IF SOMEONE IS WEARING THE EXACT SAME OUTFIT AS YOU, PRESS IT! IF YOU JUST BRIDGE WE PRESS IT! IF YOUR DATE IS ALSO WEARING EX...

IF ANY OTHER FEMALE IT IS A COMPLETELY STOCK YOUR WARDROBE WITH A WAY TO ASK FOR BOLOGNA.

WE USE IT AS FUEL!

THE police debate their strategies for searching the field for John Wayne Bobbitt's penis.

NEVER PROPOSE, MARRIAGE BY THE FEDERAL MURPHY'S LAW WILL GET YOU...

YOU! IN THE THREE PARKAS! I'D LIKE TO TELL YOU ALL ABOUT THE DANGERS OF GLOBAL WARMING!

THE WHIG

EVIL BABYSITTER ACCORDING TO THE COMIC STRIP 'COURTESY' IF FRIENDS ASK YOU TO BABYSIT THEIR KIDS, YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO CONSIDER THEIR RELIGION!

WALL ERIC ESTERICK OFFICER FOR KIDNAPING ON THE JOB!

HELLO! GROUNDHOGS HERE! IT'S MY DAY, REMEMBER? YO! C'MON!

SO CATHY WANTS THE STARTING SALARY AT PROCTOR & GAMBLE?

BLURP!

KEEP YOUR AIDE SCHEMATICATED! BEING SNEAKY STORIES REQUIRE A TOUCH OF FLAUNTERY!

BURBLE LEAD FULL OF A CHEER, DAILY NERVE GAS! EACH FOR THREE MIN 30 SECONDS OF OUR LIFE!

PREP! PREP! PREP! AIEEE!

NEW ISSUE COMING SOON

NOW $1699

TourPass

There's probably an intercity bus going where you're going this Summer, and TourPass makes sure your ride is great value! Just $169 (plus tax) gets you 14 consecutive days of unlimited travel in Québec and Ontario between May 1st and October 27th.

INFORMATION — CONDITIONS

Montréal	(514) 842-2281
Ottawa	(613) 238-5900
Kingston	(613) 547-4916
Toronto	(416) 393-7911

or call your bus Agency.

Voyageur

Spanish • Japanese • Arabic • German • Ukrainian • Mandarin • Russian • Italian • Hindi • Korean • Creole

Knowing another language
Opens a world of opportunities!

UNIVERSITY-ACCREDITED LANGUAGE COURSES
• equivalent to nine (9) credits
• Spring Term - May 9 to June 17, 1994
• Early registration deadline: April 1, 1994
• Summer Term - July 4 to August 12, 1994
• Early registration deadline: June 1, 1994

For further details, please contact:

The Summer Centre for International Languages
Room 146, Language Institute
University of Regina
Regina, Sask. S4S 0A2
Tel. (306) 595-5300

Spanish • Japanese • Arabic • German • Ukrainian • Mandarin • Russian • Italian • Hindi • Korean • Creole

THE PILOT HOUSE OF KINGSTON
A Friendly Neighbourhood Pub & Restaurant

featuring
Fish & Chips • Homemade Pies
Imported & Domestic Draught Beer

Sunday Specials for Students
265 King Street East at Johnson Street
Telephone 542-0222

Defining democracy In South Africa

☒ Former Queen's student Brett House recently embarked on a trip to South Africa, where he has been working on voter education in preparation for the April 27th elections ☒ In this article, House reflects on the lead-up to the election and the problems associated with it ☒

If there have been hiccups on the road to a new, multiracial South Africa, then today was one great belch. As Table Mountain slowly turned red in the afternoon sun, the day's carnage began to play out across my TV screen: three people were shot dead and another 20 wounded as a bus carrying passengers to work was ambushed near Durban, an Inkatha Freedom Party stronghold. This event brings to 123 the total number of deaths from political violence in Natal province in the last nine days.

Admittedly, some days are better than others and glib generalizations about political violence are completely useless to describe what is happening in South Africa. South Africa is not in flames, but nor are its citizens taking a cake walk to an average, run-of-the-mill election. In fits and starts, with more success in some areas than others, it is preparing to stage a massive election of African liberation. Caught watching the imperialist reports from CNN, and reading the trumpy old Globe and Mail (which promotes the mainstream media view of South Africa as the "Belfast of the South," most Canadians tend to forget that this is an incredibly sophisticated society that has produced the likes of Hugh Makasela, Nadine Gordimer and Andr Brink. It will find a way to make the transition work.

National polls give the ANC almost 72 per cent of decided support, with the National Party trailing with 18 per cent support. Yet in the Western Cape, ironically the most liberal region of the country, the National Party has majority support. Since the provisional constitution has established a federal system with nine provincial legislatures, there is a distinct possibility that the National Party could form a provincial government in the Western Cape.

The National Party's lead is underpinned by its strong support in the coloured communities around Cape Town. In South Africa, the term "coloured" refers to people with mixed racial heritage. Race has not disappeared as an important construct in the South African identity and a variety of polls have shown that some coloureds are unwilling to support Mandela because of an ingrained perception that blacks are somehow inept at governing. Many members of the coloured community are government employees and so fear that their jobs and pensions may disappear if the ANC gains power and begins actively promoting blacks.

Anyone who thought that North Americans were the only electorate to have mastered the art of collective amnesia should perhaps think again. After having their voting rights stripped from them in 1948, being forcibly moved off their land under the Group Areas Act, and being told that they were "non-persons" by P.W. Botha during the 1980s, masses of coloured voters are still preparing to vote for the NP in three weeks' time.

After months of repeating its slogan of "Peace, Jobs and Freedom," the ANC has finally begun to invoke some negative campaigning to counter the NP's lead in the polls. The ANC also gained some political ammunition last week when the Goldstone Commission into police violence revealed evidence suggesting that a long-suspected "third force" behind political violence did indeed exist. High ranking members of the South African police appear to have siphoned millions of rand into Swiss bank accounts. They then apparently used this money to supply arms to the Inkatha Freedom Party to incite clashes with ANC supporters throughout the late 1980s and 1990s.

Finally, the ANC's message is starting to get through, but every vote will be a struggle. Every day campaigners fan out in the commuter trains, drive videos through the townships, and hold public fora. When someone goes out to beat the bushes for votes, they place their life on the line. In the Orange Free State (perhaps one of the most revolting euphemisms ever), nearly every ANC office has been bombed at some point by the right-wing paramilitary group Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging (AWB).

One of the key issues in creating a free and fair election is ensuring that all of the country's eligible voters know how to participate in the April 27 poll. For the last couple of weeks I have been working with various non-governmental organizations on voter education workshops which are teaching a vast number of people who have never voted before in their lives what a vote means, and how to vote. The conceptual hurdles involved in this task are both surprising and daunting.

Many people in the townships and rural areas fear that the sangomas, traditional female healers and seers, will be able to know how they have voted. Others fear that the tokoloshe, an evil spirit invoked when someone commits a wrong against you, will be able to follow them into the polling booth and find out how they have voted, or even cause them to vote incorrectly. A staggering number of people may not vote simply because they have already become so jaded by political campaigning that they don't think it will make any difference.

The actual mechanics of voting present another set of difficulties. For a ballot to count, only a cross or check mark may be placed next to the party chosen. In one of my workshops a nurse became so enthused that she wrote "VIVA!" after the ANC's name. Others decided that they didn't like most of the parties so they completely crossed them out. One man even tore off most of the ballot and deposited only his choice into the ballot box.

Voter education is having a significant impact, but problems remain. There are not nearly enough people doing voter education to meet the demand and time is run-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 19

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

ning short before the election. In many rural conservative strongholds there are also severe access problems to farm labourers, and it is likely that many will be prevented from being canvassed and possibly even from voting. If the election date is actually postponed because of violence in Natal province, complete anarchy could ensue.

A few weeks ago someone asked me, "what did you least expect to find here?" Without a doubt, it is the irony that voters of the struggle still manage to sum up as the election approaches. My friend Cora often sports a T-shirt proclaiming "The Purple People Shall Govern." It harkens back to one of the last major protests before Mandela was released when the police decided to spray people with purple dye rather than tear gas, a switch supposedly based on CIA riot research. Rather than fleeing, the protestors stayed and danced in the purple rain.

Other long-time ANC supporters have confessed to serial nightmares. They are in the polling booth about to make a cross beside Nelson Mandela's face when their hand suddenly veers off and makes a mark beside the NP. Some housemates of mine have cried out in the night over this, waking in a cold sweat.

There are other times, however, when even the most cynical cannot help but be struck by the power of fifty years of struggle finally coming to a conclusion. When Bantu Holomisa cries out "this country has been malnourished for centuries and we have the cure: Vitamin ANC," it is hard not to be stirred. When a woman stands in a mock election booth for ten minutes without moving because she can't believe that she is actually practising how to vote, one secretly hopes that there is still a chance for a free and fair election.

So, when April 27th rolls around, take a minute away from the weight of your exams and turn on the television. If you are lucky, you may just catch a glimpse of the place called Athlone, headquarters of the United Democratic Front (UDF) in the 1980s. On a street called Belgravia there will be a party, perhaps small, but exuberant nonetheless. There, in the middle of the road you will probably find Cora and a band of purple people dancing in a mist of champagne, the water canons finally relegated to another era.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 19

FEATURES

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL • 19

In December 1992, a friend and I, travelling through the Indonesian archipelago, made it to a remote island to witness the amazing Komodo dragons. The dragons, actually giant lizards, are as big as eight feet long, and 350 pounds. They are famous for their resemblance to dinosaurs, their ferocity, and their rarity.

To get to Komodo Island, we travel about 32 hours in a mad overnight jaunt, hoping to make it in time for the next dragon feeding by the island's park wardens. We travel by skiff, bus, and ferry, and finally arrive in the Bay of Komodo in late afternoon, exhausted.

Komodo Island is run as a nature reserve, along the same lines as a Canadian national park (but with some distinctly different policies). The government conservation board, known as the PHPA, requires all visitors to register and stay in their accommodations. For about $6, we register and are shown to a very simple room in a wooden cabin.

With almost divine timing, we notice about four geckoes scaling our room's walls; they are the perfect welcome to the island of dragons. Opening the closet, we get an even bigger surprise: a lizard of almost a foot's length, who is less a gecko than a mini-Komodo.

We spend our evening having a basic rice dish and a beer, and meeting the other people who have ventured east to see the dragons.

We're up very early for the second "dragon feeding" of the day. The feedings, run by the park wardens for the benefit of tourists, go on about two days a week.

We leave before breakfast and walk a good half hour in the already fiery sun. The island is a desert, parched dry and intensely hot. Our guide leads us to the feeding pit, where we stand on a lookout deck above the expectant dragons.

What a sight! The beasts are huge, much larger than I'd expected. And menacing. They sit in the dry gully and stare up, already aware they're about to be fed, and impatient.

To my left is the goat which will be fed to the dragons. Its presence is disconcerting. We knew we'd be responsible for paying for "dragon food," and we knew the dragons would be fed goat, but somehow we never quite put the two together. Now, the goat stands only a few feet away, unknowingly chewing grass.

As the wardens move to kill it, I cannot take my eyes from the scene. Two men pin down the goat, who begins to sound frightened. Then, one warden pulls out a large knife and swiftly cuts the goat's throat. The other fellow grabs stray leaves, and holds them over the incision to prevent the blood from spraying too much. The goat is screaming now, its voice desperate and horrifying. The warden continues to cut at its neck, until finally I hear only gurgling sounds. The goat is dead, but still convulsing.

Looking back to the dragon pit, I'm amazed to see that the Komodos have smelt the goat's fresh blood. The dragons scale over each other to get to the goat, and a few succeed in climbing a near-vertical hill up to us. The wardens (who are, unneringly, a little panicked themselves) use all their might to repel the lizards with pronged sticks, while two assistants quickly pick up the dead goat and throw it down into the pit.

The dragons now begin devouring the goat. They compete for the best morsels, and clamber over each other to get to their prey. In the next 20 minutes, we watch the whole goat get devoured. The dragons tear off huge pieces at a time — one manages to bite off the entire head and swallow it whole. Soon, nothing is left but blood stains on the dragons' armour.

(The dragons rely on their powerful saliva and gastric secretions to digest everything — hair, bones, hoofs, and all. For a human, this saliva is deadly; an ankle bite can be lethal.)

We arrive back at the PHPA compound and discuss our day with other travellers. My feelings are mixed. On the other hand, I feel disgust at having paid for the goat which was killed. We were certainly responsible for its death, and the necessity of killing it was questionable at best.

But my overriding impression was that I had witnessed the most awe-inspiring display of pure animal aggression I'd ever seen. The dragons, with such raw, unharnessed strength and terrifying fove, were the most ferocious things I've ever seen.

Brock Martland, although he professes to be interested in other cultures and experiences, is actually just a cowboy from Calgary who secretly supports the Reform Party.

Expanding Horizons

It all started back in September. I took a class called World Issues Geography, mainly because another class was filled and it was either that or Cosmetology. So it goes.

In that class I learned of a trip to the Dominican Republic that was being offered for the March Break. I don't know why I signed up for it, an enlightening "experience" as it was called; I guess it's just a part of growing up in the rebellious, crusader, X generation.

And so the preparation began. Endless bingo and other fund-raising activities dotted my social calendar. Shots were to be taken and pills to be swallowed. The "experience" still loomed in the distance.

When the day finally came and we embarked on the trip, I could feel this great sense of anticipation, curiosity and fear. Here we were, 15 high-school students assembled for a single cause, being thrust into a society that may not appreciate us, and may even resent our being there. I feared that there was nothing we could do, that our efforts would be unfelt, the ripples of our actions never reaching land.

That first night we stayed at an artisan centre run by Sister Mary-Jo in San Jose d'Ocoa. I didn't sleep that much the first night, due to the heat, the longing for dawn and the incessant call of the rooster. The next morning, we were led by Father Lou Quinn into the mountains of Ocoa, a city of 40,000 spread out over many miles, where we set about filling in an irrigation ditch. It was here that we had our first interactions with the native Dominicans. They patiently trekked up the winding mountain road, smiles emanating from their weathered faces. One even took up my friend's shovel when he stopped for a break. It was their patience that amazed me. Time, the obsession of North Americans, was not relevant; they quietly went about their business knowing that eventually it would get done.

When Sunday came we walked, after a breakfast of pineapple and buns, to a local hospital. Here we encountered no lack of enthusiasm, but a definite lack of equipment, space and sanitation. The beds were a random assortment—the sort the Hotel Dieu didn't need anymore. Lizards crept along the ground outside, or silently watched from door frames. Posters dotted the walls, mainly of women breastfeeding their children—an example of how society was trying to deal with the effects of multinational formula corporations on Dominican society.

From the hospital we travelled into the mountains to the barrios district of Ocoa. Houses seemed to stick out of the earth like brightly coloured bricks. Chickens, pigs and dogs roamed the streets, scattering whenever the buzz of an approaching motorbike was heard. Children were everywhere. Their clothes were dirty, faded and torn, and often they went without. The feet of most were worn down to callouses because of the rocky streets.

The people of the barrio were very friendly and supportive. "Hola," or hello, followed us wherever we went and the smiles came in droves. The children were sceptical of our white skin and would often stare at us until we left. We quickly learned that a handshake narrowed the communication barrier, and made friends regardless of colour or race.

We went to church that night in the centre of town, across from the park. Although most people of the Dominican are unaware of the specific teachings of the church, they are devout Christians. They filled the church to overflowing. Father Quinn led the ceremony and had to battle to be heard over the buzz of a faulty neon light that flashed outside.

The ceremony ended with the singing of the Canadian national anthem in English and French, as a symbol to thank us for our efforts.

When church service drew to a close we walked over to the nightclub that bordered the park. Cover charge was a dollar (10 pesos) and as a point of reference, so was a bottle of Heineken. The dancing was merengue, a fusion of the waltz and lambada, that apparently holds some weird significance, because it was almost the cause of my getting married. I was approached by a teenager who asked me, through broken English, to go with him because someone wanted to talk to me. Being a gullible Canadian, I went with him and wound up meeting a woman, her two daughters and her two sons. They questioned me about Canada, when I was leaving Ocoa, and other personal information. They seemed quite relieved when I said I was leaving the country in a week, and asked if I wanted to dance with one of the daughters. I said yes and was greeted by applause. The girl seemed embarrassed by her mother's forward questioning, and tried to make polite conversation, and apologies.

When the song ended, ten minutes later

Life in the Dominican Republic is not a tropical paradise, but Dave Dorey did discover that his preconceptions about underdevelopment and poverty weren't accurate either.

(songs in the Dominican are of epic lengths), I walked her back to the adoring audience of siblings and was told to sit down. After telling them that I was already taken, the girl left crying and the mother told me that she had a boyfriend in New York. I eventually made my way back to my group and grabbed hold of the closest Canadian female, who was being mobbed in her own right, and was glad to see a familiar face.

For the next two days we were led into the mountains where we set about building houses for Father Quinn. Concrete bricks were trucked in from Sister Mary-Jo's artisan centre, and we set about laying foundations, sifting sand, and carrying everything from bricks to children.

From San Jose d'Ocoa, we travelled two hours west to Beni where we visited a malnutrition centre for young children. The centre, run by sisters, encourages a programme for children who do not receive enough nutrients and proteins from their home environment. The parents are often young, unemployed and ignorant to their children's needs. One woman was picking up her daughter and her son, who was a year and a half old yet weighed only nine pounds. The woman was 17 and they feared that she was pregnant again.

It really was remarkable the progress that they had made with many of the children. The blank stares of the babies showed, however, that there is still much to be done.

From Beni we travelled to the capital, Santa Domingo. It was here that the true side of poverty reared its head. The barrios of Santa Domingo were repulsive. Sewers flowed freely through the middle of the streets, the money for pipes all exhausted. The smell of sewage could almost be seen, as clouds of pollution from nearby plants and companies spewed out into the air. Dogs lay by the side of the road, their fur matted and covered with parasite wounds. The rocks that served as a path were covered in a mossy slime, worn by the flowing sewage. Our guides, representatives for the welfare of the barrio, took us through these neighbourhoods that were literally piled on top of each other. These hillside slabs contained one hundred thousand people per square kilometre. There were clotheshangers tapping overhead power lines to fuel the odd refrigerator or television that hummed from within their homes.

The people, crippled by mental disorders from polluted water and putrid living conditions, still shine with pride, hope and enthusiasm. Dominos could be seen everywhere as old men and their sons laughed and joked around.

We then visited a school in the middle of the barrios where the small percentage of children who do go to school go. The school is understaffed, overcrowded and underfunded. It was, however, probably the only chance those children had to make it in life.

San Pedro de Macoris was our last stop on our ten day trip. We visited a sugarcane factory where deplorable and often unthinkable conditions awaited those who would work eight hours a day for five dollars pay. Young children patrolled the site, while the older workers, without any safety equipment, fuelled and ran the machines. We also discovered how the factory was able to work its way around the law by having a tree farm on site to fuel the seven furnaces used to run the machines.

We were then taken to where the sugarcane is grown. The people there earn three days' worth of food for four days' work. They didn't show as much warmth and compassion as others we had encountered, but they were so hungry and had so little that their greed was overlooked. We also learned that because of a trade agreement, the Dominican people had to export their entire sugar crop and in turn were forced to import sugar from other countries at a loss. One of them said that the only way to alleviate poverty in the Dominican would be to burn the sugarcane fields.

My time in the Dominican taught me a few lessons. Never trust the driving of one who honks their horn a lot, never agree to dance with anyone before signing something first, and be patient and understanding with all of those around me. I appreciate the love and compassion expressed to me and only wish I could ignore my predetermined judgements and accept those who aren't of my social class or background. It is only when these predetermined notions are erased that we can accept and then seek to end their poverty. This may involve changes in our own lifestyle and we must be strong enough to accept that.

Dave Dorey is a student at Regiopolis Notre Dame High School and The Journal's cooler-than-cool intern.

LITERARY LAPSES

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

Smart and Shields are stunning

Canadian authors Carolyn Smart and Carol Shields delivered emotionally rousing readings to a full house at the Holiday Inn on Monday night.

Smart is an accomplished poet, with four published collections of poems. She won first prize in the CBC Literary Contest Personal Essay category last year, edits poetry and fiction for Quarry Press, and teaches a creative writing course at Queen's.

She read from her work-in-progress, A Careful Man, which she says is her way of "trying to make sense" of the life of her father. It is composed of interviews, letters, and Smart's own personal memoirs. It was from these memoirs that she read on Monday.

Smart's record of her father is coloured with the memory of dreams, nightmares and fear, from her childhood to her present life. The excerpts she read were sometimes horrifying, often bittersweet, and occasionally humorous. She described "the fear in [her] chest like a cantelope" that she felt in taking on the task of the biography, which comes through so often in her writing, in such passages as, "I've worried these memories like a dog worries a bone." The pain she felt during her childhood is evoked poignantly in lines describing her father as the sort of person who hires a nanny "to care for his children so his wife would be free to care for him."

Other aspects of Smart's childhood come through as well, however, such as the pride she felt in being called a "pyromaniac" by one of her friend's mothers, and her fantasies of becoming Robin Hood or Richard Burton. But although these memories of her proud defiance are amusing, there is the feeling that they are tainted by something huge and dark.

Some of the most powerful passages describe Smart's feelings as an adult towards her father. She remembers his penis as "an ugly mushroom." She recounts the restaurant dinners they had together after her mother's death, when he would flit around the restaurant, and "all the women saw was his... British charm... [while] I sat alone... drowned in my own reflection."

Carolyn Smart reads from her work-in-progress. DEREK YARNELL

Smart's reading was passionate — one passage describing her recollection of her father's abuse left the audience speechless and disturbed, as her voice rose to gasping cries. "And you stand up in your kitchen at forty years of age and you hate yourself... I could not break his grip after all these years."

She ended her reading on a positive note, with a passage about how her own family has helped her to realize what real love is. Smart's book is still in the works, but when it does come out, it will undoubtedly be a touching, unusual account of a survivor's life and memories.

Carol Shields' most recent novel is The Stone Diaries, which won the Governor-General's Award this year and was shortlisted for the Booker Prize. She has been writing poetry and prose for almost twenty years. On Monday she talked about how she has surpassed "what writers call 'the period of fragility,'" where an author is extremely sensitive to the reactions of friends and family to his or her work. She said the funniest thing anyone has ever said to her was, "I would have bought your book, but it came out too late for my wife's birthday."

Jack recalls how he suggested at lunch that they order a bottle of wine. "Wine for lunch isn't my cup of tea," she said, without a trace of irony. "He says he was 'dazed for weeks' after their luncheon."

Brenda, however, in response to her comment about the wine, says that she "cannot imagine saying anything as wit-

Carol Shields talks with a reader. DEREK YARNELL released Happenstance and A Fairly Conventional Woman, and then from The Stone Diaries. The first two novels are accounts of a married couple's life, one from the husband Jack's perspective, and the other from Brenda's perspective. Shields read the passage from each book describing how the couple met in 1957, in what she called "curious days."

Jack recalls how he suggested at lunch that they order a bottle of wine. "Wine for lunch isn't my cup of tea," she said, without a trace of irony. "He says he was 'dazed for weeks' after their luncheon."

Brenda, however, in response to her comment about the wine, says that she "cannot imagine saying anything as wit-

EMOTIONAL CONTINUED ON PAGE 21

Here it is: the second-prize story of our Short Story Contest!

Walter's Maze

By Mindy Hung

No one noticed when Walter built the maze. They noticed the bushes of course, but Walter had always enjoyed putting in the garden. They never went outside anyway, so it didn't matter. But one day, when they wanted him to come in for dinner, Alycia got lost trying to find him. When Walter returned and heard, he shook his head saying, "Well, she'll never get out of this one."

"What do you mean, Walter? You mean she's lost in your bushes? She's lost, Walter? She's lost in those stupid hedges? Alycia's lost?"

"Yes," Walter said, and he sat down to his dinner.

"Well," said his mother.

About nine o'clock the next morning, Alycia emerged, clothes torn and body bruised. "What the hell have you done, you jerk? Our front yard is a maze. How are we ever going to get out?"

Walter frowned and went back into the hedges. Alycia followed him a little way, shouting, but Walter soon plunged so deep into the maze that Alycia couldn't follow him. She came back, had a bath and ate a little, complaining to her mother-in-law who came into the bathroom and made soothing noises. "Walter is a little jerk. Now we'll never be able to get to town and buy things. How will anyone visit us? They'll all get lost in the maze. This is horrible."

Walter, meanwhile, threaded his way through the maze to the edge of the property where he unlocked the gate. He drove off in his little van. "Morning Mister Henson. Need more bushes? We've got that special kind today. Spiky, just like you like them."

"Thanks Pete. Just load them in the back. Can I get some more hedge clippers, too? Mine wear out awfully quick."

For months and months, Walter worked on his maze, smoothing down the hedges when the twigs pushed out, planning and adding more paths, planting more bushes, and uprooting weeds. It was as immaculate and shiny as a National Geographic photo. But meanwhile, his mother and Alycia plotted their escape.

At first, they despaired. A search for a map in the usual hiding places yielded nothing. Besides, Walter never planned anything. The maze grew out of his head and from under his fingers. So, Alycia and mother schemed to bring in a bulldozer to mow a clear path, far as the eye could see, from the front door to the highway. They'd be able to run away from the awful sprawling house, and get help from passing truck drivers. They'd go to the city, and eat lobster, and be free of that ugly old place, forever.

Then, they considered grabbing some hounds and following the dogs through the hedges. The superior sense of smell combined with animal instincts could lead them out. People would wait at the edge of the maze, and as Alycia and mother Henson staggered out, a crowd would come forward with a cry wrapping them in warm blankets ("Just like in those disaster movies, mother Henson. Wouldn't that be wonderful?").

The best plan of all, though, was to hire a plane, that would carry them far above the maze and the city. They'd be queen of all they saw. The pilot (named Nigel) would be so handsome. He'd take Alycia's hand saying, "Darling, please marry me. I'm crazy about you."

And after letting him kiss her several times, she would say tearfully, "I'm sorry, Nigel, I'm devoted to mother Henson. There is no one else for me."

He would land the plane mournfully, the crowd would surge forward, rolling out the red carpet under their feet. Nigel would leap down, kiss Alycia again, hop onto his plane and drive it straight into the nearby mountains.

Meanwhile, Walter's trips into his maze started getting longer. He came back, Muddled and tired. His mother said, "Walter, you've forgotten to get groceries again, haven't you? We need groceries. Do you want us to starve? You'd like that, wouldn't you? You'd just love that if you could find us here one day dead, and then, our eyes open and staring at the ceiling."

Then, Walter went back to town and bought groceries. He bought those fruit cereals that Alycia liked, because they turned her tongue pretty colours, he bought apples and canned soup, tuna fish, Jell-O, crackers and instant coffee. He bought chocolate bars for himself which he stowed in the van. His mother forbade chocolate in the house, and could usually smell it on his breath, but his long hours of work made him hungry. Then, he drove back to the property and let himself in the gate with his key.

It was midnight by the time Walter threaded out of the maze with the final wagon-load of groceries. His mother was asleep but the light to Alycia's window was still on. He knocked on her door. She was sitting up in her bed, her hair brushed out. He offered her the cereal box. "Thanks," she said, cupping her hand open.

He sat down on the bed.

Alycia looked up at him for a long moment.

She said, "It's quiet tonight. Almost like those nights when we were kids. Remember? We'd whirl around in the fields until we got so dizzy the stars smeared together. Whoever thought back then that three people could create such a mess together. Back then, we thought we could be free."

Walter said, "We could go away tonight. I could rake you with me, outside, through the maze and out the gate."

She said, "No, it's too late, now."

He did not insist.

That night, Walter dreamt he lay in his maze. He floated up and up until he saw the spiky hedge tops shining in the moonlight. His mother sat by herself in a clearing. Alycia wandered alone, too, her hair loose and streaming as she called out. He could not hear what she said as he waded up. The maze curved and angled far under him. It grew, widening, thickening more than he'd ever imagined, the round, clipped hedges rippling like waves.

In the middle, his body lay, still as a stone. He had died quite peacefully.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1994

LITERARY LAPSES

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL • 21

"The Forest" placed third amongst the stories submitted for our contest.

The Forest

By Matthew King

I remember a day when I was nine or ten, sitting on the edge of a limestone cliff, looking down and seeing three turkey vultures slowly circling over the trees. At the same time, I thought it was odd that such large birds should be flying so far below while the sparrows and finches and chickadees twittered around me. I wondered what the vultures could see through the opaque green ceiling of foliage. I never once saw them descend into the trees, nor did I ever see them carrying anything in their talons. I wondered whether they ever ate, or if they snatched up victims of cardiac arrest that fell from the clear blue sky, or if maybe they were just there on a lurch. Waiting for something, not knowing what it was, but sure they would know it when they saw it.

I look up to see if the vultures are there, but the leaves are too thick to see anything. It's impossible to ever really feel at ease in the forest. There is an eerie stillness here, like a Gothic cathedral abandoned long ago by its congregation. No sunlight penetrates directly to the barren floor; the light that does make it through the green stained glass has a sort of second-hand quality, as though it belonged to someone else who still has a claim to it. Nightfall would liberate me from the strange guilty-conscience feeling that I am stealing someone else's light, but the total darkness of the forest would have me completely at its mercy. Humans, who have so long been able to lengthen the day as much as they please, have become over-reliant on their eyes and lost the fine-tuning of their other senses, but the forest animals haven't. Maybe the wolf, howling into the infinite blackness, knows how much fear it strikes into the hearts of humans who can hear that there is a hungry wolf somewhere, but can't hear well enough to know that it is miles away. If it knows, maybe it cares; more likely it doesn't. Between dusk and dawn, the wolf has nothing to fear: in the night-time, it is on the other side of the wall of darkness behind which humans are imprisoned.

In this strange twilight of midday, though, the balance is more in my favour. I could tip it heavily if I carried a gun, but I have no desire to do so. I have no quarrel with wolves, and I'm sure that they are well-justified in any they might have with me. Besides, if I had a gun, I suppose I might not be here.

The densely packed trees remind me more and more of the catacombs in Rome. The empty spaces in the forest seem so much to be filled by the trees as to be dug out from between them. The catacombs, unlike cathedrals, have no centre, no altar or pulpit. There is no organizing plan, just an endless twisting maze of tunnels with countless random holes in the walls and crevices in the floor. Like the catacombs, the forest can only grow when things die: as the catacombs fed on the bodies of martyrs, the forest feeds on its own body, the bodies of everything that lives and dies in it. Maybe the most eerie thing about either place is that an unwary visitor would have no inkling of the death that is so essential to its fabric. Flesh is quickly absorbed into the larger organism; bones are quickly hidden. The solid evidence is gone, but the ghosts remain. Whether or not one believes in ghosts, one can't help but feel their presence. This is true as well for the birds and the squirrels: their chatter is more subdued in here than it is out in the sunlit meadows and suburban back yards.

I think the greenish glow is getting brighter ahead of me, but I could be wrong. Urban eyes, accustomed to so much stimulation, are not very reliable in the forest, where the colours are dull and the shapes are static. If I am right, it means one of three things: either I'm nearly where I want to go, or I'm nearly back where I came from, or I'm nearly somewhere else entirely. It's been a long time since I've been in the forest. All of the landmarks that were so familiar to me when I was young are either gone or changed beyond recognition. I suppose it could be me who has changed beyond recognition; I'd hardly expect any place to look the same to me when I'm twice as big as I was when I saw it last. So it's possible that I've been walking in a big wide arc all day, and I'm about to come back out to the highway. Maybe I'll even come back to the same spot where I left my old Honda Accord this morning.

What might the forest make of a dead Honda Accord? It's been said that once the soul is gone, a dead human body is nothing but a broken, useless machine, but I don't

Emotional readings

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20

less as this, but she isn't absolutely sure... She loved his face, even though it struck her as being wide, and rather blank."

The audience responded to the subtle wit of Shields' style with howls. She continued with a reading from her novel The Stone Diaries, which is a fictional biography about the life of Daisy Goodwill Fletch.

In 1927, Daisy is invited to lunch by her mother-in-law-to-be. She is concerned that Daisy's education will "impinge" upon her "marital harmony" if she flaunts it. She then continues to advise Daisy as to how to take care of her son, from his breakfast of Grape-Nuts, to how to clean his comb. And because of an unfortunate incident Harold experienced when young, when he choked on a piece of popcorn, the protective woman "always keeps[s] a close eye on him when we have a popcorn evening."

The Daisy of 1947 reads every issue of Good Housekeeping. She pays particular attention to the articles and letters regarding how a woman can please her husband in bed, and her reaction to these is a mixture of curiosity and laughter. We are given a description of Daisy's diaphragm, which she prepares every night in case of intercourse, even though nine times out of ten it is not necessary. The magazine says to always be prepared for your husband's entreaties.

This passage is also marked by a sharp contrast to its humour; however, when Daisy describes her actual sexual encounters with her husband. Her tears of loneliness go unnoticed during their lovemaking; Shields accurately portrays the alienation that can be experienced between two people even during something as intimate as sex. The thoughts that run through Daisy's head are abruptly interrupted by an explosion of liquid, followed by her husband's gratitude, and their shared embarrassment.

Smart and Shields complemented each other well, with the dark power of both biographies, Smart's memories and Shields' keen wit. Canadian literature was alive and well Monday night.

MEGAN NICHOLS WILL MISS LITERARY LAPSES.

think the analogy is a good one. When dead organisms degenerate, they become the stuff of living organisms, but dead machines just degenerate. If my car is left in the forest to rot, its rusted body and corroded chrome and broken glass and vinyl seats and copper wire and plastic dashboard and rubber tires will never be part of any living organism. The creatures of the forest may live in it, but they will never live from it. With the coming of the weekend sportsmen, the cycle of death and life in the forest was disrupted, if infinitesimally, for the first time: hunters began to take things out of the forest that had died there so that the sum total of life and death in the forest was reduced, but the spiritual equilibrium was disrupted in favour of the dead. If I leave my car here, I will have set another small but terrible precedent. I will have brought something into the forest to die and remain dead forever.

That is, of course, if nobody finds it. I imagine someone will eventually. Hardly anyone ever travels the highway through this forest, though; there are faster ways to get everywhere, except the forest, that the highway goes. I don't imagine that anyone would think of looking for me around here either, at least not right away. But, sooner or later, someone will find it. Someone — a hunter, a hiker, a ranger — always does, no matter how well-hidden in how obscure a place. I didn't bother to hide it; I have no desire to disrupt the balance of life and death. Anyway, by the time they find it, it won't make any difference to me. The world may well have forgotten me by then. That's all right. I'll have forgotten it, too.

Now I can definitely see rays of sunlight striking the ground ahead. I haven't come to the highway. Between the tree trunks, I can see bits of blue: I'm looking right off the edge of the Earth into the sky. So I have managed to keep to a straight line all day. Soon I'll come to the cliff that I sat on so long ago.

Suddenly I'm not sure if I want to leave the womb of the forest. The breeze is steadily increasing; except for the trees, there is nothing to stop it from here to the end of the Earth, and there are fewer and fewer trees between me and the edge of the cliff. Spears of sunlight stab at me from the widening holes overhead. As if to accentuate the shift from green to blue, a screaming blue jay flashes in the sunlight. I'm coming out of the catacombs.

At last I step into the full red light of the setting sun. The tall, dry grass swirls around my legs like countless empty snake skins struggling to free themselves from the grasp of the dead limestone and settle among the trees. I hesitate at the edge of the forest for a moment, wondering whether I want to go on.

Suddenly, my eye is caught by the form of a large animal only a few metres in front of me, and in a moment of irrational panic I'm afraid that it's a bear. It's not; I realize that the flowing black hair belongs to a girl, sitting cross-legged, straight and still as a great blue heron, on the very edge of the cliff. This I did not expect in the least. What should I do now? I can't go back. But I can't go on with her sitting there. I could hide and wait for her to leave, but there isn't much time left. Besides, there isn't really anywhere that I could hide and watch her at the same time. There aren't any bushes between the trees and the grass, and the strip of grass is sparse and narrow.

I become mesmerized by the way her hair dances wildly, fluttering and snapping in the wind like a tattered but proud black flag. It is the only part of the girl that moves at all. I have forgotten my fear that she might turn around and discover me; it appears that she might sit there, motionless, forever. Her head is inclined forward slightly. I wonder whether her eyes are open, and if they are, what she is looking at. The sun is almost at the horizon now; she might be watching it set, or she could be watching the vultures below. The thought of the vultures is almost enough to make me run to the edge, but I restrain myself. I think of how silly it was to look up for the vultures earlier; all this time, they have been beneath me.

The sun, a great ragged ball of fire that inspires thoughts in me of the Earth-consuming red giant it will someday become, touches the peaks of the trees below, and the girl stands. She stretches her arms out to the side and raises them above her head, palms upturned, but her head is still slung downward.

She's gone! The sun pauses on the horizon and time stands still and I'm frozen in stupefied disbelief. Did she jump or did she fall? I couldn't tell, she disappeared so quickly. But, as I rush to the edge of the cliff, I know, I know.

I look over the edge and watch the vultures spiral downward and finally disappear into the forest. I know that I won't see them again. I've come too late.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

The Blue Afternoon

A Novel by William Boyd

Hardcover $27.99

OPEN A BOOK OPEN A MIND

Printed Passage Books

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650
FAX: (613) 546-5638

"Writing is a hard way to make a living, but a great way to make a life."

Thanks to all our talented contribs. Keep writing!

GSS

GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

Nominations for the position of

Newsletter Editor

will close at 1:00pm,
April 15th.

PARIS

from $518

on Canadian Airlines International
from

TORONTO • MONTREAL

Period	Apr 08 - May 21	May 22 - Jun 15	Jun 16 - Jul 07	Jul 08 - Jul 31	Jul 31 - Sep 11	Sep 12 - Nov 12
Apr 08 - May 08	518	538	538	598	658	548
May 09 - Jun 02	548	568	568	628	688	578
Jun 03 - Jun 16		588	588	648	708	598
Jun 17 - Aug 23			698	758	818	708
Aug 24 - Sep 13					738	628
Sep 14 - Oct 24						598

Focus only available until April 15/94. Must be booked and paid in full by April 15/94.

Call Dailey Travel Today!
544-5755

Canadian Holidays
A WORLD OF VACATIONS

FUTON-ASTIC PRICES

LOWEST PRICES GUARENTEED

(see details below)

LOWEST PRICE GUARANTEE

We guarantee the lowest price for any Futon and Frame Set or you get the FUTON COVER FREE! (Reg. price — $79.99).

1993 INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE

Hundreds of Futons and Frames to be cleared at the lowest possible price.

— NO REASONABLE OFFER REFUSED! —

futon frame outlet

282 PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON 547-3387

Prometheus Unbound

Twenty-three years have tripped and passed
Into the abyss of time
Each day has released itself to the gravity of that pit
Spinning, falling
Screaming in descent.

Clutch and grab
And try to pull them back
The weight of days passed is infinite —
A Herculean task is this.

Prometheus unbound
Soon the rock forgot
Splendour in amnesia.

Freedom gained he spoke the words,
"Close the mind to abyss-fears and bias of the chalked slate
The master of their undoing rich is soon to be."
For creativity and clear thought are born
As chains which bind are broken.

Cameron Waldo

Carmina

Description
Words

J. Alfred's Truck Stop

I hate words — They're all shit.
I wish they'd just all go to Hell with all the other evils.
This time I mean it.
Just kidding —
I take it back.

Adrienne Munro

On the 401
to Montreal past the great malls
of Oshawa and Mississauga out from the Grand River valley its long summer interrupted by the heat of going nowhere and yes!
there's a great deal to be gained approaching Kingston with nothing —
and, checking my pockets making sure that whatever I got
I still got I look at the waitress and know, if we could only say it we'd be off — checked apron dropped in the middle of the floor. Then, passing Cornwall
with regret in my throat
the speedometer indicates exactly how fast
the farms are passing in the St. Lawrence Valley their rib cages still holding out in the long summer.

Kevin Bowers

SUMMER SPECIAL
25 RENTALS FOR $25.00

We buy used CD's

* please bring your student card

compact disk rental
340 PRINCESS (between Barrie and Clergy)

EXAM HOURS
(Until April 22)
3 p.m. - 11 p.m. daily

We would like to express our undying gratitude to all of you movie buffs, procrastinators (and especially the Law Guy upstairs) for your patronage

Thanks to: AMS staff, Steph & Board, Journal (esp. Fi), P&CC, Q.P., Alfie's, WW/WN

QP!

THE QUIET PUB

QP!

CHEERS FROM:
Graham
Sandra
Carolyn
Jeff, Brad
Bri, Erik
Scotty
Catherine
Martha
Jen, Lisa
Don, Sal

Sonal
Vanessa
Juliet
James
Cindy
Chris
Brad
Amanda
Tracey
Beacher
Cameron
Mounir
& Nancy

THE MANAGEMENT AND STAFF OF THE QP WOULD LIKE TO THANK ALL
IT'S PATRONS FOR A TRULY BRILLIANT YEAR. ALSO TO BE THANKED ARE ALL THOSE IN THE AMS WHO HELP THINGS RUN SO SMOOTHLY. WITHOUT
YOU ALL WE'D BE...WELL, CLOSED. BEST WISHES PEOPLE, AND GOOD LUCK
TO NEXT YEAR'S TEAM. SEE Y'ALL DURING READING WEEK (8PM MON-SUN)

JOURNAL PEOPLE hard at work!

Graphic design by Adrienne and Colin, photos by Marika

SPORTS

YEAR IN REVIEW Eight banners for Golden Gaels

This year's athletic season has been touched with extreme emotion, as the Queen's Golden Gaels won eight banners, and Frank Tindall, a driving force behind Queen's spirit, passed away on October 5.

Tindall is mourned as a man who inspired many with his spirit of friendship, loyalty and tradition. His honours include CFL All-Star and Hall-of-Fame, and coach of Queen's 1968 Vanier Cup team. He also led Queen's only basketball championship-winning team to victory. He has left an indelible mark on the entire university community.

This year has been filled with incredible performances and efforts on the competitive front. Although space allows for only highlights, all participants deserve congratulations for a productive year.

A total of eight banners have been won by the Golden Gaels: the women took the title in all the racquet sports, which includes squash, tennis and badminton, and Queen's also captured the banner in men's rugby, men's soccer, men's and women's curling and women's fencing.

In the fall, the football Gaels failed to recapture their Vanier Cup title from the year before, missing the playoffs for the first time in 17 years. With a record of 2-5, they lost all their home games. Fans were disappointed, but the team was plagued by injury, losing tailback Brad Elberg for the entire season in the fourth game and many of their experienced players had graduated.

Unfortunately, many of their efforts fell short, with not one rushing touchdown scored by a Queen's running back.

After a disappointing season last year, the rugby Gaels finished first, securing home field for the playoffs. Crushing the Carleton Ravens 32-0, the team fought a strong battle for the Ruttan Cup. They beat the Western Mustangs 18-15, and regained their OUAA title.

Queen's women's tennis had a smashing season, winning the OWIAA team championship banner, as well as the gold medals in singles and doubles. Bali Athwal finished an undefeated season, capturing the singles title 6-1, 6-1, and teamed up with Pam Lewis to win doubles: 6-4, 6-7, 6-1.

Men's Golden Gael soccer shocked us all this fall by winning its first OUAA championship since 1975. In the middle of the season, they began an 11-game unbeaten streak, and finished fourth in the regular season. The team fought valiantly to the top, unseating Carleton, Toronto and Western at the CIAU tournament in Nova Scotia.

Other fall highlights include Gael golfers placing third at the OU finals, and both men and women's cross country teams qualified and placed fifth at the CIAU finals in Halifax. David Scott-Thomas won OW Coach-of-the-Year honours. The field hockey team qualified, and also finished fifth at the OW's. Women's soccer won a bronze at the CIAU's and coach Dave McDowell won two Coach-of-the-Year awards. The Queen's rowing team went to prestigious international regattas in Rochester and Boston, and at the OW's numerous medals were won; including two golds and two silvers. Men's tennis had a strong season, but finished third at the OU tourney. Five players qualified for the individual finals. The men's water polo team missed the playoffs, finishing in fifth place.

This winter, Gaels women's badminton won the OWIAA championships—the first badminton banner in over 10 years. Having won every match of their first tournament this year, they persevered, placing first for the season, and defeating Western in the finals. Sara Gibbings won on an unhappy note, losing their first two games due to injuries on the team.

The indoor field hockey team won banners this season, with the women triumphing over six other teams at the OWIAA finals. Meghan Noseworthy won the epee title, and the team of Noseworthy, Amy Olson, Sarah Hinchcliffe and Heather White won the team epee title. The foil team was also victorious, leading the entire team to a nine-point victory over Trent, winning the banner and a total of three gold medals.

The men's team was not quite as successful, but they did win gold in the team sabre event, as well as silver medals in the individual sabre event (Henk Pardoel did the honours), and the team epee event. The team also won two bronze medals in the team foil event and the individual epee (Dave Williamson gave a fine performance to clinch the title).

The Queen's track and field team had an awesome season, with the OUAA/OWIAA Championships resulting in three medals, 26 personal bests and nine qualifiers for the CIAU Championships in Edmonton. Steve Fruitman won gold in the shot put event with a throw of 14.3m. Sarah Leonard won a silver in the same event with a throw of 12.25m. Lesley Morrison also won a bronze medal.

Queen's hosted the OWIAA basketball Championships this year, but the women's Gaels finished a solid season on an unhappy note, losing their first two games due to injuries on the team.

The swim team, though only a development team, showed promise, with Kim Grootveld and Ian Gardiner qualifying for the CIAU's in Victoria.

There was also an international flavour on campus, this season, as Queen's played host to a volleyball match between Canada's National Team and Russia as part of the "post-Olympic rebuilding phase" of the Canadian volleyball program.

The Queen's Sailing Club won an Alma Mater Society referendum question that will create a $0.35 opt-out fee for better equipment. Still in its infancy, the Club placed eighth out of 44 teams in their region, showing strong promise.

[Eds. note: Each and every Golden Gael made this section possible over the past school year. Thanks are owed to every athlete that represented Queen's University this past year.]

JOURNAL FILE PHOTOS

Chaotic Playoff System, Leafs Will Prevail

BY ANDRE NOWAKOWSKI

Two points need to be cleared up right off the bat. First, the NHL season had four games left to play with some question marks still to be resolved as this piece of soothing was being written. Nonetheless, as most there will only be a few minor glitches in this clairvoyant endeavour and the fundamentals will be as sound as at conception. Second, as you might be aware there are some differences in this year's NHL playoffs from years gone by. Indeed, chaos seems to be the rule of thumb. As such, before any predictions are made, I will delineate the general (ha!) playoff format.

First, the basic stuff. The two division winners will be the top two seeds in their conference, with the team having the most points being the number one seed. The next six playoff participants are determined on the basis of points without regard for division. Matchups in the opening round see the top seed in the conference playing the worst team, the second place team playing the second last place team and so on. Simple enough so far, right? Now for the second round.

Matchups in the second round will also be determined on the regular season standings. So, the division winners from the regular season will remain the top two seeds in the conference semi-finals, if they don't lose. The other two first round winners will be the third and fourth seeds in the Conference semis, based on regular season standings. If the top seed should lose in the first round, then the second seed becomes number one, with the other three winners being ranked on the basis of regular season points and the same sort of thing if both of the top two seeds lose.

With this all sorted, the number one seed will play the number four seed and number two will play number three. Home ice will be determined by who finished with the most regular season points all the way up to and including the Stanley Grail Finals. All series will be played with a 2-2-1-1-1 set up, with one exception. This exception is in the case of a series which pits a team from the Central division against one from the Pacific division. In this situation, the set up will be 2-3-2, and the team with the most points gets to choose whether or not they want home-ice advantage.

This rule rose from the ashes of last year's Leafs-Kings semi-final series like a phoenix. Any questions about the playoff format or this simile can be directed to Joel, the Boss, at The Journal Sports Department.

Now that we have our playoff framework, it's time to get down to business. In short, I will now put my neck on the line as I prophesy the course of the 1993-94 Stanley Cup Playoffs. I'll start with the Eastern Conference (which should be called the Wales Conference, I might add) and then proceed in a westerly direction.

As this went to press, the New York Rangers had a six-point lead on the New Jersey Devils and were well on their way to winning the Atlantic Division, Eastern Conference, and their second President's Trophy in three years. However, as the Rangers know, finishing first-overall in the regular season does not a Stanley Cup make. One need only look at last year's semi-finals where all four teams had finished third in their respective divisions. Having said that, I like the Rangers this year, all the way to the Finals.

At press time Philadelphia was two points behind the upstart Florida Panthers for the final playoff spot, but Eric Lindros had just suffered a slight separation of the shoulder. The New York Islanders were three points back. No matter, for the Rangers will dispose of either of these teams. Although Vanbiesbrouck has been outstanding this year, he is not enough to pull the Panthers past the Rangers. The Islanders and Flyers would provide difficulty with their scoring potential, but not enough. Rangers in five.

The next matchup is Pittsburgh against Washington and the depth of the Penguins should prevail. The acquisition of Joe Juneau could be the key to an upset here. That and Mario Lemieux's recent tendency of fleeing the penalty box, foaming mouth and all, and attempting to attack NHL referees. Penguins in six.

New Jersey against Boston should be no contest. Trading Juneau to the Capitals was questioned to begin with, but the injuries to Neely and Bourque have crippled the Bruin offence, and their shot at the Cup. Devils sweep.

Montreal against Buffalo is tough. Dominek Hasek, after 54 games between the pipes still has an unbelievable GAA of 1.97. Even though the Habs don't score much to begin with, Patrick Roy can make a one or two goal lead seem insurmountable. Habs in seven.

In the second round the Habs will meet their match. Mike Richter has assumed the number one goaltending position well and he has a solid supporting cast. The infusion of Oiler blood into New York has not hurt either. There will be no repeat for the Habs this year. Rangers in six.

Are the Devils playing over their heads this year? A second round matchup against the Penguins will be revealing. The Penguins have a great offence, especially with Mario the Mad in the lineup. However, both Brodeur and Terrieri have been solid in net this year for the Devils. The experience of Jacques Lemair behind the bench adds to their potential. Devils in seven.

The battle of New York State should prove interesting. However, the experience of the Rangers with players like Messier, Larmer, Leetch, and coach Mike Keenan should stop the Devils. Rangers in seven.

The Western Conference also has some stiff competition. Notwithstanding a huge shift in momentum, the Detroit Red Wings will finish first overall. There will be the fortunate lot of meeting the San Jose Sharks in the opening round. Barring something of biblical proportions, Detroit will steamroll the Sharks in no more than five games.

Chicago and Vancouver were tied for sixth place at press time, but the Canucks have an easier schedule in the final games so the assumption will be that Chicago will finish seventh and play Calgary. Chicago struggled throughout the year and the upheaval in personnel at the trading deadline did not help the team from the Windy City. Calgary, with a good pool of talent to begin with, has benefited from the addition of both James Patrick and Zarek Zaslavski to their defensive corps. Calgary in five.

The working premise is that the Leafs will hold off the Dallas Stars and finish third in the Conference. This will pit them against the sizeable and talented Vancouver Canucks. Bure has turned up his play of late and this seems to have fired up the rest of the Canucks. Although Kirk McLean has the potential to give the Canucks the edge, Vancouver goaltending has been somewhat sub-par this year. As for the Leafs, even if Potvin is unable to shake his late-season slump, Rhodes appears to be up to the task. Should the Leafs get a second line on track with Gartner producing, the Leaf attack will be formidable. Leafs in six.

That leaves Dallas and St. Louis. Speaking of talent, the LEAFS CONTINUED ON PAGE 27

Kantor joins Canucks

BY BRENDA WILLIS

David Kantor, a member of the current Queen's Golden Gaels Men's Volleyball team, has joined the Canadian Senior National Team for Canada's six-city tour currently underway with Samator, a Russian professional club team from Siberia. The tour hits Kingston tomorrow for a 7:30 p.m. match in the Bartlett Gym.

Kantor, a 6'8" second year Engineering student, led the OUAA in stuff blocks this year and was in the top five in overall scoring. He was a tournament all-star at the Dalhousie Classic and was both an OUAA First team All-Star and an Honourable Mention All-Canadian. With aspirations to join Team Canada full-time in the fall of 1996 for the next Olympic cycle, Kantor will benefit greatly from this preliminary experience. Kantor has taken part in Canada's first two practice matches on the tour thus far and describes it as "amazing for me—everything is higher, harder and more intense."

In the first match, which took place at York University on April 3, Canada lost 3-0 (15-13, 15-12, 15-10) to Samator in front of a crowd of 500. Monday night's match at the University of Waterloo saw the Canadians go down in four sets before 1,200 fans.

According to Kantor, Canada played a much better match in front of the crowd of 1,200. Samator won the first two games 15-13, 15-11. Kantor saw action in the second set. Canada came back and took the third set 15-10 and led in the fourth 14-12 before dropping the set 14-16.

Team Canada Head Coach Clement Lemieux said that the current plan is for Kantor to join the National "B" team this summer and represent Canada in the next World Student Games. Kantor, who is also an academic All-Canadian, is excited about the experience he is gaining on the tour and looks forward to representing Canada in front of his home crowd here at Queen's tomorrow night.

Tickets are on sale in advance at the Physical Education Centre wickets between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. Prices are $7 for Queen's students and $8 for general admission. Providing they do not sell out, tickets will be available at the door for $8. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. and the match begins at 7:30 p.m.

Bring lots of noise makers, Canadian flags and wear your red and white. Bet on a close, tough match and a sold out house so avoid disappointment and get your tickets early.

THANK YOU, STUDENTS!

The 1994 Alumni Teaching Award Committee would like to acknowledge the work and effort of the departmental student representatives and all the other students who were involved in preparing nominations for this year's award.

Without your involvement, it would not be possible to carry on this award program, which recognizes excellence in teaching at Queen's.

Thank you for your interest and support.

Alumni Teaching Award Committee,
Department of Alumni Affairs, Summerhill

TEVA
THE SPORT SANDAL
1994

NORTH RIDGE WILDERNESS

$5.00 OFF ALL TEVA STYLES

80 Queen Street
Kingston, Ontario K7K 6W7

Tel: (613) 546-4757
Fax: (613) 546-5243

Olympic
1 HR. PHOTO
A NEW CHOICE FOR EVEN MORE PICTURES

FREE FILM
OR FREE 2ND SET
OR
FREE 5x7 ENLARGEMENT

EVERY DAY GIVE-A-WAY
SEE STORE FOR DETAILS
No Coupon required.

Princess and Barrie
545-5998

Loyalist Plaza
Amherstview
634-1751

NOW OPEN!

192 ONTARIO STREET
SERVING FOOD 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:30AM TO 12:00PM

Leafs to the cup

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26

Blues are not short of it in the least. Curtis Joseph may well be the best netminder in the league. In short, the Blues will make short work of the Stars. Blues in five.

This scenario will produce a Detroit-St. Louis match-up in the second round. As far as talent goes, both these teams are dynamic and overpowering. Fedorov is the best two-way player in hockey right now. Shanahan is perhaps the best power-forward in the game. The list goes on. The deciding factor will be goaltending.

The Wings thought they had solved their netminding problems when they traded Tim Cheveldae for Bob Essensa. However, Essensa has been less than outstanding since coming to Detroit. With the Blues having the fire power to match the Red Wings goal-for-goal, it will once again be Cujjo who puts them over the top. Blues in six.

Calgary had the upper hand over the Leafs in the regular season. Al MacInnis continued to be anathema to Felix Potvin and the Leafs. As we all know, the regular season means nothing in post-season action.

The Leafs are still hungry after last year's glimpse of the Grail and the glory and they won't be content to end the season here. Count on Doug Gilmour to have a great series against his former teammates and Pat Burns to figure out a way to neutralize MacInnis. Leafs in six.

So, once again the Blues and Leafs will meet in the playoffs. It will be a series of awesome offensive potential versus a classic defensive system. Joseph and Potvin will no doubt put on theatrics again. In the end, Burns' approach to the game and his ability to get his players to focus will be pivotal. Leafs in seven.

Lord Stanley's legacy will go to either the Leafs or the Rangers. On paper, the Rangers should bring the Cup home for the first time this side of the New Testament. But, the game is not played on paper.

Both teams will have Cup-deprived fans boosting them. Both teams have talent, are experienced and hungry. Both teams have coaches who know how to win. Except that Mike Keenan is 0 for 2 in the Cup Finals while Burns is 0 for 1, soon to be 1 for 2. Pat's rate of success in turning around the Leafs is good enough for me. Leafs in seven. In overtime. Clark from Pearson, wristshot at 17:12.

[Eds. note: The above predictions have the full support of the editorial staff. However, an uneducated hockey mind may have picked the following teams: Red Wings/Leafs, Penguins/Devils in the semis, Red Wings/Penguins final with the Cup returning to Pittsburgh after a one year hiatus. The Journal does not sanction this blatant inobjectivity and favouritism, but apparently Andrew Turner does.]

15% Off All The Time

ECHO
EXTREMELY CONSCIENTIOUS
HAIR ORGANIZATION
296 BAGOT STREET

542-5069

Open
Mon. & Tues. 9-6
Wed., Thurs, Fri. 9-9
Sat. 8-5

IT'S TIME YOU WENT TO ECHO

P.H.E. SMOKER
Friday, April 8th

BUCK $ LITE NITE
ALL NITE LONG
DOORS OPEN
AT 8:00PM

Uncle Buck's

KINGSTON'S NEWEST WATERING HOLE
178-A ONTARIO STREET, KINGSTON • 549-1496

Back Row: Chad, Paul. Fourth Row: Lumpy, Josh, Ben, Bill, Bone, Rolston, Phil, Dean, Johnny O, James, Givv, Jeff. Third Row: Camilla, Jenn, DJ Jenn, Cengiz, Jan, Peggy-Jo Brent, Chris, Nadya, Sue, Stacy, Kiersten, Wildberry, Mick, Amy S, Sperry, Susie, Fiona. Second Row: Sean, Sugar, Alison, Didi, Nancy, Norm, Dave, Darren, Amy F, Regan.

Front row: Katy, Mouse, Pippa

WE WOULD LIKE TO THANK EVERYONE FOR PARTYING THIS YEAR AT ALFIE'S COME DOWN FOR LAST CALL OF 1994

To all Staff and Constables:

It is your hard work and dedication that make the Pub such a great place to be.

THANKS FOR A GREAT YEAR!!!

PIPPA KATY MOUSE
BEST WISHES TO:
NANCY, BILL, AND JASON

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

SUMMER RE-OPENING THURSDAY MAY 6th

QP!
NANCY
CAMERON
BEACHER
MO

ASAD GREG JANICE JESS JODI RAILI
RON
TIM

OEA
JANE JAYSON
TODD
ROB

QSCs
SUE
MIKE
JEN
NEIL
TREVOR

P&CC
KYLA
ELIA
AMY

DR. WILLIAMS &
BRUCE GRIFFITHS
GABE &
THE JOURNAL
JEFF &
THE CUSTODIANS
MARRIOTT FOODS

ENTERTAINMENT

And you thought she sounded good on CD!

Sarah "rocks" our very own Grant Hall

SARAH MCLACHLAN WITH THE DEVLINS GRANT HALL BY KAREN HALL

Sarah McLachlan played Grant Hall Friday night. The show was incredible.

The Devlins opened up with a mix of material. Their first few songs were really mellow though surprisingly good. In particular, "Someone to Talk To" was impressive for its quiet harmonies and sweet lyrics. Later in their 45-minute set, "I Need That" was upbeat and funky, the high point of their act.

I got the feeling that The Devlins were in a bit of a spot, trying to get the crowd warmed up for one of the more mellow female vocalists around. Their range of material hinted at several different versions of their sound, and I found myself wondering what they would sound like if they were opening for some other band with a more upbeat style. Overall, The Devlins were pretty impressive. I hadn't heard much about them—and still haven't, actually—but they're worth checking into. They have a distinct sound, kind of a cross between Pink Floyd and U2 with a little bit of That Petrol Emotion thrown in on a few tracks. Sarah came on around 9 p.m. to a huge round of applause and cheers, looking rather impressed with the audience's reaction. The set was 16 songs long, over an hour and a half, and with two encores. All that can be said is that she was incredible. (I'm breaking! The Journal Entertainment Section's taboo on raving about concerts here, but as a transplanted Opinions Editor, I haven't quite developed the requisite jaded attitude.)

Colin Devlin, super hunk!

Starting off with "Plenty," "Drawn to the Rhythm," and "Good Enough," she served notice of the power of her voice. I thought she sounded good on Solace and even better on Fumbling Towards Ecstasy. Honestly, the discs give a pale representation of what she is capable of. The power of her voice is impressive

(though obviously it was helped by her sound system, her backup singer, and her band). Grant Hall seemed to be an ideal venue for her, the kind of space she sounds the best in. Though it was small and hot, she had no problem filling the entire hall with a full, rich sound. "Home" has a solo which is good on the disc; performed live it gives us an opportunity to enjoy her voice on its own, all the while wishing we could sound just half as good as she does.

Sarah is drawn to the rhythm.

All in all, the songs stayed very close to the versions on Touch, Solace, and Fumbling, with some impressive vocal improvisation on "Good Enough" and "Ice Cream." "Ice" was a marked departure from the original, with accordion and bongo drums creating a very different version than the one that appears on Fumbling. The tempo and the mood of the set became more and more intense as each song slipped by. Songs late in the first set, ("I Will Not Forget You" and "Path of Thorns," leading into "Hold On," "Into the Fire" and finally "Possession") were tight, powerful and superb. People were actually up and dancing during this set, an impressive compliment to a singer whose music is usually reserved for studying, long drives, and mellow nights at home.

At different times during the night Sarah was backed by two or three guitars, keyboards, a piano, drums, accordions, bongos, and a back-up vocalist. Their support was great, filling in her sound but remaining in the background for most of the show. They looked like they were having a great time up there, with high-fives and big smiles during the first and second encores.

The lone criticism in all this praise isn't related to the performance of the music at all—it's about her inane lounge-act chatter between songs. Her first greeting was a pretty long and overdone hello and explanation of how "Good Enough" was written with her mother in mind, but not really, and did that make sense?

Her little monologue just before "Ice," about a third of the way into her first set, was hilarious. She started out commenting on the heat in Grant Hall, at which point, I'm sure, many people wondered if the rumour that she tends to take off a lot of clothing in her shows was true. It wasn't, at least not on Friday night. Then in the midst of a serious recounting of a trip to Asia with Care Canada and MuchMusic a few years ago, she "totally lost [her] train of thought," ditched the story and proceeded into a great version of "Ice." While she may have had a lot to say, I agreed with her when she said, "I guess I'll sing, thanks—that's what I'm here for!"

Recycling values in The Paper

Randy Quaid and Michael Keaton admire the final journal of '93-'94.

THE PAPER DIRECTED BY RON HOWARD CATARAQUI CINEPLEX BY ALISON MASEMANN

The Paper is billed in previews as a movie about a day in the life of a tabloid newspaper editor: about the conflict between his exciting, fast-paced job and his obligations to his pregnant wife. The editor in question is played by Michael Keaton, and his lovely wife is portrayed by Academy Award winner Marisa Tomei.

I think the lesson we are supposed to learn from this movie is that it's really possible for the modern man to juggle career and family effectively (gee, haven't women been doing this for years?). In fact, the message I got from The Paper was that a paper is really fun to work at, and don't worry about your wife anyway, because once she has the baby she'll be so excited about her reproductive role that she'll forget she sacrificed a stimulating career for hours of drudgery.

This is not to say that The Paper is bad entertainment. Michael Keaton plays the harried and sarcastic reporter to the comedic hilt, and there is plenty of fast-paced, witty repartee between Keaton's character, Henry Hackett, and his arch-rival at The New York Sun, managing editor Alicia Clark (played by Glenn Close).

The writers have also taken advantage of the comic potential of "life in a busy newsroom" (co-writer Stephen Keopp is himself a senior editor at Time), by injecting the movie with a full complement of eccentric journalists: the loudmouth, gum-cracking Puerto Rican woman; the greasy Herb Tarlick protégé with a big mouth, and the bumbling (read "ditzy") young photographer.

The main plot progresses at a rollicking pace and revolves around Hackett trying to scoop all the other New York tabloids on the "real" story behind the murder of two white businessmen in a black ghetto. Meanwhile, Hackett's wife Marty, who is taking maternity leave as a reporter for The Sun, struggles to cope with her increasing boredom away from her job and frustration at her husband's inattentiveness.

The way in which director Ron Howard sets up this conflict between work and family implies that for Henry, there is really no conflict at all. By juxtaposing the birth of Marty's baby (and I mean Marty, not Marty and Henry's) with the final printing of Henry's paper, Howard visualizes the birthing process and implies that the paper is really Henry's baby.

Another strain of the plot involves the conflict between Henry and his bitchy and pretentious boss Alicia (Glenn Close). Close is painted as the villain here, and as someone who hasn't found Close to be particularly sympathetic in other films, the role isn't much of a stretch. However, I found myself feeling strangely sorry for her: in contrast to Henry's wife, who ultimately found the most happiness in the birth of her baby, Alicia is portrayed as having led a relatively dismal life, in which her professional greediness robbed her of the love of her colleagues (and undoubtedly, a good man).

The message I got from this movie wouldn't bug me so much if it didn't seem like the creative team behind it was trying to convey exactly the opposite: that Sen-

Heaven knows he's miserable now

MORRISSEY
VAUXHALL AND I SIRE
BY RYAN P(ATRICK) CHEN

As usual, the cover star of (Steven Patrick) Morrissey's latest release, Vauxhall and I, is none other than the aging Moz himself. But unlike previous portraits, where we find our melancholic Mancunian suggestively licking his hand or engrossed in euphoric self-absorption, the Morrissey who adorns Vauxhall and I seems more serious, more woeful, and more pensive than ever before. And for good reason: Vauxhall and I is Morrissey's most profound and heart-wrenching work yet.

His fourth proper long-player (the sixth if you include the 1990 singles compilation, Bona Drag, and last summer's live recording, Beethoven Was Deaf), Vauxhall and I arises out of an uncharacteristically traumatic period in Morrissey's life. With the death of three of his closest associates (Your Arsenal producer Mick Ronson, video director Tim Broad, and manager Nigel Thomas), Morrissey has apparently used this release for elegiac purposes. Although the Moz's preoccupation with death and sorrow is at times somewhat excessive (even by his exaggerated standards), the preoccupation does beget artistic fruits, for Vauxhall and I is arguably his strongest album since Viva Hate.

Indeed, parallels can be drawn between these two efforts. To put it perversely, Morrissey seems to be at his artistic best when he is at his emotional worst. Just as the death of The Smiths was the creative impetus behind Viva Hate, so the death of Mick Ronson et al. appears to have produced a tour de force on Vauxhall and I. And just as Johnny Marr was replaced by the long-time Smiths producer, Stephen Street, so is Mick Ronson replaced by another Smiths colleague, Steve Lillywhite. (Perhaps the Moz is at his optimum when he works with people who share his name.)

But while Morrissey was able to couch his anguish in the upbeat pop-songs which composed

Viva Hate (such as "Everyday is Like Sunday," "Suedehead," and "I Don't Mind if You Forget Me"), the real death of Mick Ronson et al. (as opposed to the figurative passing of Johnny Marr) negates such an option on Vauxhall and I. Caveat auditor. This release is a dirge from beginning to end.

The opening track, "Now My Heart is Full," immediately establishes this morbid tone. In the past, Morrissey's strategy was to usher in the long-player with a boisterous track ("Alsatian Cousin" on Viva Hate, "Our Frank" on Kill Uncle, and "You're Gonna Need Someone on Your Side" on Your Arsenal), follow it up with an emotional plea ("Little Man, What Now?," "Asian Rut," and "We'll Let You Know") and then climax somewhere near mid-release ("Suedehead," "Found Found Found," and "We Hate It When Our Friends Become Successful"). That Morrissey chooses to kick off Vauxhall and I with this slow, moody tune marks a significant departure from his usual gambit and reinforces the watershed nature of this offering. If the novelty of Vauxhall and I isn't apparent by the opening notes, then certainly Morrissey's thesis becomes clear by his first croonings: There's gonna be some trouble / a whole house will need re-building / and every-one I know / will recline on an analyst's couch quite / soon.

The allusion to psychoanalysis is apt, for the entire album seems to be a therapeutic exercise. Even a cursory glance at the song titles suggests that Morrissey is working out his deep-seated anxieties and attempting to find some consolation for loss: "Hold on to Your Friends," "Why Don't You Find Out for Yourself," "I am Hated for Loving," "Lifeguard Sleeping, Girl Drowning," "Used to be a Sweet Boy." Although "Billy Budd" and "The More You Ignore Me, The Closer I Get" seemingly depart from the norm with their uplifting tunes, their depressing subject matter ("Billy Budd" is a requiem for Melville's doomed hero, and "The More You Ignore Me" is a complaint) neutralizes the musical experience.

While each song on Vauxhall and I is finely crafted and exceptionally executed, the musical and emotional epiphanies of the release occur on the final two tracks, "The Lazy Sunbathers" and "Speedway," which represent contrary mental states. The former, with its soothing melody, portrays a tranquil world of apathy, while the latter, with its driving rhythm, depicts a torturous world of emotional suffering. That Morrissey ends Vauxhall and I with a portrait of the artist as a disturbed man, crying out In my own sick way / I'll stay true to you, implies that his elegy has failed.

Nevertheless, Vauxhall and I is an artistic success. There isn't a weak track on the entire album, and although the release may last only a short 40 minutes, they are still 40 well wrought minutes of musical and emotional depth. Granted, Vauxhall and I may ultimately be a solipsistic and self-indulgent endeavour, but if that's what it takes for Morrissey to finally produce a masterpiece, then so be it.

Cheryl Pagurek's Jewish Cemetery I.

Installing pity and fear

CHERYL PAGUREK
5 FRASERWOOD AVE., APT. #2
AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
BY MICHAEL MOSS

Looking at the interior of Cheryl Pagurek's 5 Fraserwood Ave., Apt. #2, displayed in the Old Gallery at the Agnes, I felt a great sense of pathos, as if I had stepped into an Arthur Miller play. There is something unmistakably pathetic in the realistic, yet strangely child-like furniture, as well as in the washed portraits hanging on the three equally unconvincing walls. The photographs are given an entirely different sense of intangibility when viewed in the Jewish cemetery or super-imposed with scenes from a garment factory.

The living-room interior is, by the artist's own admission, a reproduction of the Toronto apartment of her maternal grandparents, Jews who immigrated to Canada before the Second World War. Although the living room is invested with the artist's personal warmth, there is nothing particularly "alive" about the interior. The picture on the cabinet depicting three eerie women seems more in line with a symbol of fate than an attempt to capture the likeness of family members.

In spite of the curator's statement, from which one might extract the impression of the exhibit as a polished revelation of the artist's thoughts on a particular idea

(such as "identity"), there is a great confusion and sadness that even seeps through the two-dollar promotional leaflet.

Setting the piece in a Jewish cemetery, a popular target of vandalism nowadays, further enhances the aura of alienation and fear. It is no accident that the interior is placed between the cemetery and a residential community in the background. Appropriately enough, however, the interior, with its sterility and plaintive openness (it lacks a ceiling and a front wall), falls on the side of the smooth tombstones in the company of which it seems more natural.

The infantile urge to deny reality is at stake when one considers the inevitable connection between Jewish death and the Holocaust.

The feeling of suppressed grief

It never ends! If yer stickin' 'round K-town, why not drop in and write us something juicy this summer?

is inescapable in the Jewish cemetery photographs. It is as if the artist was vainly looking back to something unattainable and distinct in time, as if she were trying to incorporate herself into a place where she can never belong, regardless of how she struggles to rebuild a vision of her past. The infantile urge to deny reality is at stake when one considers the inevitable connection between Jewish death and the Holocaust. The denial seems to be not one of external events, but of inner recognition and a failure to grasp, notwithstanding the effort, the enormity of the situation. Perhaps what is also translated to the viewer through the association of the interior with the cemetery is the agony of guilt that comes with survival and material prosperity, while others who are somehow linked to you suffer.

Ultimately, there really is no uplifting message to these photographs, which makes them so much more disturbing and, at the same time, arresting. In the end, what the viewer is left with is not a cool observation of reality, but an emotional confession of loss and the impossible labour of loss regained.

Pinocchio's Chicken & Ribs

"Where the Taste Comes To Life"

Buy one entrée and receive the 2nd for 1/2 price to all students.

Valid until April 30th, 1994

531-0600

Eat-in or Take-out - Fully Licensed

14 Garrett Street (formerly Poor George's)
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.

take a break...

Colours in the Storm

a musical play about Tom Thomson by Jim Betts

Director Richard Greenblatt
Music Director Stephen Woodjett
Produced by Tapestry Music Theatre

Thursday April 21, 8pm
Grand Theatre

Tickets only $16.05 for students
Call the Box Office at 530-2050 for tickets

Grand Theatre
218 Princess Street * K7L 1B2

CAMPUS CONNECTIONS

SEE YOU IN SEPTEMBER

DON'T FORGET TO RETURN YOUR PHONE!

Thanks to all of you who used Bell throughout the school year.

To disconnect your telephone service for the summer, bring your phone to your on-campus Bell Phonecentre™ location.

Victoria Hall - Games Room
Sat. April 30 - 12:00 noon - 5 p.m.
Sun. May 1 - 9:00 a.m. - 12:00 noon or visit the Bell Phonecentre store at the Kingston Centre.

Bell wishes you good luck on your exams. Have a great summer! Don't forget, the Bell Phonecentre will be back on campus in September to help set up all your phone needs.

Bell

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely

Experienced Electrologists

Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON

Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call
542-5595

EASTERN RENTALS

191 Dalton Avenue, Kingston, Ontario. 544-1212

10% OFF ALL TRUCK RENTALS

WITH STUDENT I.D. • AGE 21 AND OVER

Double trouble

THE PROCLAIMERS
HIT THE HIGHWAY
CHRYSALIS/EMI
BY BRENDAN POWELL

The funny-looking Scottish guys with the geeky glasses are back, and the twin brothers only a mother could love had their work cut out for them this time.

Coming into their fourth album, The Proclaimers have much to live up to after the success of their last album Sunshine on Leith, which came complete with the extended airplay that inevitably results from having a track listed for a movie soundtrack ("500 Miles" from Benny and Joon). Unfortunately, this can backfire and get songs overplayed (witness the drowning Reservoir Dogs). Suffice it to say that many people are tired of walking 500 miles.

To regain the momentum started by Leith, the duo need an album at least as strong. Disappointingly, their new release, Hit the Highway, isn't that album.

It's an old adage that ugly gifts nicely packaged are still ugly gifts. Similarly, no amount of tech can make up for a performance without guts. Simply put, that's what Hit the Highway is missing: guts.

What's lacking is the gutsy simplicity and aggressive harmonies that made their earlier albums so endearing. Possibly an attempt to make up for this, the album relies much more heavily on studio musicians than any previous material. In itself, this has the potential to be a progressive move, but instead, one comes away wondering which came first: the studio work detracting from the soul (if two geeky Scots can be said to have soul) or as an effort to pad the weaker material.

Despite some brief moments of extreme catchiness (on the title track and "Follow the Money"—a horns section with the Proclaimers...who knew?) Hit the Highway failed the most important test: the road trip. Let's face it, the true test of an album is this: can I make a complete fool of myself on the highway with the windows down, drumming on the dashboard and singing along at the top of my lungs? The answer, sadly, is no.

And so, with 200 clicks left to T.O., on go the shades, down go the windows, in goes Road Apples... and Hit the Highway hits the dashboard.

THE PROCLAIMERS HIT THE HIGHWAY

Release the Devlin in you

THE DEVLINS DRIFT
CAPITOL RECORDS
BY ROB FURSE

The Devlins manage to sound like a melange of all Irish bands past and present while simultaneously sounding like none of them.

Drift itself is a sparse and emotional recording; it evokes a quiet rainy summer day: soft and gentle, yet deeply reflective and moving. On the title track, guitarist and lead singer Colin Devlin laments: And around this time we begin to drift/I used to feel weightless, now I'm pretty hard to lift. Examination of the human spirit continues throughout the album.

The DEVLINS. Drift

They are neither here nor there, seemingly floating through the ether, amorphous and elusive. Their sound contains the requisite homage to U2, shades of later Simple Minds and a dose of Celtic folk, but they have no definitive roots.

"I Don't Want to Be Like This" is an evocative plea to a former lover to forget past misdeeds and rekindle the love that will save both of them.

But the strength of The Devlins lies not only in the poignancy of their lyrics, but in the musical atmosphere they create. With hushed organ, understated guitar and soft harmonies, The Devlins construct a palace of the forlorn and invite the listener on a tour. Of course, safe passage is not guaranteed, the heartstrings may be tugged a little too hard.

Ultimately, The Devlins confuse because they are a wolf in sheep's clothing; a seemingly innocuous band who will turn a phrase and stab you when your back is turned. But for those of us who enjoy the strains of the constant life, The Devlins offer an avenue to catharsis.

Read the paper

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29

sitive New Age Guys do exist, even in the hurly-burly of a busy newsroom, and that women don't need to give up everything else in the name of motherhood. If it weren't for the moralistic tone of the movie and (I hate to give it away) the syrupy "I'm OK, you're OK" ending, I would appreciate The Paper for its other characteristics: great one-liners, competent acting, and a plot (not including the rather archaic subtext) which is suspenseful and well-conceived.

An illustration of how The Paper can work as simple entertainment is exemplified by one of the sub-plots which depicts the on-going feud between dishevelled columnist Dan McDougal (Randy Quaid) and the Parking Commissioner Marion Sandusky (Seinfeld's Jason Alexander). McDougal is convinced that the Parking Authority is rife with corruption and vice, and has been regularly "exposing" Sandusky in his column. It's fun to watch as Quaid's paranoia mounts and he becomes intent on destroying Alexander.

When you see this movie, however, you may realize that Ron Howard has internalized the white-bread all-American values of his TV family, the Cunninghams. If he'd only stick to having some goofy fun, like his nutty pal Patsy, I would have enjoyed The Paper a whole lot more.

It's a Chapterhouse giveaway

BY THE JOURNAL ENTERTAINMENT STAFF

Attention British music fans! BMG Music, in conjunction with Zap Records, is holding a Chapterhouse contest. All proceeds from this event will benefit the Kingston Red Cross. Prizes include:

1st prize. A complete set of Chapterhouse EP's on CD and Blood Music, their most recent release, on CD.

2nd prize. A complete set of Chapterhouse EP's on CD and Blood Music on double-vinyl (if you ask me, #2 is better than #1).

3rd prize. Blood Music on double-vinyl and a Chapterhouse video compilation.

4th prize. Blood Music on double-vinyl.

5th prize. Blood Music on double-vinyl (hey, #4 and #5 are the same prize!).

To become a part of this crazy Chapterhouse giveaway, get yourself down to Zap Records (located at 77A Princess Street) and fill out an entry. In addition, entries require a $1 donation to the Red Cross (Blood Music—donate blood. Get it?). You can enter as often as you like, but each entry requires a $1 donation. The contest runs until April 22nd (winners will be contacted on that evening). Good luck, and remember, please give blood! Blood donor clinic locations and times will be posted in Zap. For more info, phone Zap at 547-9949.

Jim Rose Sideshow Returns

Do you have a fondness for pierced body parts? Perhaps you have an affinity for swallowing foreign objects? (Pass the razor blades please.) Or maybe, just maybe you find this behaviour sick, bizarre and outrageous. Offering all this and more, The Jim Rose Sideshow is more than just a peripatetic mental ward, they are a veritable juggernaut of entertainment. To join in the fun or just watch the festivities, move your butt down to Stages on April 12th. Tickets are $7 in advance and $10 at the door. Don't delay, you might even be able to meet the Human Pin Cushion.

DAVE DELCLOO

SCOTS-IRISH TENOR
JOHN Mc Dermott
IN CONCERT
with
Evans & Doherty, ECMA champion fiddler
Natalie MacMaster & more...

Grand Theatre
Monday, April 18, 8 pm

Reserved Seating
$18.00 (GST incl)

Box Office:
530-2050

A Starburst Production

THE ROY ORBISON STORY
"Only The Lonely"
with
BERNIE JESSOME
2 Hour Live Musical Tribute
Covering Roy's Recording Career
From 1956 to 1988

Appearing At:
Grand Theatre
Sunday, April 17, 8 pm

Reserved Seating
$17.50 (GST Incl)

Box Office:
530-2050

An Association License To The Look
The Sound & The Songs of Roy Orbison Produced by Sam Graham

"PROTECT YOUR MOST VALUABLE ASSET - YOURSELF!"

For Runners/Joggers
For Walkers in the Park
For Shift Work in Summer
FOR EVERYONE!

FEEL SAFE!

PERSONAL ALARMS
Starting as low as $33.00

PHONE:
(613) 384-9197

Friday Leslie Spit Tree-o

guests VOLUME
SUPERLITE 7:30-9:30!

Saturday Canada's premiere reggar band

The Satta lites

with guests The Bogarts
Come early! Cheap cheap 7:30-9:30!

TONIGHT!

DIPSOMANIA!

Cheap all night long!
Here for the summer?
(Watch for our new and improved Summer
Dipso starting in May!)

Every Sunday
Wild Blues Yonder!
No Cover!

Monday
20¢
Wings!

C Big Sugar! The
o Mahones!
m Summer Dipso!
i Pig night! New n menu! Summer!
o g n

Tuesday
N.T.N. Trivia
all-u-can-eat
spaghetti

Attention: Kingston Wannabe Rock Stars

BY THE JOURNAL ENTERTAINMENT STAFF

There are currently thousands of independent bands making the rounds on the club scene in Canada. One or two will do more than pay the rent, most will not. There are very few breaks in indie-music. Until now.

In celebration of Canadian independent Music, HMV has launched the first of its kind "Fresh Blood" contest. Unique, because HMV actually has the vehicles to offer national exposure for the winning independent band. The big break? "Fresh Blood" is open to all Canadian independent recording artists with finished master tapes comprised of eight or more original songs.

The grand prize for the winning independent band consists of pressing, artwork, re-mastering, merchandising and promotion for 3,000 CDs, a spot on HMV's "Fresh Blood" CD sampler (to be given out with every Indie purchase) and a national retail campaign through HMV stores across Canada. Fourteen other bands will be selected as well.

Musicians interested in entering the contest should send a demo-tape, bio and marketing plan to: FRESH BLOOD, HMV CANADA, 1305 CRESTLAWN DRIVE, MISSISSAUGA, ONTARIO L4W 1A9. To qualify, entries must be received no later than 5 p.m. on April 18, 1994.

GRAND OPENING APRIL 1ST

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK

GO-KARTS

NORTH OF 401
OFF DIVISION
ON MACADOO LANE

KINGSTON GO-KARTS
547-6300

TWO FREE LAPS WITH THIS COUPON

TMI TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE

Established in 1971

Toronto Montessori Institute is now accepting applications for the 1994-1995 Teacher-Training Course.

This course leads to a Diploma to teach 3 to 6 and 6 to 12 year olds, applying Montessori educational theory and methodology.

Prerequisite: Undergraduate Degree.

Course duration: August 2, 1994 - June 30, 1995.

Enrolment is limited. For further information, please call Pam Debbo, Registrar, at (905) 889-6882.

Course is accredited by the Montessori Accreditation Council for Teacher Education (MACTE).

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE 8569 Bayview Avenue, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3M7

Start a career helping deaf-blind persons

The George Brown Intervenor Program, unique in Canada, will teach you how to act as the eyes and ears of people with the dual disability of deaf-blindness. As an intervenor for deaf-blind children and adults you will help them interact more effectively within their environment.

We are now accepting applications for the full-time program starting in September, 1994. Interested in applying, or want more information? Contact the Faculty of Community Services at George Brown College at (416) 867-2310 or 1-800-265-2002 (toll-free).

GEORGE BROWN
THE CITY COLLEGE

LINO'S

RESTAURANT AND TAVERN

OPEN 24 HOURS

Breakfast Special
5:30 to 11:00am
Sat-Sun 5:30 - 1:00 pm
7 days a week

Baby Pizza
Day $2.75, Nite $3.45
&
Spaghetti Special
Daily $2.75
11am to 10pm

Featuring Lunch
and Dinner Specials
7 days a week.
Take-out service
available.

(613) 544-0123
424 Princess Street (at Division)
Licensed under LLBO

ABSOLUTE entertainment

TOUCAN BANDS

THURS, APRIL 7
All Good Children
FRIDAY, APRIL 8
Benefit for Dominican Baseball League
SATURDAY, APRIL 9
Parlois
THURSDAY, APRIL 14
Days of You

• PUB GRUB
• IRISH PINTS
• SUNDAY: $1.99
BREAKFAST
12pm - 5pm

Toucan

76 PRINCESS ST. (BACK ALLEY ENTRANCE)
NEXT TO KIRKPATRICK'S TEL: 544-1966

apropos

The students
& alumni of the Fashion Design Program present their collected works at the Grand Theatre in Kingston on April 29 & 30 at 8:00pm.

Models provided by
Madison Model & Image Centre
Tickets: $15. (Students $10.)
at the
Grand Theatre Box Office
Reservations: 530-2050
VISA/Mastercard accepted

annual fashion show

Street Life Listings

THESE LISTINGS WERE CORRECT AS OF TUESDAY NIGHT. CALL THE CINEMAS/CLUBS TO CHECK LISTINGS.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON
824 Northwest Dr. (389-7442)
The Paper 7:00 9:45
Clifford 7:10 9:20
In the Name of the Father 9:30
Mrs. Doubtfire 7:00 9:40
Schindler's List 8:00
Guarding Tess 7:15 9:25
Lighting Jack 7:05
Monkey Trouble 7:15 9:25

CARTEL THEATRE
223 Princess St. (546-5395)
Naked Gun 33 1/3 7:10 9:30
Angie 6:50 9:25
Eating Gilbert Grape 6:55 9:25
Ace Ventura Pet Detective 7:00 9:20
The Ref 7:15 9:35
The Piano 6:45 9:10
Philadelphia 6:35 9:20
The Mighty Ducks II 6:55 9:15

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. (546-FILM)
Thursday
Mystery Series: And Then There Were None 7:00
Small Pleasures
Friday
Blue 7:00
Flight of the Innocent 9:00
Saturday
Flight of the Innocent 7:00
Blue 9:10
Sunday & Monday
Blue 7:00
Flight of the Innocent 9:00
Tuesday
Strictly Ballroom 7:00
Blue 9:00
Wednesday
Like Water for Chocolate 7:00
Strictly Ballroom 9:20
Thursday
Mystery Series: The Thin Man 7:00
Like Water for Chocolate 9:00
Friday & Saturday
Shadowlands 7:00
Naked 9:30

Sunday
Naked 7:00
Shadowlands 9:35

CLUBS

THURSDAY
The Toucan: All Good Children
Ben's Pub: Razz Boulter
Duke's: Uncle Remus
Wellington: Richard Bannard Quintet

FRIDAY
The Toucan: The Parlois, The Inbreds,
Melody Cool
Duke's: Eclecticity AJ's Hangar: Leslie Spill Tree-O (with guests Volume)
Ben's Pub: Razz Boulter
Wellington: Gerry O' Kane

SATURDAY
The Toucan: Parlois
AJ's Hangar: The Satellites (with guests
The Boggarts)
The Wellington: Gerry O' Kane

SUNDAY
AJ's Hangar: Wild Blues Yonder
The Wellington: Jaz Jam 2-5 p.m.
with the Rob Uffen Trio
8-11 p.m. Kingston Folk Club

MONDAY
The Wellington: Chicago Blues with Blue Monday

WEDNESDAY
The Shot: Haskell and the Cleavers

THURSDAY
The Toucan: Days of You
The Wellington: Blue Nites

PERFORMANCES

THE GRAND THEATRE
218 Princess St. (530-2050)
Attention: Roy Orbison fans! Only the Lonely: The Roy Orbison Story, featuring
25 of his songs performed by musician/actor
Bernie Jessame.
Apr. 17 at 8 p.m.
Tickets are $17.50 and are available at The Grand Theatre Box Office.

Check out the REAL thing at JJ's

5 oz Grilled Chicken Breast or
6 oz Rib Steak, served with
a ^{mountain} of fries.

Only... $4.95

* Catch the Blue Jays at Jj's *

409 Johnson Street at University Tel: 547-3771

6 UPSTAIRS BEDROOMS
LIVING ROOM, DINING ROOM, KITCHEN
BACK HALL & STORAGE
PARKING & GARAGE
303 FRONTENAC STREET
CALL MATT AT 546-9172
BOB AT 541-0979

CFRC RADIO DAZE

CFRC-FM 101.9/cable 90.9
is YOUR campus-community alternative in Kingston!

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Don't miss The Heated Edge, Fridays from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. This week, your hosts Heather and Ed will interview Blue Dog Pict & The Mighty Train Revue!
 - Justin Kemp and Conor Fogarty will present a very special interview with Archer's Of Loaf on Ascension, Friday from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m.
 - Tune in Saturdays from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. for That's Cool That's Trash with host Pat Shanks for the far-outest in indie-garage punk and ultra obscure rock n' roll.
 - I Know Casper can be heard every Wednesday from midnight until 3 a.m. This week, Sarah English talks to That Dog!
- Keep listening to CFRC-FM for your chance to win tickets for the Jim Rose Circus Side Show!!

CFRC CHART

TOP 10
FOR THE WEEK OF MARCH 28-APRIL 3, 1994

TC	LC	ARTIST	RECORD
1	1	Frente!	Labour of Love
2	8	Jale	Cut
3	18	The Charlatans	Up to Our Hips
4	16	Lowest of the Low	Hallucigenia
5	7	cub	Betti-Cola
6	5	An April March	Impatiens
7	9	Madder Rose	Panic On
8	4	Fluf	Home Improvements
9	3	Picasso Trigger	Fire in the Hole
10	10	The Smugglers	Party..Party..Party..Poopers!

(*) Denotes Canadian artist/content.

Thank you to all the volunteers and members of all the groups and committees within

ASUS

The Arts & Science
Undergraduate Society

from

Council 93 \94

Jenn, Heath, Sue,
Drake, Steph, Heather

Good luck to next year's Council

BUMMER

that's right,
the last ritual of the year is tomorrow.
bring on exams with a bang... come pay your respects to dj joey and the rest of the friendly clark staff. clark will not be open friday evening!

SUMMER

while we may be closed over exams, we re-open on april 29th for an end-of-the-year celebration. and make sure you visit the original student pub every friday and saturday evening all throughout may and june!

...and by the way, did we thank you for making us the best damn pub on campus this year? Without you we're nothing.
And vice versa, right?

clark hall pub.
right?

HEY CLUBS!

Be sure to have your applications in for:

① SPACE ALLOCATION WITHIN THE JDUC

- those who have space now or want space next year

② RE-RATIFICATION OF EXISTING CLUBS

All applications are available at the AMS Office and are due by April 8,
1994 at 4:00 pm.

Please feel free to contact Dean
Campbell at the Internal Affairs Office
(ext. 4815) if you have any questions.

MOVING

Don't know what to do with the stuff you've collected over the year? If you can't give it away or trade it, don't abandon it! Here's what to do with it ...

RECYCLABLES

Non-perishable Food and Clothing

The AMS will get these to people who can use them.

Drop-off and collection bins in residences, Mac-Corry and the JDUC
WEEK OF APRIL 25 - 29

* * *

Door-to-door collection
FRIDAY APRIL 29 11am-2pm

Mixed and Fine Paper

Drop-off bins in JDUC, Mac-Corry and other sites around campus.

DON'T MISS YOUR BLUE BOX DAYS!

- CANS
- JARS
- BOTTLES
- PLASTIC POPBOTTLES
- NEWSPAPER
- CLEAN CARDBOARD
- BOX BOARD

IN MAY?

GARBAGE

LARGE ARTICLES (ie. furniture, couches, beds) can be disposed of FREE at the Laidlaw Transfer Station on the these dates:

Monday - Friday, 8am-4pm
Saturday, 8am-3pm
April 25 - May 21, 1994

HAZARDOUS WASTES (batteries, paint, oil, propane cylinders for BBQs) can be dropped off FREE at KARC at these times:

Every Thursday 9am-3pm
Second Saturday of each month.

You are responsible for arranging transportation for your items to the transfer station. Pair up with a friend, neighbour, or your landlord and book your vehicle early. Bring something showing your current Kingston address

DON'T MISS YOUR GARBAGE DAYS!
Not recyclable! Not Hazardous? Not too large or too heavy? GREAT! Put it in a garbage bag and get it to the curb!

Confused? Need help? Contact the City of Kingston at 542-7474, the Town-Gown Office at 545-6745, or the AMS Communications Commission at 545-2732 for more information.

International Study Centre, Herstmonceux Castle, East Sussex, England

This program, concentrating on European Area Studies, may make the difference for you!

Want To Know More?

To find out more or to obtain an application package see our representative in:

Mackintosh-Corry
Student Street

Monday to Friday until the end of March or call 545-2815

Looking For The Competitive Edge?
For little more than the cost of a term at home you could Study Abroad!
Queen's International Study Centre,
Herstmonceux Castle

Are you a second, third or fourth year student wondering what lies beyond graduation? Want to make your university degree more marketable?

Don't Miss This Opportunity!

$6800 (includes tuition, fees, room, board and field trips)

- Learn about the EEC, GATT and other international agreements which affect your future.
- Study art, languages and cultures of selected European countries. Visit their galleries, monuments, and theatres for a first hand look.
- Experience first hand the history and social fabric of Great Britain that only living in a country can teach.

AND

Earn Queen's credits toward your degree

If you're convocating this spring...

JUST FRAME IT!

- Beautiful customized Queen's diploma frames
- Framed "While-U-Wait," immediately after convocation
- Located in Ross Gym, next to Convocation gown rental
- Only $52 plus tax!

Available only through the Department of Alumni Affairs
For details, call 545-2060 and ask for Dawn

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

NORTHPORT POTTERY - by Bill Reddick - is again taking orders for custom stoneware dinnersets and wedding registrations. Contact us at 1 476-4918 to make an appointment.

FEELING STRESSED? Call the CONFIDENTIAL HEALTHLINE, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon. - Thurs. 6 - 9 p.m. 545-6000 ext. 4444. Leave a message anytime.

THE LAND LORD is to pay the tenant 6% interest annually on the last month's rent. Every bit counts! If you want information call Queen's Town-Gown Liaison office at 545-6745.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPIES!! 5 cents single-sided, tax included. The Grey House, 51 Queen's Crescent. Monday 11 a.m. - 2:30 p.m., Tuesday 11 a.m. - 1 p.m., 1:30 - 4 p.m., Wednesday 1 - 3 p.m., Thursday 12:30 - 2:30 p.m. Bring correct change!

QUICK, ACCURATE WORDPROCESSING of documents: theses, resumes, reports, research documents, letters. Excellent quality on laser printer. Most often 24-hour service. Call after 6 p.m. Audrey: 548-7378.

BOOK FREE SPACE for your study group. Good rooms, photocopying facilities and easel available! Call Julia at 545-2958 or drop by the Student Affairs Centre (The Grey House).

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Intensive three day seminars. Systematic approach to proven test-taking strategies. Expert instructors. Simulated exam. Free repeat policy. Full money back guarantee. Seminar fee $195. OXFORD SEMINARS 531-9016.

COMPUTER TYPING SERVICE. $1.50 double spaced page. $2.50 single spaced page. Local pick up and delivery available. Call Pam's Place at 353-1573 after 5:00 p.m. or leave a message.

STUDENTS - TEACH ENGLISH OVERSEAS - Teach conversational English year round, short term or for summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Korea. Excellent pay. No experience or qualifications needed. For details and how you can apply pick up our free brochure at INFOBANK, lower JDUC or send self-addressed stamped envelope to Asia Facts (OJ), P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

IF YOU LEAVE the place clean and in good condition when you move out you won't be charged cleaning and repairs. Find out more: Queen's Town/Gown Liaison at 545-6745.

THE GREY HOUSE at 51 Queen's Crescent is home to the Birth Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association, The Queen's Women's Centre, and other groups. Check us out! Call 545-2958.

1993 TRICOLOUR YEARBOOKS ARE IN!!! Pick yours up now, room 050, JDUC. Check the hours posted on the door. Watch for evening distribution hours! 1993 TRICOLOUR YEARBOOKS ARE IN!!!

PRE-LEAVE - If all students were the same then we would offer only one kind of LSAT training program. 1 800 567-PREP.

LESBIAN & GAY Information Line 545-2960 - staffed Monday - Friday 7 - 9 p.m. by trained volunteers - at other times, a recorded message with community events and resources - all calls anonymous and confidential.

GRADUATION DINNER RESERVATIONS: Treat your taste buds to a sensational dining experience, book your graduation dinner May 27, 28 and June 3, 4 at WINDMILLS CAFE. Special international menu, including Thai, Indian, Vegetarian and original meat dishes will be offered, phone 544-3948 for reservations. Licensed.

ATTENTION ALL POLITICS students: Year end smoker at A.J.'s Saturday, April 9th in by 9:30. Let them know you're with POLITICS.

THE BIRTH CONTROL CENTRE: General Sexual Health information and Referral service provided FREE! Non-prescription Birth control sold at cost. 51 Queen's Crescent 545-2959. Volunteers needed.

RIDE TO SUDBURY - Renting a car and driving to Sudbury on April 9 or 10, returning in a week. If you would like a ride one way or both ways call Trevor at 530-2534.

SAFE SEX and birth control information available at the BIRTH CONTROL CENTRE. Call us at 545-2959 or drop by our office at 51 Queen's Crescent (next to Vic Hall).

HELP WANTED

EARN $6,326.00 THIS SUMMER by selling only one water filter each day. Great part-time work. Be your own boss...hire your own salespeople for even bigger profits! Contact: Water Purity Systems (est. 1982), 5312 Walker's Line, R.R.#2 Milton, Ontario, L9T 2X9, (905) 336-7950.

CLASSIFIEDS

PART-TIME caregiver for 2 children, close to Queen's. Hours flexible. Please call 544-3501 after 7:00 p.m.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED! At the Birth Control Centre. Summer applications available at the Infobank and the BCC office, 51 Queen's Crescent. Deadline: 5 p.m. April 13th. Call 545-2959.

CHINA - Business opportunity. Connections in China can lead to financial security. World leader in network marketing introduced there this summer. Incredible financial opportunities. Call Fred or Karen at 384-6480.

STAYING IN KINGSTON this summer? Become a volunteer at the Birth Control Centre. Applications available at the Infobank (lower JDUC) and the BCC office, 51 Queen's Crescent. Information call 545-2959.

GET AN EDUCATION, get a job, be happy. Don't count on it. Open-minded entrepreneurs looking for financial security wanted to build network marketing business. Call Fred or Karen at 384-6480.

SUMMER JOB opportunities across Ontario. Send your resume today! Call Student Networking at 519-885-5077 to receive your free registration kit.

WANTED

WANTED: Housemate to share 2 bedroom apartment on Princess and University $262.50 for rent, heat included. 7 minute walk to campus and awesome landlord. Call Chrs at 542-1837. Available May 1st.

SUBLETTERS: Bright, spacious second floor two bedroom apartment 176 University #2 (littery apartment). 2 doors from new library available May - August, rent $600 negotiable. Call 547-2614.

2 UPPER YEAR females looking for a third person to share a cozy house on corner of Albert and Earl. Non-smokers preferred. Please call 547-0375.

DRUMMER needed for semi-established band. Call YELLOWBELLY at 5471513 or 531-5354.

HOUSEMATE NEEDED to live with 3 guys and 1 girl at corner of Aberdeen and Earl. Call 544-3154 for details. (It's close eh!)

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

TUXEDO SALES - RENTALS - TRADE AGENTS: Classy, Syd silver $69.99 Ralph Lauren suits 50% Australian Outback, Koolah outerwear, leather jackets 1/2 price. The Emporium 201 Wellington Street (between Princess and Queen) 547-2347.

TAKE HOME the memories of Queen's! Queen's Bands: The Tradition Continues, the new video about the Bands, is now available at the Campus Bookstore and the College Book Merchant for only $19.05 plus taxes.

FOR SALE: Mountain bike, chrome frame, XT shifters and brake levers. Deore Derailleurs, Troga stem specialized bar. Must sell before the end of term. $450 or best offer. Call 548-7484.

FOR SALE: Scott Team UAS mountain bike - XT components - plus Australian outback oilskin coat - brand new, completely waterproof $120.00 or best offer. Bike negotiable. Call Jason at 530-2978.

FOR SALE: Computer table with printer stand and chair, dining table, desk, sofa and chair, chest and shelves. Prices very reasonable and negotiable. Please call 531-0475 if interested.

DESK FOR SALE: White Scandesign desk for sale, good condition and damn practical. Only $40, call Gord at 544-6573.

CAR FOR SALE: 1986 Ford Taurus - dark blue 4 door - 2.3 litre fuel injected - 4 cylinder - 5 speed, Excellent condition, good mileage. $1895.00 or best offer. Call John at 549-3010

FOR SALE: Queen size bed with box spring mattress. Cheap, cheap, cheap. Call IRF at 544-4829.

BED FOR SALE: Single mates bed with futon mattress. Great for small room since has 3 drawers. White in colour, excellent condition. Price negotiable. Please call Tracey, leave a message at 531-3088.

FOLD-OUT COUCH FOR SALE: Featuring a bed for that unexpected visitor. Only $40, call 544-6573.

THINKING of buying hiking boots? I have a $92.00 credit note at A-1 Clothing Ltd. downtown. Will sell it to you for $80.00. I need cash! Call Julie at 531-5430.

WAKE UP FROSH! It's time to buy a bed! University Futon Outlet Incredible moving day special: 6' and 8' futons, A and L frames. Call 531-9111 for your futon emergency.

FOR SALE: 286 IBM compatible. Colour VGA monitor. Wordperfect, DOS and other software. $500.00. Call 531-4342.

ITEMS FOR SALE: Oak finish bedroom set, bed, desk, chair, shell, double dresser, full mirror, bedside table. Excellent condition. New $1500.00. Will sell for $600.00. Also, oak-finish computer desk, metal computer desk, TV table, couch. Call 531-4342.

FOR RENT

ROOMS FOR RENT 8 month contract, prompt maintenance personal, fully furnished, sign up individually or as a group. Call Science '44 Co-Op at 544-4506. Everyone welcome to apply.

LARGE 6 BEDROOM HOUSE, close to campus and recently renovated, 2 bathrooms, 2 fridges, dishwasher, etc. Cheap rent, reasonable PUC. Call Rick at 544-3333 or leave a message at 546-1122.

WEST END TORONTO - SHARED ACCOMMODATION. Female to share 2 bedroom, 2 bathroom condo. Laundry, dishwasher, air conditioned, pool, cable TV, parking, bus to subway. $475 inclusive. Female, non-smoker. Stephanie 1 416 782-0700 after 6 p.m.

FOUR-FIVE bedroom house: Only $895, gas heating, new windows, sun deck, 2 full washrooms. Ten minute walk to Clergy St. Phone 545-0393

FOUR BEDROOM HOUSE: 278 Division St, $895 per month, 2 bathrooms, fireplace, large yard, parking. Phone 545-0393.

FOUR BEDROOM HOUSE: Wood floors, sun deck, washer and dryer, storage, lots of room. 515 Frontenac Street, $895 per month negotiable. Phone 545-0393

THREE BEDROOM apartment: 515 Frontenac Street, $695 per month. Landlord will pay for paint, phone jacks etc. Phone 545-0393.

HOUSE FOR RENT Five bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, all carpeted. Available May 1. $1368 plus utilities. Call 389-9346.

FOUR BEDROOM HOUSE with washer/dryer/colour TV. Nice patio, large backyard, driveway parking. 407 Barrie Street, ten minute walk from campus. $900, available May 1st. Call Derek at 549-4133.

FOR RENT: 5 rooms in 6 bedroom house. Parking, laundry, clean and spacious rooms. Princess at Smith St. - 15 minute walk from campus. Rooms available separately for $250 per month. Call 542-0548.

FREE RENT! Great location! 5 or 6 bedrooms, large rooms, gas heat, eat-in kitchen, 2 fridges, large livingroom, study room on 2nd floor, rent negotiable. Earl St., west of Barrie St. Call Gerry at 546-2026.

FOR RENT: 5 rooms in 6 bedroom house. Parking, laundry, clean and spacious rooms. Princess at Smith St. - 15 minute walk from campus. Rooms available separately for $250 per month. Call 542-0548.

FREE RENT! Great location! 5 or 6 bedrooms, large rooms, gas heat, eat-in kitchen, 2 fridges, large livingroom, study room on 2nd floor, rent negotiable. Earl St., west of Barrie St. Call Gerry at 546-2026.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Silver and Gold Chain Link Saiko watch. Lost Tuesday between JDUC and Chemistry building. Engraving on back (JMF 93). Sentimental value. Reward offered. Call 549-7969.

LOST: In Mac-Corry: a wooden sword. Please contact Elena at 547-9767.

LOST: Blue Varsity 1992 - 93 rugby jacket on Friday, March 4th at A.J.'s. contained cork key chain. Reward. No questions asked. Please call 542-2010.

BORROWED: Burgundy "Supercycle" from 176 University Ave. Victim of after Allies crowd, Friday February 25th. 10 years old, brakes completely useless and stuck in 1st gear, but extreme sentimental value. No questions - understanding owner. Please phone 542-2010.

LOST: at the ArtSci '94 formal: a Pentax zoom 105-R camera. If you have it please, please, please call 542-2455.

LOST: '96 Commerce jacket (46 chest) at Cocamo's on Friday March 4th. If you know someone who found one that night, or who took the wrong jacket, call me. Reward - you name it, you got it! Rob 531-3564.

LOST: Silver ID bracelet somewhere near Vic Hall parking lot. If found please leave at Vic desk. Reward offered.

LOST: Reward offered. Ring lost on March 12th (Saturday night) on University Ave around Earl St., intersection. Gold band with inlaid etched silver. Star of David jeweller's mark on inside. Extreme sentimental value (my grandmother's wedding band). Please return it to me if found, I miss it very much. 541-1040.

LOST: 2 square Rex keys and one bike lock key on silver ring, somewhere on campus on Tuesday, March 22nd. If found, please, please, please call 530-3395. Reward offered.

LOST: Queen's Arts '95 jacket, size 44, "Giller" on tag. Lst seen at A.J.'s Saturday March 19th. Eyeglasses were in the inside left pocket. Reward! Call 531-3230 ask for Rob G

LOST: Saturday March 26th. One light brown wallet with Estonian national coat of arms embossed on it. Lost at or near Uncle Buck's. If found call Sven at 531-5030.

LOST: A gold pendant lost on University Ave or at Colours Night at Ambassador Hotel on Tuesday, March 22nd. Sentimental value. Reward offered. Please call Rich at 547-0718.

LOST: English text book (Northern Anthology of English literature) and blue coloured notebook. Please leave a message at 531-3998 (Grace), if you have them, I really need them to study for exams.

LOST: Grey pencil case with calculator. Please call Andrew at 549-6838.

LOST: Pair of black tortoise shell glasses at A.J.'s Saturday night. If you've found the, please call 544-8043. Reward offered.

FOUND: Green glasses found, Wednesday March 23rd on Mac-Corry steps. Contact 547-4811.

FOUND: A Fendi watch near Victoria Park before the new year. Call and describe it to me and if yours! 531-0399.

FOUND: Men's wrist watch. Union St. Friday January 28th. Call Roger at 545-2100 (w) or 546-5873 (home).

FOUND: '95 Queen's leather jacket, found in the vicinity of St. Mary's on the Lake Hospital. To claim drop by or call the AMS office at 545-2725.

FOUND: One pair of gloves: Kingston Hall, last Thursday afternoon. Call 547-9457.

FOUND: '94 ConEd jacket on Division and William. Call Jen to identify at 549-0462.

FOUND: I found a watch on Brock St., (near Albert) and would be happy to give it to you if you can describe it. Call Andrew at 531-9133.

FOUND: Keys: car, house, safety deposit, university. Found on Queen's Cross, south of the music building. Call 545-2188 and ask for Mr. Sprege.

FOUND: A small brown leather change purse in Mac-Corry, Wednesday March 2nd. Call Laila at 547-6756.

FOUND: Jacket at A.J.'s Friday March 4th. Please call 542-2010 to identify.

FOUND: At A.J.'s Friday night a watch. Call and describe it to me and it's yours. 531-4997.

FOUND: Ladies gold watch at corner of Bagot and Earl. Call 549-2695 to identify.

FOUND: Queen's Arts '97 jacket. Size 46. Found at A.J.'s Saturday March 19th. Call 531-3230 ask for Rob G.

FOUND: A pink and purple scarf and a chain-like silver belt. Left at Grant Hall after Sarah McLachlan show. Contact the OEA at 545-2731 to claim.

PERSONALS

THANKS TO ALL those who attended the Lesbian and Gay Association AGM. Minutes and board reports are on file for those who wish to read them. Remember new volunteers always welcome! Call 545-2960

PAMELA FERGUSON: Our talk about STDs and Nausea was absolutely gripping. I want to get to know you better. Can we make an appointment to play doctor?!! Much love, L.D.O.C.

PBNH (FOR APRIL 21): "Once there were two caskets... each of which contained the key to the other", I love you and I thank you for the past year. SPD

JENNY-LOU & BAV: Thank you for all the special times and the drunken debauchery over the past three years. Good Luck, I know you can do anything!! P.S. Free lovin' month.

ARABELLA Can't believe it's been three years already! Haven't changed - still jeopardizing your chances, reading Stephen King and Rolling Dice. Hope I see you before you go! Your Heartless Bastard.

TO THE MAN OF MY DREAMS: Call me crazy if you want - but these past three years have been wonderful! Here's to the number 3! Me also! Love Cice.

RUDE F1 3RD YR. COM BOY: Same old excuse but you keep coming back for more... One day I'll help ya out with that triple axle and teach ya a few tricks of my own. Smiles in the dark and only for you, Heather.

SUNFLOWER: Thank you for the Easter tangibles and Monday's intangibles! It's a good thing neither of us are that chocolate chicken! ditto, Laundry-man PENCIL DICK: Easter dinner with the 'rents was charming. Good luck with your aversion therapy...look at us! Come for visitor's day at Trillium and we'll play some frisbee tips. XXX C.

CHRIS: Well, the year is over... and we survived?! It's been rocky at time but all in all I've learned a lot. The best of luck to you next year... with I hope a lot less problems. The pain in your side at the Journal.

TO ALL JOURNAL-TYPES: Thanks for the memories, amigos. It's been a great year, and to celebrate, I plan on having a huge bash over the summer. If you call you all over the summer to give you the what's and the where's. And don't worry, Chris Ritchie will definitely not be invited. Nobody really seems to like him very much. B.E.

SARAH: Well what can I say... it's gone and there is nothing we can do to bring it back...

A HUGE THANKS TO INTERVIEW MASTERS: Dave Heather Peter Garb, Brad Sonal Chis, Vanessa Aissa, Jen Dan, Nancy Jason & Bill on behalf of the students and us Neil and Fiona xox

TO MY HOUSEMATE: It has been utter hell! You should be commended. What did I ever do to deserve this? A

A FOND FAREWELL: Thanks to all the Journal-types with whom I have had the pleasure of working over my (many) years at the paper...

TO THE OTHER SMART WOMAN: Thanks for all of the great chats this year. You're invited to a party at my house anytime!

BOBBIE: You're wonderful! Miss you!

NEWSIES: Lon, Brad and Brock - phugmi (Elder phone nose) Brad, you are the funnest and most talented tall guy I've ever met...

NEWS CONTRIBUTORS: Thanks to everyone who wrote for news this year, especially those who wrote the last minute stories...

ALISON: Let's try to control ourselves at the party tomorrow night. For their sake, not class, mind you. Love, JBG slurr slurp...

SARAH: Thank you for giving me a chance, and for all your support, from the lonely summer up to now. JBG.

ALISON: I'm totally excited to share my house and home with you and spend a few good solid months making fun of JBG...

CAPRI: JBG, you can hand your GM resignation to me whenever you want. I hope you're impressed with my portfolio...

LISA: Thanks for all your help this year! You can cut out our hall anytime! Good luck making finals and boxes next year! Love Colin and Adrienne.

SARAH: Thanks so much for being understanding, supportive and especially for making me feel needed even though I'm only a producer!

KAREN: Thanks for being my buddy and taking over my second job! I promise to write to you in your rain/moist soaked mess this summer! Good luck! Love, Adrienne.

CLASSIFIEDS

THE ABSOLUTE RUDIES OF 204 Well boys, the most successful year yet... due to a definite lack of creeps!

BRAD, BROCK AND LORI: Thanks for being my buds in news, and trying to rescue me on the night of Hersimoncure...

ADRIENNE: Hey, summer housemate, thanks for choosing lori with me! It's been great this year, I'm glad I got the chance to know you...

JOURNAL COHORTS: I've had so much fun, thanks for everything! Colin for being patient, Sean for underdressing...

JEFF: This ain't no goodbye, but from now on you must address me as consultant to the editor-in-chief, OK? I can't wait till the summer and beyond...

TO NEWSIES: News rules. I couldn't imagine a more awesome team. Good luck next year... to the crazy cowboy, the budget fiend and mongrel of magazine Ministry music...

CHISSY: Here's to a hot summer - an island, two bikes, a sailboat, no academics, and you and me... we're still working on the blue room! Wawawa! I love you. B

LEZLEY: It's been a wicked year, Rumpelstiltskin (sic) I've been trying to think of some non-cheesy way of telling you how I really feel...

THE BOYS OF 469 VICTORIA ST: You can relate the course, but you can't take the party. Words we lived by, words we lived by...

TO BRAD: Ee da ba dee da da do da da dee ba Brad. TO CHEFFY: See me, Fee... O.K. that's a little bit much. I just have a wicked, wicked time at your electrical banquet...

TO MY DEAR BOUGAINVILLE: You are the sexiest and the bestest. Thank you so much for all of your love and patience. I'll miss you so much next year!

DEAR MIA: Thanks for such a great time this year! You've been a wonderful, patient, kind, and happy person to live with. I'm so glad you'll be here next year!

AIR FAIR CHAIR CARE BEAR WHERE SNEAR A FAIR LOVE STU.

ADRIENNE: We'll have to call each other every morning next year just to make sure we still match. Thank God I won't have to listen to you whine about donuts anymore!

COLIN: Sorry about killing you with my fists and shooting you in the back... I like the concept alive approach better! You are a great production manager...

BRAD AND BROCK: Get some clothes guys - Assembly won't be able to handle it much longer way more often - and I'll try to hold off on the freudian slips!

KAREN: Let's go for coffee and soup way more often - and I'll try to hold off on the freudian slips! You're a great chick and I loved working with you...

SIAN: Never sell yourself short. You are delightful!!! I'd share a butt with you anytime! Sarah.

ROB: Well, it's certainly been an interesting year. Thanks for letting you know I have to deal with me for another great party this summer!

GABE: Babe! I hope you like your desk! You are a very special person (with a big mouth) and I'm glad I had the opportunity to work with you!

BRAD "C...what the hell kind of name is that!" ELDER: Beauty year. Sorry about putting you in all my Assembly Reports. Naked. See you for double Ceasas, Brock.

JOEY: Nice try! ALEX: When are you going to give me that sweatshirt??? ANDREW: Hey gump guy, I see you when you decide to cheer up Sarah.

JEFF "Simpson" GRAY: Pull tabs like you'll never believe. Coming your way in New! 94-95, Cheers, Brock.

STU: You have some great ideas Stu, and I wish you all the best! By the way, I have a lute to get rid of. Interested? Sarah.

DEREK Y: I think you're the only person I know who stores tequila in his trunk! Thanks for a good year, Sarah.

LORI "Theorikos Kill-sin" THORLAKSON: Check out your byline on page three, and remember, even though you're news editor, you're not above my reach. Redrum! Redrum! Brock.

DOUG: Thanks for making the section work. Stick to writing 'cases' I don't think you'll ever make a name for yourself singing! Maybe we'll party this summer, Love Sarah.

DEREK W.: If you ever want a late night talk, you know where to come. And I like you! Sarah.

TIM: May your happinesses be everlasting! I'm glad we met and became friends. Best of luck to the only one with a phased out position! Sarah.

MEGAN AND MIA: You two are wild and crazy girls! Thanks in order so that we can all start to see the past two years. Megan, I don't know who you put up with Miss's belching all year! Sarah.

ALISON: What more can I say... sturp! You did a great job this year, even though you didn't do a spread on marjinal! I'll always remember you for your great notes! Sarah.

RYAN: What does the P stand for anyway? Good luck next year, I'm looking forward to seeing the section! Sarah.

JUSTIN AND JOEL: You guys are yahoos. Enut said Sarah. PHIL: You know I love you from the bottom of my heart! Thanks for being there for me - you can feel my soft spots anytime! Lots of love, Sarah.

LISA QUATTROCCHI: Happy 22ND Birthday!! (one day late). Hope the next year is great for you - do your own thing, OK? Don't lose touch, my friend. Love, Alison.

AL MACGREGOR: Lara told me about the ball you thought you could win. This personal is the most you'll get. HEY CASEY: Skeptics never win. I guess you're going to be stuck with me after all... :) If a year in Journal hell can't break us up, nothing will. Period. Looking forward to a summer in limbo... rd. I think you owe me a camping trip! LIFE, ME.

TO ALL THEM CRAZY J-TYPES: Well, this is it for me - number 39 of 39. For all those who haven't had enough, and those too naive to know any better, here's to another year of pull-tabs (I'm saving all of mine for you Gray!) Kitchen sinks, conulsed THs, backwards quotes and dashes, and 3 a.m. mornings. Best of luck Gray and Co. n.s. Don't hesitate to call me anytime next year, but don't be surprised if I don't want to come in! :) Bye! Till later, Colin.

JENNY: I'm finally coming home to stay, it's finally over. DAVE SARAH: The journey is finally over! From the long summer nights to the early mornings watching the late night movies and a great co-worker. I really liked listening to you grunt. You definitely look better well. Whenever I need a porch talk I know where to turn... I'm looking forward to some more late nights this summer - late nights and bad L's! And this time I won't leave anything behind! Love you lots, Sarah.

RITCHIE: Nice dig you sexist pig! I couldn't have asked for anyone better than you - and I'm not referring to that photo! Sorry we got you in trouble with the alphabet. Maybe next time you'll keep your big mouth shut. Just let us know when you graduate to the big toe! Lots of love, Sarah.

JEFF: Short people unite! Fight the height! I have the utmost of faith in your talents and abilities and know you will do The Journal tradition proud. Watch out for evil rats and I'll join you for lunch at Stuart's sometime this summer. Best of luck, Love Sarah.

TART: You are unstoppable! Already you've blown us all away... I can't wait for next year when you can edit my work! Next year's will be the most accountable of all student governments! Stay strong, Love Sarah.

WHAT'S UP? Queen's Cam, us and Community Calendar

Pick up What's Up forms at the RMS Office, Lower SSJC, 5:00pm - 5:30pm for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

April

Saturday

Queen's University Student Music Educators' Association presents All That Jazz - an interesting and informative workshop featuring Phil Nimmons, from 9am - 3pm. Dunning Hall $5 QUSMEA members, $10 non-members.

Upcoming

Artist/Writer Laurie Swim will talk about Quilt Art on April 14 from 2-4pm; tea will be served in the drawing room; free to members of the Queen's community; please register in advance; tel: 545-2190.

The Queen's International Students' Society (QISS) will be holding its Executive Elections on Friday, April 15, between 9am and 4pm at the International Centre, to be followed by...

Bachelor of Fine Arts 4th Year Final Show, Ontario Hall. Opening Night Gala: Tuesday April 26 7-10pm; all welcome. Show open for viewing 9am - 5pm daily until Friday April 29, 5pm.

Feature

The Queen's International Students' Society (QISS) would like to thank the following teams and their supporters for participating in the SECOND QISS ANNUAL INDOOR-SOCCER TOURNAMENT: African-Caribbean Students' Association (ACSA); Arts '94; Commerce '97; Economics; Physics; Queen's University Muslim Students Association (QUMSA); QISS; Spanish and Latin American Students' Association (SALSA). Congratulations to first prize winners, Arts '94, second prize winners, QUMSA and third prize winners, QISS. We would also like to thank our guest of honour, Nina Chahal.

19th Century Quilts from the Heritage Quilt Collection: April 10 - Oct 9, a variety of pieced and embroidered quilts from the permanent collection.

Canadian Pressed Glass Goblets: April 24 - June 5, goblets from Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia factories selected from the permanent collection.

Architectural Designs for Proposed Expansion: April 26 - May 1, display of architectural models from four finalists in the design competition for the proposed expansion and renovation of the Art Centre; everyone is invited to make written comments which will be considered by the selection jury when interviewing the architects.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre Exhibitions and Events: Face Masks from West Africa: from April 3 - Dec 11, dance masks from Angola, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Mali and Zaire selected from the Lang Collection.

TUESDAY, APRIL 12th "THE FREAKS ARE BACK!" THE JIM ROSE CIRCUS SIDESHOW! FLESH PIERCING! CHAINSAW FOOTBALL! BILE BEER CHUGGING! HUMAN DART BOARD! MR. LIFTO! PLUS LOTS MORE! WARNING: DO NOT ATTEND ON A FULL STOMACH!!! $1 OFF ADMISSION WITH THIS AD Stages 390 Princess Street Everyone at Stages would like to thank you for your patronage all year long and wish you GOOD LUCK with your FINALS!

MISC

It's my only vice!

the last vocabulary builder!

Jeffy (above) always uses the cloaking device.

sending yourself e-mail (verb phrase, Internet jargon): to masturbate. Example: "It's going to be a lonely season...I think I'll be sending myself e-mail pretty often!"

bimbob (noun, a term coined by the all-female band Cycle Sluts from Hell): a male groupie of a (usually alternative) band with women. Example: "Patty and Sue from groupie of a (usually alternative) band with women. Example: "Patty and Sue from Yellowbelly sure have a lot of bimbobs."

kevork (verb, from the famous suicide assistant) to kill mercifully. Example: "I burned dinner and had to kevork it" cloaking device (noun phrase, borrowed from Star Trek): the act of running the sink while taking a big crap on the john to cover up the noise. Example: "I had some Lino's breaded mushrooms earlier...I gotta hit the can, activate the cloaking device and drop a noisy one."

sources: UNIXWORLD magazine, Chickfactor fanzine, Wired magazine and Joey.

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

WHAT TO DRINK THIS SUMMER

The rich, dark, malty beers of winter are wonderful in the depths of January, but the very qualities that make them so welcome then, make them royally unsuited to a Canadian summer. An "ice cold" megabrew or perhaps a Corona with a chunk of lime in the neck of the bottle are considered good summer beers by most people, but there are choices even better than these. Most mainstream North American beer is too sweet, cloying, and adjuncty to be refreshing on a hot day — what you need is a beer with a bit of tartness to it. It is the tartness and sourness of a glass of lemonade that makes it so much nicer and more quenching than a glass of soda-pop. A tart or sour beer might sound initially off-putting, but wait 'til you try one...

The best choice for a summer beer is a wheat beer. The use of anywhere from 30 to 100 per cent malted or cracked wheat gives a tartness and a refreshing quality that a conventional lager or ale cannot match. The only wheat beers in general distribution in Ontario are Upper Canada Wheat (brewed only in the summer, sometimes available only on draught), and EKV Krustall Weibier (available at the LCBO). The latter is a smooth, soft beer with some tartness, some slight apple fruitiness, and a hint of cinnamon in the nose and in the finish. You can also find wheat-beers on tap at many brewpubs — Denison's and The Rotterdam (both in Toronto), and Le Cheval Blanc (in Montreal). However, for those without access to a first-class brewpub, Ontario is actually a bit of a wheat-beer wilderness, having only these two on general offer. If you can make it to Québec, or down to the States, there are several other options available to you.

The Belgians have a tradition of cloudy, bottle-conditioned wheat beers, delicately spiced with coriander and curaçao orange peel. Though none of these are presently available in Ontario, the Societée des Alcools in Québec usually stocks three or four brands. They are generally called "white" beers in Belgium, so look for the words "blanche" or "wit" on the label. Closer to home, the Unibroue brewery in Chambly brews a good, authentic rendition of a Belgian white beer, called Blanche de Chambly, which is also available only in Québec. In America you might be able to find even more Belgian white beers, as well as numerous efforts by American micro-brews, the most readily available of which is probably Samuel Adams Wheat. Another Belgian style, the lambic, is brewed using a high percentage of unmalted wheat, and fermented naturally with wild yeasts. Lambics are often formidably sour and tart, and correspondingly refreshing. Look for beers called faro, gueuze, or lambic.

However, there may be a break in the clouds for Ontario lovers of wheat-beer. W.Imports, a Toronto company, has begun to bring ever-greater numbers of Belgian beers into the province. If they are successful, the number of Belgian beers available at the LCBO should have doubled by the end of this year. If wheat-beer is absolutely not to your taste, though, do not bother with a megabrew (unaffectionately called a "Budmiloor" by some), or a Corona. If you must have a lager, try a Niagara Trapper. The slightly sour, oaky notes of this beer, and its relative lack of sweetness, make it as refreshing as any lager on earth.

There, then, are some recommendations on what to drink this summer. Of course, there are many other good summer styles, besides wheat-beer. A bock can still be very nice on a chilly evening in May or August, and a bitter is a fine accompaniment to a meal of roast beef, whatever the time of year. Until next September, remember — always experiment; always search out new beers, ones that you have never tasted before. Beer is a drink for all seasons: Cheers!

LABATT'S OLD MICK'S RED

And now, a beer not to drink this summer...

Molson appears to have a runaway success on its hands in Rickard's Red. Their cunning strategy of completely disassociating themselves from the beer, in order to attract drinkers who normally wouldn't give a Molson to the plants, appears to be working. Working so well, in fact, that Rickard's has spawned an imitator. Labatt has just released Old Mick's Red, and has been selling it at Alfie's, the QP, and WoodenHead's Gourmet Pizza, to name but three.

Sad to say, this beer is a complete rip-off. The notion of a potentially flavourful red ale sounds promising, but Old Mick's is on every level an underhanded play for business. It pretends to be what it most definitely is not. Let's look at the name first. A beer with the word "Old" in its name has traditionally been a barley wine or an old ale (two strong, characterful English styles). A reference to the Devil is a tradition of a certain type of strong Belgian ale (witness Duvel, Deugnier, Maudite, Lucifer). So the name "Old Mick's Red," and the badly drawn devil on the draught handle, would seem to indicate a big, rich, strong, malty, classic ale.

Wrong, I'm afraid. This beer is just a cynical attempt to jump on the "dark beer" bandwagon. Rickard's is not a hugely flavourful brew at the best of times, but it is a virtual epiphany after a pint of Old Mick's. There is no aroma, and the flavours are predominantly watery and weak. There is a bit of "malt," and then some ultra-faint "hop," followed by a whisper of delicate apple. "Red" it certainly is, but the colour must surely be artificial — dark malt would leave a lot more flavour than can be tasted here. It seems certain that it is brewed using a high proportion of dextrose or invert sugar (which are fermentable, but have next to no flavour.) There are no active off-flavours or detectable adjuncts (such as corn) in this beer, but it is so puling and insipid as not to be worth trying unless there is absolutely no other option (at Alfie's, for example). Instead of an Old Mick's Red, try a Bass, or a Younger's Tartan Special, or an Upper Canada Dark Ale, or a Gritstone Ale. We have come to expect bad beer from the Big Two, and I suppose this is better than Blue, but to dress a mediocre beer up in a new suit and proclaim it to be wonderful smacks of the worst kind of cynicism.

The bottom line? Don't buy this beer unless there is no other option. There was a time when Molson's collective soul was in peril, and Labatt was still brewing relatively good beers, but the positions seem to have been reversed. Molson has re-deemed itself in the Signature Series, Rickard's, and the Quebec-only La Rousse, while Labatt continues the slide into brewing Hell. Perhaps Old Mick's Red is an attempt to placate their new master. One thing is certain — if Labatt continues to brew such cynical pap and pass it off as meritorious beer, the increasingly knowledgeable beer consumers of Ontario will reject them entirely.

Ash Baker wears large jewelled codpieces and is looking forward to the keg of Upper Canada Dark at the Journal staff party. He doesn't care what it tastes like, he drinks it to get wasted. Ash was this year's one and only regular non-editor contributor to MISC and we're grateful for all his work. Of all the cross-dressers I've met, he's my all time fave.

THANKS TO ALL OUR WRITERS FOR THEIR WORK, THE READERS FOR THEIR SUPPORT AND TO THE RED CHAMBER FOR THE PROMOTIONAL NIPPLE CLAMPS

FREE BACON DOUBLE CHEESEBURGER when you buy a Bacon Double Cheeseburger and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Remember! Whopper Wednesdays

Expires April 30/94

FREE CHICKEN SANDWICH when you buy a Chicken Sandwich and Regular Fries at the regular price.

Remember! Whopper Wednesdays

Expires April 30/94

New people to sue!

With this year's volume of The Journal drawing to a close, we at MISC pass the reins to the new suckers — erm, editors — Ash Baker and A-P Hurd. It's been fun informing, entertaining and sometimes scaring the hell out of you, and these two fine inheritors of this section are up to those same tasks. They've had all their shots and only bite if provoked (or paid). Ash brings to the section his years of experience as leader of the Outlaws motorcycle gang while A-P enlightens us with the wisdom gained from being Shannen Doherty's stunt double on Beverly Hills 90210. It'll be another year of good clean wholesome family reading, honest!

As the outgoing MISC editor, I would like to say that many of you have told me that this is the only section of The Journal that you read, after my cartoons. Good for you!

Joey deVila is just an all-round maddest guy. If you see him on the street, give him some spare change.

Joey deVila

Sex Type Things by A-P Hurd

ONE-HANDED FILM WATCHING (YEAH, YOU KNOW WHAT WE MEAN...)

In Canada, men between the ages of 15 and 22 are the biggest consumers of pornography. I had mostly heard about it second hand (don't even think about looking for a pun) and I wanted to see what "mainstream" pornography was really like. Here's what I found out.

I tried to rent lesbian porn or porn for women but I couldn't find any. At least, I couldn't find any that did the trick. This is weird because in the store, there was every section of porn imaginable (to my untrained mind's eye). There was transsexual porn, group porn, XXX porn, Hollywood porn and Euro-porn to name only a few. I demurely (not) found my way to the section which was labelled "all women." Promising? — IKNAY on that one! — "all women" has absolutely nothing to do with for women. This, incidentally is the problem that some feminists have with porn — you have to see just how badly those points of view are ignored to believe it.

This is not to say that there weren't other women in the store, though none of them were by themselves, and certainly none of them with their girlfriends. I don't know whether we made bad choices or how much I can generalize, but if they were as un-titled as we were, then it was a big waste of seventeen bucks all around.

Just for the record, the two films we rented were Girls Will Be Boys 3 and Smeers. The former, it turns out, is a home movie with wacky costumes about safe sex with dildos. The latter is a spoof on Cheers which was quite funny at times. These represented fairly random samplings among the less hard-core stuff.

There were a lot of things that were pretty ridiculous or yucky: firstly, the Grease-o-rama actors. UGH! One time I went on a canoe trip and we had a peanut butter fight. I learned then that it's impossible to get peanut butter out of your hair. When you slide your hand up into your hair, it stays that way. These people had a peanut butter fight for batting practice, guaranteed. The women had abysmal wigs but surprisingly realistic bodies. The men were another story. Can you say "more fur than the lower primates?" (In this area, however, I would venture a guess that gay porn goes down more smoothly.) What's with the stiletto heels? I devoted an awful lot of attention to the women's feet trying to figure out how they were flexing to keep those gosh-darned shoes on. I also kept looking at the bottoms to see whether they'd actually worn them when their feet were below their hips. I think that this is supposed to be a turn-on for men, but frankly, I found it distracting. The silk stockings, on the other hand, were a nice touch — the three inch nails that ripped them off were a little scary — "You're going to do what with those?!"...and don't blink...that was your token five seconds of foreplay. I think I've said this before. I think most women have said it before: more foreplay (please). All of that pumping makes me feel like...uhh...taking a plunger to the toilet.

If you're thinking that this is a bit graphic for your tastes — don't rent these movies. Now I'm sure somebody has made palatable pornos, but Kingston is probably the wrong place to look for them. In case anyone at a career crisis crossroads is thinking: "Oh, I can do better than this," you probably can. In case you do, here's my advice:

1. Part of the problem is the utter absence of atmosphere. When "the experts" say women like romance, they're right about this one. In response to the skeptic tics: I figure that the illusion of romance is actually quite easy to achieve. In practical terms this translates into lighting at less than 100 watts and having better-than-home-video quality. Don't laugh, this is unfortunately the case in the "50$ insurance deposit" movies I screened.

2. "Romance" also means "more innuendo." Less butts, more faces — don't get to imagine anything? Maybe I am asking too much but artistic value aside, this is supposed to be fun and not getting to use my imagination at all is not very fun. Wouldn't it seem more like sex anyway if there was more suspense?

3. Work up ro it. Ease into the bump and grind. If the characters have to be slimy looking, maybe that's just the nature of the game, but can't we at least care about them just a little bit? Yes, I concur that this might be too sentimental an approach for the genre, but then couldn't they just create another section in the store? Say, the "on-the-edge" section...it seems they have one for everything else...

Luckily for me (if I can find it), some women are now creating their own pornography for consumption by women. This is probably a good thing because the women who make it just might have a better idea than men as to what other women want to see. Maybe I won't be stuck trying to imagine what it is like to keep those stiletto heels on.

That sounds much more like my cup of tea.

A-P Hurd won't be mailing this article to her grandmother. She enjoys bubble baths, large-caliber automatic weaponry, long walks by the beach and is a backup guitarist for the Brazilian death-metal band Sepultura. "A-P" is short for "armour-piercing".

I DON'T KNOW WHO YOU MAGIC PIXIES ARE, BUT I SURE LIKE YOUR PIXIE ORINK! — BARNEY GUMBEL

Hipster Doofus by Joey deVila

A SUBSTITUTE FOR DOOM

Computer fiends and casual videogamers alike have fallen under the spell of DOOM, quite possibly the best shoot-'em-up ever written for the IBM PC. The game has become so popular that it has found its way to almost every machine on campus, from the Jackson Hall computer cluster to even The Journal's layout machines. Alas, the supervisors at the clusters have banned the game on their sites (some wussy students actually wanted to get assignments done) and not all of us have the necessary machinery to enjoy my fine game. What's a procrastinator to do?

What you need is a game with the excitement, the speed and the blow-'em-up feel of DOOM. You need to take up grape racing.

Grape racing, like a fun weekend with me, requires a microwave oven, some grapes, some vegetable oil and a little imagination. Just follow these instructions and you'll be on your way to hours of wholesome entertainment.

1. Lightly grease the bottom of your microwave oven. Use cooking oil or margarine — the idea is to get your oven as slippery as possible.
2. Each person claims a grape as his or hers. Grease the grapes as you did the oven floor. Line up your grapes, starting line style, on one side of the microwave oven, with the holes (the part where the stem was once attached) facing the wall.
3. Close the door, and fire up the microwave for three to five minutes at the highest power setting

The microwaves will heat up the water inside the grape, causing them to expand and escape through the hole at the top. The jet of steaming grape juice propels the grape forward like a rocket. The winner is the person whose grape makes it to the other side of the oven first.

Like any good Indy 500 or Formula One race, it is nice when your grape wins, but it's even better when your car explodes in a fiery crash!

The grapes that work best for this sort of operation are those large, thick-skinned seedless red grapes. The thick skin ensures that the steam escapes only from the hole and their size means that they have plenty of juice to propel them. Friends of mine from Columbia University (where I learned this trick) have mentioned that they sometimes poke holes in the grapes and they sometimes use olives. As with any hobby, feel free to experiment!

Procrastinate on!

Joey deVila is unattached and hence has time enough to do stupid things like this.

An unsuccessful but funny attempt at grape racing will be shown on this week's edition of Studio Q — tonight and tomorrow at 6 p.m. on Cablenet 13.

In order to satisfy the legal department of this paper, we must warn you right now: we do not recommend that you try grape racing in the microwave ovens at Mac-Carry.

In the spirit of the Oscars, the Junos, the People's Choice Awards and all those other essentially fluffy and useless awards bunfests, and also the pervasive tone of retrospection that you are by now completely sick of, we at MISC have decided to give out some awards of our own. Without further chatter, here are the

1994 MISC AWARDS

The Human Cannonball Award For Death-Defying Leaps:
Tim Wilson at Cloverleaf Lanes
What if things had turned out differently? There'd be lawsuits, closed casket funerals, media inquiries and fundraising pancake sales for Students Against Drunk Bawling.

Kronos Award For Most Righteous Castration Complex
John Wayne Bobbitt
Remember, size doesn't matter as much as location, location, location!

Lazarus Award For Most Miraculous Comeback Surface
The only time we've seen "Far shame you fucking white dog" used outside abedience school.

Elvis Presley Award For Most Creative Pharmaceutical Use River Phoenix
The crying shame is that Keanu Reeves still lives.

William Lyon MacKenzie King Award For Canadian Mystical Experience
Da jays!
That'll be the last time we get away with da street party.

Genital Herpes Award For The Most Unwelcome Presence On Campus
The Heritage Front
Ta barrow from Rage Against the Machine — Same of those who are flashes are the same as burn crosses...

The Chuck 'n' Die Award For Biggest Media Circus
Nancy Kerrigan 'n' Tonya Harding
Sa you wanna be an ice queen?

Depends™ Poster Boy 93-94
Tim "Whiz" Wilson
Oui, oui, monsieur!

Media Pig of the Year Award
Joey deVila
He's everywhere, he's everywhere!

Polyorgasmic Sex of the Year Award
Beer Fridge, Alfie's, 23 January 1994, 3:12 a.m.
Oh baby come to me now, take me oh baby ah baby! Mmm...hat nuts...

— the MISC Staff

Last word

As the most tumultuous and rewarding year of my life rapidly comes to a close, I am faced with the daunting task of summarizing my views on Queen's and the Queen's Journal in about 1,000 words — hardly enough for the knowledge, sentiments and experiences this paper and school have given to me.

Twice a week, 25 permanent staff members and about the same number of contributors converge at 272 Earl St. to pour hours and hours of energy, commitment and hard work into the institution known as the Queen's Journal.

And this is only the tip of The Journal iceberg. Every day will find someone hard at work in the house preparing for the next issue.

As a group, we have been and remain committed to presenting Queen's students with up-to-date and accurate coverage of issues, events and activities that occur on campus or pertain to Queen's students. And that is no small task.

From the first word on the front page to the very last ad, the Queen's Journal has provided many Queen's students with the learning experience of a lifetime. And while we have had a great time of it, many sad and frustrating hours have been felt by all. Especially now as we prepare to move on, some of us to new positions here at The Journal, and some of us to the real world, and some of us to the library, we all carry memories of friendships made, hours of late-night delirium, and on a more serious note, lessons learned and battles hard-fought.

The two hardest-fought battles on the student level during my four years at Queen's have centred around freedom of speech and expression.

I arrived at Queen's at the age of eighteen, and I was instantly overwhelmed by what I then perceived to be the hysteria surrounding the Gordon House debate.

As a two-time date-rape survivor, I was appalled by the messages on the signs hung from the Gordon House windows the year before. Having grown up in a small-town atmosphere, however, I thought it was pretty typical behaviour. And as a feminist, I thought the signs hung in the women's windows were underplayed. Both should have been looked at in the same light, I thought.

Since then, my understanding of power relations has deepened — despite my first-year backlash against political correctness.

The first step in that process occurred in February of first-year. In an attempt to parody the "94 Love Smoker," a handful of Gordon House residents printed posters reading "94 Take Her Any Way You Can Even If She's a Hog Smoker." Beneath the caption followed a list of degrading comments that implicitly, along with the title, advocated date-rape.

My level of disgust was raised to new levels by the cold arrogance directed toward me from one of the sign's producers after I explained to him the implications of his poster. It was then that I realized that the Gordon House issue was very much alive.

Later that year, on my nineteenth birthday, I was sexually assaulted in my residence by a stranger who had followed my friends and me home. The anger buried in me from years past welled to the surface, and I knew my future at Queen's would somehow involve attempting to educate women at Queen's about the dangers of sexual assault, and men about the emotional and physical impacts of such behaviour.

My ability to do that through The Journal has been somewhat limited. The anger and hurt and fear and hate that result from sexual assault are not best played out on the pages of a 121-year-old traditional paper committed to objective reporting.

Surface played an important role for me during my years at Queen's. It taught me that my anger and pain were not something to be ashamed of, rather, they deserved to be heard. And it taught those men who wanted to learn the levels at which that anger and pain is felt.

Surface did this not only for me, but for many others who had suffered degradation and violation because of their sex, colour or sexuality — many of whom had significantly less access to the printed word than I. And while the Gordon House sign-hangers were charged for airing their beliefs, so might Surface be. Some critical differences between the two need to be delineated. The men at Gordon House, whether they did or not, were capable of committing the crimes which they alluded to in jest. The folks at Surface, many of them, have been subject to the crimes of which they speak. One promoted, the other condemned.

In an environment blanketed by politically correct linguistic interpretation, these distinctions should be easy to make. However, as most of us realize, political correctness has taken on a life of its own. It is used as a political tool by some — and this fact is lamented by many who abide by its original intention: to take into consideration the underlying meanings and effects of words on people who are traditionally oppressed by our society.

The sad fact is that political correctness is now used to silence opinions and beliefs on any side of the debate. Freedom of speech and expression are threatened by what political correctness has become.

We at The Journal have to deal with political correctness every day. With every paper we produce, we have to deal with freedom of speech and expression and all of the responsibilities that entails. But freedom of speech and expression are endangered species on this campus.

Over the past four years, a move has been afoot on this campus to control what campus publications print and how they are produced. This is especially dangerous at the university level — an environment where ideas should be allowed to run free, to compete and contrast. Instead, conformity and control have become the goals of many of our more vocal student leaders.

Surface has already lost much of its freedom to speak and express views. The demand that Surface only present articles with a critical base denies a whole aspect of personal and political experience. Poetry that describes the impact of an emotion should not be forced to base itself in critical analysis.

And while Golden Words has made many significant changes for the better, it too has been forced into concessions that limited its freedom. Not surprisingly, this type of pressure has been applied to The Journal as well.

Some might call this accountability. But, in fact, it is simply some people's attempt to conform printed word to their political agenda. And what worth do those victories have?

The backlash against what political correctness has become contains its own brand of correctness. While everyone should be aware of the meanings and impacts of their words, everyone should have the right to speak their minds freely and openly.

Although the Gordon House debate received significantly more national coverage, (because it directly affected the boys), in the long run Surface is by far the more important debate. Queen's reaction has been a disappointment to me. Freedom of speech and expression at Queen's has definitely not prevailed.

Now, after 121 years, the Queen's Journal is on the road to autonomy. It is time for The Journal to let go and come into its own as a fully independent entity. The road to this goal will not be short and sweet, but as an organization we are ready to embark on this journey.

I wish all the best to every Journal member, contributor and reader who has made The Journal what it is today, thereby preparing it for the biggest move of its organizational life.

And to everyone this year, it was a lot of work, and I thank you for all of the heart and soul you poured into each issue. The best of successes and the most happiness to you all.

Sarah MacWhirter
Editor-in-Chief 1993-94

Queen's Journal Staff 1993-94

Back Row (L-R):

Adrienne Down, David Pavao, Andrew Nielsen, Colin Ho, Joey deVilla, Ryan P. Chen, Megan Nichols.

Seated (L-R): Brock Martland, Brad Elder, Karen Hall, Tim Mitchell, Sarah MacWhirter, Joel Sutherland, Rob Furse, Sian Beddoe-Stephens, Marika Glickman, Doug MacGregor, Alex Hamer, Jeff Gray, Alison Masemann.

Floor (L-R): Chris Ritchie, Lori Thorlakson, Justin McKellar, Derek Yarnell, Stuart Kedwell.

Absent: Fiona Macaulay

